In Darling v. Blanchard, 109 Mass. 176, where a testator devised a fifth part of his estate in trust for a daughter, and at and upon her decease "to convey the said fifth part to her children, share and share alike, and if any of them at that time be dead and leave issue, the issue shall be entitled to have the parent's share only," it was held that there was nothing in the will to show an intention of testator to postpone the vesting of the estates in the daughter's children until the death of their mother, the devise over being to all of them, and not to such as might be living at her death; and therefore, the children having died in the lifetime of their mother, unmarried and without issue, that the property descended to her.

In Lenz v. Prescott, 144 Mass. 505, 11 N. E. 923, a vested, and not a contingent, interest, which was therefore assignable during the continuance of the life estate, was held to be created by the following testamentary provision: "I give and bequeath to the children of my brother, Welcome A. Greene, to be divided equally among them, all the residue and remainder of my estate after the decease of my said wife, to them, their heirs and assigns forever; it being my intention if any of these should die leaving issue before the reception of this bequest, said issue shall be entitled to one share thereof by right of representation," the court saying: "Upon this point, the case of Gibbens v. Gibbens, 140 Mass. 102, 54 Am. Rep. 453, 3 N. E. 1, is decisive. The testator, Thomas A. Greene, does indeed provide that, if any of his nephews should die leaving issue before the reception of the bequest, such issue should be entitled to one share by right of representation. There may be a vested interest determinable upon the happening of a contingency. If the interest of Welcome and his brothers was subject to be divested by the contingency of the death of either, leaving issue, during the lifetime of the tenant for life, it was not the less on that account vested."

In Cook v. McDowell, 52 N. J. Eq. 351, 30 Atl. 24, it was held that under a will by which testator gave a sum of money for the use of his wife during her life, and after her death to be divided in the same manner as the residuum of the estate, which residuum he then proceeded to devise and bequeath to his six children, "to be divided equally among them, share and share alike, to them, their heirs and assigns forever; in case any of my said children die before receiving their share leaving issue, then I give, devise, and bequeath to such issue the share the parent would have taken if living," a son took a vested estate, which was not divested by his death without issue.

In Boykin v. Boykin, 21 S. C. 513, testator directed that the residue of his real estate should be kept undivided until the death of his wife, to be worked under the control and management of his executors, adding: "And from and immediately after her death, I devise the said real estate in this section referred to, to my sons, equally to be divided among them, share and share alike, to them and their heirs forever; . . . and should any of my sons die before the time herein appointed for the division of my real estate, and should leave issue living at that time, then I direct that such issue shall take among them share and share alike, the same portion of the real estate to which their parent would have been entitled if he had survived my said wife, to them and their heirs forever. And if any of my sons shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years before the death of my said wife, I direct that such son or sons shall be permitted to cultivate each for himself such a part of real estate as shall be allotted to him for that purpose by my wife and executors, until the final division when he or they shall receive his or their own share." Two of his sons having died unmarried and without issue, during the life of the widow, the question arose whether they took vested interests in the undivided lands, which were transmitted to their respective heirs, or whether the lands passed under the will to their only surviving brother; and it was held that as the three sons were in esse at the testator's death, the devise created vested interests in them.

In Thompson v. Thompson, 28 Barb. 432, testator directed that a share in his estate be held in trust for each of his sons for their support and education during minority, and upon each arriving at the age of twenty-one years to pay over to him, to be thenceforth had and holden by him and his respective heirs, executors, and administrators forever. He further declared that the principal sums bequeathed and devised to his children should vest in them respectively when and as they respectively should arrive at the age of twenty-one years, and not before, providing that if any of his children should die before attaining the age of twenty-one leaving lawful issue, such issue should stand in the place his or their parent would have been entitled to, had the parent attained the age of twenty-one years; and in case of the extinction of all the lineal descendants of testator at any time before any or all of his estate so devised and bequeathed should have vested in interest, then upon a limitation over, which was void for remoteness. It was held that the share bequeathed to a son vested in him in interest on the death of testator, and, having so vested, on his death without issue, passed to his heirs; and that the declaration that in case any of testator's children should die before arriving at the age of twenty-one years, leaving issue, such issue should stand in the place of the deceased parent, was consistent with such vesting, for the statute for the distribution of estates of intestates would place such issue in the same position.

Instances in which remainder is held vested subject to be divested.

In Goerlitz v. Malawista, 56 Hun, 120, 8 N. Y. Supp. 832, affirmed without opinion in 130 N. Y. 688, 30 N. E. 68, a testator gave his wife all his estate for life, if she should so long continue and remain his widow; adding: "And upon her decease or second marriage, the same to revert to my son Anderson or his issues, and such other children as I shall leave or their issues, share and share alike, provided that the issues of any deceased child of mine be entitled to and receive only such portion as their parent would have received if living. Fifth. In case my wife deceases or marries again, leaving no children of mine or their issues living, then I bequeath all my estate, both real and personal, to my surviving brothers and sisters, share and share alike." It was held that the devise to the issue of any deceased child was clearly meant to be in the alternative and substitutionary, and that the contingency referred to was the death of the life tenant, since it cannot be referred to the time of testator's own death, as he hardly could have contemplated the second marriage of his wife, which was one of the events from which the remainder was limited, to take place in his own lifetime; and therefore that the son took a remainder vested in right, but not in possession or enjoyment, and subject to be divested by his own death with or without issue during the lifetime of the widow.

In Clanton v. Estes, 77 Ga. 352, 1 S. E. 163, in which the ultimate question was whether a son had an interest which might be subjected to the claims of his creditors, a testator by codicil to his will gave his wife a life estate in certain property, and provided that after that "after her death the property shall be equally divided among the several legatees who are to receive the residue of my property as provided and directed in the 21st clause of the will to which this is a codicil." By the clause above referred to, it was provided that when the youngest of testator's children should arrive at legal age or marry, his residuary estate should be equally divided among all his children and the children of any one of the latter who, before the period specified, might die, such grandchild to receive only the deceased parent's share. By another codicil he devised other realty to his wife for life, "and at her death to be equally divided among all my children then living and the children of any one or more of my children who may previously die, the latter to take per stirpes, and not per capita." It was held that both the person to take and the event being certain, testator's sons took a vested remainder in the property bequeathed to his widow for life, which vested in them when the will took effect at the death of testator. With reference to the direction that the children of any deceased child should take the parent's share, the court quoted with approval the statement made in McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340, 28 L. ed. 1015, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652, with reference to a similar provision, that such direction was evidently intended to provide for children of a deceased child, and not to define the nature, as vested or contingent, of the previous general gift, its only effect upon that gift being to divest the share of any child dying leaving issue, and to vest that share in such issue.

In Hudgens v. Wilkins, 77 Ga. 555, the nature of the remainder created by the following clause was in question: "I lend unto my beloved wife, Mary R. Wilkins, all the lands which I may die possessed of in Elbert county, during her natural life, for her to support herself and my children which may remain with her on the land, and after the death of my wife, this land to be equally divided between all my sons or their children; that is, if either of my sons should die before my wife does, leaving a child or children, their child or children to draw their father's part of said land; this land I give to my sons above, over and above their distributive share of my estate as hereafter bequeathed to them." It was held that, having regard to the phraseology of the provision above set forth, and the fact that testator in the subsequent portions of his will excepted the property in question from the other property divided generally among his children, and referred to it as land "which I have willed to my sons in the first item of this will," the sons living at testator's death took a vested remainder, subject to be divested in the event of the son's dying leaving a child, before the termination of the life estate. The provision that should one of the sons die before the time of enjoyment of the estate in actual possession and leave a child, his child shall have his part of the land, is referred to as casting doubt upon the vesting of the title, but it was evidently regarded as insufficient to prevent the remainder from being regarded as vested, the property being fixed, and the persons to take, and the event upon which they were to take, being certain. The ultimate decision was that the estate of a son dying without children, before the termination of the life estate, passed to his heir or devisee.

In Re Miles, 61 L. T. N. S. 359, the will was as follows: "The entire residue of my property I leave to my two sons [naming them] in trust for the benefit of my dear wife during her lifetime, at her death to be equally divided among our children, Thomas, James, and Mary Hamilton [who were children of a deceased daughter], to take what would have been their mother's share, and any other of my grandchildren to represent their parents in similar circumstances." It was held that this was a substitutionary gift to testator's grandchildren, and that the children of testator who died after his death, and before the death of his widow, did not take vested or indefeasible interests in his estate, but that the interests of the children so dying were devised and bequeathed to their children by the clause above set forth.

In Mercantile Bank v. Ballard, 83 Ky. 481, 4 Am. St. Rep. 160, where testator, after devising property to a daughter for life continued: "After her death, or if she die before me, the fee simple of said property shall be conveyed to her children and their descendants, in the same proportion as if it had descended from her; but if she leave no child, nor descendant of a child, then to be held in trust for" the son, it was held that the remainder vested in the children of the daughter living at the death of the testator, but subject to be divested in the event of their dying before the life tenant.

In Ranhofer v. A. C. & H. M. Hall Realty Co. 143 App. Div. 237, 128 N. Y. Supp. 230, testator gave his wife an estate during widowhood, further providing: "After the decease of my said beloved wife, or in the case of her remarriage, . . . I do from and upon the date of her said decease or remarriage, give, devise, and bequeath all the rest, residue, and remainder of my said estate, real and personal, then undisposed of, to my beloved children, and to the descendants of any of them then deceased, in the proportion of the share of each child to his or her descendants, share and share alike, for the sole use and benefit of my said children, respectively, and their descendants; and to the survivors of my said children in the cases of the decease of either of them without such descendants." It was held that, as the will very clearly indicates an intention on the part of the testator that the persons to take at the death or remarriage of the widow were to be determined at that time, testator's children each took a vested remainder in his real estate, subject to be divested by death before the decease or remarriage of the widow, and therefore that they could not convey said realty by a good and marketable title.

In Dodd v. Winship, 144 Mass. 461, 11 N. E. 588, it was held that under a devise in trust for testator's widow for life, and at her death "to pay, convey, and assign the trust property to and among my children, their heirs, personal representatives, and assigns, in equal proportions, the issue of any deceased child to stand in their parent's stead, and to receive their parent's share," the children of the testator took interests which vested at his death, liable to be divested by death in the lifetime of their mother leaving issue; and 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) therefore that the trustees were accountable to a son's children for a part of the principal which they had allowed the son to appropriate in his lifetime.

In Miller v. Worrall, 59 N. J. Eq. 134, 44 Atl. 890, which is affirmed on this point, although reversed on another, in 62 N. J. Eq. 776, 90 Am. St. Rep. 480, 48 Atl. 586, a testator gave all his property in trust for his wife for life, directing his executors upon her death to "divide the entire amount thereof equally between my children, share and share alike, to whom I do hereby give, devise, and bequeath the same to their heirs and assigns forever, the children of any deceased child to have the share of his, her, or their parent." One of the children having died without leaving issue, in the lifetime of testator's widow, the question arose as to whether her executors were entitled to her share. It was held that the will disclosed no intention that those children only should take who might survive the period of distribution, and that the direction to divide lapsed legacies might be appropriately referred to the case of a child dying without leaving issue in the lifetime of the testator; and therefore that the daughter took a vested interest subject to be divested only by her death in the lifetime of her mother, leaving issue her surviving.

In Camp v. Cronkright, 59 Hun, 488, 13 N. Y. Supp. 307, it was held that under a devise to testator's wife for life, and upon her death "unto my children share and share alike, absolutely and forever, the child or children of any deceased child of mine to take the share which his or her or their parent would have taken if living," a son took an interest subject to be divested by his death in the lifetime of his mother, the life tenant, the language of the will showing that the devise over depends upon a death occurring during the lifetime of the life tenant.

In Rutledge v. Fishburne, 66 S. C. 155, 97 Am. St. Rep. 757, 44 S. E. 564, it was held that under a will by which testatrix devised property to her daughter for life, "with remainder to her children share and share alike, the child or children of deceased child to represent and take the parent's share," a child of the daughter who was in esse at the death of testatrix took a vested transmissible interest in the remainder, which upon her death leaving no children would descend to her heirs generally; but that if she should die leaving children at the time of her death, they would take, by substitution or executory devise, the interest which she would otherwise have taken.

In Fishburne v. Sigwald, 79 S. C. 551, 60 S. E. 1105, where a testatrix devised property to her daughter for life, and after her death to be equally divided between another daughter and a son, to them and their heirs, share and share alike, the child or children of a deceased child to represent and take the parent's share, it was held that the last part of the above provision was simply to provide for the devolution of the estate in case either of the children died during the life of the life tenant, and was not intended in any way to abridge the estate given them, except, by way of substitutional or alternative fee, the children of a child dying in the lifetime of the life tenant should take the share of the child so dying.

In Re Gilbert, 54 L. T. N. S. 752, where testator created a trust for a sister, and after her death gave all the residue of his estate unto and between all and every the children of his brothers and sisters, share and share alike, "the issue of any deceased child to take the parent's share," it was held that the substitutional gift took effect in the case of any child of a brother or sister of testator who died in the lifetime of the tenant for life. The inference from this decision is that the interests in remainder taken by the brothers and sisters were vested subject to be divested.

In Engel v. State, 65 Md. 539, 5 Atl. 249, where testator directed that at the termination of his wife's life estate, his farm should be sold and the proceeds divided amongst all his children, share and share alike, naming them, "or their share to the children of them that may have died," it was held that, it being unmistakably clear that testator intended to substitute the child or children of the legatee who might die in the place of the parent, and the words in question not confining the happening of the death of the legatee to the lifetime of testator, the gift to the children vested upon the death of testator, subject to be divested by death in the lifetime of the widow.

In Cox v. Handy, 78 Md. 108, 27 Atl. 227, 501, where a testator provided that after the death of his wife all the property devised to her for life, with the exception of some specifically disposed of, "shall be sold if necessary for equal partition, or if the same can be accomplished without a sale, shall be divided amongst my children, share and share alike, the child or children of any deceased child to take the portion which the parent, if living, would have been entitled" to, it was held that a share of the property vested in each of the children of testator who survived him; but if any such child should leave children at his death, his share would be divested in favor of his child; and that it was not divested by the death of a child in the lifetime of the tenant for life without leaving children.

In Joseph v. Utitz, 34 N. J. Eq. 1, testator gave one fourth of his estate to each of his three daughters, and the other fourth in trust for his son for life, and at the son's death to divide the principal among the daughters "or their heirs" in equal parts or shares, and further provided: "In the case of the death of any of my said daughters before my decease, or before the death of my son, Phineas, or before receiving her bequest, leaving lawful issue, such issue is to take the bequest or share 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) to which his, her, or their mother would be entitled if living." One of testator's daughters having died leaving a husband and children before the distribution of the estate, the question arose whether her share was payable to her children or to her executors, and, in deciding that question, the court said in passing that testator must be presumed to have intended that his daughters' shares in the one quarter given in trust should go to their issue if they should predecease their brother, but that he did not intend that their title to the shares given to them directly and vesting in them on his death should be defeasible by their death in the lifetime of their brother.

In Genunge v. Murphy, 59 Misc. 381, 112 N. Y. Supp. 310, where testator gave his wife the use of his residuary estate during widowhood, adding: "On her death or when she marries again, I give and bequeath said residue of my estate unto my children in equal parts or shares; the child or children of any child of mine who at that time may be deceased shall take the part in such division which his, her, or their parent would have taken if then living," it was held that, there being persons in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property at the determination of the particular estate, the remainder was vested; that it could not be regarded as contingent because it was subject to defeasance by the death of the remaindermen prior to the determination of the particular estate.

In Carstensen's Estate, 196 Pa. 325, 46 Atl. 495, a testatrix devised and bequeathed her entire estate to her executor in trust to convert the same into money, and to pay the interest and income thereof to her husband during his life, further providing: "And from and after the decease of my said husband I give, devise, and bequeath the whole estate then remaining to my brothers and sisters; the child or children of any of my said brothers or sisters who may then be dead to take and receive the share that his or their parent would have taken if living." It was held that as the bequest was absolute and immediate, and the brothers of the testatrix were in esse at the date of her death, and as it was evident that the only object of testatrix in the postponement of distribution of the estate among her brothers and sisters was her desire to give her husband a life interest, the interest of the brothers and sisters was not contingent upon their surviving the life tenant, but vested at the death of testatrix, subject to be divested only upon the contingency of death during the continuance of the particular estate, leaving a child or children.

In Security Trust Co. v. Lovett, 78 N. J. Eq. 445, 79 Atl. 616, a testator gave his estate to his wife for life, directing that after her decease his executors should sell the realty and divide the proceeds between testator's children and the children of a deceased daughter, further providing: "Should either of my above-named children die leaving issue, it is my will that the portion herein devised or bequeathed to such child or children shall be equally divided between their issue." The question having arisen upon a bill for the construction of the will, as to the disposition of the share of a child who had died leaving daughters and granddaughters, it was held that while the interests of the several children might properly be regarded as vested interests at the death of testator, they were, by the terms of the will, to be devested in favor of their issue in the event of death with issue before the death of the life tenant, and therefore that the daughters and granddaughters took the share of their ancestor.

In Mitchell v. Mitchell, 73 Conn. 303, 47 Atl. 325, testator directed that upon the termination of a certain trust, "the principal fund of the whole of said trust estate shall be divided up and distributed as follows, to wit: . . . I give, devise, and bequeath to Lawrence Mitchell and his children, in equal portions, two fifths of all my estate after the closing of the trust, to have and to hold unto them and their heirs forever. But if one or more of the said four children of Lawrence Mitchell shall have died leaving issue of his or her body, said issue shall receive the same portion that his or her parent would be entitled to if living." It was held that no such contrary intent appeared in the will as to preclude the vesting of the two fifths devised and bequeathed to Lawrence Mitchell and his children at the death of testator; and therefore, by the death of Lawrence before the closing of the trust, the portion bequeathed to him did not become intestate estate; and that the issue of a deceased child were entitled to a share.

In Flanagan v. Staples, 28 App. Div. 319, 51 N. Y. Supp. 10, a testator provided as follows: "Upon the death of my said wife, I give, bequeath, and devise all my said estate and property unto my children in equal shares or portions, share and share alike, absolutely and forever. In the event of the death of any of my children leaving issue him or her surviving, such issue shall take the share or portion of my said estate and property which the parent would have taken if living." It was held that a son took a vested remainder in his father's estate, which was subject to be devested by the contingency which occurred, of his dying in the lifetime of the life tenant, leaving issue; and therefore that he took no interest which he could dispose of by his will.

In Schwartz v. Rehfuess, 129 App. Div. 630, 114 N. Y. Supp. 92, affirmed without opinion in 198 N. Y. 585, 92 N. E. 1101, the testator, after devising his residuary estate to his wife for life, provided: "At the death of my said wife, Sophia Dale, I give, devise, and bequeath all my property, real and personal, and wheresoever situated, to my children [naming them], share and share alike, to have and to hold the same to them and their heirs and assigns . . . L.R.A. (N.S.) forever, and in case any of my said children shall have died leaving issue, the share of the child so dying shall descend to and vest in his or her issue, and in case of the death of any child without leaving issue, his or her share shall descend to and vest in his or her surviving brothers and sisters." It was held that upon testator's death the real estate in question vested in the children, subject to be devested by their not surviving the life tenant.

In Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 560, 16 Jur. 489, where a testator gave certain real and personal property to his wife for life, and after her death to others in trust to convert into money and pay a share thereof to certain persons named, and in the case of the death of any or either of them, then their respective shares to their children, if any, and if not, then to the survivors of them, it was held that the children of legatees who would have taken if they had survived the tenant for life were entitled to their parent's share.

In Smiley v. Bailey, 59 Barb. 80, it was held that, under a will by which testator gave his son Elmore a life estate in certain realty, with the provision: "And at and after his decease I direct that such real estate be equally divided between all my grandchildren, share and share alike; and in case of the decease of any of my grandchildren before the death of the said Elmore, leaving issue, then said issue to take the share that the parent would be entitled to if living; and I hereby bequeath such real estate accordingly," a grandson took a conditional fee which vested at testator's death, liable to be devested on the birth of issue; and therefore that, the grandson having died without issue after the death of the testator, his father succeeded to the estate as heir at law.

In Rudd v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2141, 73 S. W. 759, it was held that, under a will giving to a son certain realty for life, and at his death "to go, belong, and become the property equally of his children. In the event, however, at his death, any of his children have died leaving a lawful child or children, then such to take the part of their parent," the son's children took a vested remainder, and their children a contingent remainder depending upon their parents dying before their grandparents.

In Post v. Horning, 6 N. Y. S. R. 716, it was held that, under a devise to testator's wife for life, or until her remarriage, and upon her death or remarriage to the testator's children, with the proviso that if either of the children should die leaving issue, at the death of such child before the life estate fell in, such child's share should be given to the issue of such deceased child, the remainder vested in the children, subject to be devested by a death leaving issue during the continuance of the life estate.

In Wright v. Dugan, 15 Abb. N. C. 107, where testator devised his residuary es-vision was simply to provide for the devolution of the estate in case either of the children died during the life of the life tenant, and was not intended in any way to abridge the estate given them, except, by way of substitutional or alternative fee, the children of a child dying in the lifetime of the life tenant should take the share of the child so dying.

In Re Gilbert, 54 L. T. N. S. 752, where testator created a trust for a sister, and after her death gave all the residue of his estate unto and between all and every the children of his brothers and sisters, share and share alike, "the issue of any deceased child to take the parent's share," it was held that the substitutional gift took effect in the case of any child of a brother or sister of testator who died in the lifetime of the tenant for life. The inference from this decision is that the interests in remainder taken by the brothers and sisters were vested subject to be divested.

In Engel v. State, 65 Md. 539, 5 Atl. 249, where testator directed that at the termination of his wife's life estate, his farm should be sold and the proceeds divided amongst all his children, share and share alike, naming them, "or their share to the children of them that may have died," it was held that, it being unmistakably clear that testator intended to substitute the child or children of the legatee who might die in the place of the parent, and the words in question not confining the happening of the death of the legatee to the lifetime of testator, the gift to the children vested upon the death of testator, subject to be divested by death in the lifetime of the widow.

In Cox v. Handy, 78 Md. 108, 27 Atl. 227, 501, where a testator provided that after the death of his wife all the property devised to her for life, with the exception of some specifically disposed of, "shall be sold if necessary for equal partition, or if the same can be accomplished without a sale, shall be divided amongst my children, share and share alike, the child or children of any deceased child to take the portion which the parent, if living, would have been entitled" to, it was held that a share of the property vested in each of the children of testator who survived him; but if any such child should leave children at his death, his share would be divested in favor of his child; and that it was not divested by the death of a child in the lifetime of the tenant for life without leaving children.

In Joseph v. Utitz, 34 N. J. Eq. 1, testator gave one fourth of his estate to each of his three daughters, and the other fourth in trust for his son for life, and at the son's death to divide the principal among the daughters "or their heirs" in equal parts or shares, and further provided: "In the case of the death of any of my said daughters before my decease, or before the death of my son, Phineas, or before receiving her bequest, leaving lawful issue, such issue is to take the bequest or share 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) to which his, her, or their mother would be entitled if living." One of testator's daughters having died leaving a husband and children before the distribution of the estate, the question arose whether her share was payable to her children or to her executors, and, in deciding that question, the court said in passing that testator must be presumed to have intended that his daughters' shares in the one quarter given in trust should go to their issue if they should predecease their brother, but that he did not intend that their title to the shares given to them directly and vesting in them on his death should be defeasible by their death in the lifetime of their brother.

In Genunge v. Murphy, 59 Misc. 381, 112 N. Y. Supp. 310, where testator gave his wife the use of his residuary estate during widowhood, adding: "On her death or when she marries again, I give and bequeath said residue of my estate unto my children in equal parts or shares; the child or children of any child of mine who at that time may be deceased shall take the part in such division which his, her, or their parent would have taken if then living," it was held that, there being persons in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property at the determination of the particular estate, the remainder was vested; that it could not be regarded as contingent because it was subject to defeasance by the death of the remaindermen prior to the determination of the particular estate.

In Carstensen's Estate, 196 Pa. 325, 46 Atl. 495, a testatrix devised and bequeathed her entire estate to her executor in trust to convert the same into money, and to pay the interest and income thereof to her husband during his life, further providing: "And from and after the decease of my said husband I give, devise, and bequeath the whole estate then remaining to my brothers and sisters; the child or children of any of my said brothers or sisters who may then be dead to take and receive the share that his or their parent would have taken if living." It was held that as the bequest was absolute and immediate, and the brothers of the testatrix were in esse at the date of her death, and as it was evident that the only object of testatrix in the postponement of distribution of the estate among her brothers and sisters was her desire to give her husband a life interest, the interest of the brothers and sisters was not contingent upon their surviving the life tenant, but vested at the death of testatrix, subject to be divested only upon the contingency of death during the continuance of the particular estate, leaving a child or children.

In Security Trust Co. v. Lovett, 78 N. J. Eq. 445, 79 Atl. 616, a testator gave his estate to his wife for life, directing that after her decease his executors should sell the realty and divide the proceeds between testator's children and the children of a deceased daughter, further providing: "Should either of my above-named children die leaving issue, it is my will that the portion herein devised or bequeathed to such child or children shall be equally divided between their issue." The question having arisen upon a bill for the construction of the will, as to the disposition of the share of a child who had died leaving daughters and granddaughters, it was held that while the interests of the several children might properly be regarded as vested interests at the death of testator, they were, by the terms of the will, to be devested in favor of their issue in the event of death with issue before the death of the life tenant, and therefore that the daughters and granddaughters took the share of their ancestor.

In Mitchell v. Mitchell, 73 Conn. 303, 47 Atl. 325, testator directed that upon the termination of a certain trust, "the principal fund of the whole of said trust estate shall be divided up and distributed as follows, to wit: . . . I give, devise, and bequeath to Lawrence Mitchell and his children, in equal portions, two fifths of all my estate after the closing of the trust, to have and to hold unto them and their heirs forever. But if one or more of the said four children of Lawrence Mitchell shall have died leaving issue of his or her body, said issue shall receive the same portion that his or her parent would be entitled to if living." It was held that no such contrary intent appeared in the will as to preclude the vesting of the two fifths devised and bequeathed to Lawrence Mitchell and his children at the death of testator; and therefore, by the death of Lawrence before the closing of the trust, the portion bequeathed to him did not become intestate estate; and that the issue of a deceased child were entitled to a share.

In Flanagan v. Staples, 28 App. Div. 319, 51 N. Y. Supp. 10, a testator provided as follows: "Upon the death of my said wife, I give, bequeath, and devise all my said estate and property unto my children in equal shares or portions, share and share alike, absolutely and forever. In the event of the death of any of my children leaving issue him or her surviving, such issue shall take the share or portion of my said estate and property which the parent would have taken if living." It was held that a son took a vested remainder in his father's estate, which was subject to be devested by the contingency which occurred, of his dying in the lifetime of the life tenant, leaving issue; and therefore that he took no interest which he could dispose of by his will.

In Schwartz v. Relfuss, 129 App. Div. 630, 114 N. Y. Supp. 92, affirmed without opinion in 198 N. Y. 585, 92 N. E. 1101, the testator, after devising his residuary estate to his wife for life, provided: "At the death of my said wife, Sophia Dale, I give, devise, and bequeath all my property, real and personal, and wheresoever situated, to my children [naming them], share and share alike, to have and to hold the same to them and their heirs and assigns . . . L.R.A. (N.S.)

forever, and in case any of my said children shall have died leaving issue, the share of the child so dying shall descend to and vest in his or her issue, and in case of the death of any child without leaving issue, his or her share shall descend to and vest in his or her surviving brothers and sisters." It was held that upon testator's death the real estate in question vested in the children, subject to be devested by their not surviving the life tenant.

In Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 560, 16 Jur. 489, where a testator gave certain real and personal property to his wife for life, and after her death to others in trust to convert into money and pay a share thereof to certain persons named, and in the case of the death of any or either of them, then their respective shares to their children, if any, and if not, then to the survivors of them, it was held that the children of legatees who would have taken if they had survived the tenant for life were entitled to their parent's share.

In Smiley v. Bailey, 59 Barb. 80, it was held that, under a will by which testator gave his son Elmore a life estate in certain realty, with the provision: "And at and after his decease I direct that such real estate be equally divided between all my grandchildren, share and share alike; and in case of the decease of any of my grandchildren before the death of the said Elmore, leaving issue, then said issue to take the share that the parent would be entitled to if living; and I hereby bequeath such real estate accordingly," a grandson took a conditional fee which vested at testator's death, liable to be devested on the birth of issue; and therefore that, the grandson having died without issue after the death of the testator, his father succeeded to the estate as heir at law.

In Rudd v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2141, 73 S. W. 759, it was held that, under a will giving to a son certain realty for life, and at his death "to go, belong, and become the property equally of his children. In the event, however, at his death, any of his children have died leaving a lawful child or children, then such to take the part of their parent," the son's children took a vested remainder, and their children a contingent remainder depending upon their parents dying before their grandparents.

In Post v. Horning, 6 N. Y. S. R. 716, it was held that, under a devise to testator's wife for life, or until her remarriage, and upon her death or remarriage to the testator's children, with the proviso that if either of the children should die leaving issue, at the death of such child before the life estate fell in, such child's share should be given to the issue of such deceased child, the remainder vested in the children, subject to be devested by a death leaving issue during the continuance of the life estate.

In Wright v. Dugan, 15 Abb. N. C. 107, where testator devised his residuary es-vision was simply to provide for the devolution of the estate in case either of the children died during the life of the life tenant, and was not intended in any way to abridge the estate given them, except, by way of substitutional or alternative fee, the children of a child dying in the lifetime of the life tenant should take the share of the child so dying.

In Re Gilbert, 54 L. T. N. S. 752, where testator created a trust for a sister, and after her death gave all the residue of his estate unto and between all and every the children of his brothers and sisters, share and share alike, "the issue of any deceased child to take the parent's share," it was held that the substitutional gift took effect in the case of any child of a brother or sister of testator who died in the lifetime of the tenant for life. The inference from this decision is that the interests in remainder taken by the brothers and sisters were vested subject to be divested.

In Engel v. State, 65 Md. 539, 5 Atl. 249, where testator directed that at the termination of his wife's life estate, his farm should be sold and the proceeds divided amongst all his children, share and share alike, naming them, "or their share to the children of them that may have died," it was held that, it being unmistakably clear that testator intended to substitute the child or children of the legatee who might die in the place of the parent, and the words in question not confining the happening of the death of the legatee to the lifetime of testator, the gift to the children vested upon the death of testator, subject to be divested by death in the lifetime of the widow.

In Cox v. Handy, 78 Md. 108, 27 Atl. 227, 501, where a testator provided that after the death of his wife all the property devised to her for life, with the exception of some specifically disposed of, "shall be sold if necessary for equal partition, or if the same can be accomplished without a sale, shall be divided amongst my children, share and share alike, the child or children of any deceased child to take the portion which the parent, if living, would have been entitled" to, it was held that a share of the property vested in each of the children of testator who survived him; but if any such child should leave children at his death, his share would be divested in favor of his child; and that it was not divested by the death of a child in the lifetime of the tenant for life without leaving children.

In Joseph v. Utitz, 34 N. J. Eq. 1, testator gave one fourth of his estate to each of his three daughters, and the other fourth in trust for his son for life, and at the son's death to divide the principal among the daughters "or their heirs" in equal parts or shares, and further provided: "In the case of the death of any of my said daughters before my decease, or before the death of my son, Phineas, or before receiving her bequest, leaving lawful issue, such issue is to take the bequest or share 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) to which his, her, or their mother would be entitled if living." One of testator's daughters having died leaving a husband and children before the distribution of the estate, the question arose whether her share was payable to her children or to her executors, and, in deciding that question, the court said in passing that testator must be presumed to have intended that his daughters' shares in the one quarter given in trust should go to their issue if they should predecease their brother, but that he did not intend that their title to the shares given to them directly and vesting in them on his death should be defeasible by their death in the lifetime of their brother.

In Genunge v. Murphy, 59 Misc. 381, 112 N. Y. Supp. 310, where testator gave his wife the use of his residuary estate during widowhood, adding: "On her death or when she marries again, I give and bequeath said residue of my estate unto my children in equal parts or shares; the child or children of any child of mine who at that time may be deceased shall take the part in such division which his, her, or their parent would have taken if then living," it was held that, there being persons in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property at the determination of the particular estate, the remainder was vested; that it could not be regarded as contingent because it was subject to defeasance by the death of the remaindermen prior to the determination of the particular estate.

In Carstensen's Estate, 196 Pa. 325, 46 Atl. 495, a testatrix devised and bequeathed her entire estate to her executor in trust to convert the same into money, and to pay the interest and income thereof to her husband during his life, further providing: "And from and after the decease of my said husband I give, devise, and bequeath the whole estate then remaining to my brothers and sisters; the child or children of any of my said brothers or sisters who may then be dead to take and receive the share that his or their parent would have taken if living." It was held that as the bequest was absolute and immediate, and the brothers of the testatrix were in esse at the date of her death, and as it was evident that the only object of testatrix in the postponement of distribution of the estate among her brothers and sisters was her desire to give her husband a life interest, the interest of the brothers and sisters was not contingent upon their surviving the life tenant, but vested at the death of testatrix, subject to be divested only upon the contingency of death during the continuance of the particular estate, leaving a child or children.

In Security Trust Co. v. Lovett, 78 N. J. Eq. 445, 79 Atl. 616, a testator gave his estate to his wife for life, directing that after her decease his executors should sell the realty and divide the proceeds between testator's children and the children of a deceased daughter, further providing: "Should either of my above-named children die leaving issue, it is my will that the portion herein devised or bequeathed to such child or children shall be equally divided between their issue." The question having arisen upon a bill for the construction of the will, as to the disposition of the share of a child who had died leaving daughters and granddaughters, it was held that while the interests of the several children might properly be regarded as vested interests at the death of testator, they were, by the terms of the will, to be divested in favor of their issue in the event of death with issue before the death of the life tenant, and therefore that the daughters and granddaughters took the share of their ancestor.

In Mitchell v. Mitchell, 73 Conn. 303, 47 Atl. 325, testator directed that upon the termination of a certain trust, "the principal fund of the whole of said trust estate shall be divided up and distributed as follows, to wit: . . . I give, devise, and bequeath to Lawrence Mitchell and his children, in equal portions, two fifths of all my estate after the closing of the trust, to have and to hold unto them and their heirs forever. But if one or more of the said four children of Lawrence Mitchell shall have died leaving issue of his or her body, said issue shall receive the same portion that his or her parent would be entitled to if living." It was held that no such contrary intent appeared in the will as to preclude the vesting of the two fifths devised and bequeathed to Lawrence Mitchell and his children at the death of testator; and therefore, by the death of Lawrence before the closing of the trust, the portion bequeathed to him did not become intestate estate; and that the issue of a deceased child were entitled to a share.

In Flanagan v. Staples, 28 App. Div. 319, 51 N. Y. Supp. 10, a testator provided as follows: "Upon the death of my said wife, I give, bequeath, and devise all my said estate and property unto my children in equal shares or portions, share and share alike, absolutely and forever. In the event of the death of any of my children leaving issue him or her surviving, such issue shall take the share or portion of my said estate and property which the parent would have taken if living." It was held that a son took a vested remainder in his father's estate, which was subject to be divested by the contingency which occurred, of his dying in the lifetime of the life tenant, leaving issue; and therefore that he took no interest which he could dispose of by his will.

In Schwartz v. Rehfuß, 129 App. Div. 630, 114 N. Y. Supp. 92, affirmed without opinion in 198 N. Y. 585, 92 N. E. 1101, the testator, after devising his residuary estate to his wife for life, provided: "At the death of my said wife, Sophia Dale, I give, devise, and bequeath all my property, real and personal, and wheresoever situated, to my children [naming them], share and share alike, to have and to hold the same to them and their heirs and assigns . . . L.R.A.(N.S.)

forever, and in case any of my said children shall have died leaving issue, the share of the child so dying shall descend to and vest in his or her issue, and in case of the death of any child without leaving issue, his or her share shall descend to and vest in his or her surviving brothers and sisters." It was held that upon testator's death the real estate in question vested in the children, subject to be divested by their not surviving the life tenant.

In Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 560, 16 Jur. 489, where a testator gave certain real and personal property to his wife for life, and after her death to others in trust to convert into money and pay a share thereof to certain persons named, and in the case of the death of any or either of them, then their respective shares to their children, if any, and if not, then to the survivors of them, it was held that the children of legatees who would have taken if they had survived the tenant for life were entitled to their parent's share.

In Smiley v. Bailey, 59 Barb. 80, it was held that, under a will by which testator gave his son Elmore a life estate in certain realty, with the provision: "And at and after his decease I direct that such real estate be equally divided between all my grandchildren, share and share alike; and in case of the decease of any of my grandchildren before the death of the said Elmore, leaving issue, then said issue to take the share that the parent would be entitled to if living; and I hereby bequeath such real estate accordingly," a grandson took a conditional fee which vested at testator's death, liable to be divested on the birth of issue; and therefore that, the grandson having died without issue after the death of the testator, his father succeeded to the estate as heir at law.

In Rudd v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2141, 73 S. W. 759, it was held that, under a will giving to a son certain realty for life, and at his death "to go, belong, and become the property equally of his children. In the event, however, at his death, any of his children have died leaving a lawful child or children, then such to take the part of their parent," the son's children took a vested remainder, and their children a contingent remainder depending upon their parents dying before their grandparents.

In Post v. Horning, 6 N. Y. S. R. 716, it was held that, under a devise to testator's wife for life, or until her remarriage, and upon her death or remarriage to the testator's children, with the proviso that if either of the children should die leaving issue, at the death of such child before the life estate fell in, such child's share should be given to the issue of such deceased child, the remainder vested in the children, subject to be divested by a death leaving issue during the continuance of the life estate.

In Wright v. Dugan, 15 Abb. N. C. 107, where testator devised his residuary estate in trust for his wife during her life, and after her decease to pay the principal to his two sisters, adding: "And in case either or both my said sisters shall have died before the decease of my said wife, then and in such case the child or children of the one so dying to take and be entitled to the share and portion his, her, or their mother would have been entitled to had such mother survived my said wife," it was held that the sisters took a vested estate in remainder, and upon the death of one of them in the lifetime of the life tenant, the estate so vested in her became vested in her surviving children and in the children of a deceased son.

In Wicker v. Wicker, 70 S. C. 33, 49 S. E. 10, testator gave all the property to his wife for life, and directed that after her death all his personal estate remaining unconsumed by use or natural decay "be divided equally among my children then surviving, and the child or children of any child or children of mine that shall die before me or before my said wife, so that the children or child of any deceased child shall have the share of such property to which his, her, or their parent would have been entitled under this will, had such parent survived me. And I will that the lands hereinafter devised to my children in remainder shall be governed by the same rule of transmission, that is to say, that if any child of mine shall die before me or before my said wife, his or her child or children shall have in remainder, after the termination of the wife's estate for life, the share of land which the deceased parent of such child or children would have taken under this will, had such parent survived me and my wife." In the succeeding clause testator directed that after the death of his wife, all of his real estate should be divided among his children in parcels described by him, and in a codicil he referred to certain property as "the tract of land devised to my son." It was held that as the devises of land to the children were specific, and not to his children as a class, the remainder vested subject to be devested by death before the life tenant, and leaving children; and therefore that upon a son's death without issue, the property devised to him passed to his heirs.

In Webster v. Ellsworth, 147 Mass. 602, 18 N. E. 569, a testatrix, after creating a trust for the benefit of her husband during his life, gave, bequeathed, and devised the trust property to certain legatees, with the proviso: "If at the time of my said husband's decease, or at my decease, if he shall not survive me, any of the legatees named in this seventh clause shall have deceased leaving issue surviving at that time, such issue shall have the parent's share by representation. The shares of such as shall at that time have deceased leaving no issue shall be distributed among the other legatees above named, and the issue then living of any deceased legatee by right of representation, according to their several proportions above set forth." It was held that, assuming without deciding that the remainder given to one of the legatees was a vested remainder in fee, it was nevertheless subject to be devested, and was devested, by her death before the life tenant, leaving no issue living at that time.

In Churchman's Appeal, 9 Sadler (Pa.) 428, 22 W. N. C. 131, 12 Atl. 600, testator gave the residue of his estate to his wife for life, and at her death certain legacies to nephews and nieces, further providing: "It is my will, and I so direct, that if any of the legatees die before her without leaving lawful issue, him or her surviving, living at my said wife's decease, then the legacy of the one so dying shall lapse for the benefit of the final residue of my estate; but if such legatee leaves such lawful issue him or her surviving, who shall be living at the decease of my wife, then I direct that such issue shall receive the legacy which was bequeathed to his or her or their deceased parent." It was held that the gift to a nephew was a present vested gift, the payment of which was subject to the contingency of his dying without issue before the life tenant, and therefore that it passed to his assignee for the benefit of creditors.

In McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340, 28 L. ed. 1015, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652, a testator devised property in trust until the decease of all his children, and until his youngest grandchild who might live to be twenty-one years of age should arrive at that age, when the land should be "inherited and equally divided between my grandchildren per capita" in fee; and directed that in like manner the personal property should at the same time be equally divided among said grandchildren, share and share alike, per capita, further providing that if any grandchild should have died before the final division, leaving children, they should take and receive per stirpes the share which their parent would have been entitled to have and receive if then living; that any assignment, mortgage, or pledge by any grandchild of his share should be void, and the executors in the final division and distribution should convey and pay to the persons entitled under the will. It was held that the grandchildren took equitable vested remainders, subject to be devested only as to any grandchild who died before the expiration of the particular estate leaving issue, by an executory devise over to such issue. The court said: "The direction that if any grandchild shall have died before the final division, leaving children, they shall take and receive per stirpes the share of the estate, both real and personal, which their parent would have been entitled to have and receive if then living, was evidently intended merely to provide for children of a deceased grandchild, and not to define the nature, as vested or contingent, of the previous general gift to the grandchildren; and its only effect upon that gift is to divest the share of any grandchild deceased leaving issue, and to vest that share in such issue."

In Jennings v. Barry, 5 Dem. 531, testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for his wife during her natural life, directing that after her demise, it, together with the proceeds of certain realty given to her for life, should be equally divided, and one portion thereof given to certain children and a grandson; and further provided that in case of the death of any or either of them "before having received the portion above devised to them, and leaving issue him, her, or them surviving, I order and direct that the same be divided among the children of the deceased equally, share and share alike. In the event of any or either of my said children or my grandson thus dying without leaving issue them surviving, I order and direct that the portion to which he or she would have been entitled be divided equally among the survivors of them, share and share alike." It was held that as the postponement of payment appears to have reference to the situation or convenience of the estate, and the gift being of the residuary estate, the legacies would be considered as having vested at the death of testator, subject to be divested on the death of any legatee without issue before the period fixed for division.

In Barker's Estate, 159 Pa. 518, 28 Atl. 365, 368, a testatrix appointed her husband as executor with full power to dispose of the estate, both real and personal, in his discretion, dividing it equally among their children, with the proviso: "And if any or either of them die before such division, such portion as would have appertained to the deceased to be divided among his, her, or their children, share and share alike. Such distribution not to take place until the death of my said husband," until which time the income was to be devoted to the support of the family. She further provided that at any time during the life of her husband, after the coming to the age of twenty-one years of any of their children, the husband might bestow on such child such portion of the estate as it would inherit at his death. It was held that the children took vested interests, which were subject to be divested by their death under twenty-one.

In Jacobs v. Whitney, 205 Mass. 477, 91 N. E. 1009, 18 Ann. Cas. 576, where testator, after devising property in trust for the benefit of a brother during his life, and after his death one third of the income to the brother's wife if she survived him, and the remaining two thirds to the brother's children in certain proportions, directed that immediately after the decease of the brother and his wife, the realty should be vested in the children of the said brother "in the same proportions as above mentioned as to the income thereof; if any of the said children be then deceased, under lawful age, and without issue, the surviving children of my said brother to take the share of said decedent in the same proportions; but if either of the said children be then deceased leaving lawful issue him or her surviving, such issue shall take, and if more than one divide equally among them the part or share his, her, or their deceased parent would have taken if then living." It was held that there being nothing uncertain or contingent about those who are to take, or what they are to take, or when they are to take, the brother's children took an interest vesting at the moment of testator's death, subject only to the contingency of dying under age and without issue before the period when they are to come into possession arrives; and therefore that a child who attained full age, although dying in the lifetime of his parents, without issue, had an interest which passed to his assignee in insolvency.

Instances in which remainder is held vested not subject to be divested.

* In Johnson v. Washington Loan & T. Co. 224 U. S. 224, 56 L. ed. —, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 421, a testator devised his homestead to his daughters for a home so long as they should remain single and unmarried, directing that after the death or marriage of the last of them, it should be sold and the proceeds thereof "be distributed by my said executors among my daughters living at my death, and their children and descendants (per stirpes)." It was held that the words "living at my death" were conclusive that the daughters took a vested remainder in fee; and that such remainder was not defeasible, as to the interest of any of them, by her death leaving descendants before the expiration of the preceding estate, inasmuch as, if the provision for the children and descendants of the daughters per stirpes should be regarded as importing a condition subsequent, providing for a divesting of the interest of the daughters who survived him, and a substitution of their children and descendants, it would necessarily follow that the children and descendants of the daughters who died before him would be excluded from participation.

In Re Dawes, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 210, where testator gave a sum in trust for a certain person for life, and from and after his decease gave and bequeathed the principal sum "to be equally divided amongst the children of my late daughter, Jane Maria Boddy, or their descendants, but should there be none of them surviving, then my mind and will is that said sum shall be equally divided amongst such other grandchildren as I may then have living, or in default thereof to my legal representative," it was held that the children of the daughter, who survived the testator, were entitled under the bequest, although all but one of them failed to survive the tenant for life, two dying without and one leaving issue. The conclusion reached in this case, although perhaps supported by the context of the will, is sometimes criticized.

In Knight v. Pottgieser, 178 Ill. 368, 52 N. E. 934, where a testator devised certain realty to his wife for life, adding: "And upon and at her death the same to go to and be divided amongst my children and their descendants in equal shares, the descendant or descendants of a deceased child to take the parent's share in equal proportions," it was held that, although the gift was one to a class, and arose out of a direction to distribute, yet as the postponement of the right to possession was for the purpose of giving the wife a life interest, the remainder should be deemed to have vested at the death of the testator; and, further, that there was nothing in the will to indicate testator meant that the interest which vested at his death should be a base or determinable fee subject to be divested as to any devisee by the death of such devisee during the continuance of the life estate without leaving descendants to take after the death of the widow. With reference to the bearing of the allusion to "descendants" upon the question whether the remainder vested at testator's death, the court said: "The will provides that upon the termination of the life estate the premises shall go to and be divided among the children of the testator and their descendants. It is urged the word 'descendants' means only those persons who have proceeded in some degree from the body of a child of the testator, and that the selection and use of that word unmistakably indicate that it was the intention and purpose of the testator to exclude from the devise those who, though heirs at law of any deceased child, were not the direct or remote issue of such child. If this be conceded, we do not perceive it discloses that it was the purpose of the testator that those whom he intended to receive his bounty should not be determined during the lifetime of the widow. It is but his declaration as to the class of persons who should take,—not as to the time when the investiture should occur. His desire thereby indicated is well fulfilled by our construction of the will, i. e., that his children, at and upon his death, became seised of the estate in remainder in fee."

In Middleton v. Middleton, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1232, 43 S. W. 677, a will by which testator gave a daughter his estate to be used and enjoyed by her during her life, adding, "and at her death the same shall go and descend in equal shares to her children and to the descendants of such of her children as may be dead," was held to give the children a vested remainder, the court remarking: "The clause 'and to the descendants of such of her children as may be dead' means nothing more than if, at the time of distribution of the estate,—when the time comes for its enjoyment in possession,—one or more of such children be dead, their issue should take. This, it is true, would result anyway, but it is a common form of expression, denoting merely the inheritable quality of the estate." 57 L.R.A. (N.S.).

In White v. Curtis, 12 Gray, 54, where testator, after creating a trust for the benefit of his sons during their lives, directed: "At the decease of both my sons, the remainder of my estate shall be equally divided amongst my grandchildren and the legal descendants of any that may be deceased (if any there be) for their use and behoof forever; it is to be understood that each grandchild shall receive one share of said estate and all the descendants of a deceased grandchild (if any there be) shall receive one share to be equally divided amongst them," it was held that a grandchild living at testator's decease took a vested interest, which accordingly passed by inheritance to an illegitimate child.

In Trowbridge v. Coss, 126 App. Div. 679, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1108, affirmed without opinion in 195 N. Y. 596, 89 N. E. 1114, a testator gave his residuary estate in trust to divide the income among his intended wife and children during the lives of his daughter Mary and his intended wife, directing and declaring that the child or children of any deceased child should take the share of the parent deceased. He further provided: "On the death of the survivor of my said intended wife and my said daughter Mary, I give, devise, and bequeath my said property, real and personal, to my children, including the issue of my said intended marriage, share and share alike, the child of any deceased child to take the share of the deceased parent." Testator's son survived him, but died intestate and unmarried in the lifetime of the widow. A daughter who survived him died intestate leaving an infant child, who also died in the lifetime of the widow. The question having arisen as to whether the remainder vested in testator's children so as to pass to their heirs, or was contingent so as to pass to the only grandchild of testator who survived the termination of the trust estate, it was held that, the gift being made direct to testator's children, and the persons to take being certain, their interests would not depend upon their surviving the termination of the trust estate; that the use of the words "on the death of the survivor of my said intended wife and my said daughter Mary" did not show a contrary intent; and that the provision that the child or children of any deceased child should take the share of the parent merely emphasized his intention that the children living at the time of his death should take a vested, and not a contingent, estate.

In Womrath v. McCormick, 51 Pa. 504, a testator gave his wife the net income of all his estate for life, further providing that upon her decease all his real and personal estate should be valued and divided into as many parts, to be equal in value, as he should then have children living, the issue of any deceased child to represent their respective parent or parents, and each of such issue, if any, to be considered in the division as one part only, "and I give, devise, and bequeath to each of my said surviving children, and the issue of any deceased children, such issue to stand respectively in the place of their parent and to take together only the share their respective parent, if living, would have taken, one equal share or part of my said estate." A question having arisen as to whether the widow and children could give a good title, it was held that the reference to issue regarded the succession of the law, and created no contingency to prevent the estate devised to the children from being a vested remainder.

In Cowan v. Epes, 2 Patton & H. (Va.) 520, a testator gave his wife the use of one third of his estate during her natural life, desiring that at her death it be equally divided "among my children that I now have or may hereafter have, and the children of such of them as may die leaving children, giving to my grandchildren the portion intended for their deceased mother or father." It was held that, although the clause standing alone might lead to a contrary conclusion, the will as a whole, and notably the following recital in the residuary clause, "meaning and intending that in all clauses of this will all the children that I now have or may hereafter have share equally," manifested an intention on the part of the decedent that the remainder should vest at his death in his children surviving him and in the issue of those deceased.

In Brown v. Dinwiddie, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 269, 68 S. W. 421, a will by which testator gave shares of his estate in trust for his sisters for life, with the provision: "At the death of each of said three sisters who survive me, the share of my estate so held in trust for her shall be divided among my brothers and sisters having children, the children of any who may be dead taking the share of their parent," was held to give the brothers and sisters a vested remainder interest, enabling each of them, to give perfect title.

In Roberts v. Roberts, 102 Md. 131, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 782, 111 Am. St. Rep. 344, 62 Atl. 161, 5 Ann. Cas. 805, a testator gave his estate to his wife during life in trust for the use of herself and her children, with power to sell the property, and invest the proceeds, and lease the real estate and use whatever should be necessary for the support and education of the children, and to make advancements to them, devising and bequeathing all his property remaining at the death of the wife "to my children by my said wife, share and share alike, absolutely in fee simple; the child or children of a deceased child shall stand in its or their parent's place and stead, and receive and have the share and interest its and their parent would have been entitled to if living." The question having been raised as to whether one of the children, who died during the continuance of the life estate leaving issue, who died a few days later, took an heritable interest, it was held that, as, the wife having power to make advancements to any of the children, equality of distribution did not in any way depend upon whether the remainders were contingent or vested and as in doubtful cases an interest should be deemed vested in the first instance, rather than contingent, wherever such construction is possible, and as if the remainder must be regarded as contingent, there would be a possibility of intestacy in the event of all the children dying without issue in the wife's lifetime, the remainders were vested. The court said: "The provision that 'the child or children of a deceased child shall stand in its or their parent's place and stead, and receive and have the share and interest its and their parent would have been entitled to if living,' is not of controlling effect on this question by reason of the use of the words 'receive and have.' That was speaking of the period of distribution, and, whether vested or contingent, the remaindermen were not entitled to 'receive and have' their shares until that time arrived."

In Nelson v. Russell, 135 N. Y. 137, 31 N. E. 1008, reversing 61 Hun, 528, 16 N. Y. Supp. 395, where a testator devised to his two daughters certain realty for and during the term of their natural lives, and from and after their decease to the two children of a son, "to be divided equally between them and their heirs, share and share alike, the child or children of a deceased child taking the share which her or their parent would have taken if living," it was held that the two children of the son, who survived the testator, took, upon his death, a vested remainder in fee in the premises in question, and that the provision for their issue was by way of substitution in case of the death of the parent during the life of testator; and therefore that, by joining with the surviving tenant for life, they could convey a good title.

In Siddons v. Cockrell, 131 Ill. 653, 23 N. E. 586, a testator, after giving his wife the use of his entire estate during her widowhood, with the provision that should she marry, from and after such marriage she should have and control only "one third in value of the realty, and one third of the personal property then remaining, absolute," and should she survive all testator's children "(they having died without issue)," the entire estate was given to her absolutely, added: "But in case of the death of my wife leaving any of my children surviving, I will, devise, and bequeath to them all of my estate, in equal proportions, share and share alike, the heirs of any of my said children taking their deceased parent's share." It was held that as the devise of the reversion in two thirds of the realty in the event of the subsequent marriage of the widow would take effect immediately upon such marriage, there being nothing in the language of the will to warrant the conclusion that the title devised was intended to be vested at different times, although the enjoyment of the one third of the estate was postponed until after the death of the widow, the title was intended to vest immediately upon the death of testator, and so necessarily he must have intended children or children's children in being at his death, and the deaths contemplated were necessarily deaths in the lifetime of testator. The ultimate question in this case was whether the share of a child dying in infancy, and before the subsequent marriage of the widow, passed to his heirs at law.

In Johnes v. Beers, 57 Conn. 295, 14 Am. St. Rep. 101, 18 Atl. 100, a testator directed that, upon the death of his wife, property bequeathed for her benefit should be turned into money and divided into four equal parts, one part to be paid to each of his children, further providing: "In case of the death of any of my said children I order and direct that the part of him or her so dying be paid to his or her lawful issue, and in case he or they shall die without leaving any lawful issue, to pay and divide the part of him or her so dying to and among my surviving children and the lawful descendants of any of my said children [naming them] who may have deceased, such descendants of children to receive per stirpes, and not per capita." The question having arisen as to whether the issue of a son dying during the continuance of the precedent estate, or the son's legatee, was entitled, it was held that the death of the devisee referred to in the provision quoted being an absolutely certain event, it would be referred to the time of testator's own death, and the presumptions from the frame of the will being that the testator preferred children to grandchildren, and the vesting of his estate in his children at his death, rather than upon an event of uncertain time thereafter, the son took an interest which was not divested by his death.

In Moores v. Hare, 144 Ind. 573, 43 N. E. 870, a will by which testator, after giving his daughter a life estate in certain realty, provided: "At the death of her, said Maria F. Ritzinger, all the said real estate so devised to her for life shall go to her children in fee simple. If any child of hers shall have died leaving a child or children, then the portion of said real estate that would have gone to the parent shall go to such child," was held, in view of the rule that words of survivorship in a will, unless there is a manifest intent to the contrary, always relate to the death of the testator, to vest the remainder in the daughter's children at testator's death, the latter part of the clause quoted being regarded as having reference to death during testator's lifetime. This was an action by a purchaser of the interests of the life tenant and her children, to quiet title as against the grandchildren.

In Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Hun, 352, 3 Thomp. & C. 527, a testatrix gave to her two daughters the use and income of all her estate during their natural lives, provided they should remain unmarried, and in the event of their death or marriage, the remainder to her children, naming them, or to the survivor or survivors of them, with the proviso: "In case any of my children die having issue, then I will and direct that the child or children of such son or daughter of mine shall receive the same as the parent of such child would have received if living,—that is, the portion that would have belonged to the parent if living." It was held that, although the clause quoted raised a question not entirely free from embarrassment, it should be taken to provide for the disposition of the share or shares of such child or children as might not be living at the time of testatrix's decease, as otherwise the portion of any who might die in the lifetime of testatrix with issue would go to the survivor or survivors to the exclusion of such issue, thus precluding an equal distribution among her descendants, and therefore that the remainder was a vested one.

In Kessler v. Friede, 29 Misc. 187, 60 N. Y. Supp. 891, a will by which testator devised certain realty in trust for the care, maintenance, and education of the children of a deceased son, until the oldest should have arrived at the age of thirty years, when the trust fund was to be divided into as many shares or parts as his said son had children living at the time of testator's decease, and to pay one part to each child who may have arrived at the age of thirty years, further providing: "It is my will, and I hereby direct, that in case any of the children of my deceased son, Robert, shall depart this life leaving issue surviving, then such issue shall be entitled to and become vested with the share, interest, or portion of, in, and to the trust estate and my residuary estate his or their parent would be entitled to or would have received if such parent had lived," disclosed an intention to vest the interests of the distributees from the date of testator's death, the provision quoted plainly referring to a death before that of testator.

In Heilman v. Heilman, 129 Ind. 59, 28 N. E. 310, testator, after making certain specific gifts to his children, gave all the rest of his property to his wife during widowhood, with the further provision: "After the death of my dear wife all my estate, excepting the bequests herein made, shall be divided in equal shares among all my children, and should any of my children be dead, and have left children, then they shall be entitled to the distributive share of their parents." It was held in an action by a purchaser from a son to quiet title as against the son's children, that, although the gift took the form of a direction to divide and distribute after the death of the wife, yet, in view of the leaning of the courts toward a construction which will give a vested estate wherever possible, and the rule that survivorship, made a condition, turning point, or controlling event in the disposition of the property by a will generally, in the absence of an expressed or implied intention to the contrary, will be construed to refer to the time of the death of the testator, the children of the testator took a vested interest in the residue of his estate at the time of his death. The court said: "The reference to the grandchildren is one usually inserted in wills, intended originally to prevent the lapsing of legacies, but since the enactment of our statute, §§ 2567 and 2571, Rev. Stat. 1881, seldom necessary. We do not regard the insertion of this provision as of controlling effect in the construction of the instrument."

In Re Tienken, 131 N. Y. 391, 30 N. E. 109, a testator gave certain realty to his wife for life, and gave all the rest of his realty in trust during the life of his wife to pay to her a certain sum and apply the balance of the net income between his children, share and share alike, for their use, benefit, and maintenance, further directing that after the expiration of the life estate, the remaining land should be sold and the proceeds divided amongst the children. By the eighth clause of the will he provided: "Whereas in this will is mentioned and described gifts, devises, and bequests to my children, if any of them shall be dead leaving issue surviving them I do direct that the issue of any of my children deceased shall take the same share their parent would have received had such parent remained living, and to be divided among them, the said issue, share and share alike." A son of testator having died in the lifetime of the widow leaving no children, the question arose as to whether he had such an interest in his father's estate as would pass under his will. It was held that, having regard to the intention of testator as manifested by the language and the general scheme of the will, the son's estate vested at the time of his father's death, the court holding that the eighth clause above set forth had reference to the death of a child during testator's lifetime, and that its true meaning and office was to put in the place and stead of a child who had died before the testator, but left issue surviving, such surviving issue, as recipients of the parent's share, standing collectively in his or her place as one of the children to whom property is given, notwithstanding, in view of the protection afforded by the statute relating to lapsed legacies, that the provision was needless, and that such clause, instead of dictating the interpretation to be placed upon the will, must receive interpretation from the other indications of testator's intention. The court admitted, however, that it was an argument of some force that the clause itself was needless, except upon a construction which postponed vesting until the death of the widow, but stated that the force of such argument was more than balanced by other inferences founded upon the language of the clause itself. It may also be noted with regard to this case that the fact that the gift was in the form of a direction to divide and distribute was held not to give rise to an inference that testator meant the interest taken by his children to be contingent upon their surviving, a contrary intention being indicated by the fact that distribution was not directed to be made among "surviving children" or "among those who should be then living," or "among those and the issue of such as shall have previously died," but simply to "my children,"—a phrase used by testator throughout the will, as well in gifts taking effect immediately as in those in which enjoyment was postponed.

In Hill v. Bacon, 106 Mass. 578, it was held, without discussion of the question, that by a devise to testatrix's husband for life, and at his decease the remainder to her children in fee in equal proportions, "and if either shall at the time of their father's death have deceased leaving issue, such issue shall take their parent's portion of such estate," the children took vested remainders in fee absolutely, and could give good title thereto.

In Kimball v. Tilton, 118 Mass. 311, a testator created a trust for the benefit of his wife and children during the lives of his wife and daughter, directing that after the decease of said wife and daughter, the trustees should divide the trust funds into three equal parts and convey one part to each of his two sons and one to the lawful issue of the daughter. He further provided that if either of the sons should have deceased before the death of the daughter, leaving lawful issue then living, such issue should take the parent's share, and for want of such issue on the part of either, his share should go to his heirs at law. It was contended that as one of the sons had died in the lifetime of the daughter, leaving a son, his share never vested, or if it vested, was divested by the happening of the contingency; but it was held, following Hill v. Bacon, supra, that the son took a vested remainder in fee absolutely, which was capable of alienation.

In Callison v. Morris, 123 Iowa, 297, 98 N. W. 780, in which the ultimate question was whether testator's widow and son could convey a perfect title, it was held that the remainder devised to testator's son by a will also containing the following provision: "Should my son . . . decease leaving issue, prior to the distribution of my said property as herein provided, then it is my will, and I hereby direct, that the issue of such deceased son shall receive the share of its father; should my son . . . decease prior to such distribution leaving no issue, then it is my will that the interests of such deceased son shall descend to his heirs as the law may provide," was vested, the person being ascertained and the event certain, and there being nothing in the language of the will itself manifesting an intention to postpone the gift, the proviso quoted being practically the same as a devise to the son and his heirs.

In Northern Trust Co. v. Wheaton, 249 Ill. 606, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1150, 94 N. E. 980, a testator, after creating a trust estate during the life of his wife and sister and the survivor of them, directed that at its termination the trust estate then in the hands of the trustee "shall go, belong, and be immediately divided in absolute ownership to the following persons, share and share alike . . . [naming them]. In the event of the death of any of the ten persons above named as beneficiaries, before the interest in my estate shall vest in them, leaving a child or children surviving at the time said estate shall vest, then said child or children of such deceased person shall take their parent's share." One of the remaindermen died without leaving children surviving, during the continuance of the life estate. It was held that as it is an established rule that estates devised will vest at the death of the testator, unless some later time for their vesting is clearly expressed by the words of the will, or is necessarily implied therefrom; and as, at the time of the death of the testator, the ten beneficiaries named were in being, so that there was no uncertainty as to who would take the fee; as the postponement of the enjoyment of the estate was merely for the purpose of letting in the life interests of testator's wife and sister; and as, there being no clause of survivorship, the effect of holding the remainders to be contingent would be to produce an intestacy as to the share of any person dying during the continuance of the precedent estate without leaving children,—the remainder would be held to have vested at the death of testator. Referring to the indication of a contrary intention in the provision that a child or children of a deceased beneficiary should take the parent's share, the court said: "This clause may as well refer to the death of the beneficiaries before the death of the testator as afterwards. It is not inconsistent with the other provisions of the will to construe this language as referring to the death of the beneficiary before the death of the testator, and as indicating an intention on his part that if any of the beneficiaries died before the testator, leaving issue, such issue would be substituted for such deceased beneficiary. This construction seems to be consistent with the general testamentary scheme of the testator. By the death of a beneficiary after the death of the testator, the estate, being vested, would, of course, pass to the legal heirs of such beneficiary, and thus prevent intestacy as to such shares." E. S. O.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

DAVID W. KETTERER, Appt.,
v.

WILL NELSON et al.

(146 Ky. 7, 141 S. W. 409.)

Curtesy — mortgaged property — joiner by husband.

1. A man who joins in a mortgage of his wife's property is entitled to compute his curtesy interest only on the surplus after satisfying the mortgage and tax liens, not on the entire value of the property, under a statute giving him one third of all the real estate of which she was seized in fee simple during coverture, unless the right shall have been barred or relinquished.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — medical and funeral expenses — reimbursement.

2. A man is not entitled to be reimbursed out of his wife's estate the amount which he paid for her physician's and nurse's bills and funeral expenses.

Same — improvement of real estate — reimbursement.

3. A man is not entitled to reimbursement from his wife's estate of money expended by him in the improvement of her real estate.

(December 15, 1911.)

Note. — Liability of separate estate of wife for her funeral expenses.

The question of the liability of the wife's separate estate for her funeral expenses is covered in the note to Schneider v. Breier, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 917, and this note is merely supplementary thereto.

It may be stolid as an elementary proposition, the husband is liable for the reasonable funeral expenses of his wife, whether or not she may have had property of her own, and that he cannot, upon paying such expenses, charge the same to her separate estate (21 Cyc. 1233). From this it will be seen that in order to render the wife's separate estate liable, an exception must be made to that rule.

In Re Sea, 11 B. C. 324, it was held that the husband was liable for the wife's funeral expenses, and was not entitled to be indemnified from her separate estate. The court said: "The husband's duty to bury his dead wife at his own charge is neither based upon nor incidental to his marital proprietary right. It is founded in the marriage relation itself. Its true correlative is his right to nominate the place of his wife's burial and to prescribe the manner of her obsequies. The married woman's property acts do not expressly or by necessary implication deal with this obligation; nor do they affect the marriage status. I am therefore unable to agree with the view tentatively advanced by Mr. Lush in his book on 'Husband and Wife' (which is also the view held by so distinguished a jurist as Mr. Justice Holmes respecting the effect of the parallel legislation of the state of Massachusetts), that the reduction of the jus mariti effected by these acts involves the relief of the husband from the burden of this last act of piety and charity. Such an interpretation would, in my judgment, be legislative in its character. With respect to the weighty authority of Mr. Justice Holmes's opinion—one may observe that eminent American judges, in the application of legislative enactments, do permit themselves a latitude of interpretation which a Canadian court would not feel it-

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Boyd County distributing the property of plaintiff's deceased wife in an action brought to settle her estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. F. Stewart, for appellant:

Appellant has a right to be reimbursed for amounts paid for street improvement after his wife's death.

Nineteenth & J. Street Presby. Church v. Fithian, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 581, 29 S. W. 143; Hackworth v. Louisville Artificial Stone Co. 106 Ky. 234, 50 S. W. 33.

self free to exercise. It is equally clear that there is no right of indemnity out of the wife's estate. Of course, where the wife's property, being under settlement, is in course of administration in a court of equity, for the benefit of her creditors, a creditor resorting to that court to enforce his demand may be put upon terms to act fairly; and this, doubtless, is the explanation of the decision in Re M'Myn, L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 575, 55 L. J. Ch. N. S. 845, 55 L. T. N. S. 834, 35 Week. Rep. 179."

While the husband is bound to pay his wife's funeral expenses, yet if he fails to do so her estate is liable therefor, and her heirs can compel the husband to reimburse them for such expenses. Carpenter v. Hazelrigg, 103 Ky. 538, 45 S. W. 666.

In Gregory v. Lockyer, 6 Madd. 90, 22 Revised Rep. 246, where the husband had paid his wife's funeral expenses, and claimed before the master to have the amount repaid, and a decree was entered directing the wife's separate estate to be applied to the payment of these expenses, the vice chancellor said that he considered himself bound by the decree, but expressed a doubt whether generally the husband had a right to throw the wife's funeral expenses upon her separate estate.

A married woman may, however, make a testamentary disposition of so much of her estate as is necessary for the payment of her funeral expenses. Hoopers's Estate, 2 Chester, Co. Rep. 67.

And the payment of such expenses by the husband in the first instance will not prevent his recovery from her estate, where she has made such a provision. Ibid.

In Re M'Myn, L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 575, a husband who was executor of his wife's will, made under a testamentary power of appointment, was held entitled to retain out of her estate the amount paid by him for her funeral expenses, although the estate was insufficient to pay her creditors, and she had made no charge of debts or funeral expenses. The court said: "In Willeter v. Dobie, 2 Kay & J. 647, 4 Week. Rep. 669, it is true that there was a charge by the wife of her funeral expenses. It is also true that the law casts upon a husband the duty of burying his wife; but the law does not on that account cast upon the

And for payments made on liens against the property after his wife's death.

Treadway v. Pfaris, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 787, 18 S. W. 225; Kelley v. Ball, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 132, 19 S. W. 581; State Nat. Bank v. Vicroy, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 892, 70 S. W. 183; Connor v. Home & Sav. Fund Co. Bldg. Asso. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 109, 80 S. W. 797; Cumberland University v. Roberson, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 947, 99 S. W. 1152; Ft. Jefferson Improv. Co. v. Dupoyster, 112 Ky. 792, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 263, 66 S. W. 1048; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 799.

Mr. George B. Martin, for appellees:

Plaintiff is not entitled to be paid out of husband the burden of burying his wife at his own cost always. In most cases the husband takes all his wife's personal property by reducing it into possession during his lifetime. To call upon him to bury her out of his own money in a case like the present, where the wife exercised her power of appointment, and made the fund general assets for her creditors, but has omitted to mention her funeral expenses, would be too hard. I think, therefore, that the husband is entitled to retain the sums expended on her funeral."

Where a statute provides that when an executor or administrator has sufficient means over and above the expenses of administration, "he shall pay off the charges of the last sickness and funeral expenses of the deceased," a primary liability is created, and although it is still the husband's duty to see that his wife is properly buried, he is entitled to be reimbursed from her estate; and where she predeceases her husband, her estate is liable to his estate for such expenses. Skillman v. Wilson, 146 Iowa, 601, 140 Am. St. Rep. 295, 125 N. W. 343. The court said: "The legislative design in enacting the statute quoted was to assure to every person care in his last sickness and appropriate burial by declaring the charges therefor preferred claims, and exacting their payment as soon as funds enough to satisfy them come into the possession of his personal representative. It is mandatory in form. It contains no discrimination as between creditors to whom such charges may be owing, and the duty to pay is declared independently of any obligation which may exist on the part of others. Its language obviates the inference otherwise to be drawn, that it was intended merely to declare a preference as between claims against the estate. As seen, it may be deemed the basis for the allowance of such expenses, and we are of the opinion that the legislative intent was to impose on the estate of every deceased person a primary liability for the charges of the last sickness and funeral. If so, the obligation of either husband or wife therefor is secondary thereto in character, and, in event of payment by either, such charges may be established as claims against the estate of the deceased." J. T. W.

the surplus a curtesy valuation based upon the entire value of the property.

Harrison v. Griffith, 4 Bush, 146.

He is not entitled to reimbursement for physician's and nurse's bills and funeral expenses.

Carpenter v. Hazelrigg, 103 Ky. 538, 45 S. W. 666; Towery v. McGaw, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 155, 56 S. W. 727, 982; Brand v. Brand, 109 Ky. 721, 60 S. W. 704; Long v. Beard, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1036, 48 S. W. 158.

Nor for any amount expended by him in improvement of the property.

Nall v. Miller, 95 Ky. 448; Carpenter v. Hazelrigg, 103 Ky. 538, 45 S. W. 666.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents a controversy between the appellant and the brothers and sisters of his deceased wife over the distribution of the proceeds of her real estate, she having died childless and intestate. There seems to have been no administration of the decedent's estate, and this action was brought by the husband to settle the estate.

The decedent owned at the time of her death a lot in the city of Ashland upon which was situated a combined residence and business house. She owed no debts except a note of $1,000 to Mrs. Casbolt, a note of $850 to Mrs. Gartrell, both secured by mortgage liens upon her real estate, and to the city of Ashland $275.73 for street improvement, for which it had and asserted a statutory lien upon the property in question. The circuit court adjudged that the creditors named had liens upon the real estate left by the decedent to secure their respective debts, directed its sale to pay them, and that a sufficiency of the residue of its proceeds be applied to the payment of appellant's curtesy or dower right in the real estate, and the remainder to the decedent's two brothers and sister, who are her only heirs at law.

The appellant complains of the judgment, and insists it should have directed that he be paid his curtesy or dower upon the basis of the entire price realized by the sale of the decedent's real estate, instead of out of the surplus after payment of the liens thereon, as was adjudged. He also contends that, before the distribution of any part of the proceeds of the real estate among the decedent's heirs at law, the judgment should have directed that he be reimbursed out of same for certain sums he paid for the burial of his wife, in satisfaction of physician's and nurse's bills incurred during her last illness, and for improvements upon her real estate, made before her 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) death. These several contentions we will now consider in the order named.

The surviving husband's interest in the deceased wife's real estate is declared by § 2132, Kentucky Statutes (§ 4637, Russell's Stat.), which provides: "After the death of either the husband or wife, the survivor shall have an estate for his or her life, in one third of all the real estate of which he or she, or anyone for his or her use, was seised of an estate in fee simple during the coverture, unless the right to such dower or interest shall have been barred, forfeited, or relinquished; and the survivor shall have an absolute estate in one half of the surplus personalty left by such decedent." It will be observed that by the language of the statute appellant's curtesy or dower only extended to such of the wife's real estate, or interest therein, as had not been barred, forfeited, or relinquished. By his act in joining in the mortgages which the wife gave upon the property, appellant relinquished his curtesy or dower therein to such part thereof as might be required to pay the mortgage liens, and the lien debt due the city of Ashland for the street improvement, being in the nature of a tax lien upon the property, was also superior to his curtesy or dower. In view of these facts, he was not entitled to be paid out of the surplus proceeds of the real estate a curtesy or dower valuation based upon the entire value of the property. In Harrison v. Griffith, 4 Bush, 146, we held that a widow is entitled to dower in what remains of the proceeds of the sale of the house and lot to which her husband held an equitable title at his death, after satisfying a vendor's lien, and also satisfying an execution lien in favor of the commonwealth, to pay which he had surrendered the house and lot in writing. We think this case conclusive of the one at bar as to the question of appellant's curtesy or dower. Therefore the judgment of the lower court on that point was not error.

Appellant's claim to be reimbursed out of the proceeds of the property for the wife's physician's and nurse's bills and burial expenses cannot be sustained, these items being demands in the nature of necessities for the wife for which he was primarily liable. We do not think the case of Carpenter v. Hazelrigg, 103 Ky. 538, 45 S. W. 666, relied on by appellant, militates against this conclusion. It is true the wife's physician's bill and funeral expenses were in that case ordered to be paid out of the proceeds of her land, but it was because the husband had failed to pay them. In the opinion it is said: "Whilst the husband is bound in law to pay the necessary physician's bill for his wife and her funeral expenses, yet, if the husband fails to pay them, her estate is liable therefor. The husband seems to have failed to pay them, and it was not error for the court to order the land sold subject to the husband's homestead right to pay these expenses. If the land is sold to pay them, the husband can be compelled by appropriate proceedings to reimburse those to whom her estate descends."

Appellant also relies upon the case of Towery v. McGraw, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 155, 56 S. W. 727, 982, in which it was held that the wife's personalty should first be subjected to the payment of funeral expenses, but also held that medical services and the care of the wife were necessities within the meaning of the statute providing that the husband shall be liable for necessities furnished the wife. The holding that the wife's personalty should be subjected to the payment of funeral expenses seems to have been based upon the ground that the bills for medical services and care of the wife had not in fact been paid by the husband; the claims therefor being asserted by the creditors directly against the wife's estate. These facts seem to distinguish Towery v. McGraw from Carpenter v. Hazelrigg, supra, with which it is apparently in conflict, and also distinguishes it from the case at bar. In Long v. Beard, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1036, 48 S. W. 158, it was held that the husband is bound in law for the physician's bill and burial expenses of his deceased wife, as these are obligations for which he is primarily liable. In Brand v. Brand, 116 Ky. 785, 63 L.R.A. 206, 76 S. W. 868, it was held that the share of the husband in the wife's estate may be charged with the funeral expenses and physicians' bills of the wife, as he is primarily liable for debts contracted by her, for necessities, after marriage. The opinion in Brand v. Brand is the last decision of this court on the question under consideration, and we adhere to the conclusion therein expressed.

We are also of opinion that the circuit court did not err in rejecting appellant's claim for the amount expended by him in improving the wife's real estate. In Nall v. Miller, 95 Ky. 448, 25 S. W. 1106, it was held that "equity . . . will not imply a promise by her [the wife] to pay him [the husband] for improvements or repairs on her land while possessed, used, and enjoyed in virtue of his marital rights, nor even for money advanced by him to remove an encumbrance from it. On the contrary, a presumption arises in all such cases the consideration and motive of the husband was that he would be reimbursed by use and enjoyment of the land." The same principle was announced in Carpenter v. Hazelrigg, supra, it being there held that the husband was not entitled to enforce a claim against his wife's land for improvements erected thereon by him, whether with her money or his own.

We do not question that the wife's estate, at the suit or upon the claim of the creditors, could have been made to pay the claims for which appellant demanded reimbursement, but as they seem to have been voluntarily paid by him before the wife's death, and were demands for which he could have been made primarily liable, he is now estopped to insist upon their payment out of the proceeds of the wife's realty. Especially is this true in view of the fact that appellant has neither alleged nor proved any express promise on the part of the wife to repay him the sums expended by him for her.

Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE JACKSON, by Guardian ad Litem, Resp't.,

v.

PACIFIC COAST CONDENSED MILK COMPANY, Appt.

(— Or. —, 120 Pac. 1.)

Master — hospital fund — liability.

1. An employer who, under his contract

Note. — Liability of master for medical attendance engaged by employee who, by the contract of employment, was entitled to such attendance.

As to implied power of employee to employ physician to attend injured employee, see note to Atlantic Ref. Co. v. Leffingwell, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 351.

As to liability of master for services of physician whom he summons to care for employee, see note to Norton v. Rourke, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 174.

As to liability for negligence of attendants furnished by relief department toward which employees contribute, see notes to Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1167, and Texas C. R. Co. v. Zimwalt, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1207.

On the general question as to master's duty to provide medical assistance for his servant, see note to The Kenilworth, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49.

As to the rights of the parties under specific agreements to provide medical assistance, see the cases collected on pages 55 and 56 of the note in 4 L.R.A. (N.S.).

Independent of contract, a physician cannot recover from an employer for services with an employee, retains a portion of his wages for a hospital fund, the contract making him a member of the hospital association, membership in which entitles him to medical attention when injured, is liable for the expense of such attention when the employee is injured in his service.

Same — private physician — employer's liability.

2. An employee who, under his contract of employment, is entitled to medical attention from his employer in case of injury, may employ a physician at his employer's expense if the employer has no hospital service, and does nothing towards furnishing needed attention after receiving notice that the employee has been injured and needs treatment.

(January 23, 1912.)

rendered by an employee. 26 Cyc. 1050.

A contract of employment whereby the master agreed to furnish medical attendance in case of injury does not inure to the benefit of a physician employed by the servant, so as to entitle the physician to recover from the master for professional services rendered to the injured servant, even though the master knew and approved of the employment. Thomas Mfg. Co. v. Prather, 65 Ark. 27, 44 S. W. 218. It is intimated, however, that the injured servant might be entitled to recover the amount paid for medical attendance. The court said: "Moreover, the contract here was 'to furnish medical attendance,' not to pay the wages or for the services of a physician whom Brown might employ. According to the express terms of the contract, the company did not surrender to Brown the right to bind it by a contract he might make with a physician, or constitute him its agent to employ a physician, and hence the company is not bound, according to the written contract, for the services of a physician whom Brown employed. But the court found 'that this employment of plaintiff as physician was known to defendant company, and by it, through its officers, fully approved.' This might be sufficient, in a suit brought by Brown against the company, to recover of it the sum which he had paid his physician, to estop the company from denying that it had waived its right to furnish its own physician, provided the company knew that the physician was called by Brown in reliance upon his contract for it 'to furnish him medical attendance.' But this finding cannot avail appellee, for he is suing upon an express written contract, which, as we have seen, was not for his benefit."

A dissenting opinion in the above case took the view that the contract of employment, which recited that the employer was insured against accidents resulting in bodily injury or death of the employees, and that he would pay certain sums in case of bodily injury, and furnish medical attendance, was a contract to create a fund for the benefit of a third person, in considera-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Washington County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the expense of medical attention made necessary by an injury received while in defendant's employ. Affirmed.

Statement by Eakin, Ch. J.:

Plaintiff in June, 1908, was in the employ of defendant at its factory as a laborer, at the agreed wage of 15 cents per hour, and it was agreed that defendant was to retain 50 cents per month as hospital fees from such wages. While performing the duties of his employment on June 28, 1908, his left leg was broken, but the injury was of such a nature that he did not realize that tion of services to be performed by him in the future; and that the servant was not the beneficiary contemplated, for he was one of the original parties who had engaged to raise the fund, and was in fact the only contributor to that fund, and that therefore the physician who rendered the medical assistance was the beneficiary, and should be entitled to recover from the employer for services rendered in caring for the injured servant.

The mere retention by the employer of a part of the servant's wages for the support of a hospital for the use of the employees does not impose upon the employer the absolute duty to furnish each contributor all the medical or surgical attendance he might need or require, whether the fund provided was sufficient or not, as the only liability assumed in collecting the fund was to expend it for the purpose for which it was given. MacRae v. Small, 48 Or. 139, 85 Pac. 503.

Accordingly, where the employer has used ordinary care in the expenditure of the money and in the employment of physicians and surgeons in charge of the hospital, he is not responsible for the negligence of the surgeon so employed in going away and leaving the hospital in charge of another, whereby an injured employee was compelled to engage another surgeon to perform a necessary operation. Miller v. Beaver Hill Coal Co. 48 Or. 136, 85 Pac. 502.

An arrangement whereby the employer retains a certain portion of the wages, with the understanding that the employee, when sick or injured, shall be entitled to hospital benefits at the employer's expense, implies, in the absence of an understanding to the contrary, the continuance of the benefits while the sickness or injury require it; and the employee is not bound by a rule, subsequently adopted, of which he had no notice, to the effect that treatment shall continue as long as the attendant or chief surgeon deems it necessary, and that benefits will not be given for injuries received in a fight. Scanlon v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 86 S. W. 930 (action for damages). A. L. R.

there was a fracture, although it caused him great suffering. He continued at his work for several days, during which time he complained of the injury to his boss at different times, and also reported his inability to work. He consulted a physician, Dr. Ward, whom he understood was the company's physician, and was given some liniment for external application. He reported to the bookkeeper that he had consulted Dr. Ward, and was told it was all right. Plaintiff's condition continued to grow worse, and in August, 1908, being unable to work, he consulted another physician, Dr. Leonard, who pronounced the injury a fracture, and he set it in splints. There was not much improvement until May, 1909, when plaintiff consulted Dr. Wilson, who operated upon the bone to induce it to unite. So far as the record shows, the defendant does not maintain a hospital, but simply uses the hospital funds to defray the expenses for medical treatment of the members of the Hospital Fund Association, who are entitled to aid therefrom. On November 27, 1908, defendant paid all bills incurred by plaintiff for medical treatment prior to that date, but bills subsequently incurred by him it refused to pay, being the items for surgical treatment and attention and the expense of X-ray photos, amounting to the sum of $218.95. Plaintiff brought this action to recover that sum. On the trial, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, defendant moved for judgment of nonsuit, which was denied, and verdict and judgment were rendered for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

Messrs. Williams, Wood, & Lanthicum and Isaac D. Hunt, for appellant:

The deduction from the wages of an employee, by an employer, of a certain sum per month for the maintenance of a hospital fund, is a subscription to charity by the employee, and does not constitute a contract whereby the employer agrees to indemnify the employee for all sums of money spent for medical and surgical services.

Miller v. Beaver Hill Coal Co. 48 Or. 136, 85 Pac. 502; Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 23 L.R.A. 581, 9 C. C. A. 14, 19 U. S. App. 612, 60 Fed. 365; Richardson v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 10 Wash. 648, 39 Pac. 95; Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L.R.A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745, 15 Atl. 553.

Messrs. Bagley & Hare, for respondent:

The record discloses a contract whereby the defendant agreed to indemnify the plaintiff for all sums of money spent for medical and surgical services, and the case at bar is not within the purview of Miller 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Beaver Hill Coal Co. 48 Or. 136, 85 Pac. 502.

Eakin, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question involved on the appeal is the alleged error in the denial of the motion for judgment of nonsuit, which involves two questions: Whether plaintiff has established a contract on the part of defendant to pay such expense; and, if so, whether the injury and expense incurred in the treatment of it are within the contemplation of the contract.

Plaintiff's contract of employment is evidenced by the following:

Forest Grove Factory.

George Jackson, No. 54, enters the employ of the Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co. as gen'l help, to be rated at 15 cents per hour from June 9, 1908; 50 cents per month to be deducted for hospital fund. Payment for each month's labor to be made on the 12th day of following month. I agree to the above.

George Jackson.

H. H. Steward, Supt.

The by-laws of the Hospital Fund Association of defendant are stated, in substance, in the answer of defendant, as follows: "On or about the 1st day of March, 1903, the defendant herein . . . created what is known as the hospital fund, said fund being for the benefit of its employees. By the rules and by-laws of said hospital fund it was provided that all persons employed by the Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Company at its factory located at Forest Grove, Oregon, should be considered members of the Hospital Fund Association, and, if a member in good standing and otherwise properly entitled thereto under the rules and by-laws of the said association, should receive the benefits of the Hospital Fund Association. It was further provided that the initiation fee to said association should be $.50 and that monthly dues of the said association should be $.50. It was further provided that the membership of any employee in the Hospital Fund Association and his right to the benefits thereof should be terminated by the discharge of any such employee by the defendant herein, or by the discontinuance of work by any of the employees. It was further provided that the benefits to be derived by the injured or sick members of the Hospital Fund Association . . . were that medical attention and drugs should be furnished to such member without expense to said member." It is admitted by defendant that the hospital fund is not a separate fund or organization, but is in the hands of the defendant company, and that there are sufficient hospital funds to satisfy any judgment rendered in this case. The employment card signed by plaintiff and the company constituted the plaintiff a member of the Hospital Fund Association, and entitles him to any benefits authorized thereby, and the dues which the defendant retained out of his wages were the consideration therefor. The employment of plaintiff and the payment from his wages of 50 cents per month, together with the stipulations of the by-laws, make a complete contract whereby defendant undertook to furnish to plaintiff medical attendance and drugs without expense to plaintiff in case of sickness or injury. We also find that the injury was received by plaintiff while in the employ of defendant, and therefore he was within the provisions of the by-laws.

It is contended by defendant that plaintiff chose his own physician, and that it should not be held liable, as plaintiff did not apply to defendant for treatment. It appears that defendant knew of the injury at the time it was received, and of the daily increasing suffering it caused, and the disability resulting therefrom. Plaintiff does not say he gave defendant formal notice of the injury or asked for a physician, but it does appear that his superiors knew of the injury at the time it was received, and that it was serious, on account of which he was unable to perform regular work, and that he was receiving medical treatment. The company had no hospital, and did nothing toward furnishing him needed attention, and he was justified in seeking proper medical aid, the expense of which should have been paid out of the hospital fund. The defendant recognized this fact in paying the first bills, namely, the bill of Dr. Leonard, for medical service and the expense of three X-ray photos of the fracture, thus approving plaintiff's act in choosing his own physician.

The case of Miller v. Beaver Hill Coal Co. 48 Or. 136, 85 Pac. 502, upon which defendant rests his case, is not at all in point here. In that case no contract was proved. But a hospital which was at the service of defendant was maintained by the company, with a competent surgeon in charge, and the company was under obligation to do nothing more. Neither was it shown that there were hospital funds available, which was the limit of the company's liability. In the case at bar we have a contract and sufficient money available in the hospital fund, but no hospital nor medical attendant offered or available; and 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) plaintiff was justified in seeking the necessary medical attention.

The motion for nonsuit was properly denied.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp't.,

v.

JOHN RACKICH, Appt.

(66 Wash. 390, 119 Pac. 843.)

Witness — competency — nationality of parents.

1. Upon a prosecution for selling liquor to a person of Indian blood, the latter is competent to testify as to the nationality of his parents.

Evidence — best — parentage.

2. Evidence of one whose parents are accessible, as to their nationality, is not inadmissible on the theory that it is not the best evidence of the fact.

Continuance — to secure better evidence.

3. A continuance to secure the presence of witnesses to testify to their nationality should not be granted because their child is offered as a witness to prove that fact, where there is nothing to show that their testimony would differ from that of the child, or that diligence has been used in attempting to secure their testimony sooner.

Trial — evidence — credibility — question for jury.

4. The credibility of a witness employed by the government to secure evidence against persons selling liquor to Indians is for the jury.

Pleading — variance — difference in quantity.

5. There is no fatal variance in a prosecution for selling liquor to Indians in the fact that the information charges sale of a quart, while the evidence shows sale of a pint.

(December 27, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County convicting him of selling intoxicating liquors to a half-blood Indian. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — Competency to testify as to one's nationality.

In Daniel v. Guy, 19 Ark. 121, it was held that persons skilled in the national history of the races of men are competent to testify to the distinguishing marks of the different races, to aid the jury, who have observed the person whose nationality is in issue, in coming to a correct conclu-

Mr. John H. Allen, for appellant:

The evidence of Brown concerning his parentage was inadmissible.

Brown v. Lazarus, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 81, 25 S. W. 72; Gilbert, Ev. 2d ed. 1760; Re Heaton, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 321; Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 347, 7 Am. Dec. 277; Malone v. Adams, 113 Ga. 791, 84 Am. St. Rep. 259, 39 N. E. 507; Greene v. Almand, 111 Ga. 735, 36 S. E. 957; Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577, 51 Am. Rep. 207; Re Robb, 37 S. C. 33, 16 S. E. 241; Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389-397, 29 L. ed. 915, 918, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780; Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217; Northrop v. Hale, 76 Me. 306, 49 Am. Rep. 615; Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176, 30 Atl. 752; Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 482;

Young v. Shulenberg, 165 N. Y. 385, 80 Am. St. Rep. 730, 59 N. E. 135; Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 175, 18 L. ed. 186; Thompson v. Woolf, 8 Or. 454.

Messrs. John F. Murphy and Alfred H. Lundin, for respondent:

There is no difference in principle between a person testifying as to his nationality or to his age. It has been repeatedly held that one may testify as to his age.

McCollum v. State, 110 Ga. 308, 100 Am. St. Rep. 171, 46 S. E. 413; Curry v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 158, 94 S. W. 1058; State v. Miller, 71 Kan. 200, 80 Pac. 51, 6 Ann. Cas. 58; Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526; Reed v. State, 16 Ark. 499; Underhill, Crim. Ev. 2d ed. § 53; United States v. Hung Chang, 67 C. C. A.

sion as to whether he belonged to the one race or the other.

And in White v. Clements, 39 Ga. 232, it was held that a physician who has studied the science of ethnology is competent to testify as an expert that a certain person had negro blood.

In Almshouse Comrs. v. Whistelo, 3 Wheeler, C. C. 194, physicians were permitted to testify as experts on the question whether a black or white man was the father of a particular child.

So, an owner and manager of negro slaves who had studied and observed the effects of the intermixture of the races is competent to testify as an expert on the question as to the presence of African blood in a person. State v. Jacobs, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 284.

And a government Chinese inspector whose business is closely to observe Chinamen, and who has made a practical study of the racial characteristics of the Chinese, is a competent witness to give his opinion as to the nationality of a person in deportation proceedings under the Chinese exclusion acts, though he has only had three months' experience as government inspector, and had no theoretical knowledge of the science of ethnology. United States v. Hung Chang, 67 C. C. A. 93, 134 Fed. 19, reversing 126 Fed. 400.

Likewise, a Chinese interpreter who was born in China and lived about fifteen years in that country, and who devoted his time to the identification and examination of Chinese persons, and had conversed with the accused in the Chinese language, is competent to testify as an expert that accused was a Chinese person, though he admitted on cross-examination that if a Chinaman had his queue eliminated and did not speak the Chinese language, he might be mistaken for a Korean or a Japanese. Ibid.

In Hare v. Board of Education, 113 N. C. 9, 18 S. E. 55, it was said that while in doubtful cases only an expert would be qualified to testify from the appearance of a person as to the extent to which white and negro blood are commingled in his veins, it does not require any peculiar scientific knowledge to be able to detect the presence of African blood by the color or other physical qualities of a person.

Accordingly, it was competent to show by one not an expert, who had observed the appearance, the color, and other physical qualities of a person, that such person's parent was a full-blood negro. Ibid.

And in Hopkins v. Bowers, 111 N. C. 175, 16 S. E. 1, it was held that a witness who knew the person, and had had opportunities of observation, was competent to give his opinion in evidence that such person was of mixed African and white blood. The court said that it was not necessary that the witness should be an expert to testify to a matter which is simply one of common observation, and cited the cases in which it was held that one not an expert can give his opinion as to the sanity or insanity of a person he has had opportunities of observing.

In State v. Patrick, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 308, a witness who knew defendant was permitted to testify that he had the appearance of and looked like a negro. To the same effect is Moore v. State, 7 Tex. App. 608, though no objection appears to have been raised.

In Kansas P. R. C. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, one who had traveled several days in a car with eight or ten passengers was permitted to testify that, in his opinion, formed from observing the dress, general appearance, and conversation, certain passengers were of German nationality; though the witness professed himself not well acquainted with the German language.

It has been held that the race of a person may be shown by persons who are familiar with his reputation among those who knew him. White v. Clements, 39 Ga. 232 (part negro); Nave v. Williams, 22 Ind. 368 (part negro); Chancellor v. Milly, 9 Dana, 24, 33 Am. Dec. 521 (negro).

A diligent search of the authorities corroborates the statement by the court in STATE v. RACKICH, as to the lack of authorities on the question whether one is competent to testify to his own nationality or that of his parents.

A. L. R.

93, 134 Fed. 19; Greely v. Newcomb, 21 Wash. 357, 58 Pac. 216; State v. Littooy, 52 Wash. 87, 100 Pac. 170, 17 Ann. Cas. 292.

There was nothing wrong in the method employed by United States agent Miller in this case.

State v. Lucas, 92 Mo. App. 117, 67 S. W. 971.

The substance of an allegation is all that the state is required to prove.

State v. Smith, 40 Wash. 615, 82 Pac. 918, 5 Ann. Cas. 686.

Fullerton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was convicted of the crime of selling spirituous liquor to one Brown, an Indian of the half blood.

On the trial Brown was permitted to testify, over the objection of the appellant, as to his parentage, stating that his mother was a full-blooded Indian and that his father was a Portuguese. The appellant argues in this court that this evidence was inadmissible, being but hearsay, and consequently not the best evidence. But we think a person, competent otherwise to be a witness, may testify as to his parentage. While no case has been cited us holding directly that a witness may so testify, analogous cases are numerous. For example, it was held in State v. Miller, 71 Kan. 200, 80 Pac. 51, 6 Ann. Cas. 58, that the prosecuting witness was competent to testify as to her own age, notwithstanding both of her parents were present and testifying to the same fact, and this is a case where the question of her exact age at a particular time was a material question at issue. To the same effect are the following cases: State v. McClain, 49 Kan. 730, 31 Pac. 790; Hill v. Eldridge, 126 Mass. 234; State v. Cain, 9 W. Va. 559; State v. Best, 108 N. C. 747, 12 S. E. 907; Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526; 2 Jones, Ev. § 303.

So, also, a witness may testify as to the ages of other members of his family. 2 Jones, Ev. § 303. The principle that permits a person to testify to his own age, or as to the ages of the different members of his family, will also permit him to testify as to his parentage. He acquires the knowledge of the one fact in the same manner that he does the other facts, and, while such evidence partakes somewhat of the character of hearsay evidence, it is admissible on grounds of public policy.

The appellant argues further that since it was shown that the parents of the prosecuting witness were still living, they were the only persons competent to testify to the prosecuting witness's parentage, and that in consequence the evidence admitted was not the best evidence of which the case in its 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nature was susceptible. But the rule that permits a person to testify as to his parentage is not founded on the principle that it is substitutionary in its nature. On the contrary, it is of itself original evidence. It may be weaker than would be that of the parents themselves; but to permit the one to testify when the others are within call is not a substitution of evidence. It is no more than the selection of the weaker competent evidence instead of the stronger. To do this violates no rule of evidence. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 82.

At the trial, and after the prosecuting witness had testified that his parents were still living, the appellant moved orally for a continuance until such time as the parents could be brought into court. The court denied the motion, and the appellant excepted. It is thought that the court abused its discretion in denying the motion, but we think otherwise. There was no showing that the testimony of the parents would have differed from that of the prosecuting witness, nor was there any showing of diligence in attempting to procure their testimony. The court's business must proceed orderly and with despatch, and interruption in the proceedings such as was here sought is not to be tolerated, unless for the gravest reasons.

It appears that the prosecuting witness to whom the liquor was sold was in the employ of a government agent engaged in the detection and prosecution of persons selling liquor to Indians, and it is thought that this fact rendered his testimony concerning the alleged sale unworthy of belief. But this was for the jury. There is nothing inherently wrong in this method of detecting wrongdoers; in fact, the method resorted to is sometimes indispensable if violators of the liquor statutes are to be brought to justice.

The charge in the information is that the appellant sold to the prosecuting witness one quart of spirituous liquor, while the proof was that one pint of such liquor was so sold. It is thought that this was such a variance as to amount to a failure of proof, but the rule is otherwise. The crime consists in the selling of spirituous liquors, not in the selling of any particular quantity thereof. Hence the substance of the issue was proven, which is all that is required.

The other assignments touched upon in the appellant's brief seem to have no support in the record. For that reason it is unnecessary that we consider them.

The judgment is affirmed.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Gore and Mount, JJ., concur.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

W. A. RUTHERFORD, Appt.,
v.

MRS. ANGIE WILSON.

(95 Ark. 246, 129 S. W. 534.)

Life estate — cutting timber — waste.

A jury may find absence of waste on the part of a life tenant in cutting and selling one hundred dollars worth of timber from 20 or 25 acres of a 230-acre tract, 150 acres of which are already in cultivation, where it is done not to secure the profits from the timber, but to put the land into cultivation, the effect of which will be a benefit to the freehold.

(May 30, 1910.)

Note. — Timber rights of life tenant.

- I. In general, 763.
- II. Necessities of life tenant, 764.
- III. Customary estovers.
  - a. Fuel, 764.
  - b. Repairs; fences; buildings, 765.
- IV. Payment of taxes and other charges, 767.
- V. Fallen or decaying timber, 767.
- VI. Thinning trees, 768.
- VII. Cutting timber for sale.
  - a. In general, 768.
  - b. Custom of estate, 768.
- VIII. Clearing land.
  - a. Relaxation of strict rules, 770.
  - b. The rule and its application in this country.
    - (1) In general, 771.
    - (2) Proceeds of timber, 772.
- IX. Tenant for life not impeachable for waste; ornamental trees, 772.
- X. Miscellaneous, 773.

This note is confined to tenants for life, to the exclusion of tenants for years. It is concerned only with questions of substantive law, and does not deal with the subject of remedies. Upon the analogous subject of the right of the life tenant as to minerals, generally, see note to Deffenbaugh v. Hess, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1099; and as to oil and gas, see note to Ohio Oil Co. v. Daughetee, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1108.

I. In general.

Since the extension by the statute of Marlbridge (52 Hen. III. chap. 23) to conventional estates for life, of the common-law doctrine of waste, which originally only applied to life estates created by law, the life tenant, whether his estate is of conventional or legal origin, has, in England, been narrowly restricted in respect of the right to the use of timber, unless the instrument creating the estate declares him not to be impeachable for waste. In that country estovers of fuel and repairs comprise substantially the entire right, with the single exception of timber lands which have, by the custom of the estate, been cultivated for

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Independence County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover from a life tenant the market value of certain timber sold from the estate under circumstances constituting it waste. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel M. Casey, for appellant:

The cutting and selling of timber by a life tenant is waste, for which the reversioner may sue.

Learned v. Ogden, 80 Miss. 769, 92 Am. St. Rep. 621, 32 So. 278; Clemence v. Steere, 1 R. I. 272, 53 Am. Dec. 621; Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 69-74; McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 15, 37 S. W. 306.

the produce of salable timber; otherwise the cutting of timber for the purpose of selling it or using it off the premises is entirely forbidden to the life tenant. So, in England, the life tenant may not cut timber even for the purpose of clearing wooded land and rendering it fit for cultivation. While the purpose and object underlying these rules is the preservation of the inheritance without permanent injury, the rules themselves, in England, at least, are very rigid, and, with the exception just noted, admit of little variation or relaxation by reason of the circumstances of the individual case. So fixed is the idea that the cutting of growing timber is an injury to the fee under the conditions which exist in England that the rules on the subject admit of no inquiry as to the actual effect in the particular case, except where certain trees are removed for the benefit of those remaining. The courts in this country have frequently declared in general terms that the strict rules of the common law on this subject do not obtain in this country, owing to the substantially different conditions here and the great amount of woodland as compared with arable land. As a matter of fact, however, the common-law rules on the subject have not been greatly relaxed in this country, except so far as they forbid the cutting of timber for the purpose of converting the wooded into arable land and fitting it for cultivation. In England, as has been said, such clearing of the land is not permitted at all, while in this country, as subsequently shown in detail, such clearing is permitted, due regard being had to the proportion of arable to wooded land. As conditions in this country approach more closely to those which obtain in England, and the proportion of wooded land to arable land decreases, a tendency on the part of the courts to revert to the strict rules of the common law in this respect may be anticipated. That tendency, however, is not very apparent in the American cases cited in the note; doubtless for the reason that the majority of them dealt with conditions which existed years ago; or, if modern cases, arose in localities where the conditions have not materially changed.

Messrs. Oldfield & Cole, for appellee:

In America, a life tenant may cut and remove timber for the purpose of putting the land in cultivation, and may sell same.

McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 15 37 S. W. 306; Owen v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467; Lunn v. Oslin, 96 Tenn. 281, 33 S. W. 561; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 557, 18 N. W. 527; Ward v. Sheppard, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 283, 2 Am. Dec. 625; Jackson ex dem. Church v. Brownson, 7 Johns. 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258; Lynn's Appeal, 31 Pa. 44, 72 Am. Dec. 721, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 126; 1 Tiffany, Real Prop. 564; 15 Cyc. 627; Sayers v. Hoskinson, 110 Pa. 473, 1 Atl. 308; Glass v. Glass, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 408; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Osborn, 67 Ark. 399, 55 S. W. 142; St. Louis Southwestern

R. Co. v. Byrne, 73 Ark. 377, 84 S. W. 469; McClintock v. Frohlich, 75 Ark. 111, 86 S. W. 1001; Roberts & S. Co. v. Jones, 82 Ark. 188, 101 S. W. 165; Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Burns, 84 Ark. 74, 104 S. W. 535; Scott v. Moore, 89 Ark. 321, 116 S. W. 660.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A tract of land in Independence county, containing 229.32 acres, was assigned to the defendant, Mrs. Angie Wilson, as dower out of the estate of her deceased husband; about 150 acres of this tract being cleared and in cultivation, and the remainder being woodland. Plaintiff, W. A. Rutherford, is the owner of the reversion. In the year 1907 defendant sold and allowed to be re-

II. Necessities of life tenant.

In Lunn v. Oslin, 96 Tenn. 28, 33 S. W. 561, the court said: "From the nature and character of the estates of dower and homestead there must necessarily arise a difference between them and life estates created by deed or will, in which the extent to which timber may be used can be fixed by the terms of the deed or will. But dower and homestead estates are given to widows to furnish them a support and maintenance; and the law is zealous to guard their rights to a greater extent than other life tenants or those entitled in remainder; and this is especially so in homestead estates, where the lands are held for the benefit of minor children as well as of the widow. In both cases a liberal construction and application will be made, and such use will be sanctioned as will best afford that support and maintenance which is the primary object of the laws."

But while the courts may to some extent be influenced by the nature of the estate for life and the necessities of the particular tenant, neither consideration may properly be regarded as controlling the application of the rules on the subject. Ordinarily the results in individual cases are referred to rules or exceptions applicable generally to tenants impeachable for waste, without reference to the character of the life estate whether an estate of dower, by the curtesy, or otherwise. Thus, a tenant for life may not cut and remove valuable growing timber, to the irreparable injury of the fee, nor is the question affected by the necessities of such tenant for life. Robertson v. Meadors, 73 Ind. 43. That the cutting of timber is necessary to the profitable enjoyment of the land by the life tenant does not necessarily justify it, since there may be waste when there is such a profitable enjoyment. Proffitt v. Henderson, 29 Mo. 325. So the question is not whether the doweress cut the timber as a necessary means of support, but whether she materially injured the estate. Owens v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467.

But where property is devised in trust 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for the maintenance, support, and benefit of the testator's son during his life, the life tenant may cut and remove timber from time to time, as he may need for his reasonable maintenance and for repairs to the freehold necessary for his comfort, where that was the practice of the testator. Beam v. Woolridge, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 17.

III. Customary estovers.

a. Fuel.

As to the rights of tenants generally to cut wood for fuel, see note in 68 L.R.A. 641.

A tenant for life may take a reasonable amount of firewood for necessary fuel. McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 10, 37 S. W. 306; Brugh v. Denman, 38 Ind. App. 486, 79 N. E. 349; Zimmerman v. Shreeve, 59 Md. 357; White v. Cutler, 17 Pick. 248; Webster v. Webster, 33 N. H. 18, 66 Am. Dec. 705; Rutherford v. Aiken, 2 Thomp. & C. 281; Livingston v. Reynolds, 26 Wend. 115; Van Deusen v. Young, 29 N. Y. 9; Hawpe v. Bumgardner, 103 Va. 91, 48 S. E. 554.

The right of a grantor in a deed of a farm, who reserved a life estate, to use the fuel from the land, is not affected by the fact that, prior to the deed, he was in the habit of taking part of his fuel from another tract, not included in the deed. Webster v. Webster, 33 N. H. 18, 66 Am. Dec. 705.

The right, however, must be exercised in a prudent and proper manner. Smith v. Jewett, 40 N. H. 530.

And the fuel must be actually used and consumed upon the premises, or at least for a purpose connected with the proper use, occupation, and enjoyment thereof. Armstrong v. Wilson, 60 Ill. 226; Zimmerman v. Shreeve, 59 Md. 357; White v. Cutler, 17 Pick. 248.

To entitle a tenant in dower to take firewood, there must be a house upon the land when the dower is assigned to her; and she can take wood only to use in such a house; and should she take it herself, or permit any other person to take it, to be used in any other place, it is waste. Fuller v. Wason, 7 N. H. 341.

moved the timber on 20 or 25 acres of the woodland, for which she received the sum of $104.77, its market value; and in February, 1909, plaintiff instituted this action against her to recover said sum so received, alleging that she committed waste by removing the standing timber, and that the freehold was damaged to that extent. A trial before a jury resulted in a verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The evidence shows that the land from which the timber was removed is tillable, but that it had not been put in cultivation at the time of the trial, except a small part,—something less than an acre. It will be ready for the plow as soon as the brush and undergrowth is burned, defendant testified that she sold and allowed the timber to be cut so that she could put the land in cultivation as soon as practicable, and that she is proceeding to put it in cultivation.

This court, in the case of McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 10, 37 S. W. 306, laid down the following rule as to the rights of a life tenant: "He had no right to cut trees growing on this portion of the land, or allow them to be cut, except so far as was necessary to the proper and reasonable enjoyment of his life estate in conformity with good husbandry. For the purpose of using it as farming land, he had the right to clear a part of it, provided such part and that already prepared for cultivation, as compared with the remainder of the tract, did not exceed the proportion of cleared to wooded land usually maintained in good

It has been held that a life tenant may not use firewood off the premises, although he used none on the premises. Ibid. And that a widow who does not live upon the dower estate has no right to cut wood for sale. Noyes v. Stone, 163 Mass. 490, 40 N. E. 856. Nor is a widow entitled to take firewood from a farm assigned to her in dower, for use on village property, constituting an entirely separate tract, also assigned to her in dower. Cook v. Cook, 11 Gray, 123.

In Gardiner v. Derringer, 1 Paige, 573, however, it is stated that it is not absolutely necessary that the wood be burned on the premises, provided it is taken in good faith, for the use of the tenant and her servants, and in reasonable quantity. This, however, seems to be obiter, as the tenant house for which the wood was taken in this case was upon the farm.

A tenant for life may cut only such wood and timber as he may need for immediate use, and not in anticipation; and he must cut such timber as is fit for the use for which he is allowed to take it. Zimmerman v. Shreeve, 59 Md. 357. He must not cut rail timber for firewood when there is other wood that may be used for that purpose. Calvert v. Rice, 91 Ky. 533, 34 Am. St. Rep. 240, 16 S. W. 351. But he is not bound to select timber the conversion of which would exceed its worth as fuel. Rutherford v. Aiken, 2 Thomp. & C. 281. Nor it is waste to cut oak trees for firewood in a community where they are in common use for fuel. Padelford v. Padelford, 7 Pick. 152.

A tenant for life has the right to take from the premises reasonable firewood for the use not only of the house which she herself occupies, but also sufficient to supply a house on the premises occupied by one who works the farm for her. Gardiner v. Derringer 1 Paige, 573. And it makes no difference in this respect whether the servants are paid by fixed wages or by a share of the crops as tenants at the halves. Smith v. Jewett, 40 N. H. 513. But it has been held that a tenant for life of a farm of 165 acres is not entitled to firebote for the dwelling of a farmer or laborer, in addition to firebote for the principal dwelling house or 57 L.R.A. (N.S.) mansion; and that a custom to that effect would be unreasonable and invalid. Sarles v. Sarles, 3 Sandf. Ch. 601.

So strict is the rule that the fuel must be consumed on the premises that it has been declared that a life tenant may not cut timber on land, to be exchanged for fuel. Padelford v. Padelford, 7 Pick. 152 (dower). (But see infra as to exchange of timber growing on the land for other timber suitable for repairs.)

So, a tenant for life may not set off, as against the value of timber wrongfully removed by her, the amount expended in supplying her fires upon the premises from other sources, though she might have taken wood for that purpose from the premises. Phillips v. Allen, 7 Allen, 115. Nor may a tenant for life sell a portion of the trees to pay the expense of cutting and conveying to her door wood which she has a right to take for fuel. Johnson v. Johnson, 18 N. H. 594.

b. Repairs; fences; buildings.

As to right of tenants generally to cut timber for fences, see note in 68 L.R.A. 641.

A tenant for life may take timber for necessary repairs of buildings and fences on the premises. Chapman v. W. F. Epperson Circled Heading Co. 101 Ill. App. 161; Brugh v. Denman, 38 Ind. App. 486, 78 N. E. 349; Calvert v. Rice, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 1001, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 252; Zimmerman v. Shreeve, 59 Md. 357; Dorsey v. Moore, 100 N. C. 41, 6 S. E. 270; Miles v. Miles, 32 N. H. 147, 64 Am. Dec. 362; Webster v. Webster, 33 N. H. 18, 66 Am. Dec. 705; Van Deusen v. Young, 29 N. Y. 9; Morris v. Knight, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 324; Hawpe v. Bumgardner, 103 Va. 91, 48 S. E. 554.

The scarcity of timber does not prevent its use by the life tenant in repairing the buildings and fencing on the premises. It only requires him to be the more careful in its use, and only cut so much as would be used by a prudent man when in possession and the owner of the fee. Calvert v. Rice, 91 Ky. 533, 34 Am. St. Rep. 240, 16 S. W. 351.

As shown infra, VIII. a, the courts have husbandry; and provided, further, that he did not materially lessen the value of the inheritance. He also had the right to cut and use so much of the timber standing on the one half which belonged to his wife as was necessary for fuel, and for making and repairing fences and buildings on the same. But the timber could only be cut or used for the proper enjoyment of the estate for life, and not merely for sale,"—citing Davis v. Clark, 40 Mo. App. 515; Owen v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467; Jackson ex dem. Church v. Brownson, 7 Johns. 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258; Clemence v. Steere, 1 R. I. 272, 53 Am. Dec. 621; Balentine v. Poyner, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 110; 1 Washb. Real. Prop. pp. 146, 148. The same rule has been stated by this court in subsequent cases. Nashville Lumber Co. v. Barefield, 93 Ark. 353, 124 S. W. 758, 20 Ann. Cas. 968; Cherokee Constr. Co. v. Harris, 92 Ark. 260, 135 Am. St. Rep. 177, 122 S. W. 485.

Now, measured by the law thus announced, it was a question for the jury to determine whether or not the removal of the timber amounted to waste and constituted an injury to the inheritance. What is "good husbandry" is not always easily determined, as that depends on the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case. The whole tract contained 229.32 acres, with about 150 acres already in cultivation. With 20 or 25 acres more in cultivation, there would be left 55 or 60 acres of woodland. This may be sufficient to afford fire-frequently remarked that the strict rules of the common law as to waste do not apply in this country; but this has usually been said in connection with the question as to the right of the life tenant to clear wooded land for purposes of cultivation. In Cannon v. Barry, 59 Miss. 289, however, it was said that a life tenant of land on which there is a superabundance of timber is not guilty of waste in cutting and using the timber in rebuilding fences, and building tenants' cabins, even though he would have been guilty of waste under the English authorities; since the conditions in this country and in England are wholly dissimilar, and that which would be a safe test there is altogether inapplicable here. The court added that, speaking generally, it may be said that nothing should be held to constitute waste which is dictated by good husbandry, and promotes, rather than diminishes, the permanent value of the property as an estate of inheritance.

In general, however, it will be observed that the courts of this country have applied the rule as to repairs with considerable strictness.

Thus, a tenant for life has no right to cut and use for fencing purposes young and growing timber that would not make more than four or five rails to the cut. Calvert v. Rice, supra.

In Miles v. Miles, 32 N. H. 147, 64 Am. Dec. 362, the rule is stated in the guarded form that a tenant for life may take from the land wood necessary for the repairing of fences and buildings which are on the premises at the commencement of the tenancy. And it is said in Fuller v. Wason, 7 N. H. 341, that a tenant in dower may not take timber from land for the purpose of building a new house, nor may she take timber from the land for the purpose of repairing a house so built; and, upon the authority of Co. Litt. 53, b, that a tenant in dower may not take timber to build new fences where there were none before.

So, a tenant for life, not being bound to replace a barn destroyed by an act of God, is not entitled to cut and sell timber for such purpose. Miller v. Shields, 55 Ind. 71. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And a tenant by the curtesy has no right to cut timber for the purpose of repairs on a house upon an adjoining tract which belongs to him in his own right, though there was no house on the premises subject to the curtesy. Armstrong v. Wilson, 60 Ill. 226.

But it is not waste for a tenant in dower to cut timber on a woodland lot for repairs on buildings on the homestead farm, 2 miles distant therefrom, although the reversion of the two parcels is in different persons. Padelford v. Padelford, 7 Pick. 152.

A life tenant having cut timber, not for the purpose of repair, but for the purposes of sale, is not entitled to be credited with the amount laid out in timber for repairs. Whitfield v. Bewit, 2 P. Wms. 240.

The destruction or sale of timber, not for the immediate purpose of reparation, is always waste, and repairs done at another time cannot be recouped against it. Morehouse v. Cothéal, 22 N. J. L. 521.

Improvements made by the life tenant may not be offset against waste by the cutting and sale of timber; especially where the improvements are to the fertility of the soil, which may be exhausted during the life estate. Van Syckel v. Emery, 18 N. J. Eq. 387.

In Elliott v. Smith, 2 N. H. 430, it is said to be well settled that the tenant for life cannot justify cutting trees for firewood or fencing unless he uses the trees for those purposes on the land; and that he may not sell wood not suitable for fencing, for the purpose of purchasing timber suitable for that purpose. And in Miles v. Miles, 32 N. H. 147, 64 Am. Dec. 362, it is declared that the right of the tenant for life does not extend beyond the proper use of wood and timber upon the premises themselves; and that they cannot be sold for any purpose, even for the purpose of paying for repairs for which the life tenant might have used the wood or timber itself. But, upon the other hand, it has been held that it is not waste for a life tenant to cut and sell timber and make improvements with the proceeds, enough timber being left for the necessary purposes of the farm. Morrow v. Morrow, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 620. And in Loomis wood and materials for repairs, such as fence posts, rails, boards, or even lumber with which to build houses. That, of course, depends on the amount and kind of timber. We cannot say that the jury were unwarranted in finding that it would be good husbandry to put the additional quantity of land in cultivation.

Another element of the inquiry is the relative value of the land and the timber. There is nothing to show that this land is chiefly valuable for timber. On the other hand, there is testimony to the effect that the land is not injured by removing the timber and putting it in cultivation, and that it will be a benefit to the freehold, in point of value, and remove the timber and put the land in cultivation. All of the land is tillable, so the witnesses say, and the value of the timber on the 20 or 25 acres was only $104.77.

The jury were also warranted in finding that the defendant sold the timber, not for profit, but for the purpose of immediately putting the land in cultivation. She did not do that at once, but it is not essential that it be done within any given time. There may be more or less delay in getting land ready for the plow, even after the timber was removed. It may not be poor husbandry to wait for the roots to decay and for the land to dry out to some extent after the timber is removed, before commencing to cultivate. Defendant testified that a considerable part of the land would be ready for the plow as soon as the brush

v. Wilber, 5 Mason, 13, Fed. Cas. No. 8,498, it is held that the cutting down of timber, and the sale thereof, and use of the proceeds in purchasing material for necessary repairs on the premises, if done pursuant to an original intention to that effect, is not waste. The court, however, remarked that if the cutting of the timber was without any intention of repairs, but for sale generally, the act would doubtless be waste; and if so, it would not be purged or its character changed by a subsequent application of the proceeds to repairs.

To entitle a tenant for life to sell timber from the land and exchange the same for material with which to make needed repairs on the buildings, it must appear that that course was the most economical. Miller v. Shields, 55 Ind. 71.

In Flener v. Flener, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 725, 69 S. W. 954, the court granted an injunction against the sale of timber by the life tenant, but directed the master commissioner to make the necessary improvements on the house and fences, and to sell the timber that might be necessary for that purpose, it appearing that such improvements could not be made out of the rent accruing to the life tenant.

Whether trees were cut down for the purpose of repairing buildings, and were in course of application for that purpose, was held in Doe ex dem. Foley v. Wilson, 11 East, 56, to be a question for the jury.

A widow to whom dower is assigned in separate parcels is not bound to use each parcel separately, nor is she confined to the timber or wood on each parcel for use on that parcel, but may use the timber and wood on one parcel for necessary repairs of buildings and fences on another. Childs v. Smith, 1 Md. Ch. 483.

So, a widow in general has the right to take wood for fuel and timber for repairs from whatever part of the land in which her dower has been assigned that she pleases, notwithstanding that the reversion has been divided in severalty among the heirs. It seems, however, that in an extreme case, where the widow acts out of mere caprice and partiality, with a view to 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

favor one at the expense of the other, a court of equity may be induced to interfere, although there is technically no waste. Dalton v. Dalton, 42 N. C. (7 Ired. Eq.) 197.

IV. Payment of taxes and other charges.

In a number of cases it has been held that a life tenant may sell timber for the purpose of raising money to pay the taxes upon the property. Cannon v. Barry, 59 Miss. 289; Learned v. Ogden, 80 Miss. 769, 92 Am. St. Rep. 621, 32 So. 278; Crockett v. Crockett, 2 Ohio St. 180; Kent v. Bentley, 3 Ohio Dec. 173.

And where the dower assigned consists of a wholly unimproved and unproductive town lot and a tract of woodland, the tenant in dower may sell timber to pay taxes on the town lot as well as on the land. Crockett v. Crockett, 2 Ohio St. 180.

So, the compensation of an agent employed by the widow to make sales of timber cut from wild land assigned to her as dower, collecting the proceeds, paying the taxes, overseeing the property, and protecting it against trespassers and other injuries, may be paid out of the sales of timber from the land, without imputation of waste to the life tenant. Ibid.

V. Fallen or decaying timber.

In Perrot v. Perrot, 3 Atk. 94, the Lord Chancellor remarked that he knew no distinction between cutting down young timber trees that have not come to their full growth, and decayed timber, either in law or equity.

But it has been held in this country that a tenant for life may sell fallen or decaying timber. King v. Miller, 99 N. C. 583, 6 S. E. 660; Kent v. Bentley, 3 Ohio Dec. 173; Sayers v. Hoskinson, 110 Pa. 473, 1 Atl. 308.

In Houghton v. Cooper, 6 B. Mon. 281, where the owner of two thirds of the estate in remainder sought to enjoin the life tenant from selling fallen timber, the injunction was denied upon the ground that the was burned off; and at the time of the trial her tenant was going ahead with the clearing. Under all the facts and circumstances of the case, we think it was peculiarly a question for the jury to decide whether or not waste had been committed. There being evidence to sustain the verdict, we are not concerned with its weight, for that was within the province of the jury.

The instructions of the court were, we think, within the principles of law herein announced, and we find no error in the proceedings. It devolved on the plaintiff to show that waste had been committed to his injury, and the amount of damage, if any, to the freehold. This includes the burden of proving that the alleged act of the life tenant was not rightfully done, for the presumption is in favor of the latter until the contrary appears from the evidence. 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 304; Lynn's Appeal, 31 Pa. 44, 72 Am. Dec. 721, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 126.

Judgment affirmed.

fallen trees impaired the use of the land as a woodland pasture. The denial, however, was upon the condition that the life tenant account to the complaining remaindermen for two thirds of the proceeds of the sale of the timber which was not needed on the property itself.

The fund arising from the damages paid by a railroad company for injury to timber and from a sale of the injured timber should be invested and the income therefrom paid to the tenant during her life, even though she had no right to cut off and sell any of the timber. Keniston v. Gorrell, 74 N. H. 53, 64 Atl. 1101.

But the proceeds of the sale of firewood obtained from timber that had been blown down, assuming that nothing was used for firewood which was valuable as timber, belong to the life tenant. Stonebraker v. Zollickoffer, 52 Md. 154, 36 Am. Rep. 364.

Where timber is cut by order of the court, for the benefit of the estate, the funds arising from the sale should be invested for the benefit of the estate, and the income therefrom paid to the tenant for life, and the corpus to the remainderman. And this principle has been extended to cases where the timber has been severed by tempest, accident, or trespass, the tenant for life being without fault. Ibid.

VI. Thinning trees.

The proper and regular trimming of a wood for the purpose of improving the rest of the trees within certain limits does not amount to waste. Pidgeley v. Rawling, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 275; Bagot v. Bagot, 32 Beav. 509, 9 Jur. N. S. 1022, 2 New Reports, 297, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 116, 9 L. T. N. S. 217, 12 Week. Rep. 35, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 130.

The produce from trees which are properly cut for the benefit of other trees, however, is corpus, and not income. Cowley v. Wellesley, 35 Beav. 635, L. R. 1 Eq. 656, 14 L. T. N. S. 425, 14 Week. Rep. 528.

VII. Cutting timber for sale.

a. In general.

As to the right to the proceeds of timber cut not for the primary purpose of sale, but for the purpose of clearing the land, see infra, VIII. b. (2).

With the exception noted in the next subdivision, a tenant for life, impeachable 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for waste, may not cut timber to sell for profit, nor authorize another to do so. Honywood v. Honywood, L. R. 18 Eq. 306, 43 L. J. Ch. N. S. 652, 30 L. T. N. S. 671, 22 Week. Rep. 749; Garnett Smelting & Development Co. v. Watts, 140 Ala. 449, 37 So. 201 (dower); C. W. Zimmerman Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, 147 Ala. 275, 40 So. 515 (dower); McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 10, 37 S. W. 306; Nashville Lumber Co. v. Barefield, 93 Ark. 353, 124 S. W. 758, 20 Ann. Cas. 968; RUTHERFORD v. WILSON; Chapman v. W. F. Epperson Circled Heading Co. 101 Ill. App. 161; Modlin v. Kennedy, 53 Ind. 267; Bergen & M. Co. v. Sears, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 80, 67 S. W. 1002; Kentucky State Co. v. Page, — Ky. —, 125 S. W. 170 (curtesy); Zimmerman v. Shreeve, 59 Md. 357; White v. Cutler, 17 Pick. 248; Learned v. Ogden, 80 Miss. 769, 92 Am. St. Rep. 621, 32 So. 278 (curtesy); Davis v. Clark, 40 Mo. App. 515; McCartney v. Titworth, 119 App. Div. 547, 104 N. Y. Supp. 45; McCartney v. Titworth, 142 App. Div. 292, 126 N. Y. Supp. 905; Davis v. Gilliam, 40 N. C. (5 Ired. Eq.) 308; Dorsey v. Moore, 100 N. C. 41, 6 S. E. 270; Clemence v. Steere, 1 R. I. 272, 53 Am. Dec. 621; Lester v. Young, 14 R. I. 579; McKee v. Dail, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 689; Hawpe v. Bumgardner, 103 Va. 91, 48 S. E. 554.

In Van Deusen v. Young, 29 N. Y. 9, it was said that when a tenant cuts and carries away standing timber required for the use of the farm, the question whether it is or is not good husbandry, or whether the farm is worth more or less by reason of it, should not be submitted to the jury, since the law forbids the act to be done, and the reversioner has the right to damages if it is done, unless such right is waived.

It was said in Cannon v. Barry, 59 Miss. 289, however, that a tenant for life may cut down timber in such quantities and at such places as do not seriously impair the value of the inheritance, even for the purposes of his own profit.

b. Custom of estate.

In Honywood v. Honywood, L. R. 18 Eq. 306, Sir. G. Jessel, Master of the Rolls, declared that the rule that a tenant for life, impeachable for waste, may not cut timber, was subject to a "single exception which has been established principally by modern authorities in favor of the owners of timber estates; that is, estates which are cultivated merely for the produce of salable timber, and where the timber is cut periodically. The reason of the distinction is this: that as cutting the timber is the mode of cultivation, the timber is not to be kept as part of the inheritance, but part, so to say, of the annual fruits of the land; and in these cases the same kind of cultivation may be carried on by the tenant for life that has been carried on by the settlor on the estate; and the timber so cut down periodically in due course is looked upon as the annual profits of the estate, and therefore goes to the tenant for life. With that exception, I take it, a tenant for life cannot cut timber; therefore, I hold in this case, it not being a timber estate, that the tenant for life cannot cut timber at all."

The exception thus declared was applied by the English court of appeal (Kay, L. J., dissenting), by holding that a life tenant was not guilty of waste in cutting and selling timber trees in pursuance of a local custom of clearing out the trees and selling the timber cut which had been observed on the estate in question for generations, and had been a source of great profit to the former holders of the estate. Daashwood v. Magniac [1891] 3 Ch. 306, 60 L. J. Ch. N. S. 809, 65 L. T. N. S. 811.

And the entire produce from the cutting of underwood of ten or twelve years' growth, following the custom of the testator in that respect, belongs to the life tenant. Cowley v. Wellesley, 35 Beav. 635, L. R. 1 Eq. 656, 14 L. T. N. S. 425, 14 Week. Rep. 528.

So, where land was bought as timber land, and that was its chief value, and the owner was engaged in cutting and rafting timber from it at the time of his death and the descent of the life estate, the life tenant is not guilty of waste in continuing the timbering for profit. Williard v. Williard, 56 Pa. 119. The court said in effect that it was difficult to draw a distinction in this respect between profits actually drawn by the owner from timber where it is the source of profit, and profits drawn from open mines. (As to open mines, see notes in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1099 and 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1108.)

A wife endowed of swamp lands incapable of cultivation, and productive or valuable only by working the timber for profit, may cut down the timber ad libitum and make all the profit she can, provided she does not thereby prevent the reversioner from making a like profit; and especially where the tract had been worked in this manner for timber by the husband during his lifetime. Macaulay v. Dismal Swamp Land Co. 2 Rob. (Va.) 507. The court said that the extent of the tract, the quantity of timber, the period of reproduction, the demands of the market, the expenses of the employment, were all elements of inquiry, and that these should lead to a just and convenient rule of uniform application, which would be presumably that the tenant's use of the timber should be so restricted as to leave the successive tenants and owners and equally extensive use of it, at least.

An unnecessary cutting down and disposing of timber, or destruction thereof upon woodlands where there is already sufficient cleared land for the widow to cultivate, and over and above what is necessary to use for fuel, fences, plantation utensils, and the like, is waste; but if it respects juniper, swamp, and other lands similarly circumstanced, where the timber, made into staves and shingles, is the only use to be made of the lands, then the devisee or widow shall not be liable to waste for using such timber according to the ordinary use made of the same in that part of the country. Ballentine v. Poyner, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 110.

A widow has not the right to make turpentine upon land which, in the lifetime of her husband, had not been used for that purpose. But she may rightfully use, in the ordinary mode of making turpentine, trees that have been boxed or intended for turpentine in the lifetime of her husband. Carr v. Carr, 20 N. C. 317 (4 Dev. & B. L. 179). And she may box new trees as those already boxed for turpentine become unfit for use, but not so as to enlarge the crop beyond the extent which it had when the dower was assigned. Ibid.

The exception stated at the beginning of the subdivision is impliedly recognized in Clemence v. Steere, 1 R. I. 272, 53 Am. Dec. 621, declaring that cutting hoop poles, i. e., timber trees in the early stages of their growth, is waste unless it is the ordinary mode of managing the farm; and in Hawpe v. Bumgardner, 103 Va. 91, 48 S. E. 554, declaring that a tenant for life is not entitled to cut and sell merchantable timber growing upon land of which there was no evidence to show that it was used for other than agricultural purposes, or that the owner had ever leased or used it as timber land, or derived revenue from the sale of timber thereon prior to the creation of the life estate.

In Findlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 134, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 182, it was held that a devise of the testator's salt works to certain persons during the lifetime of the widow carried with it the right to the unlimited use of fuel for carrying on the works from the woodlands which belonged to the testator and which were used by him for that purpose. So, a tenant for life of land upon which there was an opened mine may use timber on the land in the mining operations. Neel v. Neel, 19 Pa. 323, 14 Mor. Min. Rep. 363.

But it was held in White v. Cutler, 17 Pick. 248, that a widow was not to be endowed of a lot of growing wood and timber, although kept purposely to raise wood and timber as objects of profit, provided that it was not assigned to her as part of her dower in connection with buildings or cultivated land, though when woodland is so connected and used, it may be included in the assignment of dower to be used and enjoyed by the widow or those holding under her.

VIII. Clearing land.

a. Relaxation of strict rules.

By the strict rule of the common law as applied in England, it was, under all circumstances, waste for a life tenant to cut timber for the purpose of clearing woodland and converting it into arable land. Though the reason for the rule was that the destruction of timber is an injury to the inheritance, the presumption of injury, if such it may be deemed, is there regarded as a conclusive one; and the rule is applied as an absolute rule, admitting of no inquiry as to whether, under the facts and circumstances of the case, the clearing and conversion would in fact be injurious to the inheritance, or otherwise.

As might be expected, in view of the early conditions in this country, and the large proportion of wooded as compared with arable land in most sections, the strictness of the English rule on this point has been much relaxed in this country.

Thus, while in its essential element waste is the same in this country and in England, being a spoil or destruction in houses, trees, and the like, to the permanent injury of the inheritance, yet, in respect to acts which constitute waste, the rule that governs in a new and opening land, covered with primeval growth, must be very different. Where the proportions of arable and wooded land are adjusted to give the greatest value to the farm in its present condition, the conversion of one kind into another may be in itself a waste committed; while here, the clearing of the forest growth and fitting the virgin soil, which it covers, for cultivation, is ordinarily an improvement, most valuable to the property, and is not, nor can it be, injurious to the succeeding estate in fee. King v. Miller, 99 N. C. 583, 6 S. E. 660.

Many things that constitute waste in England, and may hereafter do so in this country, because prejudicial to the inheritance, ought not to be so held here at present, because they do not prejudice but rather improve the inheritance; hence, turning woodland into arable, though the timber felled be sold, is not absolutely waste in our law; for cutting the timber on land fit for cultivation, or that may be made so, and reducing it to that state, may, in the condition of our country, be a benefit rather than an injury to the reversioner. Davis v. Gilliam, 40 N. C. (5 Ired. Eq.) 308.

The doctrine of the common law in relation to waste has been greatly relaxed in favor of the life tenant. But to prevent waste, the jurisdiction of courts of equity by means of injunction is still freely exercised in order to protect the reversioner against waste by the tenant in possession when the threatened acts amount to a manifest injury to the inheritance and a wanton abuse of the reversioner's rights. Disher v. Disher, 45 Neb. 100, 63 N. W. 398, 87 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The doctrine of waste of the common law is not, in its strictness, applicable to the conditions of things in this country. What in England might be injurious to the inheritance, and therefore waste, would probably, in most parts of this country, be the very reverse of injury, and would be the actual improvement of the estate. But the law remains with us, as in England, that such cutting of trees or timber as will work a permanent injury to the freehold or inheritance, in the absence of specific leave or license to cut such trees or timber, is waste, for which an action will lie in equity for the prevention of such injury by injunction before it is committed, or at law, for the recovery of damages by the remainderman, after the injury is done. McCay v. Wait, 51 Barb. 225.

The common law of England was very strict in regard to waste. Its rigor has been much relaxed here, especially in the matter of timber. This was to be expected in the new country, where land was far more valuable without timber than with it. Sayers v. Hoskinson, 110 Pa. 473, 1 Atl. 308.

The doctrine of the English courts, which prohibits the life tenant to cut wood or timber, except for firewood, fencing, and such uses as come under the denomination of estovers, has been subject to important modifications in this country, growing out of the different condition existing in England, where the land has been cleared, the due proportion between woodland and cleared land fixed by long experience, and where the diminution of the proportion of woodland to arable land might be deemed an injury to the heir or remainderman, and a comparatively new and undeveloped country, such as ours, where increasing the area of cleared land, so far from being a wrong to the heir or remainderman, is often a benefit to him. Therefore the law of waste, as administered in England, is subject to many changes and modifications with us, to adapt it to the wholly different circumstances and conditions by which we are surrounded. Bond v. Godsey, 99 Va. 564, 39 S. E. 216.

In Owen v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467, it is said: "In respect to the privilege of a tenant for life in the destruction of timber, the law must necessarily be varied in this country from the English doctrine. There, we could not well conceive of the destruction of timber without attaching to it the idea of an injury to the estate; as timber is scarce, and forest trees are planted and raised for fuel and for timber, it is of too much value to permit its unnecessary destruction. That not being the state of things here, but, on the contrary, as a benefit often results to the estate by clearing away the timber, it would be absurd to apply the rigid principles of the English law to a state of things wholly variant from theirs."

What constitutes waste and what is permissible use of timber are largely dependent upon the locality of the property and the extent and value of the timber. Lunn v. Oslin, 96 Tenn. 28, 33 S. W. 561.

b. The rule and its application in this country.

(1) In general.

The rule established by the weight of authority in this country permits the tenant for life to cut timber for the purpose of clearing the land, provided the part cleared, with that already prepared for cultivation, as compared to the remainder of the tract, does not exceed the proportion of cleared to wooded land usually maintained in good husbandry; and provided, further, that he does not materially lessen the value of the inheritance. Alexander v. Fisher, 7 Ala. 514; McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 10, 37 S. W. 306; RUTHERFORD v. WILSON; Woodward v. Gates, 38 Ga. 205; Proffitt v. Henderson, 29 Mo. 325; Davis v. Clark, 40 Mo. App. 515; Hill v. Ground, 114 Mo. App. 80, 89 S. W. 343; Shine v. Wilcox, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 631; Parkins v. Coxe, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 339; Davis v. Gilliam, 40 N. C. (5 Ired. Eq.) 311; Lambeth v. Warner, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 165 (dower); Joyner v. Speed, 68 N. C. 236 (dower); King v. Miller, 99 N. C. 583, 6 S. E. 660 (dower); Dorsey v. Moore, 100 N. C. 41, 6 S. E. 270; VanDeusen v. Young, 29 N. Y. 9; 4 Kent, Com. 76; Hastings v. Crunkleton, 3 Yeates, 261; Morris v. Knight, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 324; Keeler v. Eastman, 11 Vt. 293; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 557, 18 N. W. 527.

The rule has also been applied in Canada. Drake v. Wigle, 24 U. C. C. P. 405, and Saunders v. Breakie, 5 Ont. Rep. 603.

In Bond v. Godsey, 99 Va. 564, 39 S. E. 216, the court held that the value of coal underlying land should be deducted in determining the present value of a life tenant's estate, but the value of the timber on the land should not be deducted, it not appearing from the record what was the relative value of the timber, and the surrounding circumstances and conditions not being sufficiently disclosed to enable the court to say that the value of the estate would not be increased by the clearing of the land.

A tenant in dower in clearing land is not bound to take notice of any division which may have been made out of the reversionary interest amongst the heirs; she takes the dower estate as it was assigned to her, with the rights and liabilities which attach to that as a whole; and although she may have destroyed all the timber which was on that part of one of the lots included in her dower, yet, if the dower estate was not injured, but benefited thereby, she would not be guilty of waste. Owen v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467.

But in Clark v. Holden, 7 Gray, 8, 66 Am. Dec. 450, opinion by Shaw, Ch. J., it was held that a tenant for life was guilty of waste in cutting timber, not with the intention of using it on the estate, but for the purpose of restoring it to the condition of pasture land which obtained when the estate for life commenced, the timber having grown up during the pendency of that estate, even on the assumption that the removal of the timber would be good husbandry in the owner of the fee.

And in Conner v. Shepherd, 15 Mass. 164, it was held that a widow is not dowerable of land in a wild and uncultivated estate covered with wood and timber, and wholly distinct and separate from any improved or cultivated estate, for the reason that there could be no benefit to the widow from such land, since she would be impeachable for waste and the estate subject to forfeiture if she were to cut down any of the trees valuable as timber, or were to change the property from wilderness to arable or pasture land by cutting down the wood and clearing up the land. (But see contra as to right of dower in wild lands, Crockett v. Crockett, 2 Ohio St. 180; and Allen v. McCoy, 8 Ohio, 464. And it is apparent that the cases previously cited in this subdivision, asserting the right of the life tenant to clear land for cultivation, are opposed to the premise upon which the conclusion in Conner v. Shepherd rests.)

In Smith v. Poyas, 2 De Sauss. Eq. 65, the court, without saying anything about proportion of arable to wooded land, enjoined the life tenant from clearing oak land or felling trees except for necessary fuel, fencing, or other plantation uses.

To cut down all the timber on a tract of land and sell it would be waste, because it would be detrimental to the inheritance. Proffitt v. Henderson, 29 Mo. 325.

The standard by which the conduct of the life tenant is to be gauged, or the test as to whether waste has been committed or not, is the rule of a prudent husbandman and what he would do under the circumstances if the owner of the fee. The value of timbered and of cleared land may be considered by the jury in determining whether the clearing of the land by the life tenant had or had not been done in a prudent manner; but the fact that the land with the timber standing upon it would be more valuable than the land would be when cleared is not in itself decisive of the question as to waste by the life tenant. Norris v. Laws, 150 N. C. 599, 64 S. E. 499.

The great criterion by which to determine whether waste has been committed is whether or not the estate is injured. It is clear that the cutting timber and clearing land, instead of being waste, would often greatly enhance the value of the inheritance. In this country, where so large a proportion of the lands are wild and yet in forests, it is often of great advantage to the estate to destroy the timber and reduce the land to a state of cultivation. Owen v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467.

The question is not where the doweress cut the timber as a necessary means of support, but whether she thereby materially injured the dower estate; if so, she would be liable to an action for waste; but if not,

although the clearing was not necessary for her support, and although she may have done it for the purpose of profit, she is not liable. If the cleared land on the dower estate was old and worn, and if the proportion of woodland was such as that a prudent farmer would have considered it best to reduce a portion of it to cultivation, whereby to relieve the old land from excessive culture, and thus enhance the value of the whole dower estate, such clearing would not be waste, provided "sufficient timber for the permanent use of the dower estate" were left. Ibid.

This doctrine that it is not waste to clear land for cultivation was approved in Disher v. Disher, 45 Neb. 100, 63 N. W. 368, but was held inapplicable to the facts in the case, it appearing that the cutting of the timber was a manifest injury to the inheritance and a wanton abuse of the reversioner's rights.

The right of a life tenant to clear land in order to enjoy the life estate is recognized in Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Hill, Eq. 277, 29 Am. Dec. 72; but it was held that a life tenant would be guilty of waste in clearing 60 acres of woodland in the center of a tract, not leaving timber enough upon the whole land to repair the plantation, if there was a cleared plantation sufficient for the enjoyment of his estate.

Where wild and uncultivated land, wholly covered with wood and timber, is leased to lessees for life, with covenant to pay rent, the lessees may sell part of the wood and timber so as to fit the land for cultivation, without being liable for waste; but they cannot cut down all the wood and timber so as permanently to injure the inheritance. And to what extent the wood and timber on such land may be cut down without waste is a question of fact for a jury to decide, under the direction of the court. Jackson ex dem. Church v. Brownson, 7 Johns. 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258.

In Robertson v. Meadors, 73 Ind. 43, the court sustained a demurrer to the answer of the life tenant, alleging that only 6 acres of the tract of 31 had been reduced to cultivation, and that, for the purpose of obtaining proper and reasonable support for herself, she caused 5 acres of the land to be cleared and reduced to cultivation; that she fenced the land so cleared, and repaired other fences upon land, and used and consumed, for necessary fuel, the timber which grew upon such lands, save ten logs. In this case, however, there was no denial of the allegation of the complaint that the removal of the timber worked an irreparable injury to the fee.

That the life tenant does not put land cleared by her immediately into cultivation does not necessarily convict her of waste in cutting the timber and selling the same, but the question is for the jury, under the circumstances of the case. RUTHERFORD v. WILSON.

(2) Proceeds of timber.

Subject to the limitations affecting the 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

right to clear the land, the life tenant is entitled to the timber or the proceeds thereof, which he, in good faith, cuts for the purpose of clearing the land and fitting it for cultivation. Warren County v. Gans, 80 Miss. 76, 31 So. 539; Disher v. Disher, 45 Neb. 100, 63 N. W. 368; Davis v. Gilliam, 40 N. C. (5 Ired. Eq.) 311; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 557, 18 N. W. 527.

But in Saunders v. Breakie, 5 Ont. Rep. 603, the court, while characterizing it as a strange conclusion, was of the opinion that under the authorities, a life tenant may not sell timber which he cuts in clearing the land, even though he would not be impeachable for waste if he destroyed it as an incident to clearing the land.

It is to be observed, however, that the rule which awards to the life tenant the proceeds of timber cut by him only applies to timber cut for the primary purposes of clearing land, and does not conflict with the rule of subdivision VII. a, that a tenant for life may not cut timber for sale.

In Ward v. Sheppard, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 283, 2 Am. Dec. 625, the court said that if the jury should find that the trees were cut down by the dowress for purposes of sale, she was guilty of waste; but if they should find that they were cut down with a view to clearing the land, she was not guilty of waste.

IX. Tenant for life not impeachable for waste; ornamental trees.

A lease of property "to have and to hold, to use and control as he thinks proper, for his benefit, during his natural life," imports a leasing without impeachment of waste, and the life tenant has a right to do all those acts which a tenant without impeachment of waste may exercise. Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259, 37 N. W. 205.

But a grantor in a deed reserving to himself the use and control of the lands during his natural life is impeachable for waste in cutting and taking timber trees thereon for sale, and if timber trees be thus cut, they become the personal property of the reversioner, who may maintain replevin therefor. Richardson v. York, 14 Me. 216.

Nor does a reservation in a deed of all the right, title, and interest to the land and premises during the lifetime of the grantor extend the right of the grantor in respect to the removal of timber beyond those of an ordinary tenant for life. Webster v. Webster, 33 N. H. 18, 66 Am. Dec. 705.

A tenant for life without impeachment of waste may cut wood which would otherwise, at the common law, amount to waste. Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259, 37 N. W. 205.

So, a tenant for life without impeachment of waste may cut timber of natural growth and remove it, and in fact do all things consistent with the preservation of the estate. He may not burn down necessary buildings or destroy productive or chards, for such acts will be wanton and malicious. But he may do any act with reference to woodland that the owner of the fee might do, being restrained only from the commission of wilful and malicious waste. He may thin out the timber of a wood's pasture, or cut off all the timber, and cultivate it as a field. If the cutting is not wanton or malicious, and does not amount to equitable waste, it cannot be restrained by the owner of the fee, even if he sells the timber. Chapman v. W. F. Epperson Circled Heading Co. 101 Ill. App. 161.

But a tenant for life without impeachment of waste may cut timber from land which, by the will, is directed to be sold and the proceeds used in the purchase of other land, since to permit him to remove the timber from the land sold would be to permit him to commit double waste. Plymouth v. Archer, 1 Bro. Ch. Cas. 159.

And it is not a good exercise of the power conferred upon testamentary trustees to sell the estate at the request of a life tenant without impeachment of waste, for the trustees to sell the land without the timber, and then for the tenant for life to sell the timber. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 10 Barn. & C. 564, 1 Russ. & M. 424, 1 Clark & F. 61.

Even a tenant for life without impeachment of waste may not cut down trees left or planted for ornament or shelter. Strathmore v. Bowes, 2 Bro. Ch. Cas. 88; Packington's Case, 3 Atk. 215; Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259, 37 N. W. 205; Clement v. Wheeler, 25 N. H. 361.

A life tenant without impeachment of waste save only the cutting and felling of ornamental timber may be enjoined from cutting timber of that description, the question whether the particular timber does answer that description being one of fact. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 1, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 246, 15 Jur. 663.

In Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. Sr. 264, the lord chancellor, while conceding that a tenant for life under a settlement without impeachment of waste might be restrained from taking down trees for ornament and shelter, refused to extend the principle to the cutting of timber not full grown or proper for building, in the absence of special circumstances. In the instant case, however, such relief was granted upon the ground that, under the terms of the settlement, it was plain that the intention was that the provision making the tenant for life not impeachable for waste was to prevent trouble in little matters, and was not intended to leave her at liberty to cut down and strip the estate of the timber.

In Peirs v. Peirs, 1 Ves. Sr. 521, an injunction was denied to prevent a tenant for life without impeachment of waste from removing from one part of the estate to another certain young oaks that he had planted.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A fortiori, a tenant impeachable for waste may not cut ornamental trees. Alexander v. Fisher, 7 Ala. 514; Calvert v. Rice, 91 Ky. 533, 34 Am. St. Rep. 240, 16 S. W. 351.

X. Miscellaneous.

The grantee from the husband alone of an estate held by the entireties has no right to cut timber on the land. Bynum v. Wicker, 141 N. C. 95, 115 Am. St. Rep. 675, 53 S. E. 478.

One to whom an estate in dower is conveyed has the same right with respect to the use of wood thereon as had the tenant in dower. Fuller v. Wason, 7 N. H. 341.

The same rights and privileges with respect to the use of wood and timber that belong to the life tenant are incidental to the rights of a tenant under the life tenant. Miles v. Miles, 32 N. H. 147, 64 Am. Dec. 362.

In Phillips v. Allen, 7 Allen, 115, it was held that the fact that new growth on land from which the life tenant removed the timber was as valuable as the increased growth of the trees which were cut would have been did not affect the remainderman's right to interest on the value of the wood and timber wrongfully cut by the life tenant.

Where a lessee for life, by turning the water of a creek (an act of good husbandry) kills some of the growing timber, he is not liable for waste, especially where the landlord had stood by for twenty years, during which time new trees had grown up, of more value than the old, so that there was no permanent injury to the inheritance. Jackson ex dem. Van Rensselaer v. Andrew, 18 Johns, 431.

Under the Rhode Island statute, a widow shall be endowed in a special and certain manner as of a third part of the growth in woodlands; and in Brayton v. Jordan, 24 R. I. 6, 51 Atl. 1047, it was held that the widow was entitled to one third of the growth of the wood on a lot assigned to her by metes and bounds, since equity regards that as done which should have been done.

It is not waste to permit exhausted cleared land to grow up to a second growth of trees, where that is in accordance with the custom of husbandry. Shine v. Wilcox, 21 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. Eq.) 631.

A dowress is entitled to one third of the yearly income from the sale of timber made by her pursuant to the direction of the court, as the receiver of the rent and profits of the estate. Dicken v. Hamer, 1 Drew & S. 284, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 778. In this case the widow was denied any right whatever in the proceeds of mines which were leased pursuant to the direction of the court, but this was upon the ground that the lease was entirely for the benefit of the remaindermen. Apparently there were no circumstances indicating that the direction to sell the timber was for the exclusive benefit of the remaindermen. G. H. P.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF ARKANSAS EX REL. HAL L. NORWOOD, Attorney General,

v.

W. H. BYLES.

EX PARTE W. H. BYLES.

(93 Ark. 612, 126 S. W. 94.)

License — peddler — unjust discrimination.

1. A statute imposing a license tax of $200 per year upon peddlers of lightning rods, steel stove ranges, clocks, pumps, and vehicles, is not void for making an arbitrary and unjust classification, although other articles may be peddled without license.

Habeas corpus — statute violating interstate commerce law.

2. Whether or not a statute imposing a license tax on peddlers of certain articles interferes with interstate commerce cannot be determined in a habeas corpus proceeding to secure release from custody to which one is committed for violation of the statute.

(February 21, 1910.)

PETITION for a writ of certiorari to the Chancery Court for Pulaski County to review a judgment discharging respondent from custody to which he had been committed for violation of the statute imposing a license tax on peddlers. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hal L. Norwood, Attorney General, for petitioner:

The act does not interfere with or attempt to burden commerce among the states.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, 82 Ark. 309, 101 S. W. 748, 12 Ann. Cas. 82.

The act does not conflict with § 5, article 16, Const. Appellee was a peddler, pure and simple.

Grafty v. Rushville, 107 Ind. 502, 57 Am. Rep. 128, 8 N. E. 609; Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 754, 8 L.R.A. 273,

Note.—The question in the above case, as to the right to discriminate between harmless articles in legislation regulating peddlers, was discussed in the notes to State v. Wright, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, and State ex rel. Moskowitz v. Jenkins, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1079.

As to the validity of a license tax on peddlers so high as to be prohibitory in effect, see the note to People use of State Bd. of Health v. Wilson, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1074.

As to the right to grade license taxes according to volume of business or the amount of capital employed, see the note to Salt Lake City v. Christensen Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 898.
37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

3 Inters. Com. Rep. 146, 11 S. E. 233; Duncan v. State, 105 Ga. 457, 30 S. E. 755; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 48 L. ed. 538, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365.

Messrs. Arthur C. Lyon and Samuel M. Casey, for respondent:

States cannot burden commerce among the states by legislative acts. They are void.

Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Robbins v. Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; Henderson v. New York (Henderson v. Wickham) 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 47 L. ed. 336, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229.

The act is prohibitive of competition, and void.

Spaulding v. Evenson, 149 Fed. 913; La Junta v. Heath, 38 Colo. 372, 88 Pac. 459; State v. Bayer, 34 Utah, 257, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 297, 97 Pac. 129; Smith v. Farr, 46 Colo. 364, 104 Pac. 401; Stamps v. Burk, 83 Ark. 351, 104 S. W. 153.

Messrs. Moore, Smith, & Moore, amici curiæ:

Respondent was not a peddler within the meaning of the act.

Com. v. Ober, 12 Cush. 493; Com. v. Farnum, 114 Mass. 267; State v. Moorehead, 42 S. C. 211, 26 L.R.A. 585, 46 Am. St. Rep. 719, 20 S. E. 544; Alexander Bros. v. Greenville County, 49 S. C. 527, 27 S. E. 469; Re Houston, 14 L.R.A. 719, 47 Fed. 539; Kansas v. Collins, 34 Kan. 434, 8 Pac. 865; Davenport v. Rice, 75 Iowa, 74, 9 Am. St. Rep. 454, 39 N. W. 191; Spencer v. Whiting, 68 Iowa, 678, 28 N. W. 13; Ballou v. State, 87 Ala. 144, 6 So. 393; Emmons v. Louisville, 132 Ill. 380, 8 L.R.A. 328, 22 Am. St. Rep. 540, 24 N. E. 55; Hewson v. Englewood Twp. 55 N. J. L. 522, 21 L.R.A. 730, 27 Atl. 904; State v. Wells, 69 N. H. 424, 48 L.R.A. 99, 45 Atl. 143; Peques v. Ray, 50 La. Ann. 574, 23 So. 904; Potts v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 45, 74 S. W. 31, 2 Ann. Cas. 827.

If the act of 1909 be construed as applying to respondent, then it is in conflict with article 1, § 8, of the Constitution of the United States, and in so far as it does so apply is void.

Robbins v. Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S.

129, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Stockard v. Morgan, 185 U. S. 27, 46 L. ed. 785, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 47 L. ed. 336, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Rearick v. Pennsylvania, 203 U. S. 507, 51 L. ed. 295, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159.

The shipping of vehicles into this state, and storing them in the original package, and the taking of orders for their delivery subsequent to their arrival in this state, constitute interstate commerce, and the act of 1909 as applied to the soliciting of orders under such circumstances is unconstitutional and void.

Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Campen, 135 N. C. 506, 47 S. E. 658; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 413, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441, 48 L. ed. 254, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367; Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent, W. H. Byles, was arrested in Independence county on the criminal charge of violating the provisions of an act of the general assembly approved April 1, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 292), entitled "An Act to Regulate the Sale of Lightning Rods, Steel Stove Ranges, Clocks, Pumps, Buggies, Carriages, and Vehicles in the Several Counties of this State," and on a trial before a justice of the peace of that county, he was convicted of the alleged offense, and a fine was assessed against him. The proceedings before the justice of the peace were in regular form, and the information which was the basis of the prosecution properly charged a violation of the statute referred to above. Respondent refused to pay the fine assessed against him, and presented to the chancellor of the Pulaski chancery court his petition for habeas corpus, asking that he be discharged from custody. On the return of the writ the chancellor decided that the statute in question is void, and ordered respondent's discharge. The attorney general 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) brings the proceedings here by certiorari for review, and seeks to quash the judgment of the chancellor.

The only question before us now is as to the validity of the statute; for, if the statute is valid, the question of respondent's guilt of a violation of its provisions cannot be tested in any other manner than by direct appeal from the judgment of conviction. State ex rel. Arkansas Industrial Co. v. Neel, 48 Ark. 283, 3 S. W. 631; Ex parte Foote, 70 Ark. 12, 91 Am. St. Rep. 63, 65 S. W. 706.

The statute, the validity of which is attacked, reads as follows:

"Section 1. That hereafter before any person, either as owner, manufacturer, or agent, shall travel over and through any county and peddle or sell any lightning rod, steel stove range, clock, pump, buggy, carriage, or other vehicle, or either of said articles, he shall procure a license as hereinafter provided, from the county clerk of such county, authorizing such person to conduct such business.

"Sec. 2. That before any person shall travel over or through any county and peddle or sell any of the articles mentioned above, he shall pay into the county treasurer of such county the sum of two hundred ($200) dollars, taking the receipt of the treasurer therefor, which receipt shall state for what purpose the money was paid. The county clerk of such county, upon the presentation of such receipt, shall take up the same and issue to such person a certificate or license, authorizing such person to travel over such county and sell such articles or article for a period of one year from the first day of January preceding the date of such license.

"Sec. 3. Any person who shall travel over or through any county in this state and peddle or sell, or offer to peddle or sell, any of the above enumerated articles, without first procuring the license herein provided for, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than two hundred ($200) dollars nor more than five hundred ($500) dollars.

"Sec. 4. That any person who shall travel over or through any county in this state and peddle or sell any of the articles mentioned above shall be deemed and held to be a peddler, under the provisions of this act."

This statute taxes the privilege of peddling the several articles enumerated, and defines a peddler within the meaning of the statute to be "any person who shall travel over or through any county in this state and peddle or sell any of the articles mentioned above." The Constitution of this state (article 16, § 5) provides that "the general assembly shall have power from time to time to tax hawkers, peddlers, ferries, exhibitions, and privileges in such manner as may be deemed proper." But, aside from any express constitutional sanction, as said by Judge Cooley, "everything to which the legislative power extends may be the subject of taxation, whether it be person or property or possession, franchise, or privilege, or occupation or right. Nothing but express constitutional limitation upon legislative authority can exclude anything to which the authority extends from the grasp of the taxing power, if the legislature in its discretion shall at any time select it for revenue purposes." 1 Cooley, Tax. 3d ed. p. 9.

We need not stop, therefore, to consider whether the statute in question imposes a tax for revenue purposes, or is merely a police regulation, for the legislature can exercise either power, and its effect is to impose a license tax on certain privileges. If the statute be found free from objection on the charge of unjust classification, it can be justified either as a police regulation or as a privilege tax imposed for the purpose of raising revenue. State v. Montgomery, 92 Me. 433, 43 Atl. 13; State v. Webber, 214 Mo. 272, 113 S. W. 1054, 15 Ann. Cas. 983; Coldwater v. Russell, 49 Mich. 617, 43 Am. Rep. 478, 14 N. W. 568. It does not, however, impose a tax on property, and is therefore not within the constitutional mandate requiring that all property shall be taxed according to its value, and that all taxation shall be equal and uniform. Ft. Smith v. Scruggs, 70 Ark. 549, 58 L.R.A. 921, 91 Am. St. Rep. 100, 89 S. W. 679. In the case of Ex parte Deeds, 75 Ark. 542, 87 S. W. 1030, we declared to be invalid a similar statute, except that it contained a proviso exempting from its operation resident merchants of the county. The general assembly of 1909 re-enacted the statute without the exemption, thus freeing it from the objectionable feature condemned in the Deeds Case. That decision was placed on the ground that the statute unjustly exempted from its operation a certain class of merchants, and it has no bearing on the present case. The statute is attacked on the ground that it arbitrarily classifies certain articles of trade, and taxes the business of selling the same, and that this operates as an unjust discrimination against those engaged in the business of selling those articles.

Before entering into a discussion of this question, it is well to notice a general principle which guides the courts in determining the validity or constitutionality of legislative enactments. It is that the duty of a court in testing the validity of a statute is to resolve all doubts in favor of the legislative action, and to uphold it unless clearly an abuse of legislative power. State v.

Moore, 76 Ark. 197, 70 L.R.A. 671, 88 S. W. 881; Louisiana & A. R. Co. v. State, 85 Ark. 12, 106 S. W. 960; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 51 L. ed. 499, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289. Chief Justice Marshall said that, before a court should feel justified in annulling a statute, "the opposition between the Constitution and the law should be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other." Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162. Judge Cooley announces the same principle as follows: "The rule of law upon this subject appears to be that, except where the Constitution has imposed limits upon the legislative power, it must be considered as practically absolute, whether it operate according to natural justice or not in any particular case. The courts are not the guardians of the rights of the people of the state, except as those rights are secured by some constitutional provision which comes within the judicial cognizance. The protection against unwise or oppressive legislation, within constitutional bounds, is by an appeal to the justice and patriotism of the representatives of the people. If this fail the people in their sovereign capacity can correct the evil; but courts cannot assume their rights. The judiciary can only arrest the execution of a statute when it conflicts with the Constitution. It cannot run a race of opinions upon points of right, reason, and expediency with the lawmaking power." Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 236.

This principle is especially applicable when it comes to a question of the propriety of a classification made by the legislature for the purpose of taxation of privileges and occupations or for police regulation. Unless the classification be clearly unreasonable and arbitrary, and without just distinction as a foundation, the legislature being primarily the judge of that, it is the duty of courts to respect and uphold the legislative determination. Williams v. State, 85 Ark. 464, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 482, 122 Am. St. Rep. 47, 108 S. W. 838; Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. State, 92 Ark. 1, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 861, 135 Am. St. Rep. 164, 121 S. W. 930; American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 49 L. ed. 663, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 50 L. ed. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232; Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 251, 52 L. ed. 195, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 89. The mere fact that the privilege of selling other articles escapes taxation affords no ground for invalidating the taxation or regulation of those mentioned; for, as we have already said, the constitutional provision that all taxation should be equal and uniform does not reach to the taxation of privileges. The Supreme Court of the United States very aptly said: "A tax may be imposed only upon certain callings and trades, for, when the state exerts its power to tax, it is not bound to tax all pursuits or all property that may be legitimately taxed for governmental purposes. It would be an intolerable burden if a state could not tax any property or calling unless at the same time it taxed all property or all callings." Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431.

So, treating this statute as one imposing a tax on privileges or occupation, it is valid, as the legislature has the power to select certain occupations and tax them without taxing others, and to classify the peddling of certain articles as an occupation and tax it. But whether we treat it as a tax or a mere police regulation, we fail to discover any reason for declaring the statute void on account of its being an arbitrary and unwarranted classification. To do so would be to disregard entirely the legislative determination as to the propriety of the classification. We can see some reason for selecting the articles enumerated in this statute and putting them into a class to themselves for the purpose of taxing the privilege of peddling them over the state, or of regulating the peddling of them. They are articles of merchandise, the sale of which bears larger profits than some others, and the sales amount to more. Therefore the privilege of peddling them should be taxed higher. It might not do to tax the tinware peddler, or the peddler with a pack of small wares on his back, the same as one who peddles lightning rods, steel stove ranges, clocks, pumps, buggies, or carriages, whose sales and profits in a day amount to more, perhaps, than those of the former in a month, for they do not belong in the same class. Moreover, the legislature doubtless made investigation and found that lightning rods, steel stove ranges, clocks, pumps, buggies, and carriages are the articles which constitute the stock of peddlers of this day in the state, and the present legislation was designed to meet the conditions which were found to exist. This it was proper and right for the legislature to do, and the fact that the precise conditions are found not to be met will not invalidate what the legislature has done. This is the idea expressed by this court in Williams v. State, supra, and by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, supra. Mr. Justice Peckham, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States in the latter case, said: "It is almost impossible in some matters to foresee and provide for every imaginable and exceptional case, and a legislature ought not to be required to do so at the risk of having its legislation declared void, although appropriate and proper upon the general subject upon which such legislation is to act, so long as there is no substantial and fair ground to say that the statute makes an unreasonable and unfounded general classification, and thereby denies to any person the equal protection of the laws. In a classification for governmental purposes there cannot be an exact conclusion or inclusion of persons and things."

Our conclusion in upholding the validity of the statute in question is fully sustained by the following cases: Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 50 L. ed. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232; Re Watson, 17 S. D. 486, 97 N. W. 463, 2 Ann. Cas. 321; State v. Webber, 214 Mo. 272, 113 S. W. 1054, 15 Ann. Cas. 983; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 97 Ga. 114, 35 L.R.A. 497, 25 S. E. 249; State v. Montgomery, 92 Me. 433, 43 Atl. 13; Hays v. Com. 107 Ky. 655, 55 S. W. 425; People v. Smith, 147 Mich. 391, 110 N. W. 1102; State v. Stevenson, 109 N. C. 730, 28 Am. St. Rep. 595, 14 S. E. 385; Ex parte Heylman, 92 Cal. 492, 28 Pac. 675. A review of the opinions in the several cases cited above would unduly lengthen this opinion, and that shall not be attempted, but an examination will disclose that they are based upon statutes similar to the one now under consideration, or sufficiently so to call for the application of the same principle.

It is insisted that this particular question was not raised nor decided in the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases cited above; but in the case of Emert v. Missouri, supra, though the particular question discussed is as to whether or not the statute violated the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, the opinion contains, we think, a distinct recognition of the validity of the Missouri statute imposing a tax on the privilege of peddling certain articles and exempting others.

Learned counsel for respondent cite us to the following cases, which sustain their contentions that the statute in question is an improper and unjust classification: State v. Wright, 53 Or. 344, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 100 Pac. 296; State v. Bayer, 34 Utah, 257, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 297, 97 Pac. 129; Smith v. Farr, 46 Colo. 364, 104 Pac. 401. We cannot, however, reconcile our views with the conclusions reached in those cases, and we are of the opinion that the views we here announce are in accord both with sound reason and the weight of authority.

Counsel insist that the statute selects a few articles not manufactured in this state, and imposes a prohibitive tax on the sale thereof, thus excluding foreign manufactured articles and preventing nonresident merchants from selling them here. Such is not, however, the effect of the statute, nor does that appear to be its design. We are not advised that none of these articles are manufactured in the state; but, even if there are none, this does not affect the validity of the statute. It bears alike on all persons peddling these articles, wherever manufactured, and does not, either in letter or in spirit, discriminate against any. Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, supra. Neither can we say that the tax or license fee of $200 per annum is prohibitive.

It is unnecessary to pass on the question argued whether or not the business transacted by the respondent constituted interstate commerce. We cannot go into that question, as the case is presented here; for, as already stated, if the statute is found to be valid and the proceedings against respondent were regular, the question of his guilt or innocence of violating the statute must be tested in a direct appeal from the judgment of conviction. If the statute should be found to burden interstate commerce, and be held to that extent void, that part could be eliminated and disregarded, and leave it valid and enforceable as to transactions not within the realm of interstate commerce. It has become the settled rule of construction in this court to separate statutes valid in part and void in part, on account of excess of the legislative power, so as to disregard the part which was beyond the power of the legislature to enact, and preserve the part which was within the legislative power. Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L.R.A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109, 25 S. W. 75; Wells, F. & Co.'s Express v. Crawford County, 63 Ark. 576, 37 L.R.A. 371, 40 S. W. 710; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. State, 76 Ark. 303, 89 S. W. 42; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, 82 Ark. 309, 101 S. W. 748, 12 Ann. Cas. 82; Oliver v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 89 Ark. 466, 117 S. W. 238; Parkview Land Co. v. Road Improv. Dist. No. 1, 92 Ark. 93, 122 S. W. 241.

The judgment of the Chancellor discharging the respondent is therefore reversed and quashed.

Dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, April 18, 1912, 225 U. S. —, 56 L. ed. —, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. —. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF STATE OF ILLINOIS

v.

HARTFORD LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(252 Ill. 398, 96 N. E. 1049.)

Insurance — police power — maintaining rates — stifling competition.

1. The police power extends to compelling life insurance companies to maintain uniform rates among the same classes of applicants, although the effect is to stifle competition between different companies for business.

Same — penalty — forbidding prosecution of business.

2. A statute depriving a life insurance agent of the right to prosecute that business if he gives special rates to applicants is not invalid as imposing too severe a penalty.

Pleading — characterization of discrimination.

3. A claim against an insurance company for penalty for making a discrimination between applicants in rates need not allege that it was unjust, if all the facts are stated, and the statute fixes the character of discrimination prohibited and characterizes such discrimination as unjust.

Insurance — rebating — penalty — violation of rule.

4. A rule of an insurance company forbidding rebating of premiums cannot effect a reduction of statutory penalty for granting rebates, if the rule was violated by a manager having charge of an agency.

Evidence — insurance — commission — rebate.

5. Evidence as to the commission for securing a life insurance policy is immaterial in an action to recover a statutory penalty for rebating, where the rebate was given not to an agent, but to an applicant.

Penalty — right to share — inducing statutory breach.

6. One does not lose the right to share in a penalty imposed for the rebating of life insurance premiums, by the fact that he furnished the money to pay the premium and directed an applicant to secure a rebate if possible.

Trial — penalty — amount — jury.

7. Where an action for penalty for breach of a statute is a civil one in debt, the jury should fix the amount of the recovery.

(December 21, 1911.)

Note. — Power of legislature to regulate life insurance rates.

The police power of a state extends to the protection of all property within the state; and the mere fact that a law necessary for the welfare of society regulates trade or

ERROR to the Municipal Court of Chicago to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the statutory penalty for the rebating of life insurance premiums. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Harvey Strickler, for plaintiff in error:

The exercise of the police power by the legislature is limited to such measures as are designed to promote the public health, morals, safety, or welfare, and when it has no such tendency the court will declare it invalid.

People use of State Bd. of Health v. Wilson, 249 Ill. 195, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1074, 94 N. E. 141; Chicago v. Netcher, 183 Ill. 104, 48 L.R.A. 261, 75 Am. St. Rep. 93, 55 N. E. 707; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 361, 83 N. E. 236; Ruhstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 49 L.R.A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, 57 N. E. 41, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 453.

The penalty is not proportioned to the nature of the offense.

People v. Jones, 241 Ill. 482, 89 N. E. 752, 16 Ann. Cas. 332; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11, 16 Am. Rep. 599; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 320, 18 L. ed. 356, 362.

In an action of debt on a penal statute, where the penalty is not definitely fixed, upon a verdict of guilty the court must fix the penalty, and it is not the province of the jury to assess damages.

business, or to some degree operates as a restraint thereon, does not make it unconstitutional. 8 Cyc. 864.

PEOPLE v. HARTFORD L. INS. Co. seems to be in accord with the unanimous opinion of the courts that a state may, in the proper exercise of its police power, regulate the rates to be charged by life insurance companies, to prevent discrimination between insureds of the same class and equal expectation in life.

The legislature of a state has authority to fix as a condition of a foreign insurance company's doing business in the state, that it shall not make or permit any distinction or discrimination between insureds of the same class, nor pay or allow, nor offer to pay or allow, to any person insured any special rebate or premium. New York L. Ins. Co. v. People, 95 Ill. App. 136, affirmed in 195 Ill. 430, 63 N. E. 264; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Com. 121 Ky. 543, 89 S. W. 537.

An act to prevent unjust discrimination in life insurance rates is valid, though fraternal beneficiary societies are excluded from its operation. People v. Commercial L. Ins. Co. 247 Ill. 92, 93 N. E. 90.

And in State v. Fraternal K. & L. 35 Wash. 338, 77 Pac. 500, it was held competent for the legislature to fix the rate to be charged by beneficial societies, and to 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Armstrong v. People, 37 Ill. 459; United States v. Allen, 4 Day, 474, Fed. Cas. No. 14,431; Chesley v. Brown, 11 Me. 143; Com. v. Stevens, 15 Mass. 195; Scott v. Missouri P. R. Co. 38 Mo. App. 523; United States v. Boston & A. R. Co. 15 Fed. 209; 16 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 297; Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372; Berkowitz v. Lester, 121 Ill. 99, 11 N. E. 860.

An informer cannot reap a benefit from his own wrongful conduct in inducing violation of the statute complained of.

Jolley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 119 Iowa, 491, 93 N. W. 555; Parks v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 13 Lea, 1, 49 Am. Rep. 655; Love v. People, 160 Ill. 501; Evanston v. Myers, 172 Ill. 266, 50 N. E. 204; Kizer v. Walden, 198 Ill. 282, 65 N. E. 116.

The discrimination act is unconstitutional.

People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321, 83 N. E. 236; Massie v. Cessna, 239 Ill. 352, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1108, 130 Am. St. Rep. 234, 88 N. E. 152; Josma v. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. 249 Ill. 508, 94 N. E. 945; Mathews v. People, 202 Ill. 405, 63 L.R.A. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 241, 67 N. E. 28; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 541, 46 L. ed. 682, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201, Ill. 236, 60 N. E. 349.

determine such rate by adopting a table designated as "Fraternal Congress Mortality Table," and incorporating it into the law.

An act to prevent unjust discriminations between insureds of the same class and equal expectation of life is a valid enactment, and binding upon insurance companies doing business in the state, and not expressly excepted by the provisions thereof. Western Mut. Life Asso. v. People, 73 Ill. App. 496.

In People v. Formosa, 131 N. Y. 478, 27 Am. St. Rep. 612, 30 N. E. 492, affirming 61 Hun, 272, 16 N. Y. Supp. 753, in holding constitutional a provision of an act which prohibited life insurance companies or their agents from paying or allowing any rebates or premium as an inducement to any person to insure, the court said: "Life insurance companies perform very important functions in modern society. They operate in all parts of the state, and a very large number of people are interested in them. They are resorted to for the purpose of making provisions for families and dependents after the death of the insured, and for that purpose many persons invest in them the accumulations of their labor and their thrift. The nature of insurance contracts is such that each person effecting insurance cannot thoroughly pro-

Messrs. John E. W. Wayman and David K. Cochran, for defendant in error:

The act is not unconstitutional. It is not in contravention of either the state or Federal Constitutions.

People v. Commercial L. Ins. Co. 247 Ill. 92, 93 N. E. 90; W. C. Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 994, 91 N. E. 695, overruling Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L.R.A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Consolidated Coal Co. v. People, 186 Ill. 134, 56 L.R.A. 266, 57 N. E. 880, 185 U. S. 203, 46 L. ed. 872, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 181 Ill. 270, 48 L.R.A. 554, 54 N. E. 961; Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 226, 47 L.R.A. 802, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103, 55 N. E. 663, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 108; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 74 N. E. 1035, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 209, 32 L. ed. 107, 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Chicago v. Schmidinger, 243 Ill. 167, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 90 N. E. 369, 17 Ann. Cas. 614; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321, 83 N. E. 236; Massie v. Cessna, 239 Ill. 352, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1108, 130 Am. St. Rep. 234, 88 N. E. 152; Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 857, 52 L.R.A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Dunne v. People, 94 Ill. 120, 34 Am. Rep. 213; Cole v. Hall, 103

Ill. 30; Harmon v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 400, 51 Am. Rep. 698; Lowe v. Kansas, 163 U. S. 81, 41 L. ed. 78, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1031; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 184, 41 L. ed. 677, 679, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 687, 32 L. ed. 257, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 27, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Davis v. Massachusetts, 167 U. S. 43, 42 L. ed. 71, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 731; Kruse v. Kennett, 181 Ill. 199, 54 N. E. 965; Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 35 L.R.A. 176, 54 Am. St. Rep. 447, 45 N. E. 303; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. People, 200 Ill. 594, 66 N. E. 378; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. People, 200 Ill. 619, 66 N. E. 379; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. People, 209 Ill. 42, 70 N. E. 643; Ward v. Farrell, 97 Ill. 593; Chicago L. Ins. Co. v. Auditor, 101 Ill. 82.

It is proper for the jury to assess damages against the defendant in its verdict.

Zito v. People, 140 Ill. App. 612; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 82 Ill. App. 679; 30 Cyc. 1359; McDaniel v. Gates City Gaslight Co. 79 Ga. 58, 3 S. E. 693; Hines v. Darling, tect himself. He is not competent to investigate the condition and solvency of the company in which he insures, and his contracts may run through many years, and mature only, as a rule, at his death. Under such circumstances, it is competent for the legislature, in the interest of the people and to promote the general welfare, to regulate insurance companies and the management of their affairs, and to provide by law for that protection to policy holders which they could not secure for themselves. Under such conditions there should be a wide range of legislative power to promote the public welfare in the exercise of the police power, and the true boundaries of that power it would be difficult in such a case to prescribe."

In Com. v. Morningstar, 144 Pa. 103, 22 Atl. 867, in holding a similar act constitutional, the court said that the scope and purpose of the act is clearly within the police powers of the state, and its terms are not in conflict with any rights guaranteed by the fundamental law.

And, also, in Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Com. 113 Ky. 126, 67 S. W. 388, it was said: "The legislature must be credited with the design, in the enactment of the statute under consideration, to benefit the public. Wise and prudent business men not only regard that there is an obligation on them to support and care for their families during their lives, but that it is provident and wise to protect them against want by life insurance. Of course, life is of uncertain duration. Policies of life insurance may run for forty or fifty years, or more, and those who buy them are deeply interested in having their policies issued in a solvent company. Every one who takes out a life insurance policy is interested in the solvency of the company. It is important that the business of the company should be successfully conducted, and that it should, at the end of a long period, be able, by collecting sufficient premiums, to meet the demands of the beneficiaries in the policies."

And in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. People, 209 Ill. 42, 70 N. E. 643, the court said: "The nature of the insurance business and the interest of the public in it are such as to subject it to regulation under the police power, and the statute which prohibits discrimination in favor of individuals, between insureds of the same class and with equal expectation of life, is a valid exercise of that power."

For note as to kinds of business affected with a public interest subjecting them to regulation and control in respect to rates or prices, see 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834.

J. H. B.

99 Mich. 47, 57 N. W. 1081; Kennedy v. Wright, 34 Me. 351; State v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 395, 22 N. W. 576; Lammond v. Volans, 14 Hun, 263.

There was no evidence of any entrapment of the agents to violate the law, and hence it was not proper to instruct the jury on that point.

People v. Whalen, 151 Ill. App. 16; Chicago v. Bartels, 146 Ill. App. 180; Evanston v. Myers, 172 Ill. 266, 50 N. E. 204; Grimm v. United States, 156 U. S. 604, 39 L. ed. 550, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 470; Price v. United States, 165 U. S. 311, 41 L. ed. 727, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366; People v. Murphy, 93 Mich. 41, 52 N. W. 1042; People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212, 54 N. W. 767; Willey v. Dake, 118 Ill. App. 47; Connor v. People, 18 Colo. 373, 25 L.R.A. 342, 36 Am. St. Rep. 295, 33 Pac. 159; Toluca, M. & N. R. Co. v. Haws, 194 Ill. 94, 62 N. E. 312; Wilmette v. Brachle, 110 Ill. App. 356.

Cartwright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The municipal court of Chicago entered a judgment on the verdict of a jury against the Hartford Life Insurance Company for a penalty of $750 in a suit of the fifth class brought by the people of the state of Illinois for a violation of the act prohibiting discrimination between life insureds of the same class and equal expectation of life (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1909, chap. 73, §§ 27-30), by issuing a policy to Alfred Bellstrom for less than the fixed annual premium. The defendant moved the court to strike the amended statement of claim from the files, and one of the reasons assigned was that the act violated constitutional restrictions upon the legislative power, and was therefore void. The motion was overruled, and the validity of the act being involved, the record has been brought to this court by writ of error.

We decided in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. People, 209 Ill. 42, 70 N. E. 643, that the nature of the life insurance business and the interest of the public in it are such as to subject it to regulation and that the act prohibiting discrimination in favor of individuals between insureds of the same class and with equal expectation of life is a valid exercise of the power of regulation. Subsequently, in People v. Commercial L. Ins. Co. 247 Ill. 92, 93 N. E. 90, it was contended that the act was void as a police regulation, because it excluded fraternal associations furnishing life insurance, thereby discriminating arbitrarily between companies in the same class. This question was considered, and it was held that there is such a fundamental difference between life insurance companies and fraternal associations that they are not substantially in the same class or situation, and there was therefore no arbitrary discrimination against life insurance companies.

It is not now contended that insurance companies are not subject to police regulation, nor that there is no difference in character or situation between life insurance companies and fraternal associations, but the argument is that the real purpose of the act is to stifle competition between life insurance companies, and compel them to have only one price for their policies, and make everybody pay that price, which cannot be deemed for the public welfare; that there is no difference, in principle, between selling contracts for life insurance and fire insurance, and the sale of other contractual obligations, such as bonds, notes, or mortgages, or the selling of any other property. There are material differences between life insurance contracts and those of fire insurance companies, as well as the sale of bonds, notes, mortgages, or other property. The purchaser of property or securities takes title to the same and pays the price agreed upon, and, when one takes a fire insurance policy, he makes the contract for his own benefit for a short period of time, and does not need the aid of a statute designed to secure the solvency of the company at a distant period of time. The policies of life insurance companies run for comparatively long periods of time, and are mainly for the benefit of a class of dependents entitled to protection against the insolvency which might follow reckless and ruinous competition. The right to contract is a property right, but, like all other rights, its exercise is subject to the police power, and may be limited and restricted for the preservation of the public health, morals, safety, or welfare, or to prevent a well-known evil and wrong. W. C. Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 994, 91 N. E. 695. A regulation designed to secure equality between those contributing to the funds and resources of life insurance companies, and to secure financial ability to meet obligations which may mature in the distant future, and adapted to that end, does not violate any prohibition of the Constitution. Similar acts are in force in a large number of the states (Joyce, Ins. § 1091, note; Richards, Ins. Law, 703); and have been regarded as valid.

The act provides for a forfeiture of the agent's license, and counsel insists that it is void because that penalty is not proportionate to the offense. Other acts provide for the revoking of licenses to practise professions requiring great skill and learning, where the holder has violated the law, and they are considered valid. The occupation of an insurance agent does not call for learning or a previous course of study, but only for persuasive powers; and, if he violates the law, he may be lawfully deprived of the right to prosecute that business.

It is also argued that the statement of claim was insufficient, because it did not allege that the discrimination was unjust, although it stated with particularity all of the facts showing a violation of the act. The 1st section of the act fixes the character of discrimination prohibited, and the 2d section declares that any company making any unjust discrimination, as enumerated in § 1, shall be deemed guilty of having violated the act. It was not necessary, after stating the facts in the claim, to denounce the discrimination as unjust.

August C. Wegner, who was the informer and entitled to one half of the penalty, was an agent of the New York Life Insurance Company, and he gave to John F. Goggin $44 to pay as premiums on policies which he would get from other insurance companies, and he was to get rebates if he could. In pursuance of the plan, Wegner wrote a letter June 29, 1910, to which he signed the name of Goggin, directed to Harry B. Johnston, manager of the defendant at Chicago, saying that he had received a proposition for insurance in that company, and had a few other offers, but concluded to accept Johnston's offer. He requested Johnston to call July 7th at his residence. Goggin had received no proposition for insurance, and the statement was false. Goggin saw the letter when Wegner was at his house, and he mailed it to Johnston. Johnston employed subagents on commission, and sent Louis P. Hazen to Goggin's home as requested, and Hazen took an application for a policy for $1,000, which was afterward delivered. The regular annual premium was $22.08, and Wegner gave Goggin $16.56, with which Goggin paid for the policy. Wegner had told Goggin that he would furnish the money for the premium, and all the discount or rebate Goggin could get would be his. In pursuance of that arrangement, Wegner paid Goggin the amount of the rebate, which was the difference between $16.56 and $22.08. On July 18, 1910, Johnston wrote Goggin inclosing the policy, saying that the balance due was $16.56, which was to be sent to the office, and adding: "I hope you will be able to secure more business for us on the same basis." Wegner wrote a letter in reply, saying that Johnston had offered to extend the terms granted to Goggin to others; that he had a friend, Alfred Bellstrom, whom he had told about his premium, and if Johnston could see Bellstrom on August 2d at 8 P. M., he believed he could secure an application. Goggin signed the letter, and gave it back to Wegner. Another letter was written to Johnston, saying that Ida Waters wanted to take out some insurance, and Goggin would send her to the office with a letter, if he could persuade her to go. Johnston wrote to Goggin, saying that he had recommended two prospects for insurance, and, in case the policies were issued and paid for, 25 per cent of the premium would be paid Goggin. Johnston sent Hazen to see Bellstrom and took his application for a policy for $1,000, which was issued, and the annual premium was $29.25. The defendant gave Bellstrom a receipt for that amount, but Bellstrom paid only $21.94 in a check of J. H. Fetterhoff, furnished him by Wegner. This was the act of discrimination alleged in the statement of claim, which did not include the transaction with Goggin or Ida Waters. On September 9th Goggin wrote to Johnston, claiming a commission of 25 per cent on the Bellstrom and Waters policies, which had been deducted by the defendant, and Johnston answered on September 12th, saying that the other parties were informed by Goggin that the 25 per cent was to be credited to them, as had been done in Goggin's case, and he understood it was to be given to the other parties. On September 22d Goggin wrote to Johnston that he had inquired of his friends, and found that they had got the commission instead of himself, and that they would call the matter square.

It is objected that the court admitted evidence of transactions not pertaining to the case, and leaving the jury to believe that the defendant had been guilty of other offenses. The letter to Goggin about securing other business was brought into the case on the cross-examination of Bellstrom, and was admitted in evidence without objection. It was the theory of the defendant that there was an arrangement with Goggin for 25 per cent commissions, and this was presented as the sole defense. The letters about the Waters policy were offered in evidence by the defendant, so that there is no ground for the complaint.

The court did not err in refusing to permit proof of a rule prohibiting rebating. It is said that it would tend to mitigate the amount of the penalty, but it could not have that effect where the manager having charge of the agency knew that the rule was being violated. If the defendant was guilty and subject to a penalty, the existence of a rule which was not enforced, but was violated by the defendant's manager, would have no tendency to reduce the penalty.

It is next argued that the trial court failed properly to control the conduct of plaintiff's counsel in asking improper questions and in making improper statements at the trial. Bellstrom had testified, and later in the trial was recalled and asked if he had seen the attorney for the defendant at the state's attorney's office, if he went there at the request of the attorney, and what occurred there. He persisted in asking the questions, and in reply to objections of defendant's attorney and interrogations of the court, simply said that the evidence would tend to show the facts of the case, and that it would straighten out the testimony so that the jury would get it right, and that he wanted to show what those people falsely represented at Bellstrom's house. The conduct of the attorney was grossly improper, and had no object except to create prejudice or raise an unfavorable inference against defendant's attorney. The court finally sustained the objection, and, in view of all the evidence, we are not inclined to reverse the judgment because of the conduct of the attorney.

The defendant offered to prove that the commission on Bellstrom's policy was 60 per cent of the face of the premium, in connection with the evidence that he paid 25 per cent less than the amount of the premium, but was not permitted to make the proof. The object was to prove that the agent had divided the commission with Goggin for services rendered in securing the insureds. It is not claimed that the agent had a right to dispose of his commission as he saw fit, or to rebate a part of it to the insured where the insurance company received the entire amount to which it was entitled, but it is assumed here, as it was in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. People, 209 Ill. 42, 70 N. E. 643, that doing so would be a violation of the terms of the act. That question therefore is not considered, and we do not think the jury could have believed that the allowance to Bellstrom was made as a commission to Goggin. It is true that Goggin directed the attention of Johnston to Bellstrom, but the conduct of the parties indicates pretty clearly that the proposition for commissions was a mere device, since the deduction of 25 per cent was made to Bellstrom directly, without any inquiry to Goggin. Proof that the commission was 60 per cent of the premium would not have aided the defendant on that question.

The court refused to instruct the jury that the law does not permit an informer to reap a benefit from his own wrongful conduct in inducing a violation of a statute. One cannot arrange for a crime to be committed against himself or his property, and aid, encourage, or solicit the commission of the crime (Love v. People, 160 Ill. 501, 32 L.R.A. 139, 43 N. E. 710), but if he does not induce or advise the commission of the crime, and merely creates the condition under which an offense against the public 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) may be committed, the rule does not apply (People v. Smith, 251 Ill. 185, 95 N. E. 1041). It is not a violation of the law to find out whether offenses are being committed, although it is done by artifice or deceit, such as the use of decoy letters, writing letters under assumed names, or furnishing money to secure evidence. We see no substantial distinction between the act of an informer and that of one who secures evidence of criminal acts for a reward, and undoubtedly a prosecution could not be defeated because the evidence is so obtained.

Counsel contends that it was error for the jury to fix the amount of the penalty. There seems to be no uniformity of practice in the courts of different states with respect to the proper functions of the court and jury in such cases. In this state the action for a penalty is a civil action in debt (Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. People, supra), and we see no reason why it should not be governed by the same rule that obtains in other civil cases where the jury fixes the amount. That has heretofore been the unquestioned practice. The case of Armstrong v. People, 37 Ill. 459, does not apply, because that was a criminal prosecution for an offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary and a fine, while this is a civil action to recover a penalty as a debt.

We cannot say that the judgment was wrong, and accordingly it is affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

ESTHER F. BLANCHARD, Admr., etc., of Flint Blanchard, Deceased, Resp.,
v.

AMOS F. BLANCHARD, Appt.

(201 N. Y. 134, 94 N. E. 630.)

Note — Implied contract to reimburse accommodation indorser — enforcement after note is barred.

The law implies a contract by the maker

Note. — Right of accommodation party who is obliged to pay bill or note, to recover from the accommodated party.

The rule that one who has accommodated another by loaning him his credit has, upon being required to pay the debt to a bona fide holder, a right of action against the accommodated party for reimbursement, seems to have the unanimous approval of the courts.

Accommodation indorser.

An accommodation indorser who is obliged to pay a note at its maturity is entitled to reimbursement from the accommodated party. Adler v. Teller, 3 Legal of a note to reimburse the accommodation indorser the amount which he is compelled to pay thereon, and therefore, if the note is barred in favor of the maker when its amount is collected from the indorser's estate, the time having been extended as to it by the administration proceedings, the estate has a right of action against the maker upon the implied contract for reimbursement.

(February 28, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of the Supreme Court for Chautauqua County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover from the maker

Gaz. 236; Foster v. Balch, 79 Conn. 449, 65 Atl. 574.

So an accommodation indorser who pays notes may recover the amount from the estate of the accommodated party. Bliss v. Plummer, 103 Mich. 181, 61 N. W. 263.

In Brown v. American Wheel Co. 46 Fed. 733, where an accommodated party sold out, the successors agreed to pay certain debts of which it was notified accommodation paper was part; the successors requested the indorser to continue for them, and upon the indorser's having to take up the notes, it was held he could recover, though the debt was not a part of the amount assumed, and the successors had paid other debts equal to such amount assumed.

In Lyon v. Robertson, 50 Ala. 74, it was held that the liability of an accommodated party to reimburse an accommodation party was good consideration for a note given for the purpose of reimbursement.

One who indorsed a note signed by two makers, at the request of one only of the makers, may, upon being required to pay the note, recover the amount from the other maker who had not requested the indorsement. Hoffman v. Butler, 105 Ind. 371, 4 N. E. 681.

And an accommodation indorser who pays the note after its maturity, upon the maker's default, can recover from the maker, as such an indorser is not a purchaser after maturity. Van Brunt v. Potter, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 591.

In Havens v. Huntington, 1 Cow. 387, where the accommodation indorsement was by a firm, in the firm name, it was held that the note could be assigned to one member, and action maintained against the accommodated party, in his own name alone as indorser.

The fact that judgment was obtained against a sheriff for not returning execution against the maker did not discharge the indorser from liability on judgment against him, and therefore payment by such indorser was not in his own wrong, so as to defeat recovery of the amount paid from the accommodated party. Baker v. Martin, 3 Barb. 634.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the amount paid by an accommodation indorser on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. V. E. Peckham, with Mr. John G. Wicks, for appellant:

The payee and first indorser of a promissory note, to recover of the maker for moneys paid as such indorser, must take up the note and bring his action on it against the maker; and he cannot recover from the maker for moneys paid for the maker's benefit and impliedly at his request.

Woodruff v. Moore, 8 Barb. 171; Converse v. Cook, 25 Hun, 44, 31 Hun, 417; Crampton v. Foster, 29 App. Div. 215. 51 N. Y. Supp. 883; Stephens v. Monongahela Nat. Bank, 88 Pa. 158, 32 Am. Rep. 438;

—indorsement for firm.

In Annis v. Lowes, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 198, one who, at the request of two partners, indorsed for their accommodation a note signed by one partner only, but which was represented by both as drawn on account of the firm, was held entitled to recover from the nonsigning partner, where the other partner absconded before the maturity of the note, which was taken up by the indorser.

So, one who renewed his accommodation indorsement of firm paper after a change in the personnel of the firm, of which he was not aware, without any intention of releasing anyone liable on the original paper, may recover the amount paid by him against all the members of the original firm. Miller v. Miller, 8 W. Va. 542.

—effect of fraud.

An accommodation indorser who was a party to the fraud on a corporation, by which an officer executed the note in its name, may not recover from the corporation, even if he has paid the note to a bona fide holder thereof, who was not affected by the fraud. Erie Boot & Shoe Co. v. Eichenlaub, 127 Pa. 164, 17 Atl. 889.

But where partnership notes made by one partner after dissolution, in renewal of prior notes made before dissolution, were indorsed in good faith for the accommodation of the partnership, it was held in an action by the accommodation indorser, who had been obliged to pay the notes, that the fraudulent use of such notes for individual purposes of another partner, to which fraud the accommodation indorser was not a party, would be no defense. Meyran v. Abel, 189 Pa. 215, 69 Am. St. Rep. 806, 42 Atl. 122.

—effect of usury.

The payee of a promissory note who indorses the same for accommodation of the maker, and who is compelled to take up the note at its maturity, may maintain an action thereon against the maker, though such note was discounted at a usurious rate

Graham v. Roberson, 79 Ga. 72, 3 S. E. 611; Perry v. Barret, 18 Mo. 140; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 478; Bird v. Kay, 40 App. Div. 533, 58 N. Y. Supp. 170.

Mr. A. Frank Jenks, for respondent:

Where one person becomes a mere surety for another, whether by actual contract or by operation of law, if he is compelled to pay the debt which the other in equity and justice ought to have paid, he is entitled to relief against the other, who was in fact the principal debtor.

Hunt v. Amidon, 4 Hill, 348 40 Am. Dec. 283.

Even if respondent's intestate had not waived notice of protest and guaranteed the payment of the note, he might, upon demand, after presentment, protest, and no-of interest, if he was in ignorance of such fact. Cassebeer v. Kalbfleisch, 11 Hun, 119.

—necessity for demand and protest.

An accommodation indorser for the maker of a promissory note, who pays the note upon the maker's default, may recover the amount so paid from the maker, though the note was not protested. McGowan v. Hover, 45 Misc. 138, 91 N. Y. Supp. 892; Pinney v. McGregory, 102 Mass. 186.

And so the fact that an accommodation indorser who has paid the note did not receive such notice of default as was necessary to fix his liability on note will not defeat his right of recovery from the maker. Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449, 10 L.R.A. 545, 25 Pac. 16.

And one who indorses a note for the accommodation of prior indorsers, and who had to pay the note at maturity, may recover such amount from such indorsers on account for money paid, though unable to prove any demand of the maker. Rodman v. Denison, 21 Conn. 406.

Accommodation maker.

An accommodation maker who is compelled to pay a note at maturity to a bona fide holder may recover the amount paid with interest from the accommodated parties. Morgan v. Thompson, 72 N. J. L. 244, 62 Atl. 410.

In Kern's Estate, 171 Pa. 55, 33 Atl. 129, a note was made for the accommodation of the payee, who deposited the same with a bank as security for his private debt to the bank, and at the same time gave to the bank as collateral security his own note payable to the maker of the accommodation note, which he had previously given to her, but which she had returned to him. The accommodation maker had to pay her note at its maturity, and had returned to her her own note and the note held as collateral security, and it was held that the accommodation maker was entitled to recover from the accommodated party the amount of the promissory note he had given to her as security.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tice, have paid the note, and brought his action for money paid to appellant's use upon an implied assumpsit.

Baker v. Martin, 3 Barb. 634; Neass v. Mercer, 15 Barb. 318; Peterson v. Wing, Sheldon, 437.

When an accommodation indorser or other surety pays the debt of his principal in discharge of his own liability therefor, the statute begins to run from the time of such payment, and not from the time when the principal debt fell due.

Rodman v. Hedden, 10 Wend. 498; Butler v. Wright, 20 Johns. 367, 2 Wend. 369; Frank v. Brewer, 4 Silv. Sup. Ct. 155, 26 N. Y. S. R. 590, 7 N. Y. Supp. 182; Norton v. Hall, 41 Vt. 471; Poe v. Dixon, 60 Ohio St. 124, 71 Am. St. Rep. 713, #### Accommodation acceptor.

An accommodation acceptor who is obliged to take up a draft may recover the amount from the drawer. Martin v. Muncy, 40 La. Ann. 190, 3 So. 640; Asprey v. Levy, 18 Mees. & W. 851.

A drawer of a bill and sureties thereon are liable upon an implied promise to refund to an accommodation acceptor of a draft who has paid the same. Dickerson v. Turner, 15 Ind. 4.

And in First Nat. Bank v. Maxfield, 83 Me. 576, 22 Atl. 479, it was held that a drawer becomes a debtor of the accommodation acceptor of a draft, where the latter pays the same, and that therefore the acceptor's claim for money paid can be assigned in equity to the bank that originally cashed the draft, so as to be a good consideration for a mortgage to the bank to secure the debt from the real debtor.

In Kirkman v. Benham, 28 Ala. 501, it was held that an accommodation acceptor who accepted a bill drawn by one as "executor of," etc., had, on being compelled to pay the same, no claim against the estate, as the bill was the personal contract of the executor.

—for firm or corporation.

In Pearce v. Wilkins, 2 N. Y. 469, where one partner drew a bill in the firm name, and procured it to be accepted, agreeing in the name of the firm to take care of it at maturity, to which agreement another partner, in the presence of the acceptor, refused his assent, and the acceptor gave a release executed under hand and seal to the party who drew the bill, discharging him from all claim for damages, costs, or charges, as drawer of such bill, it was held that the release to the drawer, as drawer merely, did not discharge him from liability to the accommodation acceptor, and that, as the bill went to the payment of the firm debt with the knowledge and assent of the dissenting partner, the acceptor could maintain an action against the firm for money paid.

Where a draft accepted for the accom-

54 N. E. 86; Scott v. Nichols, 61 Am. Dec. 503, and note, 27 Miss. 94; Thayer v. Deniels, 110 Mass. 346; Graves v. Johnson, 48 Conn. 160, 40 Am. Rep. 162.

Collin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant on May 12, 1900, made his negotiable promissory note for $1,100.15, payable with interest to the order of Flint Blanchard, and to mature August 12, 1900. Flint Blanchard indorsed it for the accommodation of the defendant, who then delivered it to, and received thereupon from, Daniel Griswold the sum of $1,100.15. Flint Blanchard on July 9, 1900, waived demand of payment and notice of the non-payment thereof. The defendant made no payment upon the note. Flint Blanchard made two small payments thereon, and after his death, February 17, 1906, and plaintiff's appointment, March 5, 1906, plaintiff paid, February 19, 1907, to Griswold upon his demand $1,101.50, the amount unpaid thereon; the statute of limitations being then invocable by the defendant, but not by the plaintiff, because the eighteen months next succeeding the death of Flint Blanchard were not a part of the time limited for the commencement of an action upon his indorsement against his administratrix. Code Civ. Proc. § 403. The action, commenced October 8, 1907, rests upon the payment of moneys for the use of the defendant, and the contract, implied by law, of the defendant to repay them. The modation of a corporation is paid at maturity by the acceptor, and thereafter an execution on judgment against the corporation for the amount thereof is returned unsatisfied, a suit in equity may be maintained to enforce the personal liability of the officers of the corporation for the debt. Byers v. Franklin Coal Co. 106 Mass. 131, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 27.

Accommodation drawer.

One who draws a bill for the accommodation of the acceptor and indorser may recover from the indorser or acceptor any amount he may have had to pay on said bill. Lewis v. Williams, 4 Bush, 678.

But an accommodation drawer of a draft, who, upon the bill being dishonored, voluntarily, and without having received notice of dishonor, and without request from the accommodated party, pays part of it to the holder, cannot recover the amount paid from the accommodated party in an action for money paid to his use. Sleigh v. Sleigh, 5 Exch. 514, 19 L. J. Exch. N. S. 345.

Accommodation guarantor.

An accommodation guarantor of a note, who pays the same to the holder on default of his principal, is subrogated to rights of the holder, and may recover the amount paid from the principal. Babcock v. Blanchard, 86 Ill. 165.

Effect of death of accommodation party.

Where an accommodation party dies before the note becomes due, and his administrators afterwards take up the note, they cannot recover from the accommodated party, as the death of the maker discharged his liability on the note, and the payment by the administrator was voluntary and in his own wrong. Kennedy v. Carpenter, 2 Whart. 344.

Effect of insolvency of accommodated party.

An accommodation acceptor of a draft, who pays the same after drawer became bankrupt, cannot come in for any dividend 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

under the commission. Young v. Hockley, 3 Wils. 346, 2 W. Bl. 839; Chilton v. Whiffen, 3 Wils. 13.

An indorser of a note fixed before, but paying after the insolvent discharge of the maker, may recover against the maker, as he is not affected by such discharge. Ainslie v. Wilson, 7 Cow. 662, 17 Am. Dec. 532.

In Seymour v. Minturn, 17 Johns. 169, 8 Am. Dec. 380, the plaintiff loaned the defendant his promissory note, payable to the defendant or order, who indorsed it and procured it to be discounted at a bank and received the money. The note was protested for nonpayment, and the defendant being insolvent, the plaintiff and the bank signed a written agreement discharging him from all debts and demands. Afterwards plaintiff paid the bank the amount of the note, and brought an action against the defendant for so much money paid to his use, and it was held that the release of the defendant by the bank did not discharge the plaintiff, as the bank did not know for whose accommodation the note was discounted, and that therefore the plaintiff did not pay the money in his own wrong; and neither did the signing of the release by the plaintiff release the defendant from liability, because the plaintiff, having no debt or existing demand at that time, that agreement could not have the effect to discharge a right of action acquired subsequently by the payment of the money by the plaintiff to the holder of the note.

Remedy.

The general rule is that an accommodation maker or acceptor must bring his action against the party accommodated upon his implied contract to indemnify, as the payment by him extinguished the security; on the other hand, the authorities generally hold that an accommodation indorser has a right of action either upon the instrument or for money paid.

Thus, an accommodation acceptor who pays a draft has an action against the drawer on an implied obligation, but not defendant's counsel takes the position that the making, indorsement, and delivery of the note created an express contract between the defendant and Flint Blanchard, which was not annulled or changed through the payments to Griswold, the existence of which prohibits or bars an implication, and plaintiff is confined to an action upon the note, to which the statute of limitations is a perfect defense, and that the consequent loss of plaintiff is the result of the failure of her intestate and herself to take up and sue the note within the six years from August 12, 1906.

The doctrine of implied contract is firmly placed in our system of jurisprudence. With whatever reason or logic it and the legal fiction which it, in part at least, is, on the bill itself. Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267.

Where the note is made for the accommodation of the indorser, and the maker is compelled to pay the same, his remedy against the indorser is an action for money paid, and not an action on the indorsement. Abramowitz v. Abramowitz, 113 N. Y. Supp. 798.

And in Sublett v. McKinney, 19 Tex. 438, the court, in deciding as to the remedy of an accommodation acceptor, said: "Whatever may be said of the action being upon the implied contract to indemnify, it is quite certain that without the request contained in the writing the plaintiff would not have any right of action upon payment of the money. One man cannot make another his debtor by paying his debt without his request, unless he has come under obligation to some third person to make payment. It therefore is not the payment of the money which gives the right of action; but it is founded, in part at least, upon the writing. The doctrine that the plaintiff must sue upon the implied contract is, to say the least, quite technical, and is confined in its application to courts which recognize the distinctions of forms of action. Our law does not recognize these distinctions; but the plaintiff must sue upon his case, and the writing certainly constitutes a very material and essential part of that case. The mere fact of payment does not raise a promise by implication. No promise to indemnify is implied, except it be upon request, and that request in this case is in writing; so the writing is the foundation of the promise, and, discarding technical niceties, it may be said to be the ground of the action. It gives rise to the promise which, in compliance with the request, springs out of and is grounded upon it."

An accommodation indorser who pays a note may maintain an action on the note itself against the maker. Heaton v. Dickson, 153 Mo. App. 312, 133 S. W. 159; Havens v. Huntington, 1 Cow. 387.

An accommodation indorser who pays a note has a right of action against the accommodated party, either on the note itself as equitable assignee, or for money paid to maker's use. Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449, 10 L.R.A. 545, 25 Pac. 16.

may be characterized as a mythical creation or an usurpation, it is too inveterate and useful to be either shattered or discarded; nor are we called upon to justify its existence by writing of the beneficial part it has worked in the historical development of the law. The law is practical and has as a purpose to adjudge, through just and general principles and precedents investing it with certitude and continuity, the actual disputes growing out of the conduct and transactions of those under its jurisdiction. If it is not in all respects logical and conformable to pure reason, no more are the conduct and transactions which are the causes of those disputes.

This action is ex contractu, and has no support other than a contract to be by the

And an accommodation indorser who pays a note acquires title thereto, and may enforce the same against the estate of the maker. Fenn v. Dugdale, 40 Mo. 63.

An accommodation indorser for payee, who is compelled to pay the note, is entitled to recover either on the note or on the account for money paid, laid out, and expended, for the accommodated party. Baker v. Martin, 3 Barb. 634.

And in Borland v. Phillips, 3 Ala. 718, there is dictum to the effect that an accommodation indorser who pays a note may maintain an action against the maker for money paid to his use, but not on the note itself.

But in Kennedy v. Carpenter, 2 Whart. 344, it was held that a payee of an accommodation note, who indorses it for the accommodation of the maker, and is compelled to pay the same to the holder, cannot recover the amount thereof from the maker on any of the money counts in indebitatus assumpsit, but must sue on the note.

Where a note is made for the accommodation of the maker, and the maker is compelled to pay the same to the holder, cannot recover the amount thereof from the maker on any of the money counts in indebitatus assumpsit, but must sue on the note.

When right of action accrues.

Where an accommodation maker of a note pays the same to a bona fide holder, and seeks reimbursement from the payee, or where an indorser of a note has been compelled to pay it, and seeks reimbursement from the maker or prior indorsers, the cause of action accrues, and the statute begins to run, at the date when the payment is made, not at the maturity of the instrument. 25 Cyc. 1114.

An accommodation acceptor's right of action against the drawer accrues at the time of payment. Reynolds v. Doyle, 1 Mann. & G. 753, 2 Scott, N. R. 45, 1 Drink. 1; Angrove v. Tippet, 11 L. T. N. S. 708.

An accommodation acceptor who is compelled to pay a draft may recover from the accommodated party in an action for money paid, though action on the bill is barred law implied from the facts and conditions established herein. In case the law refuses to declare the contract, the action fails. The note of the defendant must be eliminated as the basis of a recovery. Under the facts, does the law imply a contract on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiff the amounts paid by herself and her intestate by reason of his indorsement?

Those payments were not voluntary. As to Griswold, the indorsement was the agreement of Flint that on due presentment the note should be paid according to its tenor, and that, if it were dishonored, and the necessary proceedings on dishonor were duly taken, he would pay the amount thereof to the holder (Laws 1897, chap. 612, §§ 113, 116), which, at the time of the payments, had become certain and obligatory. A payment is deemed in law to be compulsory when the party making it cannot legally resist it. The relation as to the debt between the defendant and Flint, in so far as it is involved in this action, was that of principal and surety. Pitts v. Congdon, 2 N. Y. 352, 51 Am. Dec. 299; National Exch. Bank v. Silliman, 65 N. Y. 475; First Nat. Bank v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 405, 27 Am. Rep. 66. The defendant, when he procured the indorsement, impliedly engaged that he would indemnify Flint, and reimburse him in case he was compelled to pay. This engagement was not created by the note. That was not delivered by the defendant to Flint, or had not validity until transferred to Griswold. The failure of the defendant to pay the note did not constitute a cause of action in favor of Flint against the defendant, but a payment by Flint did. A cause of action accrued when he paid; and the statute of limitations then began to run. Each of the payments made by Flint or the plaintiff was within the six years next before the comby the statute of limitations. Reynolds v. Doyle, supra.

An accommodation indorser's right of action against the accommodated party accrues at the time he is compelled to pay the note. Norton v. Hall, 41 Vt. 471; Thayer v. Daniels, 110 Mass. 345; Rodman v. Hedden, 10 Wend. 498.

An accommodation indorser's action to recover from the accommodated party accrues when the judgment obtained against himself on the note is paid, and the promise by such accommodated party to pay such judgment as soon as he might succeed in arranging or settling with his other creditors the indebtedness then outstanding against him will not suspend operation of the statute. Wilson v. Crawford, 47 Iowa, 469.

But in Kennedy v. Carpenter, supra, it was held that a right of action against a maker by an accommodation indorser who is compelled to take up the note accrues when the note matures, and not when he pays the same. The basis of this decision is that the court in this action held that the indorser's right of action was upon the note itself, and not for money paid.

Where an accommodation maker is compelled to pay a note, the statute of limitations begins to run against the claim for reimbursement only from the time of payment. Frank v. Brewer, 4 Silv. Sup. Ct. 155, 26 N. Y. S. R. 590, 7 N. Y. Supp. 182.

Amount of recovery.

As to the amount of recovery by an accommodation party, the authorities are not in accord, especially as to whether he may recover the costs incurred in an action against himself on the bill or note.

An accommodation indorser may recover from the accommodated party the amount paid by him on the judgment or note. Meek v. Black, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 374.

An accommodation maker of a promissory note, who pays a judgment obtained in an action brought against him on such note, may maintain an action against the accommodated party for the amount so paid. Wheeler v. Young, 143 Mass. 143, 9 N. E. 531.

An indorser of a draft for the accommodation of the drawer cannot recover from the latter beyond what he has actually paid. Nolte v. Their Creditors, 7 Mart. N. S. 9; Dorsey v. Their Creditors, 7 Mart. N. S. 499.

And in Bonney v. Seely, 2 Wend. 481, it was held that an accommodation maker would be entitled to recover from the accommodated party only the amount actually paid, if less than the face value of the note, and not the amount extinguished by the payment.

But in Fowler v. Strickland, 107 Mass. 552, it was held that where the payee of a promissory note, who indorses the same for the accommodation of the maker, is, on maker's default, compelled to take up the note, he may, in an action on the note, recover the full face value thereof, though he paid therefor only one half the amount.

—interest.

An accommodation indorser who pays a note bearing interest at stipulated rate is entitled to recover the legal rate only from the date of maturity. Stanley v. McElrath, supra.

An accommodation acceptor of a draft bearing a special rate of interest, who is obliged to pay the same, is entitled to reimbursement of the amount of the draft with stipulated interest to date of retirement, and thereafter only legal interest. Martin v. Muncy, 40 La. Ann. 190, 3 So. 640.

—costs.

An accommodation acceptor of a draft cannot recover from the drawer costs inmencement of the suit, and was not barred by the statute of limitations. Norton v. Hall, 41 Vt. 471; Thayer v. Daniels, 110 Mass. 345; Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449, 10 L.R.A. 545, 25 Pac. 16; Hoffman v. Butler, 105 Ind. 371, 4 N. E. 681; Bullock v. Campbell, 9 Gill, 182.

It is undoubtedly the general, though not arbitrary and inflexible, rule of law that a promise by implication does not exist where the parties have made the promise express. This case, however, does not permit the application of the rule. Flint did not receive from the defendant an express promise of indemnity. The relation between them was as it would have been had the defendant, on May 12, 1900, made his note for $1,100.15, payable with interest to Daniel Griswold, and maturing August 12, 1900, and obtained at the same time from Flint his written agreement of the substance of his indorsement of the note, and delivered the note and agreement to Griswold, who advanced thereon to defendant the sum of $1,100.15. The making and indorsement of the note did not make a contract between them, because there was neither consideration nor delivery between them. The note was made payable to Flint, not because the defendant owed him, but in order that he might by his indorsement enable defendant to get the money of Griswold. The transfer of the note by defendant to Griswold did not create a contract between defendant and Flint. If Flint had desired to sue upon the note, he could, as might any other, have purchased it of Griswold, and brought his action upon it within the six years next after its maturity, but therein he would sue not as the surety, but as the assignee and owner of the obligation and indebtedness of defendant to Griswold. Pinney v. McGregor, 102 Mass. 186. As curring in defending an action brought against himself upon the bill. Beech v. Jones, 5 C. B. 696.

An accommodation indorser cannot charge the accommodated party with costs of suit, for collection of the note he has been compelled to pay. Baker v. Martin, 3 Barb. 634.

And an accommodation maker of a note who defends an action against himself without request from the accommodated party cannot recover from the latter the costs of such suit; and the court further said that even had such request been shown, the costs could not have been recovered upon common counts, but should have been specially declared upon in count upon undertaking to indemnify. Lees v. Westley, 11 U. C. Q. B. 322.

But where there is an agreement in writing to save an accommodation maker harmless, he is entitled to recover from the accommodated party costs of a suit against him in an action on the note. Bonney v. Seely, supra.

In Seaver v. Seaver, 6 Car. & P. 673, it was held that an accommodation acceptor who was obliged to pay drafts and costs of action brought thereon against him cannot recover costs, where the declaration contains only common money counts.

But in Jones v. Brooke, 4 Taunt. 464, it was held that an accommodation acceptor may recover from the drawer costs of an action against himself; and in Stratton v. Mathews, 3 Exch. 48, it was said that since the case of Jones v. Brooke, there can be no doubt that the party for whose accommodation the bill is accepted is liable not only for the amount of the bill, but also for the costs which the acceptor has been called upon to pay.

And in Garrard v. Cottrell, 10 Q. B. 679, it was held that the costs of defending an action against himself upon a bill could be recovered by an accommodation acceptor in an action against the drawer for money 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

paid, where the drawer had requested the acceptor to undertake the defense.

Materiality of payment.

A promissory note which is given by an accommodation indorser to a bank, and accepted by it in payment of a note on which he was such indorser, constitutes such a payment as entitles one to immediate right of action against the accommodated party. Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449, 10 L.R.A. 545, 25 Pac. 16.

And in Cornwall v. Gould, 4 Pick. 444, it was held that the payee and indorser who takes up the note at maturity may maintain an action for money paid against the accommodated party, though in taking up such accommodation note he gave a new note for the same; and it was further held that such indorser could resort to an implied promise although he had taken security for his indemnity, where it was not understood or agreed that such security alone should be looked to for the indemnity.

But an accommodation indorser of a note who takes up the same at maturity, by another note of like tenor, cannot maintain an action against the maker to recover the amount of the first note, where it is not shown that the second note constituted the payment of the first. Lentell v. Getchell, 59 Me. 135.

Payment of a money debt by accommodation indorser by conveying land, which is received at that time as payment, will support an action for money paid, laid out, and expended. Ainslie v. Wilson, 7 Cow. 662, 17 Am. Dec. 532.

And in Bonney v. Seely, 2 Wend. 481, it was held that the accommodation maker of a note who has to pay judgment obtained in an action against himself on the note may maintain an action against the accommodated party for money paid, though the payment of the debt was by conveyance of land instead of money. J. H. B.

surety, it was his right to pay the debt, thereby canceling the note and the liability of the defendant thereon, and then bring his action upon the implied promise, independent of the promise of the note, of the defendant to reimburse him. This was the right exercised by the plaintiff. These views in no wise conflict with the decision in Woodruff v. Moore, 8 Barb. 171. That was the case of an indorser for value of business paper. In such cases the indorsement is an independent collateral contract entered into by the indorser that he may sell the note, and no relation of principal and surety exists between him and the maker. Colgrove v. Tallman, 67 N. Y. 95, 99, 23 Am. Rep. 90. Therefore, the only obligation or contract on which he can sue the maker is that expressed in the instrument itself.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray, Haight, Vann, Werner, and Hiscock, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

CARL SOLBERG, Appt.,
v.

ROBBINS LUMBER COMPANY, Resp.

(147 Wis. 259, 133 N. W. 28.)

Appeal — possibility of erroneous statement of facts — effect.

1. Where a statute provides that no judgment shall be reversed unless it shall appear that the error complained of affected the substantial rights of the complaining party, the mere possibility that the court made a wrong statement of facts in instructing the jury does not require a reversal.

Jury — right to utilize knowledge gained in viewing premises.

2. Jurors may, in determining the credibility of evidence, utilize the knowledge which they acquired in viewing the premises where the transaction out of which the action arose occurred.

Same — right to utilize personal knowledge.

3. Jurors may, in weighing the evidence, utilize whatever personal expert knowledge they may have of the subject under consideration, and give the benefit of their knowledge to other jurors who may lack it.

(November 14, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Oneida County dismissing the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Barnes, J.:

The complaint alleged that the defendant was engaged in the business of manufacturing and dressing lumber, and that defendant had in operation in its planing mill a machine known as a "matcher," equipped with rapidly revolving knives and gearing, the frame of which was about 15 feet long and 6 feet wide, the machine being used for surfacing lumber; that 1 foot distant from the rear end of such matcher, a machine known as a "lath machine," was installed, the front end of which faced the matcher; the beds of the two machines being on a level. These machines were used conjunctively; lumber being passed from the bed of the matcher to the lath machine. The framework of the lath machine was about 5 feet long, three feet wide, and 4½ inches up and down, and the bed or frame plate attached to the top of the frame was about 3 feet from the floor. Above the frame plate were a number of small rotary saws, and immediately below, and 7 inches back of the front end of the frame plate, were two rotary saws, 9 inches in diameter, in per-

Note. — Right of jurors to act on their own knowledge.

I. Scope, 790.

II. In general.

a. General principles, 791.

b. Common knowledge, 793.

c. Private or personal knowledge, 794.

d. Influence upon verdict, 794.

III. Knowledge relating to matters not in evidence.

a. Generally, 796.

b. In criminal cases.

1. Generally, 796.

2. Character or previous conduct of accused, 797.

3. Results in former trial for present offense, 799.

c. In civil cases, 800.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

IV. Weighing evidence by knowledge as to matters adduced.

a. Generally, 801.

b. In criminal cases, 801.

c. In civil cases.

1. By concrete knowledge of physical facts, 802.

2. By application of general knowledge and experience, 803.

V. Testing credibility of particular witness.

a. Generally, 805.

b. By knowledge of the facts, 805.

c. By knowledge as to reliability of witness, 906.

I. Scope.

This question was the subject of annota-pendicular position, extending about 3½ inches below such plate. The saws were attached to an axle connected with shafting and belting propelled by steam power. For the purpose of raising and lowering these saws, there was a small wheel underneath the frame plate, to one side of and about on a line with the saws. Plaintiff began work for the defendant about November 1, 1908, and in the performance of his duties was required to operate said matcher. On the morning of November 5th, a large pile of sawdust and other mill refuse had accumulated on the floor between the matcher and the lath machine. It is alleged that it was necessary for plaintiff to oil a spindle cock underneath the matcher, and that in attempting to remove the sawdust and refuse to make room for him to crawl under the machine, as was necessary in order to accomplish his purpose, his right hand came in contact with the uncovered and unguarded lath machine saws, as a result of which plaintiff's hand was injured. The complaint further alleges violation of § 1636j, Stats. 1898, for failure to properly fence or guard the saws on said lath machine. The answer puts in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, and alleges that such injury was not caused by any negligence on the part of the defendant, but was due to negligence and want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff. By its answers to questions submitted on a special verdict, the jury found, among other things, that plain-tion in the note to 31 L.R.A. 489, and the province of the present note is to discuss only the additional cases. The discussion will be confined to the question whether the jurors, after they become such, may utilize knowledge possessed by some or all of them, and is not concerned with the question whether a juror's competency is affected by the fact that he has personal knowledge of matters pertinent to the issue. As to whether personal knowledge of facts to be proved affects the competency of a juror, see the note in 63 L.R.A. 807. As to whether an opinion gained from newspapers disqualifies a juror in a criminal case, see the note in 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 988. As to the competency of jurors who have served in the same or similar case, see the note in 68 L.R.A. 871.

And it is also to be observed that while in this note occasional reference has been made to cases stating that a juror is a competent witness, as a reason for denying him the right to use his knowledge except as a witness, no attempt has been made to treat the general and distinctive question as to the competency of jurors as witnesses.

Nor does this note go into the question of the right to act upon knowledge acquired upon a view by the jury. Generally, as to view by jury, see the note in 42 L.R.A. 368.

It remains to be noted that this note, like the earlier one in 31 L.R.A. 489, does not include the question of a juror's right to rely upon his own opinion, judgment, and experience in assessing values and damages.

As to the propriety of experiments by the jury, see the note in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 717.

As to the power of a court to disregard testimony because contrary to scientific principles, see the notes in 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 357; 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, and 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 648.

II. In general.

a. General principles.

As hereinafter shown, there is a clear distinction between an instruction which 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

permits jurors to use the knowledge and experience which they possess as intelligent men, in weighing evidence or testing its credibility, and an instruction which permits them to apply their personal knowledge and experience to the determination of the issue in the case. DeGray v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 68 N. J. L. 454, 53 Atl. 200.

For the jury is bound to determine the case upon the evidence adduced upon the trial, and it cannot be permitted to make a different case from that which it took with it to the jury room. Bohn v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. — Iowa, —, 78 N. W. 200.

They cannot base their verdict upon their own knowledge, without any reference to the testimony introduced. Doggett v. Jordan, 2 Fla. 541.

And such knowledge should not be given the weight of evidence in the case. Karrer v. Detroit, 142 Mich. 331, 106 N. W. 64.

It has been stated in general terms that the jury must be instructed that it is bound to determine the case from the evidence. Zipperian v. People, 33 Colo. 134, 79 Pac. 1018.

But, in considering and weighing the evidence, the jury may and should use the same judgment, reason, common sense, and general knowledge of men and affairs as they use in everyday life. Morrison v. State, 42 Fla. 149, 28 So. 97; Marshall v. State, 54 Fla. 66, 44 So. 742.

Circumstantial evidence is to be regarded by the jury in all cases. It is many times quite as conclusive in its convincing power as direct and positive evidence of eyewitnesses. When it is strong and satisfactory, the jury should so consider it, neither enlarging nor belittling its force. It should have its just and fair weight with the jury; and if, when it is all taken as a whole, entirely and candidly weighed, it convinces the guarded judgment, the jury should act on such conviction. The jurors are not to imagine situations or circumstances which do not appear in the evidence, but are to make those just and reasonable inferences from circumstances proved which the guarded judgment of a reasonable man would tiff knew and appreciated the danger of coming in contact with the saws, and that plaintiff, by his failure to use ordinary care, proximately contributed to produce his injury. The court ordered judgment dismissing the complaint, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

Mr. W. K. Parkinson for appellant.

Messrs. Aarons & Niven and E. D. Minahan, for respondent:

Jurors have a right to act upon their own knowledge as to that which they saw, in determining the credibility of evidence.

American States Security Co. v. Milwaukee Northern R. Co. 139 Wis. 205, 120 N. W. 844; Washburn v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 59 Wis. 364, 18 N. W. 328; ordinarily make in like circumstances. State v. Elsham, 70 Iowa, 531, 31 N. W. 66.

So, a charge that the jury should apply the same rules of good sense to the facts in evidence that they would apply to any other subject that comes under their consideration in life is not improper. If cases were to be decided alone by the application of technical rules of law and evidence, it could better be done by men who are learned in the law, and who have made it a study of their lives; and while it is entirely true that the jury is bound to receive the law from the court, and to be guided by its instructions, it by no means follows that the jury is to abdicate the common sense of its members, or to adopt any different processes of reasoning from those which guide them in the most important matters which concern themselves. Their sound common sense brought to bear upon the consideration of testimony, and in obedience to the rules laid down by the court, is the most valuable feature of the jury system, and has done more to preserve its popularity than any apprehension that a bench of judges wilfully misuse their power. Dunlop v. United States, 165 U. S. 486, 41 L. ed. 799, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375.

Indeed, to tell the jurors that they should consider the evidence in the light of the knowledge which they have obtained as men of affairs is but authorizing them to do what they could not honestly refrain from doing. Gormley v. Hartray, 105 Ill. App. 625.

And at least where there is a conflict of opinion of expert witnesses, the jury may, in judging such opinion, bring to the question the application of its own knowledge and experience. Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 33, 47 C. C. A. 367, 108 Fed. 335.

"If the juror is not to consider his personal opinion as to the facts proven, it would be interesting to know whose opinion he must consider," says the court in State v. Kremer, 34 Mont. 6, 85 Pac. 736, in upholding, in a prosecution for larceny, a refusal to charge as follows: "You are instructed that your personal opinion as to the facts

Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 16 Okla. 286, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890, 83 Pac. 903, 8 Ann. Cas. 689; State v. Maine C. R. Co. 86 Me. 312, 29 Atl. 1086; Johnson v. Boorman, 63 Wis. 274, 22 N. W. 514; Kitzinger v. Sanborn, 70 Ill. 146; Douglass v. Trask, 77 Me. 35; Johnson v. Hillstrom, 37 Minn. 122, 33 N. W. 547; Willis v. Lance, 28 Or. 380, 43 Pac. 384, 487; Head v. Hargrave, 105 U. S. 45, 26 L. ed. 1028; Patterson v. Boston, 20 Pick. 166; Murdock v. Sumner, 22 Pick. 158.

The charge as a whole was not inconsistent or misleading.

Topeka v. Martineau, 42 Kan. 387, 5 L.R.A. 775, 22 Pac. 419; Neanow v. Uttech, 46 Wis. 581, 1 N. W. 221; Stiles v. Neillsville Mill Co. 87 Wis. 266, 58 N. W. 411; proven cannot properly be considered as the basis of your verdict. You may believe as men that certain facts exist, but as jurors you can only act upon evidence introduced upon the trial, and from that, and that alone, you must form your verdict, unaided, unassisted, and uninfluenced by any opinion or presumption not framed upon the testimony."

But the mere avowal of possession of superior knowledge, stated to be capable of influencing the verdict, while reprehensible upon the part of a juror, does not constitute ground for reversal, where the nature of the facts in his possession was not disclosed to the other jurors, and it appears that the others were not influenced by such conduct. Such was the rule laid down in Irvine v. State, 104 Tenn. 132, 56 S. W. 845, where, on a trial for murder, one of the jurors stated or intimated that he was in possession of knowledge which, if he were allowed to tell it, would influence the jury against the defendant.

In Texas the question is controlled by a statute providing that a new trial shall be granted where the jury has received other testimony after having retired to deliberate upon the case. It is held that under this statute a new trial is mandatory, and certainly so where the testimony is of a material character; and that the statute applies as well to a case in which the jurors hear testimony from one of their number, as to the hearing of testimony of an outsider. Mitchell v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456; Terry v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 986; Tate v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 261, 42 S. W. 595; Holmes v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 370, 42 S. W. 996; Hardiman v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 53 S. W. 121; Favro v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 59 S. W. 885; Bloeker v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 61 S. W. 391; Blalock v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 62 S. W. 571; Buessing v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 85, 63 S. W. 318; Lankster v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373; Barnes v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 355, 65 S. W. 922; Hopkins v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 68 S. W. 986;

Pelton v. Spider Lake Sawmill & Lumber Co. 132 Wis. 233, 112 N. W. 29; Lela v. Domaske, 48 Wis. 627, 4 N. W. 794; Kelly v. Houghton, 59 Wis. 400, 18 N. W. 326; Murphy v. Martin, 58 Wis. 276, 16 N. W. 603; McCoy v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 88 Wis. 61, 59 N. W. 453; Northwestern Iron Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 26 Wis. 83; Dorsey v. Phillips & C. Constr. Co. 42 Wis. 602; Kohl v. Bradley, C. & Co. 130 Wis. 301, 110 N. W. 265; Bartell v. State, 106 Wis. 345, 82 N. W. 142; Pelitier v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 88 Wis. 530, 60 N. W. 250.

A judgment on appeal will be affirmed, unless prejudicial error not only exist, but be made affirmatively to appear.

Frank v. Mann, 106 Wis. 124, 48 L.R.A.

856, 81 N. W. 1014; Citizens' Trust Co. v. Scheffels, 141 Wis. 307, 124 N. W. 301; Hack v. State, 141 Wis. 353, 124 N. W. 492; Manny v. Glendinning, 15 Wis. 53; Gingress v. Harvey, 133 Wis. 669, 113 N. W. 1095; Wheeler v. Milner, 137 Wis. 29, 118 N. W. 187.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant insists that the court erred in giving the following instruction to the jury: "And you should consider and decide whether the plaintiff ever raised and lowered the saws in question by means of the little wheel under the lath machine table, and if you find that he did so before his injury, then you will conclude that Sims v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 70 S. W. 90; Hughes v. States, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 296, 70 S. W. 746; Hefner v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 441, 71 S. W. 964, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 682; Williams v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 240, 75 S. W. 509; McDaniel v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 77 S. W. 802; Dixon v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 154, 79 S. W. 310; Riley v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 81 S. W. 711; Crow v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 225, 82 S. W. 1033; Hambright v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 518, 84 S. W. 597; Morawitz v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 366, 91 S. W. 227; Gilford v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 275, 92 S. W. 424; Horn v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 404, 97 S. W. 822; Winslow v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 98 S. W. 241; Vanduran v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 440, 98 S. W. 247; Casey v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 433, 102 S. W. 725; Battles v. State, 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 202, 109 S. W. 195; Hill v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 646, 114 S. W. 117; Maples v. States, 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 169, 131 S. W. 567; Williamson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 136 S. W. 1071.

b. Common knowledge.

Jurors are not restricted to a consideration of facts directly proved, nor are they expected to lay aside matters of common knowledge, or their own observation and experience of the affairs of life, but, on the contrary, may give effect to such inferences as common knowledge or their personal observation and experience may reasonably draw from the facts directly proved. Dunlop v. United States, 165 U. S. 486, 41 L. ed. 799, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375; Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 33, 47 C. C. A. 367, 108 Fed. 335; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 962, 92 C. C. A. 357, 166 Fed. 663; Sloss-Sheffield Steel & I. Co. v. Hutchinson, 144 Ala. 221, 40 So. 114; Baker v. Borello, 136 Cal. 160, 68 Pac. 591; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Warring, 37 Colo. 122, 86 Pac. 305; Morrison v. State, 42 Fla. 149, 28 So. 97; Marshall v. State, 54 Fla. 66, 44 So. 742; Jenney Elec. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

trac Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 33 L.R.A. 395, 41 N. E. 448; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Cregor, 150 Ind. 625, 50 N. E. 760; Renard v. Grande, 29 Ind. App. 579, 64 N. E. 644; State v. Elsham, 70 Iowa, 531, 31 N. W. 66; Purcell v. Tibbles, 101 Iowa, 24, 69 N. W. 1120; Missouri River R. Co. v. Richards, 8 Kan. 101; Craver v. Hornburg, 26 Kan. 94; Sanford v. Gates, 38 Kan. 405, 16 Pac. 807; Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. Summers, 75 Kan. 342, 89 Pac. 652; McGarrahan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 211, 50 N. E. 610; Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84, 41 L.R.A. 381, 72 Am. St. Rep. 553, 75 N. W. 288; State v. Kremer, 34 Mont. 6, 85 Pac. 736; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 65 Neb. 880, 59 L.R.A. 920, 21 N. W. 880; Jenkins v. Southern R. Co. 146 N. C. 178, 59 S. E. 663; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deaelms, 18 Okla. 107, 89 Pac. 212; Willis v. Lance, 28 Or. 371, 43 Pac. 384, 487; State v. Bjelkstrom, 20 S. D. 1, 104 N. W. 481; Merrill v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 468; Diastell v. Henry Luther Co. 90 Wis. 635, 64 N. W. 425.

So far as the matter in question is one upon which men in general have a common fund of knowledge and experience, the analogy of judicial notice obtains to some extent, and the jury are allowed to resort to this possession in making up their minds. But the scope of this doctrine is narrow and should be strictly limited to a few matters of elemental experience in human nature, commercial affairs, and everyday life. Jenkins v. Southern R. Co. 146 N. C. 178, 59 S. E. 663.

And the knowledge to which they may resort is that which comes from the common experience of mankind, and is the knowledge that men in general have, not a few in particular; if it is knowledge that comes by the experience of a class in a particular business, it must be proved by evidence. Bowman v. American Car & Foundry Co. 226 Mo. 53, 125 S. W. 1120; Craver v. Hornburg, 26 Kan. 94.

And they cannot act upon knowledge which is common merely to themselves. Clark v. Ford, 7 Kan. App. 332, 51 Pac. 938.

he must have seen the saws and known that they were not covered, and in that event you should take that into consideration." The fault found with the instruction is that the court assumed that it was an established and undisputed fact in the case that the plaintiff must have seen the saws of the lath machine and have known that they were not guarded, if he raised these saws by means of the wheel under the table of the machine; where as the jury would be warranted in reaching a contrary conclusion on the evidence.

A reading of the testimony does not throw any satisfactory light on the question, as very little of it pertains to the point, and that only in an incidental way. In fact, there does not appear to have been much of a controversy upon the question on the trial. A photograph showing the wheel and the projection of the saws under the table of the lath machine, as well as the absence of a guard, was in evidence. Respondent argues that this photograph shows to a demonstration that the court was right. The trial judge, in his opinion on the motion for a new trial, stated that it was perfectly obvious from an inspection of the photograph that it was impossible to look for and find the little wheel under the lath machine table, by means of which the saws were raised and lowered, and which was located within a few inches of the saws, without seeing the saws and observing that they were unguarded. The conclusion of this court is Nor can they return a verdict upon common knowledge or experience unsupported by other evidence, or in disregard of other evidence. Seaverns v. Lischinski, 181 Ill. 358, 54 N. E. 1043; Hancock v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 145 Ill. App. 491; Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. 106 Mich. 582, 29 L.R.A. 468, 64 N. W. 501; De Gray v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 68 N. J. L. 454, 53 Atl. 200.

To render improper, arguments and deductions based on common knowledge or experience, it must clearly appear that the verdict was based upon them rather than upon a full and fair consideration of the evidence adduced. Purcell v. Tibbles, 101 Iowa, 24, 69 N. W. 1120.

c. Private or personal knowledge.

The jurors cannot act upon private or personal knowledge of one or more of their number, to the prejudice of one of the parties. State v. Wright, 98 Iowa, 702, 68 N. W. 440; Douglass v. Agne, 125 Iowa, 67, 99 N. W. 550; Hydinger v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 126 Iowa, 222, 101 N. W. 746; Missouri River R. Co. v. Richards, 8 Kan. 101; Union P. R. Co. v. Shannon, 33 Kan. 446, 6 Pac. 564; State v. Lowe, 67 Kan. 183, 72 Pac. 524, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 693; State v. Duncan, 70 Kan. 883, 78 Pac. 427; State v. Beam, 1 Kan. App. 688, 42 Pac. 394; Craver v. Hornburg, 26 Kan. 94; Bowman v. American Car & Foundry Co. 226 Mo. 53, 125 S. W. 1120; Ewing v. Hoppine, 65 Neb. 131, 75 N. W. 537; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 65 Neb. 889, 59 L.R.A. 920, 21 N. W. 880; Falls City v. Sperry, 68 Neb. 420, 94 N. W. 529, 4 Ann. Cas. 272; DeGray v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 68 N. J. L. 454, 53 Atl. 200; State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296; Ryan v. State, 97 Tenn. 206, 36 S. W. 930; Forsyth v. Central Mfg. Co. 103 Tenn. 497, 53 S. W. 731; Jackson & Suburban Street R. Co. v. Simmons, 107 Tenn. 392, 64 S. E. 705; State v. Parker, 25 Wash. 405, 65 Pac. 776; State v. Lorenzy, 69 Wash. 308, 109 Pac. 1064; Johnson v. Superior Rapid Transit R. Co. 91 Wis. 233, 64 S. W. 753; Northern Sup- ply Co. v. Wangard, 123 Wis. 1, 107 Am. St. Rep. 984, 100 N. W. 1066.

No juror has a right to give evidence in the jury room of material facts particularly or peculiarly within his personal knowledge. Hathaway v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 97 Iowa, 747, 66 N. W. 892.

Indeed, it is held that a juror can neither consider any fact material to the issue, which comes within his personal knowledge, nor can he communicate it to the other jurors, without being in contempt of court and violating his solemn oath. State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296.

For the province of the jury is to determine a case upon the facts as proved, in connection with the law as given them in the charge by the court; and the jurors should never let their own impressions derived from knowledge of circumstances on their own part, or impressions received from others not introduced as witnesses, to sway their minds or enter into their verdict. Simms v. Price, Dallam (Tex.) 554.

So, an instruction authorizing the jury, in arriving at a verdict, to bring to bear their own knowledge, observation, and experience in the business affairs of life, is erroneous when not limited to such knowledge, observation, and experience as they share in common with men generally, since without such limitation the jurors may fairly infer that they are required to bring to bear any special knowledge which they have on the subject, or which is the result of their special observation and experience in like cases. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 65 Neb. 889, 59 L.R.A. 920, 91 N. W. 880.

And it is held error to instruct the jury that they may use their observation and experience in life in order to arrive at the truth, since they may apply only their common observation and experience, or, in other words, the experience and observation common to ordinary men. Gloss-Sheffield Steel & I. Co. v. Hutchinson, 144 Ala. 221, 40 So. 114.

d. Influence upon verdict.

The successful party ought not to be de-that it is highly improbable that the plaintiff did not see the saws during the operation, but that it is not an impossibility. The questions therefore are: Does the record show that the court erred, and, if so, was the error prejudicial?

Some significance should be attached to the fact that plaintiff's counsel did not in any way call the attention of the court to the alleged misapprehension of the facts, as we think is customary, though perhaps not obligatory. Trial courts are uniformly careful not to invade the province of the jury in determining questions of fact, and if the court's attention had been called to the alleged error, it would undoubtedly have been corrected, if error it was.

The court and the jury viewed the premises and the machines in question. The knowledge which jurors acquired from such view they had the right to use in determining the credibility of the evidence offered. Washburn v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 59 Wis. 364, 368, 18 N. W. 328; Neilson v. Chicago, M. & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 516, 523, 17 N. W. 310; Johnson v. Boorman, 63 Wis. 268, 22 N. W. 514; American States Security Co. v. Milwaukee Northern R. Co. 139 Wis. 199, 205, 120 N. W. 844, and cases cited. This being so, they had the right to use such knowledge in determining whether the court made a correct statement of fact. We have no means of knowing just what knowledge the jury imbibed from this view. The jurors might have reached a different conclusion from that arrived at by the feated simply because jurors engage in unnecessary or improper discussion, and a verdict should be set aside where and only where, it appears that it is a result of such misconduct, and that but for the misconduct the verdict would not have been reached. Montgomery v. Hanson, 122 Iowa, 222, 97 N. W. 1081.

The rule is that jurors must base their findings upon the evidence adduced on the trial, and may not make an inspection of the locus in quo, unless a view is authorized by the trial court. If a juror of his own accord, and without permission, visits and makes an inspection of the premises or thing in dispute, it may be a sufficient cause for vacating the verdict, although it will not have that effect if it is plain that such examination was not influential in obtaining the verdict. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Oyster, 58 Neb. 1, 78 N. W. 359.

But the mere statement of the jurors that they were not influenced by statements improperly made by one of their number does not prevent a reversal; it is enough that the matters were such as were calculated to influence the jury. Jackson & Suburban Street R. Co. v. Simmons, 107 Tenn. 392, 64 S. W. 705.

Where the facts wrongfully introduced are calculated to have a powerful effect upon the jurors in reaching their verdict, they cannot forestall the impeachment of the verdict by affidavits that they found their verdict upon the law and the evidence, and were not influenced by any outside pressure. Mitchell v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456.

So, where the statement, although it would not have been admissible in evidence, goes directly to the character of the accused and the very point in issue, and its effect cannot but be prejudicial to him, it is not necessary that the affidavits filed in support of a new trial show actual prejudice. Terry v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 986.

For, the statement of jurors that they were not influenced by the consideration of extraneous matters is so fraught with speculation and caprice that it cannot be 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

made the basis of holding that a fair trial was given, and especially where it appears that the jury, before the matter was discussed, were half in favor of acquittal and half in favor of conviction, and that those who made the statements as a predicate for conviction were themselves insisting upon conviction. Hughes v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 296, 70 S. W. 746.

Indeed, it has been said that such an affidavit is to be expected from jurors to justify themselves for their own misconduct, and to escape a responsibility imposed upon them by their oath. Mitchell v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 318, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 463; Lankster v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373.

So, the fact that, after the improper statements were made by a jury, its attitude changed from a majority for acquittal to a unanimous verdict of conviction, sufficiently shows in itself the pernicious effect of the statements to warrant a reversal, notwithstanding the affidavits of the jurors that they were not unduly influenced. Mitchell v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456.

For, as said in State v. Burton, 65 Kan. 704, 70 Pac. 640, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 688, although the jurors may testify that they were not affected by the statement, this is only because jurors will generally hold to the opinion, and honestly too, that they are not prejudiced by improper influences; and the courts must be vigilant not only when palpable influences have been improperly brought to bear, but also when the influence is such that it will be reasonably supposed to have influenced unconsciously if not consciously, the deliberations of the jury.

Or, as it has been well said, it is not for the juror to say what effect the remarks had upon the verdict; but he may state the facts, and from them the court will determine what was the probable effect upon the verdict. State v. Parker, 25 Wash. 405, 65 Pac. 776; Marvin v. Yates, 26 Wash. 50, 66 Pac. 131; State v. Lorenzy, 59 Wash. 308, 109 Pac. 1064.

Certainly, the affidavits of only two jucourt, and might have disregarded his mistake entirely in arriving at a verdict, if any mistake was in fact made.

Section 3072m, Stat. (Laws of 1909, chap. 192), provides: "No judgment shall be reversed . . . on the ground of misdirection of the jury, . . . unless in the opinion of the court to which the application is made, after an examination of the entire action, . . . it shall appear that the error complained of has affected the substantial rights of the party seeking to reverse or set aside the judgment."

After examining the record, this court is far from being satisfied that the trial court committed any error. The evidence offered, as far as there is any, strongly tends to support the conclusion of the trial court, rors that they were not influenced by the statement are insufficient to show that the verdict was not thereby affected. Hardiman v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 53 S. W. 121.

III. Knowledge relating to matters not in evidence.

a. Generally.

It is held that jurors may act upon matters of common observation within their general knowledge, even though there be no testimony as to such matters. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 18 Okla. 107, 89 Pac. 212.

And the finding of a jury in respect of matters as to which men of ordinary knowledge and observation have some practical knowledge cannot be attacked on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain it, merely because of the lack of expert testimony on the subject, since on such matters jurors are capable of forming their own opinions, though they might be assisted by the opinions of competent experts. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 962, 92 C. C. A. 357, 166 Fed. 663.

The extraneous matter introduced by jurors into the consideration of their verdict, which will overthrow the verdict, must be statements of prejudicial matters of fact outside the evidence, based upon the personal knowledge or claimed personal knowledge of the juror making the statements, which, from the nature of the statements made, the jury may accept as evidence of the fact asserted, and not as the mere expression of opinion by the juror. Hulett v. Hancock, 66 Kan. 519, 72 Pac. 224.

Where something is lacking in the evidence, the jury cannot supply it, and return a verdict upon its own knowledge unsupported by other evidence, whether such knowledge is acquired in or out of court, by a view or otherwise; and a verdict based exclusively on knowledge so acquired will be set aside for want of substantial evidence to support it. Seaverns v. Lischinski, 181 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and there is no evidence to the contrary. There is, of course, the possibility that the trial court was wrong; but this falls far short of an affirmative showing of prejudicial error, or in fact of any error. Under such circumstances, the judgment should not be reversed. Wiese v. Riley, 146 Wis. 640, 132 N. W. 604.

After the jury had been deliberating for some time, they were called into the court room, and the following colloquy took place: "A juror: A question we want to know was this: I asked you the other day if, in deciding this question, jurors were supposed to take into consideration the things in regard to this,—in case they positively know this from experience. For instance, if one has, to use a hypothetical Ill. 358, 54 N. E. 1043; Hancock v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 145 Ill. App. 491.

So, a charge which authorizes the jury to call to its aid whatever of experience and observation its members may have had in the matters under consideration is reversible error, in that under it the jury might decide the case upon matters of fact not brought to the attention of the court, parties, or counsel. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Spring Hill Cemetery Assn. 9 Kan. App. 882, 57 Pac. 252.

As shown under another subdivision of this note, the question is governed in Texas by a statute providing that a new trial shall be granted where the jury has received other testimony after retiring to deliberate upon the case. As shown under that subdivision, it is held that this statute does not simply authorize, but requires, a reversal, at least where the statements by a juror are material and essentially prejudicial. This statute should be kept in mind in surveying the Texas cases in this subdivision.

b. In criminal cases.

1. Generally.

It is improper for the jury to consider extraneous matters concerning the bad reputation of the accused's family, which would not have been admissible in evidence. Gilford v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 275, 92 S. W. 424.

So, a conviction for homicide will be set aside where one juror stated that a light penalty would be insufficient, since, when the defendant should have served out the short term imposed, he would not be as old as his father when he got out of prison, and called attention to what the father had done upon his release, having reference to a homicide thereafter committed by him; and it also appears that jurors who had previously been in favor of light sentence agreed to a term of twenty-five years. McDaniel v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 77 S. W. 802.

Where the defense to a prosecution for burglary is that the accused went into the case, if he is an expert, is the juror supposed to use the information that he knows in regard to that, in weighing this evidence and convincing other jurors as to the facts of the case? The Court: I understand your question, I think. It is usual to instruct a jury in some cases that they are expected to use all of the knowledge, skill, and judgment that they possess, and bring that to bear upon questions involved. A juror who has expert knowledge—that is, personal, not hearsay—is entitled to bring that to bear in assisting him and in assisting the other jurors in arriving at a right verdict. In fact, it is impossible to separate a juror from his personal knowledge anyway, and he is expected to use that. That is part of his mental equipment in discharging his duty. The juror: In this case, it has developed there are several that understand the construction of these machines. We can't very well separate from— The Court: You are not required to separate that knowledge from anything else. You are entitled to use it."

It is argued that the court committed prejudicial error in that the jury were advised that they might return a verdict upon their knowledge, or supposed knowledge, not derived from the evidence in the case. The language used by the court was not happy, in that there is a possibility that it might have misled the jury into the belief that they were at liberty to treat their knowledge as evidence, and decide the case upon such knowledge, rather than upon the building to wait for a train, and, after the retirement of the jury, one of its members states that the accused could not have been waiting for a train "because I lived out that way, and the train does not stop at said mill," a conviction will be set aside, no evidence having been introduced upon the point involved in the statement. Dixon v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 154, 79 S. W. 310.

So, prejudicial error warranting the reversal of a conviction for homicide occurs when, during the deliberations of the jury in the consideration of the necessity for killing the deceased, so as to justify the homicide, one juror states that the deceased was nothing but a bluffer and would not have hurt anyone, and other jurors state that the defendant was found guilty of murder in the first degree on the first trial, and that there was no reason why a different verdict should then be rendered, and that everyone in the vicinity believed the defendant to be guilty of murder in the first degree. State v. Burton, 65 Kan. 704, 70 Pac. 640, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 688.

And a conviction of larceny will be reversed where one of the jurors, during the discussion as to whether the prosecutor had possession and ownership of the property, stated that he knew of a similar case in which the accused was convicted. Barnes v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 355, 65 S. W. 922.

2. Character or previous conduct of accused.

The statement by some of the jurors in a homicide case after their retirement for deliberation, that the accused killed another man some time previously, while highly improper, is not reversible error, where it appears that the matter was mentioned but once, and was then suppressed by the foremen, and that the jurors were not influenced by it. Moore v. People, 26 Colo. 213, 57 Pac. 857.

So, where the defendant in a prosecution for forgery has not been prejudiced, his conviction will not be reversed merely because some of the jurors during their deliberations stated, apparently for the purpose of influencing the only juror who stood for acquittal, that the defendant had been caught with a woman or women in a certain block, that he had been in numerous "scrapes," that he was generally crooked, and that he was a bad man generally, and ought to be convicted. State v. Olds, 106 Iowa, 110, 76 N. W. 644.
37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

But a conviction for larceny will be set aside where, during the jury's deliberations, one juror, notwithstanding his declaration on his voir dire that he had no knowledge of the case nor prejudice which would prevent him from giving the defendant a fair trial, stated to the jury that the accused was guilty of another offense; that he had shot a man at one time, and that it had cost the county $2,800; that he was a bad man, who should not be turned loose, but should be convicted,—when considered in connection with similar statements which he pressed upon the jurors as arguments in favor of conviction. State v. Lowe, 67 Kan. 183, 72 Pac. 524, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 693.

But a conviction of homicide will be set aside where one juror stated in the presence of several of the others, that he was a member of a grand jury which had indicted the defendant for an attempt to commit murder upon another person by going up behind him and hitting him with a heavy wrench, and that the prosecution for that offense was still pending in the criminal court; and the juror stated at another time that the defendant was a dangerous man to the community, or words to that effect. And such misconduct is not less serious because it was not made after the jury retired to consider the verdict, but was casually made some time during the progress of the trial,—not when the jurors were discussing the question of guilt or innocence of the defendant, but when the offending juror was reciting to his fellows the reason for his not wishing to serve upon the jury; nor is it less a cause for reversal, because it was not heard by all of the jurors, or because the jurors other than the one making the statement were examined, and without exception testimony, and even in opposition thereto. This they might not do. Washburn v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 59 Wis. 364, 370, 18 N. W. 328; Johnson v. Boorman, 63 Wis. 268, 22 N. W. 514; Sherman v. Menominee River Lumber Co. 77 Wis. 14, 22, 45 N. W. 1079. The court told the jury at the beginning of its charge: "It is your duty to answer these questions according to the fact in each instance, as you shall find the fact to be from the evidence given here in court. . . . In deciding these questions, you should confine your consideration to the evidence given here in court and the proceedings had here in your presence." As to each of the questions propounded to the jury, they were told in substance to answer them according to the preponderance of the evidence. The charge repeatedly informed the jury that the case must be decided upon the evidence given on the trial. The juror who asked the question above quoted undoubtedly so understood the charge, because he did not ask if the jurors might use their special knowledge as evidence, but if the jurors might consider such knowledge in weighing the testimony offered by the parties.

In view of the repeated statements of the court above referred to, we think the jury would construe the somewhat ambiguous language of the court as no more than an affirmative answer to the question asked, and as informing them that they might use the knowledge which they had gained from observation and experience in testified that the statement did not in the least affect their opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. Ryan v. State, 97 Tenn. 206, 36 S. W. 930.

So, a conviction for homicide will be reversed where it appears that one or two jurors stated, after the jury's retirement, that the accused had previously killed another man, and made other statements tending to show that the accused and other members of his family were dangerous characters,—and especially where it appears that after such statements were made the attitude of the jury changed from a majority in favor of acquittal to a unanimous verdict of conviction. Mitchell v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456.

And a conviction of homicide will be reversed where, after the jurors had determined the guilt of the accused, and while they were trying to fix the punishment, one of the jurors stated that this was not the first man the defendant had killed, and that if the deceased's dying declarations had been admitted in evidence, the jurors would have known why the deceased had previously gone to the penitentiary, the latter remark having reference to a case in which the defendant and the deceased had previously been indicted for murder, and in which the former was acquitted and the latter convicted. Blocker v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 61 S. W. 391.

So, a reversal will be granted where, in a prosecution for the stealing of a calf, a member of the jury states, after his retirement, that he knows the accused, and that he is in the habit of stealing calves. Terry v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 986.

And the statement of a juror on a trial for bribery, that the defendant had been previously convicted of arson, when taken in connection with comments upon the failure of the defendant to testify, is sufficient to warrant a reversal, where its probable effect was to influence the minds of the jurors, and there was no evidence in the case as to the conviction for arson. Maples 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. State, 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 169, 131 S. W. 567.

And a conviction for theft will be reversed where, before a verdict is reached, two of the jurors state that the defendant is the biggest rogue they have ever seen or heard of, that she ought to be hung, and that they would be willing to hang her if the law would permit it; and one of such jurors enumerates several instances of theft by the defendant, and both of such jurors alone stood for the maximum penalty for a considerable time. Holmes v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 370, 42 S. W. 996.

The statement by two members of a jury in a burglary case, that the defendant had previously been in the penitentiary, when considered together with the fact that before the statement was made some of the jury were in favor of assessing a minimum penalty whereas a longer sentence was afterwards agreed upon, cannot be said not to have influenced the jury so as to warrant the denial of a new trial. Hardiman v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 53 S. W. 121.

And where, during the jury's deliberation in a burglary case, one juror states that he does not like the defendant's morals, and intimates that he is connected with a gang of thieves, a conviction will be set aside; and especially so where it appears that before the statement, the jury stood seven for acquittal and five for conviction. Crow v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 225, 82 S. W. 1033.

So, a conviction for rape will be set aside, where, after the jury had retired, some of its members mentioned the fact that the accused had just been convicted of a similar offense, and, although the foreman suppressed any discussion of the matter, it was repeatedly brought up and alluded to by the members of the jury, there being no evidence in the case as to the prior offense. Hopkins v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 58 S. W. 986.

And a conviction of rape will be set aside, where, in assessing the punishment, a juror referred to certain acts and state-determining the credibility of the evidence. What the juror said in effect was that he and some of his fellow jurors had practical knowledge of the construction of lath machines, not common to all the panel. The language used by the court was certainly no more calculated to mislead than the charge which was held not to be erroneous in Neanow v. Uttech, 46 Wis. 581, 586, 1 N. W. 221. There the court instructed as follows: "You are to bring to bear upon this question [the exercise of ordinary care] your own knowledge and your own judgment. It is for you to examine all the testimony, all the surroundings, all the circumstances, and then apply your own judgment, your own good sense, and answer the question, either in the negative or the affirmative."

There was no assertion that the jurors had any knowledge of the specific facts in the case on trial, and nothing to indicate that the juror who asked the question, or any of his associates, was a competent witness, rather than a qualified juror. It is well settled that jurors cannot supply a material item of evidence by assuming knowledge on the subject. It is just as well settled that it is highly improper for a juror to assert in the jury room knowledge on some specific point involved in the trial which would make him a material witness. If use is to be made of such knowledge, it should be given under oath from the witness stand, where the party adversely af-ments not in evidence, tending to show that the defendant was inclined to commit and did commit sexual improprieties. Sims v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 70 S. W. 90.

And a conviction for violation of the liquor law will be reversed, where it was stated in the jury room that the "defendant had been keeping his sister-in-law," and some of the jurors stated that the defendant had bought an interest in a certain drug store for the purpose of selling liquor, and that liquor was sold in such store everyday, none of these things having any basis in the evidence adduced. Williamson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 136 S. W. 1071.

And there is such misconduct as warrants a new trial, where a juror who, on his voir dire examination, states that he does not know the accused, that he has not heard of the case or the defendant, and that he is free from bias or prejudice, declares, after the retirement of the jury, that he knows the accused to be equally guilty with his codefendant, because both were members of a gang of toughs who had occupied a shack in which a man had been murdered, and that the defendants had been implicated in the killing. State v. Parker, 25 Wash. 405, 65 Pac. 776.

And where there was no evidence concerning the character of the accused, but one of the jurors stated that he was a bad man, and had been on the county convict farm, and that he, the juror, had guarded on that farm, and it appears that the punishment was assessed at a greater period than the jury was inclined to impose before the statement was made,—the conviction will be set aside. Vanduran v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 440, 98 S. W. 247.

3. Results in former trial for present offense.

It is error for the court, on a motion for a new trial of one convicted of false pretenses, to refuse to hear evidence that during the jury's deliberation, one juror stated that the accused had been convicted 57 L.R.A.(N.S.)

upon a former trial, and that another juror stated as a fact that the accused had some time previously defrauded another out of property. State v. McCormick, 57 Kan. 440, 57 Am. St. Rep. 341, 46 Pac. 777.

And a conviction of homicide will be reversed, where it appears that after the jury had agreed on a verdict of guilty, but before they had decided on the punishment to be assessed, one of the jurors mentioned the fact in the presence of the jury that the accused had been tried twice before, and the first jury gave him twenty-five years, and the second fifteen years, in the penitentiary. Lankster v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 65 S. W. 373.

So, a conviction for homicide will be set aside, where jurors in favor of conviction stated that two former convictions had been reversed, and that the people were expecting a verdict corresponding with the former verdict, even where the jurors make affidavit that they were not influenced by such statements, and expressly refused to consider them, and although their affidavits find some support in the fact that the juries on the former trial assessed the punishment at twenty-five and twenty-one years respectively, whereas the jury whose acts are complained of imposed a sentence of only three and one-half years. Hughes v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 296, 70 S. W. 746.

And a conviction will be set aside, where, in assessing the punishment, one juror asks what sentence the defendant got on a former trial, and another answers that it was fifteen years, and then a similar verdict is rendered. Hefner v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 441, 71 S. W. 964, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 682.

This is so because evidence of the fact would not have been admissible upon the trial. Morawitz v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 366, 91 S. W. 227.

And the discussion of the matter of the penalty awarded on a former verdict will be ground for setting aside a conviction, even though it does not seem to have any influence, by reason of the fact that a less term of imprisonment was imposed than fectured would have the right of cross-examination.

So we think the real question here is, May one or more jurors use the knowledge which they have gained from observation and experience, not common to all the jurors, in determining the credibility of the evidence offered, and give the benefit of such knowledge to their fellow jurors who may lack such information? Lawyers know that jurors always have and always will do just what we think the court in effect said might be done here, and it is difficult to see how they could well do otherwise. If a juror knows that a plaintiff in an action is a man of character and standing, whose word is as good as his bond in the community in which he lives, and that the defendant is shift, tricky, untruthful, and unreliable, and a question of veracity arises between the two, it is well-nigh impossible for him to remain oblivious to the facts which he knows, when he is determining the question of credibility. So, too, when one witness testifies to something which the observation and experience of the juror tells him is false, while another witness has testified in reference to the same matter to what he knows to be the truth, it is difficult to imagine how a juror could disregard what he knows, in passing upon the credibility of the witnesses. If he could do it, it is not desirable that he should, because that knowledge is part of the equipment which he brings with him to the jury box. A person is not supposed to forget everything that he ever by the former verdict; but the rule which inhibits any sort of discussion by members of the jury in the jury room of the former verdict should be rigidly adhered to, and it cannot be said absolutely that, notwithstanding the verdict for a lesser term than was imposed by the former verdict, the fact of the former conviction could not have had some influence with the members of the jury. Casey v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 433, 102 S. W. 725.

A fortiori a new trial will be granted, where it appears that the jurors used a verdict in a prior trial as an actual predicate for their own verdict, and that the jurors alluded to the defendant's failure to testify, and, after one juror had suggested that the previous verdict was twenty years, another suggested it would not do to make the verdict the same, whereupon they rendered a verdict of twenty-one years. Hill v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 646, 114 S. W. 117.

But the Texas court holds that a reversal will not be granted for mere comment upon the fact of a former conviction, where the comment gives the jurors no information which they did not possess when they became jurors, and which knowledge they avowed before they were accepted as such. Oates v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 571, 121 S. W. 370.

The considerations which forbid a discussion of the nature of the verdict and the extent of the penalty on a former trial of the accused make it reversible error for the jurors to consider the nature of the verdict and the extent of the penalty against the accused's codefendant. Horn v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 404, 97 S. W. 822.

c. In civil cases.

A reversal will be granted where the case is prejudiced by jurors' statements in the jury room of facts within their knowledge with reference to the issues, and by the fact that outsiders talked and argued the case in the presence of the jurors or some of them. Hydinger v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 126 Iowa, 222, 101 N. W. 746. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And a verdict will be set aside, where one juror stated to the others that the defendant had, as a compromise, offered to give the plaintiff employment for a certain period at a certain rate, and that, on a former mistrial of the case, ten of the jurors had favored awarding the plaintiff $8,000 damages, one $1,500, and the other had favored no damages; and especially where it appears that one of the jurors on the subsequent trial, who had favored a verdict for $500, agreed after such remark to a verdict for $2,500. Jackson & Suburban Street R. Co. v. Simmons, 107 Tenn. 392, 64 S. W. 705.

So, a verdict for the defendant in an action to recover for injuries to a minor son is vitiated by the fact that it was induced by a statement of some of the members of the jury during its deliberations, that the child had already recovered for the injuries. Forsyth v. Central Mfg. Co. 103 Tenn. 497, 53 S. W. 731.

But in Hulett v. Hancock, 66 Kan. 519, 72 Pac. 224, it was held that where, on a motion for a new trial of an action between lender and borrower, in which the question of usury was not an issue, it appears that one member of the jury said, after its retirement, that the lender's original investment in the claim was probably very small, and that most of it represented usury, and another juror stated that when a man against whom the lender held a note died, it usually turned up for more than the amount for which it was originally executed, and other jurors stated that if injustice was to be done to either party, it would be best to find against the lender, as he was well able to appeal, while the borrower was not, as she was poor,—the verdict for the borrower would not be set aside, since the statements of the juror, while in their nature prejudicial, and not properly made in the jury room, were more in the nature of expressions of opinions of the jurors making them, than positive statements of fact within their knowledge, or claimed to be within their knowledge, especially where the trial court had passed upon the matter and upheld the verdict.

knew, and become an automaton, when he is sworn as a juror. He may make use of the intelligence with which he is endowed, and the knowledge he has gained, for the legitimate purpose of passing upon the credibility of the evidence.

It is said in the discussion of the first error assigned that jurors may use the knowledge which they acquire from a view of the locus in quo in passing upon the credibility of evidence, and the proposition is well settled by the cases cited and referred to. Knowledge gained in this way is no more sacred than knowledge acquired in some other way, provided it is actually acquired. It is proper for trial courts to instruct juries that in weighing testimony they must take into consideration their knowledge, observation, and experience. Such an instruction has been approved by this court. Johnson v. Boorman, 63 Wis. 268, 274, 275, 22 N. W. 514. Juries are frequently and properly told that in determining the credibility of the testimony, they may consider the appearances of witnesses on the stand, the manner in which they give their testimony, and the candor or lack of candor with which it is given. So, too, it has been held proper to instruct a jury in a personal injury action brought by a minor, that they might consider the plaintiff, as he had been exhibited before them on the witness stand, in determining the question of his intelligence and capacity to apprehend and avoid the dangers incidental to his employment. Disotell v.

The custom of using coal oil in kindling fires being a matter of common knowledge and observation, it is proper to instruct the jury in an action for injuries resulting from the sale of oil below standard, although there is no evidence on the matter, that they may determine whether the use of coal oil to kindle fires is a usage or custom so general and universal as to be a part of the general knowledge and experience of persons of average intelligence and experience, and whether the defendant at the time he sold oil had reason to believe it might be used for that purpose. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 18 Okla. 107, 89 Pac. 212.

IV. Weighing evidence by knowledge as to matters adduced.

a. Generally.

Jurors are not artificial beings governed by artificial or fine spun rules; but they should bring to the consideration of the evidence before them their everyday common sense and judgment as reasonable men; and they as jurors should draw and act upon the same just and reasonable inferences and deductions which they as men would ordinarily draw from facts and circumstances proved in the case. State v. Elsham, 70 Iowa, 531, 31 N. W. 66.

They are not expected to lay aside matters of common knowledge, or their own observation and experience of the affairs of life, but on the contrary, they are supposed to apply them to the evidence or facts in hand, to the end that their action may be intelligent and their conclusions correct. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 962, 92 C. C. A. 357, 166 Fed. 663.

Indeed, in weighing evidence, they always exercise their judgment in the light of their own general knowledge of the subject in hand, whether instructed to do so or not, and therefore neither an instruction, nor a refusal to instruct, that they may use that knowledge in weighing the evidence, is error. Baker v. Borello, 136 Cal. 160, 68 Pac. 591.

And an instruction that the jurors have the right in elucidating or explaining the testimony and arriving at their verdict, to take into consideration any knowledge which they may have which is common to mankind generally, touching the matters testified about, is not open to the objection that it authorizes the jury to go beyond the evidence. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Waring, 37 Colo. 122, 86 Pac. 305.

But if a juror has personal knowledge respecting matters in issue in the cause, he should make the same known during the trial, and testify as a witness in the case, for it is for the court to say what evidence is admissible in a case, and the adverse party may desire to cross-examine him; and in any event, it is the jury's duty to be governed by the evidence introduced on the trial, and by the instructions of the court. Ewing v. Hoffine, 55 Neb. 131, 75 N. W. 537.

However, a reversal will not be ordered where the personal knowledge was not so closely related to the subject under consideration as to justify the court in thinking that substantial prejudice resulted from its communication to the jury. Karner v. Kansas City Elev. R. Co. 82 Kan. 842, 109 Pac. 676.

b. In criminal cases.

Where one charged with perjury concerning a certain occurrence defends upon the ground that he was so drunk at the time of the occurrence that he could not remember what happened, and a juror, during the deliberation on the case, states that he met the defendant the day following the occurrence, and that his mind and general appearance seemed to be all right, a verdict of guilty will be reversed. Hambricht v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 518, 84 S. W. 597.

And a conviction for assault with intent to murder, alleged to have been committed upon the defendant's wife, will be reversed, where it appears that some of the jurors stated that the defendant was not the Henry Luther Co. 90 Wis. 635, 64 N. W. 425. In fact, cases in this court, and generally elsewhere, are to the effect that jurors may use common knowledge in deciding the weight that is to be accorded to the evidence adduced.

There is authority for the proposition that the knowledge which a juror may use in enabling him to pass upon the credibility of testimony must be knowledge that is common to all the jurors, and an obiter expression, in Northern Supply Co. v. Wan- gard, 123 Wis. 1, 107 Am. St. Rep. 984, 100 N. W. 1066, might well be understood as so holding. This would seem to be a narrow rule, if not an unwise one. The knowledge which men acquire in the rugged school of experience is a valuable asset to them, when they are called upon to perform jury duty. If there is a conflict in evidence pertaining to some fact upon which a farmer has acquired knowledge by his experience, which is not common to the general run of mankind, but which enables him father of the wife's child, as the child had been born at a certain time, and the defendant was in the penitentiary at that time and previously, and such statements were considered by the jury for the purpose of weighing the defense that the defendant did not call upon his wife for the purpose of committing the assault, but for the purpose of seeing his child. Favro v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 59 S. W. 885.

And a conviction will be reversed where, in connection with the question whether or not certain footprints were those of the defendant or a third person who lived in the neighborhood, one or two jurors who were familiar with the location explained to the others the location of the third person's house with reference to the prosecutor's and the accused's, and drew a plat of the surroundings for the purpose of showing that the tracks could not have been made by the third person in the route he traveled, no evidence having been introduced with respect thereto. Buessing v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 85, 63 S. W. 318.

But the making of a map from personal knowledge and memory will not warrant a reversal, where it had no effect upon the verdict. Makey v. Dryden, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 128 S. W. 633.

And a reversal was denied where the drawing of a diagram by one personally acquainted with a building in which the shooting was alleged to have occurred did not prejudice the defendant. Railey v. State, 58 Tex. Crim. Rep. 1, 121 S. W. 1120 125 S. W. 576.

A conviction of larceny will not be set aside upon an affidavit on information and belief that, after the jury's retirement, one member said to the others that he had been told by one who claimed to have heard the statement from a third party, that the defendant had keys to some buildings in the city, and that he (the third party) had good reason to believe that the defendant had entered his store by means of such keys. State v. Sprague, 149 Mo. 409, 50 S. W. 901.

A jury in a prosecution for the larceny of live stock may be properly instructed that they have the advantage of being men who are acquainted with the situation in the country, and the manner of procedure in relation to stock, in all the little details which go to form their general knowledge of the character of the business, and the way property of the kind is handled; and 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that this gives them an opportunity to use their knowledge in judging the rightful owner of the property. Such an instruction does not authorize the jury to reach a verdict on its own knowledge, irrespective of the evidence in the case. State v. Belkstrom, 20 S. D. 1, 104 N. W. 481.

It has been held in Iowa that the act of a juror in a trial for maintaining a liquor nuisance, in stating to the other jurors that he knew that liquor had been sold at this place, as he had drank it there himself, while highly reprehensible, is not ground for reversal, unless it appears that the jury acted upon the statement rather than upon the evidence submitted to them. State v. Wright, 98 Iowa, 702, 68 N. W. 440.

But the Kansas supreme court holds that a new trial of a prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor should be granted where it appears that during the jury's deliberations, one juror stated that he knew it was beer which the accused was selling, because he drank some of it himself; and that he knew the accused sold intoxicating liquors, and that he had followed the business for years. State v. Duncan, 70 Kan. 883, 78 Pac. 427.

And the Kansas appellate court holds that where, in a prosecution for violation of the liquor law, it becomes material to determine whether the person alleged to have done the physical act of selling was the employee of the defendant, a statement by one juror to the other that such person was in the defendant's employ, and had been for some time, is sufficient to set aside the conviction, where, although there was some slight evidence tending to establish such fact, it is impossible to say, in view of the fact that the evidence was slight, that the jury were not governed by such statement rather than the evidence, in making up their verdict. State v. Bean, 1 Kan. App. 688, 42 Pac. 394.

c. In civil cases.

1. By concrete knowledge of physical facts.

See also subdivisions V. b, infra, and IV. b, supra.

Where, in an action for damages for change of the grade of a street, one juror states his personal knowledge and observation as to the improvement and its effect, and not only bases his own conclusion part-to decide with accuracy who is telling the truth, the half dozen farmers who may be on a jury should be permitted to use their knowledge, and give their confrères the benefit of it. The other jurors are not bound to accept the statements as conclusive, but may give them such weight as they think they are entitled to. What is true of the farmer is true of those following other vocations. Usually our juries are cosmopolitan in character, being made up of the farmer, the mechanic, the business man, and the ordinary laborer. It is largely because juries are selected from all the walks of life that they ordinarily make such desirable triers of fact. Some jurors on almost every panel are at least apt to have some knowledge that is not common to all the jurors, and which may be a valuable aid in separating false or mistaken testimony from that which is true. Take the ordinary case of an accident at a street crossing, where the alleged negligence consists in running the car at an excessive rate of ly thereon, but uses them to influence his fellow jurors in arriving at their verdict, the verdict will not be permitted to stand. Falls City v. Sperry, 68 Neb. 420, 94 N. W. 529, 4 Ann Cas. 272.

And where, in an action against the city for injuries on a sidewalk, one member of the jury, during its deliberations, states to his fellow jurors what he claims to be the facts within his personal knowledge relating to the sidewalk in question, his conduct will be regarded as prejudicial error, where the fact that the statements were given some weight, and may have affected the verdict, is apparent from their nature. Wilberding v. Dubuque, 111 Iowa, 484, 82 N. W. 957.

So, the granting of a new trial for misconduct of the jury does not constitute an abuse of discretion, where, in an action involving the sufficiency of a railroad fence, two of the jurors stated, after the jury's retirement, that they as employees of the railroad company had helped to build the fence, and that it was good, strong, and well built, and another stated that the company always braced the fence when it was necessary, and other jurors stated facts and circumstances within their observation relating to the violence of the cyclone by which the fence was alleged to have been torn down. Bohn v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. — Iowa —, 78 N. W. 200.

But conceding the impropriety, in an action in which the exhaustibility of the water of a well became material, of the statement of one member of the jury, during its deliberations, that he has put down walls, and that when sheet water is reached, it cannot be pumped out; and the remark of another, speaking of wells in his own neighborhood, that when sheet water is reached, it cannot be exhausted,—they will not constitute reversible error, where it does not appear that they were at all instrumental in inducing the verdict, nor that a fair and impartial trial has not been had. Purcell v. Tibbles, 101 Iowa, 24, 69 N. W. 1120.

2. By application of general knowledge and experience.

The jurors must not, in determining the sufficiency of guards and warnings around an excavation in a boulevard, allow their personal knowledge and experience to have the weight of evidence in respect of the common use of the boulevard for speed*ing. Karrer v. Detroit*, 142 Mich. 331, 106 N. W. 64.

And it is error to instruct the jurors that they may take into consideration their own experience as to whether telephone lines are detrimental to the market value of abutting property, and make compensation, if in their experience such structures are detrimental; for such an instruction gives the jurors the impression that they are at liberty to accept or reject as they choose the evidence taken in the cause. DeGray v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 68 N. J. L. 454, 53 Atl. 200.

The distance in which a railroad locomotive going at a certain rate can be stopped is not a matter of common knowledge, and the jury therefore cannot ignore uncontradicted evidence of an expert with respect thereto, for if jurors have expert knowledge on the question, they must present it as witnesses, and not as jurors. Union P. R. Co. v. Shannon, 33 Kan. 446, 6 Pac. 564.

So, they cannot act upon their own knowledge and experience, instead of the evidence introduced, in determining whether the use of a screen in a smoke stack would have prevented the communication of fire. Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. 106 Mich. 582, 29 L.R.A. 468, 64 N. W. 501.

As to whether the fact that a pile of pig iron is 7 or 8 feet high renders it dangerous, men of particular experience in that business may be allowed to testify; but neither the court nor the jury can take judicial cognizance that such is the fact. Bowman v. American Car & Foundry Co. 226 Mo. 53, 125 S. W. 1120.

The jury may, as a matter of common knowledge, take into consideration the fact that a person walking at an ordinary rapid gate will travel about 4 miles per hour, for the purpose of approximating the rate of a locomotive engine upon the basis of the period which elapsed from the time the person stopped, looked, and listened until he was struck by the engine. Merrill v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 468.

And the jury will be assumed to know in a general way, of the amount and character of the traffic ordinarily carried on upon a public street, at least to the extent of recognizing that the street was not merely a laid-out highway, but an important thoroughfare of the city; and they may take these facts into consideration in determin-speed, and some witnesses swear that it was running 30 miles an hour, while others say it was running but 3 or 4 miles an hour, and the undisputed evidence is that the car was stopped within 10 feet or less from the place of collision. Many jurors who live in rural districts may not know anything about the distance within which a car may be stopped. Other jurors may know from their observation and experience that a car going at the rate of 30 miles an hour cannot be stopped in 10 feet. Must they devote themselves of this knowledge, because it is not common to all the jurors? We do not think so. Looking at the question from a practical point of view, they cannot do so, and there is little use in building up a theoretical rule of law that will not, and in fact cannot, work when it is put to practical application. There is a greater dearth ing whether a street car was run at a dangerous rate of speed, so as to render the railway company liable for damages thereby caused. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. Summers, 75 Kan. 342, 89 Pac. 652.

A reversal will not be granted where, during the jury's deliberations involving the speed of a street car, one member told the others that he had been a railroad man and knew how long it took to stop an engine and train, and how far a train would run in stopping when running at a certain speed, and advanced that fact as an argument against the plaintiff's right to recover; but it is not shown just what bearing the statement had upon the controversy. Karner v. Kansas City Elev. R. Co. 82 Kan. 842, 109 Pac. 676.

So, a new trial of an action for setting fire by a railway locomotive will not be granted merely because two members of the jury who had had experience in running engines talked with the other jurors about their conclusions from such experience, where it is not shown what their conclusions were, and it cannot be said that any prejudice resulted therefrom. Lillard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 79 Kan. 25, 98 Pac. 213.

In Jenkins v. Southern R. Co. 146 N. C. 178, 59 S. E. 663, involving the propriety of leaving it to the jury to say whether freight was transported within a reasonable time, the court said that the rule permitting jurors to use their own common sense, knowledge, and experience should be cautiously applied, but that the jury were warranted in finding for the plaintiff where it appeared that it took thirty-five days to transport the goods 200 miles. "While we are clearly of the opinion," said the court, "that in this case the jury were fully justified in finding the issue for the plaintiff, we do not commend the practice becoming too common of submitting causes to juries upon slight evidence, especially when the party having the burden of the issue may so easily show the very truth of the matter. When the distance is greater and the time shorter, we would not be disposed to relax the safe rule that the plaintiff must make out his case by the introduction of evidence. If, as is contended, the matter is so well known that jurors are asked to act upon their common knowledge, it certainly cannot be an unreasonable burden upon the plaintiff to require him to introduce some evidence."

In determining whether a defect in a plank alleged to have caused the death of a servant is such as to charge the master 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

with notice of it, the jurors are not, when a part of the plank is introduced into evidence, bound by the testimony of expert witnesses, but may use their own intelligence and their own experience with lumber, which they brought with them into the jury room, it being as much their duty to use that information as the information they get from the witnesses. Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 33, 47 C. C. A. 367, 108 Fed. 335.

And in Stiles v. Neillville Mill Co. 87 Wis. 266, 58 N. W. 411, involving the sufficiency of a wall alleged to have been defective, because after a certain height surplus material was used, so as to deprive the wall of uniformity and straightness, the court upheld the following charge, without comment: "I might as well charge you here as a matter of law that you are not obliged to take the testimony of any witness whose testimony seems improbable, and who has had no better opportunity to observe and judge of the strength of such a wall than you have. So, if any witness has testified here that this wall, by reason of being constructed in the manner it is, is less safe than if constructed in line, and that does not accord with your experience, observation, and knowledge of such matters, of course, you will use your judgment, and reject this testimony."

So, although there is no competent proof as to the proper manner of unloading a section of fire escape from a wagon, the question as to whether the method adopted was improper, so as to warrant an action for injuries received in the operation, may be submitted to the jury, where a description of the section and the actual method of unloading it is placed before it by competent evidence. Dow Wire & Iron Works v. Smith, — Ky. —, 124 S. W. 819.

The jury may draw such inference as common knowledge will suggest, respecting negligence in lying down and going to sleep in a barn, upon hay or straw, with a lighted pipe in one's mouth. Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84, 41 L.R.A. 381, 72 Am. St. Rep. 553, 75 N. W. 288.

And in an action by a minor for personal injuries, it is not error to instruct the jury in effect that they may consider the appearance of the plaintiff as he has been exhibited on the witness stand, in determining the question of his intelligence and capacity to apprehend and avoid the dangers incident to his employment. Disotell v. Henry Luther Co. 90 Wis. 635, 64 N. W. 425.

Where, in an action for the communicaof authority upon the point than one would expect to find. The Massachusetts court, without discussion or citation of authority, intimated, if it did not decide, in Schmidt v. New York Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 1 Gray, 529, that a juror could use his personal knowledge of some particular fact in weighing evidence only when the fact was a matter of common observation or general knowledge. The South Carolina court holds tion of fire, it becomes material to determine the direction and velocity of the wind, and a weather bureau expert testifies with respect thereto from observations made from a distant point, it is proper to instruct the jury with respect to the record of the weather bureau as follows: "That record is not made by the hand of man; it is made automatically. It gives the direction and the velocity . . . by means of machinery, and, connected with that machinery, these matters, the velocity and the direction of the wind, are recorded. But that instrument, you will observe, according to the testimony of the witness, was situated in an elevated position, clear from obstruction, and when a man comes before you, and says that the direction of the wind at a certain time was from such a quarter, so many miles away, and was blowing at the rate of so many miles per hour, irrespective of hills or mountains or forests, you will take into consideration your own experience, and the experience of other witnesses who have testified here, whether that instrument is to be believed under such circumstances and at such a distance, or whether your own experience and the testimony of the witnesses are worth anything. Consult your own experience, as well as the report made by the officer." Willis v. Lance, 28 Or. 371, 43 Pac. 384, 487.

V. Testing credibility of particular witness.

a. Generally.

Jurors may take into account their experience and relations among men, in determining the credibility of witnesses, and an instruction to that effect is not open to the objection that it permits the disposition of a cause upon the whims of jurors, rather than upon the law and evidence as they were learned in the trial. Jurors should be, and as a rule are, selected because of their extensive experiences among men. The school of experience which men attend in their varied relations among men imparts a keenness of mental vision which enables them the more readily to see the motives, and to judge of the selfish or unselfish interests of men. This education, be it much or little, is a part of the juror, and should not, even if possible, be laid aside in passing upon the inducement which may surround a witness to speak falsely. It is this education which to a great extent enables a juror to discover in the faltering that a juror who has knowledge of the infamous character of a witness may use that knowledge in passing upon the credibility of the witness, although it may not be common to all the jurors, and in support of its conclusion says, in State v. Jacobs, 30 S. C. 131, 136, 14 Am. St. Rep. 897, 8 S. E. 698, 701:

"While it is undoubtedly true that a jury is not at liberty to consider any fact pertimanner or the downcast eye whether the statement of the witness is made in modesty or in the guilt of falsehood. Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 33 L.R.A. 395, 41 N. E. 448; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Cregor, 150 Ind. 625, 50 N. E. 760; Renard v. Grande, 29 Ind. App. 579, 64 N. E. 644.

And it is reversible error for the court to charge that, in passing upon the question of the credibility of witnesses, the jury should consider motives and temptations to perjury, and should also consider the character of the witness "so far as you know it as bearing upon the question whether a witness would be truthful and reliable or not. My observation is that pretty good persons sometimes lie, and that pretty bad persons sometimes tell the truth." And the error is not cured by the fact that the court tells the jury that nothing is to be found by conjecture, but that the verdict must be based upon evidence and facts inferable from the proofs. Johnson v. Superior Rapid Transit R. Co. 91 Wis. 233, 64 N. W. 753.

But as instruction is vicious which commands the jury to apply its knowledge of human nature to each witness, and, after it has done that, to judge of the weight that ought to be given to the witness's testimony. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Burke, 112 Ill. App. 415.

b. By knowledge of the facts.

See also supra, subdivisions IV. b, and IV. c, 1.

A conviction should be set aside where a juror contradicted testimony of the accused as to a specific and material point, with the result that, whereas the jury was previously hung, it thereafter agreed upon a conviction. Winslow v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 98 S. W. 241.

And a defendant in a prosecution for conniving at the prostitution of his wife, who is convicted, notwithstanding his testimony that he had never consented to his wife being in a house of prostitution, is entitled to a reversal, where it appears that after the jury had retired, one of its members stated that the place at which the defendant worked, and he and his wife lived, was a house of prostitution. State v. Lorenzy, 59 Wash. 308, 109 Pac. 1064.

So, there is reversible error where, in an action for seduction, in which the plaintiff testified that the act complained of occurred at a certain place, and the jurors considered nent to the issue which they are called upon to try, unless it is found in the testimony adduced, even though such fact may be known to some one or all of the jury, yet this rule does not, and cannot from the very nature of things, forbid a juror, in weighing the credibility of the testimony, from taking into consideration his own knowledge of the character of the witness delivering such testimony. The credibility of testimony is a question exclusively for the jury, and we do not see how it is possible for a juror in considering that question to exclude from his mind his own knowledge of the character of the witnesses. The question is, What impression does the testimony make upon the minds of the jurors? and that impression must necessarily be affected by their own knowledge of the character of the witnesses from whom such testimony proceeds. We suppose that it rarely, if ever, happens that the character of at least some of the witnesses is not known to some or all of the jurors, and we do not see how any rule of law can prevent such knowledge from having its weight. If a statements of the foreman of the jury, that the plaintiff had declared at his home, and previously to the trial, that the intercourse had occurred in another place, and had not stated that it occurred at the place indicated by her testimony. Douglass v. Agne, 125 Iowa, 67, 99 N. W. 550.

It is held in Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Burke, 98 Tenn. 650, 40 S. W. 1085, that where a juror inquires of the court as to the proper course for the jury when one member, knowing the circumstances, is satisfied that as a physical fact the statement of one of the witnesses cannot be true, it is error to charge as follows: "Well, that's just a mistake. I have charged you that way before. It don't make the rest of his testimony not the truth, but he is just mistaken as to that. It don't make what he tells as the truth not the truth. It is just a mistake." The court declared that not only was the charge so obscure as to be erroneous in any event, but that it was invading the province of the jury to tell it to consider any statement of a witness as a mistake, and to give full credence to the remainder of his testimony; and that the jury should have been told that the case was to be tried upon the evidence given upon the trial, and not upon knowledge or information which any one or more of the jurors might have outside the record.

c. By knowledge as to reliability of witness.

A conviction for murder will be reversed where it appears that during the deliberation of the jury, one member said that he would swear he would not believe an important witness for the defendant under oath, and other jurors stated that there had been too many killings of late, and an example should be made of somebody. Riley v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 81 S. W. 711.

And it is error for a juror to state facts and circumstances tending to show that a witness for the defendant, notwithstanding his acquittal of participating in the offense, was nevertheless guilty. Williams v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 240, 75 S. W. 509.

Where, on a trial for homicide, an important witness for the state claims the ability to read, but, upon being tested by the court, was unable to do so, the statement of one member of the jury after its 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

retirement, that the witness had worked for him and was known to him to be an honest and truthful boy, and would not willingly state an untruth; and that the juror knew that the witness could read,— is sufficiently material and prejudicial to warrant a reversal under the Texas statute referred to under other subdivisions of this note, which provides that a new trial shall be granted when the jurors hear other evidence after their retirement. Tate v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 261, 42 S. W. 595.

And a new trial will be granted of a prosecution for violation of the liquor law, where it appears that after the jury retired, one of its number stated that he knew the state's witness and that he was a truthful man, and another juror stated that a witness for the defendant was under indictment for horse theft, and was unworthy of belief. Blalock v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 62 S. W. 571.

So, reversible error occurs where one juror states to the other that he personally knows the prosecuting witness, knows him to be truthful and honest, no attack having been made upon his credibility in the trial; and it is also stated in the jury room that there were other indictments against the accused charging him with rape upon the same person involved in the then present prosecution. Battles v. State, 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 202, 109 S. W. 195.

Of course, the accused is not prejudiced so as to warrant a reversal, where a juror states during the deliberations, that he personally knew the prosecuting witness, whose credibility the accused had attacked, and that his reputation was not good, but that nevertheless he (the juror) believed the defendant guilty. Lemmons v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 103 S. W. 896.

The inference from the decision in State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296, is that jurors may use their personal knowledge of a witness in reaching a conclusion as to his credibility. This inference arises from the statement that a charge that a juror can neither consider any facts which come within his personal knowledge, nor communicate them to the other jurors, without being in contempt and violating his solemn oath, did not prevent the jurors from using their personal knowledge of witnesses in reaching a conclusion as to their credibility, and was therefore unobjectionable. L. A. W.

fact is testified to by a witness whom the jurors know to be of such an infamous character as to render him totally unworthy of belief, it is difficult to understand how any rule of law can compel a jury to believe that which they cannot believe. The constitution of the human mind renders such a rule as that contended for utterly impracticable." To the same effect is M'Kain v. Love, 2 Hill, L. 506, 27 Am. Dec. 401.

The form of instruction that appears to be most generally approved is that the jury, in examining the evidence and in determining the weight to be given to it, may use such general practical knowledge as they may have upon the subject. Willis v. Lance, 28 Or. 371, 43 Pac. 384, 487; Douglass v. Trask, 77 Me. 35; Johnson v. Hillstrom, 37 Minn. 122, 33 N. W. 547; Kitzinger v. Sanborn, 70 Ill. 146; People v. Zeiger, 6 Par. Crim. Rep. 355; Bruckwood's Sackett, Instructions, § 410. This rule does not say, and we think it does not mean, that the knowledge must be common to all the jurors. We conclude that the instruction rightly understood was not erroneous. Moreover, we do not think that the instruction could prejudice the jury in answering the questions which were answered adversely to the contention of the plaintiff. Judgment affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

T. J. STEWART and Wife, Appts.,

v.

J. T. PRITCHARD.

(— Ark. —, 141 S. W. 505.)

Homestead — removal — abandonment.

1. Removal from a homestead, with no present or constant and abiding intention

Note. — Power of husband without wife's consent to abandon homestead, or to convey premises by his sole deed after abandonment.

The question of whether the husband by abandoning the wife, as distinguished from the homestead, can terminate the homestead right, is not covered in this note.

Although there is some conflict as to the husband's right to abandon the homestead without the consent of the wife, it is generally held that he has such power, and that he may then make a valid conveyance by his sole deed if he acts in good faith.

Thus in Beranek v. Beranek, 113 Wis. 272, 89 N. W. 146, where the husband in good faith decided to change his home, and renéed another, and sought to move his family there, his abandonment of his first home was held to remove the disability of the homestead law, requiring the wife to 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of returning, constitutes an abandonment of the right.

Same — determination of intent.

2. The intent with which one removes from his homestead will, for the purpose of determining whether or not he has preserved his right, be determined from all the facts and circumstances accompanying the removal,—his express declarations relative thereto, its adaptability as a homestead according to his views and desires, his acts thereafter, and the prolongation of his absence therefrom.

Same — abandonment — conveyance — signature of wife.

3. A statute making a conveyance of a homestead of no validity unless executed by the wife does not prevent abandonment of the homestead, or apply to a conveyance made thereafter.

(Kirby, J., dissents.)

(November 20, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Miller Chancery Court in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to compel specific performance of an alleged oral contract to convey certain land. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. A. Byrne, for appellants:

The wife cannot be deprived of her homestead, except in the way pointed out by the statutes.

Wassell v. Tunnah, 25 Ark. 101; Pipkin v. Williams, 57 Ark. 242, 38 Am. St. Rep. 241, 21 S. W. 433; Bank of Harrison v. Gibson, 60 Ark. 269, 30 S. W. 39; Shattuck v. Byford, 62 Ark. 431, 35 S. W. 1107; Bluff City Lumber Co. v. Bloom, 64 Ark. 492, 43 S. W. 503; Park v. Park, 71 Ark. 283, 72 S. W. 993.

There was no abandonment of the homestead.

Tumlinson v. Swinney, 22 Ark. 400, 76

join in the alienation of the homestead, and his sole conveyance was held valid although his wife refused to follow him to his new home. The court said: "Thus it is seen that, while the husband may not alienate or encumber his homestead without his wife's consent, he may relinquish or abandon it at will without her consent or against her wishes. This results from the dependent condition of the wife, and the giving of the husband, as the head of the family, the right to make and select the family domicile. If it be thought there is anything amiss in this condition of things, it is for the legislature, and not the courts, to afford a remedy. Applying the law to the facts presented in this case, we cannot escape the conclusion that the evidence shows a relinquishment and abandonment of the homestead in question by Frank Beranek in his lifetime, binding upon his wife, and fatal to the recovery herein. It is not to be understood that such homestead right can be defeated by the husband abandoning his family and leaving them to shift for themselves. Such was not this case. The husband, in apparently good faith, decided to change his home, rented another house, and sought to move his family thereto. He had an absolute right to do so, and thus relieve himself from the disability of the statute. The refusal of the wife to follow him did not preserve the status of the homestead."

Am. Dec. 432; Euper v. Alkire, 37 Ark. 283; Brown v. Watson, 41 Ark. 309; Gates v. Steele, 48 Ark. 539, 4 S. W. 53; Robinson v. Swearingen, 55 Ark. 55, 17 S. W. 365; Wilks v. Vaughan, 73 Ark. 174, 83 S. W. 913; White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Wooster, 66 Ark. 382, 74 Am. St. Rep. 100, 50 S. W. 1000; Mason v. Dierks Lumber & Coal Co. 94 Ark. 107, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 574, 125 S. W. 656.

Mr. W. H. Arnold, for appellee:

Before the claim of homestead can prevail, it must be shown that the absence of defendants was merely temporary, and not with the intention of changing their place of residence, and that they should have a fixed and unqualified intention to preserve it.

And in the following cases the husband's right to abandon the premises was upheld upon the theory that, as head of the family, he had the right to determine its domicile: Farmers' Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Jones, 68 Ark. 76, 82 Am. St. Rep. 280, 56 S. W. 1062; Wilmoth v. Gossett, 71 Ark. 594, 76 S. W. 1073; Brennan v. Wallace, 25 Cal. 108; Allen v. Hawley, 66 Ill. 164; Vasey v. Township One, 59 Ill. 188; Titman v. Moore, 43 Ill. 169; Inge v. Cain, 65 Tex. 75; Drew v. Wooten, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 456.

So, where the husband acts in good faith, his designation, without consulting his wife, of certain land out of a large tract as his homestead, is valid although he abandoned some cultivated land more convenient and better than that designated, and although some of the land selected was the separate property of the wife. Brin v. Anderson, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 323, 60 S. W. 778. The court said: "No evidence was submitted tending to show that W. C. Anderson, in designating his homestead, acted otherwise than in good faith, or had any purpose to defraud his wife. It is true that he did not consult her in reference to the designation, and she was ignorant of the fact that it had been made, until after this suit was brought. And it may be true that he did not make the wisest selection that could have been made, but there is nothing to indicate that he was influenced by any benefit secured or promised to him individually, and not participated in by his wife, or that he was actuated by any feeling of malice, ill-will, or spite toward her. If the selection made was disadvantageous to the wife, it was probably more so to the husband, as it is not likely that she would go to and from the several Wilks v. Vaughan, 73 Ark. 174, 83 S. W. 913; Gibbs v. Adams, 76 Ark. 575, 89 S. W. 1008; Shell v. Young, 78 Ark. 479, 93 S. W. 798; Tillar v. Bass, 57 Ark. 179, 21 S. W. 34; Farmers' Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Jones, 68 Ark. 76, 82 Am. St. Rep. 280, 56 S. W. 1062.

Frauenthal, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an equitable action instituted by J. T. Pritchard, the plaintiff below, to obtain the specific performance of a verbal contract of sale of land made by defendant to him. The plaintiff alleged that in February, 1910, the defendant sold the land to him by verbal contract for $500. In pursuance of said contract, he was placed in tracts of land in cultivation as often as he would. The fact that some of the land designated as homestead was separate property of the wife is of no importance. If it was impressed with the homestead character, the husband had the right to designate it as part of the homestead; and his doing so, and thereby excluding the land in controversy from his homestead, would not be a fraud upon her."

And where a block appropriated as a homestead is larger than necessary for the uses and conveniences of a home, the husband, if he acts in good faith, may, without the wife's consent, appropriate a part of it for mercantile uses, although such appropriation withdraws from that part its homestead character. Wynne v. Hudson, 66 Tex. 1, 17 S. W. 110.

And where a homestead is only given to residents of the state, and the widow's right therein arises only upon the husband's death, his removal from the state for the purpose of acquiring another residence terminates the homestead although his family does not follow him. Finley v. Saunders, 98 N. C. 462, 4 S. E. 516.

Although the wife does not expressly consent to the abandonment of the homestead, it is generally held that if she accompanies her husband when he, in good faith, leaves the homestead, she cannot subsequently assert her right of homestead in the premises.

Thus, where the husband, in good faith, moved from his homestead with his wife and family, from Texas to Mexico, and the homestead property was afterward sold under execution, it was held that the wife could not thereafter assert her homestead right in the premises. Smith v. Uzzell, 56 Tex. 315. The court said: "When the wife voluntarily leaves the homestead with intent never again to return to it, and seeks, with her husband, a home in a foreign land, that whatever right she may have had in and to the homestead exemption is lost.

. . . If, however, the husband, in fraud of the right of the wife and without her consent, should seek by an abandonment to withdraw the homestead from the pale of its possession of the land, and made valuable and permanent improvements thereon. He also alleged that the consideration was to be paid with a note and mortgage for $500, which was owned by him, and that he turned same over to defendant's agent in pursuance of their agreement to that effect.

The defendant resisted the action upon two grounds: (1) He alleged that the consideration was to be paid in cash, which was not done; (2) and that the land was his homestead, and that his wife had not joined in the execution of a conveyance thereof, or in a contract of the sale therefor. Considerable testimony was taken relative to these two issues, and, upon final hearing of the cause, the chancellor made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and entered a decree directing specific performance of the contract for the sale of the land. Upon this appeal the only ground urged by the defendant why the decree should be reversed is that the land was his homestead, and the alleged sale thereof was void because his wife had not joined in the execution of such contract or of the conveyance for the land. The sole question to be determined, then, is whether or not the land was the homestead of the defendant at the time he sold same to plaintiff. Defendant bought the land above five or six years prior to the time he entered into the verbal contract for its sale to plaintiff, and moved thereon with his family, and improved same as his homestead. He remained in possession of the land until January, 1908, when he moved off the land and exemption given for the benefit of the family, he could have no power to do so; but while he acts in good faith, and not against the will of the wife having alone in view the good of the family, of which by nature and by law he is the recognized head, his power to abandon a homestead ought not to be questioned; and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it ought to be presumed when a removal from a homestead is made, that it was made in good faith and with the consent of the wife."

And in the following cases where the wife voluntarily accompanied the husband in the abandonment of the homestead, it was held that she could not thereafter assert her right of homestead therein: Phillips v. Springfield, 39 Ill. 83; Kramer v. Lamb, 84 Minn. 468, 87 N. W. 1024; Jordan v. Godman, 19 Tex. 274; Rockwell Bros. & Co. v. Hudgens, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 504, 123 S. W. 185; Levison v. Abrahams, 14 Lea, 336, overruled in Collins v. Boyett, infra.

So, where the husband sold the homestead and moved from it with his wife and family, and no claim of homestead was made for about twenty years, it was held that the wife could not claim a right of homestead in the premises. Hart v. Randolph, 142 Ill. 521, 32 N. E. 517.

And if she willingly leaves the homestead with the husband, and remains away for twenty odd years, she cannot assert a right of homestead against those claiming under a conveyance executed by the husband without her consent shortly after leaving the homestead. Portwood v. Newberry, 79 Tex. 337, 15 S. W. 270.

And in Nash v. Herring, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 95, 23 S. W. 739, where the husband had abandoned the homestead property at the time he sold it, it was held that the wife could not assert a homestead right in the premises, when it appeared that she had voluntarily and willingly left the homestead with the intention never to again occupy it as a homestead, although she did not wish her husband to sell the property.

And where a husband abandons one homestead and moves with his wife to 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

other property upon which he acquires a homestead, the wife has no right of homestead in the property abandoned. Allison v. Shilling, 27 Tex. 450, 86 Am. Dec. 622; Marler v. Handy, 88 Tex. 421, 31 S. W. 636.

And in Slavin v. Wheeler, 61 Tex. 654, it was held that the fact that the wife retained an intention to return to a homestead which the husband had conveyed, without her consent, after it had been abandoned by himself and his family and another one had been acquired, would not avoid such conveyance.

In Reece v. Renfro, 68 Tex. 192, 4 S. W. 545, it was held that where the wife moved to another state with her husband, and they there purchased a house, and the husband subsequently sold the former homestead, and both remained absent from it for a number of years, she could not assert a right of homestead against bona fide purchasers of the premises, although she claimed to have left the homestead unwillingly.

Where an abandonment of the homestead is shown, it is generally held that the husband may make a valid conveyance of the property without the wife's consent: Farmers' Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Jones, 68 Ark. 76, 82 Am. St. Rep. 280, 56 S. W. 1062; Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 506, 76 Am. Dec. 440; Brennan v. Wallace, 25 Cal. 108; Phillips v. Springfield, 39 Ill. 83; Titman v. Moore, 43 Ill. 169; Williams v. Moody, 35 Minn. 280, 28 N. W. 510; Wilson v. Gray, 59 Miss. 525; Robertson v. Hefley, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 368, 118 S. W. 1159; Inge v. Cain, 65 Tex. 75; Portwood v. Newberry, 79 Tex. 337, 15 S. W. 270; Woolfolk v. Ricketts, 41 Tex. 358, s. c. on subsequent appeal, 48 Tex. 28.

In Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 506, 76 Am. Dec. 440, the court said: "The statute confers upon the wife no right to the homestead, independent of the husband, which she can enforce against his consent. It affords protection to him, and only through him to the wife and children. It does not purport to interfere with the natural dependence of the latter upon the former. She is bound by her marital obligations to has never returned to it. It is claimed by the plaintiff that he abandoned the land as a homestead at that time, and that it was not his homestead when the defendant sold same to him in February, 1910.

The abandonment of a homestead is almost, if not entirely, a question of intent. This intent must be determined from the facts and circumstances attending each case.

The mere removal of the owner with his family from the homestead will not constitute such an abandonment. It is well settled that a temporary absence from the land, where there is a fixed and abiding intent to return to it, will not occasion an abandonment of it as a homestead. It has been frequently held that if a removal from a homestead is caused by necessity, or for business purposes, or for any other reason which requires the temporary absence of the owner, who at the time has and retains a fixed and unqualified intention to preserve it as a homestead and to return to it, this will not result in an abandonment of the land as a homestead. Tumlinson v. Swinney, 22 Ark. 400, 76 Am. Dec. 432; Euper v. Alkire, 37 Ark. 283; Brown v. Watson, 41 Ark. 309; Gates v. Steele, 48 Ark. 539, 4 S. W. 53; Robinson v. Swearingen, 55 Ark. 55, 17 S. W. 365; Wilks v. Vaughan, 73 Ark. 174, 83 S. W. 913. On the other hand, if, at the time of the removal, there is no present or constant and abiding intention to return to it and preserve same as a homestead, then such removal from the land will constitute an abandonment of it as a homestead.

The intent of the owner will be gathered live with him, and when he changes his place of residence, she must accompany him. There is no obligation resting upon him to permanently occupy the same place; indeed the highest interest of himself and family, their health and maintenance, and the proper education of his children, may require a relinquishment of the homestead. As by his act, the premises were originally impressed with the character of a homestead, so by his act they may be abandoned as such. The wife, from the nature of her dependent relation to her husband,—a relation not only essential to the peace and happiness of the family itself, but to the well-being of society,—must abide the consequences of such abandonment. So long as the premises retain the character of homestead, the conveyance of the husband, without the signature and acknowledgment of the wife, is invalid, so as to entitle the grantee to their possession, but no longer. It is around the actual, not the former, homestead of the head of the family that the law throws its protection. If, then, the premises in controversy were in fact abandoned, with no intention on the part of the head of the family to reoccupy them as a homestead, at the date of the conveyance, the entire estate passed to the grantee absolutely; but if not thus abandoned—if the removal were temporary in its nature, made for a specific purpose, for the repair or reconstruction of the building which had fallen—the premises remained subject to his right to claim their enjoyment and use as such homestead. The assertion of this right does not rest with the wife."

And in Russell v. Rumsey, 35 Ill. 362, where it was contended that inasmuch as it had been held that the legislature had authority to pass a homestead act preventing the sale of the family residence without the wife's joinder, the same might be done to bar the assertion of the right of dower, the court said: "The homestead act does not prevent the sale, but only requires that the premises shall not be occupied as a homestead at the time of the conveyance. The vendor, being the head of the family, may choose their residence, and if he desires to sell the homestead without the concurrence of his wife, he has only to abandon and to cease to occupy it as a residence. It is not the case of vesting the wife with an interest in the property beyond the control of the husband. He has the right to sell or retain it as he may choose, but if he desires to sell it he has only to cease to occupy it as a residence. It is not like prohibiting the sale of property, or transferring the husband's lands to the wife."

And a conveyance of a homestead, executed before, but not delivered until after, the acquisition of a new homestead, does not require an acknowledgment by the wife, and is not invalid because her acknowledgment is defective. Woodstock Iron Co. v. Richardson, 94 Ala. 629, 10 So. 144.

And in Alvord Nat. Bank v. Ferguson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 622, it was held that premises which were the separate property of the husband or community property could be conveyed by the husband without the wife's consent, after they had been abandoned by the husband and wife as a homestead.

And where a family consisted only of husband and wife, and the wife, a month before the execution of a sole deed by the husband, left both husband and homestead, with an intention never to return to either, and the husband sold the furniture three weeks before the execution of the deed, and left the premises the day of or the day before the execution thereof, it was held that, as between the grantee and a subsequent judgment creditor, a finding that the homestead right had so far ceased prior to the execution of the deed as to make it a valid conveyance should not be reversed. Anderson v. Kent, 14 Kan. 207.

And whenever a business homestead ceases to be so used, its homestead character is lost, and the husband can dispose of it without being joined by the wife in the conveyance. Dickson v. Allen, — Tex. Civ. App.—24 S. W. 661.

And an assignment of a land contract from all the facts and circumstances accompanying his removal and absence from the homestead,—from his express declarations relative thereto, from the adaptability of the land as a homestead according to the owner's views and desires, as well as from his acts thereafter, and the prolongation of his absence therefrom. Newton v. Russian, 74 Ark. 88, 85 S. W. 407; Gibbs v. Adams, 76 Ark. 575, 89 S. W. 1008; Farmers' Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Jones, 68 Ark. 76, 82 Am. St. Rep. 280, 56 S. W. 1062. While a temporary change of residence will not constitute an abandonment of a homestead, yet an actual removal therefrom will result in such an abandonment, unless there is at the time a fixed and definite purpose to return to it and preserve it as a homestead.

The act of March 18, 1887 (Kirby's Dig.

by the husband alone is valid where the wife had no homestead interest in the property at the time, the parties having sometime previously purchased other property where they resided, and rented the property in question. Newbro v. Friar, 131 Mich. 368, 91 N. W. 609.

The husband cannot, however, by a sale and abandonment in fraud of his wife, destroy her homestead rights. Gray v. Fussell, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 261, 106 S. W. 454.

And where the husband and family had moved from the homestead temporarily to other property belonging to him, on account of his health, and he secretly determined to make the latter property his homestead, a mortgage of the old homestead executed in fraud of the wife's right, to one whose agent knew of the secret nature of the transaction, is invalid as against the wife. St. Louis Brewing Asso. v. Walker, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 6, 54 S. W. 360.

Some conflict exists, however, as has been stated, as to the right of the husband to abandon the homestead without the wife's consent.

Thus, in Blumer v. Albright, 64 Neb. 249, 59 N. W. 809, it was held that the wife could not be deprived of her homestead right by the removal therefrom with her husband, where she did not participate in his intention not to return. The court said: "It is contended with much earnestness and ability by counsel for appellant that the husband, being the head of the family, has the right to determine and control the domicile of the family, if he acts in good faith, and not fraudulently; that by removing from the homestead, and taking up his abode elsewhere, he can divest both himself and his wife of their homestead right; especially is this true, it is contended, where the wife and family accompany the husband to the new abode. Many cases from other states than our own are cited in support of this doctrine. We are unable to adopt this view. It seems very clear, from an examination of the provisions of our statute relating to homesteads, that the purpose of the legislature was to secure a home, not for the benefit of the husband alone, or of the wife, but for the family as an entirety; and it is accordingly provided that no conveyance of the homestead can be made except by a deed in the execution of which both husband and wife have freely and voluntarily joined. Thus the husband is wholly deprived of his power of alienation unless with the free consent of his wife. To sustain the contention of appellant would result in permitting a dissolute and worthless husband, whose sense of responsibility for the preservation of the family had been blunted by vice and dissipation, to deprive his wife and family of the benefits of the homestead law, by simply abandoning it and taking his family with him elsewhere, without regard to the wife's wishes, rights, or intentions; the husband thus being empowered to accomplish by indirection what the legislature has sought, by express provision, to prevent him from doing directly. . . . The wife cannot be compelled to elect between her husband and her homestead. We have no doubt that, under the laws of this state, departure from the homestead cannot be construed into an abandonment thereof, unless the intention not to return is shared in by both husband and wife. The testimony in this case clearly shows that the wife never intended to abandon the homestead, and therefore the finding of the trial court that the property in controversy was the homestead of appellee and her husband is right."

§ 3901), providing that no conveyance or other instrument affecting the homestead shall be of any validity unless the wife shall join in the execution thereof, does not in any manner restrict the right of abandonment by the owner. When he has chosen to exercise the right of abandonment, and actually does abandon the property which formerly was his homestead, it thereby becomes subject to sale or other alienation without his wife's concurrence. Farmers' Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Jones, supra. In construing the above act, this court in the case of Sidway v. Lawson, 58 Ark. 117, 23 S. W. 648, said: "It vested no additional interest in the wife. The husband could abandon the homestead, and it would become liable to his debts notwithstanding the act of March 18, 1887." Newton v. Russian, supra.

And in Collins v. Boyett, 87 Tenn. 334, 10 S. W. 512, it was held that the removal of the husband and wife from the homestead, after a conveyance by the husband alone, did not defeat the wife's right of homestead, where no other homestead had been acquired. The court said: "The wife not having signed the deed and been privily examined, no other consent will deprive her of her homestead. It is argued that the removal of the wife with her husband was an abandonment of the right, and in support of this Levison & Co. v. Abrahams, 14 Lea, 336, is relied on. That case

In the case of Hart v. Randolph, 142 Ill. 521, 32 N. E. 517, it was held that where the husband and family left his former homestead, and thereupon sold and conveyed the property, and placed the purchaser in possession thereof, and never returned or attempted to return, nor, so far as appeared from the testimony, claimed it as a homestead for a number of years thereafter, this clearly constituted an abandonment thereof as a homestead. See also Anderson v. Kent, 14 Kan. 207; Nethercutt v. Herron, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 247, 8 S. W. 13. But, as before stated, the abandonment of a homestead by the owner thereof is entirely a question of intention upon his part, and must be determined by the facts and circumstances adduced in evidence in the case. Thompson, Homestead & Exemption, §§ 273 et seq.

The testimony in the case at bar tended to prove that in January, 1908, the defendant removed from the land which was his homestead, and has never returned to it. The land consisted of 40 acres, with a small house thereon. At the time of his removal, there was no chimney to the house, and no sash in the windows; and the panels of the doors had been broken out and the roof leaked. The well on the place had failed to furnish water, and posts which had been placed under the house had rotted to such an extent that it was in danger of falling. The defendant was a white man, and, on removing from the land, placed a negro in possession of the house, who rented the land during the year 1908. In 1909 defendant rented the land to another negro, but the house remained unoccupied. In 1908 he moved about 16 miles from the place, and some time later moved to the city of Texarkana, which is about 3 or 4 miles from the place. Here he remained about a year, when he moved to a farm in the adjoining state of Texas. He spoke to different parties relative to selling the land, prior to his sale thereof to the plaintiff, and stated that his wife would not live on the place because there was no water there, and that she desired to move to Texas. It appears that his wife also made this declaration. During all the time since his removal, defendant has evinced no intention of returning to the land, either by word or act. Although he stated in his testimony that he claims the land as his homestead, he did not testify either that it was his intention to return to the land and preserve it as a homestead at the time that he removed therefrom, or that he entertained any such intention at any time since said removal.

The testimony tends further to prove that in March, 1910, after he had entered into the contract of sale of the land with the plaintiff, he placed the plaintiff in possession thereof, who, with this knowledge, made lasting improvements upon the land. In his original answer filed in this case, he resisted the action instituted by the plaintiff solely upon the ground that the land was sold for a cash consideration, which had not been paid, and he did not therein set up as a defense the invalidity of the sale by reason of the land being his homestead. Subsequently he filed an amended answer in which he made this defense.

We have carefully examined the testimony in this case, and we have come to the conclusion that it sufficiently shows that when the defendant moved from the land in 1908 he had no present intention of returning to the same, or of preserving it as a homestead; that since his removal he has not, by any declaration or act, evinced any intention of returning to the land or preserving it as a homestead. And we are convinced that the finding of the chancellor that the defendant had abandoned the land does sustain the contention, but it is unsound, and not in accord with reported decisions of this court. The wife cannot be thus compelled to elect between her husband and homestead."

So, in Jarman v. Jarman, 4 Lea, 671, where the widow's right of homestead was involved, the court said that neither the husband nor wife could dispose of the homestead without the consent of the other, and that the wife's right could be lost only by her voluntary alienation or abandonment.

And in Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 167, where the question of abandonment was involved, the court said that the act of the wife in going with the husband to reside on another place could in no way affect her homestead right, but that this right could only be extinguished by her joining with her husband in a conveyance of it.

In Gardner v. Gardner, 123 Mich. 673, 82 N. W. 522, it was held that the surrender 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by the husband, without the wife's consent, of the contract of purchase under which they held a homestead, would not bar the wife's right of homestead.

As to conveyance of homestead by husband after abandonment by wife, see note to Murphy v. Renner, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 565.

As to validity of conveyance or encumbrance of homestead by wife after abandonment by husband, see note to Somers v. Somers, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1024.

And for a note on abandonment, conveyance, or encumbrance of homestead during insanity of one of the spouses, see Weatherington v. Smith, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 430.

As to estoppel of wife living apart from husband to claim homestead or dower as against purchaser ignorant of relationship, see notes to Mason v. Dierks Lumber & Coal Co. 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 574, and Wright Lumber Co. v. McCord, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 762.

J. T. W.

as a homestead prior to the time he entered into the contract for the sale thereof to the plaintiff is not against the clear preponderance of the evidence.

It follows that this finding of the chancellor, according to the repeated rulings of this court, should not be disturbed. The decree is accordingly affirmed.

Kirby, J., dissents.

Petition for rehearing denied.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

FRANCIS L. NEUBECK, Admr., etc., of William Moore, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

PATRICK J. LYNCH.

(37 App. D. C. 576.)

Limitation of actions — amended complaint — adding beneficiary — effect.

Inserting a designation of the beneficiary in a complaint filed to recover money for wrongful death, which, under the statute, can be recovered only for the benefit of widow and next of kin, does not, although the complaint is insufficient without it, state a new cause of action so as to be ineffectual if the limitation period had elapsed before the amendment.

(December 4, 1911.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. M. Hewlett, with Messrs. Benjamin Carter and F. Carter Pope, for appellant:

The amendment of the declaration was not a statement of a new cause of action, and the bar of the statute of limitations cannot be invoked as a defense.

Kerrigan v. Market Street R. Co. 138 Cal. 506, 71 Pac. 621; Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Morris, 26 Ill. 400; Foley v. Suburban R. Co. 98 Ill. App. 108; Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Helbreg, 99 Ill. App. 563; Stewart v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 103 Ind. 44, 2 N. E. 208; Jeffersonville, M. &

I. R. Co. v. Hendricks, 41 Ind. 48; State ex rel. Meriwether v. Walford, 11 Ind. App. 392, 39 N. E. 162; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Barber, 44 Kan. 612, 24 Pac. 969; State v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 60 Me. 146; Com. v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 11 Cush. 512; Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032; Schwarz v. Judd, 28 Minn. 371, 10 N. W. 208; McIntosh v. Missouri P. R. Co. 103 Mo. 131, 15 S. W. 80; Warren v. Englehart, 13 Neb. 283, 13 N. W. 401; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Crockett, 17 Neb. 570, 24 N. W. 219; Love v. Southern R. Co. 108 Tenn. 104, 55 L.R.A. 471, 65 S. W. 475; Geroux v. Graves, 62 Vt. 280, 19 Atl. 987; Lewis v. Washington & G. R. Co. 6 Mackey, 558; District of Columbia v. Frazer, 21 App. D. C. 154; Howard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 App. D. C. 330; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 603, 36 L. ed. 832, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Morris v. Wheat, 11 App. D. C. 213; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Miller, 221 U. S. 408, 55 L. ed. 789, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534, and Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Gross, 221 U. S. 417, 55 L. ed. 796, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536.

Mr. Leon Tobriner, for appellee:

The amended declaration stated a new cause of action,—one that had never been stated before,—and hence the statute of limitations is a good defense. There can be no restatement of the cause of action in an amended declaration unless the cause of action had been stated in the original declaration.

Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 80; 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 868; Foster v. St. Luke's Hospital, 191 Ill. 94, 60 N. E. 803; Louisville & M. R. Co. v. Pitt, 91 Tenn. 86, 18 S. W. 118; Lilly v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 32 S. C. 142, 10 S. E. 932; Serensen v. Northern P. R. Co. 45 Fed. 407; Stewart v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 103 Ind. 45, 2 N. E. 208; State ex rel. Meriwether v. Walford, 11 Ind. App. 392, 39 N. E. 162; Webster v. Norwegian Min. Co. 137 Cal. 399, 92 Am. St. Rep. 181, 70 Pac. 276; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McGill, 21 L.R.A. 818, 6 C. C. A. 521, 12 U. S. App. 651, 57 Fed. 699; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hurd, 56 L.R.A. 193, 47 C. C. A. 615, 108 Fed. 116; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Crockett, 17 Neb. 570, 24 N. W. 219; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Oyster, 58 Neb. 1, 78 N. W. 359; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Younger, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 29 S. W. 948; Westcott v. Central Vermont R. Co. 61 Vt. 438, 17 Atl. 745; Oulighan v. Butler, 189 Mass. 289, 75 N. E. 726; Kansas City v. Hart, 60 Kan. 684, 57 Pac. 938; Safford v. Drew, 3 Duer, 627; Sparks v. Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co. 31 Mo. App. 111; McIntosh v. Missouri P. R. Co. 103 Mo. 131, 15 S. W. 80; Schwarz v. Judd, 28 Minn. 371, 10 N. W. 208.

Note.—The general subject of the relation of new pleadings to the statute of limitations is considered in the notes to Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bagley, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 259–306, and Bourdreaux v. Tucson Gas, E. L. & P. Co. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 196, and see particularly pages 304, et seq. of the earlier note as to changes in parties. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Van Orsdel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for the recovery of damages for the alleged negligent killing of one William Moore, on February 13, 1909. The action is brought by Francis L. Neubeck, the administrator of the estate of the deceased, William Moore. The declaration is in two counts, charging, in substance, that the death of Moore was caused by the discharge of a loaded pistol negligently handled by defendant, Patrick J. Lynch, and concluding "to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $10,000." On March 9, 1911, plaintiff, by leave of court, amended the declaration by inserting in the proper connection the following: "Plaintiff's decedent left surviving him a widow and four minor children, whose sole support he was, and by his death as aforesaid they were damaged in the sum of $10,000; wherefore plaintiff brings this suit under §§ 1301 and 1302 of the Code of the District of Columbia, 31 Stat. at L. 1394, chap. 854, and demands judgment," etc.

To the amended declaration defendant entered pleas of not guilty and of the bar of the statute of limitations. Plaintiff demurred to the plea of limitations. The court overruled the demurrer, and, plaintiff electing to stand upon the demurrer, judgment was entered for defendant.

This is a statutory proceeding. In an action for damages for negligently causing the death of a person, the statute provides that the action shall be brought "in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person, and within one year after the death of the party injured;" that "such damages shall be assessed with reference to the injury resulting from such act, neglect, or default causing such death, to the widow and next of kin of such deceased person," and that "the damages recovered in such action shall not be appropriated to the payment of the debts or liabilities of such deceased person, but shall inure to the benefit of his or her family and be distributed according to the provisions of the statute of distribution in force in the said District of Columbia." D. C. Code, §§ 1301-1303.

The original declaration is assailed on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action, because the beneficiaries were not named. It is conceded that the defect was cured by the amendment; but, as the amendment was not filed within the one year allowed for the bringing of the action, it came too late. Therefore, the sole question presented is whether the amendment stated a new cause of action. If the amendment simply related back to, and cured the cause of action defectively stated in the original declaration, the bar of the statute cannot be invoked as a defense.

The primary cause of action consists in the charge that appellee negligently killed appellant's intestate in the manner described in the original petition. The allegation of the existence of beneficiaries within the statute is undoubtedly essential to the right of recovery; and, as generally held by the courts, a verdict will not support a judgment or be sustained in its absence. But neither the cause of action nor the jurisdiction of the court depends entirely upon the naming of the beneficiaries. Without them the cause of action is at most defectively stated. That jurisdiction existed was sufficiently shown in the original petition.

Closely analogous to the case at bar are a number of Federal cases construing the bankruptcy act, which provides that the person whom it is sought to have adjudged an involuntary bankrupt must not be "a wage earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil." 30 Stat. at L. 547, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3423. Also those construing the provision that requires as a condition precedent to the right of the petitioner to file his petition an averment setting forth the number of creditors. 30 Stat. at L. 561, chap. 541; Re Pilger, 118 Fed. 206; Re Bellah, 116 Fed. 69; Beach v. Macon Grocery Co. 57 C. C. A. 150, 120 Fed. 736; Re Brett, 130 Fed. 981; Re Mero, 128 Fed. 630; Re Plymouth Cordage Co. 68 C. C. A. 434, 135 Fed. 1000; Re Broadway Sav. Trust Co. 81 C. C. A. 58, 152 Fed. 152; Re Hafl, 68 C. C. A. 648, 136 Fed. 78; First State Bank v. Haswell, 98 C. C. A. 217, 174 Fed. 209.

The general rule, as repeatedly stated by the Federal courts, is "that an amendment to a petition which sets up no new cause of action, . . . but merely amplifies and gives greater precision to the allegations in support of the cause of action . . . originally presented, relates back to the commencement of the action." Crotty v. Chicago Great Western R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 593, and cases cited. In First State Bank v. Haswell, 98 C. C. A. 217, 174 Fed. 209, the court, referring to this rule, said: "This rule is also applicable to cases where jurisdictional facts which existed at the time the original petition was filed are subsequently made to appear for the first time by an amendment." In Ryan v. Hendricks, 166 Fed. 94, the court, applying the rule to a bankruptcy case, said: "The amendments related to the number of the petitioning creditors, and the amount and nature of their claims, and to the occupation of the debtor. There is no doubt that at the time the original petition was filed Logerman was a bankrupt, and all the conditions existed which made it proper for his estate to be administered under the bankruptcy law. If the original petition failed to set forth these conditions fully and clearly, the court did right in allowing the amendments, and the amendments, when made, related back to the time of the filing of the original petition, and had the same effect as if originally incorporated therein." Where large property rights are liable to be involved in the priority of liens, and the rights of judgment creditors attaching within four months of the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, it might be assumed that a strict rule of pleading would be invoked; but on the contrary a very liberal and sensible rule has been adopted.

Conceding, as we must, that the averment setting forth the beneficiaries is one of the ingredients necessary to state a cause of action in a suit for the wrongful and negligent killing of a person, it is, nevertheless, but one of the elements, and does not, of itself, constitute the cause of action or a separate cause of action. The averment is essential, together with other allegations of the petition, to state a proper cause of action. Its omission merely results in stating a defective cause of action, which may be cured by an amendment, which will relate back in point of time to the filing of the original petition. Love v. Southern R. Co. 108 Tenn. 104, 55 L.R.A. 471, 65 S. W. 475; Geroux v. Graves, 62 Vt. 280, 19 Atl. 987; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Crockett, 17 Neb. 570, 24 N. W. 219; Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032.

Counsel for appellee has cited many cases where it has been held that a petition which does not name the beneficiaries in an action based upon a statute similar to ours is so defective that it will not support a verdict; but that does not argue that the defect may not be cured by amendment before verdict and judgment. On the other hand, the courts of a number of states, whose decisions are entitled to the highest respect, support appellee's contention that a petition so amended states a new cause of action. The question is one involved in difficulty, but we are constrained to adopt the liberal rule. Indeed, this court has established a liberal rule as to the right of amendment, in order that the ends of justice may be attained. Steven v. Saunders, 34 App. D. C. 321.

In District of Columbia v. Frazer, 21 App. D. C. 154, an amended declaration was filed after the bar of the statute of limitations had run, dismissing a codefendant, omitting acts of negligence originally alleged, and charging new and different acts of negligence. The court, sustaining the right of amendment, said: "Where, as in this case, there has been a substitution of the original declaration by an amendment, the test is whether the cause of action remains the same in substance, notwithstanding differences of specification. Howard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 App. D. C. 330, 336; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 604, 36 L. ed. 829, 833, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905. Applying this test, we are of opinion that there was no error in overruling the plea of limitation. The foundation of the action, in both pleadings, is the negligence of the defendant in the performance of its duty to keep its sidewalks in a safe condition." So, here the foundation of the action in both the original and amended petitions is the negligent shooting of appellant's intestate by the appellee.

In the recent case of Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Miller, 221 U. S. 408, 55 L. ed. 789, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534, suit was brought in Texas to recover damages for a death caused by the alleged negligence of the railroad company in Louisiana. The Louisiana statute, like ours, required the action to be brought within one year. The courts of Texas, under the prevailing rule in the state, refuse to take judicial cognizance of the statutes of other states unless pleaded. The petition was filed within the year, but failed to set out the Louisiana statute under which the suit was brought. After the year had expired the defendant company answered, setting up the statute. The Texas court held that the answer cured the defect in the petition, which holding was affirmed by the supreme court. If a defect so vital as the failure to plead a statute upon which the cause of action is based could be cured by answer, it must follow logically that it could have been cured by amendment. There, the statute of Louisiana was required to be pleaded as a condition precedent to recovery. Here, the beneficiaries under the statute must be named in the declaration as a condition of recovery.

The original judiciary act, 1 Stat. at L. 91, chap. 20, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 696, provides that no proceeding in civil cases in any court of the United States "shall be abated, arrested, quashed, or reversed for any defect or want of form, but such court shall proceed and give judgment according as the right of the cause and matter in law shall appear to it, without regarding any such defect, or want of form, except those which, in cases of demurrer, the party demurring specially sets down together with his demurrer, as the cause thereof; and such court shall amend every such defect and want of form, other than those which the party demurring so expresses; and may at any time permit either of the parties to amend any defect in the process or pleadings, upon such conditions as it shall, in its discretion and by its rules, prescribe." From this it will be observed that, in the establishment of the Federal courts, a most liberal rule of pleading was enjoined by statute. It should not be the policy of the courts to defeat justice by indulging in mere technicalities and fine-spun theories of pleading. Where an amendment does not operate totally to confer jurisdiction, or to change the cause of action or shift the right of action, but merely supplies an additional element essential to a proper statement of a cause of action defectively stated, or an additional jurisdictional averment essential to clothe the court with complete power to conduct the suit to a legal conclusion, it should be allowed.

The judgment is reversed, with costs, and remanded for further proceedings.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

EDGAR J. VAUGHN, Appt.,

v.

J. P. JOHNSON et al., Respts.

(20 Idaho, 669, 119 Pac. 879.)

Deposition — cross-examination — admissibility.

1. Where the evidence of a witness is taken by deposition after notice given as provided by statute, and the adverse party neglects to appear and cross-examine the witness, and thereafter gives notice in conformity with law of the taking of the deposition of the same witness, and in pursuance of such notice takes the deposition of such witness, and in so doing cross-examines the witness on the deposition previously given by him, it is erroneous procedure to admit the later deposition as a part of plaintiff's case and before defendant has opened his side of the case. The party taking such deposition should be required to withhold the same, and introduce it as a part of his defense in making his own proofs.

Bills and notes — bona fide purchase — fraud in procuring.

2. Mere evidence of fraud or deception in procuring a negotiable promissory note

Headnotes by AILSHIE, J.

Note. — As to the circumstances sufficient to put a purchaser of negotiable paper on inquiry, see note to Mee v. Carlson, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 351.
57 L.R.A.(N.S.)

which is fair and regular on its face is not sufficient to raise a presumption of bad faith against the purchaser of such paper in due course, nor should such fact be given any consideration by a jury in determining the other fact; namely, that the holder of the instrument had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith.

Evidence — burden of proof — fraud in procuring note.

3. Evidence of fraud in procuring the execution of a negotiable instrument shifts the burden of proof as to the good faith of a purchaser thereof before maturity, and is admissible for that purpose, but of itself in no way tends to establish bad faith on the part of such purchaser.

Bills and notes — execution — care.

4. Those who execute negotiable paper and set it afloat are chargeable with a much higher degree of diligence and caution than is chargeable to those who purchase such paper in due and regular course of business.

Same — purchaser — duty of inquiry.

5. The purchaser of negotiable paper in due course, and before maturity, is under no duty to make inquiry as to the title to such paper, fair and regular on its face, nor is he under any duty to inquire into the consideration given for the note, or of the transaction out of which it arose. He is only chargeable with facts which actually come to his knowledge; that is, actual knowledge of a defect in the title, want of consideration, or such facts as would constitute a defense to the note as between the maker and original payee, or actual knowledge of such facts and circumstances as would lead an honest and fair business man to make further inquiry, and which inquiry, if made, would lead to the discovery of the fraud, defect, and defenses.

Appeal — instruction — negotiable paper — other transactions.

6. An instruction to the jury that, if they find from the facts of the particular transaction, "or knowledge of other like transactions of McLaughlin Brothers, that the plaintiff is not acting honestly, then they had a right to find that he did not act honestly in the purchase of this note," was erroneous, in that it authorized the jury to infer that the purchase of a negotiable instrument was fraudulent where they found that such purchaser had subsequently done some act they did not consider honest and fair.

Costs — taking deposition — cross-examination.

7. Where a party failed to appear at the time and place designated in a notice for taking deposition and cross-examine the witness, and thereafter duly and regularly served notice of the taking of the deposition of the same witness, and in pursuance thereof took the deposition of such witness, which consisted of a cross-examination of the witness on the deposition previously given, the costs and expense of taking such subsequent deposition should not be allowed as a part of the costs of the case.

(Stewart, Ch. J., dissents from prop. 7.)

(November 27, 1911.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Kootenai County in defendants' favor in an action upon a promissory note. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Reed & Boughton and Robert H. Elder, for appellant:

Evidence of the defendant's witnesses which tended to show the condition of the horse and the alleged fraud surrounding the inception of the contract upon which the note was based was inadmissible.

Bothwell v. Corum, 135 Ky. 766, 123 S. W. 291; Goetz v. Bank of Kansas City, 119 U. S. 551, 30 L. ed. 515, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; American Nat. Bank v. Lundy, 21 N. D. 167, 129 N. W. 99; Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 296, 40 Am. St. Rep. 373, 24 S. W. 148; Canon v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 348, 91 N. W. 585; Sinkler v. Siljan, 136 Cal. 356, 68 Pac. 1024; Bradwell v. Pryor, 221 Ill. 602, 77 N. E. 1115; Greer v. Yosti, 56 Mo. 307; Lehman v. Press, 106 Iowa, 389, 76 N. W. 818; Borgess Invest. Co. v. Vette, 142 Mo. 560, 64 Am. St. Rep. 567, 44 S. W. 754; Merritt v. Boyden, 191 Ill. 136, 85 Am. St. Rep. 246, 60 N. E. 907; Gray v. Goode, 72 Ill. App. 504; Kent v. Barnes, 72 Ill. App. 617; Metcalf v. Draper, 98 Ill. App. 399; Mann v. Merchants' Loan & T. Co. 100 Ill. App. 224; Merchants' Bank v. McClelland, 9 Colo. 608, 13 Pac. 723; Tourtelotte v. Brown, 1 Colo. App. 408, 29 Pac. 130; Coors v. German Nat. Bank, 14 Colo. 202, 7 L.R.A. 845, 23 Pac. 328; Rand v. Pantagraph Stationery Co. 1 Colo. App. 270, 28 Pac. 661; Swift v. Smith, 102 U. S. 442, 26 L. ed. 193; First State Sav. Bank v. Webster, 121 Mich. 149, 79 N. W. 1068; Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 31, 64 Am. St. Rep. 327, 67 N. W. 1105; Reeves v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 39 Wis. 520; Wetmore v. Markoe, 196 U. S. 48, 49 L. ed. 390, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 172, 2 Ann. Cas. 265.

Messrs. Whitla & Nelson, for respondents:

Defendants are absolutely entitled to the cross-examination of the plaintiff.

Pfefferhorn v. Seefield, 66 Minn. 223, 68 N. W. 1072; Strom v. Montana C. R. Co. 81 Minn. 346, 84 N. W. 46; Graham v. McReynolds, 88 Tenn. 240, 12 S. W. 547.

Defendants' signatures to the note were secured by fraud, and they were entitled to recover.

City Nat. Bank v. Jordan, 139 Iowa, 499, 117 N. W. 758; Union Nat. Bank v. Winsor, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

101 Minn. 470, 118 Am. St. Rep. 641, 112 N. W. 999, 11 Ann. Cas. 204; Union Invest. Co. v. Wells, 39 Can. S. C. 625, 11 Ann. Cas. 33; Winter v. Nobs, 19 Idaho, 18, 112 Pac. 525; Park v. Winsor, 115 Minn. 256, 132 N. W. 264; Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Houtchens, 64 Wash. 275, 116 Pac. 866.

In a proper case the expense of taking depositions is a proper item of costs to be allowed to the prevailing party.

11 Cyc. 121; Pyne v. National S. S. Co. 44 N. Y. S. R. 791, 18 N. Y. Supp. 166; Finch v. Calvert, 13 How. Pr. 13; Cox v. Charleston F. & M. Ins. Co. 3 Rich. L. 331, 45 Am. Dec. 771; Smith v. Servia, 59 Hun, 552, 13 N. Y. Supp. 941.

Allshtie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The motion to dismiss the appeals in this case must be denied, and it is so ordered. On the 29th day of March, 1906, the respondents herein executed and delivered their promissory note to McLaughlin Brothers as part payment of the purchase price of a stallion. Thereafter and prior to the maturity of the note, and on about the 5th day of February, 1910, McLaughlin Brothers sold and delivered the note to the appellant herein, who thereafter commenced this action against the makers for the collection of the principal and interest thereon. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict was rendered for the defendants, and a judgment was thereupon entered accordingly.

A large number of errors have been assigned, but most of the questions presented have been considered by this court and passed upon in Winter v. Nobs, 19 Idaho, 18, 112 Pac. 525, and Park v. Johnson, 20 Idaho, 548, 119 Pac. 52. We will therefore only consider such questions as have not received consideration in the foregoing cases.

It seems that the deposition of the appellant was taken in conformity with the statute, at Columbus, Ohio, on the 3d day of February, 1911; that at the time of the taking of the deposition no one appeared on behalf of the respondents and no cross-examination was had. Thereafter, and about the 27th of March, the attorneys for the defendants served notice on the attorneys for plaintiff that they would take the deposition of the plaintiff at Columbus, Ohio, on the 6th day of May following. The deposition was thereafter taken in conformity with the notice. When this deposition was taken, however, on the part of the defendants, it was taken as if it were a cross-examination of the witness on his previous deposition. The questions were propounded in the form of cross-examination, and the witness's attention was called to the evidence previously given by him. When the case came on for trial, the plaintiff introduced the deposition containing the evidence he had first given. Before the plaintiff rested his case, the defendants offered "deposition on cross-examination." The plaintiff's counsel objected to the introduction of this deposition as a deposition on cross-examination, and insisted that, if it be admitted at all, it should go in as a part of defendants' evidence when they came to make their defense. The court overruled the objection and admitted the deposition, and the appellant now urges the ruling as erroneous. We think as a matter of procedure it was error for the court to admit this deposition as a part of the plaintiff's case. While it was taken on the theory that it was a cross-examination of a witness, and was in fact so treated, it had not been taken at the time and in the manner authorized for the cross-examination of the witness. If the defendants failed and neglected to appear at the time noticed and cross-examine the witness, it was their own fault. If, on the other hand, they saw fit to take the deposition of the witness for their own use as a part of their own case, they had a right to do so, but they should have been compelled to introduce this evidence as a part of their own case. We do not think, however, that the error thus committed calls for a reversal of the judgment. Had the plaintiff been nonsuited after the introduction of this deposition, and without putting the defendants on their defense, there might be some merit to the contention made by the appellant, and there might be prejudicial error under such circumstances. In the case at bar, however, the bulk of the record consists of evidence introduced on the part of the defendants, and so the jury had the entire case before them for their consideration.

It is contended that the court erred "in admitting the evidence of the defendants' witnesses which tended to show the condition of the horse and the alleged fraud surrounding the inception of the contract upon which the note was based." In other words, the appellant contends that evidence of failure of consideration or fraud in procuring the note could not properly go to the jury and had no bearing on the case, unless the defendants could successfully show that the plaintiff, who purchased the note before maturity, either "had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith." This contention is substantially correct. Winter v. Nobs, 19 Idaho, 26, 112 Pac. 527. The difficulty, however, with 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) which appellant is confronted in the case at bar, is that the facts and circumstances in the present case tending to show "actual knowledge" and "bad faith" were sufficient to go to the jury, and were likewise sufficient to justify them in concluding and finding as a matter of fact that the plaintiff either had actual knowledge of the fraud and deception that had been practised and the infirmity in the instrument, or had knowledge of such facts and circumstances that would have led him, if acting in good faith, to ascertain the true situation. The frequency with which these cases are arising and finding their way into this court leads us to suggest that mere evidence of fraud or deception in procuring negotiable promissory notes which appear fair on their face is not sufficient to raise any presumption against the purchaser of such paper; nor should such facts be given any consideration whatever by a jury in determining the other fact, namely, that the holder of the instrument had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith. This latter fact is an independent fact, which must be determined upon evidence wholly independent of the original transaction in which the note was executed. Bona fide holders of negotiable paper are entitled to absolute protection, and cannot be in the least chargeable with any fraud to which they were not parties, that was practised in procuring the note, or in the contract out of which the note arose.

Evidence of fraud in procuring the execution of a note shifts the burden of proof as to good faith, but of itself in no way tends to establish the bad faith of a purchaser of such note.

Those who execute negotiable paper and set it afloat are chargeable with a much higher degree of diligence and caution than is chargeable to those who purchase such paper in the due and regular course of commercial transactions. The frequency with which such defenses as the one set up in this case are being pleaded reminds us that there is either a grave need of invoking the criminal statutes of this state against persons who are procuring the execution of negotiable paper through fraud, deception, and misrepresentation, or else there is gross negligence on the part of many who are executing such paper, and sending it broadcast in the channels of commerce.

The appellant has assigned a great many errors against the action of the court in admitting certain evidence offered by respondents. We have examined the record in this respect, and do not think there was any prejudicial or substantial error committed by the court in the admission of evidence. These questions have all been considered and passed upon in Park v. Johnson and Winter v. Nobs, supra.

The appellant has assigned as error the action of the court in giving a number of instructions, and in modifying certain instructions requested by the appellant. We shall only notice two of these instructions. Instruction No. 22 is, to say the least, misleading, and we do not think should be given in such a case. It is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that a person who, in purchasing negotiable paper, wilfully remains ignorant of facts which are apparent from the transaction, or refrains from making inquiry lest he should become possessed of knowledge of infirmities in the title of the paper which he is about to purchase, shows lack of good faith; and a plaintiff cannot say that he did not know the facts regarding the title of negotiable paper when such lack of knowledge is predicated upon an evasion of plain duty, and you have a right to consider all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged purchase of this note in determining whether or not the plaintiff wilfully refrained from making inquiry regarding the title of McLaughlin Brothers to the note in controversy, in order not to learn anything regarding their title thereto; and the court charges you that wilful ignorance, if it be shown by the evidence, involves bad faith, and is as binding upon the plaintiff as a positive knowledge of the defendants' title would have been." The foregoing instruction is calculated to mislead a jury. They are likely to infer from such an instruction that the purchaser of a negotiable instrument cannot "wilfully refrain from making inquiry regarding the title" to a note he is about to purchase; in other words, that it is the duty of such a purchaser to always make inquiry as to the title. Such is not the law. The purchaser of negotiable paper in due course, and before maturity, is under no duty to make inquiry as to the title to paper, fair and regular on its face, nor is he under any duty to inquire into the consideration given for the note, or of the transaction out of which it arose. McNight v. Parsons, 136 Iowa, 390, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 718, 125 Am. St. Rep. 265, 113 N. W. 858, 15 Ann. Cas. 665. He is only chargeable with facts which actually come to his knowledge. Those facts may be actual knowledge of a defect in the title, want of consideration, or such facts as would constitute a defense to the note as between the maker and original payee; or actual knowledge of such facts and circumstances as would lead an honest and fair business man to make further inquiry, and 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which inquiry, if made, would lead to the discovery of the fraud, defect, and defenses. In other words, it must be such actual knowledge of the defenses, or such actual knowledge of facts and circumstances, that a failure to make further inquiry would charge a reasonably prudent business man with bad faith and dishonest motives. Winter v. Nobs, 19 Idaho, 18, 112 Pac. 525; Park v. Johnson, 20 Idaho, 548, 119 Pac. 52; Bothwell v. Corum, 135 Ky. 766, 123 S. W. 291. The first part of the instruction with which we are dealing proceeded upon the correct view of the law, but the vice is to be found in the closing part of the instruction. In view of the fact, however, that the court had correctly instructed the jury on this subject and in consideration of the nature of the evidence that was submitted to the jury, we are satisfied that the jury were not misled in this respect.

The other instruction which we think was erroneous is No. 26, and is as follows: "The question of honesty of the plaintiff in this transaction is one of the things by which you are to be guided in determining his bona fides, and if you find from the facts and circumstances given in evidence surrounding this transaction, and the knowledge of the plaintiff of other like transactions of McLaughlin Brothers, if shown in evidence, that the plaintiff is not acting honestly, then you have a right to find that he did not act honestly in the alleged purchase of this note." This instruction advised the jury that, if they found from the facts of this particular transaction, "or knowledge of other like transactions of McLaughlin Brothers, that the plaintiff is not acting honestly, then they had a right to find that he did not act honestly in the purchase of this note." This was erroneous. The jury might conclude that the holder of a note had acted dishonestly with the maker in some respect, as, for example, a failure to make the proper indorsement of interest or principal paid, or a failure to defer bringing a suit for a given length of time, or in any number of respects, and yet there be no evidence whatever that he acted dishonestly or in bad faith in the purchase of the note itself. However dishonestly the purchaser of a note may have acted subsequent to the purchase thereof, that fact alone would not justify the conclusion that he acted in bad faith or dishonestly in the purchase of the note.

The appellant has also prosecuted an appeal from the order of the district court in taxing costs. It appears that the respondents claimed costs in the sum of $15.15 for taking the deposition of appellant which has been hereinbefore considered. The specific items for which this $15.15 is charged do not appear in the memorandum of costs. The cost bill reads: "Expenses in securing deposition of Edgar J. Vaughn for notary fee, stenographer, securing attendance of witness, swearing witness, and return of witness, and transcribing testimony." In the first place, this is not properly itemized to show what was a legal charge and what was not; and, in the second place, this extra expense was incurred by reason of the failure of the defendants to appear at the time and place specified when and where the deposition was taken and cross-examine the witness. This also entailed extra trouble and expense on the plaintiff in attending and having counsel present a second time for the taking of this deposition. For these reasons this item should have been stricken from the cost bill, and it will be so ordered.

We do not think that any error which has been committed is of such a nature or character as to require a reversal of the judgment. From a view of the whole record, we are satisfied that the same result would have been obtained and the same conclusion would have been reached by the jury had the errors hereinbefore pointed out not been committed, and we are satisfied that the evidence adduced in this case justified the verdict returned. The judgment should therefore be modified to the extent of striking therefrom the item of $15.15 taxed as costs, and as so modified, is hereby affirmed. Costs of appeal will be equally divided between appellant and respondents.

Cause remanded, with directions to modify the judgment as herein indicated.

Sullivan, J., concurs.

Stewart, Ch. J., dissenting:

I concur in the majority opinion upon the merits of the case, but I dissent to that portion of the opinion in relation to the costs disallowed for the taking of the deposition for cross-examination of Edgar J. Vaughn, the plaintiff, and also in dividing the costs upon this appeal.

The only record presented to this court as to the costs for taking the cross-examination of Edgar J. Vaughn consists in the cost bill itself and the affidavit supporting the same, made by E. V. Boughton, and the affidavit of E. R. Whitla in opposition thereto. The item as shown upon the cost bill is as follows: "Expense in securing deposition of Edgar J. Vaughn for notary fee, stenographer, securing attendance of witness, swearing witness, return of witness, and transcribing testimony, $15.15." This court disallows this item. It appears from the transcript that this item was incurred in taking the second deposition upon 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the cross-examination of the witness Vaughn. The evidence of said Vaughn so taken by a deposition was admissible, and considered proper, relevant, material, and proper cross-examination, and properly admitted in evidence at the trial. That being true, it should make no difference in the allowance of the expense of same as costs whether it was taken at the same time that the original deposition was taken or afterward, because, if taken when the original deposition was taken, the same expense would necessarily have been incurred in taking and certifying the same by the stenographer, and would have been a proper charge as costs in said case, and, if such evidence was proper and thereafter taken and the same expense incurred, I can see no reason why the same should be disallowed as costs of the trial. It is admitted in the evidence of E. V. Boughton, filed in support of the motion to retax, that at least $6 could properly be taxed as such costs of said deposition, and, under this admission, there can be no reason given that I can see why at least $6 should not be allowed. The only additional costs that necessarily were incurred in cross-examining the witness at a time different from the time when the deposition was originally taken was in swearing the witness and certifying to his testimony by the notary. The act of the notary in writing down the questions and answers was the same as would necessarily have been incurred had such examination been taken at the time the original deposition was taken, and would have been properly chargeable as costs.

I am unable, also, to concur in the majority opinion which divides the costs of this appeal between plaintiff and respondents. The main appeal upon the merits of this case is decided in the majority opinion in favor of the defendants, while upon the appeal from the order overruling the motion to retax the costs the order of the trial court is modified and the item of $15.15 is disallowed. The transcript consists of 237 pages, 210 of which contains the record of the appeal upon the merits, while only 10 pages of the transcript is devoted to the question of the appeal from the order of the trial court refusing to retax the costs, and, even allowing the record containing the cross-examination of the witness Vaughn as a necessary part of the appeal from the order, the total record thus made would be 27 pages, making at most the record on appeal from the order 27 pages. Yet the majority opinion taxes the respondents with half the costs of this appeal when the record necessary to have presented the appeal from the order was only 27 pages, while the record upon the merits, which also necessarily includes the deposition of the same witness, amounts to 237 pages, and yet the appellant is only charged with costs upon this appeal the same as is charged to the respondents. I cannot agree with this principle of adjustment of costs. To my mind it is unfair and unjust, and may often lead to injustice in disposing of the question of costs.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

COMPTOGRAPH COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

BURROUGHS ADDING MACHINE COM-PANY.

(Two cases.)

(105 C. C. A. 533, 183 Fed. 321.)

* Patent — license — renunciation — aiding infringer.

The mere filing by a licensee under a patent who is not in default under his contract, of a brief interpreting adversely to the patent the record in a suit which the patentee had instituted against an alleged infringer, is not such a repudiation, renunciation, or forfeiture of the license that the licensee can no longer enforce rights under it, or as to justify a court of equity in decreeing its cancellation.

(October 14, 1910.)

Note. — Patent: forfeiture of license by aiding infringement or attempt to defeat patent.

But two other cases have been found which involve this question, and they lend support to the position taken in COMPTOGRAPH CO. v. BURROUGHS ADDING MACH. CO.

As a general rule a violation of the patent by abuse of the patented privilege outside of the license does not work a forfeiture of the right conveyed, in the absence of a specific provision to that effect in the contract creating it. In such circumstances a forfeiture can only occur when the licensee has taken a stand against the patent, and has assumed such a hostile attitude toward it as amounts to a repudiation of the right conveyed by the license. The mere fact that in the course of business the licensee has infringed the patent will not work a revocation, and especially in a case where the license covers a distinct and specific privilege which has been paid for once for all, and conveys without further fee or consideration rights which are fixed and definite. Such a privilege, conveyed absolutely and for a consideration paid, becomes a clear vested right, and to the extent to which it has become so vested a court of equity, as well as a court of law, is bound to recognize it. Such is 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Illinois dismissing bills filed to restrain infringement of a patent for a tabulating machine and for the cancellation of a license under said patent. Affirmed.

Statement by Grosscup, Circuit Judge:

The bill, No. 1674, was to restrain infringement of letters patent No. 628,176, issued to Dorr E. Felt, July 4, 1899, for a tabulating machine; to which appellee pleaded that it was licensed under said patent, and, on account of said license, could not be held for infringement—counsel for appellant stating upon the record that appellant would not claim that appellee had infringed any of the claims of the patent in suit other than those covered by the plea; and upon this plea issue was joined and proof had. The decree appeared from held that the plea was proved, and dismissed the bill for want of equity.

The bill, No. 1679, was for cancellation of the license above mentioned; to which a general demurrer was filed, which, upon hearing, was sustained and a decree entered dismissing the bill. Practically, the same questions are presented on the appeals in both cases. The two appeals will therefore be considered together in this opinion. Further facts are stated in the opinion.

the doctrine of Wood v. Wells, 6 Fish. Pat. Cas. 382, Fed. Cas. No. 17,967, holding that, although a licensee to attach a certain invention to carriages and to sell the carriages in a finished state only does not grant the right to deal in the fixtures as articles of merchandise, nevertheless, if the licensee does so deal in these fixtures he sells in violation of the patent, but not in breach of any condition of the license which will work a forfeiture of the latter.

So, a person who receives from a patentee a grant of the right to use one machine in a certain quarry, and no other place, does not forfeit his right thereby given to use one machine, by reason of the fact that he allows it to be used by another person in another quarry, although he thereby becomes an infringer; but his right under another provision of the contract, that he shall have the right to use additional machines upon payment to the patentee of specified sums, is forfeited when he further infringes the patent by placing in his quarry infringing machines designed by another; and, after being notified that such machines constitute an infringement, takes from their author an agreement to defend them against claims of infringement. Steam Cutter Co. v. Sheldon, 10 Blatchf. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 13,331.

L. A. W.

Argued before Grosscup, Baker, and Seaman, Circuit Judges.

Mr. John W. Munday for appellants.

Messrs. Edward Rector and Robert H. Parkinson for appellees.

Grosscup, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion:

The patent involved in these suits was before this court in the case of the Universal Adding Mach. Co. v. Comptograph Co. 77 C. C. A. 227, 146 Fed. 981, and was held invalid on the ground that it was either anticipated by the Hiett and Cable patent, which had been issued before this patent was applied for, or that, accepting the contention, that the invention was conceived in 1890, so as to carry the concept back of the Hiett and Cable patent, the same had been abandoned by nonuse. The correctness of that decision is not involved in this case; nor is any evidence brought into this case that was not in that case, except as it may bear upon the question of whether the license agreement of January 20th, 1904, has been renounced, repudiated, or forfeited by the conduct of appellee and its counsel in that case, as contended for now by appellant.

The original license agreement is admitted. The contention is that it has been renounced. The agreement, as executed, after reciting that appellant is the owner of the letters patent above described, relating to adding machines equipped with transversely movable wide-frame paper carriages, and that appellee's assignor, the American Arithmometer Company, had been and was then engaged in the manufacture and sale of adding machines employing transversely movable wide-frame paper carriages, claimed by the appellant to embody a material part of the invention patented, in consideration of the payment of the sum of $5,000 in cash by the American Arithmometer Company to appellant, releases and discharges the said American Arithmometer Company, its agents, and customers from all claims whatsoever, growing out of said letters patent, on account of the machines manufactured by the said American Arithmometer Company prior to the 1st day of January, 1904; and grants to the said American Arithmometer Company an exclusive license, except as against appellant's right to manufacture, use, and sell such machines, for the full term of the patent. The agreement then further provides as follows:

"3. Said first party (appellant) agrees to promptly bring suit upon said letters patent against existing and future infringers thereof, and to diligently and vigorously prosecute such suit or suits to a final determination, for the purpose of judicially determining the scope and validity of said letters patent and of suppressing infringements thereof and securing a monopoly of said invention to the parties hereto.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"4. Said second party (American Arithmometer Company, appellee's assignor) agrees, upon the terms and conditions herein specified, to pay the first party the following royalties upon all machines embodying the invention described and claimed in said letters patent which said second party may manufacture on and after the 1st day of January, 1904, and during the full term of said letters patent, and all reissues and extensions thereof:

"a. On all machines manufactured by the second party during the pendency of the first suit of the aforesaid litigation, and prior to a final determination thereof, the sum of $1 per machine.

"b. On all machines manufactured by the second party after a final determination of the first suit of said litigation which shall result in an adjudication establishing the validity and scope of said letters patent in such manner as to control and monopolize under it all adding machines employing transversely-movable wide-frame paper carriages of the general nature and purpose of the machines now being manufactured by the parties hereto, the sum of $10 per machine until an aggregate royalty at that rate of the sum of $200,000 shall have been paid by the second party to the first party.

"c. On all machines manufactured by the second party after the payment of said sum of $200,000, and during the remainder of the term of said letters patent and any reissues and extensions thereof, the sum of $5 per machine.

"5. Said second party agrees to pay the first party a minimum sum of $10,000 prior to a final determination of the first suit of the aforesaid litigation, on account of the royalties provided for in clause 4 hereof, but the payment of $5,000 upon the execution of this instrument, as hereinbefore provided, shall be considered a part of and an advance payment upon said sum of $10,000. Said final determination of the first suit shall be secured, if possible, on or before December 31, 1905, but if not had by such date, party of the second party shall be relieved of the payment of any royalties whatever upon any machines manufactured by it between December 31, 1905, and the date when such final determination shall be had."

After making provision for the keeping of true, full and accurate accounts by appellee's assignor under the license, with prompt remittance for royalties due thereunder, the license agreement further provides: "7. This contract is based upon the assumption that the aforesaid letters patent are good and valid in law, and that they can be and will be sustained by the courts, and given a construction which will secure to the parties hereto a substantial monopoly of the manufacture, use, and sale of all adding machines employing a transversely movable wide-frame paper carriage, and is to be construed and enforced between the parties accordingly; and if, as a final result of the litigation hereinbefore mentioned, or as a final result of any subsequent litigation upon said letters patent, said letters patent shall be declared invalid, or shall be so construed by the court as to fail to substantially cover and control all adding machines employing such transversely movable wide-frame paper carriages, then, and in such event, said second party shall have the right to surrender this agreement and license, and be relieved of any further obligations thereunder."

Under this license agreement, appellee and its assignor has paid appellant $12,209, which admittedly covers all the royalties due or claimed to be due thereunder, at the time that the conduct took place which is said to have been a repudiation, renunciation, or forfeiture, upon the part of appellee, of the license; and up to that time, too, appellee is admitted to have fully performed all its obligations to appellant under the license contract.

The conduct of appellee, urged as a repudiation, renunciation, or forfeiture of the license, was the filing of a brief by appellee's counsel in this court, on behalf of appellee, in the suit of appellant against the Universal Adding Mach. Co. supra, brought by appellant pursuant to, and in accordance with, the terms of the license contract, and determined first in favor of appellant in the circuit court, and subsequently, on appeal, against appellant in this court, as above stated; the brief being filed by leave of this court, obtained upon application of counsel for appellee, of which due notice was given to the parties in the then pending case, including counsel for appellant.

The record before us does not disclose any intention, upon the part of appellee, in the filing of that brief, to consciously repudiate, renounce, or forfeit the license contract; on the contrary, it was clearly stated that they were appearing as persons interested in the license contract and under the terms of that license. The record does not disclose that appellee took any part in the making of the record in the case of the Universal Adding Mach. Co. v. Comptograph Co. So far as anything going into the record was concerned, in the way of facts upon which the judgment of the court was to be invoked, nothing was either added or subtracted by the brief filed by appellee. The conduct of appellee was confined to an interpretation solely of that record for the benefit of the court. There is nothing in the record before us showing that the appearance of appellee, by brief, resulted in the appellant's changing its position in any respect; all that appellant did, after appellee's brief was filed, was to write a letter to appellee, stating that it took the filing of that brief as a repudiation and renunciation of the license; to which no reply was sent. True, appellee in its brief interpreted the evidence showing facts different from the interpretation put upon the same evidence by appellant; and true, also, appellee, in its brief, stated the law applicable to the evidence differently from the law as stated by appellant; but, unless a licensee, situated as this licensee was, must remain silent at the peril of losing his license, even though, thereby, the court may be misled into misinterpreting the facts or misapplying the law, this appellant has set up no sufficient answer to the plea of appellee in case No. 1674, nor has it set out in its bill, in case No. 1679, facts which would warrant a court of equity in decreeing cancellation of the license contract. It is, therefore, the doctrine of the law that a licensee, situated as this licensee was situated, may not inform the court of its view as to what interpretation should be put upon the evidence, and what application should be made of the law (having had no part in the making of the record), except at the peril of losing its license.

We think not. No case is called to our attention that applies the doctrine that a licensee or tenant may not deny the landlord's title, to cases like this. Indiana Mfg. Co. v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 83 C. C. A. 343, 154 Fed. 365, is cited, emphasis being laid upon the sentence in that case that the patentee has the right to the licensee's "silence respecting the validity and prima facie scope of the patent." But in that case, the licensee was in default on its contract, and was refusing to pay the stipulated royalties on the ground that the patent was invalid; the court simply holding that in such a suit, to enforce the contract, the patentee, like the landlord, was entitled to have the case heard, as if the contract, as between the parties thereto, was conclusively presumed to be valid and binding. Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 43, 7 L. ed. 596, was the case of a plaintiff seeking to obtain possession of land, which had been in the possession of the defendant and his father continuously for over thirty years—five years adverse possession under the law of the state being sufficient to defeat the landlord's title—and defendant, during all that time having refused to admit that he held under plaintiff's title. The court held that such adverse possession defeated plaintiff's title, and, dealing with the limitation within which the suit must be brought, used the language quoted by appellant, to wit: "If the tenant disclaims the tenure, claims the fee adversely in right of a third person or his own, or attorns to another, his possession then becomes a tortious one, by the forfeiture of his right. The landlord's right of entry is complete, and he may sue at any time within the period of limitation; but he must lay his demise of a day subsequent to the termination of the tenancy, for before that he had no right of entry."

But the "disclaimer" or "attornment to another," here spoken of, is, of itself, a breach of the tenant's contract relations with the landlord, if any such relation once existed,—a breach, too, that if persisted in for a sufficient length of time would transfer, by operation of law, the title from the landlord to the tenant, and for that reason alone gives a right of action to recover possession the moment it occurs. Steam Cutter Co. v. Sheldon, 10 Blatchf. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 13, 331, was a license to use a patented invention in a single machine in the licensee's quarry, and nowhere else; provided, however, that additional machines might be used upon the payment of certain additional stipulated sums. Covering the single machine to be used in the quarry, the royalty was paid, and thereby the license fully performed; but without paying the additional sums, the defendant undertook to use additional machines and thereupon was sued for infringement; the court holding that the license contract was divisible, the portion relating to the single machine in the quarry becoming absolute upon the payment of the stipulated royalty, and the portion of the contract relating to possible additional machines being merely options that, upon failure of acceptance of payment when the machines were used, constituted such use of the machines, independently of the original machines, infringements of the plaintiff's patent. Certainly, no such proposition as appellant contends for here was involved in that case.

The true principle, it seems to us, is set forth by the supreme court in Blight v. Rochester, 7 Wheat. 547, 5 L. ed. 519 (partly quoted by appellant). The attempt there was to apply the principle of legal policy, that forbids a party denying the title under which he has received a conveyance, to vendor and vendee. That principle of legal policy is stated as follows: "If he is bound in law to admit a title which has no existence in reality, it is not on the doctrine of estoppel that he is bound. It is because, by receiving a conveyance of a title which is deduced from Dunlap, the moral policy of the law will not permit him to contest that title. This principle originates in the relation between lessor and lessee, and so far as respects them, is well established, and ought to be maintained. The title of the lessee is in fact the title of the lessor. He comes in by virtue of it, holds by virtue of it, and rests upon it to maintain and justify his possession. He professes to have no independent right in himself, and it is a part of the very essence of the contract under which he claims that the paramount ownership of the lessor shall be acknowledged during the continuance of the lease, and that possession shall be surrendered at its expiration. He cannot be allowed to controvert the title of the lessor, without disparaging his own, and he cannot set up the title of another without violating that contract by which he obtained and holds possession, and breaking that faith which he has pledged and the obligation of which is still continuing, and in full operation."

Or, to put the doctrine on a more practical basis, where suit is brought by the landlord against the tenant to enforce the landlord's title, recognized in the contract under which the tenant obtained possession, the court will not, at the instance of, or as a matter of defense by the tenant, put the landlord in the position of proving his title before he can collect his rent,—the tenant, in the meantime, remaining in a position where he may eat off of the stock, while the title of the one who gave him the stock is being settled.

But neither the moral policy, nor the practical consideration, on which this doctrine is founded, is present in this case. The suit in which appellee appeared by brief was not the case of the licensor against the licensee to enforce the contract. No license money was due under the contract. There was no refusal to pay license money. There was no putting of the licensor, as against the licensee, to prove his title while the licensee was eating off the stock. There was no reason or moral policy why the brief should not be filed. Indeed, appellee was standing squarely upon its contract with the appellant. It had, as assignee of the American Arithmometer Company, settled and paid up for all past infringements; it had settled and paid upon for all royalties thus far accrued; it agreed that in case the patent embodied a substantial monopoly of adding machines employing a transversely movable wide-frame paper carriage, and after such monopoly had been judicially determined, it would pay additional royalties. These royalties were large; the monopoly itself, if upheld, was extremely valuable; and the question whether the monopoly had been judicially determined was therefore a matter of deep consequence to appellee. Why may not the appellee, without violation of its contract, or violation of any ethical duty it owes to appellant, contribute toward clarifying the vision of the court by which this judicial determination is to be made both right and final? We see nothing in the conduct of appellee that is a renunciation, repudiation, or forfeiture of its contract; on the contrary we see simply a precaution upon its part that the judgment of the court, upon which its additional obligations and its additional advantages alike depend, shall be as free from error as a full discussion of the record before the court can make the judgment, that is to follow, free from error.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed in each case.

Petition for rehearing denied November 18, 1910.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

JOHN J. HOPPER, Appt.,

v.

J. GABRIEL BRITT et al., Board of Elections of City of New York, Respts.

(203 N. Y. 144, 96 N. E. 371.)

Voter — ballot — single appearance of nominee — validity.

Under constitutional provisions that officers shall be chosen by the electors, and that no one shall be disfranchised except by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers, a statute is void which establishes a blanket ballot with a separate column for the nominees of the several parties and independent nominees, but provides that in case a candidate is nominated by more than one party, his name shall appear only once on the ticket, since it discriminates against certain of the electors who may wish to vote for him in the casting of their ballots.

(October 10, 1911.)

A PPEAL by relator from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of a Special Term for New York County, Part I., granting writ of mandamus directing defendants to provide sample and official ballots for a general election, in accordance with the provisions of a former election law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Clarence J. Shearn and Herbert R. Limburg, for appellant:

Mandamus is a proper remedy.

State ex rel. Lloyd v. Rotwitt, 15 Mont. 29, 37 Pac. 845; Baird v. King County (People ex rel. Baird v. Brown) 138 N. Y. 95, 20 L.R.A. 81, 33 N. E. 827; Markland v. Scully, 131 N. Y. Supp. 364.

The portions of the Levy bill (chap. 946, Laws of 1911) which amend §§ 331, 368, and 134 of the election law, are clearly unconstitutional and void.

Re McClosky, 21 Misc. 365, 47 N. Y. Supp. 294; Re Bulger, 48 Misc. 584, 97 N. Y. Supp. 232; Re Independent Nominations, 186 N. Y. 278, 79 N. E. 708; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 393; People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 173 N. Y. 115, 65 N. E. 956; People ex rel. Goring v. Wappinger's Falls, 144 N. Y. 616, 39 N. E. 641; Re Madden, 148 N. Y. 136, 42 N. E. 534; Fernbacher v. Roosevelt, 90 Hun, 441, 35 N. Y. Supp. 898.

Note. — Constitutionality of legislation restricting candidate to one place on ballot.

The authorities are in conflict as to the constitutionality of a statute permitting a candidate to have his name appear but once on the official ballot.

In Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, North Dakota, and Washington similar statutes have been held constitutional.

The only reported decision besides HOPPER v. BRITT in which the constitutionality of such legislation is denied is Murphy v. Curry, 137 Cal. 481, 59 L.R.A. 98, 70 Pac. 461, where it was held by a divided court that the statute was an unconstitutional interference with the rights of political parties and candidates.

The court argued that as the Australian ballot law saw fit to recognize political parties as entities, and to circumscribe their spheres of action, it became its duty to treat all justly and impartially; that it 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was unjust, discriminating, and illegal to deprive a political party of the right to place the name of its nominee upon the official ballot.

As to the rights of the nominee, the court said that as it must be conceded "that a political party has the right to nominate (with a limitation of legal qualification) anyone for office whom it sees fit to select, it follows that the nominee, under our present ballot system, has the corresponding right to have his name placed upon the ticket as the nominee of such political party or parties, and upon the state is imposed the correlative duty of seeing that this is done."

In Com. ex rel. McGowan v. Martin, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 645, and in Com. ex rel. Smith v. McCormick, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 117, it was said that such a statute was probably unconstitutional, though the question was not decided, as that provision of the statute was held void and incapable of execution, as being inconsistent with other portions of Messrs. A. S. Gilbert and Julius M. Mayer also for appellant.

Mr. Albert C. Bard, for Citizens' Union:

The ballot provisions of the statute are unconstitutional because of the arbitrary discrimination between different political organizations with respect to the granting or withholding of a place on the ballot.

Re Callahan, 200 N. Y. 59, 140 Am. St. Rep. 626, 93 N. E. 262; Murphy v. Curry, 137 Cal. 479, 59 L.R.A. 97, 70 Pac. 461.

Messrs. Abram I. Elkus, Terence Farley, and George P. Nicholson, with Mr. Archibald R. Watson, for respondents:

The presumption is that the act is constitutional.

People ex rel. Killen v. Angle, 109 N. Y. 564, 17 N. E. 413; People v. Lochner, 177 N. Y. 145, 101 Am. St. Rep. 773, 69 N. E. 373; People ex rel. Rochester v. Briggs, 50 N. Y. 553.

The act is a reasonable regulation, and is within the legislative discretion.

Re Madden, 148 N. Y. 136, 42 N. E. 534.

Messrs. D-Cady Herrick, R. Burnham Moffat, John B. Stanchfield, Bartow S.

Weeks, and Ellwood M. Rabenold, with Mr. Frank M. Patterson, for Democratic State Committee.

Cullen, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal presents a single issue,—the constitutionality and validity of certain provisions of an act of the legislature of this year (chap. 649, Laws 1911), entitled, "An Act to Amend the Election Law Generally." In this state for some years in the conduct of elections we have had the official ballot. Under the various statutes prescribing the form and character of that ballot, every political party that cast at the preceding election 10,000 votes for governor is entitled to a column on the ballot in which are placed the names of its nominees for the various offices to be filled by election. In the caption of the column is the name of the party and also any emblem that it may select to designate it. Further provision is made for independent nominations; that is to say, any body of electors may by certificate place in nomination for the statute. And in Com. ex rel. Crow v. Richmond, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 647, a peremptory writ of mandamus was awarded directing election officers to place relator's name upon the ballot.

On the other hand, it was held in State ex rel. Shepard v. Superior Ct. 60 Wash. 370, 140 Am. St. Rep. 925, 111 Pac. 233, that such a statute is not unconstitutional as depriving a political party of its right to appear upon the ballot, since the Constitution does not guarantee any rights to political parties as such, but only protects the elector in his right to cast a ballot for the candidate of his choice, whether he be upon one ballot or another.

And it was also held that the statute was not unconstitutional because it may tend to destroy party organizations, since political parties are neither mentioned, protected, nor favored in the Constitution. Ibid.

So, in State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 523, 42 L.R.A. 239, 76 N. W. 482, it was held that the provision limiting the right of a candidate to one place on the official ballot did not violate that section of the Constitution which provides that all votes shall be by ballot, in that it deprived the voter of a political party of his right to vote the ticket of the party to which he belonged.

Nor is the statute permitting the name of a candidate to appear but once on an official ballot, and also providing that no party shall be entitled to a place on such a ballot unless it cast at least 2 per cent of the vote at the preceding election, unconstitutional on the ground that a party cannot nominate the same list of candidates that another party has nominated without losing its right of representation upon the official ballot at the next election. Ibid. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in State ex rel. Bateman v. Bode, 55 Ohio St. 224, 34 L.R.A. 498, 60 Am. St. Rep. 696, 45 N. E. 195, it was held that such a statute does violate the constitutional rights of the voters. (The reasoning of the court is fully set out in the opinion of HOPPER v. BRITT.)

Likewise, in State ex rel. Fisk v. Porter, 13 N. D. 406, 67 L.R.A. 473, 100 N. W. 1080, 3 Ann. Cas. 794, it was held that the statute which prohibited the printing of the name of a candidate for office in more than one column of the official ballot is, as to a candidate who is the nominee of a single political party and the nominee of electors by petition, a reasonable regulation of the manner of exercising the right of suffrage, and is valid and constitutional.

In Todd v. Election Comrs. 104 Mich. 474, 29 L.R.A. 330, 62 N. W. 564, 64 N. W. 496, it was held that the ballot law which permits the name of a candidate to appear on the official ballot but once, although he may be nominated by different parties, is not unconstitutional, although some voters may be unable to vote as voters of other parties can, for all the candidates of their party, without marking the ballot more than once, or to have all the candidates of their party appear on the party ballot. (The reasons assigned by the court are fully set out in the opinion to HOPPER v. BRITT.)

It was also said in the above case that the nominee's sole constitutional guaranty was that his name should appear upon the ballot, and that every voter should have a reasonable opportunity to vote for him.

As to constitutionality of legislation affecting party representation on official ballot, see note to State ex rel. McGrail v. Phelps, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 353. A. L. R.

offices any persons they choose, and select a party name and party emblem. Such independent nominations are given a column or part of a column, as may be requisite, together with a caption giving the name and emblem adopted by the body, the same as in the case of nominations by political parties. For such independent nominations, if the nominees are candidates for state offices, 6,000 or more voters are required to execute the certificate. If for municipal offices, 2,000 in cities of the first class, 1,000 in those of the second class, and 500 in those of the third. Finally, there is a blank column containing no names of candidates, in which the elector may write the name of any person whom he chooses. Prior to the legislation under review, a voter might by a cross mark in the circle at the head of any column vote for all of the nominees contained in such column, and, if he chose to vote for some other person for any particular office, he might make a similar mark opposite the name of that person, if such name was printed on the ballot; or, if not, write the name in the blank column. Physically disabled or illiterate voters, unable to read the ballot, are entitled to assistance in preparing their votes. A narration of further details is unnecessary for the disposition of this case.

It will be seen by this statement that the names of various candidates if placed in nomination by more than one political party or independent body would appear on the ballot in more than one place. By the statute of this year it has been enacted that "if any person shall have been nominated by more than one political party or independent body for the same office, his name shall be printed but once upon the ballot, and shall appear in the party column of the party nominating him which appears first upon said ballot, unless the said candidate shall, by a certificate in writing, duly signed and acknowledged by him, request the custodian of primary records to print his name in the column of some other party or independent body which shall have nominated him, in which event his name shall be printed in such other column only. . . . When the same person has been nominated for the same office to be filled at the election, by more than one party or independent body, the title of such office shall be printed in the columns where his name is not printed, and underneath such title shall be printed in briefer capital type the words, 'See column,' the blank space to contain the name of the party column in which his name is printed, excepting that if any independent body shall have nominated only the candidates of the other party or independent body, no separate column for the independent body in which the candidates' names do not appear shall be printed upon the ballot." Section 12. The relator contends that the statute is unconstitutional as unjustly discriminating between electors in the facilities afforded them for casting their respective votes, because, where candidates are nominated by two or more organizations, they can receive the "straight vote" of the electors of but one organization, while those affiliated with the other organizations which have placed them in nomination are compelled to seek other columns on the ballot, referred to only by name, and there make the necessary additional marks, thus tending to confuse the electors and defeat their intention to vote for all the nominees of their organization. The special term of the supreme court held these provisions of the statute bad, and granted a writ of mandamus to the election officers, commanding the preparation and issue of the ballots in accordance with the old form. The appellate division has, by a divided court, reversed this order and denied the application as a matter of law, and not in the exercise of discretion.

In the consideration of the question before us, we are not unmindful of the principle that, before a court should declare a statute of the legislature invalid, it must be clearly shown that the statute is irreconcilable with the Constitution; nor do we fail to appreciate the hesitation with which courts should hold enactments of the legislature void. It may be true, as urged by the learned counsel for the respondents, that at the present day some courts are disposed to invade the constitutional prerogatives of a co-ordinate branch of the government by regarding what they believe to be the spirit of the Constitution; rather than its express mandates. But necessarily in all Constitutions or other instruments there are certain propositions which the instruments import, as well as those they expressly and in terms assert.

Therefore it is well settled that legislation contravening what the Constitution necessarily implies is void equally with the legislation contravening its express commands. A notable instance of this is the right to condemn private property. Our Constitution has never expressly forbidden taking private property for private use, but only prescribes that, "nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." Art. 1, § 6. Yet the courts early held that this necessarily excluded the right to take such property for private use, with or without compensation (Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 618),—a doctrine which has been steadily adhered to (Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Re Ryers, 72 N. Y. 1, 28 Am. Rep. 88). The only provision of the Federal Constitution on the subject which affects the power of the states is that contained in the 14th Amendment, that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law. It was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co. 196 U. S. 239, 251, 49 L. ed. 462, 467, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 251, 256: "There ought not to be any dispute at this day in reference to the principles which must control in all cases of the condemnation of private property for public purposes. It is fundamental in American jurisprudence that private property cannot be taken by the government, national or state, except for purposes which are of a public character, although such taking be accompanied by compensation to the owner. That principle, this court has said, grows out of the essential nature of all free governments."

The qualifications of voters are prescribed by § 1 of article 2 of the Constitution, and those qualifications are exclusive. By § 5 of the same article it is provided that "all elections by the citizens, except of such town officers as may by law be directed to be otherwise chosen, shall be by ballot, or by such other method as may be prescribed by law, provided that secrecy in voting be preserved." By § 1 of article 1 it is enacted that no member of this state shall be disfranchised unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers. It is therefore clear that the otherwise plenary power granted to the legislature to prescribe the method of conducting elections cannot be so exercised as to disfranchise constitutionally qualified electors, and any system of election that unnecessarily prevents the elector from voting or from voting for the candidate of his choice violates the Constitution. We have said "unnecessarily," for there is no practicable system of conducting elections at which some electors, by sickness or other misfortune, may not be able to vote. Under our law the blanket ballot affords a voter who may be unable to read the ballot, from illiteracy or physical defect, an opportunity to vote by securing assistance, and to every elector the right to vote for whom he chooses by writing the name in the blank column if the name of his candidate is not on the ballot. If these rights were not accorded, the present election law would be unconstitutional. In People ex rel. Goring v. Wappinger's Falls, 144 N. Y. 616, 620, 39 N. E. 641, 642, a vacancy occurred in the office of the police justice of the village. At the next election the official ballot did not contain the name of that office or of any candidate to be voted therefor. The relator received votes at the election, the voters writing his name and the office on the ballot. It was contended that under the language of the election law the votes were invalid. This court held the election good, saying: "The legislature may prescribe regulations for ascertaining the citizens who shall be entitled to exercise the right of suffrage, for that power is given to it by the Constitution. In prescribing regulations for that purpose, or in respect to voting by ballot, it does so subject to, and, presumably, in furtherance of, the constitutional right, and its enactments are to be construed in the broadest spirit of securing to all citizens possessing the necessary qualifications, the right freely to cast their ballots for offices to be filled by election, and the right to have those ballots, when cast in compliance with the law, received and fairly counted. Legislation which fails in such respects and prevents the full exercise of the right as secured by the Constitution is invalid." Indeed, there has been serious criticism on the constitutionality of the system because so many votes had been declared void by reason of the irregularity in the form of the marks made by the voters.

We think the constitutional provisions recited and the provision that certain officers shall be chosen by the electors necessarily further imply that every elector shall have the right to cast his vote with equal facility to that afforded to other voters; or, to speak more accurately, without unnecessary discrimination against him as to the manner of casting his vote. The learned counsel for the respondents have cited the decisions of the courts of several states upholding election laws with provisions similar to that under discussion. The clearest expression of the ground on which the decisions of those courts proceed is found in the opinion of the supreme court of Michigan in Todd v. Election Comrs. 104 Mich. 474, 29 L.R.A. 330, 62 N. W. 564, 64 N. W. 496: "The Constitution does not guarantee that each voter shall have the same facilities with every other voter in expressing his will at the ballot box, or, to apply the rule to the present case, it does not guarantee to each voter the right to express his will by a single mark. . . . It follows, then, that every voter has a reasonable opportunity to vote for him [the candidate]. This is the sole constitutional right guaranteed."

Doubtless the Constitution of this state does not guarantee to each voter the right to express his will by a single mark or in any other particular manner; but, with great deference to the learned court from which we have quoted, in our opinion the Constitution, by providing that certain officers shall be chosen by the electors, does guarantee that each voter shall have the same facilities as any other voter in expressly his will at the ballot box, so far as practicable. Any other principle, in our judgment, would be destructive of fair elections. Some impediments to the exercise of the right to vote are, as already stated, under any practicable system of conducting elections, unavoidable; and when these impediments are dependent on circumstances and conditions not connected with the status of the candidates for whom the vote is to be cast, they rarely affect the result of an election; the losses of one candidate being offset by those of the others. Not so with the impediments of the kind prescribed by this statute, which are directed solely at the status of the particular nominee for whom the vote is to be cast. The change from the old system does not diminish the size of the ballot, nor does it decrease the printing on it. It does not tend to make voting easier for the elector, or to avoid confusion on his part, but has the contrary effect. Surely the name of a candidate printed in the appropriate column is less confusing to the elector than a reference to some other column, denoted only by its party name. While the Constitution does not guarantee that the elector shall be allowed to express his will by a single mark, our position is that he is guaranteed the right to express his will by a single mark if other voters are given the right to express theirs by a single mark, and there is no difficulty in according the right to all. It is said by the supreme court of Ohio in State ex rel. Bateman v. Bode, 55 Ohio St. 224, 34 L.R.A. 498, 60 Am. St. Rep. 696, 45 N. E. 195, in upholding a law of this kind: "There is no discrimination against or in favor of anyone; and, if any inequality arises, it arises not from any inequality caused by the statute, but by reason of inequalities in the persons of the voters, and such inequalities are unavoidable. It is always much more difficult for some electors to cast their ballots than others. Distance, bad roads, means of transportation, bad health, and many other considerations may and do render it much more difficult for some men to cast their ballots than others. But these difficulties inhere in the men themselves, and not in the law. . . . The inconvenience is only that which is experienced by everyone who votes other than a straight ticket." This argument ignores the distinction between difficulties or inconveniences occurring by nature or accident, and inconvenience created by statute. Inequality in the facilities afforded the electors in casting their votes may defeat the will of the people as thoroughly as restrictions which the courts would hold to operate as a disfranchisement of voters. In 1884 the control of the government of the whole country was transferred from one political party to another through the votes of this state by an average plurality of less than 1,150 votes. The vote for the electors of the successful party was over 560,000. Therefore, if an inconvenience in the method of casting his vote applicable to one candidate only had affected the vote of but one man in 470, the result would have been changed. If it were provided that voting on the blanket ballot should be done by either writing or pasting thereon, under the names of the offices to be filled, the names of the candidates, it is not certain that this plan could be condemned as creating such obstacles to the exercise of the rights of the electors as to render the scheme unconstitutional; but if the plan went further, and provided that the candidates of the party polling the highest vote at the last election should be printed in one column, and the electors allowed to vote therefor by a cross mark, while all the other candidates were required to be voted for by writing or pasting their names on the ballots, I think no one would hesitate to condemn the scheme as unconstitutional. Certainly under that plan there would be great difficulty in turning out the party in power. The condemnation of such a statute would proceed, at least primarily, not on the ground that it disfranchised the voters, but on account of the unequal opportunities to vote afforded the electors. That we are right in the position that equality of opportunity should be afforded electors is a fundamental principle of the constitutional law of this state, we need only refer to the first Constitution adopted by us. Previous to the Revolution elections in the colony were held viva voce. The Constitution of 1777 recited: "Whereas, an opinion hath long prevailed among divers of the good people of this state, that voting at elections by ballot would tend more to preserve the liberty and equal freedom of the people than voting viva voce: to the end, therefore, that a fair experiment be made, which of these two methods of voting is to be preferred." [Act 6.] And it directed that, after the termination of the war then existing between the colonies and Great Britain, the legislature should enact that elections for senators and representatives should be by ballot, and should direct the manner in which the same should be conducted. We therefore hold the statutory provisions challenged to be unconstitutional because they unnecessarily and substantially discriminate between electors in the opportunities and facilities afforded for voting for the candidates of their choice. If the discrimination were trivial, our decision would be different; but we know from the election litigations that have come before us that the discrimination here is of a very substantial character, and, where voting machines are used, the difficulty of voting a split ticket is still greater than where voting is by ballot.

At this point we may call attention to a later decision made by the supreme court of Michigan. In Dapper v. Smith, 138 Mich. 104, 101 N. W. 60, the validity of a provision which required that before the name of any candidate should be placed on the ballot such candidate should on oath declare his purpose to become such was challenged and held unconstitutional. It was said by the learned court: "The man who may be willing to consent to serve his state or his community in answer to the call of duty when chosen by his fellow citizens to do so is excluded, and the electorate has no opportunity to cast their votes for him. It is not an answer to this reasoning to say that the electors may still vote for such a man by using 'pasters.' We cannot ignore the fact that parties have become an important and well-recognized factor in government. Certain it is that this law fully recognizes the potency of parties, and provides for party action as a step towards the choice of an officer at the election. The authority of the legislature to enact laws for the purpose of securing purity in elections does not include the right to impose any conditions which will destroy or seriously impede the enjoyment of the elective franchise." As already said, we think it doubtful whether a form of official ballot by which all voting should be done by pasters which are easily attached to the ballot could be held such an obstacle as to destroy or defeat the enjoyment of the elective franchise. But the decision could very properly have proceeded on the ground that an unnecessary and substantial discrimination against any body of electors was unconstitutional.

It is urged that there are inequalities under the old form of ballot; but, at least, the most of those inequalities are unavoidable. The party that polled at the last election the greatest number of votes is given the first column on the ballot. As long as the face of the ballot is a plain surface, which has always been the case with us, and there is a party column, some party must have the first place. Every candidate is not given the right to have his name printed on the official ballot. Such a provision would render an official ballot impossible. But not only are all parties or bodies polling 10,000 votes, which is less than 1 per cent of the whole vote of the state, given the right to a separate column, but independent bodies, on the petition of but a small fraction of the electorate, have the same right. Thus the rights of the electors of all organizations which have the most remote or shadowy chance of electing their nominees are given equal rights with those of the great parties, while the inviolable right of every elector is secured by the blank column. But, if the character of the ballot necessarily involves discrimination against certain classes or bodies of electors, it is a reason that the statute should not increase the discrimination.

It has been urged in justification of the statutory provisions before us that independent bodies are often organized for the sake of trading or combining with the regular parties or other organizations on corrupt considerations. It is not pretended, however, that the statute tends to prevent that evil, save in one way, by making it more difficult to vote fusion or coalition tickets. The same argument was advanced in Re Callahan, 200 N. Y. 59, 62, 140 Am. St. Rep. 626, 93 N. E. 262, 263, where it was held that the legislature could not constitutionally prevent the nomination of fusion or combination candidates. We there said: "The liberty of the electors, in the exercise of the right vested in them by the Constitution, to choose public officers on whatever principle or dictated by whatever motive they see fit, unless those motives contravene common morality and are therefore criminal, such as bribery, violence, intimidation, or fraud, cannot be denied." The legislature might make combinations effected by bribery or illegal considerations criminal, and punish the actors. On proof that an organization was effected and nominations made in pursuance of such criminal bargain, the courts might be authorized to strike such nominations from the ballot. But, because many coalitions between various bodies of electors are corrupt and criminal, it cannot forbid coalition nominations, or indirectly effect the same thing by rendering it more difficult to vote for a coalition nominee. One great object of the present ballot was to prevent bribery by rendering it difficult to determine how any elector voted. There is, however, an opportunity for identification left. The elector may in the blank column write the name of some particular candidate, and thus identify his vote. Undoubtedly the voter may be punished for so doing on proof of the unlawful purpose for which he wrote the name of the particular person. Fortunately the evil does not seem at all common. But, even if it were prevalent, to correct the evil, the inviolable right of the elector to vote for whom he chose could not be invaded.

The method of voting on an official ballot which has prevailed with us now for a number of years probably has corrected evils that formerly were prevalent. But personally I fear that in some respects it has undermined public morality on the question of right of the elector to vote for whom he will, provided it is dictated by no criminal consideration. Ever since the adoption of the present scheme there has been an attempt to provide a ballot in such form as to prevent the elector from voting in the way he wishes to vote. In this constant effort it must be conceded that persons desirous of so-called ballot reform, and not political partisans, have been the most active, although by the present legislation the latter seem to have been more successful. All labors by a citizen to induce his fellow citizens to change the principle on which they cast their votes, when he believes that principle is injurious to the welfare of the community, are praiseworthy and patriotic. But, however gross may be the error of his fellows, he has no moral right to correct that error by making it difficult for them to exercise their constitutional rights.

The order of the Appellate Division should be reversed and that of the Special Term in substance affirmed, without costs. There are come errors, however, in the form of the Special Term order, for which reason it must be modified, and the order may be settled on two days' notice before the judge writing the opinion.

Haight, Vann, Werner, Willard Bartlett, Hisecock, and Chase, JJ., concur.

Ordered accordingly.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

TOBE McLAWHORN et al., Appts.,

v.

BETTIE HARRIS.

(156 N. C. 107, 72 S. E. 211.)

Jury — court officer — eligibility.

1. One is not incompetent to serve as a

Note. — Right of former cotenant to acquire title in his own right through or under a purchaser at a sale under a title or interest paramount to the common title.

It is a general rule, subject to some exceptions, that the relation of cotenancy, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

juror by reason of the fact that, as an officer, he has been in charge of another jury at the same term of court.

Appeal — admission of irrelevant evidence.

2. The admission of irrelevant and incompetent evidence is not reversible error if it does not bear upon the real issues in the case.

Mortgage — sale by transferee — right of bondholder to bid.

3. The holder of a bond secured by mortgage of real estate has a right to bid at a sale of the property made by the trustees named in the mortgage.

Cotenant — securing title from bidder at foreclosure sale.

4. One of the tenants in common of mortgaged property may secure a title adverse to his cotenant by purchasing the property from one who bids it in at a foreclosure sale.

(October 4, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pitt County in defendant's favor in an action brought to establish a parol trust in an undivided half interest in certain lands. Affirmed.

Statement by Brown, J.:

The plaintiffs, children and heirs of Robert A. McLawhorn, deceased, bring this action against the feme defendant, Bettie Harris, only child and heir of L. Francis McLawhorn, deceased, to set up and establish a parol trust as against said Francis McLawhorn in the lands described in the pleadings, claiming to own one undivided half of the lands in common with the said Francis. His Honor submitted these issues: "First, Did L. F. McLawhorn take title to said land from J. P. Elliott in trust, to hold one half of the same for the benefit of plaintiffs? Answer: No. Second. At the time of the purchase of the land described in the complaint by L. F. McLawhorn, did he agree to take and hold said land as trustee for himself and the children of R. A. McLawhorn? Answer: No." The plaintiffs moved for a new trial. Motion overruled. The plaintiffs excepted and appealed from the judgment rendered.

Mr. Harry Skinner for appellants.

Messrs. F. G. James & Son and L. I. Moore for appellee.

while it is in existence, precludes one of the cotenants from purchasing for his exclusive benefit an adverse or outstanding claim or title. Cases sustaining this proposition are not included herein, neither are cases included which pass upon the question what constitutes the relation of cotenancy, nor cases considering the right of

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The land in controversy was conveyed to Robert and Francis McLawhorn, brothers, in 1890, by Harry Skinner; the purchase price payable in cotton bonds. To secure the delivery of the cotton, certain bonds were taken, payable to the copartnership of Latham & Skinner, and secured by deed in trust to Harry Skinner. Before the death of Robert McLawhorn, which occurred in 1893, the cotton bonds were duly assigned by Latham & Skinner to Elliott Brothers of Baltimore. In default of the discharge of the bonds, the land was advertised and sold under the trust on March 24, 1894, by Harry Skinner, who conveyed it on said date to J. P. Elliott of said firm. On May 28, 1894, J. P. Elliott conveyed the land to L. Francis McLawhorn, defendant Bettie's father, and took from him on same day a mortgage on the land securing the purchase price, to wit, 100 bales, 500 pounds each, merchantable lint cotton. This is the same price in cotton which the brothers, Robert A. and L. Francis McLawhorn, contracted to pay Latham & Skinner for the land.

There are nine assignments of error, all of which have received our consideration. None of them are of sufficient importance to justify an extended discussion, except the sixth.

As one exception relates to a juror, we say that we do not think it is well that deputy sheriffs who summon jurors, mingle with, and have charge of, them, should serve as such during the terms of court when they are acting for the sheriff. In their discretion, the trial judges may well excuse them; but there is no statute, of which we are aware, which disqualifies one cotenant to purchase the property in his own right at a sale under an encumbrance created by one through whom the cotenants derived title. For cases of the latter character, see Jackson v. Baird, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 591, and note thereto.

The rule that the relation of cotenancy, while in existence, is regarded as being of a sufficiently confidential character to preclude one of the cotenants from acquiring any adverse or hostile rights as against his cotenants in the common property, does not apply to property not held in cotenancy, nor, by the weight of authority, does it apply after the severance of the relation of cotenancy. In general it may be said that where there is no longer a common interest in the property, the privity and all consequences flowing from it cease.

Thus it has been held that a sale in partition proceedings of land held in cotenancy severs the relation of cotenancy, and a cotenant purchasing the property at this sale cannot thereafter buy an outstanding tax title, and compel his former cotenant to pay his proportion of the purchase price. Stephens v. Ellis, 65 Mo. 456.

As a corollary to the foregoing, it is held that, in the absence of fraud, after the expiration of the time for the redemption from the sale of unseated land for taxes, a cotenant may purchase for his exclusive benefit the outstanding tax title, since the sale of the land and the expiration of the time for redemption operate to sever the cotenancy, and therefore terminate the trust relation theretofore existing. Lewis v. Robinson, 10 Watts, 354; Reinboth v. Zerbe Run Improv. Co. 29 Pa. 139; Brickell v. Earley, 115 Pa. 478, 8 Atl. 623.

This doctrine is also applied in Alexander v. Sully, 50 Iowa. 192, holding that where a superior title, although a tax title, is vested in a stranger, and has been for some time, a former joint owner can purchase such title for his exclusive benefit. The court here, however, points out that it did not appear that any of the cotenants were in possession of the real estate at the time the stranger acquired the tax title, or at the time the cotenant purchased it from him, and hence such title was not purchased to protect the possession or any other right the cotenants then had.

And in Keele v. Cunningham, 2 Heisk. 288, a cotenant was held entitled to purchase for her exclusive benefit an outstanding tax title where the right of redemption had expired, the court pointing out that there was no proof showing that such tenant purchased in any other way than for her own benefit. In this case it does not appear that anyone was in possession of the property.

These cases suggest a distinction not made in all the cases, that is, that there must be not only a severance of the relation of cotenancy by cutting off their common title by the sale of the property for unpaid taxes, or in foreclosure of a lien upon property, but also that there must be an actual eviction of the cotenants,—a complete severance of the relation by loss of possession,—thus giving practical application to the theory of the relation of cotenancy, that unity of possession is essential to the cotenancy, and that the destruction of this unity severs the relation.

It has, however, been asserted in general terms, without qualification, that one tenant in common may purchase the whole estate from the purchaser at a sale made for the payment of taxes, after the right to redeem has expired, and in the absence of fraud such purchase will be for his own exclusive benefit, his cotenants deriving no benefit therefrom. Watkins v. Eaton, 30 Me. 529, 50 Am. Dec. 637.

This doctrine is denied, however, in Duson v. Roos, 123 La. 835, 131 Am. St. Rep. 375, 49 So. 590, holding that the general rule that a purchase by one cotenant of an outstanding title inures to the benefit of the other cotenants applies to the purchase by one cotenant of an outstanding tax title, although the purchase was not directly at the tax sale, but was from a them. But in this case Manning, the juror challenged, was not a deputy sheriff, but had been an officer in charge of another jury.

There were certain deeds and records introduced, over plaintiff's objection, which are excepted to as irrelevant and incompetent; but it is manifest that they did not bear upon the real issue, and if, erroneously received, the error was entirely harmless. If there is any error, it lies in the refusal of the court to charge the jury that, if they believe the evidence in the case, to answer the first issue, "Yes."

The plaintiffs rest their case upon two contentions, viz. (a) That Francis McLawhorn purchased the land from J. P. Elliott in May, 1894, upon an express agreement that he would hold the land in trust for himself and the plaintiffs, his brother's children. This claim is embodied in the second issue. Under this issue, the plaintiffs attempted to establish an express trust; and it must be admitted that they introduced parol evidence which would have well warranted the jury in finding it for them. But the fact was controverted, and other evidence offered tending to deny the existence of any such agreement. The charge of the court upon this phase of the case presented the plaintiffs' contention with fullness and clearness, and was as favorable to them as they were entitled to. (b) The other contention is based upon two theories: First, that J. P. Elliott bought at his own sale, and consequently the sale was void; that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee continues to exist; and that, therefore, the tenancy in common between the plaintiffs and Francis McLawhorn has never been severed.

We do not find anything in the record purchaser at the tax sale, and the purchasing co-owner was not in possession of the property during any part of the time in which the tax should have been paid, and did not at any time occupy any trust relation towards the other co-owners other than the bare fact of the former co-ownership of the property.

The general doctrine of the right of a cotenant to purchase an outstanding title for his exclusive benefit after the relation of cotenancy has been severed has also been applied to an outstanding title under a purchase at a mortgage foreclosure sale, and the right so to do sustained where the cotenancy was severed by loss of possession. Sutton v. Jenkins, 147 N. C. 16, 60 S. E. 643.

And Kirkpatrick v. Mathiot, 4 Watts & S. 251, sustains the right of a cotenant of unseated land to purchase an outstanding title based on a sheriff's sale in foreclosure of a mortgage on the common property, where made some time after the severance of the relation of cotenancy, and it is held that such purchase does not inure to the benefit of his former cotenants.

But if a cotenant causes real estate owned in common to be sold under a deed of trust or a mortgage or other lien, for the purpose of purchasing the outstanding title thus created, for his own benefit, he is guilty of a breach of trust which precludes him from taking advantage of such title as against the other cotenants. Hinters v. Hinters, 114 Mo. 26, 21 S. W. 456 (trust deed); Carpenter v. Carpenter, 131 N. Y. 101, 27 Am. St. Rep. 569, 29 N. E. 1013 (mortgage); Dray v. Dray, 21 Or. 59, 27 Pac. 223 (execution).

So, where a mortgagee of land owned in common by several persons agrees to purchase the property at a sale thereof in foreclosure of his mortgage, for the joint benefit of all the cotenants, one of the cotenants cannot thereafter, by procuring from the mortgagee a deed of the premises, acquire for his exclusive benefit the mortgagee's title based on the mortgage foreclosure sale. Caldwell v. Caldwell, — Ala. —, 55 So. 515.

Where a contract for the purchase of an adverse title based on a mortgage foreclosure sale of the real estate held in common was in fact made before the expiration of the redemption period, and hence at the time when the relationship of co-owner still existed, the completion of the contract of purchase by procuring the conveyance, although after the right of redemption had expired, does not enable the purchasing tenant to claim for his exclusive benefit the adverse title purchased, but it inures to the benefit of all the tenants. Oliver v. Hedderly, 32 Minn. 455, 21 N. W. 478.

Where the cotenants have become emphatically antagonistic to each other in their claims and interests, and the sale of the entire property is ordered, and a stranger to the tenants becomes the purchaser at such sale, a subsequent purchase by one of the cotenants from the stranger does not inure to the benefit of the other cotenants. Wells v. Chapman, 13 Barb. 561.

Or where, by ejectment proceedings under an adverse claim, the tenants in common are evicted, the cotenancy thereupon ceases, and one of the former cotenants may thereafter acquire such adverse title for his exclusive benefit. Coleman v. Coleman, 3 Dana, 398, 28 Am. Dec. 86.

Or where, by agreement between the cotenants, each takes possession of a separate portion of a parcel of land owned jointly, and each has his respective portion assessed to him individually, one of the cotenants may purchase for his exclusive benefit an outstanding tax title upon one of the portions of the land assessed to another of the cotenants, the title arising from the failure of the latter to pay his taxes on such portion. Davis v. Case, 72 Miss. 985, 18 So. 454.

A. G. S.

upon which to found such claim. The pleadings state that the sale was made by Skinner, the trustee in the deed, and the deed to Elliott executed by him and introduced by plaintiffs contains every essential recital; among others, that Skinner advertised the land according to the terms of the deed, and sold it to Elliott, the highest bidder. There is no evidence whatever which tends to controvert this, or to show that Elliott or his attorney made the sale, or controlled it. As the holder of the bonds secured in the deed, Elliott had a right to bid at the sale by the trustee. It was not his sale, but Skinner's, the person appointed by the mortgagors to make it, and in whom reposed the legal title. There is no evidence or even suggestion of any fault, undue advantage or oppression. So far as the record discloses, the sale was fair, open, and "above board," and made by the person vested with the power to sell.

The second theory is that J. P. Elliott purchased the land, not for himself, but for Francis McLawhorn; and that, inasmuch as he could not legally acquire title to the land adverse to his cotenants at said sale, Elliott could not do so for him. The only evidence upon which to base this contention is that Elliott bought the land on March 24, 1894, and conveyed it to L. F. McLawhorn on the 28th of the following May; and the further fact that he sold it for 100 bales of cotton, the same price that the two brothers had agreed to pay Latham & Skinner for it. These may be suspicious circumstances, but it is manifest they do not warrant the charge asked for by plaintiffs. They are open to explanation, and different inferences may be drawn from them. They were properly submitted to the jury for what they were worth.

Assuming that Elliott purchased the land for himself or his firm, to save his debt, we cannot agree with the learned counsel for plaintiff that Francis McLawhorn could not afterwards acquire title adverse to the plaintiffs, his former cotenants. We recognize the just principle that a cotenant, while such relation exists, may not acquire an outstanding title or lien upon the common property, and hold it for his own exclusive benefit. His cotenants may share it with him. Jackson v. Baird, 148 N. C. 29, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 591, 61 S. E. 632. But, nevertheless, a tenant in common, as such, is not a trustee for his cotenant. Saunders v. Gatlin, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 92. It is also true that where a cotenant in common acquires title from a sale under a deed of trust made by all the cotenants, for a debt binding all, and the sale is caused by his failure to pay his share of the debt, he cannot, under his 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) rights so derived, hold the land against his cotenants. Reed v. Bachman, 61 W. Va. 452, 123 Am. St. Rep. 996, 57 S. E. 769.

But the jury has not accepted the theory that Elliott purchased for Francis McLawhorn; and there was very little evidence, so far as Elliott was concerned, to support that claim. Therefore, when the trustee conveyed all the land to Elliott, the unity of possession was destroyed, and the tenancy in common ended. Unity of possession is the only unity essential to such cotenancy; anything that operates to destroy this unity will dissolve the cotenancy in common. Sutton v. Jenkins, 147 N. C. 16, 60 S. E. 643; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 711. After the tenancy in common is actually dissolved, there is nothing in the law which forbids a former tenant in common from acquiring the entire property. He then has the same rights as any other individual. Sutton v. Jenkins and Jackson v. Baird, supra.

Upon a review of the record, we find no error.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

LUKE RILEY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM R. ROACH.

(— Mich. —, 134 N. W. 14.)

Master — automobile — liability for acts of chauffeur.

1. The owner of an automobile who, upon leaving home, instructs his chauffeur not to take the machine out without orders from himself or wife, is not liable for injury done by the machine while it is being used by the chauffeur contrary to the express orders so given him.

Evidence — declarations of chauffeur — disobedience of orders.

2. Statements made by a chauffeur at the time of an accident which occurred while he was using the machine in violation of his express orders are not binding upon the owner.

(January 23, 1912.)

Note. — Liability of owner for injuries caused by automobile while being used by a servant or a third person for his own business or pleasure.

The early cases upon the question here considered are gathered in the notes to Christy v. Elliott, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214; Hayes v. Wilkins, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1035; Jones v. Hogue, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216; Danforth v. Fisher, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93; Steffen v. McNaughton, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382; and Fleischner v. Durgin, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79.

In McKiernan v. Lehmaier, — Conn. —,

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Oceana County to review a judgment in defendant's favor and an order denying a motion for new trial in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cross, Vanderwerp, Foote, & Ross and V. V. Barnes, for appellant:

In directing a verdict for defendant, the trial court usurped the province of the jury. It was not for the court to say that under all the evidence, defendant's chauffeur was not acting within the scope of his employment.

Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl.

81 Atl. 969, the owner was held liable, where, upon being left at the theater, he loaned his chauffeur money with which to have his hair cut, telling him to be at the theater at a given time, and the chauffeur drove to numerous barber shops in two cities finding them all crowded, and on his way back to the theater to wait for the owner, struck and killed a person. The court said: "In the case before us the servant, with the knowledge and consent of his master, left him with his motor vehicle to engage in a matter personal to the servant for a limited period. The services of the day in which the servant was engaged had not been completed when the accident happened. He was not then wholly at liberty from his master's engagement and pursuing his own business exclusively. If the injury had been inflicted while Shatzer was going from barber shop to barber shop in Norwalk and South Norwalk, the question would have been different. But we do not deem it necessary to express any opinion upon this phase of the case, because the accident occurred when the private business of Shatzer had been completed, and he was operating the defendant's automobile back over the road which he had previously traveled, for the purpose of discharging the duty for which he was employed and intended to perform. When the automobile struck Seiler, Shatzer was not engaged in any affair of his own, but was attending to the business of the defendant in the scope of his employment."

And see also Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219, set out in RILEY v. ROACH.

And where the owner of an automobile, when he went abroad, left his machine for the convenience of his family, he is liable for an injury occurring while the machine was out under the orders of his married daughter, who was at the time a member of his household. Winfrey v. Lazarus, 148 Mo. App. 388, 128 S. W. 276.

So, the owner of an automobile who leases it, with a licensed chauffeur in charge of it, at a certain sum per day, is liable to strangers for the negligent acts of the chauffeur, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

219; Barr v. Guelph Patent Cask Co. 129 Mich. 278, 88 N. W. 640; Elwood v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 45 N. Y. 549, 6 Am. Rep. 140; Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co. 92 Mich. 482, 20 L.R.A. 277, 52 N. W. 1070; Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 Mich. 344, 6 Am. St. Rep. 301, 29 N. W. 855; Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 64 Mich. 93, 8 Am. St. Rep. 804, 31 N. W. 147; Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co. 89 Mich. 387, 50 N. W. 872; Chamberlain v. Detroit Stove Works, 103 Mich. 124, 61 N. W. 532; Wager v. Lamont, 135 Mich. 521, 98 N. W. 1; Wilson v. Royal Neighbors, 139 Mich. 423, 102 N. W. 957; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. 649, 21 L. ed. 220; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502; Cosgrove v. Ogden, 49

where the lessee has no control over him except as to when and where the car shall be driven. Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648, 90 N. E. 392.

And in Kneff v. Sanford, 63 Wash. 503, 115 Pac. 1040, it was held that a prima facie case was shown against one who operated automobiles for hire, where his chauffeur, who received a commission on the fares collected, while on duty at his stand in front of a hotel, where some orders were taken by telephone, invited a telephone operator employed at the hotel to ride home gratis, and on his way back to his stand he injured a person, after which, his employer testified, he had retained the chauffeur in his employ for a number of months.

And such a prima facie case is not overcome as a matter of law by the testimony of the owner and chauffeur that the former had instructed his chauffeurs, including the one in question, not to take telephone girls home in the automobiles unless so instructed by the owner, or upon payment of their fares, and that the chauffeur involved had received no instruction to take the operator home at the time of the accident. Ibid.

The owner of an automobile, however, is not liable for injuries inflicted while the machine is in charge of a chauffeur employed by the owner's brother, to whom the machine had been loaned. Parsons v. Wisner, 113 N. Y. Supp. 922; Freibaum v. Brady, 143 App. Div. 220, 128 N. Y. Supp. 121.

And the owner of an automobile is not liable on the theory that it is a dangerous machine, for its negligent use to the injury of a stranger, by one to whom he had loaned it, and who was in complete control of its operation, although the owner was at the time of the accident present in the machine as a guest. Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 81, 130 N. W. 336.

And where a chauffeur, at the time an accident occurs, is riding for his own pleasure in his employer's machine, without the latter's knowledge or consent, the employer is not liable for the injury. Howe v. Leighton, 75 N. H. 601, 75 Atl. 102.

N. Y. 255, 10 Am. Rep. 361; Ellegard v. Ackland, 43 Minn. 352, 45 N. W. 715; Fitzsimmons v. Milwaukee L. S. & W. R. Co. 98 Mich. 257, 57 N. W. 127; Cleveland v. Newsum, 45 Mich. 62, 7 N. W. 222; Weber v. Lockman, 66 Neb. 469, 60 L.R.A. 313, 92 N. W. 591; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 167; Patterson v. Kates, 152 Fed. 482; Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 386, 124 N. W. 1016, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Declarations of the chauffeur made at the time of the accident were admissible as a part of the res gestæ, and should not have been excluded.

Zart v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. 162 Mich. 393, 127 N. W. 272.

Messrs. Rufus F. Skeels, Fred J. Russell, C. O. Smedley, and F. E. Wetmore, for appellee:

Statements made by the chauffeur while he was violating defendant's express instructions are not binding on him.

Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co. 14 Mich. 489, 90 Am. Dec. 252; Patterson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 54 Mich. 91, 19 N. W. 761; Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 66 Mich. 390, 33 N. W. 867; Hall v. Murdock, 119 Mich. 389, 78 N. W. 329.

The chauffeur, Hall was not acting within the scope of his employment, but in direct violation of the instructions given him by defendant, and for such acts the defendant is not liable.

Keating v. Michigan C. R. Co. 97 Mich. 154, 37 Am. St. Rep. 328, 56 N. W. 346; Schulwitz v. Delta Lumber Co. 126 Mich. 559, 85 N. W. 1075; Mahler v. Stott, 129 Mich. 614, 89 N. W. 340; McCarthy v. Timmins, 178 Mass. 378, 86 Am. St. Rep. 490, 59 N. E. 1038; Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y. 75, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537, 50 N. E. 500; Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co. 63 Mich. 639, 30 N. W.

370; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81, 130 N. W. 338; Schulte v. Holliday, 54 Mich. 73, 19 N. W. 752; Reaume v. Newcomb, 124 Mich. 137, 82 N. W. 806; Ritchie v. Waller, 63 Conn. 155, 27 L.R.A. 161, 38 Am. St. Rep. 361, 28 Atl. 29; Doran v. Thomsen, 74 N. J. L. 445, 66 Atl. 897; Herlihy v. Smith, 116 Mass. 265; King v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37; Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L.R.A. 285, 33 N. E. 381; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915, 92 Pac. 433; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 66 Atl. 525, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946; Huddy, Law of Automobiles, p. 95; Clark v. Buckmobile Co. 107 App. Div. 120, 94 N. Y. Supp. 771; Stewart v. Baruch, 103 App. Div. 577, 93 N. Y. Supp. 161.

Stone, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case to recover damages for an injury received by the plaintiff on July 28, 1909, by reason of an alleged collision of defendant's automobile with the plaintiff's buggy, in which he was riding on a highway.

The declaration consists of two counts. In the first count the plaintiff alleges as follows: "And which automobile of said defendant was then and there under the care, direction, and supervision of a certain then servant, to wit, one Hall, a chauffeur, of the said defendant, who was then and there driving the same in and along the highways in said county and state by the order, direction, and knowledge of said defendant,

In Simeone v. Lindsay, — Del. —, 65 Atl. 778, where it was sought to recover for an injury sustained by being run into by an automobile, the court instructed the jury as follows: "If the automobile at the time of the accident was entirely operated and controlled by someone other than the defendant, the plaintiff could not recover. It is not, however, necessary that the defendant should have been the owner of the automobile, because if you believe that he had, at the time of the accident, control of the machine, so as to be able to govern its management or operation, any negligence in operating the machine would be the negligence of the defendant."

Where the evidence is conflicting upon the questions of whether the operator of an automobile had hired it of the owner for his own use, or was acting as an employee of the owner, they are questions of fact for the jury, and the jury's findings are conclusive. Ottomeier v. Hornburg, 50 Wash. 316, 97 Pac. 235.

Where there is a question as to whether a son was operating an automobile at the time of an accident as the servant of his father, or only on his own account, although the weight of testimony is that he was using it with his father's permission for his own purposes, evidence is admissible that he was the regularly employed chauffeur of his father, that he lived in his father's family, and that his father was present when he started to take persons whom he had carried to a dance home, and told him that he had better light his headlights,—such evidence being proper for the consideration of the jury on the question of whether the son was representing his father at the time of the accident. Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404.

J. T. W.

and in the prosecution of his business aforesaid." In the second count it is alleged: "And which automobile of said defendant was then and there under the care, direction, and supervision of a certain then servant, to wit, one Hall, a chauffeur of the said defendant, who was then and there driving the same along the highways in said county of Oceana with the consent of said defendant."

Upon the trial the following undisputed facts were shown: The defendant was the owner of a valuable automobile which he bought the season before the accident. The defendant was called by the plaintiff for cross-examination under the statute.

After testifying that the chauffeur, Hall, had been in his employ nine days when the accident occurred, the following was his testimony:

Q. Did you engage Mr. Hall to do any work other than to operate your automobile?

A. No, sir; I did not. Operate and keep it clean, keep it in repair, you understand,—the general work of a chauffeur. He came to me well recommended. I was in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan on July 28, 1909. I left Hart the night of Sunday, July 25, 1909. I know a Mrs. Blake who resides in Albion. I don't know her given name. She is in no way related to me or to my wife. She was not in Hart when I left for the Upper Peninsula. I understood that she was at my place while I was gone.

Q. As a guest?

A. Well, she was there, and my wife was away from home, Mrs. Roach and I was away from home, and she was gone when I got back, and I understand she came to visit Mrs. Nott.

Q. Who is Mrs. Nott?

A. Mrs. Nott is my brother-in-law's wife, Mr. Nott, who was an Albion lady before her marriage.

Q. Where was she living at that time?

A. She was living in the village of Hart.

Q. Occupying your residence?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Did your wife accompany you on your trip to the Upper Peninsula?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you leave anybody in charge of your house while you were gone?

A. We did.

Q. Who?

A. Miss Harriett Nott.

Q. That is not the Mrs. Nott that you speak of?

A. No, no. This is a "Miss."; I didn't say "Mrs."

Q. Who is Miss Harriett Nott?

A. My wife's sister.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. She was given general charge of the house, was she, while you were gone?

A. She was; yes, sir.

Q. When did your wife leave Hart?

A. Some two or three weeks before.

Q. That is before you left?

A. Before I left; yes sir. I can't just tell you the exact date, some two or three weeks.

Q. I am not particular about that. But you were both gone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you left your residence in charge of Miss Harriett Nott, and were there any guests at your house at the time you left?

A. I think my wife's sister was visiting between Mr. B. C. Nott's and my wife's house, our home.

Q. What is your wife's sister's name?

A. Mrs. Royce.

Q. Is that Mrs. Carrie Adelle, or Adellia, do you pronounce it, Royce?

A. That is the lady.

Q. Any other guests there?

A. Not that I remember of. We had guests coming and going all the time; men coming to see me on business that I always entertained at my home.

Q. Your wife's sister was not there in the same capacity of men who drop in to see you on business, and that you entertain, was she?

A. No, sir. She was there spending her summer. She came to Hart to spend her summer vacation. She was spending it between our home and Mr. Nott's home.

Q. I suppose you did the best you could to entertain her, didn't you?

A. Why, we didn't,—she entertained herself.

Q. You furnished an automobile for her use, if she desired it, didn't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Never?

A. No, sir.

Q. Up to the time you left, hadn't she ridden in your automobile?

A. No, sir.

Q. Why was that?

A. Well, one reason was that we hadn't a chauffeur for some considerable time; hadn't had anybody to drive the car. I don't know how to drive the car myself, and the time she come to visit us, up to the time that Mr. Hall came, we hadn't had anybody to drive the car.

Q. You made quick use of him when you got him, didn't you?

A. Why, no. I didn't make particularly quick use of him.

Q. What use did you make of that automobile after Mr. Leslie Hall came there?

A. My instructions to Mr. Hall—

Q. (Interrupting) I am not asking you about your instructions. Read the question.

A. I think I had it out twice.

Q. Who had it?

A. Leslie Hall and I.

Q. Now, your purpose in getting Leslie Hall there as chauffeur just before your departure was for the purpose of having somebody to operate that automobile for the benefit of anybody that might want to use it there at the house, didn't you?

A. Oh, no; I beg your pardon.

Q. Nothing of that sort?

A. Nothing of that sort.

Q. For what purpose then?

A. Please state your question again.

Q. The stenographer will read it. (Last question read.)

A. No, sir. My purpose of employing Leslie Hall was for the purpose of operating my automobile at such times as myself and my wife might want it.

Q. You mean by that that you didn't expect he would take one of your guests in your automobile,—your wife's sister?

A. I meant by that I do not take my automobile out without myself or Mrs. Roach goes with it.

Q. Has that always been true?

A. Up to that time; yes, sir.

Q. How has it been since that time?

Mr. Smedley: I object to that as incompetent.

Mr. Wetmore: And immaterial.

The Court: I think you may answer.

A. Practically the same.

Q. What did you use your automobile for?

A. I use my automobile for the pleasure of myself and wife and invited friends, when we take them to ride with us.

Q. For any purpose connected with the factory?

A. I have used my automobile when I wanted to for my own individual use, whether it was for the factory, or whether it was my personal use. If I was going,—it became necessary for me to go to Shelby or Muskegon, the automobile is my individual property; and if I choose to ride in the automobile rather than to go in the train, I did as I thought best about the matter.

Q. In whose charge did you leave this automobile when you left for the North?

A. I left it in Leslie Hall's charge, if anybody's.

Q. There isn't any question about it, is there, but what you left it in his charge?

A. I left it in his charge to do certain things with it. His instructions were complete.

Q. How soon did you return after July 28th?

A. I got back to Hart some time after 5 o'clock on the following Thursday. That would be the day following the accident.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. To what use did Mr. Hall put your automobile while you were away, other than taking the trip on the occasion that Mr. Riley was injured?

A. I wired—I called up by telephone—to have Leslie Hall take my automobile and come to Ludington, and meet me at Ludington.

Q. When did you do that?

A. On the morning of the 29th. I was gone from home Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and almost all Thursday. I left Sunday night on the evening train for Chicago.

Q. What was done with that automobile on Monday and Tuesday, or either of those days?

A. To my best knowledge, there wasn't anything done with it.

Q. You happen to know about the use on Wednesday because of this accident, do you?

A. Yes, sir. I first learned of what had occurred after the Hart plant had shut down on Thursday; it was 8 or 9 or 10 o'clock, or possibly 11 o'clock. I got the word when I was driving between here and Pentwater with Mr. Daggett, who is one of our stockholders, associated with me in business, and an officer of the company at the present time; he told me about it. He wasn't an officer in the company at that time.

Q. How were you paying Mr. Leslie Hall?

A. Paying him by the week.

Q. Did you pay him for the week that this accident occurred?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Continued him in your employ?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is now in your employ?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the same capacity?

A. Yes, sir.

Examination by Mr. Smedley:

Just before I employed Leslie Hall as my chauffeur, my machine was out of commission.

Q. And what did you have to do in order to fix it so that it would run?

A. Well, now, I am not very familiar with automobile terms; I don't run a car myself, because I am too busy a man. There was two little bearings in the hind axle, or in the hind mechanism, that we needed to get before we could run the car, because the bearings in that were worn out, or become deficient. I ordered those bearings, and they came, but they were the wrong size. I ordered them again, and they came, and they were the wrong size again, and I ordered them again, and they were the wrong size, and then I gathered up the old bearings and sent them down to Chicopee Falls, Massachusetts, and got the right bearings. The correspondence in my office will show that it was their fault, and not mine.

Q. Was this after you employed Mr. Hall?

A. This was previous to my employing Mr. Hall.

Q. What, if any, work did he do in the machine?

A. He put those bearings in, and went over the car in a general way; went over it all through, took the rear axle down,—I am not familiar with automobile terms.

Q. After he got it fixed, did you use it before you went to the Upper Peninsula?

A. I did, I think, twice; Leslie Hall was with me. Those trips were to test the machine and see if it was in running order. Before I went away, I gave him some instructions. My instructions to him were to go all over the car, be as careful as he could with it, see that the machinery was all in working order, scour up the brass, brush out the top, clean it all up in good shape, and not take it out until my return, unless Mrs. Roach or I called for it. Mrs. Roach at that time was ill over to Mr. White's cottage on the beach, under a doctor's care. I think that beach is called Oceana Beach. It is 8 miles from Hart by road. Mrs. Roach had been there probably three weeks before I employed Mr. Hall. She was still out there in the cottage when I got back. She was very nervous, and I think the doctor called it nervous prostration.

Q. Did she use the automobile during that time that you were away?

A. Oh, no; the automobile was out of commission.

Q. It was in commission before you went away?

A. In commission before I went away; yes, sir.

Q. While you were gone to the Upper Peninsula, did your wife use that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Who was staying with her out there to the beach?

A. Mrs. Daggett at that time, and a girl.

Q. Were those two women alone?

A. With the exception of one young girl.

Q. Who, if anybody, went out there nights to stay?

A. Well, during her sojourn there, I either went out, or Mr. Daggett, or sometimes my brother-in-law, Mr. Nott, went out, if I had to be away from home.

Q. How did they go and come?

A. Sometimes we took Mr. Daggett's car; sometimes we drove with a horse.

Q. And when you went to the Upper Peninsula at this particular time, who went out there nights to stay?

A. Well, either Mr. Daggett or Mr. Nott was to go out there; they promised me faithfully when I went away that one of them would go every night, and I think it was Mr. Daggett who went.

57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. Do you know who was out there Tuesday night?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what business this man Hall was on at the time he took out your car?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you or your wife give him any orders to take that machine out?

A. We did not.

Q. When he took it out, was it without your knowledge and without your consent?

A. It was.

Q. And contrary to your instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had he been in your employ when you gave him these instructions not to take the car out,—clean it up, but not to take it out until you got back, unless your wife instructed him to?

A. Well, he came Monday on the train, and I think we got there,—well, I can't say just when it did get here; it got here some time in the forenoon, and that was the following Saturday night.

Q. And he worked for you only five days?

A. That is the time; yes, sir.

Q. Now, why was it that you told him to clean it up, but not to take the car out until you got back unless your wife told him to?

A. Well, sir, from the fact that I had just gotten the young man, and from the fact that the car had been needing some repairs, and from the fact that it was good business, as any other good business man would do.

Q. How expensive a machine was that?

A. Thirty-five hundred dollars, besides about $300 of extra repairs, fixtures, extra fixtures that always go to the car,—appurtenances that go onto the car.

Q. What was the total cost of the machine to you?

A. About $3,800. The car was a first-class equipped car.

Recross-examination by Mr. Cross:

Q. Your wife was stopping where, you say, at this time?

A. She was living over to Mr. White's cottage on the beach.

Q. How far from Hart?

A. Why, it is 8 miles; it is considered 8 miles to Pentwater, and I guess, perhaps, it is a half or three quarters of a mile over to the cottages. I couldn't say just exactly; possibly more, possibly not so much.

Q. Telephone communication between that cottage and your home?

A. No, sir; no telephone.

Pursuant to the promise which had been made to defendant, Mr. Daggett, on the evening of July 27, 1909, in company with defendant's sister-in-law, Miss Nott, who had charge of the Roach house, and one Carl Flood, went in Mr. Daggett's automobile to the cottage at Oceana Beach, occupied by Mrs. Roach and Mrs. Daggett. While making the return trip to Hart the following morning, their supply of gasoline became exhausted, and left them stranded or "stalled" 3½ miles north of Hart. Mr. Flood and Miss Nott were with Mr. Daggett. Mr. Flood was not a witness. As to what was done at this point appears by the testimony of Mr. Daggett, as follows:

Q. Now, when you exhausted your supply of gasoline, what did you do to replenish it?

A. Why, we were right by Mr. Cox's barn, and Mr. Flood was with me, and I says, "Well?" he says, "We will see whether Mr. Cox has any or not." We met Mr. Cox at the barn; asked him if he had any gasoline. He said: "No; but Mike might have some at the corner." And Mr. Flood said: "Well, we can get gasoline from Hart about as quick as we could get it from the corner, a little over a half mile away." "Well," I says, "all right, then; you go and call Dikeman and have him bring us out some."

Q. Where was Miss Nott during this time?

A. She was way back in the road, in the car.

Q. Who is Dikeman?

A. Why, he is the man that does repairing here; he repaired my car several times.

Q. Who telephoned in?

A. Mr. Flood.

Q. Do you know to whom he telephoned?

A. I don't, sir; I was not in the house.

Q. Who came with the gasoline?

A. Why, Mr. Hall, Mr. Roach's chauffeur.

Q. Whose automobile did he have?

A. Mr. Roach's automobile.

Q. And who accompanied him on this trip out?

A. The two ladies and a gentleman, Mrs. Royce, and the other two parties I had never seen before.

Q. There was Mr. Hall and Mrs. Royce?

A. Mrs. Royce and the other two parties I had never seen before.

Q. Mrs. Royce is a sister of Mrs. Roach?

A. Mrs. Roach's sister; yes.

Q. Was visiting there at the time?

A. Yes.

Q. And there was another lady and gentleman?

A. Yes.

Q. That you were not acquainted with?

A. Not acquainted with at the time.

Q. Did you make their acquaintance, so that you can tell us who they were?

A. Yes; I was introduced to them.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. Who were they?

A. Mrs. Blake and her son.

Q. Do you know where they were visiting in Hart?

A. No; I don't.

Mr. Blake, whose deposition was taken, testified that he and his mother, in company with Mrs. Royce, with Hall as chauffeur, in response to a telephone message, left Hart with defendant's automobile to take a can of gasoline to Mr. Daggett. The gasoline was furnished in this manner, and, after replenishing his car, Mr. Daggett, with Miss Nott and Mr. Flood, proceeded on their way to Hart. The chauffeur continued on in the opposite direction until he found a suitable place in which to turn around, which he did, and it was while returning to Hart that the collision occurred which is the subject-matter of this suit.

At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, the trial court directed a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff had not made a case. In other words, the court held that at the time of the accident the chauffeur was not acting within the scope of his employment by defendant, but contrary to his directions, and was in fact performing a service for Mr. Daggett, and that the evidence did not warrant a submission of the case to the jury.

Verdict and judgment were entered for the defendant, and, after a motion for a new trial was denied, the plaintiff brought the case here upon writ of error, assigning as error that the trial court erred in directing a verdict for the defendant, and in refusing a new trial.

It is urged by appellant that it was not for the court to say, under all the evidence, that defendant's chauffeur was not acting within the scope of his employment; and that the presumption arising from the attendant facts and circumstances was not so completely overcome by the testimony of the defendant as to warrant the court in determining this question.

The appellant relies largely upon the case of Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219. Counsel quote at length from this case, and claim that it is in its facts almost identical with the instant case. The headnote of that case is to the effect that the mere fact that a chauffeur, in taking out his master's automobile in obedience to a command of the master's family, for the entertainment of friends and guests of the family, disobeys the master's command not to take out the car unless the master accompanies it, does not show that he is acting outside the scope of his employment, so as to relieve the master from liability for injury done by the negligent handling of the car.

That case also holds that the facts and circumstances at the time of the accident may raise a presumption that the regular chauffeur employed by the owner, and in charge, was acting within the scope of his employment. In that case it appeared that the owner had forbidden the chauffeur to take out the car unless he (the owner) was with it, and that upon the night of the accident, the car was taken out by the chauffeur under the direction of the sister of the owner and defendant, who made her home with the defendant, and was regarded as a member of the family.

We think that case is readily distinguished from the instant case. Here, when the chauffeur, Hall, took the automobile out on the trip when the accident occurred, he had no orders to do so from defendant, defendant's wife, or Miss Nott, who had been left in general charge of the house. No member of the family had given any orders to take it out. It was taken out without defendant's knowledge or consent, either express or implied, and was contrary to his express instructions. From this record, we think that it appears uncontradicted that the chauffeur acted in direct violation of his instructions, and outside the scope of his employment. He was acting either upon his own motion, or was obeying the instructions of Mr. Flood, Mr. Daggett, or someone else, who had no authority to bind the defendant.

Counsel for appellant also cite and quote from Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 124 N. W. 1016, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227. In that case it was held that a chauffeur employed by the owner of an automobile to care for the machine and operate it at the request and direction of the owner or any member of his family, and who is to go to his home for his mid-day meal, is not, when using the automobile to go to such meal, without the permission or knowledge of the owner, acting within the scope of his employment, so as to render the owner liable for his negligent act in injuring a pedestrian with the machine. Counsel quote the following language from the opinion: "The law governing the liability of a master for the acts of the servant in this class of cases is embodied in the following comprehensive statement: 'For all acts done by a servant in obedience to the express orders or direction of the master, or in the execution of the master's business, within the scope of his employment, and for acts in any sense warranted by the express or implied authority conferred upon him, considering the nature of the service required, the instructions given, and the circumstances under which the act is done, the 'master is responsible.' Ritchie v. Waller. 63 Conn. 160, 27 L.R.A. 161, 38 Am. St. Rep. 361, 28 Atl. 29. While the rule of such liability may readily be comprehended, its application to the varying facts in cases of this class is often attended with difficulty. The ultimate inquiry usually resolves itself into one of fact, under the particular evidential facts and circumstances of the case."

We have examined with care the authorities cited by appellant's counsel, but are unable to agree with counsel as to their applicability. In order to render the cited cases applicable, counsel are forced to the position that the testimony shows conclusively that the chauffeur, Hall, on the day and at the time of the accident, was using the machine for the benefit of Mrs. Roach, as well as for the defendant, and that the machine was used for the guests of the family and those in charge of the household.

We think that this position is not warranted by the undisputed evidence in the case. We have already quoted from and called attention to the evidence, which shows conclusively, in so far as this record is concerned, that the chauffeur was not acting by authority of defendant, his wife, Miss Nott, or any member of the family, but against the positive and explicit instructions of the defendant. If it can be said that there is any presumption in such a case that the chauffeur was acting within scope of his general employment, we think that in this case that presumption is completely overthrown by the uncontradicted evidence in the case. Upon the facts, it cannot be said that there is any conflict in the case. For that reason, the numerous Michigan cases cited by appellant's counsel are not in point.

In the recent case of Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81, 130 N. W. 336, we discussed somewhat at length the rules of law applicable in cases of this kind, in this state, prior to the going into effect of act No. 318 of the Public Acts of 1909. We there said that the doctrine of respondet superior applies only when the relation of master and servant is shown to exist between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be charged for the result of some neglect or wrong at the time, and in respect to the very transaction out of which the injury arose; and that the cases are controlled by the general rules of law governing the relation of master and servant, or principal and agent.

In addition to the authorities cited in Hartley v. Miller, supra, we call attention to the discussion of this subject in Berry on Law of Automobiles, §§ 135 to 145, and the many cases there cited; Huddy, Automobiles, 2d ed. pp. 245 to 251, and cases cited.

The test of the liability of the master for his servant's acts is whether the latter was at the time acting within the scope of his employment. The phrase "in the course or scope of his employment or authority," when used relative to the acts of a servant, means while engaged in the service of his master, or while about his master's business. It is not synonymous with "during the period covered by his employment." We are of opinion that the trial judge did not err in directing a verdict for the defendant.

Error is also assigned because the court excluded evidence of the statements of the chauffeur made on the occasion of the accident. The statements not being made by the chauffeur while engaged in the business of the defendant, but while he was violating the defendant's express orders, he could not bind defendant by any of his acts or statements, and it was no part of the res gestæ. Patterson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 54 Mich. 91, 19 N. W. 761; Hall v. Murdock, 119 Mich. 389, 78 N. W. 329.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

RE WILL OF W. T. JENKINS.

DOLISCA JENKINS et al., Appts.

(157 N. C. 429, 72 S. E. 1072.)

Statute — alteration of language — effect — "and" and "or."

1. No change is effected in a statute providing that to be sustained a holographic

Note. — Custody of holographic will.

Under the statutes of North Carolina and Tennessee, certain requirements as to the place of finding of a holographic script, testamentary in its nature, must be satisfied in order that it may be established as a will. In North Carolina, the original statute (Laws 1784, chap. 10, § 5) provided that, to make a holographic will valid, it must, among other things, be found among the valuable papers or effects of the deceased, or be lodged in the hands of some person for safe-keeping. The present statute, as appears in RE JENKINS, is changed only in the conjunction used in the first alternative requirement, which does not change its force and effect.

The original Tennessee statute was the North Carolina statute of 1784, which, in Tennessee, was subsequently changed by the omission of the words "or effects," so that the present Tennessee statute (Code 1858, § 2163; Shannon's Code, § 3896) prescribes as one of the requirements necessary to sustain a holographic will that it shall have been found, after the testator's death, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) will must be found among the valuable papers or effects of deceased, by changing the word "or" to "and."

Will — holographic — place of finding.

2. A holographic will found in an envelop containing insurance papers, some of which had expired, in a little-used table drawer in testator's dwelling, is within a statute requiring it to be found among his valuable papers and effects, although his securities are kept at his place of business.

(December 13, 1911.)

APPEAL by the caveators from a decree of the Superior Court for Halifax County in favor of propounders in an action brought to determine whether a certain paper writing was the will of W. T. Jenkins, deceased. Affirmed.

Statement by Walker, J.:

This is a caveat to a paper writing which purports to be the last will and testament of W. T. Jenkins. Upon issues submitted to them, the jury found that the script and every part thereof is in the handwriting of the said Jenkins. It was unattested. The jury also found that the paper writing, which had been proved in common form, is the will of W. T. Jenkins.

The evidence tended to show that Jenkins died in May, 1909, and after his death a search was made for a will by Levi Browning, who married his niece, and had lived in the house with him three years; his wife having lived there practically all her life. The witness Browning testified that they searched the clothes of the deceased, and looked over the papers and his

"among his valuable papers, or lodged in the hands of another for safe-keeping."

Under these statutes, if a testamentary paper be found among the valuable papers of the deceased, and be proved in the manner required, "these circumstances are equivalent to an express publication before witnesses, because it is to be inferred from them that the party intended to give effect to the paper as his will." Crutcher v. Crutcher, 11 Humph. 377.

The nature of the place of deposit is immaterial. As said in Tate v. Tate, 11 Humph. 465, "the place of deposit will depend upon the condition and arrangements of the testator; it is sufficient if the will be kept and found amongst his other valuable papers or effects."

So, a holographic will found in one of the apartments of a sugar chest, under lock, with other valuable papers and a ten dollar bank note,—another deposit for papers having been disused, because the key to the lock had been lost,—is within the statute, the intention of which is "that it shall appear to be a will, whose existence and place of deposit are known to the testator, house and his room. On direct examination, he said there were no papers in the house, but on cross-examination corrected that statement, and said that there were some papers in W. T. Jenkins's bedroom, in a bureau. They did not find a will in the house, according to Browning, and proceeded to examine the papers at W. T. Jenkins's store.

The witness was asked:

Q. W. T. Jenkins was a business man, was he not?

A. Yes sir; so far as I know.

Q. He did have some papers that you found at the store?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Valuable papers—notes and mortgages, were they not?

A. I don't know that they were so valuable; didn't seem to be kept up. Of course, there were some valuable papers in them,—some deeds and things.

According to the evidence of Browning and other witnesses, Captain Jenkins was a man of good business judgment, and a great many of the people in the neighborhood would come and get him to write papers for them. The paper writing was dated April 9, 1909, and the witness testified that W. T. Jenkins's mind was sound at that time. Browning further testified that after N. E. Jenkins, a brother of the deceased, had qualified as administrator, which was twelve or fifteen days after the death of Captain Jenkins, he renewed the search for a will, and found the paper writing offered for probate in a table drawer in the hall of Captain Jenkins's house.

The paper was in an envelop with some insurance papers,—insurance on his gin and dwelling,—only one of which was then in force. After finding this paper, the witness, according to his own admission, did not tell any one connected with the estate or with Captain Jenkins about finding this paper, until it was offered for probate, and he refused to let anybody compare the handwriting. Carrie E. Browning, who will take one half of the estate of Captain Jenkins if this will is sustained, and who is the wife of Levi Browning, testified that it was two or three weeks after the death of Captain Jenkins before the will was found. She describes the finding of it as follows: "Well, as there had not been one found, of course, we were on the lookout for one. We were hunting for some medicine my husband was taking. There was a person in the neighborhood who wanted some poison, and he wanted to send him some sugar of lead, and he, with the object in view of finding a will, if there was one, and to get this medicine, happened to think of this drawer, and went in there and found this paper." Mrs. Browning was asked why the table was not examined earlier. She answered: "Because we did not think of papers being in there, as it was used for this poison medicine generally, as well as other kinds." The witness also said that she had turned the drawer to the wall, to keep the children from going in where this medicine was. She further said: "I knew what was in the drawer, but it was a drawer not used much,—in everyday use, I should have said."

Asked, "How long, Mrs. Browning, be-and that he has it in his care and protection, preserving it as his will." Ibid.

"The requirements of the statute are sufficiently complied with if the script is found among the valuable papers and effects, under such circumstances as to show that the deceased regarded it as a valuable paper, and desired it to take effect as his will." Hughes v. Smith, 64 N. C. 493.

Valuable papers, within the meaning of the statute, "consist of such as are regarded by the testator as worthy of preservation, and therefore, in his estimation, of some value. It is not confined to deeds for land or slaves, obligations of money, or certificates of stock. Any others which are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person must be regarded as embraced in that description. This requirement is only intended as an indication on the part of the writer that it is his intention to preserve and perpetuate the paper in question as a disposition of his property; that he regards it as valuable." Marr v. Marr, 2 Head, 303.

So, in Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea, 316, where writings propounded as a holographic 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

will were embodied in and formed parts of a diary continuously kept by the deceased in a large blank book, which, on the second day before his death, he directed his servant, in the event of his death, to hand to the person whom one of the writings stated he wanted to take charge of what little he had, the court said: "Valuable papers, within the meaning of the statute, are not papers having a money value, but only such as are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person," Marr v. Marr, 2 Head, 306. Entries of daily transactions, whether on separate sheets of paper or in book form, preserved by the writer, and which the proof shows he directed his servant to deliver to the person selected by him to manage his estate after his death, would be valuable papers. If the testamentary papers in controversy had been written on separate sheets of paper, and deposited by the writer within the leaves of the book in which the diary was kept, it would scarcely be contended they would not be found among his valuable papers. For a stronger reason they must be so considered if actually written in the book it fore the death of Captain Jenkins, did you go in the drawer?" she answered, "Well, it probably might have been several months since we needed an article in that drawer."

Q. During his sickness, you kept his medicines in that drawer?

A. No, no; did not keep them in there. We had them fresh from the doctor; kept them right on his table, and administered them from his table.

Levi Browning was recalled, and testified that he found the paper in an envelop, which was offered in evidence, and that insurance policies were also in the envelop. There was evidence that the will was found in an envelop on which was written, in the handwriting of W. T. Jenkins, the word "Important." Much testimony was introduced by the propounders, to prove that the script was in the handwriting of W. T. Jenkins, and by the caveators to show the contrary. Evidence was also offered by the caveators as to the circumstances under which the paper was found in the drawer. N. E. Jenkins, a witness for the caveators and a brother of the deceased, testified that he examined all the papers of W. T. Jenkins, both at his house and store, but could not find a will. About fifteen days after his brother's death, he qualified as administrator, and several days later, about the 18th or 19th of May, he received notice of the existence of this paper, but was not notified by Browning.

At the close of the caveators' evidence, Levi Browning was again recalled, and testified that there was another policy in the envelop that had expired. At the close of the evidence, the caveators requested the court to instruct the jury that, upon the evidence, they should answer the issue, "No," thereby finding that the paper writing exhibited by the propounders is not the last will and testament of W. T. Jenkins; and they also asked for special instructions, based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to establish the will, all of which were refused, and caveators excepted, and from the judgment against them appealed to this court.

self and as parts of its entries. Moreover, the proof shows that this book was in the hands of the deceased on the night before his death, and was found, with other manuscript books of account in which the deceased kept his accounts as treasurer of the town of La Grange, and of certain secret lodges. These books were all lying upon a shelf of the washstand, within a step of the bed of the deceased, and where he seems to have been in the habit of keeping them."

But a holographic writing, to be valid as a will, "must have been deposited by the testator, or with his assent, among his papers which he regarded as valuable, or desired to preserve; or in the hands of another for safe-keeping, with the intent that it should operate as his will." Hopper v. McQuary, 5 Coldw. 129.

So, in Little v. Lockman, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 494, it was held that an alleged holographic will found after the death of the writer in the drawer of a bureau belonging to him, among loose receipts, an old copy book, and a purse which had belonged to one of his deceased children, containing a few pieces of silver, amounting in all to 80 cents, and also among several imperfect instruments of a testamentary character, while in another drawer of the same bureau are found deeds, notes, and other papers relating to important transactions, tied up in bundles and labeled, and a silver watch, a knife, and a few dollars in silver,—cannot be probated as a will, under the statute providing that a holographic script, to be good as a will, must be found among the valuable papers or effects of the deceased; though if the deceased had more than one place of deposit for his "valuable papers or effects," it seems that his holographic script found in either may be probated.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The phrase "among the valuable papers and effects" does not necessarily and without exception mean among the most valuable. "If that were required, it might be difficult for one who had two or more places for keeping his valuable papers, to know in which he could safely place his will. The values in cash would be liable to change more or less frequently. It might well happen that a bond or a large sum might be paid off and the money deposited in bank or invested in real estate, so that the place which contained the most valuable papers to-day might to-morrow contain only those of comparatively insignificant value. The phrase cannot have a fixed and unvarying meaning to be applied under all circumstances. It can only mean that the script must be found among such papers and effects as show that the deceased considered it a paper of value, one deliberately made and to be preserved, and intended to have effect as a will. This would depend greatly upon the condition and business and habits of the deceased in respect to keeping valuable papers, and the place and circumstances under which the script was executed, viz., whether at home or on a journey, etc." Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170.

And "where a person has two or more depositories of his valuable papers and effects, the finding in either will suffice. It is not necessary it should be found in that which contains the most valuable papers and effects." Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. C. 26.

So, where the deceased had two places, in both of which he kept papers of value, although the value of those in one was greatly in excess of that of those in the other, and his alleged holographic will was found in the one of them containing the papers of lesser value, which was a locked trunk in a

Messrs. Joseph P. Pippen, George C. Green, and Murray Allen, for appellants:

The will was not among the valuable papers and effects of the deceased.

St. John's Lodge v. Callender, 26 N. C. (4 Ired. L.) 339; Harrison v. Burgess, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 384; Little v. Lockman, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 495; Hill v. Bell, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 122, 93 Am. Dec. 583; Hughes v. Smith, 64 N. C. 494; Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170; Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. C. 26; Re Sheppard, 128 N. C. 54, 38 S. E. 27; Harper v. Harper, 148 N. C. 453, 62 S. E. 553; Brogan v. Barnard, 115 Tenn. 260, 112 Am. St. Rep. 822, 90 S. W. 858, 5 Ann. Cas. 634.

The words "valuable papers" and "effects" have different and well-defined meanings.

Brogan v. Barnard, 115 Tenn. 260, 112 Am. St. Rep. 822, 90 S. W. 858, 5 Ann. Cas. 634; Little v. Lockman, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 495.

Messrs. W. E. Daniel and R. C. Dunn for appellees.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There was sufficient evidence in the case to prove that the script was found in the drawer with policies of insurance, some of which had expired, and that it had been placed there by W. T. Jenkins, in an envelop upon which he had written the word "Important," and that Levi Browning, when he found it, immediately took it from the envelop and read it to his wife, and the next morning she read it. In the paper the testator devised and bequeathed his property to his nieces, Bessie M. Liles and Carrie E. Browning, wife of Levi Browning, who seem to have had the best claim upon his bounty, and appointed as his executor Honorable E. L. Travis, who had been his attorney and legal adviser.

The formal execution of the script was sufficiently proved before the clerk, and at the trial of the issue devisavit vel non, but the contention of the caveators is that the paper was not found "among the valuable papers and effects" of the deceased, as re-room which he had occupied, and which was also locked, the trunk containing also certain wearing apparel; while the more valuable papers were found in a tin box left in the care of a bank, which box also contained the key to the trunk,—the will was found among the testator's valuable papers as required by statute to entitle it to probate. Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170.

And a holographic will written in a book in which the decedent kept accounts against his tenants meets the requirement of the statute, that to constitute a valid will it must have been found among the testator's valuable papers and effects, where, although the will was not discovered until eight months after the testator's death, the book containing it was found directly after his death, either in a bureau drawer or a valise, both of which were kept locked, and each of which contained other valuable papers and some coin or paper currency. Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. C. 26.

A holographic will found in a drawer of a bureau, in testator's dwelling, where his wife kept her money and jewels, and which was constantly kept locked, is within the statute requiring it to be found among testator's valuable papers or effects. Harrison v. Burgess, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 384.

And an alleged holographic will which is found after the testator's death, with his more valuable papers and some money, in his trunk, which was legally in his possession, though for the time deposited at the house of another person, is found among the valuable papers and effects of the deceased within the statute. Hill v. Bell, 61 N. C. 122, 93 Am. Dec. 583.

Likewise, a holographic script propounded for probate, which was found in a drawer inside of a desk, deposited between a bag of gold coin and a bag of silver coin, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

while just above the drawer, in pigeon holes, were found notes, bonds, and other valuable papers properly arranged in files,—the drawer and pigeon holes being secured by the same door and lock,—meets the requirement of the statute that to be good as a will it must have been found among the valuable papers and effects of the deceased. Hughes v. Smith, 64 N. C. 493.

And a holographic will written on the outside of an envelop which contained certain insurance policies referred to in and disposed of by the will, and found in a drawer in a locked iron safe in a dental office which deceased had occupied, which safe was used for the purpose of keeping valuable papers, money, and other personal effects,—meets the requirements of a statute, in having been found "among his valuable papers," although there were no other papers in that particular drawer of the safe. Harper v. Harper, 148 N. C. 453, 62 S. E. 553.

In Brogan v. Barnard, 115 Tenn. 260, 112 Am. St. Rep. 822, 90 S. W. 858, 5 Ann. Cas. 634, it was held that the valuable papers referred to by the legislature are papers which the decedent considered valuable and worthy of preservation as records of facts purported to be stated and perpetuated in them, and in which he had an interest of some nature; and accordingly, that an alleged holographic will cannot be sustained when found in a box in which the testator, a small merchant and country postmaster, who had his office in his store, kept postage stamps and stationery belonging to the Federal government,—especially where valuable papers consisting of deeds and notes were found in a locked trunk at his residence, some distance from the store.

But where a holographic will was found in a desk of the deceased which contained quired by statute. Revisal, § 3127. Prior to the enactment of the Revised Code, the language of the statute (Laws 1784, chap. 10, § 5) was "that such will was found among the valuable papers or effects of the deceased." We do not think the substitution of the copulative for the disjunctive conjunction was intended to make any substantial change in the law, and the word "and" should be construed as "or." Otherwise a person owning effects of ever so much value, but not having any valuable papers, or a person having valuable papers, but no valuable effects, could not execute a valid holographic will. We cannot believe that the legislature contemplated such a radical change in the law, and that any such result should follow the change of a single word, and it has been so held with good reason. Hughes v. Smith, 64 N. C. 493; Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170. In the last case, Justice Rodman said: "We do not think that this substitution ["and" for "or"] was intended to make any change in the meaning of the act. At all events, it made none to affect the present case. We only notice it to put it out of the way." Besides, the word "effects" is comprehensive in meaning, and is broad enough to include policies of insurance, which will answer both descriptions,— valuable papers and effects. Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. C. 26.

We will now proceed to consider the other question, whether the paper was found in a proper place of deposit. "The statute of frauds in England, in relation to wills, and our act upon the same subject, have in view the same object; namely, the protection of the heirs at law and next of kin of a decedent, from the effect of a forged or false paper as a will. For that purpose, many forms and ceremonies are required to be observed in the execution of such instruments. With regard to attested wills, the requisites of the English, and our statute, except as to the number of witnesses, are substantially the same. It is well known to the profession how strictly—we may say, sternly—the courts in both countries have demanded a compliance with these provisions of the law. The same policy must govern us when we come to decide whether the requisitions of our statute have been complied with in the execution of a paper writing propounded as a holographic will. One alternative requisition of the statute is that it must 'be found among the valuable papers or effects' of the alleged testator." Little v. Lockman, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 495. The provisions of the statute are, of course, mandatory papers of little value as well as valuable papers, it is not necessary, in the absence of evidence that the desk was divided into parts, in one or more of which valuable papers were kept, and in others papers of no value, to further show that the paper was found in such a portion of the desk as indicated that the deceased attached importance to it and preserved it as of value. Allen v. Jeter, 6 Lea, 672.

Where a holographic script propounded for probate as a will was written in a book containing valuable memoranda of the deceased's moneys, accounts, etc., which had been kept in a box on a table within his reach, with his deeds and account books, and which, when the box had been moved out three weeks before his death, he had caused to be brought back to him, after which he retained it in his immediate possession, in the bed with him, where it was found under his body, at his death, and the finder placed it on a bureau at the head of the bed, behind which it fell, and was found a week later on the floor behind the bureau,—it is a question for the jury whether the alleged will was not found "among the valuable papers and effects" of the deceased, within the meaning of the statute. Re Sheppard, 128 N. C. 64, 38 S. E. 27.

And where papers of a decedent were very numerous and were found in several places about his house, and after his death were collected together and placed in two trunks, under lock, and a thorough search among them failed to disclose a will,—the mere fact that an alleged holographic will, found six months later, was found in a bundle or file of papers which the deceased had labeled "of no value" is not conclusive against the will, under the statute, but the force and effect of this label is for the jury to determine, and it is their province to determine, upon all the surrounding circumstances and the legitimate presumptions to be made by them from all the facts proved, whether the paper was found among the "valuable papers" of the deceased. Marr v. Marr, 5 Sneed, 385.

But proof merely that an alleged holographic will was produced, after the death of the testator while abroad, by his surviving partner and confidential friend, sealed up and indorsed in the handwriting of the testator: "Copy Joseph Deans will, June 17th, 1802, to be opened after his death by" certain specified persons,—does not bring the will within the statute providing that it must have been found among the valuable papers or effects of the deceased, or must have been by him lodged in the hands of some person for safe-keeping. St. John's Lodge v. Callender, 26 N. C. (4 Ired. L.) 335.

Under the second alternative provision, that to be sustained, a holographic will must have been lodged in the hands of some person for safe-keeping, the testator's wife is a proper depository. Harrison v. Burgess, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 384.

And in Alston v. Davis, 118 N. C. 202, and not directory, and therefore there must be a strict compliance with them before there can be a valid execution and probate of a holographic script as a will; but this does not mean that the construction of the statute should be so rigid and binding as to defeat its clearly expressed purpose. It must be construed and enforced strictly, but at the same time reasonably.

"The requirements of the statute are sufficiently complied with if the script is found among the valuable papers and effects, under such circumstances as to show that the deceased regarded it as a valuable paper [worthy of preservation], and desired it to take effect as his will." Hughes v. Smith, supra. This court said, in Winstead v. Bowman, supra: "We are led to conclude that the phrase 'among the valuable papers and effects' cannot, necessarily and without exception, mean 'among the most valuable,' etc. If that were required, it might be difficult for one who had two or more places for keeping his valuable papers to know in which he could safely place his will. The values in cash would be liable to change more or less frequently. It might well happen that a bond or a large sum might be paid off, and the money deposited in bank or invested in real estate, so that the place which contained the most valuable papers to-day might to-morrow contain only those of comparatively insignificant value. The phrase cannot have a fixed and unvarying meaning, to be applied under all circumstances. It can only mean that the script must be found among such papers and effects as show that the deceased considered it a paper of value, one deliberately made and to be preserved, and intended to have effect as a will. This would depend greatly upon the condition, and business, and habits of the deceased in respect to keeping valuable papers, and the place and circumstances under which the script was executed, viz., whether at home or on a journey, etc. It was not the intention of the legislature to destroy or unreasonably restrict the power of making a holographic will, but simply to assure that the writing offered as a will was really and deliberately intended as such. The place in which it is found, supposing it to be found among valuable papers and effects, is but one circumstance in evidence upon that issue." Referring to this passage in Judge Rodman's opinion, the present chief justice said, in Re Sheppard, 128 N. C. 54, 38 S. E. 27: "In Winstead v. Bowman, supra, that court criticized, if it does not overrule, the narrow rule which had been laid down in Little v. Lockman, 49

24 S. E. 15, it was held that a letter showing an unmistakable purpose to make a disposition of the writer's property, after his death, to the addressee, his sister, which letter was sent by mail to the sister, and is found in her custody, after the death of the writer, is good as a holographic will, under the statute requiring as one alternative that such a will, to be good, must have been lodged by the testator in the hands of some person for safe-keeping,—although the writer made no special request that the addressee, his sister and beneficiary, should preserve the letter, as "it is clearly a reasonable inference that a letter transmitted by mail to one deeply interested in preserving it is sent by the writer for safe-keeping."

But in McCutchen v. Ochmig, 1 Baxt. 390, the court said: "The mere writing of a letter to another, containing testamentary provisions, without affirmative and direct proof that the writer intended to lodge it with his correspondent as a will and for safe-keeping, would not answer the demand of the statute." And it was accordingly held that a holographic script in the form of a letter was not sufficiently shown to have been lodged with the plaintiff, the addressee thereof, by the deceased, for safe-keeping, as his will, where it appeared merely that the deceased wrote and sent the letter to the plaintiff, his cousin, by mail, requesting him to pay certain accounts of the writer, and saying, "if anything is left after I am dead, it is yours. You may have it." 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the absence of any statutory provision as to the custody of a holographic will, the fact that such a will, complete and perfect in form, is found on a table, under and among a lot of old letters, circulars, medical journals, and other papers of no value, in the room in the testator's residence in which he died, while a will written years before is found in the decedent's trunk, where he kept his valuables, is of little importance in determining the validity of the later will, where, by statute, an instrument which has been executed in such manner as to constitute a valid will remains such until revoked by the making of a subsequent will, or by the testator's destroying, canceling, or obliterating the same, or causing it to be done in his presence. Ainsworth v. Briggs, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 108 S. W. 753.

As to the sufficiency of the showing that a paper offered as a holographic will was intended as such, see note to Smith v. Smith, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1018.

As to the necessity of witnesses to a holographic will, see note to La Rue v. Lee, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 968.

As to writing the name in the body of a holographic will as a signature thereto, see note to Meads v. Earle, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 64.

As to violation of requirement that holographic will shall be written by testator, see note to Re Noyes, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1145.

A. C. W.

N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 494,"—citing with approval Tate v. Tate, 11 Humph. 466, to this effect: "The intention of the statute is that it shall appear to be a will, whose existence and place of deposit were known to the testator, and that he had it in his care and protection, preserving it as his will." And also Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea, 316, to this effect: "In a diary was found, embedded among other entries, a disposition of property, written and signed. This diary was found among his books of account, and the will therein written was [held to have been properly] admitted to probate." Substantially to the same effect is Harper v. Harper, 148 N. C. 453, 62 S. E. 553.

The fact that it is found among the writer's valuable papers and effects implies that it must have been placed there by him, or with his knowledge and consent or approval, with the intent that it should operate as his will, and not that it was deposited surreptitiously by another person, for the purpose of defeating, instead of executing, his will. If the paper is so found, it will be presumed that the deposit of it in the place was made by him, or with his assent; and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, or of suspicious circumstances, no proof of the fact is required. Pritchard, Wills, § 236; Hooper v. McQuary, 5 Coldw. 136. The statute does not demand proof that the author of the paper made the deposit, but only that it was found among his valuable papers and effects, and proof of this fact is quite sufficient, at least in the first instance, and when there is no countervailing proof.

"Valuable papers," within the meaning of the statute, are such papers as are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person, having regard to his condition, business, and habits of preserving papers. They do not necessarily mean the most valuable papers of the decedent even, and are not confined to papers having a money value, or to deeds for land, obligations for the payment of money, or certificates of stock. The requirement is only intended as an indication on the part of the writer that it is his intention to preserve and perpetuate the paper as a disposition of his property, and that he regards it as valuable; consequently the sufficiency of the place of deposit to meet the requirement of the statute will depend largely upon the condition and arrangements of the testator." Pritchard, Wills, § 237; Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170; Marr v. Marr, 2 Head, 303, Id. 5 Sneed, 385; Allen v. Jeter, 6 Lea, 672; Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea, 316.

Applying these principles to the facts 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of our case, it would seem that there had been such a full compliance with the provisions of the statute as to constitute the paper writing, found in the drawer of the table, the will of the writer. He appears not to have been very careful in handling his papers. There were these places of deposit: His desk in the store, his bureau in his home, his bookcase, and the drawer of the table in the hall of his house. It would appear that of the four he regarded the drawer of the table as the most important place of deposit; for he not only placed in it his policies of insurance, but the script was found in an envelop on which he had written the word "Important." What could be more indicative of his desire that the paper should take effect as his will, and of the fact that he considered the place as one for the deposit of his valuable papers, than his words that the papers inclosed in the envelop were "important." But, aside from this fact, a policy of insurance is a valuable paper (Harper v. Harper and Hooper v. McQuary, supra), within the meaning of the statute, and it was evidently so considered by him. As testified by one of the witnesses, the papers in the other places of deposit were not so kept as to show that he regarded them as of any great value; nor, under the circumstances, would it be any more likely that his will should have been found there than in the drawer of the table at his home. The court left it to the jury to say whether, under all the facts and circumstances, W. T. Jenkins had placed the paper in the drawer with the intention to preserve and take care of it as his will, telling them that, within the meaning of the law, a policy of insurance is a valuable paper. The jury were properly instructed as to how they should consider and apply the evidence in the case. We do not see why this was not a proper instruction, and as much so as similar ones which were given in the cases we have cited. Whether the table drawer was a proper place of deposit under the statute was a question to be determined largely by the jury upon the particular facts of the case. It was certainly not error to submit the question to the jury, instead of deciding it as matter of law. Re Sheppard, supra. If the jury found that W. T. Jenkins placed the paper in the envelop, with the policies of insurance, and deposited them in the drawer, intending that it should be his will, the requirements of the statute were fully observed, and their verdict, declaring the paper to be his last will and testament, was warranted in law.

The case of Brogan v. Barnard, 115 Tenn. 260, 112 Am. St. Rep. 822, 90 S. W. 858, 5 Ann. Cas. 634, cited by appellants' counsel, is not in point. It was decided upon the ground that the stamps and stationery were not valuable papers, as they did not record anything; and, besides, they did not belong to the writer of the script, but to the United States.

We find no error in the rulings or charge of the court.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

J. K. BATCHELDER, Guardian of Howard Scott,
v.

JENNIE WALWORTH et al.

(— Vt. —, 82 Atl. 7.)

Adoption — right of children of party adopted.

1. Under a statute providing that the same right of inheritance shall exist between the parties to an adoption as though the party adopted had been the legitimate child of the person making the adoption, a child of the person adopted will, in case of the latter's death before that of the person making the adoption, inherit from the adopting parent by right of representation.

Same — construction of statute — words "child" and "issue."

2. The use of the words "child" and "issue" in the statute governing the descent of property does not prevent the application of the rules of descent to adopted children so as to permit the issue of deceased ones to represent them, where the statute of adoption creates the same rights of inheritance between the parties as though the person adopted had been the legitimate child of the person making the adoption.

Descent — woman marrying adoptive father — rights.

3. The rights of a woman who marries a man with an adopted child, in his estate, are, although she does not consent to the adoption, the same as though the child was the fruit of the marriage.

(January 8, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendants to rulings of the Bennington County Court decreeing plaintiff heir at law of an estate and entitled as such to two thirds of the estate remaining for distribution. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — The question whether the terms "child," "children," "issue," etc., in statutes governing distribution of decedent's estate, include adopted children, is treated in the note to Morse v. Osborne, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 914; and as to whether such terms in a will include adopted children, see note to Re Leask, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1169.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Holden & Healy for defendants.
Messrs. Batchelder & Bates, for plaintiff:

The legislature had the power to make plaintiff the heir at law of said Walworth, and so entitled to receive a distributive share of his estate.

Stanley v. Chandler, 53 Vt. 619.

Plaintiff inherits, as a legal representative of his deceased mother, the estate of George W. Walworth.

Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321; Andrus v. Foster, 17 Vt. 556; Lunay v. Vantyne, 40 Vt. 501.

The general intent of the statute is to place the adopted child in relation to either of his adopted parents, so far as their property is concerned, in the same position that he would be if their natural child.

Buckley v. Frasier, 153 Mass. 525, 27 N. E. 768; Pace v. Klink, 51 Ga. 220; Gray v. Holmes, 57 Kan. 217, 33 L.R.A. 207, 45 Pac. 596; Power v. Hadley, 85 Ky. 671, 4 S. W. 683; Lathrop v. Young, 25 Ohio St. 451; 1 Cyc. 935; Re Newman, 75 Cal. 213, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146, 16 Pac. 887; Re Williams, 102 Cal. 70, 41 Am. St. Rep. 163, 36 Pac. 407; Moore v. Moore, 35 Vt. 98; Warren v. Prescott, 84 Me. 483, 17 L.R.A. 435, 30 Am. St. Rep. 370, 24 Atl. 948; Morrison v. Sessions, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500, and note, 70 Mich. 297, 38 N. W. 249.

Watson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 18th day of April, 1909, George W. Walworth died intestate at Bennington, this state, the place of his residence, leaving a solvent estate in this state consisting mostly of real property. He left surviving him a wife, Jennie L. Walworth, and several brothers and sisters (the exceptants in this case), but no father or mother. On January 15, 1885, by an instrument of adoption properly executed, filed, and recorded pursuant to the statute (R. L. chap. 127), the intestate, then single, duly and legally adopted one Maggie Mitchell, then a minor, as his heir at law. Subsequent to such adoption, and on October 17, 1901, the intestate married Jennie L., she then knowing of said adoption, but at no time assenting or dissenting to or from the same. Subsequent to her adoption Maggie married, and after the marriage of her adoptive father and within his lifetime, she died, leaving a son, Howard M. Scott, born in marriage, surviving her. Howard M., now a minor, by his guardian, claims in consequence of the adoption of his mother to be an heir of the intestate by right of representation, and as such entitled to a distributive share of his estate. No children were ever born to the intestate. The court below decreed pro forma that Howard M. is an heir at law of the intestate, and that he is entitled to two thirds of the intestate's estate remaining for distribution, the widow to the remaining one third, and that the brothers and sisters of the intestate take nothing. To this decree exceptions were severally taken by the widow, the brothers, and sisters.

By Laws of 1880, No. 137, § 1, "any person other than a married woman, of full age and sound mind, and any husband and wife, may adopt any other person as his or their heir at law with or without change of name of the person adopted." Sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 prescribe the method of procedure, and the form of the instrument to be executed to effect such adoption. And by § 6 "such instrument shall, if it appears to the probate court that the provisions of the statute have been complied with, be recorded in the probate office where it is filed. And upon the proper execution and filing of such an instrument, the same rights, duties, and obligations, and the same right of inheritance, shall exist between the parties as though the person adopted had been the legitimate child of the person or persons making the adoption, except that the person so adopted shall not be capable of taking property expressly limited to the heirs of the body or bodies of the parties making such adoption. And the natural parents of a minor shall be deprived, by the adoption, of all legal rights as respects the control of such minor, and such minor shall be freed from all obligation of obedience and maintenance as respects his natural parents." The law of these sections appears in R. L. 2536-2541, without change, and was in force at the time of the making of the adoption hereinbefore mentioned.

The question, then, is whether the child of the adopted daughter deceased is entitled to inherit through her, by right of representation, a share in the adoptive father's intestate estate. This question, now for the first time before this court, is not, on the face of the statute, altogether free from doubt. The doctrine of adoption was unknown to the common law of England, and in this country, in states whose jurisprudence is based exclusively on that system, it exists only by statute. Re Thorne, 155 N. Y. 140, 49 N. E. 661; Burrage v. Briggs, 120 Mass. 103; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321; Morrison v. Sessions, 70 Mich. 297, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500, 38 N. W. 249. It has, however, been recognized by the civil law from the earliest days of its existence, and on the provisions of that law our statute, as well as largely the statutes of adoption in the different states of the Union, has been founded. It is therefore reasonable and proper to look to the civil law for the proper definition of the term, and in aid of the interpretation of the provisions in question. Power v. Hafley, 85 Ky. 671, 4 S. W. 683; Gray v. Holmes, 57 Kan. 217, 33 L.R.A. 207, 45 Pac. 596; Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 274, 50 Am. Rep. 788. In the case last cited, where the construction of an adoption statute was under consideration, the court said: "A statute is not to be construed as if it stood solitary and alone, complete and perfect in itself, and isolated from all other laws. It is not to be expected that a statute which takes its place in a general system of jurisprudence shall be so perfect as to require no support from the rules and statutes of the system of which it becomes a part, or so clear in all its terms as to furnish in itself all the light needed for its construction." It is proper to look to other statutes, to the rules of the common law, to the sources from which the statute was derived, to the general principles of equity, to the object of the statute, and to the condition of affairs existing when the statute was adopted."

By the civil law before the time of Justinian, the effect of adoption was to place the person adopted in the same position he would have held had he been born a son of the adopter. All the property of the adopted son belonged to the adoptive father. The adoptive son was heir to his adoptive father, if intestate, bore his name, etc., and shared the sacred rites of the family he entered. It sometimes happened under this law that a son lost the succession to his own father by being adopted, and to his adoptive father by a subsequent emancipation. To remedy this, Justinian provided that the son given in adoption to a stranger should be in the same position to his own father as before, but gained by adoption the succession to his adoptive father if he die intestate. And by that law the adopted son is declared "assimilated, in many points, to a son born in lawful matrimony." Sanders's Justinian, 113, 115, 119. Lord Mackenzie, in his work on the Roman Law, p. 131, says that "by the ancient civil law adoption created the relation of father and son for all practical purposes, just as if the adopted son were born of the blood of the adoptive father in lawful marriage. The adopted child quitted entirely his own family and entered the family of his adopter, passing under the paternal power of his new father, and acquiring the capacity to inherit through him." The same author says: "Augustus did not adopt Tiberius, who succeeded him in the Empire, till Tiberius had adopted his nephew Germanicus; and the effect of this was that Tiberius became the son and Germanicus the grandson of Augustus at the same time." In Vidal v. Commagere, 13 La. Ann. 516, a leading case on the civil law pertaining to the subject, the minor child was adopted under an act of the legislature authorizing Vidal and wife "to adopt" her. The controversy was between the nephews and nieces of the deceased adopting wife and the adopted child for the property of the succession of said wife. Vidal and wife were simply authorized "to adopt" the child, naming her, "provided the adoption be executed within a specified time. The court said the whole question was one of interpretation: What rights did the legislature intend to confer upon the child by authorizing Vidal and wife to adopt her? "What was meant by adoption?" The court said: "Under the Roman law, the person adopted entered into the family, and came under the power of the person adopting him. And the effect was such that the person adopted stood not only himself in relation of child to him adopting, but his children became the grandchildren of such person."

It was held "that, as by the common acceptance of the word 'adoption' the relationship of parent and child, with all the consequences of that relationship, is understood, as such was the legal meaning of the word under the former laws of Louisiana, and as such is its acceptance among civilians and those conversant with the sources of our laws, we cannot say that the legislature used the word in a more restrained sense, in a sense not understood in common parlance, not given in any dictionary, and not known in any system of laws. As by the former laws of Louisiana the person adopted bore the relation of child to the person adopting, and inherited his estate, so we think the legislature, by the solemn expression of its will, intended to confer the same right upon the plaintiff to the estate of those who were authorized to adopt her." By the decree it was ordered that she be recognized as the sole heir of the deceased, and be put into the possession of all the property of the succession. Mr. Holland, in his Elements of Jurisprudence, says that parental right extends to the custody and control of children, and to the produce of their labor till they arrive at years of discretion; and that it is acquired on the birth, and also under some systems, on the adoption, of a child. Holland, Jur. 10th ed. 172. In Ross v. Ross, cited above, the question was whether a child legally adopted in Pennsylvania and thus entitled to inherit real estate there, having, with the adopting parent, become resident in Massachusetts, could inherit the real estate of such parent in the latter state, upon his dying there intestate. Holding that generally the law of the domicile of the parties is the rule which governs the creation of the status of a child by adoption, it became necessary for the court to determine the legal status of the adopted child by the statute of Pennsylvania, under which the adoption was had, as construed by the highest court of that state. Referring to two such cases, the court said: "The opinion in each of those cases clearly recognizes what is indeed expressly enacted in the statute, that, as between the adopted child and the adopting father, the child has all the rights and duties of a child, and the capacity to inherit as such. According to one of the most learned and thoughtful writers on jurisprudence of our time, it is the rights, duties, and capacities arising from the event which creates a particular status that constitutes the status itself, and afford the best definition of it. 2 Austin, Jur. 3 ed. 706, 709-712, 974. By the law of Pennsylvania, therefore, as enacted by its legislature and expounded by its highest judicial tribunal, the demandant, as between him and his adopting father, has in all respects the legal status of a child."

By the statute of Indiana, a child after its adoption takes the name in which it is adopted, and is entitled to all the rights and interests in the estate of the adopter, by descent or otherwise, that it would if the natural heir of the adopter; and the adoptive father or mother occupies the same position toward such child that he or she would if the natural father or mother, and is liable for the maintenance, education, and every other way responsible as a natural father or mother, in substance not materially unlike our own statute, except that ours excludes from the right of inheritance property expressly limited to the heirs of the body of the adopter. In Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294, 17 L.R.A. 806, 31 N. E. 1047, the court, recognizing the civil law as the source from which the statutory rules of adoption in this country have been borrowed, said that under that law, after the revision by Justinian, as before, the adopted child while held in the bonds of adoption was still in the position of a natural child born to the adopting father; that the law could and did make the legal status of the child adopted in every respect that of the natural child; and that the son of the adopted son was by the law made the grandson of the adopting father, with all the legal rights incident to that relation. It was held that the intention of the statute was to give to adopted children the same relation to adopting parents that was given them by the civil law, and that, so far as property rights were concerned, it was the intention to give them the same rights as if they were their natural children or children of their blood.

Although the direct effects of adoption under our statute are not left to rest upon the determination of the meaning of that term by construction, yet such effects expressly declared by the lawmaking power correspond in most respects with the principles of the early civil law; as respects his control, and the duties and obligations resulting from the adoption, the person adopted is placed in exactly the same position he would have held had he been born a son of the adopter; and in such respects all rights, duties, and obligations between the child and his natural parents terminate. And, except as to property expressly limited to the heirs of the body of the adoptive parent (an exception of no apparent moment on the question of the status created), the right conferred upon the child to inherit from such parent is also measured by that in law of a natural child. We think it logically follows from the authorities to which reference has been made that under the statute, construed in the light of the civil law, the adopted child by the event of the adoption becomes the legal child of the person or persons making the adoption, and stands as to the property of the adoptive parent in the same position as a child born in lawful wedlock, except as to property expressly limited to the heirs of the body of the adopter. Ross v. Ross, cited above; Buckley v. Frasier, 153 Mass. 525, 27 N. E. 768; Flannigan v. Howard, 200 Ill. 396, 59 L.R.A. 664, 93 Am. St. Rep. 201, 65 N. E. 782; Atchison v. Atchison, 89 Ky. 488, 12 S. W. 942; Hilpire v. Claude, 109 Iowa, 159, 46 L.R.A. 171, 77 Am. St. Rep. 524, 80 N. W. 332; Moran v. Moran, 151 Mo. 558, 52 S. W. 378.

Furthermore, the status of parent and child is a correlative one. Where there is a legal child there is a legal father. In Humphries v. Davis, cited above, the court said it was not to be presumed that the legislature meant to violate logical results by creating the legal relation of child without the corresponding one of parent. As a logical sequence, the children of such legal child are the grandchildren of the legal father. The status of Howard M. is, therefore, that of a legal grandchild to the intestate, and as such he is entitled to stand in his mother's place and right respecting the interstate estate, and share in it as her legal representative, unless prevented from so doing by the restrictions contained in either the statute of adoption or the statute of descent, presently to be considered. The exceptants rely upon the cases of Moore v. Moore, 35 Vt. 98, and Stanley v. Chandler, 53 Vt. 619, as authorities against such right of representation. Yet they are not so. In the Moore Case by the special act the name of the person was changed, and she was "constituted heir at law of," etc., "in as full and perfect a manner as if she had been the daughter of the said" man and wife named, "born in lawful wedlock." The word "adopt" or "adoption" is not used in the act; hence a construction based upon the meaning of the term "adoption" under the civil law, as in the Louisiana case, could not be given; nor did the act confer upon either party any rights, duties, or obligations other than such as resulted from the mere creation of an heir at law. And it should seem that the court had this peculiar feature of the act in mind, for it says: "It is hardly claimed that, if the act had merely constituted Mrs. Wright heir at law of Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar, it would have had this effect [make her 'the child and lineal descendant of' them], but the subsequent words, it is insisted, could have been used for no other purpose, and are mere useless surplusage, unless such effect be given them. But it seems to us that these additional words were used to show the extent and define the limits of the heirship thus created." The real question there was whether Mrs. Wright, by right of representation through Mrs. Dunbar, deceased, became heir to the estate of the latter's brother, subsequently dying intestate. It was held that the right conferred to inherit from Mrs. Dunbar did not give the right thus to inherit through her. The Stanley Case was based upon a similar special act, though even briefer in terms; no additional words of definition or limitation being used therein, such as were noticed by the court in the Moore Case. The instrument of assent was executed by John Bullock alone, then a married man, and the opinion states that it was not shown that his wife was instrumental in procuring the passage of the act, or ever approved of it, and it was in derogation of her rights secured by law in case she survive her husband, as she did. The question involved, as stated by the court, was: "Did the adoption of John Chauncey Chandler in the manner in which it appears he was adopted constitute him in a legal sense the child or issue of John Bullock, so that under the general statutes of descent or the special act constituting him heir he would be entitled to the estate of John Bullock by inheritance, to the exclusion of the widow?" It was held that it did not; and the widow was allowed, under the statute, $1,000 and one half of the remainder of the estate. We think the Moore Case and the Stanley Case are so distinguishable in bases, and in the question involved, from the case at bar, that they have but little force as precedents in solving the questions before us.

The special act under which the adoption was had in Power v. Hasley, cited above, changed the name of the child from that of her natural parents to that of the adoptive parents, and made her "capable of taking and holding, by descent, the estate of" the latter "in as full and complete a manner as if she was his lawful child." The language of that act is certainly no broader than that of the statute now under consideration. After adoption the child died, leaving children (the appellants in that case), and after her death the adoptive father died intestate. The question was whether the appellants, as such children, were entitled to the estate of the intestate by right of representation. It was held that by the law of adoption the adopted child was made a full legal heir to the adopting father; and was put precisely upon the same footing, so far as taking and holding the latter's property by descent was concerned, as a natural child; that, taking the logical sequence of the language of the act, aided as it is by the principles of the civil law, the conclusion was inevitable that the appellants were the legal grandchildren of the adopting father, and as such by right of representation entitled to share in the distribution of his estate. The doctrine of this case was reaffirmed in Atchison v. Atchison, 89 Ky. 488, 12 S. W. 942. To the same effect is Gray v. Holmes, 57 Kan. 217, 33 L.R.A. 207, 45 Pac. 596. In Pace v. Klink, 51 Ga. 220, the legislative act of adoption changed the surname of the adopted child to that of the adopter, and provided "that he be entitled to all rights and privileges that he would have been entitled to had he been born the son of" the adopter, and be made capable "of taking, receiving, and inheriting all manner of property under the statute of distribution . . . so far as relates to the" latter's estate. The adopted son died before the adoptive parent, leaving children surviving him. The question was whether these children, by right of representation, were entitled to take the same distributive share of the estate of the adoptive father, intestate, that their father would have taken if living. It was held that by the 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) statute of adoption the adopted, so far as the adopter and his estate were concerned, was made the lawful son and lawful heir of the adopter; and that, so far as the property of the latter was concerned, the adopting act made the children of the adopted son the representatives of their father should he die first. From the examination we have given the subject, it is believed that in no other reported case has a like question been determined, and hence that there is no diversity of decision.

It is said, however, that the words "between the parties," used in the section of the statute pertaining to the effects of the adoption, should be literally and strictly applied, and that with such application they clearly indicate an intention by the legislature to limit the right of inheritance to "between the parties" to the instrument of adoption. The statute expressly defines the direct effects produced by the event of adoption; but it contains nothing which excludes the incidental consequences of the status produced, either alone or coupled with subsequent facts. An "incident," says Lord Coke, is "a thing appertaining to or following another as a more worthy or principal." Co. Litt. 151. b. The direct effects of the adoption are complete when that event is entered upon. But the incidents are attached to the status by fixed rules of law, and whether they become operative in resulting rights may be contingent upon subsequent circumstances. Thus we have seen that by operation of law the minor child, Howard M., is the legal grandchild of the intestate, consequent on the correlative relation of the parties to the adoption. Yet the right of such grandchild to inherit from the intestate arises not out of the status produced by the adoption alone, but out of that status coupled with the subsequent fact of his mother's death before that of her adoptive father intestate; and therefrom the law fixes the results. "Every right," says Mr. Justice Holmes, "is a consequence attached by the law to one or more facts which the law defines, and, wherever the law gives any one special rights not shared by the body of the people, it does so on the ground that certain special facts, not true of the rest of the world, are true of him. When a group of facts thus singled out by the law exists in the case of a given person, he is said to be entitled to the corresponding rights." Holmes, Com. Law, 214. As respect the right of inheritance, we think the words "between the parties" are intended to limit such right of the person adopted to inherit from the person or persons making the adoption, and to this end they in effect negative any right to inherit through such person or persons by right of representation; and, if the statute be mutual (a question not considered), the right of the adopter to inherit is limited in like manner. Yet, as such limitations do not pertain to incidental consequences flowing from the legal parental relations, the right of the minor child in this case, through his mother by right of representation, to share in the intestate's estate, is not affected thereby.

It is further contended that the word "children," as used in the first canon of descent (P. S. 2036), does not include an adopted child, and that the word "issue," as used in the second canon, does not include either an adopted child or the children of such child. In Ross v. Ross, cited above, it is said that the statute of descent "must be understood as merely laying down general rules of inheritance, and not as completely and accurately defining how the status is to be created which gives the capacity to inherit. It does not undertake to prescribe who shall be considered a child, or a widow, or a husband, or what is necessary to constitute the legal relation of husband and wife, or of parent and child. Those requisites must be sought elsewhere. The words 'children' and 'child,' for instance, in the first clause, 'issue,' in the phrase 'if he leaves no issue,' in subsequent clauses, and 'kindred,' in the last two clauses of this section, clearly include a child made legitimate by the marriage of its parents and acknowledgment by the father after its birth under § 4 of the same chapter, or a child adopted under the provisions of chapter 110 of the General Statutes, or chapter 310 of the Statutes of 1871." Exactly the same holding was had in Fosburgh v. Rogers, 114 Mo. 122, 19 L.R.A. 201, 21 S. W. 82.

If the contention of the exceptants in this regard were sound, the provisions of the statute of adoption expressly conferring upon the person adopted the capacity to inherit would be in conflict with the statute of descent. And yet in this respect these two statutes, relating to same subject, are in pari materia; and should be construed together as if they are one law. Highgate v. State, 59 Vt. 39, 7 Atl. 898; Isham v. Bennington Iron Co. 19 Vt. 230; State v. Central Vermont R. Co. 81 Vt. 463, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1065, 71 Atl. 194. We have already held in this case that the adopted child was in a legal sense the child of the intestate. As to the property of the estate, she is to be deemed his child, the same as if born to him in lawful wedlock. It follows, as seems clearly was the intention of the lawmaking power, that the word "children" in the first canon of descent should be construed to include a child adopted under the general provisions of the statute of adoption. By such construction the two statutes are made to harmonize and to operate together consistently with the evident intent of the enactment. In Sayles v. Christie, 187 Ill. 420, 58 N. E. 480, the special act of adoption made the adopted child the heir at law of the adoptive parents, and declared her to be entitled to all the rights that would belong or pertain to her were she their daughter, and conferred upon her full power to take, hold, enjoy, and transmit any and all property from them by descent, in the same manner as if she had been their natural born child. On the death of the adoptive father it was claimed that he left no child, and that the widow by renunciation of the will was entitled to take under the dower act as in such case provided. The language of the statute was: "If a husband die testate, leaving no child or descendants of a child," etc. Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1897, p. 635. It was held that the adopted child in the eye of the law was as much the child of the testator as though she had been born his natural child, and consequently the renunciation amounted to nothing. To the same effect are Patterson v. Browning, 146 Ind. 160, 44 N. E. 993; Moran v. Stewart, 122 Mo. 295, 26 S. W. 962, more particularly noticed in a later paragraph. The word "issue" in the second canon of descent has a broader significance than the word "children" in the first, since it must necessarily include the "legal representatives of deceased children," also within the first. Indeed, by statute (P. S. 10) the word "issue," as applied to the descent of estates, shall include the lawful lineal descendants of the ancestor. We are not called upon to define the term beyond the necessities of this case. To render the second canon consistent with the first,—and no one for a moment can suppose it was intended to be otherwise,—the word "issue" therein must include all "children" and all "legal representatives of deceased children" within the proper interpretation of the first; for otherwise the descent of an estate above the widows' third might fall within both canons, a result so absurd that any construction producing it is to be avoided as not within the purpose of the lawmakers. Re Howard, 80 Vt. 489, 68 Atl. 513. By the Civil Code of California, after adoption, the child is to "be regarded and treated in all respects as the child of the person adopting," and the two "shall sustain towards each other the legal relation of parent and child, and have all the rights and be subject to all the duties of that relation." [§ 228]. In Re Newman, 75 Cal.

213, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146, 16 Pac. 887, it was held that these provisions of the law extended to all the rights and duties of natural parents and children; that the word "issue" in their statute of descent does not limit the right of inheritance to natural children only, but is used in the same sense as the words "child" or "children;" and that if the adopted child was by virtue of its status to be "regarded and treated in all respects as the child of the person adopting," and was to "have all the rights and be subject to all the duties of the legal relation of parent and child," the right to succeed to the estate of the deceased parent must be included. To the same effect are the cases of Atchison v. Atchison, Rowan's Estate, 132 Pa. 299, 19 Atl. 82, and Buckley v. Frasier, all cited above.

It is further said that the widow's share of the estate should not be affected by the adoption, since she never consented thereto nor took any part therein, and reference is made to Stanley v. Chandler in support of this position. But in that case, as before observed, the person was made "heir at law" by a married man without the joinder or consent of his wife. In such circumstances it seems to be pretty generally held, as there, that the rights of the widow in the estate of the husband are not affected thereby. Carroll's Estate, 219 Pa. 440, 123 Am. St. Rep. 673, 68 Atl. 1038; Nulton's Appeal, 103 Pa. 286; Baskette v. Streight, 106 Tenn. 549, 62 S. W. 142; Keith v. Ault, 144 Ind. 626, 43 N. E. 924; Barnes v. Allen, 25 Ind. 222. In Bancroft v. Bancroft, 53 Vt. 9, the adoption was by the husband and wife together, and the person adopted was made heir at law of them both. No question was raised by the widow, but the matter of the distribution of the adoptive father's intestate estate above the widow's third, to the adopted child, was contested by the brothers and sisters of the intestate on the ground of ineffectual execution of the instrument of adoption. The instrument was held to have been properly executed to constitute the child heir at law of the intestate, and the judgment of the county court was affirmed. In the case at bar, as seen, the adoption was made by the intestate when single, more than six years before his marriage to the woman now his widow. And she knew of the adoption at the time of her marriage. The case is one, therefore, where the husband died intestate, leaving in the sense of the law "legal representatives of deceased children," within the meaning of the first canon of descent, and of the first clause of division 3, P. S. 2925. Hence under the statute of descent the widow's share of the intestate estate is affected thereby the same as it would be 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

were such "representatives" of the intestate's deceased natural children. In Rowan's Estate, 132 Pa. 299, 19 Atl. 82, the testator died, leaving a widow and an adopted daughter, but no natural child. The adoption was made by the testator before his marriage to the woman who survived as his widow. The widow having elected to take the share of the estate to which she would have been entitled under the intestate laws, it was claimed in her behalf that, as the decedent died without issue, she was entitled to one half of the fund. The court below awarded her one third, from which she appealed. So the question was whether, as between the widow and the adopted child of the decedent, the child had all the rights of a natural child in the distribution of the estate. It was held that by the adoption the child became a child and heir of the person adopting her, so far as she could be made such by legislative enactment, and had all the rights of a child and heir of the adopting parent; that the widow had no reason to complain that her rights had been interfered with by the act of her husband in making the adoption prior to their marriage, and the decree was affirmed. In Moran v. Stewart, 122 Mo. 295, 26 S. W. 962, the adoption was by husband and wife, as their child and heir. The wife died, leaving her husband surviving. He subsequently married the plaintiff in suit. He died testate, having devised 400 acres of land in question to his adopted son. The widow elected to take one half of the real and personal estate of the deceased in lieu of dower. She then brought suit for the partition of the 400 acres, basing her claim to one half on the theory that her husband died "without any child or descendant in being capable of inheriting," within the meaning of a certain section of the statute to which reference was made. It was held that under the statutes of that state, for all the purposes of inheriting from the adopting parent, the adopted child became, and was, the lawful child of the adopter, the same as if born in lawful wedlock; that as the testator died leaving a child capable of inheriting from him, it was clear that the widow was not entitled to one half of the lands in suit, and the judgment was affirmed. This doctrine was reaffirmed in a subsequent case between the same parties, involving other lands. 132 Mo. 73, 33 S. W. 443. And it was reiterated in Moran v. Moran, 151 Mo. 558, 52 S. W. 378. To the same effect is Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294, 17 L.R.A. 806, 31 N. E. 1047.

Judgment affirmed. To be certified to the probate court.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

H. WINTER STOVER, Appt.,

v.

ELIZABETH A. STEFFEY et al.

(115 Md. 524, 81 Atl. 33.)

Dedication — plat — park — boundary on lots sold.

1. The sale of lots with reference to a plat does not dedicate to public use lands shown on the plat as a park, if the lots sold are not contiguous or adjacent to the park.

Same — failure to prepare ground.

2. A dedication to the public of a piece of land marked on a plat as a park is not shown by the mere planting of a few trees upon it, where it is never used as a park, and nothing is ever done to fit it for that purpose.

(June 22, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Washington County refusing to grant an injunction restraining defendants from using the designated "Park" lot for other than park purposes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles D. Wagaman for appellant.

Mr. C. A. Little for appellees.

Pattison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Samuel Cost and wife, on the 28th day of October, 1890, conveyed to J. Clarence Lane a tract of land containing 30 acres, more or less, known as the Cost farm, situated immediately outside of and adjacent to the corporate limits of Hagerstown, Washington county, Maryland, and upon the east side of the turnpike road leading from Hagerstown to Leitersburg. J. Clarence Lane was the only grantee mentioned in said conveyance, but the record discloses that other persons, including James Findlay, one of the appellees, and one Edward P. Steffey, who devised his interest therein to Elizabeth A. Steffey, the other appellee, were interested in said lands and part owners thereof. This land so conveyed unto J. Clarence Lane was thereafter laid out in lots, streets, and alleys, and a plat showing such lots, streets, and alleys, as well as the building line and a portion thereof marked "Park," was made and placed on the plat record in the office of the clerk of the circuit court for Washington county, although not marked "filed." Upon the plat was written the following: "Plat No. 1. 'East Park,' Addition to Hagerstown, Md."

On the 15th day of August, 1896, J. Clarence Lane sold and conveyed unto the appellant, H. Winter Stover, plaintiff below, two of said lots fronting on Leitersburg pike, otherwise known as Potomac street. In the deed therefor the lots of land thereby conveyed are referred to as "lots number nine (9) and ten (10) on East Park addition to Hagerstown, as designated on plat of said addition," and in said deed it is provided that "any building erected on said lots or either of them to conform to the building line as shown on said plat, and not to be located less than 20 feet from said marginal line."

On the 27th day of July, 1898, J. Clarence Lane conveyed unto James Findlay, one of the defendants in this cause, and to Edward P. Steffey, as tenants in common, by deed dated and recorded as of the last-named date, all that portion of the aforesaid tract or parcel of land which is designated on the said plat as "Park," and also lot No. 17, as designated on said plat. These lots were conveyed subject to the restrictions of the building line appearing upon the plat, which restrictions are set forth in the deed in the words following, to wit: "Provided, however, and this conveyance is upon the condition that no building shall be erected upon the parcel hereby conveyed nearer than twenty five (25) feet to the east marginal line of said North Potomac street or the Leitersburg pike."

The lot of ground designated on the plat as "Park" is adjacent to the line of the Western Maryland Railroad, and situate, lying, and being in the northeast corner formed by the intersection of the said railroad and the Leitersburg pike, with the frontage of 227 feet on North Potomac street, and running back with the southward side of Park avenue 370 feet to the west side of Dewey street, 57 feet from the railroad property; thence with the westward side of Dewey street extended to said railroad property; thence with the line of the railroad to the place of beginning. By reason of its location, it is said to be well suited for manufacturing or business purposes.

On the 1st day of July, 1899, J. Clarence Lane filed with the clerk of the circuit court for Washington county another plat of the same land. On this second plat other streets and alleys were laid out, and the bed of Dewey street was thereby changed, it being located on this plat 50 feet nearer Potomac

Note. — As to effect of conveyance of lots laid down on plats, to prevent a change in the use or form of the property, see note to Herold v. Columbia Invest. & Real Estate Co. 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067.

Leaving blank in plat as a dedication, see note to Poole v. Lake Forest, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 809.

37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

street than upon the original plat; that is to say, the depth of the lots fronting on Dewey street and running back to the alley separating them from the lots fronting on Potomac street was lessened to the extent of 50 feet, and Park avenue was changed to Manilla avenue, and the designation "Park" upon the lot of land lying to the southward of Park or Manilla avenue was removed; the same not appearing upon the second plat. Upon this plat was written the following: "It is not intended by anything herein contained to dedicate any of the streets or alleys mentioned or designated in the plat, or the beds of the same or any part thereof, the streets and alleys being mentioned and designated for the purpose of location and description merely, and not for the purpose of dedication, and the fee therein is hereby reserved." While this plat was not filed until July, 1899, the record does not disclose when it was made, but it is shown by the deed from J. Clarence Lane to Findlay and Steffey, dated the 27th day of July, 1898, that Park avenue was at that time known as Manilla avenue, or at least it was so referred to in said deed, and that Dewey street had been changed and relocated on the plat 50 feet nearer Potomac street, thus reducing the depth of this lot conveyed unto Findlay and Steffey, the dimensions of which are given above, from 420 feet, as appearing upon the first plat, to 370, upon the second plat.

In going north from Hagerstown upon the Leitersburg pike or Potomac street, the first lot reached after crossing the railroad is the designated "Park" lot, conveyed as aforesaid to Findlay and Steffey. Then comes Park or Manilla avenue, beyond which are the other designated lots upon Potomac street, commencing with lot No. 17 and ending with lot No. 1, including the lots of the appellee, numbered 9 and 10. It will thus be seen that the designated "Park" lot lies entirely to itself, not adjacent to any of the other lots, and separated from the appellant's lots by Park or Manilla avenue and the seven intervening lots numbering from 11 to 17, both inclusive. Some of these lots were sold and conveyed in the interim between the placing of the No. 1 upon the plat record, and the filing of the second plat in the office of the clerk of the circuit court for Washington county, while other lots were sold and conveyed after the filing of the second plat, but all were conveyed subject to the building-line restrictions alike laid down upon both of said plats. The record discloses that dwelling houses have been erected upon most of the lots so sold, but not upon the appellant's lots, at considerable costs to those erecting the same, and 57 L.R.A. (N.S.) that the location, as to residential section, is now regarded as one of the most desirable in the suburbs of Hagerstown.

At the time of the purchase by Findlay and Steffey of the designated "Park" lot, it was partially inclosed by a part of the fence that originally inclosed the entire tract of land when a farm; that is to say, the old farm fence still stood upon the front of the lot bordering upon Potomac street, and also on the side thereof binding with the railroad property. This lot of land, since its purchase by J. Clarence Lane, had at times been cultivated, but at the time of its conveyance to the grantees aforesaid it was, as described by one of the witnesses, a weed patch; the weeds thereon being from 4 to 5 feet high. On it were also shade trees, at that time 10 or 12 feet tall, which had been planted thereon by J. Clarence Lane, the former owner. Some of these trees were thereafter cut down and displaced by the appellees in the erection of the buildings on said lot. Not long after its purchase, Findlay and Steffey first built on this lot a lumber shed, later a stable, and then followed the erection of other buildings, including an office, built by the appellees about three years before the institution of these proceedings, which was thereafter occupied by them, and at which place they henceforth conducted the lumber, wood, coal, lime, and cement business, and whereat the said business is still conducted.

In the erection of one or more of said buildings, the restrictions as to the building line were disregarded by the appellees; the same being built upon the line of the street, and not 25 feet therefrom, as designated by the plat and as required by the deed conveying said lot to the grantees aforesaid. It was because of the violation of said restrictions in the erection of said buildings, and because of the use made of said lot by the appellees, whereby its use as a public park was prevented, that the appellant filed his bill in this case, alleging that said lot had been dedicated for park purposes, and that he was entitled to have the same used exclusively for such purposes; and further alleging that the erection of said buildings thereon nearer than 25 feet of the east marginal line of Potomac street or Leitersburg pike, and the destruction of the shade trees on said lot, and the use and occupation of said lot as above set forth, were unwarranted and unlawful under the circumstances stated, and in violation of his rights, and asking the court: First, to enjoin the appellees from building on said lot nearer than 20 feet to the east marginal line of Potomac street, and that they be required and directed to remove from the prohibited area any and all buildings standing thereon; second, that they be also enjoined and prohibited from using and occupying said lot of ground for other than park purposes, and that they be required to remove from said lot any and all buildings, lumber and merchandise of every description thereon.

The learned court below passed an order requiring the defendants to show cause why the injunction should not pass as prayed, whereupon the defendants answered, to which the plaintiff filed his replication; and the court, after hearing testimony upon the issues thus joined, granted an injunction restraining the defendants from erecting upon the parcel or parcels of land so conveyed unto James Findlay and Edward P. Steffey by the deed of J. Clarence Lane, dated July 27, 1898, any building nearer, than 25 feet to the east marginal line of Potomac street, and requiring and directing the said defendants to remove from the said area or space of 25 feet, within thirty days from the service of the injunction, any or all buildings standing thereon. The court, however, denied the relief sought in the prayer of the bill, asking that the defendants be restrained from using or occupying the said designated park lot for other than park purposes, and it is from this order refusing to grant the injunction restraining the defendants from using the designated park lot as it is now being used, or for other than park purposes, that this appeal is taken.

"It has been always held in this state and elsewhere that whether a dedication to the public has been made depends in every case upon the intention of the parties, and this, whether dedication is claimed by acts in pais, by solemn conveyances of record, or by judicial proceedings. And it is also as well settled that such intention to dedicate must be established by clear, satisfactory, and unequivocal testimony." South Baltimore Harbor & Improv. Co. v. Smith, 85 Md. 541, 37 Atl. 27. "The principle of dedication rests largely upon the doctrine of estoppel in pais, and, while there are general rules applicable to certain lines of conduct on the part of the owner of the land, each individual case must, after all, be decided upon its own facts and circumstances. Baltimore v. Frick, 82 Md. 83, 33 Atl. 435;" Canton Co. v. Baltimore, 106 Md. 83, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 129, 66 Atl. 679.

This court, in the case of Hawley v. Baltimore, 33 Md. 270, said: "The law is now too well settled to admit of any doubt that if the owner of a piece of land lays it out in lots and streets, and sells lots calling to bind on such streets, he thereby dedicates the streets so laid out to public use. This rule is founded upon the doctrine of implied covenants, and the dedication will be held to be coextensive with the right of way acquired as an easement by the purchaser. It is upon the implied covenant, in the grant to him that the dedication to public use rests, and such dedication must necessarily be measured by the limits of the right he has acquired by virtue of his grant. . . . The doctrine of implied covenants will not be held to create a right of way over all of the lands of a vendor which may lie, however remote, in the bed of a street. The lands must be contiguous to the lot sold, and there must be some point of limitation. The true doctrine is, as we understand it, that the purchaser of a lot calling to bind on a street not yet opened by the public authorities is entitled to a right of way over it, if it is of the lands of his vendor, to its full extent and dimensions only until it reaches some other street or public way. To this extent will the vendor be held by the implied covenant of his deed, and no further."

The question involved in this appeal is not the dedication to public use of the bed of a street, but here we are to ascertain if the designated park lot was dedicated by J. Clarence Lane to the public, to be used by it as a park, through an implied covenant with the grantee, Stover; for it is only upon the theory of an implied covenant for its use as a park, arising from the reference to the plat in the deed, that the grantee Stover can claim any interest or privilege in the park. As was said in the case of Canton Co. v. Baltimore, 106 Md. 86, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 129, 66 Atl. 681: "Although the law relating to the dedication to public use of streets has been settled by numerous decisions of this court, we have seldom been called upon to consider the nature and extent of the dedication of a park to such use when it is so dedicated on a plat of the grantor's land, and reference is made to the plat in deeds conveying portions of the land." In some jurisdictions it is held that the streets mentioned in the deed or laid out on the plat are embraced in the dedication to the full extent that they are owned by the grantor; but, as above stated, this is not the law of this state, and in such jurisdictions they have held that the principle controls with equal force the dedication of parks and other places designated on such plats. This, however, is not held to be the law in other jurisdictions.

In the case of Light v. Goddard, 11 Allen, 5, which was quoted by this court in the case of Canton Co. v. Baltimore, supra, that court, through Bigelow, Ch. J., said: "An attempt is made in the present case to extend this rule of interpretation much further than is warranted by any of the adjudicated cases. The plaintiff claims under a deed in which he described the lots conveyed as laid down on a plan to which reference is made. Upon inspection of this plan, it appears that these lots are carved out of a large tract of land, the whole of which is divided into numerous lots or parcels, and is fully laid down on said plan. It also appears that certain other land, which at the time of the grant in question also belonged to the grantors, and which is not immediately adjacent to the lots conveyed, but is separated therefrom by a contemplated street which forms one of the boundary lines of the lots conveyed, is designated on the plan as 'ornamental grounds' and as 'play ground.' The contention of the plaintiff is that such designation on the plan referred to in the deed of lands lying in the vicinity of, but not adjacent to, the land granted, amounts to a covenant that those grounds shall forever continue to be appropriated and used for the uses and purposes so designated. We are by no means prepared to adopt as a sound rule of exposition the general proposition on which the argument for the plaintiff rests. We do not think that a mere reference to a plan in the descriptive part of a deed carries with it by necessary implication an agreement or stipulation that the condition of land, not adjacent to, but lying in the vicinity of that granted, as shown on the plan, or the use to which it is represented on the plan to be appropriated, shall forever continue the same, so far as it may be indirectly beneficial to the land included in the deed, and was within the power or control of the grantor at the time of the grant."

The appellant's land, consisting of lots Nos. 9 and 10, as well as the designated park lot, is located on the east side of North Potomac street, but the said land of the appellant is not adjacent or contiguous to the park lot, but is separated therefrom by lots Nos. 11 to 17 both inclusive, and Park avenue or Dewey street. The lots of the appellant at the nearest point are over 400 feet from the park lot. If, therefore, the reasoning of the restrictive principle or rule of law in force in this state, "that the sale of a lot of land calling to bind on an unopened street works a dedication to public use of the street, if it is of the land of the grantor, only until it reaches the next opened or unopened street," were applied, as we think it should be, in cases of this sort where the alleged dedication is for park purposes, we do not think from the facts of this case a dedication of this lot to the public for use as a park should be presumed. The land in this case was never used as a park by the public or by any person, nor was anything done to beautify it or render it suitable or attractive for park purposes, more than to plant a few trees thereon. The original fences were not removed, and at the time of its conveyance to Findlay and Steffey it was in weeds and altogether unattractive and unsuitable for park purposes. The facts in this case, in our opinion, do not establish a dedication by J. Clarence Lane of the lot to public use as a park. A plat showing the lots, streets, and alleys as laid out by Lane, the owner, was made and placed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, though not marked "filed." Upon this plat the lot in question was designated "Park." Afterwards, in August, 1896, lots Nos. 9 and 10 were conveyed to the appellants, and in 1898 this designated park lot was conveyed to Findlay and Steffey, and about this time a second plat was made out and in 1899 filed with the clerk of the circuit court. On this plat the park lot was no longer so designated, and upon it is written the announcement by Lane that it was not intended by anything therein contained to dedicate the streets or alleys designated thereon, and that they were mentioned and designated for the purpose of location and description merely, and that the fee was reserved by him. After this a number of other lots were sold. None of the deeds offered in evidence profess to convey to the grantees any title to, interest in, or use of, said park lot, nor do any of the lots conveyed in said deeds touch or bind on the lot itself. The plat is referred to in the deed, and the fact of the park to be located on the lot was mentioned to the appellant by the agent of Lane at the time of the sale. These facts, it is claimed by the appellant, somewhat influenced him in the purchase of said lots. They, however, when considered with the other facts of the case, controlled and governed by the principle or rule of law that we have quoted, are not, in our opinion, sufficient to establish the dedication of this lot to the public use as a park. Therefore we find no error in the ruling of the court below.

Decree affirmed, with costs to the appellees.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

WILBUR W. STEELE

v.

ALLASEBA M. BLISS et al.

(166 Mich. 593, 132 N. W. 345.)

Limitation of actions — execution levy — effect of injunction.

The running of a statute making void a lien secured by levying an execution on real estate, if the property is not sold within a specified time, is tolled by the granting of an injunction restraining the sale of the property.

(September 9, 1911.)

MOTION by complainant for the vacation of an order granting defendants' motion for modification of an injunction, allowing them to advertise and sell certain real estate under a certain levy made upon execution. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alex J. Groesbeck for complainant.

Messrs. John A. McKay, Gray & Gray, and L. T. Durand for defendants.

Per Curiam:

In the above-entitled cause, now pending in this court, two motions have been made: The first, by defendants, asking for a modification of the injunction in the case, to allow them to proceed to advertise and sell certain real estate situated in Wayne county, under a certain levy made upon execution, which was granted. The second motion asks that the order granted upon the first motion be vacated and set aside. The first motion presented a case of emergency, and was granted to preserve to defendants their rights under an execution levy, which, by the running of the statute of limitations relative to execution liens on real estate (§ 9233, 3 Comp. Laws), were represented would be lost, upon the theory that the injunction in the case did not interrupt the running of the statute. The opposite view is taken by the movers in the second motion, which is relied upon as one of the grounds of said motion. The merits of the controversy are not involved. The only question necessary to discuss and determine is the construction and application of this statute.

Different phases of the litigation out of which this suit arises have been before the court some seven or more times, and to make a statement of its history would be of no benefit at this time. Suffice it to say that an execution upon a judgment was issued and levied, and the importance of the determination of these motions is apparent when it is stated that the rights under this execution lien will be decided. The material portion of the statute under consideration is as follows: " . . . And all liens by execution on real estate hereafter to be made shall become and be void at and after the expiration of five years from the making of such levy, unless such real estate be sooner sold thereon." The question as to the construction and application of this statute of limitations under such a state of facts is one of first instance in this court, and is of more than ordinary importance. The statute is not a part of the general statute of limitations of actions relating to real property, which has been in force since the Revised Statutes of 1846. It was enacted in 1889, and, except for a provision relative to execution liens in force at that time, is all included in the quotation above given.

Upon the question of the effect of injunctions upon the running of statutes of limitations, the authorities are not in harmony. In 1 High on Injunctions, ¶ 87, an early English case is cited as laying down the proposition that, if a party were stayed by injunction from prosecuting his suit, the court would not permit him to be prejudiced by the statute. This appears to be the fundamental principle recognized by all of the authorities, which hold that the running of a statute of limitations is interrupted by an injunction. This has been the holding of the supreme court of Minnesota. In a case exactly in point that court said: "At common law the right to sue out an execution in a personal action was limited to a year and a day from the entry of judgment. . . . This limitation of the common law was as inflexible and as positive as that of our statute; yet it was well established at common law that when the plaintiff had judgment with stay of execution, or execution was stayed by injunction, the plaintiff might sue out an execution within one year after the stay terminated, or the injunction was dissolved. . . . It would be unreasonable and inconsistent for the law to present to a party in one hand a command to do an act within a certain time under the penalty of losing his rights, and with the other hand restrain him from doing the act. For this reason the time during which the plaintiff was thus prevented by the law from issuing execution was at common law excluded from the year allowed for that purpose." Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 363, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671, 37 N. W. 790. Where courts have held that the running of the statute is interrupted by injunction, it has generally been upon the ground that the statute was not intended to bar a remedy because it was not exercised within the limited time, if such a state of affairs existed as rendered it impossible for the party to act within that time. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d ed.), 215, 216. This doctrine has been accepted by the Supreme Court of the United States. In United States v. Wiley, 11 Wall. 513, 20 L. ed. 213. Mr. Justice Strong, speaking for the court, said: "But it is the loss of the ability to sue, rather than the loss of the right, that stops the running of the statute. The inability may arise from a suspension of right or from the closing of the courts, but, whatever the original cause, the proximate and operative reason is that the claimant is deprived of the power to institute his suit. Statutes of limitations are, indeed, statutes of repose. They are enacted upon the presumption that one having a well-founded claim will not delay enforcing it beyond a reasonable time, if he has the power to sue.

Note.—For effect of injunction against suing to prevent the running of the statute of limitations, see notes to Hunter v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1187, and Lagerman v. Casserly, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 673.

37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

. . . But the basis of the presumption is gone whenever the ability to resort to the courts has been taken away. In such a case the creditor has not the time within which to bring his suit that the statute contemplated he should have." In Braun v. Sauerwein, 10 Wall. 223, 19 L. ed. 895, Mr. Justice Strong, speaking for the court, said: "It seems, therefore, to be established that the running of a statute of limitation may be suspended by causes not mentioned in the statute itself." In the latest Federal case examined,—Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 320, 32 L. ed. 953, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537, the above is quoted and affirmed in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Bradley, of which the court said: "There is one class of cases which is excluded from the operation of the statute by act of law itself, of which the case in which Mr. Justice Strong made the remark referred to is one. This class embraces those cases in which no action can be brought at all, either for want of parties capable of suing, or because the law prohibits the bringing of an action. In such cases the general law operates as a qualification, or tacit condition of the particular statute. . . . Besides this general exception created by act of law, it is difficult to find any other ground or cause for suspending the operation of the statute not specified in the act itself." The same doctrine has been indorsed in several other states. The weight of authority holds that the running of the statute is interrupted by an injunction. A few of the states hold to the contrary. In the instant case the parties are by process of law prohibited from acting, and it is clearly within the class of cases pointed out in the authorities cited.

Our attention is called to § 9754, 3 Comp. Laws, relative to suits at law in cases affected by proceedings in chancery, as to the running of the statute of limitations, and also the case of Sweet v. Haldane, 68 Mich. 639, 36 N. W. 698, construing it, as applicable to the case under consideration. As to this proposition, we think it necessary only to say that this section and decision are of 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) force as indicating the policy of the legislature and the court to preserve to individuals rights which for the time being they may be disabled from exercising by a "paramount power," without fault on their part. Our construction and determination, based upon both reason and authority, is that the injunction operated as an interruption of the running of this statute of limitations in question, and will so operate as long as in force. The motion granted modifying the injunction was therefore unnecessary, and the same, for the reasons given, is vacated and set aside.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 2.)

JOSEPH GRISHAM and Wife, Appts.,
v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY et al., Respts.

(238 Mo. 480, 142 S. W. 271.)

Evidence — presumption — notice of advertisement.

1. For the purpose of charging a telegraph operator with libel for transmitting a message stating that a text-book committee had sold out, it cannot be presumed that he knew they were in session from the fact that they had inserted in a newspaper which came into his possession a notice advertising for bids for books.

Libel — telegraph company — notice.

2. Under a statute imposing a penalty for refusal to transmit a telegram, neither a telegraph company nor its operator is guilty of libel in transmitting a message stating that "board here sold out," without anything to charge the operator with notice of the meaning intended to be conveyed, although it in fact purports to state that a committee to select text-books for the schools had been bribed.

(December 19, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Schuyler County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged libel. Affirmed.

Statement by Ferriss, J.:

Suit for libel by plaintiffs, husband and wife, because of the sending over the wires of the defendant telegraph company, by its

Note. — Liability of telegraph company for handling libelous message.

The question of the liability of a telegraph company for handling libelous messages is covered in the note to Western U. Tele. Co. v. Cashman, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 140, and agent in Lancaster, Schuyler county, Missouri, the following telegram, which it is claimed libeled the wife, Mrs. Nettie Grisham:

To Silver Burdett & Co.,

378 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Board here sold out Memphis Saturday morning Dockery Hotel Kirksville Saturday night. W. H. M.

The case was tried before a jury. At the 'close of plaintiffs' evidence the court sustained a demurrer, and directed a verdict for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal.

The facts disclosed by the evidence are as follows: The plaintiff, Nettie Grisham, was a member of the school board of Schuyler county. Under the act of 1907 this board constitutes a text-book commission. This commission advertised in two county papers a notice with this caption, "Notice to Publishers of School Text-Books," to the effect that bids would be received on July 5th following, for schoolbooks for use during the ensuing year in the public schools of Schuyler county. This notice specified the subjects for which text-books were desired. The notice was signed: "Mrs. Nettie H. Grisham, President. J. F. Botts, Secretary." There appeared before the board, at the meeting held July 5th, agents for several publishers, among them W. H. Maddock, for the Silver Burdett Book Company, Chicago. While the board was in session Mrs. Grisham telephoned several times to defendant Beer, who, was the local operator for the defendant telegraph company, to know whether there were any packages for herself or Mr. Botts; that the board was busy at work, and wanted the books from Ginn & Company, but did not advise him that the board was sitting as a text-book commission. Beer was also the express agent in Lancaster. Mrs. Grisham had merely a casual acquaintance with Beer. Copies of the papers containing the advertisements had been sent to Beer by the publishers, under the terms of a contract covering an advertisement for the railroad in such papers, to enable Beer, who was also station agent, to cut out same and send to the company for checking purposes.

From the testimony of E. C. Hickey, one of the book agents in attendance at Lancaster on that day, it appears that the board decided to postpone any announcement on the bids for a week.

This witness testified:

I left Lancaster that day on the "Q" train going east, shortly after 6 o'clock. I was at the depot, I would guess, twenty minutes before the train arrived. There were six book men representing book companies at the depot at that time besides myself.

Q. Was the question of the adoption of books by the Schuyler county board of education discussed among the book men at the depot at that time?

A. There seemed to be quite an interesting discussion among the agents, myself included, at the east end of the depot, but I was not near enough to hear more than an occasional word.

Q. Do you know whether or not there was any discussion in the waiting room of the depot in reference to the adoption of the books?

A. Mr. Maddock and Mr. Chapman were engaged in a low conversation regarding the matter, but the purport of their remarks I at no time caught the full meaning of. They were apparently conferring over the sending of a telegram. The station agent at that time was engaged at the keyboard, sending or receiving a message. Mr. W. H. Maddock prepared and the present note is merely supplementary to that.

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cashman, 65 C. C. A. 607, 132 Fed. 805, it was held that the telegraph company was liable for the damages resulting from the transmission of an alleged libelous message during the process of which it came to the knowledge of four agents pledged to secrecy; but that it was not liable for such damages as resulted from the actual publication of the libelous matter by the plaintiff in his newspaper.

And where no evil motive or malice beyond that which the law infers from the wrongful transmitting of the libelous message was shown, and the wrongful act was not conceived by the telegraph company or its agents in the spirit of mischief or criminal indifference to civil obligations, it was held that the company was not liable in punitive damages. Ibid.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And there being no proof that the telegraph company's agents were actuated in handling the libelous message by such ill-will or evil motive as to warrant the allowance of punitive damages, the court passed the question of ratification by the company with the suggestion that the subsequent reception by it of the bulk earnings of the originating office, without specific knowledge of its sources, and also the employment eighteen months later of the boy who, in the absence of the regular agent, had received the message, could not be considered as a serious ratification of the agents' acts. Ibid.

And it was held that where there was no evidence warranting the award of more than compensatory damages, evidence showing the great corporate wealth of the defendant telegraph company, for the purpose of obtaining enhanced damages, was inadmissible. Ibid.

J. T. W.

delivered to the station agent a telegram. I saw him write it. After that I heard him say to Mr. Chapman: "Chap, will this do all right?" to which Mr. Chapman answered, "That's the proper stunt." He then walked into the ticket room, laid the telegram down at the right side of the operator, who was seated at his desk. When he got the operator's attention, he asked him the cost of sending the message, also stating that he was anxious to get the message off at once. When Mr. Maddock wrote the telegram he was standing at the window in the waiting room. I saw him writing the telegram, but had not noticed the blank before. The telegram was written on the regular form of blank furnished by the telegraph company. Mr. Maddock then paid the agent for sending the telegram. I read the telegram after it was written by Mr. Maddock. I read it twice. When I read it the first time it was lying on the operator's desk before he sent it. When I read it the second time it was in the same position, while I suppose it was being sent. When I read it the first time I had stepped into the ticket office, ostensibly to get a ticket; in reality, to see the contents of the message. When I read it the second time, I was standing on the depot platform before an open window and in front of the operator's desk. The operator was present.

Q. State if you heard any further conversation between the agent and Mr. Maddock other than you have stated?

A. But a query, "Will that message get through all right to-night?" to which the agent answered, "I think it will." I did not hear any other conversation between the agent and the representatives of the book companies. The agent was at his desk when Mr. Maddock wrote the telegram.

Mr. Botts, a member of the board, testified that he sometimes got books by express, addressed to him as a member of the board of education. Plaintiffs offered to prove that Maddock made "insinuating remarks" on the way to the depot and at the hotel; objection to which was sustained. Witness Hickey was asked what construction he put upon the message: objection to which question was sustained. Another witness was asked this question: "Was it not currently reported around here in town, after these book agents left, that the board had sold out?" Objection sustained. To all of these rulings plaintiffs excepted. The court instructed the jury to find for each defendant.

Messrs. Fogle & Fogle, W. M. Saxbury, and Rolston & Rolston, for appellants:

A telegraph company is held liable for its agent's sending a libelous telegram.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Cooley, Torts, 139; Peterson v. Western U. Tele. Co. 75 Minn. 368, 43 L.R.A. 581, 74 Am. St. Rep. 502, 77 N. W. 985; 1 Joyce, Damages, § 409; 10 Cyc. 1215; Whitfield v. South Eastern R. Co. El. Bl. & El. 115, 27 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 229, 4 Jur. N. S. 688, 6 Week. Rep. 545.

If Beer knew that the telegram was libelous, or if he knew of the circumstances and the parties to whom the word "board" referred, or if he had reasonable grounds, as a man of ordinary intelligence, to know the facts and circumstances, and still sent the telegram, he and the other defendants are liable.

Nye v. Western U. Tele. Co. 104 Fed. 630.

It was proper to introduce the newspapers in evidence, to show that Beer knew to whom the word "board" referred.

Van Ingen v. Mail & Exp. Pub. Co. 156 N. Y. 376, 50 N. E. 981.

Mr. Charles E. Yeater, for respondents:

When the language of the message is ambiguous, and a doubt arises as to the propriety of the message, the operator must resolve that doubt in favor of the sender, and forward the message.

Western U. Tele. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495; Gray v. Western U. Tele. Co. 87 Ga. 350, 14 L.R.A. 95, 27 Am. St. Rep. 259, 13 S. E. 502; Com. v. Western U. Tele. Co. 112 Ky. 355, 57 L.R.A. 614, 99 Am. St. Rep. 299, 67 S. W. 59.

The telegram from Maddock to his employer was confidential between them, and privileged, and there could be no recovery against either of them without proof of express malice on the part of Maddock, and a fortiori no liability against the telegraph company.

25 Cyc. 397; Sullivan v. Strathan-Hutton-Evans Commission Co. 152 Mo. 268, 47 L.R.A. 859, 53 S. W. 912; Finley v. Steele, 159 Mo. 299, 52 L.R.A. 862, 60 S. W. 108.

Ferriss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The theory of the plaintiffs appears from this extract taken from their brief: "Said Beer well knew that said telegram referred to and meant the county board of education, and he well knew that Nettie Grisham, one of the plaintiffs, was a member of that board. He knew that the language of said telegram, to wit, 'board here sold out,' meant that said board had been bribed. He knew that Maddock meant to charge the board with being bribed. He knew that Silver, Burdett, & Company, the great book concern of Chicago, understood that said telegram meant to charge the board here with being bribed. All of this he knew, and well knew it before he sent said telegram."

The proof utterly fails to establish the foregoing allegations, with the possible exception that Beer did know that Nettie Gisham was a member of the school board. There is no proof that Beer knew that the board was in session that day as a text-book commission for the purpose of receiving bids, or that any agents appeared before that commission. It cannot be presumed that he read in the newspaper a notice addressed to publishers of text-books. There is no proof that he knew that the expression "board here sold out" meant that the school board had been bribed. There is no evidence of any communication to him, or of any knowledge conveyed to him in any manner, aside from the telegram itself, which would explain the meaning of these words. If there was ambiguity in the language, it was still his duty to send the message without investigation. Under the law it is the duty of the agent to send the message, if it is expressed in decent language, on payment or tender of the charge. Western U. Tele. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495; Gray v. Western U. Tele. Co. 87 Ga. 350, 14 L.R.A. 95, 27 Am. St. Rep. 259, 13 S. E. 502; Com. v. Western U. Tele. Co. 112 Ky. 355, 57 L.R.A. 614, 99 Am. St. Rep. 299, 67 S. W. 59.

Section 3330, Rev. Stat. 1909, makes it the duty of a telegraph company to receive a despatch from any individual, and, on payment of the usual charge, to transmit and deliver it to the addressee promptly, impartially, and in good faith, under a penalty of $300 for every neglect or refusal so to do. Section 3334 provides a penalty of $50 for disclosing the contents of a message to any person other than the addressee. Section 4810 provides that any employee of a telegraph company who wilfully refuses or neglects to transmit or deliver a message, or discloses the contents except to a court of justice or the addressee, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished (§ 4030) by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

These statutes would not compel the sending of a telegram that was manifestly libelous. Nye v. Western U. Tele. Co. (C. C.) 104 Fed. 628; Peterson v. Western U. Tele. Co. 65 Minn. 18, 33 L.R.A. 302, 67 N. W. 646. But unless it is manifestly a libel the operator must send it; any doubt or ambiguity is to be solved in favor of the message. On this point the supreme court of Georgia says: "On no other rule would it be practicable for telegraph companies to perform their legitimate functions as servants of the general public. They could not wait to question and investigate the motives of those who offer ambiguous despatches for transmission." Gray v. Western U. Tele. Co. 87 Ga. 350, 14 L.R.A. 95, 27 Am. St. Rep. 259, 13 S. E. 562.

Counsel for plaintiffs have furnished us a voluminous brief of the law of libel, presenting fairly and fully all phases of the subject, with authorities cited. Appellants, in their brief, state the law as follows: (Italics are theirs.) "Now then, let us see what the rules are that are laid down by the law that makes the defendants liable. In the case of Nye v. Western U. Tele. Co. (C. C.) 104 Fed. 630, the court lays down the rule as follows: That 'where a message presented to the receiving clerk of a telegraph company for transmission is in language such that a person of ordinary intelligence, knowing nothing of the parties or circumstances, would not necessarily conclude that its purpose was defamation, it is his duty to send it, and for the performance of such duty the company incurs no liability.' In the case of Peterson v. Western U. Tele. Co. 67 N. W. page 646, and the same case in 65 Minn. page 18, the court says: 'Where a proffered message is not manifestly a libel, or susceptible of a libelous meaning on its face, and is forwarded in good faith by the operator, the defendant cannot be held to have maliciously published a libel, although the message subsequently proves to be such in fact. In such a case the operator cannot wait to consult a lawyer, or forward the message to the principal office for instructions. He must decide promptly and forward the message without delay, if it is a proper one; and for any honest error of judgment in the premises, the telegraph company cannot be held responsible. But where the message on its face is clearly susceptible of a libelous meaning [and this one was: Julian v. Kansas City Star Co. 209 Mo. 79, 107 S. W. 496], is not signed by any responsible person, and there is no reason to believe that it is a cipher message, and it is forwarded under such circumstances as to warrant the jury in finding that the operator in sending the message was negligent or wanting in good faith in the premises, the company may be held to have maliciously published the libel, a publication under such circumstances is not privileged.' A telegram cannot be privileged because it passes through the hands of unprivileged persons."

Measured by the foregoing rules, it is clear that the circuit court committed no error in sustaining a demurrer to the evidence.

Here is the situation: The defendant Beer is sitting at his table, working the telegraph keys. A stranger steps up and lays down a telegram, written on the usual blank,

ERROR to the District Court for Muskogee County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries inflicted by defendant's dog. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cook & de Graffenried for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. S. V. O'Hare and Farrar L. McCain, for defendant in error:

The apprehension and fear of hydrophobia, if they exist, are an element of damage regardless of whether or not they were well founded.

Warner v. Chamberlain, 7 Houst. (Del.) 18, 30 Atl. 638; Godeau v. Blood, 52 Vt. 251, 36 Am. Rep. 751; The Lord Derby, 4 Woods, 247, 17 Fed. 265.

N. W. 389, it was held that the person responsible for the dog was liable for injury to both the person and clothing of plaintiff.

Epilepsy resulting from physical injury or fright was held to be a proper element of damages in Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 675, 80 N. W. 797.

Generally, as to right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright caused by a wrongful act, see notes in 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49; 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1073; and 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1159.

In Swift v. Applebone, 23 Mich. 252, it was held that although the statute upon which the action was based did not make the liability of the defendants depend upon the scienter, the fact of knowledge of the vicious nature of the dog might be taken into account in estimating the damages, as the sense of injury suffered will depend very largely upon the disposition shown by the owner to respect or disregard the rights of others.

And in Kelly v. Alderson, 19 R. I. 544, 37 Atl. 12, under a statute making proof of knowledge of the vicious nature of the dog unnecessary, evidence of lack of such knowledge was held to be inadmissible in mitigation of damages.

Medical treatment.

In Buck v. Brady, 110 Md. 568, 132 Am. St. Rep. 459, 73 Atl. 277, it appeared that, the dog having showed symptoms of rabies, plaintiff took the Pasteur treatment as a preventive measure, and a verdict for $1,000 was sustained, the report of the case not showing definitely whether the expense of the treatment was included in the verdict, but it appearing probable that such was the fact.

In Gries v. Zeck, 24 Ohio St. 329, it is held that reasonable expenses incurred for care and medical attendance made necessary by the injury may properly be included by the jury in their estimate of compensatory damages, although they have not been actually paid.

But defendant is not chargeable with the results of grossly unskilful treatment of the 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Plaintiff was entitled to recover all necessary expense incurred.

2 Cyc. 392; Robinson v. Marino, 3 Wash. 434, 28 Am. St. Rep. 50, 28 Pac. 752; Feeney v. Long Island R. Co. 116 N. Y. 375, 5 L.R.A. 546, 22 N. E. 402; Hart v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 33 S. C. 427, 10 L.R.A. 794, 12 S. E. 9; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 96; McGarrahan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 211, 50 N. E. 610; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Frantz, 127 Pa. 297, 4 L.R.A. 389, 18 Atl. 22; Sherwood v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 82 Mich. 374, 46 N. W. 773, 88 Mich. 108, 50 N. W. 101.

Defendant is liable for all injuries resulting from the dog's vicious character.

Crowley v. Groomell, 73 Vt. 45, 55 L.R.A. 876, 87 Am. St. Rep. 690, 50 Atl. 546; Brice wound by a physician selected by plaintiff. Moss v. Pardridge, 9 Ill. App. 490.

See also Barclay v. Hartman, supra, and Lemoine v. Cook and Warner v. Chamberlain, infra, holding that expenses for medical treatment are a proper element of damages.

Apprehension, fright, etc.

Mental suffering from apprehension of tetanus or hydrophobia resulting from the bite is a proper element of damages. Heintz v. Caldwell, 9 Ohio C. D. 412, 16 Ohio C. C. 630.

Thus, in Buck v. Brady, supra, questions as to whether plaintiff had or continued to have fear of hydrophobia as a result of the bite were held to be proper as to the question of damages.

And in Friedmann v. McGowan, 1 Penn. (Del.) 436, 42 Atl. 723, a question, "Have you or not been afraid of hydrophobia ever since you were bitten by this dog?" was held to be relevant.

In Godeau v. Blood, 52 Vt. 251, 36 Am. Rep. 751, the court, in speaking of the measure of damages for injury by a vicious dog, says: "The apprehension of poison from the bite of the dog, and the fear and solicitude as to evil results therefrom,—all pain, anguish, solicitude occasioned by the bite,—were proper matters for consideration by the jury in estimating the damages."

In The Lord Derby, 4 Woods, 247, 17 Fed. 265, in sustaining a judgment for $2,500 as damages from the bite of a dangerous dog permitted on board a vessel, the court said: "The bite of a dog, particularly in this climate, is a very serious matter, outside of the actual pain and suffering experienced. The dangers of lockjaw and the fear of hydrophobia are added to the mental and nervous sufferings attendant upon such injuries; and, as the evidence shows, they were experienced by the libellant in this case. To many people the shock to the system resulting from the most insignificant bite of a dog drawing blood is such that no money compensation is adequate. The ghost

v. Bauer, 108 N. Y. 428, 2 Am. St. Rep. 454, 15 N. E. 695; Knowles v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 202, 16 Am. St. Rep. 627, 41 N. W. 896; Strouse v. Leipf, 101 Ala. 433, 23 L.R.A. 622, 46 Am. St. Rep. 122, 14 So. 667; Robinson v. Marino, 3 Wash. 434, 28 Am. St. Rep. 50, 28 Pac. 752; Martinez v. Bernhard, 106 La. 368, 55 L.R.A. 671, 87 Am. St. Rep. 306, 30 So. 901.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents error from the district court of Muskogee county, to which it was transferred after statehood, having been originally brought in the United States court for the western district of the Indian territory, at Muskogee. Plaintiff in error, of hydrophobia is raised, not to down during the lifetime of the victim."

And in Warner v. Chamberlain, 7 Houst. (Del.) 18, 30 Atl. 638, the court said: "If the jury should find for the plaintiff, he is entitled to such damages as necessarily arose from such an injury as he sustained, including nursing, medical attendance, pain, suffering in body, and fear and apprehension of hydrophobia, if such be shown to have been incurred or felt; and also any loss he sustained from having been disabled from pursuing his usual business."

But in Trinity & S. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 690, 46 S. W. 389, while the court recognized mental suffering resulting proximately from the bite of a dog as an element of damages, it excluded statements made to plaintiff by her physician as to danger from hydrophobia, tetanus, or blood poisoning, offered as tending to show the effect of the injury upon plaintiff's mind.

In Robinson v. Marino, 3 Wash. 434, 28 Am. St. Rep. 50, 28 Pac. 752, fright and mental terror and the nervous shock produced by the attack of the dog were recognized as proper elements of damage.

And in Fitzgerald v. Dobson, 78 Me. 559, 7 Atl. 704, a verdict for $1,450 for injuries to a little girl from an attack by a vicious dog was held not to be excessive in view of the fact that the assault was a severe one, and she was not only severely injured, but was greatly shocked and frightened.

Future damages.

In Lemoine v. Cook, 36 Mo. App. 193, expenses for medical treatment, loss of wages, and bodily and mental suffering were recognized as proper elements of damages, and the court said the damages recoverable were not limited to those accruing up to the date of the institution of the suit.

In Price v. Wright, 35 N. B. 26, the probability that a scar left by a bite on the face of a girl would lessen her prospects of making a good marriage was held to be too remote and speculative to be considered by the jury as an element of damage.

And in Sanders v. O'Callaghan, 111 Iowa, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

as defendant, was sued by defendant in error for damages which he alleged were suffered by him in consequence of being bitten by a vicious dog kept and owned by the defendant.

The averments of the petition are substantially as follows: That defendant resided in the city of Muskogee, and kept at his house a vicious and dangerous dog, which was accustomed to bite mankind. That, knowing of this propensity on the part of the animal, its owner had allowed it to go at large on and about the property of people residing in that neighborhood. That, on or about the 15th day of July, 1906, plaintiff became a tenant of a residence adjoining the property of the defendant, and that the defendant neglected to restrain his said dog in any 574, 82 N. W. 969, an instruction which permitted the jury to enter the domain of conjecture as to future suffering was held to be erroneous.

Punitive damages.

When the vicious nature of a dog is known to the owner, he is liable for punitive as well as compensatory damages. Triolo v. Foster, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 57 S. W. 698; Meibus v. Dodge, 38 Wis. 300, 20 Am. Rep. 6.

And it has been held that under a statute providing that "every person owning, having, or keeping any dog shall be liable to the party injured for all damages done by such dog," knowledge of the vicious propensities of the dog will make its owner liable for punitive damages. Koestel v. Cunningham, 97 Ky. 421, 30 S. W. 970; Klingman v. Smith, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 96; Dillehay v. Hickey, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 760, 69 S. W. 1095, rehearing denied, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1220, 71 S. W. 1.

In Falardeau v. Couture, 2 Lower Can. Jur. 96, punitive damages were allowed where the dog was kept and trained for the purpose of fighting other dogs, and was allowed to run unmuzzled.

In Von Fragstein v. Windler, 2 Mo. App. 598, it is held that where defendant has knowledge of the vicious propensities of the dog, punitive damages may be assessed in addition to injuries to the person and clothing of plaintiff.

In Cameron v. Bryan, 89 Iowa, 214, 56 N. W. 434, it was held that an allegation that defendants wilfully, unlawfully, and maliciously harbored and kept the dog, with full knowledge of its ferocious and vicious habits, laid a foundation for the recovery of punitive damages.

And in Hahn v. Kordula, 5 Kan. App. 142, 48 Pac. 896, an allegation that defendant knowingly, and without regard for the rights of others, kept and harbored a dog that was liable to attack persons at any time, was held to be sufficient to sustain punitive damages, though there was no direct allegation that the harboring was wanton, wilful, malicious.

R. L. S.

manner whatsoever, and allowed it to leave its owner's premises and to go onto and around plaintiff's residence, and while there, on or about the 27th day of August, 1906, the said dog made a violent attack upon plaintiff, bit and wounded him in his ankle, leg, thigh, and arms, by reason of which plaintiff became sick and disabled, and suffered great bodily pain for over four weeks, to his damage in the sum of $2,250. That, by reason thereof, plaintiff was detained from his labor, at a loss of $100. That, by reason of the fact that the bite of a dog having rabies or hydrophobia is infectious and fatal to the life of a man being so bitten, and by reason of the fact that it was impossible at the time to ascertain whether or not a dog has rabies or hydrophobia, plaintiff suffered great mental pain, and was put in fear of his life by reason of his apprehension of said wounds causing the said disease. That, by reason of this fact, plaintiff was compelled to undergo the Pasteur treatment, being the only known preventive for hydrophobia, and was put to great expense for medical treatment and attention, and the expense incident thereto, in the sum of $150.

To the complaint the defendant filed an answer admitting that he owned a dog at the date named in the complaint, but denied that the dog was vicious and dangerous, or, if it was, that he knew it, and denied that he permitted said dog to run at large in the city of Muskogee, and go at will upon the property and private residences of others adjoining his home. He disclaimed any knowledge of whether the dog had bitten or wounded plaintiff in the manner alleged, and as to whether or not plaintiff became sick and disabled and suffered as he averred, and therefore demanded strict proof of the same. He denied that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $2,500, or any other sum, by reason of the bite of the dog; denied that plaintiff was unable to perform his accustomed work for four weeks, and that he was damaged in the sum of $100 thereby. His answer then continued as follows: "Further answering herein, defendant says that it was wholly unnecessary for the plaintiff to take Pasteural treatment in order to prevent hydrophobia from the bite of said dog, and denies that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $150, as actual damages for the taking of the Pasteur treatment."

On the trial before a jury, a verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $500, to review which the action has been lodged in this court.

Counsel argues, first, that the court erred in admitting the testimony concerning plaintiff's expenses to Austin, Texas, occasioned by taking the Pasteur treatment, his pain and suffering while under the same, and the loss of time while going to, staying, and returning from, Austin, which consumed twenty-seven or twenty-eight days, for the reason, as it is averred, the expenses were not necessary, and that the reasonableness of the charges was not established. It will be noticed from the pleading that the issue tendered in regard to the Pasteur treatment was, not that the charges were unreasonable, but that it was unnecessary for plaintiff to take the treatment, and also that plaintiff was not damaged in the sum of $150, which he alleged he had paid as expenses for the medical attention and expense incident to taking the said treatment. The question, then, on the issues as made by the pleadings, is whether the treatment was necessary, and whether it was in fact taken. The evidence on the issue thus tendered is quoted at length in the brief of plaintiff in error as follows, plaintiff testifying:

Q. Now, tell the jury how long you experienced pain and suffering from these wounds altogether.

A. Well, the actual pain of the wounds, this perhaps lasted only a few days.

Q. Well, how many, Mr. Macoughtry?

A. Five or six, perhaps; but the ankle and knee joints were very stiff for over two weeks.

Q. State whether or not you experienced any mental pain or anxiety.

A. I was very apprehensible of the wounds. Always afraid of dog bites.

Q. State what your apprehension was,—in fear of taking the rabies?

A. I was in fear of acquiring it; yes, sir.

Q. Did that produce any mental anguish?

A. Yes, sir; there was a good deal of anxiety, and I experienced it.

Q. Now, after your treatments by Dr. Oldham, state whether or not you went under any other treatment.

A. I took the Pasteural treatment at Austin, Texas.

Q. When did you go to Austin after the bite?

A. The day following.

Q. What time?

A. On the fast mail, I think it was.

Q. State whether or not there was any pain connected with the taking of the Pasteural treatment.

A. It is a very severe treatment and causes a great deal of suffering and pain.

Q. What was it occasioned you to go to Austin to take the treatment?

A. The apprehension of taking hydrophobia from the dog bite.

Q. Now, what, if any, expense did you incur by reason of this trip to Austin?

A. About $150.

Q. Does that include your railroad fare?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how long were you absent from your duties on account of this?

A. Practically a month. The treatment required twenty-one days, and there was the best part of two days, and some in going, and two days in coming back, and counting the days I was absent prior to my departure would make about twenty-seven or twenty-eight days.

Q. What compensation did you receive per month during that time?

A. One hundred dollars per month.

Q. And you were absent about, you say, about twenty-seven or twenty-eight days?

A. About that.

Q. Now, did you pay anything to Dr. Oldham

A. Yes, sir; I paid for his services.

Dr. Oldham, plaintiff's attending physician, was introduced on behalf of plaintiff, and testified:

Q. Doctor, in the case where a man has been attacked and bitten by a dog in three or four different places on his body, what would you say as to the necessity for that man taking the Pasteural treatment?

A. The number of bites has nothing to do with it, and the Pasteural treatment in that case would be a prophylactic measure; in other words, a preventive from hydrophobia.

Q. What do you say the necessity was in taking that treatment?

A. There may absolutely be no necessity, but to satisfy the patient's mind, and to preclude any after effects he might have, I would recommend the Pasteural treatment as a prophylactic treatment.

Q. Now, explain that to the jury.

A. That is a treatment in advance of a disease; treatment to prevent certain diseases.

Q. Is it a preventive?

A. It has proven so, as I understand it. The main benefit from Pasteural treatment is preventive.

Q. State whether or not, in your opinion, it was advisable and necessary for Macoughtry to take the Pasteural treatment?

A. Well, I would like for him to divide that question. He asks two questions in one. I think it is advisable sometimes when it is not necessary.

Q. Well, was it advisable or necessary?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you charge Macoughtry anything for doctoring him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?

A. I only treated him twice, and I charged him $5 for the time I first saw him and dressed him, and he was in the office the next day, and I charged him $1 for that treatment. It was $6, as my books show.

Cross-examination:

Q. Doctor, Mr. McCain asked you if it was advisable or necessary to take the Pasteural treatment, and you answered, "Yes." What do you mean by that?

A. I meant as a prophylactic measure.

Q. Did you mean it was necessary?

A. No, sir, advisable.

It is contended on the part of defendant that the foregoing evidence does not disclose that it was necessary that defendant incur the expense incident to going to Austin, Texas, to take the prophylactic treatment to relieve him of either the anxiety or the effect of rabies or hydrophobia from the wounds which had been inflicted by defendant's dog. It is true that neither the local physician who treated him, nor plaintiff himself, testified that it was necessary that he take this treatment, but we submit that plaintiff was not required to wait until rabies developed before he took those reasonable, precautionary measures which any intelligent man would naturally take to relieve himself from the danger. Courts take judicial knowledge of the fact that smallpox is a terrible disease, whose ravages have sometimes swept away thousands of human being in a few weeks. It is also known that a large number of the medical profession and people generally consider vaccination a preventive of the disease, and of these facts courts take judicial knowledge. In Re Viemeister, 179 N. Y. 235, 70 L.R.A. 796, 103 Am. St. Rep. 859, 72 N. E. 97, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 334; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 242, 67 L.R.A. 935, 66 N. E. 719. Likewise, it is a matter of general knowledge that one of the most horrible forms in which death can visit humanity is that of hydrophobia, and that this is incurred by being bitten by dogs which have it. The wounds in this case were inflicted in August, and everybody, even courts, take knowledge of the fact that any precaution which could be said to be advisable would, in view of the consequences which its omission might entail, be deemed to be reasonable and necessary. Knowledge that the Pasteur treatment is generally considered proper for the prevention of rabies or hydrophobia may be considered to be judicially known, without proof thereof; and a consideration of plaintiff's injuries and of the possible results, taken in connection with the issue made and the evidence introduced, are sufficient, in our judgment, to support the conclusion that the expenses incurred in taking the same were reasonable and necessary. The instruction which the court gave on this matter, and to which exception was taken, reads as follows: "You are instructed that if you find for the plaintiff in this case, you may return a verdict in such sum as you believe from the evidence will compensate him for the damages which he has sustained by reason of the injuries. And in determining said damages you may take into consideration the expenses which you believe from the evidence he has paid, incurred, or become liable for, medical and surgical services, if any, in consequences of being bitten by the dog, if he was so bitten; and in determining such amount you may take into consideration the apprehension of poisoning from the bite of said dog and the fear of evil results therefrom, and of the physical and mental suffering endured by him in consequence of being bitten by said dog." In view of the issues, this instruction was not error.

A similar instruction was before the supreme court of Michigan in the case of Sherwood v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 82 Mich. 374, 46 N. W. 773, the salient portions thereof reading as follows: "In estimating the compensatory damages in cases of this character, . . . the elements of damages which the jury are entitled to take into account consist of all effects of the injury complained of, consisting of personal inconvenience, the sickness which the plaintiff endured, the loss of time, all bodily and mental suffering, impairment of capacity to earn money, the pecuniary expenses, the disfigurement or permanent annoyance which is liable to be caused by the deformity resulting from the injury." Of this the court said: "We see no error in this charge."

In further considering the case, it developed that the plaintiff was permitted to testify as to the costs and expenses of a trip which she made from Michigan to Indiana for medical treatment. The court under this instruction allowed plaintiff to recover for the entire expenses of the trip, her board and medical treatment for a period of six months, including board for her sister. The evidence introduced tended to show that the injuries received might be relieved by the treatment sought. The plaintiff suggested to her physician the taking of the treatment in question, and the evidence discloses that the advice which she received was that "it would be a good idea, and that it might improve her general health, and indirectly help the health of the muscles." The court, taking into consideration all of these matters, held that it could not be said that the expenditures under the circumstances were unreasonable, and said: "It is further contended that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to testify as to the costs and expenses of her trip to La Porte, Indiana, and the medical treatment which was given her at the time of her attendance there. The reason of this objection, stated by counsel, is that this treatment was not necessary or usual for an injury of this kind, and that, by permitting this testimony, the court allowed the jury to charge the defendant with the entire expenses of the trip, her board and medical treatment from December 5 until May 28 following, at the rate of $21.50 per week, including the board of her sister. . . . She was entitled, as a part of her damages, to recover whatever was a reasonable and necessary outlay in her attempt to be cured of the injuries resulting from the negligence of the defendant. It cannot be said, under the circumstances, that this was an unreasonable expenditure."

An instruction for similar allowances was also considered by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in the case of McGarrahan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 211, 50 N. E. 610; the instruction being as follows: "There is evidence in the case as to medical attendance. Dr. Coxwell told you the number of visits he had made to the plaintiff for the purpose of treating him. There is no evidence as to what the ordinary charge for such a visit is. There is no evidence as to what the charges of Dr. Coxwell ordinarily are. . . . I must assume that you have some knowledge, in common with men in general, as to the charges ordinarily made by physicians for attendance and services such as you find upon the evidence in this case have been rendered; and you may avail yourselves of that knowledge for the purpose of determining what sum the plaintiff should have by reason of the expense he has properly and reasonably incurred in endeavoring to effect a cure." From the foregoing it will be noticed that the evidence did not disclose the amount of expense, as in the case at bar, but the appellate court, in passing on the verdict which was rendered under the same, speaking with reference to the duty of the jury in cases of this character, said: "Jurors take with them their knowledge and experience of affairs, and are not only at liberty to use, but ought to use, that knowledge and experience in drawing conclusions from the evidence. Evidence that one who practises as a physician or surgeon attends a patient, and gives him professional assistance, justifies a finding that the services are rendered for a pecuniary recompense, to be paid by the patient."

In the case at bar, the specific amount was definitely set forth in the plaintiff's petition, proved by him on the trial, and the issue made on it was, not that it was an unreasonable charge, but that it was not made, and, if made, was unnecessary. Anyway, it would have added practically nothing to the knowledge possessed by any of us for plaintiff to have testified that the charge was reasonable. The force of the situation shows it to be. Other cases in which the question has been considered and passed on in accord with our holding may be noted as follows: Wallace v. Western North Carolina R. Co. 104 N. C. 442, 10 S. E. 552; Hart v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 33 S. C. 427, 10 L.R.A. 794, 12 S. E. 9; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; Huizega v. Cutler & S. Lumber Co. 51 Mich. 272, 16 N. W. 643; State, Evans, Prosecutor, v. McDermott, 49 N. J. L. 163, 60 Am. Rep. 602, 6 Atl. 653; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Frantz, 127 Pa. 297, 4 L.R.A. 389, 18 Atl. 22. See also Baldwin, Personal Injuries, § 437.

It is next contended that the court erred in rejecting certain relevant and material testimony duly offered by the defendant, which it is contended went to the point of showing defendant's knowledge of the vicious character of the dog. Plaintiff's petition alleged that the dog was vicious, and that the defendant knew about it. The defendant's answer denied that the dog was vicious and dangerous, and that, if it was, denied that he knew it. Quoting from the brief of the defendant, evidence on this point is shown to be as follows:

Q. State whether or not, previous to the injury of the plaintiff, you had any notice of the dog making vicious attacks upon anyone.

A. I never had. Those cases where it had bitten people I did not regard as vicious, from circumstances under which they occurred. The dog, as I say, was a most affectionate dog, obedient dog, that I ever knew, except with his, what you might call, peculiarities or eccentricities; and we always accounted for his disposition from the circumstances that he was raised from a puppy on human milk.

Q. Now, what do you mean by his peculiarities?

A. His peculiarities were that he would not submit to being hit; he would jump at you, and raise his bristles; and he had a very peculiar tail. It was very bushy, and yet when he was angry the hairs on that tail would all stand out; and his other peculiarities are that after you had given him something to eat, you couldn't take that away from him.

Q. You—would he compare in appearance with a bulldog?

A. Oh, there was no resemblance between him and a bulldog, except that he was a dog; but, so far as any similarity with a bulldog, anyone that knew anything about a bulldog wouldn't class him with a bulldog in his appearance or actions.

Q. Captain, did you have any notice whatever of the matter detailed here this morning by the Smith girl as to how she had been bit?

A. I know only of the Smith transaction only by information from my wife, and the Smith child is evidently mistaken. It didn't occur in that way.

Q. I am not asking you whether you are contradicting her or not; I am asking you this, Did you have any notice that it occurred in the manner in which she detailed it here this morning?

A. No, sir; my recollection is I didn't know of the Smith girl being bitten until a long time afterwards.

Q. What was your information as to how the child was bitten? (Objection. Sustained. Defendant excepts.)

Q. Did you ever notice the disposition of the dog to run out of the yard to bark at people, or made demonstrations as if he was going to attack them?

A. He was very little addicted to that.

The error which is alleged to have been committed is that the defendant was denied the right to show his information as to how the Smith girl was bitten; it being made to appear that this information was to the effect that the Smith girl was interfering with the dog, trying to take its bone, and that the dog did not act viciously, but simply in defense of its food. It appears from the evidence that, including the plaintiff in this case, the dog had, to the knowledge of the defendant, on one pretext or another, bitten or attempted to bite five different persons. The defendant testified that he did not know much about the Smith girl circumstances, and that all that he knew of it was information given him by his wife. Conceding that the explanation which defendant sought to make of the occurrence was admissible, and should not have been excluded, the verdict is abundantly supported by other evidence. The dog appears to have had an extremely sensitive nature, which caused it to resent, by attacking people, what it deemed unwarranted interferences with its food or its rights. These peculiarities, or eccentricities, as they are denominated by the defendant, are accounted for by him on the theory that the dog was raised from a puppy on human milk. Defendant testified to facts showing that he had notice of these propensities, and from whatever cause they were occasioned, whether from feeding on human milk, from inherent viciousness, or otherwise, the keeping of the animal with such knowledge, and permitting it to run at large, renders him liable for all damages which it might inflict. It is the keeping of the animal, with knowledge, either actual or constructive, of its dangerous or vicious propensities, which creates the liability. Emmons v. Stevane, 77 N. J. L. 570, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 458, 73 Atl. 544, 18 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 812; Grissom v. Hofus, 39 Wash. 51, 80 Pac. 1002, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 125; Robinson v. Marino, 3 Wash. 434, 28 Am. St. Rep. 50, 28 Pac. 752; King v. Muldoon, 131 App. Div. 847, 116 N. Y. Supp. 308; Boler v. Sorgenfrei (Sup.) 86 N. Y. Supp. 180; Barclay v. Hartman, 2 Marv. (Del.) 351, 43 Atl. 174; Fake v. Adicks, 45 Minn. 37, 22 Am. St. Rep. 716, 47 N. W. 450; Strouse v. Leipf, 101 Ala. 433, 23 L.R.A. 622, 46 Am. St. Rep. 122, 14 So. 667; Turner v. Craighead, 83 Hun, 112, 31 N. Y. Supp. 369, affirmed in 155 N. Y. 631, 49 N. E. 1105, without opinion. Nor is it necessary that the dog's disposition or peculiarity be such as to render it liable to or inclined to bite all with whom it comes in contact; it being held in a number of cases that, if the dog had bitten one person prior to the injuries sued for, knowledge thereof is sufficient notice of his character to bind the owner. Smith v. Pelah, 2 Strange, 1264, cited in the case of Loomis v. Terry, 17 Wend. 496, 31 Am. Dec. 306; Keenan v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. 46 Hun, 544; Arnold v. Norton, 25 Conn. 92; O'Rourke v. Finch, 9 Cal. App. 324, 99 Pac. 392. In the old case of Smith v. Pelah, supra, which has never been departed from, Lee, Ch. J., "ruled that if a dog has once bit a man, and the owner, having notice thereof, keeps the dog, and lets him go about or lie at his door, an action will lie against him at the suit of a person who is bit, though it happened by such person's treading on the dog's toes; for it was owing to his not hanging the dog on the first notice. And the safety of the King's subject sought not afterwards to be endangered."

Counsel next object to the seventh instruction, wherein the court instructed the jury that, if it was satisfied that the defendant "was the owner of a vicious and dangerous dog, and that, either by actual or constructive notice, this fact was brought home to him, then, in that case, your verdict should be for the plaintiff," etc., the objection being that the instruction was erroneous, because the court went beyond the rule, requiring the owner to have actual knowledge, thereby imposing an additional unwarranted method by which he could be charged with knowledge, to wit, "Constructive notice." In our judgment, the instruction was not erroneous. It has been held in numerous cases that where knowledge was had of dangerous and vicious propensities of a dog by others of the owner's household, he was held to have the knowledge which they possessed. For instance, in the case of Barclay v. Hartman, supra, a wife's knowledge was sufficient to charge the husband with responsibility. Likewise, in the case of Boler v. Sorgenfrei, supra, the knowledge of the wife was deemed sufficient. In the case of King v. Muldoon, supra, a complaint to the housekeeper of the defendant, who testified that she was in general charge of the place in the absence of the defendant, was held sufficient; and in the case of Grissom v. Hofus, supra, evidence that the watchman of the owner knew of the previous instances of the dog attacking and biting persons was sufficient to go to the jury upon the question of whether the owner knew or should have known of the vicious disposition of the dog. There was no error in the charge.

Under his fourth assignment, defendant argues that the court erred in its refusal to give a certain instruction on the weight to which affirmative, as contradistinguished from negative, evidence was entitled. The defendant submitted to the jury the following interrogatory: "Did the plaintiff, immediately after he was bitten by the dog, say to the defendant: 'Don't worry about it, Captain; it don't amount to anything; it was my own fault?'" To which the jury answered, "Not proven." It is the contention of counsel that the court should have instructed the jury that in the weighing of evidence the presumption is that ordinarily a witness who testifies to an affirmative is to be credited with preference to one who testifies to a negative, because he who testified to a negative may have forgotten a thing which did happen, while it is not possible to remember a thing that never existed. The refusal of such an instruction is not error. See the following authorities: 3 Brickwood's, Sackett, Instructions, § 3303; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Robinson, 106 Ill. 142; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 617; Himrod Coal Co. v. Clingan, 114 Ill. App. 568.

No error having been made to appear, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied September 26, 1911.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF COLORADO
FOR USE OF BERNARD L. TAMPLIN, Plf. in Err.,

v.

GEORGE E. BEACH, Sheriff, et al.

(49 Colo. 516, 113 Pac. 513.)

Sheriff — bond — injury by deputy — liability.

1. The bond of a sheriff conditioned that he shall faithfully perform and execute the duties of his office is not liable for an injury inflicted upon a bystander by the discharge of a revolver negligently dropped by his deputy after it had been taken from a prisoner, if the prisoner was not lawfully arrested, or it was not necessary to relieve him of the revolver, so as to make it part of the official duty of the deputy to have possession of the weapon.

Pleading — action on official bond — alleging facts — conclusion.

2. One attempting to hold the official bond of a sheriff liable for an injury caused by his deputy must allege facts showing that the act was within the scope of his official duty, and it is not sufficient merely to allege that conclusion.

(February 6, 1911.)

ERROR to the District Court for the City and County of Denver to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged misfeasance of a deputy sheriff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. F. T. Johnson and S. W. Johnson, for plaintiff in error:

The liability of a sheriff and his bondsmen, for the wrongful acts of a deputy while in performance of official duties, is well established by statute as well as by adjudicated cases.

1 Mills's Anno. Stat. §§ 850-852; Barton v. Continental Oil Co. 5 Colo. App. 341, 38 Pac. 432; Brown v. Weaver, 76 Miss. 7, 42 L.R.A. 423, 71 Am. St. Rep. 512, 23 So. 388; Brandt, Suretyship, § 487; 4 Am. &

Eng. Enc. Law, 681; Brayton v. Town, 12 Iowa, 346; Grinnell v. Phillips, 1 Mass. 530.

The bond sued on is in the form of the ordinary statutory bond, and while it does not on its face insure against negligent acts of a deputy, yet the statute so provides, and therefore such liability should be read into the bond.

1 Mills's Anno. Stat. § 852; Davis v. State, 44 Ind. 62; Ramsay v. People, 197 Ill. 572, 90 Am. St. Rep. 177, 64 N. E. 549; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 542.

The amended complaint charges that the deputy sheriff, while acting under color and by virtue of his office, and while in the due performance thereof, committed the injury complained of. This states a good cause of action.

People use of Tritch v. Cramer, 15 Colo. 155, 25 Pac. 302; Knowlton v. Bartlett, 1 Pick. 270; Turner v. Sisson, 137 Mass. 191; Clancy v. Kenworthy, 74 Iowa, 740, 7 Am. St. Rep. 508, 35 N. W. 427; People ex rel. Kellogg v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 179; Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 19, 28 L. ed. 337, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286; Barton v. Continental Oil Co. 5 Colo. App. 341, 38 Pac. 432; Campbell v. People, 154 Ill. 595, 39 N. E. 578; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 723; Murfree, Sheriffs, §§ 20-76a.

It is the duty of a sheriff to take from the person arrested a dangerous weapon, such as a revolver, and hold it as evidence.

State ex rel. Bruns v. Clausmeier, 154 Ind. 599, 50 L.R.A. 73, 77 Am. St. Rep. 511, 57 N. E. 541; Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459; Holker v. Hennessey, 141 Mo. 527, 39 L.R.A. 165, 64 Am. St. Rep. 524, 42 S. W. 1090.

The sheriff and his bondsmen are liable for official misconduct.

Horan v. People, 10 Ill. App. 21; Cash v. People, 32 Ill. App. 250; Clancy v. Kenworthy, 74 Iowa, 740, 7 Am. St. Rep. 508, 35 N. W. 427; State ex rel. McPherson v. Beckner, 132 Ind. 371, 32 Am. St. Rep. 257, 31 N. E. 950; Greenberg v. People, 225 Ill. 174, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1223, 116 Am. St. Rep. 127, 80 N. E. 100; Hixon v. Cupp, 5 Okla. 545, 49 Pac. 927; People ex rel. Kel-

Note. — Liability of bondsmen of peace officer for acts of latter in respect of property taken from prisoner.

While there are numerous cases holding that the sureties on the bond of a peace officer are liable only for acts done by virtue of or under color of his office, there seems to be but one beside PEOPLE v. BEACH, in point on the specific question suggested by the title.

In State ex rel. Zimmerman v. Schaper, 152 Mo. App. 538, 134 S. W. 671, a deputy constable, having arrested persons charged with having dangerous explosives concealed 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

in a dwelling, took from them a quantity of dynamite, and deposited it in a thickly settled locality, where, during a fire, it exploded, killing a fireman. In an action on the constable's bond for the death of the fireman, it was held that in the absence of evidence that the property was stolen or acquired by any of the means specified in the statute on which the officer's right to possession was based, he acted as a private individual in taking charge of the dynamite, and not in the discharge of any duty as constable, and that therefore the bondsmen were not liable. J. D. C.

logg v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 173; Johnson County v. Williams, 111 Ky. 289, 54 L.R.A. 220, 98 Am. St. Rep. 416, 63 S. W. 759; Brown v. Weaver, 76 Miss. 7, 42 L.R.A. 423, 71 Am. St. Rep. 512, 23 So. 388.

Mr. Daniel Prescott for defendants in error.

Campbell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action upon the official bond of a sheriff, to recover of him and the surety on his official bond damages for alleged misfeasance of his deputy. The bond was conditioned that the sheriff "shall faithfully perform and execute the duties of the office of sheriff." To the judgment dismissing the action, following a ruling sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff has sued out this writ of error. The complaint in substance alleges that Wedow, the deputy sheriff, while acting as such and in the performance of the duties of his office, had under arrest and in custody a certain prisoner whom he was conveying to the county jail for temporary detention or safe-keeping, as the law provides. They were riding in a street car from Englewood, in Arapahoe county, to the city of Denver, and while plaintiff, who was a passenger, was sitting in his seat in the same car near to them and free from fault, the deputy, being then intoxicated, and so acting under color and by virtue of his office, negligently dropped a loaded revolver which was then on his person, or negligently permitted it to be dropped from his person, to the floor of the car, and the same was exploded and the bullet struck plaintiff in his leg, causing the injuries complained of. The revolver belonged to the prisoner, and was taken from his person by the deputy, acting in his official capacity, some time prior to the injury, and was being carried by the deputy under color and by virtue of his office, and, to the deputy's knowledge, was loaded; that when the deputy sheriff took possession of the revolver, or soon afterwards, acting in his official capacity, he cocked the same, and negligently and recklessly put it into his pocket in that condition, in which it remained until it fell to the floor of the car and was exploded. An indemnity or security contract, like written instruments generally, is to have a reasonable interpretation or construction, but when its meaning has once been judicially determined, it is strictissimi juris. It is not to be extended by construction to bring within its scope things other than those therein expressed, merely because the judicial mind may think that they, equally with those included, ought to have been provided for. Bearing in mind, then, this rule of construction, let us analyze this 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

complaint to see if the surety's contract indemnifies plaintiff against the acts charged against the deputy. Of course, the sheriff is bound equally with his deputy, if the acts of negligence charged against the latter can properly be said to be an official duty pertaining to the office.

As we understand from the briefs, the theory of the plaintiff is that the deputy sheriff was acting by virtue and under color of his office in taking the revolver from the person of the prisoner, and continued so to act while transporting him from the place of arrest to the county jail. In other words, that the failure to act with due care occurred while the deputy was doing an official act, or one which was done by him as an officer under a claim of a right to do so. It is not every act which a sheriff or his deputy does while, or during the time that, he is engaged in the performance of an official duty, for which the sureties on his bond are liable. The true distinction is, we think, that liability does not attach unless the act complained of is an official act, constituting a part, and directly connected with the doing, of an official act. If, for example, the sheriff steps aside from his official duty, and negligently does, or omits to do, an act in no wise connected with the discharge of such duty, though done or omitted during the time of its performance, by which another is injured, the sureties certainly could not be held liable in damages therefor. This distinction is well illustrated in the case of People use of Purdy v. Pacific Surety Co. 50 Colo. 273, 109 Pac. 981, and cases therein cited. To bring this case within the rule, upon plaintiff's own theory, he must, inter alia, by apt words, allege in his complaint that, in making the arrest of the prisoner, it was the duty of the deputy, and a part of his official act, and directly connected therewith, as one continuous transaction, to take from him the loaded revolver found upon his person, and safely to keep the weapon until he delivered it and the prisoner to the keeper of the jail; and that while conveying the prisoner from the place of arrest to the jail, the deputy sheriff, in keeping the loaded revolver on his person, was engaged in the performance of an official act, in negligently dropping the weapon and causing the injury to plaintiff, before the sheriff and his official bondsmen can be held liable. This court has held, in the case of Newman v. People, 23 Colo. 300, 47 Pac. 278, that, at the common law, when a sheriff lawfully arrests an offender, he may search for and seize and take into custody the subject of the crime, or the thing or instrument by which it was committed, or which might aid the prisoner in escaping, and bring before a magistrate or convey to the jail, the person arrested and the thing or things so seized. See also Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459; Holker v. Hennessey, 141 Mo. 527, 39 L.R.A. 165, 64 Am. St. Rep. 524, 42 S. W. 1090. Section 1830, Rev. Stat. 1908, authorizes such arrest without a warrant in certain cases for carrying concealed weapons. A sheriff, however, has no authority, and it is no part of his official duty, to search and take from a prisoner whom he has even lawfully arrested, any other property. Neither has he this power of search or seizure, unless he has lawfully made an arrest.

There is no allegation in the complaint showing that the deputy ever arrested the prisoner, or one which sets out the charge, if any, on which the prisoner was arrested, or that he had committed any crime with the revolver or otherwise, or that the weapon was loaded when in his possession, or that it was necessary for the officer to take the same from him as furnishing any evidence of his guilt of an offense, if any, with which he was charged, or that the taking of the weapon was a necessary or reasonable precaution for the officer in the discharge of some supposed official duty. The case is not brought either within the common-law or statutory requirements. It is not enough, in an action of this kind, for the pleader generally to state that the officer is acting "by virtue of or under color of his office," or that the acts are of such a character as are authorized by law, or that the same constitute his official duty. These are merely conclusions of the pleader, and not statements of fact at all. People use of Howard v. Cobb, 10 Colo. App. 478, 51 Pac. 523. It is not enough merely to allege that the revolver was one which the deputy took from the person of a prisoner, without additional averments of facts showing that the circumstances were such that the taking was justified, in law, as part of the official duty he was then performing; that is, the pleader must, by proper allegations, bring his case within the rule which requires a statement of facts, not a conclusion of the pleader, so that the court may, for itself, determine whether the act for which the officer is said to be liable constitutes an official act, or an act done by virtue of or under color of his office. This was expressly held by us in the case of People use of Purdy v. Pacific Surety Co. supra. As further showing the insufficiency of the complaint to bring the case within the requirements of these decisions, it may be pointed out that the complaint does not show that the deputy ever made the arrest himself, or that in making it he did so under a valid warrant, or that the arrest was made under circumstances, if such there be, which justify an arrest without warrant. If the arrest of the prisoner was not a lawful one, if made under a void warrant, or without warrant in a case where a warrant is required, or if not made in such circumstances as justify the arrest without warrant, the officer was not acting in his official capacity, either by virtue of or under color of office, and the taking from the prisoner of a revolver, in such circumstances, and carrying it with him, on the car, were acts clearly outside of, and beyond the duties of, his office,—merely private or personal acts, for which the surety upon the official bond of his principal could not be held liable. These defects in the complaint are not technical; they are substantial. Strictness in a pleading of this sort is necessary in the particulars mentioned. Allison v. People, 6 Colo. App. 80, 39 Pac. 903.

We must not be understood as holding that for an unlawful act, or one in excess of his legitimate authority, a surety on an official bond may not be held liable in damages for resulting injuries, when the act is done by his principal on the bond, or by the deputy of the principal, by virtue of his office, or under color of his office. We are not engaged in laying down universal rules. We confine our decision to the facts of the case as made by the complaint.

It is necessary here merely to say that the complaint is not sufficient, in that it signally fails to show by proper averment of facts, although conclusions of law may be pleaded, that the acts charged against the deputy sheriff were done by virtue of or under color of his office.

The judgment of the District Court being in accordance with this view, it is affirmed.

Gabbert and Hill, JJ., concur.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF CHARLES A. JOHNSON, Deceased.

ELIZA JOHNSON

v.

ALBERT P. JOHNSON, Exr., etc., of Charles A. Johnson, Deceased, Appt.

(— Iowa, — 134 N. W. 553.)

Husband and wife — antenuptial agreement — year's support.

An antenuptial agreement by which a wife relinquishes all claims and demands of whatever manner, sort, or description which she may at any future time have against her husband's estate, including claims for dower, support, or maintenance, does not include the year's support which is allowed her by law out of his estate after his death.

Note. — As to waiver of right to widow's allowance by antenuptial agreement, see note to Re Deller, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 751.

(February 14, 1912.)

APPEAL by the executor of the estate of Charles A. Johnson, deceased, from an order of the District Court for Keokuk County, allowing the claim of plaintiff for support out of the estate of her deceased husband. Affirmed.

Statement by McClain, Ch. J.:

Proceedings in the lower court with reference to the allowance of a claim of Eliza Johnson, widow of deceased, of $300 for support during the year following the death of deceased, resulted in an order for such an allowance in the sum of $250. The executor appeals.

Messrs. Stockman & Baker, for appellant:

Antenuptial contracts freely and voluntarily entered into without fraud or imposition, including those making provision as to disposition of property after death, are legal and valid, and the terms thereof will be enforced.

2 Kent, Com. 12th ed. § 173; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 42 Iowa, 600; Peet v. Peet, 81 Iowa, 172, 46 N. W. 1051; Re Devoe, 113 Iowa, 4, 84 N. W. 923; Fisher v. Koontz, 110 Iowa, 498, 80 N. W. 551, 81 N. W. 702; Ditson v. Ditson, 85 Iowa, 276, 52 N. W. 203.

Messrs. C. M. Brown and D. W. Hamilton, for appellee:

The terms of the antenuptial contract do not bar plaintiff from her support.

Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63 Iowa, 56, 18 N. W. 685; Miller v. Collins, 143 Iowa, 120, 121 N. W. 700; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 148 Iowa, 127, 128 N. W. 776; Phelps v. Phelps, 72 Ill. 545, 22 Am. Rep. 149; Pulling v. Durfee, 85 Mich. 34, 48 N. W. 48.

McClain, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Prior to the intermarriage of Charles A. Johnson, now deceased, whose estate is under administration, and Eliza Roberts, who survives decedent as his widow, they entered into an antenuptial contract, in which each agreed to relinquish all rights that either might have in the property, both real and personal, of the other; the recital of relinquishment on the part of the intended wife being as follows: "In consideration of which and the said marriage the second party agrees to, and does in like manner, relinquish any and all claims and demands of whatsoever manner, sort, or description which she may at any future time have by reason of the said marriage and her being the wife of the first party, against the said first party, his property or his estate, except only as in contract hereinafter specifically set out; the above agreement to include and cover all claims for dower, support, or maintenance out of the estate of the first party. In the event that the first party shall die during the continuance of the said marriage relation between the parties hereto, and the second party survive him, then the second party shall be entitled to the one third part of the net value of the estate left by first party, provided that the said net value of the estate shall not exceed the sum of $2,100. In the event that the net value of the said estate shall exceed $2,100, then and in that case second party shall become entitled to the sum of $700 out of the same, and no more. The above exception, that is to say, the portion of the first party's property that the second party shall be entitled to out of his estate, is given under the express condition that the second party will in no wise interfere with the first party selling or mortgaging his property, and that she will sign all deeds and mortgages said first party may ask to be signed, and first party will likewise agree to sign deeds or mortgages for second party."

It is conceded for appellant that in a case recently decided in this court—Re Miller, 143 Iowa, 120, 121 N. W. 700—it was held that an antenuptial contract cutting off all rights of the wife surviving her husband in his estate does not defeat her right to the allowance authorized by Code, § 3314, provided the court shall find such allowance to be proper under the circumstances. Counsel for appellant seek to distinguish the present case from the one just cited on the ground that in the antenuptial contract now before us the intended wife specifically relinquished all claims against her prospective husband's property or estate, with the specification that such relinquishment should include and cover "all claims for dower, support, and maintenance out of the estate" of her husband. We think no such distinction can properly be made. In that case it was held that the allowance provided for by statute was not to be made out of the estate of the husband, but out of property of which he died seised, and that the amount of his estate for distribution could only be determined after costs of administration had been deducted from his property, and that the allowance to the widow is one of the expenses of administration. It is there said that the allowance authorized to be made to widow and children does not relate in any sense to an interest in the property of the husband; and by quotation from Re Peet, 79 Iowa, 185, 44 N. W. 354, it is said that the provisions of the statute in this respect embrace interests of the public as well as of the wife and children. In the case of Phelps v. Phelps, 72 Ill. 545, 22 Am. Rep. 149, cited with approval in the Miller Case, this language is used: "The right of the wife [and minor children] to support during marriage is not an interest, strictly speaking, in the property of her husband. It is a benefit arising out of the marital relation by implication of law. . . . It comes within no definition of property. It is a benefit created in their favor by positive law, and adopted for reasons deemed wise and politic. . . . We are at a loss to understand how this humane provision of law for the family of a deceased party can be affected by an antenuptial contract, however broad and comprehensive its terms. . . . It is undeniable law that a party may waive the advantage of a statute intended for his sole benefit, but there are grave reasons why a law enacted from public considerations should not be abrogated by mere private agreement. The statute we are considering is of this character. It was intended to throw around the persons named that protection they are unable, in their helplessness, to procure for themselves. This is not a matter of mere private concern. It would be in contravention of the policy of this enactment to permit a party, by an antenuptial contract, to relieve his estate altogether from the maintenance of his widow and his children, when they could no longer sustain themselves."

We now reach the conclusion that by no revision in an antenuptial contract, no matter how fair and reasonable it may be in itself, in view of circumstances of the parties, can the prospective wife relinquish or cut herself off from the right to an allowance for support under the statute, provided the court finds such allowance to be a proper one when applied for. Of course, the circumstances, including the provisions of the contract itself, may be taken into account in determining whether an allowance should be made; but if, in the particular case, the court finds an allowance to be proper, no relinquishment or waiver in the antenuptial contract can be relied upon to defeat the right to it.

The order of the trial court is affirmed.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

H. W. SCHAAKE et al.

v.

JOSEPH N. DOLLEY et al.

(85 Kan. 598, 118 Pac. 80.)

Bank — regulation — police power.

1. The business of banking is so intimately related to the public welfare that it properly falls within the scope of the police power of the state, exercisable by the legislature.

Same — denial of charter — validity.

2. Section 2, chap. 125, Laws 1911, relating to the formation of private corporations, and providing that the charter board shall refuse a bank charter if, upon examination, it shall make a determination against the public necessity of the business in the community in which it is sought to establish the bank, is a valid enactment under the police power of the state.

Same — priority.

3. Where equally meritorious applications for charters for several banks in the same community are pending before the charter board at the same time, and the charter board determines against the necessity for more than one bank, the application first presented should be granted.

(October 7, 1911.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant the State Charter Board to grant to plaintiffs a charter for a banking corporation in the city of Abilene. Writ denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. S. Crawford and Frank Doster, for plaintiffs:

At common law the business of banking was of common right.

Headnotes by BURCH, J.

Note. — A search has failed to disclose the existence of any other case in which the question whether a charter or license for a bank may be refused upon general considerations of public policy has been considered.

As to the power to prohibit or impose conditions upon the right of individuals to engage in the banking business, see State v. Richcreek, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 874, and note; Weed v. Bergh, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1217, and note; Marymont v. Nevada State Bkg. Board, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 477.

Mention may also be made in this connection of Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 55 L. ed. 128, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190, which upholds the constitutionality of a statute requiring the licensing of private bankers, and in which the possibility that the comptroller may refuse a license to a private banker upon his arbitrary whim was held not to render the statute obnoxious to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

State v. Richcreek, 167 Ind. 217, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, 119 Am. St. Rep. 491, 77 N. E. 1085, 10 Ann. Cas. 899; Ex parte Pittman, 31 Nev. 43, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 266, 99 Pac. 700, 20 Ann. Cas. 1319; Weed v. Bergh, 141 Wis. 569, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1217, 124 N. W. 664.

The statute vests arbitrary power in the charter board.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 31 L.R.A. 55, 48 Am. St. Rep. 227, 33 Atl. 510; Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 587, 52 L.R.A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616; Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. D. 62, 25 L.R.A. 621, 60 N. W. 156; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Cosgrove v. Augusta, 103 Ga. 835, 42 L.R.A. 711, 68 Am. St. Rep. 149, 31 S. E. 445; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 94 N. E. 431.

The statute is a delegation of legislative power, and therefore void.

Merchants' Exch. v. Knott, 212 Mo. 616, 111 S. W. 565; Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 587, 52 L.R.A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616.

Messrs. J. W. Gleed and J. L. Hunt, for defendants:

The banking business is impressed with a public interest.

Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 487; Blaker v. Hood, 53 Kan. 499, 24 L.R.A. 854, 36 Pac. 1115; American Nat. Bank v. Morey, 113 Ky. 857, 58 L.R.A. 956, 101 Am. St. Rep. 379, 69 S. W. 759.

The power to create corporations belongs to the legislature unless expressly taken away by the Constitution, and is incidental to the general power of making laws for the welfare of the state.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 8; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 411, 4 L. ed. 579, 602; Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 257, 317, 9 L. ed. 709, 732.

The statute confers no arbitrary power.

Coleman v. Newby, 7 Kan. 82; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672; State ex rel. Taylor v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Kan. 467, 92 Pac. 006; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 24 L.R.A. 141, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 683, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278, 37 N. E. 247; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 42, 6 L. ed. 253, 262; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 1 L.R.A. 744, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 325, 35 Fed. 866; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 48 L. ed. 525, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; Union Bridge 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364, 51 L. ed. 523, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Campbell, 173 Fed. 975; Brady v. Matern, 125 Iowa, 158, 106 Am. St. Rep. 291, 100 N. W. 358.

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In May, 1911, there were three banks in the city of Abilene, two national banks and one state bank, all actively engaged in business. On May 20th an application was made to the state charter board for the incorporation of a fourth bank, to be known as the Commercial State Bank, and on May 25th an application was made for the incorporation of still another bank, to be known as the Central State Bank. The application first presented was approved, and the second one was rejected. The incorporators of the Central State Bank ask for a writ of mandamus to compel the charter board to approve its application and allow it a charter.

Section 2, chapter 125, Laws of 1911, relating to the formation of private corporations, provides as follows: "The charter board shall make a careful investigation of each application, and shall inquire especially with reference to the character of the business in which the proposed incorporation is to engage, and if the board shall determine that the business or undertaking is one for which a corporation may lawfully be formed, and that the applicants are acting in good faith, the application shall be granted, and a certificate setting forth that the application has been approved shall be indorsed upon the application and signed by the members of the charter board approving the same; provided, that when the application is for a bank charter the charter board shall also make a careful examination as to the financial standing and character of the incorporators, also of the public necessity of the business in the community in which it is sought to establish the same, and shall determine whether the capital for which said company is sought to be capitalized is commensurate with the requirements of law, and if the board shall determine either of said questions unfavorably to said corporation, it shall refuse the charter."

Pursuant to this statute, the charter board made a careful examination of the public necessity for a fifth bank at Abilene, and found that there was not more than enough business in that community to support four banks, and that the public necessity did not justify the establishment of a fifth bank. Having so determined, the charter board regarded the statute as mandatory.

The plaintiffs say that the right to engage in banking is a common-law right pertaining equally to every citizen, which the legislature cannot, under the state Constitution, take away, and that they have been denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, and have been deprived of property without due process of law, in violation of that instrument. What the common-law rights of the plaintiffs may have been is not very material. That body of legal principles has been adopted in this state only so far as it is compatible with the wants and conditions of the people, and it is one of the functions of the legislature to ordain and establish, from time to time, such new rules and ordinances subversive of the common law as it may deem to be for the welfare of society under the changed and continually changing states of its composition, organization, development, and progress.

The law in question does not contravene the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, if it was enacted pursuant to the police power of the state; and it is justifiable as an exercise of that power, if it responds directly to some demand of the public welfare, and does not fall within some limitation upon legislative action expressed in the state Constitution.

The article of the state Constitution devoted to the subject of banking relates to banks of issue, and the only provision of that instrument pertinent to the present discussion is § 1 of the Bill of Rights, which reads as follows: "All men are possessed of equal and inalienable natural rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness includes the right to employ one's faculties and property in a gainful occupation of his own choosing. This right, however, has never been regarded as absolute by either the English or the American law. While it is properly spoken of as fundamental and inalienable, it is nevertheless qualified to the extent that the sovereign power may interfere with its enjoyment through regulations necessary or proper for the mutual good of all the members of the social whole. One of the highest ends of civil government is the protection of the individual in the enjoyment of the fundamental rights enumerated in the Bill of Rights. The idea of those rights should be pervasive in civil institutions, or government is likely to become a nuisance and a scourge. But if the individual insists upon them to the detriment of other individuals possessing the same rights, or to the detriment of the security, good order, common good, and general welfare of the entire social body of which he is a member, he is likely to become a nuisance. Therefore, it is a principle of undisputed validity that a person's right to devote his property to a selected employment must be subordinated to such reasonable restrictions and limitations as are necessary to prevent the exercise of the right from becoming harmful to others. If the benefits of organized society are to be enjoyed at all, authority must reside somewhere to consider the conflicting claims and interests of the individual and of the community to which he belongs, and prescribe the rules of good neighborhood. The power to do this is legislative power, and it must necessarily be adequate to meet the need for which it is instituted. The result is that the declaration of the Bill of Rights, quoted above, is not a prohibition against just restrictions upon the enjoyment of liberty and the pursuit of happiness, in the interest of the public good. It is a political maxim addressed to the wisdom of the legislature, and not a limitation upon its power. It is not a mere "glittering generality," and cannot be entirely disregarded in any valid enactment (see Atchison Street R. Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 31 Kan. 660, 665, 3 Pac. 284), but it lacks the definiteness, certainty, and precision of a rule, like the command of the Bill of Rights respecting slavery, or religious freedom, or bail, or trial by jury, and consequently cannot, as those provisions do, furnish a basis for the judicial determination of specific controversies. "Many things, indeed, which are contained in the Bills of Rights, to be found in the American Constitutions, are not, and from the very nature of the case cannot be, so certain and definite in character as to form rules for judicial decisions; and they are declared rather as guides to the legislative judgment, than as marking an absolute limitation of power. The nature of the declaration will generally enable us to determine without difficulty whether it is the one thing or the other. If it is declared that all men are free, and no man can be slave to another, a definite and certain rule of action is laid down, which the courts can administer; but, if it be said that 'the blessings of a free government can only be maintained by a firm adherence to justice, moderation, temperance, frugality, and virtue,' we should not be likely to commit the mistake of supposing that this declaration would authorize the courts to substitute their own view of justice for that which may have impelled the legislature to pass a particular law, or to inquire into the moderation, temperance, frugality, and virtue of its members, with a view to set aside their action, if it should appear to have been influenced by the opposite qualities. It is plain that what in the one case is a rule, in the other is an admonition addressed to the judgment and the conscience of all persons in authority, as well as of the people themselves." Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 245. To decide that the act in question violates the quoted section of the Bill of Rights would be merely to substitute the court's opinion as to the manner in which a recognized doctrine of political science should be given practical effect for the deliberate judgment of the legislature upon the subject. This the court is not authorized to do.

Ordinarily a court is not at liberty to declare a statute unconstitutional, on the ground that it violates natural, social, or political rights, unless it can be shown that such rights are withdrawn from legislative interference by the Constitution. If we go outside the Constitution and appeal to any of the maxims of free government relating to the sacredness of the rights of liberty and property, we merely raise the question, What is the scope of legislative power? Legislative power is the power to prescribe the rules of civil conduct, and the statement by Chief Justice Shaw of the supremacy of that power in the field now under consideration has never been surpassed in clearness and cogency: "It is a settled principle, growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it may be so regulated that it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property in this commonwealth, as well that in the interior as that bordering on tide waters, is derived directly or indirectly from the government, and held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare. Rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment as shall prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law as the legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the Constitution, may think necessary and expedient. This is very different from the right of eminent domain, the right of a government to take and appropriate private property to public use, whenever the public exigency requires it, which can be done only on condition of providing a reasonable compensation therefor. The power we allude to is rather the police power, the power vested in the legislature by the Constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects of the same." Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 84.

All well-informed persons are now fully and keenly alive to the marvelous economic changes which the rapid industrial and commercial development of the nation in recent times has produced. New economic forces have been evolved, and the social relations of men have become complex and interdependent to a degree previously inconceivable. Numerous subjects which formerly were chiefly private, with only an incidental public aspect, have become social subjects, demanding regulation of a kind and to an extent which former conditions did not warrant. The business of banking is now clearly discriminated as belonging to the latter class.

Banks are indispensable agencies, through which the industry, trade, and commerce of all civilized countries and communities are now carried on. The banker is the universal broker over whose counter the exchanges of supply and demand are, in the final analysis, effected. The capital which he has invested and the returns which he receives upon it are insignificant in importance to the advantages which society at large derives from the conduct of the banking business, and the evil consequences of unsound banking are distributed between the banker and the general public in like proportion. Banking is not a business "affected with a public interest" in the sense in which Lord Hale first used that expression in the treatise, "De Portibus Maris." But banking has ceased to be, if it ever was, a matter of private concern only, like the business of the merchant, and for all purposes of legislative regulation and control it may be said to be "affected with a public interest." The public patronage which the banker invites and receives is of such a character that he becomes in a just sense a trustee of the fiscal affairs of the people and of the state. If a merchant cannot meet his bills promptly, the general public is not disturbed. He is not ruined at once, and if he should fail the effects are limited to comparatively a few persons. If a bank is unable to meet a check drawn upon it, the refusal to pay is an act of insolvency. Its doors are closed, its business is arrested, its affairs go into liquidation, and the mischief takes a wide range. Those who have been accommodated with loans must pay, whatever their readiness or ability to do so. Further advances cannot be obtained. Other banks must call in their loans, and refuse to extend credit, in order to fortify themselves against the uneasiness and even terror of their own depositors. Confidence is destroyed, Enterprises are stopped. Business is brought to a standstill. Securities are enforced. Property is sacrificed, and disaster spreads from locality to locality. All these incidents of the banking business are matters of common knowledge and experience. They clearly distinguish banking from the ordinary private business, illustrate its public nature, and show that it is properly subject to the police power of the state, vested in its legislature.

When once a subject is found to be within the scope of the state's police power, the only limitations upon the exercise of the power are that regulations must have reference in fact to the welfare of society, and must be fairly designed to protect the public against evils which might otherwise occur. Within these limits, the legislature is the sole judge of the nature and extent of the measures necessary to accomplish its purpose. It may even go so far as to establish a monopoly. Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Re Lowe, 54 Kan. 757, 762, 27 L. R. A. 545, 39 Pac. 710. It may be conceded that under the English and American law monopolies of the ordinary occupations of life are odious and illegal. But whenever, through changed social conditions, or otherwise, a business becomes essentially public in character, and assumes proportions, takes on features, or is attended by consequences which make free participation in it destructive of the ends for which it is pursued and a menace to the welfare of society, society through its duly constituted authorities, may, in the absence of constitutional prohibitions protect itself by limiting the right to engage in such business, as far as may be necessary to attain the desired security. Banks are incorporated in part for the beneficial purpose of providing safe depositories for the people's money and credits. It would be paradoxical indeed if the right of individual liberty and property should require the state to go on incorporating banks in a given community until, through the certain operation of known economic forces, deposited money and credits would no longer be safe. The power to suppress monopoly and restore competition has never been doubted. The power is exercised for the public good, and so is justified. If the results of unrestricted competition become as pernicious as those of monopoly, the same suppressing power may be exercised to the same end,—the public welfare,—and so be justified.

Tested by the foregoing principles, the act assailed is the product of a valid exercise of the police power. It does not prohibit persons from engaging in the business of banking. The plaintiffs may, if they choose to forego the advantages of corporate organization, open a private bank. The statute merely says that the establishment of banking corporations in a given community will not be permitted beyond the public necessity of the business in that community. The mischief to be remedied is well understood. It is stated by the charter board, in its return to the alternative writ allowed in this case, as follows: "The establishment of additional banks in a town where the business is not such as to demand or justify the establishment of such banks has a tendency to weaken and make unsafe all of the banks in said town. The division of the business is such that it is difficult for the banks to obtain the amount of deposits necessary in order to earn a return sufficient to pay expenses and a dividend on the capital, and creates a temptation to pay high and unsafe rates of interest on the deposits, and further makes it difficult for banks to loan their moneys to safe borrowers, and creates a tendency to lend money to unsafe borrowers, the result of all of which is to cause unsafe banking." Perhaps the return to the writ does not specify all the elements of public danger consequent upon free banking beyond the business necessities of a particular community, but those stated are enough to justify the legislature in interfering. The remedy proposed is neither new nor untried. It has the approval of expert economists, and is constantly employed by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States in regulating the business of banking under the Federal law.

Banking is prohibited, except upon a minimum capital, and unless a certain reserve is maintained. The legality of these and other prohibitions is not questioned anywhere. The one under consideration is but another means to the same general end, and the court has no doubt of its constitutionality. If authority be needed upon the subject, it may be found in the case of Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 487. In that case the court considered the question of the constitutional validity of a statute of Oklahoma compelling state banks to make contributions to a depositor's guaranty fund. The opinion reads: "It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S. 518, 42 L. ed. 260, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 864. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality, or strong and preponderant opinion, to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare. Among matters of that sort, probably few would doubt that both usage and preponderant opinion give their sanction to enforcing the primary conditions of successful commerce. One of those conditions at the present time is the possibility of payment by checks drawn against bank deposits, to such an extent do checks replace currency in daily business. If, then, the legislature of the state thinks that the public welfare requires the measure under consideration, analogy and principle are in favor of the power to enact it. Even the primary object of the required assessment is not a private benefit, as it was in the cases above cited, of a ditch for irrigation or a railway to a mine, but it is to make the currency of checks secure, and by the same stroke to make safe the almost compulsory resort of depositors to banks as the only available means for keeping money on hand. The priority of claim given to depositors is incidental to the same object, and is justified in the same way. The power to restrict liberty by fixing a minimum of capital required of those who would engage in banking is not denied. The power to restrict investments to securities regarded as relatively safe seems equally plain. It has been held, we do not doubt rightly, that inspections may be required and the costs thrown on the bank. See Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255. The power to compel, beforehand, co-operation, and thus, it is believed, to make a failure unlikely and a general panic almost impossible, must be recognized, if government is to do its proper work, unless we can say that the means have no reasonable relation to the end. Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 188, 44 L. ed. 725, 728, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633. So far is that from being the case, that the device is a familiar one. It was adopted by some states the better part of a century ago, and seems never to have been questioned until now. . . . There are many things that a man might do at common law that the states may forbid. He might embezzle until a statute cut down his liberty. We cannot say that the public interests to which we have adverted, and others, are not sufficient to warrant the state in taking the whole business of banking under its control. On the contrary, we are of opinion that it may go on from regulation to prohibition, except upon such conditions as it may prescribe. In short, when the Oklahoma legislature declares by implication that free banking is a public danger, and that incorporation, inspection, and the above-described co-operation are necessary safeguards, this court certainly cannot say that it is wrong."

The plaintiffs build up an argument like this: The statute does not profess negatively to guard against any public evil, and does not profess affirmatively to promote any public advantage. It denies a privilege, not because it would be harmful, but because it would not be beneficial. The power given to the charter board is to judge of the public necessity of the business in the community. This means to judge if the public welfare would be promoted, which is a vastly different thing from judging if the public welfare would be harmed. The court cannot read into the statute a prohibition against something harmful; to do so would be to distort the phraseology. No statute can be upheld under the police power, which prohibits a thing merely because it is useless and unnecessary, and so this statute is unconstitutional and void. Statutes seldom extend themselves to include an express profession of purpose. Sometimes they do so in preambles reciting the conditions giving rise to them, and stating the objects to be attained, but generally they merely promulgate a regulation, and the mischief sought to be remedied must be judged from the state of affairs with which the statute deals. A remedial statute will not be restrained by interpretation from accomplishing beneficial results which naturally flow from the operation of its provisions. On the other hand, such a statute will be given the force and effect which the measures adopted naturally indicate, and any public evil which inheres in the state of affairs dealt with by the statute, and which the statute eradicates, will be held to be within the purview of the legislature. Such an interpretation neither reads anything into the statute, nor distorts its phraseology, and, besides being reasonable and sensible, and according to the accepted canons of interpretation, would be adopted, if necessary, to prevent the statute from conflicting with the Constitution. An unnecessary bank in a community is not a thing of passive uselessness only, and so merely of no benefit. It is an active disturber of the financial peace, to the detriment of the public welfare; and it is not very material whether we say that public harm will be prevented, or that public good will be promoted, by its suppression.

The plaintiffs say that the statute does not tend to prevent undue competition, because private banks may be established without regard to the public necessity of the business. Competition by banks holding charters under the corporation act is certainly forestalled, and doubtless in the judgment of the legislature serious danger from the opening of private banks throughout the state is not to be feared, because they must operate under all the restrictions and handicaps of incorporated institutions, without possessing any of the privileges and advantages which those institutions enjoy. .

The plaintiffs argue that the statute vests power in the charter board to grant or refuse applications to incorporate banks at will, without regard to any rule or fixed standard, and, should the board be so inclined, through caprice and partiality. The statute belongs to the well-known class in which the legislature prescribes a rule to be applied according to the existence or non-existence of some fact which the officer or board called upon to administer the law is required to ascertain. The question for the charter board, in any case arising under this law, is, Are the banking facilities of the community adequate to the public needs? This question is to be determined, like any other question of fact, from a consideration of the conditions existing in the community concerned. The board has no discretion over these conditions. It does not create them, and cannot modify them. It merely finds out and declares what they are, and the statute then dictates what shall be done. It is conceivable that any public trust may be abused. The courts, however, are bound to take for granted the honesty and right-mindedness of public officers chosen directly or indirectly by the people to administer the laws.

It is not necessary to review the authorities bearing upon this subject. It will be sufficient to consider the case made most prominent in the brief of the plaintiffs, that of Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. D. 62, 67, 25 L.R.A. 621, 60 N. W. 167. In that case, § 100 of a city ordinance provided as follows: "Any person desiring to erect, alter, or repair any building to be used exclusively not for business purposes, shall apply to said building inspector for a permit for such purpose, and furnish him a written statement showing the location, dimensions, and manner of construction of the proposed building, stating the material to be used, the manner of construction of chimneys and stove-pipe connections, and exhibit to said inspector any plans or specifications of the same which he may have. If satisfied that such building, alteration, or repair is in compliance with the provisions of this chapter, the building inspector shall give his permit for such proposed building or structure on payment of the fees prescribed in the next section."

In holding this ordinance to be invalid, the court said: "Section 100 of the ordinance does not contain any regulations to guide the landowner in the construction or alteration of a building upon his land, but requires of such landowner, before any such building can be constructed or alteration made, that he must apply to the inspector for a permit, which he is required to give when he is satisfied that such building or alteration is in compliance with the ordinance. It does not merely forbid the erection of any building that is hazardous, or which exposes property or persons to danger from fire, but it requires of the landowner that he obtain a permit from the inspector, and pay the prescribed fee therefor, which may be granted or withheld by such inspector, as he may or may not be satisfied that the building complies with the requirements of the ordinance, which, as we have seen, makes no provisions as to what shall be deemed necessary to constitute a safe construction. It is clear that the ordinance in controversy, upon its face, attempts to restrict the right of dominion which every individual possesses over his property, not according to any general or uniform rule, but so as to make the absolute enjoyment of his own property depend upon the arbitrary will of the city inspector, and therefore makes the right of the citizen to use his property subject to the will of such inspector, from whose decision no appeal is given. Such an ordinance cannot be sustained."

A dissenting opinion was filed, which reads, in part, as follows: "The majority of the court is of the opinion that this particular ordinance is invalid because it subordinates the right of the individual landowner to improve his property, by building thereon, to the arbitrary will of a building inspector, in that it requires the landowner, as a condition precedent to the erection of such building, to make a statement to such inspector of the character and location of the building he proposes to erect, the material to be used, and how the chimneys are to be constructed, and then that such inspector may refuse a permit for such building, and thus prevent its erection, unless he is satisfied that such building is to be 'constructed in compliance with the provisions of this chapter.' I think the mistake of the opinion is in considering the power thus conferred upon the inspector an arbitrary one. The language of this section plainly implies that this particular provision is supplementary to other sections of this 'chapter,' which prescribe general regulations concerning material to be used, and manner of construction, and with them the statement of the landowner as to his proposed building is to be compared, and, 'if satisfied that such building is [will be] in compliance' with the requirements of such chapter, 'the inspector shall give his permit for such proposed building, on payment of the fees prescribed in the next section.' It cannot be contemplated that this decision will be arbitrary or wilful or capricious. It is to be the exercise of a quasi judicial function by a sworn and bonded public officer. In this respect he is put upon the same footing as many other ministerial or executive officers, who are required to pass upon acts or instruments, and govern their conduct accordingly."

The majority opinion contains no discussion whatever of building regulations not contained in § 100, but appearing elsewhere in the same chapter. Whether these regulations were deemed insufficient to amount to a definite guide, or whether § 100 was regarded as not supplementary to other parts of the same chapter, cannot be known. But the clear purport of the decision is that the ordinance did not provide a standard of safe construction by which a property owner might prepare his building plans, and by which the inspector should judge such plans, and that consequently the property owner was wholly at the inspector's mercy. Viewed in this light, the decision is supported by the prevailing authorities. If, however, § 100 was an integral part of a chapter which elsewhere did provide a general and uniform standard of safe construction, as the dissenting opinion claims, then the decision is wrong. In that event, the inspector possessed no discretion and no arbitrary power; his function being confined to satisfying himself that plans submitted to him conformed to the standard.

The plaintiffs claim that legislative power is delegated to the charter board. The argument in support of the claim is that the standard prescribed—the business necessities of the community—is no standard; what those necessities are cannot be demonstrated; all the charter board can do is to express an opinion on the subject; and consequently what the legislature does is to say to the charter board, "Use your judgment about granting bank charters." It has been well said that to deny to the legislature the right to delegate the power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the enforcement of an enactment depends would stop the wheels of government, and bring about confusion, if not paralysis, in the conduct of the public business. Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364, 383, 51 L. ed. 523, 532, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367. The same result would follow if it were essential that the required fact or state of things should first be capable of demonstration to a certainty admitting no difference of opinion. The statute books are full of enactments leaving to administrative officers the determination of facts depending upon elements fully as complex and intangible as those which make up the need of a community for additional banking facilities; and when such enactments have been considered by the courts they have generally been upheld against the claim that legislative power has been delegated.

"It is further contended, however, that the statute is open to the objection that it improperly confers legislative power upon the executive council and the auditor of state. Here, again, we find no authorities which hold that the legislature cannot give to executive officers a discretion in determining the conditions to be imposed on the conduct of a business which is subject to legislative control. The legislature can only pass general statutes. It cannot provide for their application to particular conditions. Discretion may be conferred upon a railroad commission to fix rates of fare or freight. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 694. The board of supervisors of a county may be given the authority to fix the fees of compensation of officers. Ryan v. Outagamie County, 80 Wis. 336, 50 N. W. 340. We see no reason why the legislature cannot authorize the executive council to determine whether the plan and method in accordance with which the building and loan business is to be conducted by any particular association are fair, reasonable, and in accordance with public policy, or why the state auditor cannot be authorized to fix the amount of securities which an unincorporated association desiring to conduct such business in the state shall deposit for the security of its members. It must be assumed that state officers will act fairly and impartially, and in accordance with their best judgment; and statutory provisions allowing them to exercise a discretion in such action are not to be condemned as unconstitutional." Brady v. Mattern, 125 Iowa, 158, 169, 106 Am. St. Rep. 291, 100 N. W. 358, 362.

"That Congress cannot delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. The act of October 1, 1890, chap. 1244, 26 Stat. at L. 567, in the particular under consideration, is not inconsistent with that principle. It does not, in any real sense, invest the President with the power of legislation. For the purpose of securing reciprocal trade with countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, Congress itself determined that the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, permitting the free introduction of such articles, should be suspended as to any country producing and exporting them that imposed exactions and duties on the agricultural and other products of the United States, which the President deemed—that is, which he found to be—reciprocally unequal and unreasonable. Congress, itself prescribed, in advance, the duties to be levied, collected, and paid on sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides produced by or exported from such designated country, while the suspension lasted. Nothing involving the expediency or the just operation of such legislation was left to the determination of the President. The words 'he may deem,' in the third section, of course, implied that the President would examine the commercial regulations of other countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, and form a judgment as to whether they were reciprocally equal and reasonable, or the contrary, in their effect upon American products. But when he ascertained the fact that duties and exactions, reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, were imposed upon the agricultural or other products of the United States by a country producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides, it became his duty to issue a proclamation declaring the suspension, as to that country, which Congress had determined should occur. He had no discretion in the premises, except in respect to the duration of the suspension so ordered. But that related only to the enforcement of the policy established by Congress. As the suspension was absolutely required when the President ascertained the existence of a particular fact, it cannot be said that in ascertaining that fact, and in issuing his proclamation in obedience to the legislative will, he exercised the function of making laws. Legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the law-making department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect." Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 692, 36 L. ed. 294, 309, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495, 504.

These cases are sufficient to illustrate the principle involved. Many others are cited in the opinion, in the case of State ex rel. Taylor v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Kan. 480, 92 Pac. 606.

The plaintiffs extend some of their arguments until they reach the wisdom and policy of the law. With these the court is not concerned.

Two equally deserving applications were pending before the charter board at the same time. The statute makes no provision for a choice in such cases, and the charter board did right in granting the one first 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

filed. If several applications of equal merit should be presented at the same instant, no one could claim a preference, and no injury could follow the granting of one and the rejection of the others.

The writ is denied.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ABRELIA MARCUM, Admr., etc. of James B. Marcum, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

CHARLES TERRY.

(146 Ky. 145, 142 S. W. 209.)

Limitation of action — offer of compromise — effect as new promise.

An unaccepted offer to turn over a tax receipt against the property of claimant in full satisfaction of a debt is not a sufficient promise to toll the running of the statute of limitations.

(January 9, 1912.)

Note. — Limitations of actions: unaccepted offer of compromise as tolling statute.

The term "offer of compromise" as used in this note means offers to compromise disputes as to the existence or the amount of a claim, or an offer of a smaller amount or anything other than money in settlement, as distinguished from a mere conditional promise not involving any of the above elements.

The great weight of authority is to the effect that an unaccepted offer to compromise a claim does not constitute such an acknowledgment of an indebtedness as will imply a promise to pay it, at least where the offer to compromise does not contain an unqualified admission of a subsisting indebtedness. Thus, in the following cases it is held that an unaccepted offer of compromise, standing alone, is not sufficient to toll the statute of limitations: Neil v. Abbott, 2 Cranch, C. C. 193, Fed. Cas. No. 10,088; Ash v. Hayman, 2 Cranch, C. C. 452, Fed. Cas. No. 572; Bank of Columbia v. Sweeny, 3 Cranch, C. C. 293, Fed. Cas. No. 882; Edwards v. Bates County, 55 Fed. 436, reversed on other grounds in 163 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 155, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967; Currier v. Lockwood, 40 Conn. 349, 16 Am. Rep. 40; Morehead v. Gallinger, 9 Iowa, 519; Brennenman v. Edwards, 55 Iowa, 374, 7 N. W. 621; Gardner v. Tudor, 8 Pick. 206; Smith v. Eastman, 3 Cush. 355; Weston v. Hodgkins, 136 Mass. 326; Chambers v. Rubey, 47 Mo. 99, 4 Am. Rep. 318 (liability does not accrue until the offer is accepted); Atwood v. Coburn, 4 N. H. 315; Batchelder v. Batchelder, 48 N. H. 23, 97 Am. Dec. 569; Rossiter v. Colby, 71 N. H. 380, 52 Atl. 929 (not binding until

APPREAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Breathitt County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover a balance alleged to be due for legal services rendered by plaintiff's deceased husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kash & Kash, for appellant:

Any acknowledgment by the defendant which implies a promise to pay, or from which it can be inferred that he "ought to promise to pay," will take the case out of the operation of the statute.

Ditto v. Ditto, 4 Dana, 502.

Messrs. Redwine & Patton for appellee.

accepted); Heaton v. Leonard, 69 Hun, 423, 23 N. Y. Supp. 469; Creuse v. Defiganieri, 10 Bosw. 122; Bush v. Barnard, 8 Johns. 407; McGlenssey v. Fleming, 20 N. C. 263 (4 Dev. & B. L. 129) Wolfe v. Fleming, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 290; Simonton v. Clark, 65 N. C. 525, 6 Am. Rep. 752; Andrew v. Kennedy, 4 Okla. 625, 46 Pac. 485; Huff v. Richardson, 19 Pa. 388; Verrier v. Guilou, 97 Pa. 63; Cohen v. Aubin, 2 Bail. L. 283; Alcock v. Ewen, 2 Hill, L. 326; Goldstein v. Gans, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 185; Cross v. Connor, 14 Vt. 394; Barnes v. Metcalf, 17 U. C. Q. B. 388; Francis v. Hawkesley, 1 El. & El. 1052, 28 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 370, 5 Jur. N. S. 1391, 7 Week. Rep. 509, 25 Cyc. 1341.

And in Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351, 7 L. ed. 174, in holding that an unaccepted offer of a specific sum in full settlement of an account of undetermined amount would not take the debt out of the statute, Mr. Justice Story said that an offer must be deemed to be in the nature of a promise to pay the sum for a complete discharge of the claim, and that "it may therefore be fairly deemed a conditional offer to pay a conjectural, not a known, balance; to buy peace, and not to acknowledge an absolute debt. If this be, as we think it is, a conditional offer then, upon the clear text of the Kentucky, as well as the English, and of other American, decisions, the case would not be taken out of the statute, unless the plaintiff had performed the condition." And in Exeter Bank v. Sullivan, 6 N. H. 124, where offers of compromise made after the declaration of present inability to pay were rejected, it was said to be absurd to hold that after a party has declared his inability to pay, a promise to pay may be inferred from offers which the other party has wholly rejected. And in Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Wead, 172 N. Y. 497, 92 Am. St. Rep. 756, 65 N. E. 261, affirming 58 App. Div. 493, 69 N. Y. Supp. 518, which reversed 33 Misc. 374, 67 N. Y. Supp. 466, it was held that a letter stating in substance that the writer was not yet able to take up an outlawed note, and had no definite prospects of being able to do so, but offering to buy it if the holder would take some small sum which, in justice to other interests, he could pay, did not revive the debt, the court saying that "the letter plainly

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

In 1902 appellee, Charles Terry, employed J. B. Marcum, an attorney at law, to institute contest proceedings against Ed. Callahan for the office of sheriff of Breathitt county. Marcum conducted the contest. The election was declared void, and neither Terry nor Callahan was given the office. Marcum died during the year 1903. His widow, Abrelia Marcum, qualified as his administratrix. After setting out the employment and the agreement of Terry to pay her husband a reasonable fee for his services, and stating that $500 was a reasonable fee, appellant, as administratrix of her hus-contains no promise to pay the note, nor does it seem to us to be the acknowledgment of an existing debt. At most it is an admission that at one time there existed a liability from the defendant to the plaintiff. But this liability was then barred by the lapse of time. There is no promise to pay the claim, but on the contrary an assertion that the writer was not then able to take up the note, and that he had no prospect of being able to do so. He then made a qualified offer to buy the note if the holder was willing to sell it for some small sum, and he, the debtor, could do so in justice to other interests."

So, in Pool v. Relfe, 23 Ala. 701, in holding that an unaccepted offer by way of compromise, to pay the principal if the debtor would forego the interest, was not sufficient to remove the bar of the statute, the court said that such an offer was no more than an admission of the correctness of the original debt, and did not indicate a willingness or an existing liability to pay the claim.

But in Hannah v. Hawkins, 5 Lea, 240, where the maker of a note payable in specie had made payments in currency, and after the debt had become outlawed proposed to pay the balance, without making any deduction from the payments he had made for the difference between specie and currency, which proposition was not accepted, it was held that the offer revived the remedy on the original cause of action to the extent of the unaccepted offer.

In Sands v. Gelston, 15 Johns. 511, an offer to compromise, accompanied by denial of liability, was held insufficient to take the case out of the statute.

And it has been held that an unaccepted offer of land in payment of a debt discharged in bankruptcy did not revive the debt. Riggs v. Roberts, 85 N. C. 151, 39 Am. Rep. 692.

And in the following cases, it was held that conditional promises to pay, which in fact amounted to offers of compromise, would not toll the statute in the absence of proof of compliance with the condition: Bates v. Bates, 33 Ala. 102, where the debtor offered to settle the indebtedness in lands; Parsons v. Northern Illinois Coal & I. Co. 38 Ill. 430, where the offer was to pay provided the creditor allowed certain deductions for commissions, and made certain band, after admitting several credits, among them an item of $42.15, for taxes paid by Terry for the year 1901, brought this action to recover an alleged balance due of $381.85. Among other defenses, Terry pleaded the statute of limitations. By amended petition, appellant declared on a new promise, made December 6, 1909, and within five years before the institution of the action. At the conclusion of appellant's evidence, the court directed a verdict in favor of appellee. To review the propriety of this ruling, this appeal is prosecuted.

The only evidence of the alleged promise of December 6, 1909, is that of appellant and R. A. Hurst. This evidence we quote in full. Mrs. Marcum testified as follows:

"The last payment that was made to me by defendant on this fee was made on January 7, 1905. Afterwards, and on December 6, 1909, I had a conversation with the defendant, Charles Terry, in Jackson, about this fee for services. He said he would give me the tax receipt on what he owed, which was for the year 1901, which was $42.15. He had been the sheriff of Breathitt county for that year, and held the tax receipt against the estate for that year, and had never given us the receipt. He told me on that day (December 6, 1909) he other deductions on disputed items of the account; Jewell's Succession, 11 La. Ann. 83, where the offer was to settle, provided certain claims were allowed; Pearson v. Harper, 11 La. Ann. 184, where the offer was to give certain lands in payment; Gardner v. McDaniel, 26 La. Ann. 472, where the offer was to pay on condition that creditor withdraw an attachment suit, pay the costs, and restore the attached goods in their original condition; Mumford v. Freeman, 8 Met. 432, 41 Am. Dec. 532, where debtor offered to renew notes if creditor would forego interest on certain ones; and Mitchell v. Clay, 8 Tex. 443, where the debtor offered to transfer certain lands in payment.

In Georgia a distinction has been drawn between an offer or proposition to compromise a doubtful or disputed claim, and an offer to settle upon certain terms a claim that is unquestioned, it being held that an offer of the latter character would toll the statute, whereas admission made in an offer of the former character would not. This rule was announced in Teasley v. Bradley, 110 Ga. 497, 78 Am. St. Rep. 113, 35 S. E. 782, where an offer to settle an unquestioned claim upon certain terms proposed by the debtor was made upon the creditor's demand for a settlement, it being said that in such case the offer impliedly acknowledged the right to demand settlement; and in Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 872, 43 S. E. 280, wherein an offer to compromise a doubtful or disputed claim was held not to toll the statute. And in Hicks v. Thomas, Dudley (Ga.) 218, it was held that evidence of an offer of compromise made to avoid a suit or buy one's peace, would not defeat the statute, but that if such offer was made before the statutory period had run, from the consciousness of the truth of the indebtedness, evidence thereof would toll the statute.

In a few instances writings containing offers of compromise have been held sufficient, but these conclusions were undoubtedly due to the fact that the writings contained other elements sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Thus, in Cudd v. Jones, 63 Hun, 142, 17 N. Y. Supp. 582, a letter written to the payee of a note against which the statute of limitations had run, in which the writer stated that he was sorry he was unable to pay the note, that the money was loaned on his credit, that it was difficult for him to pay, and in conclusion asked how much the payee would take for the note, and made an offer of a specific sum, was a recognition of the debt sufficient to take the case out of the statute; but the court said that had the offer of the compromise stood alone, there would be force in the suggestion that it would not be a sufficient acknowledgment, but that the letter must be taken as a whole. And in Rumsey v. Settle, 120 Mich. 372, 79 N. W. 579, a letter from the debtor to the creditor, written while the debt was still alive, admitting that the former owed the latter, and stating that he wished to fix the matter up by giving a note, or if the creditor thought a note worthless, asking what the creditor would take in cash to balance all the debtor owed, was held to toll the statute, but the decision evidently turned upon the ground that the letter taken as a whole recognized the debt as a present obligation, which fact was sufficient to prevent the running of the statute. And in Will v. Marker, 122 Iowa, 627, 78 N. W. 487, letters, one of which stated that the writer supposed a note had been paid, and asked the sendee to reduce the interest, another asked that a certain sum be accepted in full, the writer adding, "I want to get it [the debt] off my hands now," and the third stated that he could not pay the claim and that a judgment could be taken if that would satisfy, and asking to be spared the humiliation of being sued,—taken together, were held an admission that the note was a present obligation, sufficient to avoid the statute. Here again it is probable that the mere offer of compromise taken alone would have been held insufficient to toll the statute. So, in Rhodes v. Hadfield, 2 Cranch, C. C. 566, Fed. Cas. No. 11,748, evidence that a note had upon presentation been acknowledged as unpaid, but was said to be of long standing, and that payment would be resisted, but that terms of compromise had been offered, which were not accepted, was held to show an acknowledgment sufficient to take the debt out of the statute. It does not appear, however, that this decision was based upon the offer of compromise, and indeed it is probable that the acknowledgment formed the real basis of the decision. And would give me receipt. I got a blank receipt from Sheriff Crawford, and he wanted me to give him a receipt in full, and I told him I would law him, and he said: 'Law; and I will bring in enough to beat you;' that he would give me this tax receipt on what he owed. He said that he had no blank receipts, and I went to Mr. Crawford, who was then sheriff, and got a blank tax receipt, and took it to Mr. Terry, and he started to write the receipt, and dated it. He then stated to me that I must accept the receipt in full for services rendered by my husband, and I told him I would not do this. He then refused to write the receipt, and still holds the tax receipt against the estate."

Mr. R. A. Hurst, an attorney at law, testified as follows: "I was present in Jackson, Kentucky, and heard a conversation between Mrs. Marcum, the plaintiff, and the defendant, Charles Terry. The defendant agreed to give Mrs. Marcum a tax receipt on what he owed, and Mrs. Marcum went to get a blank receipt, and I went away. I don't know whether or not the receipt was written. This was on December 6, 1909. This was on the day Mrs. Marcum executed a bond as guardian."

It will be seen from the evidence above quoted that appellee did not promise to pay the debt, but it is insisted by counsel for appellant that there was such an acknowledgment as to imply a promise to pay. In the early case of Bell v. Rowland, Hardin (Ky.) 301, 3 Am. Dec. 729, decided in 1808, after criticizing the English courts for going too far in holding "the slightest acknowledgment" sufficient, the court said:

"Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the only safe rule that can be adopted, capable of any reasonable degree of certainty, is that, in order to take the case out of the statute of limitations, an express acknowledgment of the debt as a debt due at that time (coupled with the original consideration), or an express promise to pay it, must be proven to have been made within the time prescribed by the statute. And we are of opinion that the acknowledgments of David Rowland, deceased, proved upon the trial, as stated in the bill of exceptions, were not such express acknowledgments or promise as could by law take the case out of the operation of the statute. The utmost extent of his acknowledgment was 'that he had once owed the plaintiff, but he supposed his brother had paid it in Virginia (the place where the original transaction took place in the year 1785); and if his brother had not paid it, he owed it yet.' This was far from an acknowledgment of a debt due or subsisting at that time, when he insisted the debt had been paid by his brother.

"But it has been contended that if his brother had in fact paid it, he could and ought to have proved the payment. As well might it be contended that if he had paid the debt himself, he could and ought to prove it. In either case, it would be requiring of him what the statute clearly intends shall not be required,—that he shall make proof of the payment. The statute goes upon the presumption that payment has been made; and that after the lapse of time proof cannot be reasonably required.

"To have bound him, he ought either to have made a promise to pay (which is not here pretended), or such an acknowledgment of the debt, from which the law could imply a promise. Now the law implies a promise where the party ought to promise; but can we say he ought to have promised, under the circumstances of the present case, the payment of a debt which he supposed had been already paid? We think we cannot."

And in the case of Ditto v. Ditto, 4 Dana, 502, the court, after referring to the case of Bell v. Rowland, supra, announced the following rule: "The reasonable deduction from the case is that, if, from the express acknowledgment, it appear in Loomis v. Decker, 1 Daly, 186, a letter from a debtor to his creditor, stating that he did not recollect when the bill was made, but that if it was right he would make it satisfactory, and that he had certain railroad bonds which he hoped would be accepted in payment, as money was out of the question, was held sufficient to take the debt out of the statute; but here, too, stress seems to have been laid upon the acknowledgment rather than the offer of mode of payment.

But even where the writing contains both an acknowledgment and an offer of compromise, if payment is dependent upon acceptance of the offer of compromise, the acknowledgment is insufficient. Thus, in Creuse v. Defganiere, 10 Bosw. 122, it was held that a letter which in effect acknowledged the existence of an indebtedness, but 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) distinctly indicated an unwillingness to pay, and a determination to pay nothing if an offer of compromise was rejected, was not such a recognition of the debt as would take it out of the statute. And in McGlensey v. Fleming, 20 N. C. 263 (4 Dev. & B. L. 129) it was held that if, at the time an acknowledgment is made, the debtor offers to pay a smaller sum, saying that if the offer is not accepted, he will plead the statute of limitations, there is nothing from which the law can imply a promise to pay the debt so as to take it out of the statute. And the same conclusion was reached in Slack v. Norwich, 32 Vt. 818, where an offer of compromise fixed a definite time for its acceptance, and provided that if not accepted within that time it should go for nothing.

G. J. C.

clearly that the party ought to pay, the law will imply a promise to pay, and the case will be taken out of the statute by such acknowledgment and promise within five years."

And in the case of Harrison v. Handley, 1 Bibb, 445, the court used the following language: "Be that as it may, mere loose expressions, or vague acknowledgments, will not suffice; the acknowledgment from which the law is to raise a promise contrary to the provisions of the statute must be clear and express, where the mind is brought directly to the point,—debt or no debt at the present time; not whether the debt was once an existing demand."

The doctrine of the foregoing cases has never been departed from, but has been uniformly adhered to. Gray v. Lawridge, 2 Bibb, 285; Lansdale v. Brashear, 3 T. B. Mon. 332; Hord v. Lee, 4 T. B. Mon. 37; Rochester v. Buford, 5 J. J. Marsh. 33; Head v. Manners, 5 J. J. Marsh. 259; French v. Frazier, 7 J. J. Marsh. 431; Fischer v. Hess, 9 B. Mon. 617; Smith v. Dawson, 10 B. Mon. 112.

Applying this doctrine to the case before us, was the language a sufficient acknowledgment? We think not. Appellee was sheriff of Breathitt county during the year 1901. Appellant admits that he paid J. B. Marcum's taxes for that year, amounting to $42.15. All that can be claimed from appellee's statement is that, in order to settle the matter, he was willing to turn over to appellant the tax bill, properly receipted, provided she would give him a receipt in full for the legal services rendered. His proposition was simply an offer of compromise. It did not constitute a clear and express acknowledgment of a then existing debt. On the contrary, his offer would indicate that he regarded the indebtedness as paid. We therefore conclude that the trial court properly instructed the jury to find for the appellee.

Judgment affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES JOHNSON et al., Appts.,

v.

PHILIP J. HOGAN.

CLEVELAND-CLIFFS IRON COMPANY,

Appt.,

v.

LOUISE T. HULL et al.

(158 Mich. 635, 123 N. W. 891.)

Partnership — real estate — title in individual — evidence.

1. It is not necessary that the circumstances and dealings of partners, relied on to show that real estate standing in the name of one of them was partnership property, should be the equivalent of an express agreement, it being sufficient if an agreement that effect be implied from them.

Same — partnership funds — contribution to assets.

2. To establish partnership title to real estate standing in the name of one of the partners it is not necessary to show that it was purchased with partnership funds, since it may have been intended as a contribution by him to the firm assets.

Same — intention.

3. Whether or not real estate standing in the name of a member of a partner-

Note. — When real estate will be considered partnership property.

I. General doctrine, 889.

II. The question of intention, 891.

III. The question of the legal title.

a. Immaterial to whom legal title is conveyed, 892.

b. Legal title in one partner, 892.

c. Legal title in all the partners as individuals.

1. Common-law doctrine, 894.

2. When common-law doctrine not applicable, 895.

3. Pennsylvania doctrine, 896.

d. Where title is taken in the firm name, 897.

e. Legal title in an outside party, 898.

IV. Parol evidence, 898.

V. Trusts, 899.

VI. Equitable conversion, 900.

VII. Statute of frauds, 902.

VIII. Form of conveyance, 902.

IX. The question of notice, 903.

X. Partnership formed for the purchase and sale of real estate, 903.

XI. Real estate acquired in payment of debts, 903.

XII. The effect of improvements, 904.

XIII. Position of incoming partner, 904.

XIV. Particular facts held sufficient to constitute real estate partnership property, 904.

XV. Particular facts held insufficient to constitute real estate partnership property, 905.

I. General doctrine.

This is a continuation of the same subject found in the note to Robinson Bank v. Miller, 27 L.R.A. 449.

As to what constitutes a partnership to deal in real estate, see note in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 503; as to validity of parol contract to enter into a partnership to deal in real estate, see notes in 16 L.R.A. 745, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 427, and 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 883; as to reformation of deeds naming a partnership as grantee, see note in 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 157; as to effect of agreement to share profits from use of real estate as creating a partnership, see note in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) ship is, as between the partners, to be treated as partnership property, must be determined by ascertaining from their conduct the course of dealings their understanding and intention.

Same — evidence.

4. That lands standing in the name of a member of a partnership were partnership property may be shown by the fact that he permitted them to be dealt with as partnership property, and failed to list them as belonging to him in his will.

Estoppel — transfer of real property.

5. Estoppel may, in equity, be relied on to work a transfer of title to real estate from a member of a partnership in whose name it stands, to grantees of the firm.

(December 10, 1909.)

1042; as to effect of agreement for community of interest in speculative purchases of real estate, as creating a partnership, see note in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1089; as to location of mining claim by agents and partners, see note in 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 817.

Parol evidence is always admissible as between partners themselves to prove that a partnership exists in real estate as well as in personal property. Hardin v. Hardin, — S. D. —, 129 S. W. 108.

It is now well settled that real estate contributed by one of the partners or purchased by the firm may constitute the substratum, either in whole or in part, of a partnership. 30 Cyc. 427, and cases cited.

Although a partnership may not initiate a right to a tract of unsurveyed public land, not being a qualified citizen, it may, nevertheless, be a grantee of such rights after they have been properly initiated by another. Neal v. Kayser, 12 Ariz. 118, 100 Pac. 439.

A parol agreement to put lands into a firm, made before the firm exists, and acted upon afterwards, may be proved by a surviving partner after he has proved the existence of the partnership by written evidence. McKinnon v. McKinnon, 5 C. C. A. 530, 14 U. S. App. 433, 56 Fed. 409.

Real estate may properly be partnership property even though apparently not useful in the firm business. Re Strang, 166 Fed. 779.

The general doctrine, as drawn from the cases, with regard to the ownership of real estate by a partnership, is that where real estate is purchased with partnership funds, for partnership purposes, and is appropriated to partnership uses, or taken and treated as partnership property, or entered and carried upon the books of the firm as partnership assets, equity regards it as partnership property, no matter in whose name the legal title is taken; and it is required for the payment of the debts and liabilities of the partnership and the settlement of the claims of the partners, as between themselves.

The following cases illustrate this doctrine: 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

A PPEAL by complainants from decrees of the Circuit Court for Marquette county in defendants' favor in consolidated suits to establish and quiet title to certain lands. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Horace Andrews, with Mr. William P. Belden, for appellants:

It is not the law that, in order to make real property taken in the name of a partner firm property, an express agreement must be established, or that, in the absence of such an agreement, and where circumstances are relied upon, these circumstances and dealings should, in convincing weight, be the equivalent of an express agreement.

Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W.

trine: Goldthwaite v. Janney, 102 Ala. 431, 28 L.R.A. 161, 48 Am. St. Rep. 56, 15 So. 560; Long v. Slade, 121 Ala. 267, 26 So. 31; Whisenant v. Hybart, 160 Ala. 578, 49 So. 760; Walton v. Atkinson, 165 Ala. 644, 51 So. 826; Lewis v. Buford, 93 Ark. 57, 124 S. W. 244; Hodgson v. Fowler, 24 Colo. 278, 50 Pac. 1034; Ferris v. Vaningen, 110 Ga. 102, 35 S. E. 347; Taylor v. McLaughlin, 120 Ga. 703, 48 S. E. 203; Bank of Southwestern Georgia v. McGarrah, 120 Ga. 944, 48 S. E. 393; Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 28 L.R.A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867, 38 N. E. 937; Crone v. Crone, 180 Ill. 599, 54 N. E. 805, same case in 170 Ill. 494, 49 N. E. 217, which affirmed 70 Ill. App. 294, but decided upon another point; People v. Sholem, 244 Ill. 502, 91 N. E. 704; Joplin v. Cordrey, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 56 (abstract); Archer v. Barry, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 12, 62 S. W. 485; Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co. 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824; Quinn v. Quinn, 22 Mont. 403, 56 Pac. 824; Rockefeller v. Dellinger, 22 Mont. 418, 74 Am. St. Rep. 613, 56 Pac. 822; Dawson v. Parsons, 10 Misc. 428, 31 N. Y. Supp. 78; Moore v. Wood, 171 Pa. 365, 33 Atl. 63; Hayes v. Treat, 178 Pa. 310, 35 Atl. 987; Wilson v. Wilson, 74 S. C. 30, 54 S. E. 227; Johnson v. Rankin, — Tenn. —, 59 S. W. 638; Deming v. Moss, — Utah —, 121 Pac. 971; McKinnon v. McKinnon, 5 C. C. A. 530, 14 U. S. App. 433, 56 Fed. 409.

Real estate acquired as a result of a partnership transaction, paid for with partnership funds, maintained at firm expense, the profits coming to the partnership, becomes partnership property, even though used by the firm in a way not contemplated by the original purposes of said partnership, its operations having been legally extended. Bank of Southwestern Georgia v. McGarrah, 120 Ga. 944, 48 S. E. 393.

Where one partner, in his own name, with the knowledge and consent of his copartner, purchases real estate with partnership funds, the property belongs to the partnership. Deming v. Moss, — Utah —, 121 Pac. 971.

Where a partnership obtains a mechanics' lien upon real estate for material and labor 271; Way v. Stebbins, 47 Mich. 296, 11 N. W. 166; Richards v. Manson, 101 Mass. 482; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 88; 30 Cyc. 432; Arnold v. Wainwright, 6 Minn. 358, Gil. 241, 88 Am. Dec. 448; Parsons, Partn. 1st ed. 1867; Ames v. Ames, 37 Fed. 30; 1 Lindley, Partn. 2d Am. ed. Ewell, p. 750; Morrison v. Mendenhall, 18 Minn. 232, Gil. 212; Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 201, 2 N. W. 497; Re Swift, 118 Fed. 348; Waterer v. Waterer, L. R. 15 Eq. 402, 21 Week. Rep. 508.

A purchase with partnership funds is not necessary to constitute the purchased property partnership property.

Merritt v. Dickey, 38 Mich. 44; Way v. Stebbins, 47 Mich. 296, 11 N. W. 166; Lind-furnished in building thereupon, the legal title to the lien vests in the individual partners and the equitable title in the partnership as such. Soule v. Borelli, 80 Conn. 392, 68 Atl. 979.

Real estate which is not necessary for partnership purposes may still be partnership property, and it will generally be treated as such by the courts when it has been bought for the firm with firm funds, and its profits have been enjoyed by the firm. Bank of Southwestern Georgia v. McGarrath, supra; Foster v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 170, 55 Atl. 423.

If it appears, however, that the real estate was acquired by a partner as his individual property, and the firm funds used by him in purchasing it were charged to his individual account, with the consent of his copartners, such real estate will not be regarded as partnership assets. Louisville Trust Co. v. Columbia Finance & T. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1086, 59 S. W. 867, dissenting opinion, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1385, 60 S. W. 1; Higgins v. Higgins, 216 Pa. 397, 65 Atl. 804.

II. The question of intention.

Whether real estate purchased with partnership funds was purchased as partnership or individual property generally depends upon the intention of the parties, as manifested by all the surrounding circumstances and the use to be made of it; and whenever the real intention of the parties can be ascertained, that intention will be held to control. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 81 Ark. 68, 98 S. W. 685; Reemsnyder v. Reemsnyder, 75 Kan. 565, 89 Pac. 1014; Taber-Prang Art Co. v. Durant, 189 Mass. 173, 75 N. E. 221; Winans v. Winans, 99 Mich. 74, 57 N. W. 1088; Childs v. Pellett, 102 Mich. 558, 61 N. W. 54; Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271; Frey v. Eisenhardt, 116 Mich. 160, 74 N. W. 501; Bennett v. Hough, 141 Mich. 162, 104 N. W. 414; JOHNSON v. HOGAN; Woodward-Holmes Co. v. Nudd, 58 Minn. 236, 27 L.R.A. 340, 49 Am. St. Rep. 503, 59 N. W. 1010; Thompson v. Holden, 117 Mo. 118, 22 S. W. 905; Spur-say v. Race, 103 Mich. 33, 61 N. W. 271; 30 Cyc. 427.

If the firm has or exercises the right of using the property up in the ordinary course of the partnership, or of disposing of it and using its proceeds, there is ample evidence of an intent that it shall become firm property.

30 Cyc. 427; Waterer v. Waterer, L. R. 15 Eq. 402, 21 Week. Rep. 508.

Where lands are partnership property, the sale by one partner to his copartners of his interest in the business and property of the firm carries with it his entire interest in the partnership lands. This is true although the transfer of interest is simply by parol.

Way v. Stebbins, 47 Mich. 296, 11 N. W.

lock v. Wilson, 160 Mo. App. 14, 142 S. W. 363; Foster v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 170, 55 Atl. 423; Jones v. Beekman, — N. J. Eq. —, 47 Atl. 71; Buckley v. Doig, 188 N. Y. 238, 80 N. E. 913, 11 Ann. Cas. 263, affirming 115 App. Div. 413, 100 N. Y. Supp. 869; Barney v. Pike, 94 App. Div. 109, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1038; Starr v. Starr, 67 Misc. 305, 122 N. Y. Supp. 414; Church v. Adams, 37 Or. 355, 61 Pac. 639; Hardin v. Hardin, — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 108; Spencer v. Jones, 92 Tex. 516, 71 Am. St. Rep. 870, 50 S. W. 118; Hubbard v. Moore, 67 Vt. 532, 32 Atl. 465; Richmond v. Voorhees, 10 Wash. 316, 38 Pac. 1014; Clark v. Lyster, 84 C. C. A. 27, 155 Fed. 513.

And this rule will be applied to overcome the presumption arising from the fact that the property was used for partnership purposes. Taber-Prang Art Co. v. Durant, 189 Mass. 173, 75 N. E. 221; Robinson Bank v. Miller, 153 Ill. 244, 27 L.R.A. 449, 46 Am. St. Rep. 883, 38 N. E. 1078; Frey v. Eisenhardt, 116 Mich. 160, 74 N. W. 501; Starr v. Starr, 67 Misc. 305, 122 N. Y. Supp. 414; Clark v. Lyster, 84 C. C. A. 27, 155 Fed. 513.

Or from the fact that taxes, insurance, and repairs were paid by the firm. Robinson Bank v. Miller and Taber-Prang Art Co. v. Durant, supra; Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138.

Or from the fact that it was purchased in the names of the individual partners, and paid for by individual notes. Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271.

Or from the fact that the property stands in the name of one or more partners individually. Archer v. Barry, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 12, 62 S. W. 485; JOHNSON v. HOGAN; Foster v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 170, 55 Atl. 423; Jones v. Beekman, — N. J. Eq. —, 47 Atl. 71; Barney v. Pike, 94 App. Div. 109, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1038; Hardin v. Hardin, — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 108; Spencer v. Jones, 92 Tex. 516, 71 Am. St. Rep. 870, 50 S. W. 118.

Or from the fact that property is purchased under an agreement between two parties to purchase in common, and the 166; Marsh v. Davis, 33 Kan. 326, 6 Pac. 612; Van Aken v. Clark, 82 Iowa, 256, 48 N. W. 73.

For the purpose of adjusting the partnership affairs lands must be regarded by a court of equity as though they were personal property.

Dunlap v. Byers, 100 Mich. 116, 67 N. W. 1067; Godfrey v. White, 43 Mich. 171, 5 N. W. 243, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 562.

The interest of partners in the firm property is that of sui generis.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 95; Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254; Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 386, 58 Am. St. Rep. 490, 64 N. W. 334.

Alfred Hull should be estopped to deny his intention that the lands were entered for partnership purposes and were to be firm property.

Thayer v. Humphrey, 91 Wis. 276, 30 L.R.A. 549, 51 Am. St. Rep. 887, 64 N. W. 1007; Elliot v. Stevens, 38 N. H. 311; 16 Cyc. 791, 801; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 818; Truesdail v. Ward, 24 Mich. 134; Peake v. Thomas, 39 Mich. 584; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578, 25 L. ed. 618.

In a suit in equity the doctrine of estoppel is applicable where it is necessary, to work out justice.

Truesdail v. Ward, 24 Mich. 117; Peake v. Thomas, 39 Mich. 584; Faxton v. Faxon, 28 Mich. 159; Colton v. Rupert, 60 Mich. 318, 27 N. W. 520; Cleland v. Casgrain, 92 Mich. 139, 52 N. W. 460; Dean v. Crall, 98 Mich. 593, 39 Am. St. Rep. 571, 57 N.

further fact that they use it for the purpose of making gains, and agree as to the management and use of the same. Spurlock v. Wilson, 160 Mo. App. 14, 142 S. W. 363.

Or from the fact that it is never used in any way in the partnership business, but is rented to others. Foster v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 170, 55 Atl. 423.

Upon the other hand, this rule as to the controlling effect of the intention of the parties will be applied even where their intention clearly is to effect an "out and out" conversion of the real estate into personalty for all purposes, and that intention will be enforced. Buckley v. Doig, 188 N. Y. 238, 80 N. E. 913, 11 Ann. Cas. 263, affirming 115 App. Div. 413, 100 N. Y. Supp. 869; Barney v. Pike, 94 App. Div. 199, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1038. There is also a very strong dictum to the same effect in Darrow v. Calkins, 154 N. Y. 503, 48 L.R.A. 299, 61 Am. St. Rep. 637, 49 N. E. 61, affirming 6 App. Div. 28, 39 N. Y. Supp. 527.

But the mere fact that a partnership business is carried on upon premises owned by the partners does not disclose an intent to make it firm property. Humes v. Higman, 145 Ala. 215, 40 So. 128; Robinson Bank v. Miller, 153 Ill. 244, 27 L.R.A. 449, 46 Am. St. Rep. 883, 38 N. E. 1078; Dexter v. Dexter, 43 App. Div. 268, 60 N. Y. Supp. 371.

When real estate is not purchased with partnership funds nor for partnership purposes, but is, so far as the public records, show, the separate property of the individual members, and is not incident to the business of the firm, the fact that the partners enter it on the firm books and treat it as firm property is not sufficient evidence of intention to change it into partnership property. National Union Bank v. National Mechanics' Bank, 80 Md. 371, 27 L.R.A. 476, 45 Am. St. Rep. 350, 30 Atl. 913.

III. The question of the legal title.

a. Immaterial to whom legal title is conveyed.

Generally, in equity, it is immaterial in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whose name the purchase may have been made or the conveyance taken; if in fact purchased with partnership funds and for partnership purposes, it will be treated as belonging to the firm. Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 28 L.R.A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867, 38 N. E. 937; Hardin v. Hardin, — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 108.

Real estate acquired with partnership funds or on partnership credit, and for partnership purposes, in a court of equity, is esteemed partnership property; and it is not material whether the legal title resides in the partnership or in the several partners as tenants in common, or in the name of one partner only. Walton v. Atkinson, 165 Ala. 644, 51 So. 826.

And the question whether real estate is partnership property may be determined on parol evidence, independent of the particular form which the transaction took or the name in which the title was taken. Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138.

b. Legal title in one partner.

When real estate is purchased for or on behalf of the firm, paid for entirely or largely by firm funds, and is used or occupied by the firm in the conduct of its business, such real estate will, in equity, be deemed partnership property, even though the legal title be taken in the name of one partner individually; and this rule holds whether the title is so taken by mutual agreement between the partners, or without the knowledge of the other.

The following cases support this rule: Goldthwaite v. Janney, 102 Ala. 431, 28 L.R.A. 161, 48 Am. St. Rep. 56, 15 So. 560; Hodgson v. Fowler, 24 Colo. 278, 50 Pac. 1034; Payne v. Martin, 39 Colo. 265, 89 Pac. 46; Stone v. Fowlkes, 29 App. D. C. 379; Nasholds v. McDonell, 6 Idaho, 377, 55 Pac. 894; Van Buskirk v. Van Buskirk, 148 Ill. 9, 35 N. E. 363; Crone v. Crone, 180 Ill. 599, 54 N. E. 605, same case in 170 Ill. 494, 49 N. E. 217, which affirmed 70 Ill. App. 294, but decided upon another

W. 813; Meisel v. Welles, 107 Mich. 453, 65 N. W. 289; Moran v. Palmer, 13 Mich. 367; Beatty v. Sweeney, 26 Mich. 217; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. p. 713; Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. Ch. 354.

It is the presumption of law that, in entering the land, Hull would act for the partnership, and not for himself. Even in case he had attempted to claim that he took title for himself, a court of equity would charge him as trustee for the partnership.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1077; Trice v. Comstock, 61 L.R.A. 176, 57 C. C. A. 646, 121 Fed. 620; Shumaker, Partn. § 87; Bloom v. Loftgren, 64 Minn. 1, 65 N. W. 960; Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 569.

The intentions and understanding of the parties must be derived from the circumstances and surrounding conditions and the uses to which the land was put, taken altogether, under the ordinary rule.

Ames v. Ames, 37 Fed. 30; Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 202, 2 N. W. 497; Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271.

The acts, declarations, and conduct of Baldwin and Connolly, and the subsequent firms, are competent, in connection with their possession, to characterize the same, and to show what was claimed; namely, what title they were asserting under the possession which they held.

Wigmore, Ev. § 1779; Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59, 5 L. ed. 398; Avery v. Clemons, 18 Conn. 306, 46 Am. Dec. 323; Roebke v. Andrews, 26 Wis. 312; Cuddy v. Foreman, point; People v. Sholem, 244 Ill. 502, 91 N. E. 704; Kringle v. Rhomberg, 120 Iowa, 472, 94 N. W. 1115; Jones v. Davies, 60 Kan. 309, 72 Am. St. Rep. 354, 56 Pac. 484; Lucas v. Cooper, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 642, 23 S. W. 959; Archer v. Barry, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 12, 62 S. W. 485; Calder & Co. v. Their Creditors, 47 La. Ann. 346, 16 So. 852; Bennett v. Hough, 141 Mich. 162, 104 N. W. 414; Chase v. Angell, 148 Mich. 1, 118 Am. St. Rep. 568, 108 N. W. 1105; JOHNSON v. HOGAN; Yorks v. Tozer, 59 Minn. 78, 28 L.R.A. 86, 50 Am. St. Rep. 395, 60 N. W. 846; Hardin v. Jamison, 60 Minn. 348, 62 N. W. 394; Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co. 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824; Hardin v. Dolge, 46 App. Div. 416, 61 N. Y. Supp. 753; Burkardt v. Walsh, 49 App. Div. 634, 64 N. Y. Supp. 779; Barney v. Pike, 94 App. Div. 199, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1038; Hardin v. Hardin, — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 108; Johnson v. Rankin, — Tenn. —, 59 S. W. 638; Deming v. Moss, — Utah, —, 121 Pac. 971; Bartelt v. Smith, 145 Wis. 31, 129 N. W. 782, Ann. Cas. 1912 A. 1195; McKinnon v. McKinnon, 5 C. C. A. 530, 14 U. S. App. 433, 56 Fed. 409; Re Groetzinger, 62 C. C. A. 494, 127 Fed. 814, affirming 110 Fed. 366; Whitney v. Dewey, 86 C. C. A. 21, 158 Fed. 385; Re Strang, 166 Fed. 779.

And this rule holds even though they engage in but a single joint business undertaking. Jones v. Davies, 60 Kan. 309, 72 Am. St. Rep. 354, 56 Pac. 484.

And even though the one taking title pays most of the purchase money. Bennett v. Hough, 141 Mich. 162, 104 N. W. 414.

And even though the one taking title advances the purchase money and pays the taxes, the other agreeing to sell the land and repay his share of the price thus advanced, and divide the balance, if any, equally. Yorks v. Tozer, 59 Minn. 78, 28 L.R.A. 86, 50 Am. St. Rep. 395, 60 N. W. 846.

Where, in pursuance of a partnership agreement to buy, hold, and sell certain land, one partner purchases the land in question and takes title in himself, he will be considered as acting for the firm; it 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

will not be a resulting trust, for the other paid nothing; but a constructive trust; especially where both had co-operated in other similar dealings, and in getting information concerning this land, and in getting an option upon it. Koyer v. Willmon, 150 Cal. 785, 90 Pac. 135.

But property purchased with partnership funds, the amount being charged on the books of the firm to one partner alone, and the conveyance being made to him, and the other partner recognizing it as a purchase for individual use by agreeing to pay rent for its occupancy, will not be considered partnership property. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 81 Ark. 68, 98 S. W. 685.

And where several persons joined in the purchase of real estate, took title in one, in trust for all, and formed a partnership, but never carried on the business for which it was formed, they were deemed to hold the land as tenants in common, and not as a partnership. Jones v. Way, 78 Kan. 535, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1180, 97 Pac. 437.

Also, land purchased by one partner individually, with funds withdrawn from the firm, and charged to his individual account, title being taken to him alone, and never used for partnership purposes, cannot be regarded as partnership property. Louisville Trust Co. v. Columbia Finance & T. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1086, 59 S. W. 867, dissenting opinion in 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1385, 60 S. W. 1.

Nor does land bought with individual funds, title taken in one partner alone, become partnership property, when both members of the firm had purchased land as individuals before. Lamb v. Rowan, 83 Miss. 45, 35 So. 690.

But when, under a partnership agreement to buy, hold, and sell certain land, one partner purchases the land in question and takes title in himself, he must be considered as acting for the firm, even though he pays for the land alone. Koyer v. Willmon, supra.

And where property was purchased in the name of one partner, the first payment being made by him with money or assets withdrawn by him on account of the firm's indebtedness to him, this purchase money became his individual property and consequently no part of the consideration for the purchase of the property was paid out of the assets of the firm, and it did not become partnership property. Higgins v. Higgins, 216 Pa. 397, 65 Atl. 804.

107 Wis. 519, 83 N. W. 1103; Jacobs v. Callaghan, 57 Mich. 11, 23 N. W. 454.

The recitals in the ancient contract from Hartman and Connolly to Isaac Johnson, and in the deed from Hartman to Isaac Johnson, standing uncontradicted, raise a conclusive presumption of the existence of the conveyance from Baldwin and wife, recited in the contract and deed.

17 Cyc. 444, 445; Fuller v. Den, 20 N. J. L. 61; Havens v. Sea Shore Land Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 365, 20 Atl. 497; Chandler v. Wilson, 77 Me. 76; Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 7 L. ed. 761; Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598, 8 L. ed. 514; Davis v. Gaines, 104 U. S. 308, 26 L. ed. 761.

Also, in Pennsylvania, when land is purchased by two jointly, in the name of one alone, the creditors of the one named in the deed have a right to consider it his individual property. Gwinner v. Union Trust Co. 226 Pa. 614, 75 Atl. 856. And no parol evidence is admissible to show that it is actually partnership property, as against the judgment creditor of the grantee named in the deed. Gunnison v. Erie Dime Sav. & L. Co. 157 Pa. 303, 27 Atl. 747. For further discussion of the Pennsylvania doctrine, see III. c, 3, infra.

In one case where the owner of land refused to sell to a partnership, but later sold to an outsider, who was really a dummy, and who reconveyed to certain members of the firm, they paying the purchase price individually, and other partners making no objection, claiming no interest in the land at the time, and paying no part of the purchase price, it was held that the land could not be held to have become partnership property. McKnight v. Drake, 143 Ill. App. 10.

c. Legal title in all the partners as individuals.

1. Common-law doctrine.

When real estate is conveyed to partners individually, without reference to their partnership relation, the presumption is that the common-law rule prevails, and that they take the property as tenants in common.

Under various conditions this presumption is held to operate, and accordingly the property is considered as held in common, and not as partnership property.

It has been so held in several cases where the purchase price was paid out of individual funds. Humes v. Higman, 145 Ala. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Mr. Benton Hanchett, with Messrs. A. B. Eldredge and A. E. Miller, for appellees:

When the intention of the partners to convert the land into firm property is to be inferred from circumstances, the circumstances must be such as to not admit of any other equally reasonable and satisfactory explanation.

Parsons, Partn. § 267; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 90; Hake v. Coach, 107 Mich. 197, 65 N. W. 209; National Union Bank v. National Mechanics' Bank, 80 Md. 371, 27 L.R.A. 476, 45 Am. St. Rep. 350, 30 Atl. 913; Gillespie v. Moon, 2 Johns. Ch. 585, 7 Am. Dec. 559; Shelburne v. Inchiquin, 1 Bro. Ch. 339.

Where the articles of partnership and the 215, 40 So. 128 (partnership formed after the purchase, and property used later for partnership purposes); Robinson Bank v. Miller, 153 Ill. 244, 27 L.R.A. 449, 46 Am. St. Rep. 883, 38 N. E. 1078 (partnership formed after the purchase, property used for partnership purposes, repairs and improvements made at expense of firm, and no agreement that it should be regarded as firm property); Willhite v. Boulware, 88 Ky. 169, 10 S. W. 629 (each partner held his undivided interest in the property by a separate conveyance, and after the partnership business ceased, used and enjoyed his undivided interest for his exclusive benefit, mortgaging it as security for his individual liabilities); National Union Bank v. National Mechanics' Bank, 80 Md. 371, 27 L.R.A. 476, 45 Am. St. Rep. 350, 30 Atl. 913 (not used for partnership purposes, but entered on firm books and generally treated as firm property); Harris v. De Raismes, — N. J. Eq. —, 38 Atl. 637 (not used in firm business, improvements paid for by firm, but no entries in regard to the property on the firm books); Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 450, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138 (partnership paid rent to individual owners, property entered on firm books under lease account, improvements and taxes paid for by the firm); Jones v. De Camp, 2 Ohio N. P. N. S. 133, 15 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 169 (income from the land immediately divided as individual funds, though used in firm business).

But in one case where land was deeded to three persons individually, one of them making the entire cash payment and all becoming jointly bound for the unpaid portion of the purchase price, and where they intended to form a partnership for the purpose of using this property, and to be equal in interest, it was held that they must have intended to purchase it as partnership property, and that it became such. Jones v. Beekman, — N. J. Eq. —, 47 Atl. 71.

And in another case, where property was purchased in the names of the individual partners, paid for by individual notes, but entered upon the firm books, and the notes books of account fail to show the necessary facts, the inference that lands held individually, or by partners as tenants in common, were in fact partnership property, can only be drawn from facts capable by no possibility of any other reasonable construction than that the land was purchased with partnership funds, for partnership purposes. And if, from the facts, the inference may reasonably be against partnership ownership, that inference must be adopted.

Parsons, Partn. 3d ed. 395; Hatchett v. Blanton, 72 Ala. 423; Thompson v. Bowman, 6 Wall. 316, 18 L. ed. 736; Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271.

The mere use by a partnership of lands does not raise even a presumption that the lands are partnership property.

Wheatley v. Calhoun, 12 Leigh, 264, 37 Am. Dec. 654; Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 Mich. 80; Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 393, 25 N. W. 321; Ruppe v. Steinbach, 48 Mich. 465, 12 N. W. 658; Gordon v. Gordon, 49 Mich. 501, 13 N. W. 834; Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271.

The payment of taxes by Hull indicated that he claimed title to the whole tract. It likewise tended to explain the character and extent of his possessions.

Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 200; St. Louis Public Schools v. Risley, 40 Mo. 370.

Title to lands cannot be established by estoppel.

Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384, 22 Am. Rep. 533; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 52, 4 N. W. 434; DeMill v. Moffat, 49 Mich.

actually paid by firm checks and charged on the firm books, it was held to have been intended by them to be partnership property. Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271.

And when property was taken in the names of the partners individually, the deed not disclosing that it was purchased with firm funds, though actually it was so purchased, and when it was sold after the death of one partner to an innocent purchaser, without notice of the secret equities, it was held that such purchaser would acquire a good title as against the surviving partner. In this case, however, the purchaser was the surviving partner himself, so that he was charged with knowledge of the nature of the title. Hartnett v. Stillwell, 121 Ga. 386, 49 S. E. 276.

So, real property conveyed to the partners individually has been held not to be partnership property when it was clearly not so considered by the partners themselves. Grant v. Bannister, 160 Cal. 774, 118 Pac. 253; Taber-Prang Art Co. v. Durant, 189 Mass. 173, 75 N. E. 221 (partnership formed by those already tenants in common, but not conveying the property to the partnership, and it not being entered on the firm books, but used for firm purposes); Frey v. Eisenhardt, 116 Mich. 160, 74 N. W. 501 (purchased with partnership funds clearly for the homes of individual partners, but used to some degree for partnership purposes); Starr v. Starr, 67 Misc. 305, 122 N. Y. Supp. 414 (not used in partnership business, but proceeds deposited with firm moneys or used in partnership business, but no evidence as to what funds were used in its purchase).

Land was conveyed to several parties in undivided portions, and later, by writing, the land was partitioned among them and a partnership formed for the purpose of farming the land, which was done; under those conditions their interests were not technically partnership interests, but merely interests in common. Richards v. Fraser, 136 Cal. 460, 69 Pac. 83.

Where the title to realty stands in the name of the individual partners and the 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

business of the partnership is not disclosed, it will not be assumed that the business consisted of buying and selling real estate, so that, in the absence of any agreement between the partners, such realty does not become partnership property. Schleissner v. Goldsticker, 135 App. Div. 435, 120 N. Y. Supp. 333.

2. When common-law doctrine not applicable.

But this presumption that the common-law rule applies when property is conveyed to partners as individuals, and that they take it as tenants in common, may be rebutted.

Thus, where it is shown that real estate was purchased with partnership funds and for partnership purposes, equity will treat it as held in trust for the use of the firm, or as partnership property, even though it was conveyed to the partners as individuals.

The following cases support this rule: Lewis v. Buford, 93 Ark. 57, 124 S. W. 244; McKee v. Covalt, 71 Kan. 772, 81 Pac. 475; Quinn v. Quinn, 22 Mont. 403, 56 Pac. 824; Rockefeller v. Dellinger, 22 Mont. 418, 74 Am. St. Rep. 613, 56 Pac. 822; Dawson v. Parsons, 10 Misc. 428, 31 N. Y. Supp. 78 (property was also entered on firm books as firm assets and expenses were borne by the firm); Hayes v. Treat, 178 Pa. 310, 35 Atl. 987 (for Pennsylvania doctrine generally, see III. c. 3, infra).

And when a deceased partner's interest in such property is sold to an innocent purchaser without notice of the secret equities, such purchaser acquires a good title to that interest, unencumbered by the secret equity of the partnership. The surviving partner himself, however, is not an innocent purchaser without notice, and is estopped from claiming the proceeds of the sale as partnership property, and must look to the land itself as assets of the partnership, subject to the payment of its debts. Hartnett v. Stillwell, 121 Ga. 386, 49 S. E. 276.

Also the presumption will be overcome and it will be held to be partnership property when it is purchased with partnership 125, 13 N. W. 387; Wood v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 90 Mich. 334, 51 N. W. 263; Huyck v. Bailey, 100 Mich. 224, 58 N. W. 1002; Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co. v. Gauthier, 143 Mich. 296, 106 N. W. 802.

The utmost certainty of proof is required to establish an estoppel.

16 Cyc. 748; Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co. 41 Mich. 467, 2 N. W. 639; Fredenburg v. Lyon Lake M. E. Church, 37 Mich. 476; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 424.

Hull was under no obligation to warn Johnson of his ownership. Unless he actively deceived Johnson, under the circumstances in this case there could be no estoppel.

16 Cyc. 738, note, 26; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 434-436.

No evidence is competent, or should be considered, of any talk or negotiation between the parties to the partnership which took place prior to the agreement of November 1st, 1866, for the purpose of showing that it was part of the partnership agreement or understanding that the lands should be purchased for the use of the partnership, either in the names of the individuals, or otherwise, or that the lands thereafter purchased were to be partnership lands.

Cohen v. Jackaboice, 101 Mich. 409, 59 N.

funds, and regarded or treated by the partners themselves as such. Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271 (individual notes given at the time of purchase, but paid by firm checks); Foster v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 170, 55 Atl. 423 (although never used in partnership business, but leased to others); Harney v. First Nat. Bank, 52 N. J. Eq. 697, 29 Atl. 221 (expenses borne by the firm).

The mere fact that the property was clearly regarded by the members of the firm as partnership property will sometimes be taken as sufficient to determine its character as such. Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 28 L.R.A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867, 38 N. E. 937 (used in conduct of firm business); Booher v. Perrill, 140 Ind. 529, 40 N. E. 36 (taxes assessed in firm name, expenses borne equally, used for firm business, repairs and improvements made at firm expense); National Union Bank v. National Mechanic's Bank, 80 Md. 371, 27 L.R.A. 476, 45 Am. St. Rep. 360, 30 Atl. 913 (put into the firm business).

But when property is purchased by partners and others, all being named and called copartners and joint owners of unequal, undivided shares, and their liabilities stated to be in proportion to their interests, and no firm money is used in payment, but entries are made later upon the firm books, it is not sufficiently proved to be partnership property. Lindsay v. Race, supra.

Where land was deeded to three persons individually, all becoming jointly bound for the purchase price, and where they intended to form a partnership for the purpose of using this property, and to be equal in interest, their intention to hold it as partnership property was held to be clear. Jones v. Beekman, — N. J. Eq. —, 47 Atl. 71.

Where a partnership was engaged in buying with partnership funds vacant lots, erecting thereon buildings, also from partnership funds, and then selling, real estate thus conveyed to them as tenants in common will be considered stock in trade or personality. Patrick v. Patrick, 71 N. J. Eq. 347, 63 Atl. 848.

Property conveyed to partners individually, but for improvement and resale, will be deemed personality for all purposes; and 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) even if not purchased for resale, it will be deemed partnership property for the purpose of adjusting the rights of partners and the payment of partnership debts. Rosenbaum v. New York, 59 Misc. 30, 109 N. Y. Supp. 775, affirmed in 129 App. Div. 351, 113 N. Y. Supp. 364.

Land conveyed to three persons by name, the deed reciting that they are partners, but also reciting that each is to have an undivided equal interest, becomes partnership property. Alabama Marble & Stone Co. v. Chattanooga Marble & Stone Co. — Tenn. —, 37 S. W. 1004.

But where real estate is purchased and title taken in the partners individually, they giving a mortgage and paying the balance in cash out of partnership funds, and where the transaction is entered in the firm books, the property not used in partnership business, and no agreement to buy as partnership property, but bought simply as an investment, and when it appears that the surviving partner has sufficient personal property in his hands to settle all debts of the firm, there is no necessity to resort to this property in the payment of such debts, but the share of the deceased partner must descend to his heirs. Smith v. Cowles, 81 App. Div. 328, 81 N. Y. Supp. 524.

Where the legal title to real estate is in the partner as tenants in common, the representative of the estate of a deceased partner is a necessary party to a proceeding to set aside a mortgage upon such real estate, signed not only by the partnership, but by the deceased partner as well. Emmett v. Dekle, 132 Ga. 593, 64 S. E. 682.

3. Pennsylvania doctrine.

In Pennsylvania, when real estate is purchased by a partnership and title is taken in the partners individually, the common-law doctrine is strictly adhered to whenever the question of partnership is raised by purchasers or by creditors of the firm or of the individual partners; and accordingly such property is then considered as held in common, and not as partnership property. Purchasers and creditors may rely upon the record title, and as against them no parol evidence is admissible to stamp the prop-

W. 665; Dunham v. W. Steele Packing & Provision Co. 100 Mich. 75, 58 N. W. 627; Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 331, 43 Am. Rep. 380.

The fact of the use of the lands by the partnership is as consistent with the fact that the ownership of the land itself was in Hull, as it is that the land is partnership property.

Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 393, 25 N. W. 321; Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 Mich. 80.

The court will take notice that, in the lumbering business, timber lands and the timber on the lands are treated as different properties.

erty with a quality other than that expressed in the deed. Stover v. Stover, 180 Pa. 425, 57 Am. St. Rep. 654, 36 Atl. 921; Cunley v. Hall, 208 Pa. 335, 101 Am. St. Rep. 938, 57 Atl. 761.

As between the partners themselves, however, the deed is not conclusive, but they hold in accordance with the facts. Stover v. Stover, supra; unless they mutually agree to hold it as tenants in common, in which case it seems that they will be considered as such, even as between themselves. Harris v. Rosenberg, 161 Pa. 367, 29 Atl. 44.

Also where the question of partnership was raised by the heirs at law of one of the partners as against the executors of their ancestor, the deceased partner, and where there was therefore no question of priority or of notice to be considered, but simply one of ownership, it was held that the presumption arising from the deed to the partners as tenants in common was fully rebutted by proof that the property was bought with partnership funds, and treated as partnership property, and that it became such. Hayes v. Treat, 178 Pa. 310, 35 Atl. 987.

The record, so far as it may affect purchasers and creditors without notice, must be considered as a declaration by the owners of the character in which they intend to hold the property. Cunley v. Hall, supra.

The same principle holds in Pennsylvania when title is in only one partner; the creditors of the one named in the deed have a right to consider it his individual property (Gwinner v. Union Trust Co. 226 Pa. 614, 75 Atl. 856); and no parol evidence is admissible to show that it is partnership property, as against such creditor. Gunnison v. Erie Dime Sav. & L. Co. 157 Pa. 303, 27 Atl. 747.

d. Where title is taken in the firm name.

Property purchased with partnership funds and title taken in the partnership name becomes partnership property as far as the equitable title is concerned. Cooper v. Newton, 68 Ark. 150, 56 S. W. 867; Carpenter v. Zarbuck, 74 Ark. 474, 86 S. W. 299; La Fayette Land Co. v. Caswell, 59 Fla. 544, 138 Am. St. Rep. 166, 52 So. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

White v. King, 87 Mich. 107, 49 N. W. 518; Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153; Haskell v. Ayres, 35 Mich. 89; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365, 50 Am. Rep. 253, 17 N. W. 940.

The acts and declarations of Connolly and Baldwin, after Hull ceased to be a partner, and without his knowledge, are not competent evidence against Hull or the defendants, who claim title under Hull.

Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 50 Mich. 1, 14 N. W. 671; Ward v. Ward, 37 Mich. 253; Poorman v. Miller, 44 Cal. 269; Harcourt v. Harcourt, 89 Ind. 104; Brown v. Kenyon, 108 Ind. 283, 9 N. E. 283; Scribner v. Ad-

140; Cawthon v. Stearns Culver Lumber Co. 60 Fla. 313, 53 So. 738; McRae v. Stillwell, 111 Ga. 65, 55 L.R.A. 513, 36 S. E. 604; Taylor v. McLaughlin, 120 Ga. 703, 48 S. E. 203; Hartnett v. Stillwell, 121 Ga. 386, 49 S. E. 276; Sutton v. Kelliher, 115 Iowa, 632, 89 N. W. 26; Close v. O'Brien & Co. 135 Iowa, 305, 112 N. W. 800; Taylor v. Danley, 83 Kan. 646, 112 Pac. 595, 21 Ann. Cas. 1241; Hardin v. Hardin, — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 108; Harris v. Bryson, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 532, 80 S. W. 105 (implied); Schlichter Jute Cordage Co. v. Mulqueen, 142 Fed. 583.

When land is conveyed to a partnership in the firm name for a consideration, and is subjected to partnership uses, it becomes partnership property, the legal title being held by the constituent members of the partnership as tenants in common for the use and benefit of the partnership. Cole v. Meete, 65 Ark. 503, 67 Am. St. Rep. 945, 47 S. W. 407; Anderson v. Goodwin, 125 Ga. 663, 54 S. E. 679; Adams v. Church, 42 Or. 270, 59 L.R.A. 782, 95 Am. St. Rep. 740, 70 Pac. 1037; Mann v. Paddock, 108 Va. 827, 62 S. E. 951.

A conveyance to one in trust for a partnership, in the partnership name, is insufficient to convey the legal title, and is valid only as a contract to convey, and vests only an equitable title in the partnership, the legal title remaining in the trustee for the benefit of the indefinite and undetermined grantees. Silverman v. Kristufek, 162 Ill. 222, 44 N. E. 430.

A deed to a partnership by the firm name, which includes the surnames of part, but not all, the members of the firm, vests title in those members who are thus designated in the firm name, and they will hold the same for the benefit of the partnership. A. J. Dwyer Pine Land Co. v. Whiteman, 92 Minn. 55, 99 N. W. 362; Dunlap v. Green, 8 C. C. A. 600, 23 U. S. App. 154, 60 Fed. 242.

But where land was deeded to a partnership as "Ames Iron Works of Oswego County, New York," and reconveyed by one Ames and other persons, all of whom, the instrument recited, composed the partnership known as "Ames Iron Works of Oswego County, New York," there was held to be such a failure to establish the identity of ams, 73 Me. 541; Ware v. Brookhouse, 7 Gray, 454; Jilsun v. Stebbins, 41 Wis. 235; Fischer v. Bergson, 49 Cal. 294; Wilson v. Patrick, 34 Iowa, 362; Baxter v. Knowles, 12 Allen, 114; Fellows v. Smith, 130 Mass. 378; League v. Williamson, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 647, 77 S. W. 435; Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515; O'Hara v. Chicago, M. & N. R. Co. 139 Ill. 151, 28 N. E. 923; Seefeld v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 67 Wis. 96, 29 N. W. 904.

To overcome the presumption of ownership which arises from a conveyance absolute in its terms, it is not sufficient that there is a preponderance of evidence as in ordinary civil cases, but it is requisite that the evidence should be clear, certain, and so conclusive as to remove all reasonable doubt.

Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122, 32 L. ed. 878, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447; Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 61 N. W. 271; Blanchard v. McDougal, 6 Wis. 167, 70 Am. Dec. 458; Dewey v. Spring Valley Land Co. 98 Wis. 83, 73 N. W. 565; Brinkman v. Sumken, 174 Mo. 709, 74 S. W. 963; Miller v. Stokely, 5 Ohio St. 195; Case v. Peters, 20 Mich. 298; Reynolds v. Campbell, 45 Mich. 532, 8 N. W. 581; Doane v. Dunham, 64 Neb. 135, 89 N. W. 640.

Brooke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The foregoing are companion cases; the determination in either being controlling of the Ames mentioned in the deed as to render both deeds inadmissible as evidence, and accordingly title claimed through them failed. Riffel v. Ozark Land & Lumber Co. 81 Mo. App. 177.

A conveyance to a partnership by its firm name which does not include the name of any of the partners, but is merely fictitious, does not vest in it any legal title, because a partnership is not recognized in law as a person, but generally in equity this defect may be corrected by inserting the true names of the grantees. Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Godbold, 92 Ark. 63, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282, 135 Am. St. Rep. 168, 121 S. W. 1063, 19 Ann. Cas. 947; Walker v. Miller, 139 N. C. 448, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 157, 111 Am. St. Rep. 805, 52 S. E. 125, 4 Ann. Cas. 601; Trexler v. Africa, 42 Pa. Super. Ct. 542; Wray v. Wray, 93 L. T. N. S. 304, [1905] 2 Ch. 349, 74 L. J. Ch. N. S. 687, 54 Week. Rep. 136.

And where a deed named as grantee a partnership by its firm name, which contained the name of no individual member, and even though the firm name as given was defective, it was held that this fact did not vitiate the deed. Where the partnership paid the consideration, the partnership had at least the equitable title. Stith v. v. Moore, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 528, 95 S. W. 587.

e. Legal title in an outside party.

Where one member of a partnership, without the knowledge of his copartner, uses partnership funds with which to purchase real estate, and takes title in an outside party (e. g., in the name of his wife), such property becomes an asset of the partnership and will be treated as such. Claffin v. Ambrose, 37 Fla. 78, 19 S. E. 628; American Nat. Bank v. Thornburrow, 109 Mo. App. 639, 83 S. W. 771; Daniels v. McCormick, 87 Wis. 255, 58 N. W. 406.

But this result may be changed by statute providing that in such a case the title shall vest in the person named as grantee in the conveyance. Winans v. Winans, 99 Mich. 74, 57 N. W. 1088, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

IV. Parol evidence.

The question whether real estate is partnership property may be determined on parol evidence, independent of the particular form which the transaction took, or the name in which the title was taken. Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138.

The extent of each partner's interest in partnership lands which are held not as land, but as partnership stock in trade, and for profit, may be shown by parol, whether the legal title thereto is in one or all of the partners. Van Housen v. Copeland, 180 Ill. 74, 54 N. E. 169.

A resulting trust in partnership land may be shown by parol evidence. VanBuskirk v. VanBuskirk, 148 Ill. 9, 35 N. E. 383.

Parol evidence is always admissible as between partners themselves, to prove that a partnership exists in real estate as well as in personal property. Hardin v. Hardin, — S. D. —, 129 N. W. 108.

Where a copartnership agreement states that the use of certain land should be delivered into the partnership business, parol evidence may be admitted to show that the real intention was that the land itself should go in. Hubbard v. Moore, 67 Vt. 532, 32 Atl. 465.

Where title to real estate purchased in a partnership transaction is taken in the name of one of the partners, parol evidence is admissible to show that it is actually partnership property, and to charge it as such. Hodgson v. Fowler, 24 Colo. 278, 50 Pac. 1034; Kringle v. Rhomberg, 120 Iowa, 472, 94 N. W. 1115; Foster v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 170, 55 Atl. 423; Hubbard v. Moore, 67 Vt. 532, 32 Atl. 465; Re Groetzinger, 62 C. C. A. 494, 127 Fed. 814, affirming 110 Fed. 366.

But in Pennsylvania, it is the general rule that parol evidence is inadmissible, except as between copartners themselves, to stamp real property with a quality other than that expressed in the deed, so that when two or more persons who are partners the other. We will consider the first of the two cases.

The amended and supplemental bill of complaint avers: That the complainant, the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Company, is the owner in fee simple of lots 7, 8, and 9 of section 36, township 45 north, range 25 west, Marquette county, Michigan, and is in constructive possession of said premises, and no one is in actual possession thereof. That it had on November 25, 1905, acquired title thereto by a proper deed from complainant Charles Johnson and his wife, Louise Johnson. That said Charles Johnson had on the same day acquired title thereto by a proper conveyance from the widow and heirs of Isaac Johnson, deceased, who were at that time the owners in fee simple of said premises. Further, that the defendant Hogan had acquired certain tax title covering said lands which the complainant had on September 30, 1905, sought to redeem by tendering to said Hogan the sum of $288.32; that being the amount required to redeem from said tax purchasers. That the original bill of complaint was filed to compel redemption from Hogan, and to acquire title.

To which original bill defendant Hogan answered denying, in substance, the title of complainants to said lands, and alleging, on the contrary: That one Henry Hull was, at the time specified in the bill, the grantee under the last recorded deed of the lands described in said bill of complaint, and claiming that he (said defendant) had caused due notice of his tax deeds to be served and pub-take title to land as tenants in common or individually, as to purchasers and creditors they hold in accordance with the recorded title. Gunnison v. Erie Dime Sav. & L. Co. 157 Pa. 303, 27 Atl. 747; Stover v. Stover, 180 Pa. 425, 57 Am. St. Rep. 654, 36 Atl. 921; Cundey v. Hall, 208 Pa. 335, 101 Am. St. Rep. 938, 57 Atl. 761; Gwinner v. Union Trust Co. 226 Pa. 614, 75 Atl. 856.

But even in this jurisdiction, the presumption that they are tenants in common may be rebutted by proof that the land was bought for the use of the firm, was paid for with firm moneys, and treated by them as partnership property, when the question of ownership comes up between the partners themselves, or between the heirs at law of one of the partners and the executors of their ancestor, the deceased partner. Hayes v. Treat, 178 Pa. 310, 35 Atl. 987.

The weight and sufficiency of evidence offered to show that particular property is owned by the firm or by a partner or partners as individuals is to be determined by the general rules on the subject. 30 Cyc. 436, and cases cited.

V. Trusts.

In general, the theory of trusts underlies the whole subject of partnership real estate, each partner being considered a trustee for the others to the extent of his proportionate interest in the firm. But for the purposes of this note, it may be stated that when real estate is purchased with partnership funds and title is taken in the name of one partner, equity will look upon it as held in trust by that partner for the use and benefit of the partnership. For cases upon this point, see III. b, supra.

So, also, when title is taken in the name of the firm (see cases under III. d, supra); also when one member of a partnership, without the consent of his copartners, uses firm funds with which to purchase real estate, and takes title in the name of his wife. (See cases under III. e, supra.)

But see III. c, 1, infra, for cases holding that when real estate is conveyed to partners individually, without reference to their partnership relation, the presumption is that they take the property as tenants in common, unimpressed with any trust in favor of the partnership; for conditions under which this presumption may be rebutted, see III. c, 2, supra; and for the general conclusiveness of the record title in Pennsylvania, see III. c, 3, supra.

Where land was conveyed to several parties in undivided portions, and later by writing was partitioned among them and a partnership organized for the purpose of farming the land, their relations were held to be mutually fiduciary, and under the Code each became trustee for the others to the extent of their respective shares. Richards v. Fraser, 136 Cal. 460, 69 Pac. 83.

When one partner buys in common property put up at a trust-deed sale, under an express agreement to hold the legal title for the joint benefit of himself and copartner, he holds the legal title charged with a constructive trust in favor of the other, and equity will compel its fulfillment. Hodgson v. Fowler, 24 Colo. 278, 60 Pac. 1034.

Where land is purchased for the stock in trade of a partnership, the partners are trustees for each other. McPherson v. Swift, 22 S. D. 165, 133 Am. St. Rep. 907, 116 N. W. 76.

But when real estate is not purchased with partnership funds, but with individual funds, or where the one seeking to establish a trust in his favor did not furnish any of the purchase money, such property cannot be held to have been impressed with a resulting trust. Butts v. Cooper, 152 Ala. 375, 44 So. 616; Goldstein v. Nathan, 158 Ill. 641, 42 N. E. 72; McKnight v. Drake, 143 Ill. App. 10; Wilhite v. Boulware, 88 Ky. 169, 10 S. W. 629.

And when partners have an understanding that either may withdraw moneys from the common treasury for private uses without encroaching upon the capital, and one of them accordingly purchases land without concealment, with moneys in good faith withdrawn and charged to him upon the books of the firm, the transaction is not lished according to the statute in such case provided, and claiming to be the absolute owner of said land. That after the filing of the original bill and the answer thereto, the complainant learned that Mrs. Louise T. Hull, widow of Henry Hull, claimed to be the owner of said lands, and that about March 1, 1906, said Louise T. Hull executed and delivered a quitclaim deed of said lands to one John R. Gordon of Marquette, Michigan, reserving to herself a one-eighth interest in the ores and minerals in and under said land, and all the timber thereon, with the right to remove the same within three years, which deed was, on March 15, 1906, recorded in the office of the register of deeds in Marquette county. That on, to wit, March 15, 1906, said John R. Gordon claimed title under said deed, and caused to be deposited with the register in chancery of Marquette county the sum of $233.02 for the purpose of redeeming from the tax sales to Hogan. That said John R. Gordon and Mrs. Louise Hull now claim to be the owners of said lands in the proportion stated in the deed last above mentioned. That said Louise T. Hull claims title to the premises under and by virtue of the terms of the will of one Alfred Hull, who died at Escanaba December 1, 1874, and by the terms of which will all of his property was devised and bequeathed to his two brothers, Thomas Hull of Chicago, Illinois, and said Henry Hull of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. That Thomas Hull died December 31, 1885, leaving a will, by the terms of which said to be considered fraudulent, but rightful; and he may hold the land for his own benefit, and it will not be impressed with any trust for the firm. Bosworth v. Hopkins, 85 Wis. 50, 55 N. W. 424.

After making a parol agreement to form a partnership and purchase certain specified real estate as partners, one of the parties repudiated the agreement, and in association with others purchased the same property. It was held that the parol agreement was void, and the parties excluded from the purchase had no legal or equitable interest in the property so purchased. Seymour v. Cushway, 100 Wis. 580, 69 Am. St. Rep. 957, 78 N. W. 769.

A statute providing that when a grant for a valuable consideration shall be made to one person and the consideration therefor shall be paid by another, no use or trust shall result in favor of the person by whom such payment shall be made, but that the title shall vest in the person named as the alienee in such conveyance, applies to land purchased with partnership funds, and by consent of one partner conveyed to his wife and his copartner. To hold that a trust results and that it is firm property in such a case would be to reverse the acts of the parties themselves and their intention. Winans v. Winans, 99 Mich. 74, 57 N. W. 1088.

VI. Equitable conversion.

In England, partnership realty is generally considered as converted into personality for all purposes, and this doctrine has been enacted into statute (British partnership act 1890, § 22), and has been approved in Canada. Re Fulton, 7 Ont. L. Rep. 445.

The rule prevailing in this country, however, is that, to the extent that partnership real estate may be required to pay partnership obligations or to pay any balance due from one partner to another in the settlement of its affairs, and only to that extent, the share of each partner is embraced in a trust implied by law which equity, in enforcing, treats as converted into personality.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The following cases support the above rule; Whisenant v. Hybart, 160 Ala. 578, 49 So. 760; Walton v. Atkinson, 165 Ala. 644, 51 So. 826; Carpenter v. Zarbuck, 74 Ark. 474, 86 S. W. 299; Tutt v. Davis, 13 Cal. App. 715, 110 Pac. 690; Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 28 L.R.A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867, 38 N. E. 937; Van Housen v. Copeland, 180 Ill. 74, 54 N. E. 169; Null v. Parsons, 145 Ill. App. 436; Sternberg v. Larkin, 58 Kan. 201, 37 L.R.A. 195, 48 Pac. 861; Davidson v. Richmond, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 699, 69 S. W. 794; Comstock v. McDonald, 126 Mich. 142, 85 N. W. 579, modifying 113 Mich. 626, 71 N. W. 1087; Woodward-Holmes Co. v. Nudd, 58 Minn. 236, 27 L.R.A. 340, 49 Am. St. Rep. 503, 59 N. W. 1010; Molineaux v. Raynolds, 54 N. J. Eq. 559, 35 Atl. 536; Patrick v. Patrick, 71 N. J. Eq. 347, 63 Atl. 848; Darrow v. Calkins, 154 N. Y. 503, 48 L.R.A. 299, 61 Am. St. Rep. 637, 49 N. E. 61, affirming 6 App. Div. 28, 39 N. Y. Supp. 527; Buckley v. Doig, 188 N. Y. 238, 80 N. E. 913, 11 Ann. Cas. 263, affirming 115 App. Div. 413, 100 N. Y. Supp. 869; Hauptmann v. Hauptmann, 91 App. Div. 197, 86 N. Y. Supp. 427; Huber v. Case, 93 App. Div. 479, 87 N. Y. Supp. 663; Barney v. Pike, 94 App. Div. 199, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1038; Rosenbaum v. New York, 59 Misc. 30, 109 N. Y. Supp. 775, affirmed in 129 App. Div. 351, 113 N. Y. Supp. 364; Moore v. Wood, 171 Pa. 365, 33 Atl. 63; McPherson v. Swift, 22 S. D. 165, 133 Am. St. Rep. 907, 116 N. W. 76; Schlichter Jute Cordage Co. v. Mulqueen, 142 Fed. 583; Story, Partn. § 93.

But it has been said that, in order to transform real estate from its usual character to that of personality, the intention to do so should be made very clearly to appear. Unless the contract under which a partnership interest is claimed in land fairly excludes every consideration under which the property can retain its usual characteristics of real estate, it should be held not to have created a partnership in the land. Spurlock v. Wilson, 160 Mo. App. 14, 142 S. W. 363.

Although, in adjusting partnership relations, partnership real estate is to be

Louise T. Hull claims that said Henry Hull became entitled to the right, title, and interest of the said Thomas Hull, and, as she claims, the entire estate in said property, by reason of which she, at the time of the execution of said deed to John R. Gordon, asserted and claimed to be the owner of the premises hereinbefore described.

Complainant avers further: That said Louise T. Hull and her grantee, Gordon, have no right to the title or interest in said premises, and set out as reasons for said claim that on or about the 1st day of November, 1866, Alfred Hull of Escanaba, Michigan, Robert A. Connolly of Waukegan, Illinois, and S. C. Baldwin of Escanaba, Michigan, formed a copartnership, under the name of R. A. Connolly & Company, for the purpose of carrying on the business of manufacturing, sawing, and selling lumber, and of obtaining timber lands, and of operating a steam sawmill at or near Little Lake station on the Peninsula division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. That said Hull, Connolly, and Baldwin, for the uses and purposes of said partnership, and as a part of the property of the same, and for the purpose of supplying said mill with lumber and timber, agreed to, and thereupon did proceed to, enter certain descriptions of government land in township 45 north, range 25 west in Marquette county, Michigan, adjacent to or in the vicinity of said mill, and obtained the patents therefor in the names of said individual partners; some being taken in the name of Hull, some in treated as personalty, still the individual partner, being a cotenant in common, may encumber his individual interest to secure his individual debt; subject, however, to the superior claim of the partnership creditors to be paid first; especially when the partnership is solvent and the land in question is no longer used in the firm business. Taylor v. McLaughlin, 120 Ga. 703, 48 S. E. 203.

When timber land is purchased by several persons jointly, they to be tenants in common, and at the same time a partnership is formed for the purpose of cutting and selling all the timber upon said land, the title to the land itself is said to vest in them as tenants in common, and not as partners, but the timber is converted into partnership property and becomes personalty. Harris v. Rosenberg, 161 Pa. 367, 29 Atl. 44.

But even in this country, the question whether partnership real estate shall be deemed absolutely converted into personalty for all purposes, or only converted pro tanto for the purpose of partnership equities, may be controlled by the express or implied agreement of the parties themselves; and where, by such agreement, it appears that it was the intention of the partners that the land should be treated and administered as personalty for all purposes, effect will be given thereto. Darrow v. Calkins, 154 N. Y. 503, 48 L.R.A. 299, 61 Am. St. Rep. 637, 49 N. E. 61 affirming 6 App. Div. 28, 39 N. Y. Supp. 527; Buckley v. Doig, 188 N. Y. 238, 80 N. E. 913, 11 Ann. Cas. 263, affirming 115 App. Div. 413, 100 N. Y. Supp. 869; Barney v. Pike, 94 App. Div. 199, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1038; Rosenbaum v. New York, 59 Misc. 30, 109 N. Y. Supp. 775, affirmed in 129 App. Div. 351, 113 N. Y. Supp. 364.

In this country, however, partnership real estate, unless it is otherwise expressly or impliedly agreed, retains its character as realty, with all the incidents of that species of property as between the partners themselves, and also between a surviving partner and the personal representatives of a deceased partner, except when required in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) settling partnership obligations or obligations between partners.

This rule is upheld in the following cases: Butts v. Cooper, 152 Ala. 375, 44 So. 616; Whisenant v. Hybart, 160 Ala. 578, 49 So. 760; Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 28 L.R.A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867, 38 N. E. 937; Comstock v. McDonald, 126 Mich. 142, 85 N. W. 579, modifying 113 Mich. 626, 71 N. W. 1087; Woodward-Holmes Co. v. Nudd, 58 Minn. 236, 27 L.R.A. 340, 49 Am. St. Rep. 503, 59 N. W. 1010; Molineaux v. Reynolds, 54 N. J. Eq. 559, 35 Atl. 536; Darrow v. Calkins, 154 N. Y. 503, 48 L.R.A. 299, 61 Am. St. Rep. 637, 49 N. E. 61, affirming 6 App. Div. 28, 39 N. Y. Supp. 527; Hauptmann v. Hauptmann, 91 App. Div. 197, 86 N. Y. Supp. 427; Schleissner v. Goldsticker, 135 App. Div. 435, 120 N. Y. Supp. 333; Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138; Adams v. Church, 42 Or. 270, 59 L.R.A. 782, 95 Am. St. Rep. 740, 70 Pac. 1037; Brown v. Gray, 68 W. Va. 555, 70 S. E. 276.

It is not considered personalty for the purpose of conveyance to others except when so conveyed for the payment of firm debts. Butts v. Cooper, 152 Ala. 375, 44 So. 616 and Brown v. Gray, 68 W. Va. 555, 70 S. E. 276.

After a partnership is dissolved and its affairs wound up and completely ended and all its obligations discharged, if any real estate remains in specie unconverted, it will be deemed no longer a part of copartnership stock, but individual real estate. Whisenant v. Hybart, 160 Ala. 578, 49 So. 760; Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 28 L.R.A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867, 38 N. E. 937; Comstock v. McDonald, 126 Mich. 142, 85 N. W. 579; Woodward-Holmes Co. v. Nudd, 58 Minn. 236, 27 L.R.A. 340, 49 Am. St. Rep. 503, 59 N. W. 1010; Darrow v. Calkins, 154 N. Y. 503, 48 L.R.A. 299, 61 Am. St. Rep. 637, 49 N. E. 61, affirming 6 App. Div. 28, 39 N. Y. Supp. 527.

Until all firm creditors have been paid, no partner has a right to demand a division of the firm property. Molineaux v. Reynolds, 54 N. J. Eq. 559, 35 Atl. 536.

the name of Baldwin, and others in the name of Connolly, but that all so entered were taken and patented in trust for the uses and purposes of the partnership, which thereupon was the real and equitable owner of all the lands. That among the lands so entered, patented, and purchased for the purposes of said partnership were the lands in controversy in this suit, which were entered on the 13th day of December, 1866, in the name of Alfred Hull. That, after carrying on the affairs of the partnership for some time, Hull entered into an agreement with Baldwin, by which he contracted to convey and sell to Baldwin all his interest in said partnership property, including said lands. That, after being paid the consideration to be received by him, Hull turned over to Baldwin his entire interest in said partnership property, and that said instrument of conveyance from Hull to Baldwin has been mislaid and lost. That after said sale Baldwin and Connolly continued to carry on the business of the partnership, taking the timber as well off the Hull lands as the other lands, until 1871, when Baldwin retired from said partnership and conveyed all his right, title, and interest to said partnership, and the lands operated in connection therewith, including the Hull lands, to Samuel H. Hartman and Theodore W. Hartman. That this deed from Baldwin to the Hartmans has likewise been lost. That the Hartmans paid Baldwin the full purchase price, and the Hartmans and Connolly continued thereafter

The rule of equitable conversion is applied only where it is necessary to adjust obligations of the firm; and there is no reason to apply it in the absence of partnership liabilities to creditors or to members of the firm. Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138.

Partnership realty is regarded as partnership property only so far as may be necessary for the payment of the debts and the adjustment of the partnership assets. But it still retains all its characteristics as real estate, and must be owned and conveyed as such. The legal title is at all times held by the copartners as tenants in common, and when no longer needed for partnership purposes it is released from all trusts growing out of the partnership relation. Adams v. Church, 42 Or. 270, 59 L.R.A. 782, 95 Am. St. Rep. 740, 70 Pac. 1037.

VII. Statute of frauds.

The statute of frauds does not apply to cases where real estate is purchased in connection with the firm's business, and paid for with partnership funds, even though title is taken in the name of one partner alone. Hodgson v. Fowler, 24 Colo. 278, 50 Pac. 1034; Lucas v. Cooper, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 642, 23 S. W. 959; Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co. 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824.

Also, a distinction is made in cases where a contract for the purchase of land by a partnership, void by the statute, has been fully executed, and one party seeks to retain the fruits of the dealing, in defiance of his promises. Such a situation is not within the purpose of the statute, and consequently not sheltered by it. Smith v. Putnam, 107 Wis. 155, 82 N. W. 1077, 83 N. W. 288.

And even when such a contract is only partially performed, the statute of frauds is not an insuperable objection. Chase v. Angell, 148 Mich. 1, 118 Am. St. Rep. 508, 108 N. W. 1105; McKinnon v. McKinnon, 5 C. C. A. 530, 14 U. S. App. 433, 56 Fed. 409.

And a contract for the sale of land to a partnership is so far executed or performed 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

as to satisfy the statute of frauds when a part of the property is taken possession of by the partnership. Tillis v. Folmar, 145 Ala. 176, 117 Am. St. Rep. 31, 39 So. 913, 8 Ann. Cas. 78.

Persons who come in by a parol agreement that they shall become partners in realty held as an incident to the partnership business cannot obtain any title to or interest in the realty when they pay no consideration and there is no part performance. Dodson v. Dodson, 26 Or. 349, 37 Pac. 542.

And since the statute expressly excepts from its provisions transfers of land by operation of law, an incoming partner, recognized and treated by all as a partner, and the business being connected with him under the original partnership agreement, has an interest in all the partnership property regardless of the statute, for he takes by operation of law and without any formal assignment. Fred Gorder & Son v. Pankonin, 83 Neb. 204, 131 Am. St. Rep. 629, 119 N. W. 449.

And it seems that real estate may be so entered on the books of the firm as to comply with the statute. National Union Bank v. National Mechanics' Bank, 80 Md. 371, 27 L.R.A. 476, 45 Am. St. Rep. 350, 30 Atl. 913.

VIII. Form of conveyance.

The question whether real estate is partnership property may be determined on parol evidence, independent of the particular form which the transaction took. Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 72 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138.

Where an interest in real estate was conveyed to a partnership, and the partnership later conveyed the same interest to another partnership, signing the conveyance only by the firm name, this conveyance may have been defective, but when the second partnership consisted of all the partners in the first one, together with another person, and this latter partnership subsequently re-conveyed the same interest and signed the deed, both by the firm name and by all the to operate the property until the 16th day of November, 1874, when it was sold to Isaac Johnson. Prior to this date said Johnson had been operating the mill for Hartman, Connolly, & Company. In the course of said operation, the firm had become indebted to Johnson in the sum of $5,000. On the said 16th day of November the two Hartmans entered into a contract with Johnson, agreeing to convey to him a two-thirds interest in said business and lands, including and describing the Hull land, for the sum of $11,222.34, and on the 23d day of November, 1874, Connolly contracted to sell his one-third interest to Johnson at the same rate; the Hull lands being likewise included therein and specifically described. That thereafter said Johnson took possession of said property, paid the consideration mentioned in said contracts, and lumbered said tract for a period of upwards of ten years. That on the 3d day of January, 1876, Connolly executed a quitclaim deed to Johnson in pursuance of said contract; said deed specifically describing the Hull and Baldwin lands, as well as those entered in Connolly's name, which deed was duly recorded. That said Johnson continued in full possession and control of the property, including the lands in question, until his death, in November, 1883. That neither the Hartmans nor their heirs have executed a conveyance in accordance with the contract, of their two-thirds interest.

The prayer of the complainant is: (1) individual members, this last conveyance passed all the title originally held by the first partnership or the members thereof. McRae v. Stillwell, 111 Ga. 65, 55 L.R.A. 513, 36 S. E. 604.

In order to transform real estate from its usual character to that of personality, the intention to do so should appear very clear in the conveyance. Spurlock v. Wilson, 160 Mo. App. 14, 142 S. W. 363.

IX. The question of notice.

It is generally held that when property is purchased by partners individually, and title is taken and recorded in them as tenants in common, innocent purchasers without notice of the secret equities in favor of the other partners will acquire good title as against those other partners and against the partnership. The legal presumption is that the possession or interest of the partnership is subordinate to, and not inconsistent with, the record title. As between themselves, however, the partners hold in accordance with the facts. Hartnett v. Stillwell, 121 Ga. 386, 49 S. E. 276; National Union Bank v. National Mechanics' Bank, 80 Md. 371, 27 L.R.A. 476, 45 Am. St. Rep. 350, 80 Atl. 913; Hardin v. Dolge, 46 App. Div. 416, 61 N. Y. Supp. 753; Stover v. Stover, 180 Pa. 425, 57 Am. St. Rep. 654, 36 Atl. 921; Cundey v. Hall, 208 Pa. 335, 101 Am. St. Rep. 938, 57 Atl. 761; Gwinner v. Union Trust Co. 226 Pa. 614, 75 Atl. 856.

But when land is purchased by a partnership in a partnership transaction, and paid for with partnership property, title being taken in the individual partners, the partners hold the land jointly in trust for the firm, and neither one can convey an undivided half interest, so that one who takes a quitclaim deed to such an interest with notice of the real character of the ownership takes it subject to the rights of the partners and of the firm creditors. McKee v. Covalt, 71 Kan. 772, 81 Pac. 475.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

X. Partnership formed for the purchase and sale of real estate.

Where a partnership exists for the purpose of dealing in real estate, as between the copartners themselves the land so purchased will be considered as stock in trade; that is, firm assets or personality. Tutt v. Davis, 13 Cal. App. 715, 110 Pac. 690; McPherson v. Swift, 22 S. D. 165, 133 Am. St. Rep. 907, 116 N. W. 76.

And this is true even though title to the land be taken in one partner alone. Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co. 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824.

Or although one member buys property with firm money, without the knowledge of his copartner, and takes title in the name of his wife. Daniels v. McCormick, 87 Wis. 255, 58 N. W. 406.

Also, where land is conveyed to partners individually, as tenants in common, but is paid for with firm money and treated by them as firm property. Harney v. First Nat. Bank, 52 N. J. Eq. 697, 29 Atl. 221; Patrick v. Patrick, 71 N. J. Eq. 347, 63 Atl. 848.

When the intention is clear, it may even be held to be converted into personality for all purposes. Buckley v. Doig, 188 N. Y. 238, 80 N. E. 913, 11 Ann. Cas. 263, affirming 115 App. Div. 413, 100 N. Y. Supp. 869.

But when title to real estate stands in the name of the individual partners, and the business of the partnership is not disclosed by the records, it will not be assumed that the business consisted of buying and selling real estate, so that, in the absence of any agreement, express or implied, between the partners to the contrary, such realty retains its character as realty, subject only to liquidation of partnership obligations. Schleissner v. Goldsticker, 135 App. Div. 435, 120 N. Y. Supp. 333.

XI. Real estate acquired in payment of debts.

In Fretwell v. Branyon, 67 S. C. 95, 45 S. E. 167, it is implied that land conveyed

That said complainant, the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Company, be decreed to be the owner in fee simple of the lands hereinbefore described, and that its title thereto be quieted, confirmed, and established. (2) That said Louise T. Hull and John R. Gordon be permanently restrained from interfering with said complainants in the possession of said premises and from claiming to own the same. (3) That the unknown heirs of each said Samuel H. Hartman, Theodore W. Hartman, and C. G. Hartman be required to specifically perform the terms of said contract, and that they be decreed to release and quitclaim to said complainants all their right, title, and interest in and to said premises.

To this bill of complaint defendants John R. Gordon and Louise T. Hull Morehouse, formerly Louise T. Hull, filed separate answers in the nature of cross bills, averring: That Alfred Hull, the original patentee of the lands in question, died without having parted with the title to said lands and disposing of them by will to the two brothers Thomas and Henry; that Thomas had not parted with his interest in said lands, leaving the property to his brother Henry; and that Henry died intestate, leaving defendant Louise T. Hull his sole heir; praying that defendants' title may be quieted by the decree of the court, and that defendant Hogan be decreed to reconvey his title acquired by the tax deeds. Hogan answered setting up absolute title to the lands in question under his tax conveyances. The record shows, however, that he has accepted redemption from one or the other of the parties litigant, and has now no interest in the controversy.

But one question is involved in this case, viz., whether or not the lands in controversy became in fact, or should now be treated as, the property of the firm of R. A. Connolly & Company. It is apparent that the complainant, by virtue of the conveyances from Johnson, has acquired the interest in the partnership of Baldwin and Connolly. By virtue of the same conveyances, it has likewise acquired title to the Hull lands, if those lands were in fact partnership property, although entered in the individual name of Hull. After a full hearing the learned circuit judge reached the conclusion that the complainants were not entitled to

to a partnership in payment of a debt becomes partnership property.

XII. The effect of improvements.

In several cases, the fact that improvements were made upon property at joint expense or at the expense of the firm was considered as one factor in determining that the property should be deemed partnership property; but in none of these cases can that fact be called the dominant factor. Nasholds v. McDonell, 6 Idaho, 377, 55 Pac. 894; Booher v. Perrill, 140 Ind. 529, 40 N. E. 36; Harney v. First Nat. Bank, 62 N. J. Eq. 697, 29 Atl. 221; McKinnon v. McKinnon, 5 C. C. A. 530, 14 U. S. App. 433, 56 Fed. 409.

And in two cases, where land was purchased with individual funds and conveyed to partners individually, the fact that improvements were made upon the property at the expense of the firm was held insufficient to render it partnership property. Robinson Bank v. Miller, 153 Ill. 244, 27 L.R.A. 449, 46 Am. St. Rep. 883, 38 N. E. 1078; Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138.

XIII. Position of incoming partner.

Upon forming a partnership, the original owner of real estate gave the incoming partner the deed to an undivided one half of the same, and later another partner was admitted, each of the former two deeding to him one sixth, leaving title to an undivided one third in each. The land was used in connection with the firm business, and was understood by the partners to be partnership property. Each will be considered 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to have held his portion for the benefit of the partnership; that is, it was all partnership property. Childs v. Pellett, 102 Mich. 558, 61 N. W. 54.

Where a partnership, with the consent of all its members, admits a new member, who is recognized and treated by all as a partner, and the business is continued with him under the original partnership agreement, the new member has an interest in all the partnership property by operation of law, and without any formal assignment. Fred Gorder & Son v. Pankonin, 83 Neb. 204, 131 Am. St. Rep. 629, 119 N. W. 449.

But, where persons have been let into a partnership by a parol agreement that they should become partners in the realty held as an incident to the business, they cannot obtain any title to or interest in the realty when they pay no consideration, and when there is no part performance. Dodson v. Dodson, 26 Or. 349, 37 Pac. 542.

XIV. Particular facts held sufficient to constitute real estate partnership property.

A building put up by the firm upon land owned as tenants in common and used jointly, the building apparently put up for partnership business and paid for out of partnership funds, will be considered partnership property. Taber-Prang Art Co. v. Durant, 189 Mass. 173, 75 N. E. 221.

Where a firm consisting of father and sons purchases a building for partnership purposes, and uses it for such purposes, although paid for by capital furnished by the father, and although conveyed to the sons by separate conveyances, it must be considered partnership property for the pur-the relief sought, and entered a decree giving the title to the lands in question in defendants Gordon and Hull. From this decree complainants appeal.

The record is of great length and contains many exhibits. For the purpose of showing the intent of the parties as to the character of the interest of the partnership in the lands in question, complainants rely, in part, upon the following written items of evidence:

(1) The original partnership agreement is as follows:

Memo. of agreement made this 1st day of November, 1866, by and between R. A. Connolly, of Waukegan, Lake county, Illinois, S. C. Baldwin of Escanaba, Delta county, Michigan, and Alfred Hull of said Escanaba: Said parties have formed a co-partnership for the purpose of carrying on the business of sawing and selling lumber, and put into operation a steam sawmill, at Little Lake station on the Peninsula Division of the Chicago & North Western Railway. It is understood and agreed that each party interested in said mill and business is one third. Each is to pay one third of the whole cost and losses, if any, and to receive one third of the profits, if any. Said Connolly is to render at once a statement of the cost of said mill, with the vouchers. The proceeds of lumber sold after reserving the cost of sawing and furnishing are to be applied first to the payment of all bills for labor and material, now unpaid. When these are paid in full, then the profits, if any, are to be divided equally between said partners, each and every month. Said Hull is to keep accounts of the sales of lumber, and said Connolly or Baldwin are to collect said bills as rendered by said Hull, and each party is to use all proper exertion for the success of said undertaking, and to give such portion of his time to such purpose, as he may be required by the other parties, reasonably, to do. All notes or evidences of indebtedness against said property shall be signed by all three partners, and neither of the partners shall assign or sell his interest without the consent of at least one of the other partners, in writing. The term of this partnership is to be for pose of paying partnership debts. Hill v. Cornwall, 95 Ky. 512, 26 S. W. 540.

XV. Particular facts held insufficient to constitute real estate partnership property.

Property purchased by a partner individually with his own funds, assuming mortgage notes held by his firm against it, although these were debited on the books of the firm and taxes and insurance and other expenses on the property were charged to the firm, should be considered as that of the individual partner. The debt against it, and not the property itself, is the asset of the firm. Calder & Co. v. Their Creditors, 47 La. Ann. 346, 16 So. 852.

Also, property acquired in the name of an individual member, although the firm pays the taxes upon it, if no other entry appears on the partnership books with reference to it, must be considered individual property. Ibid.

When one partner, without authority from his copartners, purchases land openly and without concealment, and in so doing acts outside the scope of the partnership business, and pays for the land with his individual funds and credit, he will be deemed to have acted for his sole benefit, and the property will not be considered as belonging to the firm. Hake v. Coach, 107 Mich. 197, 65 N. W. 209.

Where land was purchased by a partnership, not out of general funds, but on credit, and paid for later from the proceeds of crops grown on the land itself, and title was taken in one partner alone, because the other was surety on a bank note, and the land was managed by both together, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) it was held that it was not proven to have been intended as partnership property, and did not become such. Reemsnyder v. Reemsnyder, 75 Kan. 565, 89 Pac. 1014.

Where a written contract conveyed to a person "a full partnership of one-half interest in the proceeds arising or in any way accruing from the sale of" certain land, and both parties agreed to try to arrange a sale and to pay all expenses jointly, and further, that "said partnership is to continue in full force and effect until all said partnership land is sold," and the first party agreed, in case of default by him, to pay a certain sum to the second party "for his interest in the said partnership tract," it was held that the parties did not contemplate holding the land in that community of ownership which is essential in order to create partnership assets, but rather their intention seemed to be to employ the second party as agent for the sale of the land, and to pay him out of the profits derived therefrom. Thompson v. Holden, 117 Mo. 118, 22 S. W. 905.

Where, upon the death of the father, two sons formed a partnership, one of them conveying to the other fractional parts of his own property, so that, with their inheritances, they became equal owners in the lands in question, they cannot be considered copartners in the undivided real estate thus owned by them, it not being purchased with partnership funds nor used in partnership business, except to occupy it jointly, and there being no agreement between them that their real estate should be held and owned by them as copartners. Dexter v. Dexter, 43 App. Div. 268, 60 N. Y. Supp. 371.

Where land is conveyed to partners individually, and not to the firm, paid for out of individual funds, the partnership pay-three years from this date, unless sooner terminated by the consent of the parties.

S. C. Baldwin. [Seal.]

R. A. Connolly. [Seal.]

A. Hull. [Seal.]

In presence of:—

(2) Correspondence antedating the co-partnership agreement between Hull and Connolly, as follows:

Escañaba, June 30th, '66.

R. A. Connolly, Esq.,

My Dear Sir:

Mr. Baldwin handed me a letter last evening which he had just received from you, in which you state that you have purchased engine and mill fixings, at a cost of sixty-three hundred dollars, cash down. The capital that it will require to start and stock the mill will be so large that my proportion of the same would exceed my cash fund, and therefore would be but a weak limb in the concern. It won't do for me to undertake what I can't fulfil. At the same time I will act in the same manner as though I was a partner. I have but a moment to write you. When I see you will explain to your satisfaction. There are plenty who will gladly take the chance. The timber land has been secured by Mr. Baldwin. I have not said a word to him as to how I was situated, as he might want, with you, I can reason and will go as far as able, say $1,500. (I think Clarke like would join.) Wait completed drawing piles on the 16. Hope to complete the merchant dock bef. Tuesday night. One word more. Now Mr. Connolly don't judge me harshly in this case. I want to see you and talk the whole matter over with you quietly. With kind regards, I remain respectfully yours,

A. Hull.

ing rent to the individual members for the undivided half of the property of which each was the owner, the property being entered on the books of the firm under the lease account, it is to be deemed as held by them as tenants in common, and not as partnership property, even though the firm paid for certain improvements and for taxes, assessments, insurance, and water rents. Bernheimer v. Schmid, 36 Misc. 456, 73 N. Y. Supp. 767, affirmed in 73 App. Div. 434, 77 N. Y. Supp. 138.

Where a widow holding under a will the "use and occupation" of certain property during widowhood, entered into a partnership to continue about fourteen months, and put into the partnership business the "use and occupation" of the property, she was held to have put in only an estate for years, and her life estate could not be considered partnership property. Hart v. Hart, 117 Wis. 639, 94 N. W. 890.

Where a retiring partner remained as 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

R. A. Connolly, Esq.,

Dear Sir:—

I had a long conversation with Mr. Baldwin on yesterday in regard to sawmill. He still thinks it a good investment, and I rather infer that he may think that. I have been boyish in the premises. At any rate I told him, as I told you, that I would still, if necessary, put in fifteen hundred dollars, but still I don't change my mind in regard to the results. We digested the matter I think carefully. His proposals are generous indeed, but are they sure he says so and so will be wanted, granted they will be? Will it be certain that they will be wanted from our mill. That is a point we want to be very certain about. For without the constant patronage of the company the mill would be a certain loss and a very small margin at best—but it is useless for me to repeat what we talked carefully over, when at Escañaba. I merely write you confidentially knowing that he has recently written you about the mill. If you say build the mill, why I am with you.

Yours respectfully,

A. Hull.

P. S. We have had splendid weather for driving. I think they will about complete the driving for main dock this week. I think it will look bad as an improvement that is the location.

(C. E.)

Peninsula Division (F. 125), Chicago & North Western Railway Co., Land Office.

Escañaba, August 30, 1866.

R. A. Connolly, Esq.,

Dear Sir:—

I have been so very busy since you left that I have not had the time to write you sooner. Have been urging the work along at lake for mill. Gourlay will be able to silent partner, left his share of the capital in the business, loaned the remaining partner money, and paid him a certain sum annually in lieu of personal services to the firm, and conveyed by quitclaim deed certain real estate to give the other commercial standing, taking a bond for reconveyance of the same at the end of five years, the intention clearly was that the real estate was not to become partnership assets, but was to remain the individual property of the retiring partner, and to be reconveyed to him without regard to any liability which might then exist against him, arising out of the partnership business. Here the intent must control. The property was not purchased with partnership funds, and, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, such property does not become partnership property, even though used for the partnership purposes. Clark v. Lyster, 84 C. C. A. 27, 155 Fed. 513. H. C. Sh.

commence the frame on Wednesday and wishes me to say to you that he would like a drawing showing the position of the machinery, when at work. Thinks it would enable him to get along with the work faster. The side track will be completed during the week. Have urged that part as far as I dare. In fact thus far the work has gone very satisfactorily, but at the same time I hope it will be convenient for you to be at Escanaba soon, as it is all important that the mill should be at work as soon as the 20 of September. You of course understand that part. I shall keep the work moving in your absence. There is one point that is plain to be seen, if the concern is made to pay for itself, we have got to put our shoulders to the wheel. I can see (a doubt) but I don't consider this the time to look back. We can and will make the mill pay. Mr. Baldwin has been very ready to do anything that he could to forward the work. We are looking very anxiously for the Home and will keep Chapman and men employed until it comes. He will have the house about completed by Tuesday night. In fact if he should remain there the balance of the week, he would be very useful, to the work generally. Lynnman will commence hauling long piles at once. As soon as he get enough on hand, will have them brought down. Mr. Baldwin is very much opposed to working on Sunday, and it can also be avoided, so soon as the side track is completed, which I think will be done in time. Hoping to see you soon at Escanaba, I remain, dear sir,

Respectfully,

A. Hull.

(3) Letter from Hartman to Connolly:

Negaunee, Nov. 19, '74.

R. A. Connolly, Esq.:—

Yours of 16th duly to hand, and am sorry it did not come sooner, as I consummated sale to Isaac on Monday last (as I led you to anticipate would be unless I heard from you by return mail or telegraph). But I rather think he will take your interest on the same terms and figures that he took ours (details of which you will observe in mine of 5th inst., i. e. approximately). And so I think Isaac will still do. As he uniformly has done just as we agreed upon, and his proposition was really based on including your interest (less of course the $700 you owe him). As to conferring with your attorneys, Ball & Black. If there is any particular or special point you wish me to ask, advise, and I will do so with pleasure. but as to this sale I see nothing to ask them, as we merely agree to give Isaac the mill property and the Negaunee yard free of encumbrances, and same title as S. C. Baldwin gave us, and we don't have to give that until he pays the notes, as we reserve that as collateral. So, if that is satisfactory to you advise at once and I will try and close you out before I leave. Isaac will be here next Monday or Tuesday.

[Signed] T. W. Hartman.

(4) Contracts between the Hartmans, Connolly, and Johnson, already referred to in statement of complainants' claims in their bill of complaint.

(5) Memorandum of effects attached to will of Alfred Hull:

"Memo. of effects and will of A. Hull, made at Chicago, Ill., February 22, 1871:

"Memorandum of bonds, mortgage, etc., belonging to A. Hull, with their Nos. for a memorandum in case they should be lost or stolen after this 21st day of February, 1871:

"Nos. of U. S. Gov. 5-20 bonds, viz.:

130986 for 1,000 dols.

130985 for 1,000 dols.

"Mem. & Nos. of stock by him in the First National Bank of Marquette, viz.:

5 shares of $100 Ea. Nos. 236.

5 shares of $100 Ea. Nos. 200.

4 shares of $100 Ea. Nos. 226.

"The premium on the above is worth 2, 100 dols.

"321 dols. deposited in the First National Bank of Marquette.

"A note against S. C. Baldwin and R. A. Connolly, dated Escanaba, June 1, 1867, for 560 38/100 dols.

"Also note against C. C. Elliott, dated Escanaba, May 9, 1867, for 900 dols.

"Also Amt. paid Emory per his order, dated Aug. 29, '67, for 50 dols.

"Also $25 paid for filing caveat on scrapers.

"Also a note from A. I. Smiley dated Escanaba, Nov. 18, '68, for 80 dols.

"Also a note from O. C. Hill, dated Escanaba, Sept. 1, 1870, for 3,000 dols.

"Also a due bill, dated Escanaba, March 1, '70 from O. D. Sloat for 40 dols.

"Amount deposited with Thos. Hull for safekeeping this 22d day of February 1871, is 5,000 dols.

"I have expressed to Judson Bank Ogdensburg to-day, Feby. 22, '71 7,000 dols. which will remain in the express office until my arrival.

"I have mortgages in T. B. Tate's possession, Ogdensburg, amounting to 4,000 dols.

"I hold a mortgage against T. B. Tate, Ogdensburg, for $5,000.

"Also I have the fol. amt. of real estate in Ogdensburg, viz., as per will of Chas. Hull, valued at 7,000 dols.

"I have 4 lots in Escanaba as per deeds recorded, worth 3,000 dolls.

"I have also an undivided one half of 6 lots in the town of Ishpeming, worth 400 dolls. each, amounting to 2,400 dolls.

"Also with R. A. Connolly I have an undivided one-third interest in 540 acres of Land in Delta Co., Mich., as per deeds recorded.

"Also I have an undivided one-half interest with S. H. Selden in 280 acres of land situated in Delta Co., Mich.

"Also 250 acres of land situated near Days River, Delta Co., Mich. valued at 5,000 dolls."

(6) Extracts from letter of Dodge, manager of sawmill, to Connolly, August, 1867, as follows:

"The company will have to buy more land, as there are no more white pine trees on the place where O'Brien has been cutting all summer."

Letter of Dodge to Connolly, dated September 2, 1867:

"I think Mr. Baldwin & Hull will go up to the mill to-morrow and go down to the camp and on the lines of the land to see what amount of trees you have there."

Hull never recorded patents to any of this land. The patent to the land involved in the case under consideration (the Gordon Case) was not recorded until November 2, 1876, two years after Hull's death, and nearly two years after the purchase by Johnson. The patent for the land involved in the Drake Case has never been recorded, and was not found among the papers of Alfred Hull when produced by the defendants. At the time of the purchase by Isaac Johnson, there were no instruments of any character recorded in the office of the register of deeds for Marquette county touching these lands, and the Johnson contracts were the first instruments of record in that office. The record shows: That Baldwin, Connolly, and Hull all occupied official relations to the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company; that that company was using in constructing bridges, ore docks, etc., a considerable amount of timber; and that they believed a profitable lumber and timber business might be done with the railway and the public generally. It shows that prior to the formation of the partnership, Baldwin and Connolly had purchased an engine and mill fixtures to the amount of $6,300, and that Hull's available capital at the time that the partnership was entered into was only $1,500. The partnership contract itself shows Hull to have had a one-third interest. This partnership continued only until June, 1867, and it was dissolved by reason of the criticism visited upon Hull by his railway superiors by reason of the fact that he had purchased timber for the use of the company from himself. It shows, further, that Baldwin was familiar with the method of entering government lands on military land warrants. Further, that, after Hull's retirement from the firm, he continued to purchase the timber manufactured by R. A. Connolly & Company, taken in part from the lands standing in his own name on behalf of the railway, upon one occasion going upon the lands and selecting the particular timber to be cut for the railway needs. Further, that he himself took one Hopkins, who was contemplating purchasing an interest in the concern, to one of the logging camps then in operation upon the lands, and introduced him to O'Brien as the one who would come there in charge, and Hopkins thereafter bought an interest in the firm; that later, when the Hartmans bought in, Hull had knowledge of the sale and continued to deal with the concern. The record further discloses that at this time the entire known value of the land in question consisted in its timber, and that Hull stood by and saw the land gradually divested of its value, purchasing the product for the railroad company without asserting any rights thereto. The contract between the Hartmans and Connolly and Johnson which in terms described and dealt with the lands in question was likewise made in his lifetime and recorded in the county of Marquette.

The defendants rely: (1) Upon the fact that the record title stands in Hull's name; (2) upon the tax receipt dated January 10, 1871, for the taxes of 1870, which was made out in the name of Alfred Hull and produced by the defendant; (3) the payment of certain taxes upon the lands by the estate of Alfred Hull, all made prior to the year 1888; and (4) declarations made by Hull in his lifetime which the defendants claim tend to show that Hull during his lifetime, and after his disposition of his interest in the copartnership, still claimed to be the owner of the lands in question.

It was the theory of the defendants that, by an agreement between Baldwin, Connolly, and Hull (as to which agreement there is no evidence in the record), the legal title to the lands entered in their individual names should be and remain in them as individuals, while the partnership had the right to remove the timber therefrom, and this theory seems to have been accepted by the learned circuit judge. His opinion is, in part, as follows: "The complainants cannot claim that they have by direct proof shown any express agreement that the lands in question were partnership property. They seem to rely upon circumstances, dealings, and acts of the parties. In order to establish the fact, these circumstances, dealings, and acts should in convincing weight be the equivalent of an express agreement. In other words, they should be so clear and unequivocal that they would amount to proof of the fact. . . . It seems to us that, in order for the complainants to prevail here, it ought to appear: (1) That the property was purchased with partnership funds for partnership purposes; and (2) that it was used by the partnership for its purposes. Both of these propositions should appear, and they should concur. Where the articles of partnership and the books of account fail to show the necessary facts, the inference that the lands held individually, or by partners as tenants in common, were in fact partnership property, can only be drawn from facts capable by no possibility of any other reasonable construction than that the land was purchased with partnership funds for partnership purposes; and if from the facts the inference may be reasonably against partnership ownership, that inference must be adopted. . . . By the record title these lands were the individual property of Alfred Hull. That the title could only pass from him by an agreement or contract of some kind. The complainants have failed to show such an agreement. No witness has been produced who testifies to any such understanding. The partnership agreement does not show any such understanding. It is silent as to any lands. The books of account do not show any such understanding. They are silent as to these lands. No dealing of the firm while Hull was a member shows such an understanding. No statement of any member of the firm to any third person of such an understanding is produced. It is not shown that this land was purchased with the firm's money, nor that the firm paid the taxes at any time."

In his conclusions and his application of the facts to the law, we believe that the learned circuit judge was in error. It is clear that no express agreement is necessary; but we are of opinion that it is not necessary that "these circumstances and dealings should in convincing weight be the equivalent of an express agreement." This is not the law. Whether or not land taken in the name of one or more partners is in fact partnership property always depends upon the intent of the parties and the understanding and design under which they acted. It is clear that an express agreement may show this intent; but it may also be established by an implied agreement. This implied agreement may be gathered by considering the general purpose of the parties, the nature of their business, and the manner in which they have dealt with the property in question. See Lindsay v. Race, 103 Mich. 28, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

61 N. W. 271, where this court said: "Whether lands held in the name of one partner or of both are to be deemed co-partnership property is generally a question of intent, to be gathered from the manner in which the members of the firm have dealt with them." In Way v. Stebbins, 47 Mich. 296, 11 N. W. 166, this court said: "The rule in this state has been well settled that property purchased with a design that it should become partnership property, and actually used in accordance with that design, must be regarded as firm assets." See also: Richards v. Manson, 101 Mass. 482; Arnold v. Wainwright, 6 Minn. 358, Gil. 241, 80 Am. Dec. 448.

In Ames v. Ames (C. C.) 37 Fed. 30, the court said: "And following the suggestions there made, it may be affirmed that no written agreement is necessary, that no parol express agreement even is necessary, for a court of equity to hold that real estate standing in the names of individual partners is partnership property, and it is enough if, from all the acts and conduct of the parties, the court can be satisfied that it was the thought and intent of the partners to treat it as partnership property."

. . . But it is said by counsel for defendants that the legal title was taken in the names of the individual partners; that the fact that the conveyances were so made indicates the intent to make the property individual rather than partnership property; and that, in the absence of an express agreement, in order to establish an implied agreement that this property, whose title was thus located in the individual partners, was to be partnership property, the fact shown must be such as to be necessarily inconsistent with the intent to leave the ownership where the title deeds put it. I cannot agree with counsel's view of the significance of the conveyances and the location of the legal title." In the same case the court quoted with approval the following from Morrison v. Mendenhall, 18 Minn. 232, Gil. 212: "A conveyance of real estate, or of an interest therein, must run to some person (a corporation being regarded in law as a person), and a partnership, as such, not being a person, conveyances of real estate for the use and benefit of a partnership have usually and aptly been made to the individual partners jointly, as tenants in common,"—citing cases.

In Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 201, 2 N. W. 497, the court said: "As the legal title to real property can only be held by a person, or a corporate entity, which is deemed such in law, it follows that the conveyance in question vested no legal title or estate in the grantee therein named, because of partnership, as such, is not recognized in law as a person." As therefore, under the laws of Minnesota, a conveyance to the partnership was not the proper mode of transferring title, it would be strange if the conveyance to the individual partners carried with it that significance and potency which counsel for defendants claim. On the contrary, it seems to me the rule is, as heretofore indicated, that, in the absence of express agreement, no one matter is conclusive upon the question of intention; and that, from all the facts, the court is to deduce and determine the real intent of the partners. See also Waterer v. Waterer, L. R. 15 Eq. 402, 21 Week. Rep. 508.

The court below said that it should appear: (1) That the property was purchased with partnership funds; and (2) that it was used by the partnership for its purposes. Both of these propositions should appear, and they should concur. "Where the articles of partnership and the book of account fail to show the necessary facts, the inference that the lands held individually, or by partners as tenants in common, were in fact partnership property, can only be drawn from facts capable by no possibility of any other reasonable construction than that the land was purchased with partnership funds for partnership purposes." In Merritt v. Dickey, 38 Mich. 41, Chief Justice Campbell, at page 44, said: "The law has always been settled in this state that real property which actually was designed to be, and which was in fact treated during the existence of the firm, as partnership assets, must be so regarded in equity, and the legal estate must be held by the heirs of a deceased partner as trustees for the equitable purposes of the firm."

We are of opinion that it is not necessary to show that the partnership property was purchased with partnership funds. Land standing in the name of an individual partner may have been contributed by him as his portion or a part of his portion to the firm assets. The true method of determining, as between the partners themselves, whether land standing in the name of the individuals is or is not to be treated as partnership property, is to ascertain from their conduct and course of dealing the understanding and intention of the partners themselves, which, when ascertained, should unquestionably control. What was the understanding of the partners? They needed land with timber upon it for the success of their enterprise. They were met at the outset with the fact that they could not enter those lands in the name of the copartnership. The lands selected had at the time no known value except the timber standing thereon. As to Baldwin and Connolly, there can be no doubt that they considered all the lands so entered as partnership assets. They purchased, or believed they purchased, from Hull his interest not alone in the mill, but in the lands. When they sold thereafter, they sold not alone an interest in the mill and the lands standing in their individual names, but likewise an interest in the lands standing in Hull's name, and finally, when Connolly and the Hartmans, who had purchased from Baldwin, sold to Johnson,—still in the lifetime of Hull,—they warranted title not alone to the lands held by themselves, but likewise to the lands standing in the name of Hull. We do not think it can be said that "the books of account fail to show the necessary facts." The books themselves at this late date could not be produced, and it is no more possible to say that they fail to disclose the necessary facts than it is to assert that they contain the necessary entries. That Hull's understanding and intention was the same as that of his partners—about which there can be no doubt—we think sufficiently appears. He was the least able of any of the three financially to sustain his proportion of the burden. The partnership contract shows that "the proceeds of lumber sold, after reserving the cost of sawing and furnishing, are to be applied, first, to the payment of bills," etc. His letter of August 30, 1886, to A. R. Connolly, contains the following: "I shall keep the work moving in your absence. There is one fact that is plain to be seen: If the concern is made to pay for itself, we have got to put our shoulders to the wheel."

He (Hull), as before noticed, stood by and saw the lands to which he had legal title divested of their value, and purchased the product thereof. He knew of the conveyance of Baldwin to Oliver, and of Baldwin to the Hartmans, which dealt not alone with the timber, but with the lands themselves, to which he had title. In 1871, four years after he had left the copartnership, in appending a list of his assets to his will, he did not include the lands in question, although he did include 540 acres of land in Delta county, an undivided one-third interest in which he owned with R. A. Connolly, and he did include a note of Baldwin and Connolly for $560.38, which he had received for his interest in the copartnership. The fact that he omitted to include these lands is conclusive in the mind of the court as to his understanding. It cannot be said that it was an oversight, because he included other lands which he owned with Connolly at the time. His attention thereby being directed to his relations with Connolly and their joint holdings, and by the mention of the note received from Connolly and Baldwin for the purchase of his interest in the co-partnership, his attention was particularly drawn to the partnership enterprise. His failure to include the lands in question in this suit therefore is equivalent to a declaration on his part that he had no interest therein.

A further significant fact is that, in the final account of his estate, the lands are not included, although the schedule attached to the final account contains twenty nine descriptions, and recites that it is a schedule of the real estate belonging to the estate of Alfred Hull, deceased, remaining undisposed of and subject to the order of the court. Opposed to this mass of evidence is the fact that the legal title stands in the name of Alfred Hull, and that the defendants produced a tax receipt for the year 1870 in his name. No testimony is introduced tending to show under what circumstances Hull paid the taxes, or whether in fact he did pay them. His business relations with Baldwin and Connolly appear to have continued to be of an intimate character even after the dissolution of the partnership, and, as shown by his will, he was interested with Connolly in other lands. His estate continued to pay taxes on the lands for some years, but discontinued payment prior to 1888. His declarations, made after the dissolution of the partnership, relied upon by the defendants, as to his continued ownership of the lands, when carefully examined, do not necessarily refer to the lands in question. He owned other lands in the vicinity referred to, and in making the statements relied upon may have had those in mind. In any event, they must be regarded as self-serving in character, and as such are entitled to little consideration from the court.

We think the case at bar should be considered, on the one hand, as if Baldwin and Connolly were the complainants, and, upon the other, as if Alfred Hull were the defendant. The complainants hold the title of Baldwin and Connolly, and the defendants rest upon the title of Alfred Hull. This being true, we are of opinion that the learned circuit judge, in relying upon the cases of Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 Mich. 80, and Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 393, 25 N. W. 321, was in error. In each of those cases the rights of third parties, strangers to the copartnership, were involved; whereas, in the case at bar, as above intimated, it is the rights of the partners themselves as between each other we are called upon to determine. It is clear to the court that, if Alfred Hull himself were standing as the defendant here, asking affirmative relief at the hands of the court against these complainants as the defendants at bar do, he would, under the state of facts set forth, be held to be estopped. While it is true that in this state title to real estate cannot be passed by estoppel (see Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384, 22 Am. Rep. 533), and such a defense cannot be relied upon in an action at law, nevertheless in equity the rule is different. In Hayes v. Livingston, supra, Chief Judge Cooley said: "Equity may always compel the owner of the title to release it where that is the proper redress for a fraud committed by him in respect to the title. . . . And when one asserts that the owner of land ought to surrender it to him because of the owner's fraudulent acts and conduct, it is manifest that his claim is only an equitable claim, set up and asserted against the legal claim. The one has the legal title, and the other seeks to overthrow it by providing a superior equity. This he may be able to do in a court of equity; but we cannot admit that at law the legal title is not entitled to prevail." Again, in Moran v. Palmer, 13 Mich. 367, the same judge said: "It is a well-settled principle of equity that if a man, having a title to an estate which is offered for sale, knowingly allows another to sell it to a purchaser who supposes the title to be good, without, at the time, asserting his title, he shall be bound by the sale, and neither he nor his privies shall be allowed to dispute its validity,"—citing many authorities.

After a careful examination of all the evidence in the record, we are of opinion: That the complainants show by a fair preponderance of the evidence that the lands in question, although entered in the name of Alfred Hull, were in fact always considered by him and his partners as partnership property; that they were dealt with during the lifetime of Hull with his knowledge as partnership property; that they were regarded by him, when he was engaged in so solemn an act as preparing his last will and testament, as belonging to his associates, and not to himself; and that they should now be so treated.

The decree of the court will be reversed, and a decree will be entered in this court in accordance with the prayer of the bill of complaint. A decree will likewise be entered in this court in the second case upon the footings of this opinion, in accordance with the prayer of the bill of complaint.

Grant, Montgomery, Hooker, Moore, and McAlvay, JJ., concur.

Ostrander, J., concurring:

I concur in the conclusions announced in the opinion of Mr. Justice Brooke. I base concurrence, mainly, upon the terms of the articles of partnership and the nature of the business contemplated. The business was sawing and selling lumber. Logs were required for sawing. They had to be, and were, acquired after the articles were executed. Whether they were bought from individuals, or were cut from lands, they had to be in some way paid for just as the sawmill and fixtures had to be paid for. I can refer that provision in the articles which requires that each partner shall "pay one third of the whole cost" to no particular item of expenditure. It was operative during the existence of the partnership, and, used as it is in connection with "losses," cannot be said to mean merely the cost of the mill. Presumptively, in equity, as at law, the holder of the legal title owns the land. It is established that these partners made separate entries or purchases of land, and it may be safely assumed that the lands entered by each were not of equal value,—did not involve the expenditure of the same amount of money. There was, however, but one purpose in buying them, and it is not easy to understand how the cost of the principal adventure could be shared equally and the profits divided equally, pursuant to the agreement, unless each paid one third of the cost of the lands. I think it must be presumed that the cost of the land in question was paid by the partnership.

The cases of Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 Mich. 80, and Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 393, 25 N. W. 321, are not controlling, for the reason that defendants did not acquire title in reliance upon the records of title.

Blair, Ch. J., concurs.

Petition for rehearing denied.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH L. MAY and Wife

v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Appt.

( 157 N. C. 416, 72 S. E. 1059.)

Trespass — fright — Liability.

1. One having a right to enter upon an-

Note. — Personal wrong as aggravation of damages for trespass on realty.

This note is supplemental to notes in 53 L.R.A. 631, and 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1034.

The point is also incidentally touched upon in the note in 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 66, covering the general subject of the right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright caused by a wrongful act.

An allegation of trespass to person may 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

other's property to remove telegraph poles is liable for injury to the wife of the one in possession thereof, frightened because of the loud, profane, boisterous, and lewd language employed by his servants upon the premises and towards her while in the execution of the work, and their entry of the dwelling without right.

Same — injury to wife — recovery by husband.

2. A man may recover damages from one who trespasses upon his property and frightens his wife to her injury, for the expenses imposed upon him and the deprivation of society and services of the wife because of the trespass.

Damages — punitive — wantonness.

3. Punitive damages may be allowed against persons who, after rightfully entering upon property to remove poles therefrom, use loud, profane, and lewd language in the presence of the wife of the occupant, and enter his dwelling without authority, frightening her to her injury.

(December 6, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Guilford County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for an unlawful trespass on plaintiffs' property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. King & Kimball, for appellant: Plaintiffs were not entitled to recover punitive damages.

Warren v. Coharie Lumber Co. 154 N. C. 39, 69 S. E. 685; Summers v. Keller, 152 Mo. App. 626, 133 S. W. 1180; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Dickens, 148 Ala. 480, 41 So. 469; Bradshaw v. Buchanan, 50 Tex. 492; Holmes v. Carolina C. R. Co. 94 N. C. 318; Ammons v. Southern R. Co. 140 N. C. 200, 52 S. E. 731; Stanford v. A. F. Messiek Grocery Co. 143 N. C. 419, 55 S. E. 815; 2 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. §§ 391-403; Hale, Damages, 207.

There is no liability resting upon defendant. No rights of the plaintiffs, or either of them, were invaded by the defendant; the wrong if any, was done to John May, and this wrong has been righted by settlement and release, and it cannot be that each and every one of his guests and boarders at the time in question can maintain separate suits.

be inserted in declaration in trespass q. c. f., as matter of aggravation. Waldo v. Waldo, 52 Mich. 94, 17 N. W. 710; Gilbert v. Pritchard, 41 Hun, 46; Russell v. Corn, 6 Mod. 127 (dictum).

Abusive conduct of a trespasser which causes one to become frightened and sick may be considered in aggravation of damages. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 54 Minn. 301, 53 N. W. 1134.

And in Gusdorff v. Duncan, 94 Md. 160.

White v. Sander, 168 Mass. 296, 47 N. E. 90; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88; Cleveland. C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stewart, 24 Ind. App. 374, 56 N. E. 917; Gaskins v. Runkle, 25 Ind. App. 584, 58 N. E. 740; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90, 1 Am. St. Rep. 654, 30 N. W. 435; Bucknam v. Great Northern R. Co. 76 Minn. 373, 79 N. W. 98.

If the servant, after doing that which he is employed to do, does something else which he is not employed to do at all, the master is not responsible for what he does.

Daniel v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 130 N. C. 523, 67 L.R.A. 455, 48 S. E. 816, 1 Ann. Cas. 718; Jackson v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 139 N. C. 353, 70 L.R.A. 738, 51 S. E. 1015; Marlowe v.

Bland, 154 N. C. 140, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 69 S. E. 752; Sawyer v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 142 N. C. 1, 115 Am. St. Rep. 716, 54 S. E. 793, 9 Ann. Cas. 440; Roberts v. Southern R. Co. 143 N. C. 180, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 55 S. E. 509, 10 Ann. Cas. 375; Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co. 146 N. C. 47, 59 S. E. 545; Hunter v. Southern R. Co. 152 N. C. 682, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 851, 136 Am. St. Rep. 854, 68 S. E. 237; Redditt v. Singer Mfg. Co. 124 N. C. 100, 32 S. E. 392; Moore v. Cohen, 128 N. C. 345, 38 S. E. 919; Willis v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. 120 N. C. 508, 26 S. E. 784.

Messrs. R. C. Strudwick and F. P. Hobgood, Jr., for appellees:

The defendant is liable.

Jackson v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 139 N. C. 347, 70 L.R.A. 738, 51 S. E.

50 Atl. 574, it was held that in trespass q. c. f. the jury might award punitive damages, where defendants conducted themselves in such a violent and angry manner, and used such abusive and insulting language, that plaintiff was put in bodily fright and alarm.

In estimating damages for unlawful eviction in cold weather, unnecessary suffering occasioned may be considered. Raynor v. Nims, 37 Mich. 34, 26 Am. Rep. 493.

In Newman v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 2 Mo. App. 402, where a trespass was persisted in after remonstrance, and with threats of arrest if interfered with, and occupants of the land were terrified and disturbed and their lives endangered by blasting with gunpowder, it was held that these circumstances could be considered aggravation of damages.

And in Koester v. Cowan, 37 Ill. App. 252, where an altercation arose between an owner of land and one committing trespass, and the latter called a police officer and had the former arrested, the court held that the jury were warranted in assessing more than the actual damages to the land.

In Stevens v. Stevens, 96 Ga. 374, 23 S. E. 312, it was held that damages for wrongful expulsion of a widow from a house occupied by the husband at the time of his death, and held by her until assignment of dower, should include damages to her health and those referable to pain and suffering such as were the natural and probable result of the wrongful act of the trespasser.

Where trespass is wilful, malicious, and reckless, and characterized by acts of indignity and humiliation, "it is a proper case for exemplary damages, and one in which the law should afford substantial protection against such outrages in the way of liberal damages, that the public tranquillity may be preserved by saving the necessity of a resort to violence as the only means of redress." West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Morrison, A. & A. Co. 160 Ill. 288, 43 N. E. 393.

Where one enters upon the close of another, and affixes to the house a malicious and insulting handbill, calculated to bring reproach, contempt, and infamy upon him, and to disgrace him in the eyes of his own family, such circumstances may be taken into consideration in aggravation of damages in an action of trespass. Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. L. 518.

And in Bonsall v. McKay, 1 Houst. (Del.) 520, which was an action of trespass against a landlord for breaking and entering the close, and unlawfully turning the tenant out of possession, and there was evidence that defendant had taken hold of plaintiff to put him off, which attempt was resisted, and a scuffle ensued, the court, in its charge to the jury, said that where there are circumstances of aggravation attending the trespass on the part of defendant, the jury may in their discretion award exemplary damages.

Compensatory damages in an action of trespass for breaking and entering a house to remove a gas meter may embrace damages for injury, insult, and invasion of privacy. Reed v. New York & R. Gas Co. 93 App. Div. 453, 87 N. Y. Supp. 810.

And so, in Bouillon v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 148 Mo. App. 462, 129 S. W. 401, where an agent of defendant gas company wrongfully entered a flat to read the gas meter, and used such violent language that it frightened the occupant and caused her to have a miscarriage, it was held that in an action for trespass recovery could be had for the miscarriage resulting from the fright, and the mental anguish caused by the trespass, though agent did not know that plaintiff was confined because of pregnancy.

In Ford v. Schliessman, 107 Wis. 479, 83 N. W. 761, where the evidence showed that defendant, without plaintiff's consent and against her protest, entered the house in the nighttime, during the absence of plaintiff's husband, and made indecent demonstrations, putting plaintiff in great fear and frightening her, it was held that plaintiff might recover for such damages as she sustained by reason of such invasion of her possession and rights, even though the evi-

1015; Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co. 146 N. C. 47, 59 S. E. 545; Hayes v. Southern R. Co. 141 N. C. 195, 53 S. E. 847; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1286; Tiffany, Agency, 270-273; Waalder v. Great Northern R. Co. 18 S. D. 420, 70 L.R.A. 731, 112 Am. St. Rep. 794, 100 N. W. 1097; Cook v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 333, 38 S. E. 925; Sawyer v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 142 N. C. 1, 115 Am. St. Rep. 716, 54 S. E. 793, 9 Ann. Cas. 440; Rosecranes v. Iowa & M. Teleph. Co. 65 Iowa, 444, 21 N. W. 769; Marlowe v. Bland, 154 N. C. 140, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 69 S. E. 752; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Deck, 102 Md. 669, 62 Atl. 958; Collins v. Wise, 190 Mass. 206, 76 N. E. 657; Magar v. Hammond, 183 N. Y. 387, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1038, 76 N. E. 474; DeHaven v. Hennessey Bros. & E. Co. 69 C. C. A. 620, 137 Fed. 472; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Brantley, 107 Ala. 683, 18 So. 321; Reed v. New York & R. Gas Co. 93 App. Div. 453, 87 N. Y. Supp. 810; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Hubbard, 85 Ala. 179, 7 Am. St. Rep. 35, 4 So. 607; Smith v. Webster, 23 Mich. 298; Luttrell v. Hazen, 3 Sneed, 20; Lesch v. Great Northern R. Co. 93 Minn. 435, 101 N. W. 965; Andrus v. Howard, 36 Vt. 248, 84 Am. Dec. 680; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Satterfield, 34 Ill. App. 386; Van Siclen v. Jamaica Electric Light Co. 45 App. Div. 1, 61 N. Y. Supp. 210; 26 Cyc. 1532, note, 93; Barden v. Felch, 109 Mass. 154; McClung v. Dearborne, 134 Pa. 396, 8 L.R.A.

204, 19 Am. St. Rep. 708, 19 Atl. 698; Grant v. Singer Mfg. Co. 190 Mass. 489, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 567, 77 N. E. 480; Moore v. Camden & T. R. Co. 74 N. J. L. 498, 122 Am. St. Rep. 399, 65 Atl. 1021.

Punitive damages may be recovered.

Duncan v. Stalcup, 18 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. L.) 441; Wylie v. Smitherman, 30 N. C. (8 Ired. L.) 239; Gilreath v. Allen, 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 69; Sowers v. Sowers, 87 N. C. 307; Hussey v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. 98 N. C. 34, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312, 3 S. E. 923; Waters v. Greenleaf-Johnson Lumber Co. 115 N. C. 656, 20 S. E. 718; Daniel v. Petersburg R. Co. 117 N. C. 592, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 485, 23 S. E. 327; Hansley v. Jamesville & W. R. Co. 117 N. C. 565, 32 L.R.A. 551, 53 Am. St. Rep. 600, 23 S. E. 443; Remington v. Kirby, 120 N. C. 320, 26 S. E. 917; Strother v. Aberdeen & A. R. Co. 123 N. C. 197, 31 S. E. 386; Pierce v. North Carolina R. Co. 124 N. C. 83, 44 L.R.A. 316, 32 S. E. 399; Redditt v. Singer Mfg. Co. 124 N. C. 100, 32 S. E. 392; Brendle v. Spencer, 125 N. C. 474, 34 S. E. 634; Cook v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 333, 38 S. E. 925; Jackson v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 139 N. C. 347, 70 L.R.A. 738, 51 S. E. 1015; Hayes v. Southern R. Co. 141 N. C. 195, 53 S. E. 847; Brame v. Clark, 148 N. C. 364, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1033, 62 S. E. 418, 16 Ann. Cas. 73; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1286; Tiffany, Agency, dence was insufficient to show any direct assault upon the plaintiff, or any attempt to have carnal intercourse with her.

And in Loftus v. Maxey, 73 Tex. 242, 11 S. W. 272, where there was a forcible entry of a house in the absence of the husband, it was held that a charge to the jury that "if the manner of defendants, or either of them, in the taking, was by threats, or in an insolent, overbearing, and insulting manner, done in such a way as would naturally outrage the feelings of plaintiffs, then you will find for plaintiffs, for such an amount as you may deem proper and adequate; for if you so find the facts, the law allows the jury to affix such an amount as in the opinion of the jury such wrongful acts call for," was correct.

In Weyer v. Wegner, 58 Tex. 539, where there was an entry upon premises without warrant of law, and with no probable cause to believe that stolen property was secreted thereon, and over the protest of the plaintiff, with avowed purpose of searching for stolen property, it was held that it was proper to return a verdict for exemplary damages. The court said: "There is perhaps no man, unless it be one wanting in all honorable feeling, who would not feel that such an entry upon his premises, for such a purpose, was an insult most grievous in its character, and, in the absence of cause 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) therefor, most vexatious and wanton. No greater indignity could be heaped upon a man than to enter his premises with a charge that thereon was property acquired by crime, and that the presence of the intruder was for the purpose of keeping guard over the owner of the premises, to prevent him from concealing it; thus bearing the accusation that the owner was the criminal, or ready to assist some other person who was."

But in Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 Pac. 56, it was said that while, in an action for trespass, such circumstances of aggravation as would entitle to punitive damages might be alleged, yet they must be pleaded in such a manner that there may be no ambiguity or uncertainty that they are set forth solely for the purpose of establishing such claim. If they are pleaded in such a manner as would be proper in an action brought to recover damages other than those for trespass, the complaint will be subject to demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action.

And in Ostrom v. San Antonio, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 683, 77 S. W. 829, it was held that vexation, humiliation, and annoyance cannot be taken as elements of damages against a city for trespassing upon the lands of another.

J. H. B.

270, 273; Fell v. Northern P. R. Co. 44 Fed. 248.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover damages for a trespass on land. The plaintiffs, husband and wife, alleged that the servants of the defendant entered upon the land of John May, where they were living, for the purpose of removing telegraph poles, and, while so engaged in their employer's business, unlawfully and wrongfully violated the rights of the plaintiffs, as occupants of the land, by entering their home, and accompanied their act of trespass by menaces of violence and the use of profane and vulgar words, and by other conduct and acts, which were unprovoked and nothing less than inexcusable, if not wanton. The defendants justify upon the ground that they had the right to enter in order to remove certain telegraph poles within the right of way of the North Carolina Railroad Company, or its lessee, the Southern Railway Company, and that John May, the owner of the land, licensed them to enter, and that, if they did not enter lawfully by his permission, they had the lawful right to enter and remove the poles by reason of the permission of the railway company to the telegraph company to do so, the locus in quo being within the right of way of the railway company.

We will assume, for the sake of the discussion, that the defendant by its servants entered lawfully upon the land, and yet this did not excuse them for what was done after their entry was made. The servants of the defendant were about their master's business when they committed the act of trespass, and they apparently did it for the purpose of advancing his interests, while doing the work assigned to them by him, in the prosecution of that work, and within the scope of their authority. There were many exceptions taken to matters of evidence, and others were addressed to collateral questions, and all of them subsidiary to the main point. (1) Was the defendant, by its servants, guilty of a trespass upon the plaintiffs' premises? (2) If so, were the plaintiffs entitled to recover punitive damages in addition to those which are compensatory?

The defendant's lawful right of entry upon the land did not authorize it or its servants to do so in a violent and insulting manner, regardless of the rights of others. We do not think that we venture anything in asserting this to be a general statement of the law. There was evidence in the case to the following effect: That the servants of the defendant during the day in question, and while on the premises of John May engaged in the work already described, indulged in loud, profane, and boisterous language, and sang lewd and vulgar songs, to the terror of the feme plaintiff and others; that they yelled at the feme plaintiff and others in the house; that they invaded the house, and at one time seized a guitar which was there, and played on it, and sang ribald songs; that Stern, defendant's principal foreman in charge of said crews, went to the well near by, and, facing the open door of the feme plaintiff's bedroom, yelled at her and sang lewd and vulgar songs in her immediate presence and hearing; and that the noise and tumult, the profanity and vulgar songs of defendant's servants throughout the day, and while engaged in moving the poles in question, were so great, loud, and boisterous as to be heard by many people in the neighborhood; that in the morning, standing on the railroad tracks, Joseph L. May, one of the plaintiffs, told Stern and May, the two foremen of defendant in charge of said crews, of the bad and precarious health of his wife, and that she was in the house, and asked them not to go upon the property of his father; that Stern replied that he had orders from the defendant to set the poles on John May's land, and that he would set them there regardless of witness's or any other man's wife, and that he did not "give a damn." There was further evidence as to the injury suffered by the feme plaintiff, resulting in a state of unconsciousness followed by great suffering and permanently impaired health, and as to the damages suffered by the male plaintiff in consequence of the defendants' wrong. The defendants entered at first lawfully, but afterwards abused their right of entry while in the prosecution of their work, by acts and conduct which were plainly in violation of the rights of the plaintiffs, who were then in the lawful and peaceable possession of the premises. Conduct more reprehensible, under the circumstances, could not well be imagined. The feme plaintiff was in a delicate condition, and, in consequence of the violent and insulting manner in which the defendants invaded her home, and even her private apartments, her health was greatly impaired. Defendant answers that its servants did not know of her physical condition, but this is no excuse. Their tortious acts were the immediate, natural, and proximate cause of her injuries. So far as the liability of the defendant for this wrong is concerned, it is not necessary that it should have contemplated the particular injury which the wrongful act produced, but it is liable if the wrong was of such a character as to be injurious in its natural and proximate consequences. It can make no difference in the view of the law whether it hurts one part or another of the person who is injured. The law will not excuse a defendant if, in committing the wrongful act, he aimed at the foot to wound, and killed by striking the head or the heart. His wrong is the same in law, and is actionable, though he may have missed his mark. He is in such a case presumed to have intended the natural and probable consequences of his act. Drum v. Miller, 135 N. C. 204, 65 L.R.A. 890, 102 Am. St. Rep. 528, 47 S. E. 421. In that case, distinguishing negligent from wilful torts, we said: "In the case of wilful or intentional wrongdoing, we have an act intended to do harm, and harm done by it, and the inference of liability from such an act may seem a plain matter under the general rule of liability, and, assuming that no just cause of exception to it is present, 'it is clear law that the wrongdoer is liable to make good the consequences, and it is likewise obvious to common sense that he ought to be. He went about to do harm, and, having begun an act of wrongful mischief, he cannot stop the risk at his pleasure, nor confine it to the precise objects he laid out, but must abide it fully and to the end.' The principle is commonly expressed in the maxim that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts." It will be seen from this quotation that in the case of a wilful tort the wrongdoer is responsible for the direct and proximate consequences of his act, without regard to his intention to produce the particular injury. But the matter is made clearer, and the ruling in that case more pertinent to the question now under consideration, by what the court said later, at page 214 of 135 N. C.: "It may be stated as a general rule that when one does an illegal or mischievous act which is likely to prove injurious to another, or when he does a legal act in such a careless or improper manner that he should foresee, in the light of attending circumstances, that injury to a third person may naturally and probably ensue, he is answerable in some form of action for all of the consequences which may directly and naturally result from his conduct. It is not necessary that he should actually intend to do the particular injury which follows, nor, indeed, any injury at all, because the law in such cases will presume that he intended to do that which is the natural result of his conduct in the one case and in the other he will be presumed to intend that which, in the exercise of the care of a prudent man, he should see will be followed by injurious consequences."

But it seems to us that this case in all of its essential features is like that of Jack- son v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 139 N. C. 347, 70 L.R.A. 738, 51 S. E. 1015, and must be governed by it. The language there used is so directly applicable to the facts disclosed by the evidence in this case, that we cannot more clearly state the law which we think should determine the question now presented, than by repeating what we then said: "The jury have found that the defendant by its servant caused the plaintiff to be unlawfully arrested for the purpose of putting him out of the way, so that its agents and servants might erect telephone and telegraph poles on his land. If this is not an act done in the course of the employment, and in furtherance of the master's business for his benefit and advantage, it would be hard to conceive of one which would come under that class. The case is in principle like that of Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1286, which has at least twice been approved by this court. Hussey v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. 98 N. C. 34, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312, 3 S. E. 923; Redditt v. Singer Mfg. Co. 124 N. C. 100, 32 S. E. 392. In Harris's Case the defendants by their servants committed, it is true, a direct and violent trespass upon lands in order to carry on their master's work, and in doing so shot and injured the plaintiff; but is there any difference in law between the two cases? It is not the quality of the act that determines a master's liability, but the fact that it is done by his implied direction; that is, within the scope of the servant's authority, in the course of his employment, and in furtherance of his master's interests. Daniel v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 136 N. C. 517, 67 L.R.A. 455, 48 S. E. 816, 1 Ann. Cas. 718; Daniel v. Petersburg R. Co. 117 N. C. 592, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 485, 23 S. E. 327; Kelly v. Durham Traction Co. 133 N. C. 418, 45 S. E. 826; Lovick v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 129 N. C. 427, 40 S. E. 191; Williams v. Gill, 122 N. C. 967, 29 S. E. 879; Pierce v. North Carolina R. Co. 124 N. C. 83, 44 L.R.A. 316, 32 S. E. 399; and Cook v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 333, 38 S. E. 925. It was in this case a question for the jury under proper instructions from the court, whether McManus in arresting the plaintiff was performing his master's business, or was engaged in some pursuit of his own. Hussey v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. and Daniel v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. supra; Tiffany Agency, 271. The court charged fully and correctly in respect to this matter." And so in the case at bar the court instructed the jury fully upon the facts and the law, in a clear and able charge, which surely could have left no doubt in the minds of the jurors as to what the rights of the parties were under the law and upon the facts as they might find them to be.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The fact that the defendant's servants did not commit an assault or a battery upon the plaintiffs cannot change the result. They unlawfully trespassed upon their property, and, if their other acts did not, by themselves, constitute an actionable wrong, the jury could at least consider them in aggravation of damages. We held in Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778, that the general principles of the law of torts support a right of action for physical injuries resulting from either a wilful or a negligent act, none the less strongly because the physical injury consists of a wrecked nervous system instead of wounded or lacerated limbs, as those of the former class are frequently much more painful and enduring than those of the latter. Approving what is said in the text-books, Justice Brown, who wrote an able and learned opinion for the court in that leading case, thus summarized the result of our investigations: "A recent writer on the subject trenchantly says: 'To deny recovery against one whose wilful or negligent tort has so terribly frightened a person as to cause his death, or leave him through life a suffering and helpless wreck, and permit a recovery for exactly the same wrong which results instead in a broken finger, is a travesty upon justice. The reasoning which can lead to such a result must be cogent, indeed, if it shall be entitled to respect.' Case and Comment, August, 1906. A text writer of repute says: 'The preferable rule on this subject is, in our opinion, that if a nervous shock is a natural and proximate consequence of a negligent act, and physical injuries result directly from the mental disturbance, there should be a recovery for the anguish of mind and its consequent physical ills, irrespective of contemporaneous bodily hurt.' Watson, Damages for Personal Injuries, § 405." This is a sufficient answer to the contention that there must have been some direct physical injury to the plaintiffs, in order to render the acts of the defendant's servants tortious in a legal sense, and consequently actionable.

The Howland Case also answers another position of the defendant, that the husband of the feme plaintiff cannot recover for the wrong done to his wife, and in these words: "It is contended that the husband has sustained no injury, and as to him the motion to nonsuit should have been allowed. It seems to be well settled that where the injury to the wife is such that the husband receives a separate loss or damage, as where he is put to expense or is deprived of the society or the services of his wife, he is entitled to recover therefor, and he may sue in his own name. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 861, and cases cited. In this case there is no evidence of an outlay of money in medical bills and other actual expenses, and the court so charged the jury, and directed them to allow nothing on that account. His Honor correctly instructed the jury to allow nothing because of any mental suffering upon the part of the husband. There was, however, evidence as to the loss of the services of the wife, and that the injury inflicted was of such a character as to deprive the husband of her society, services, aid, and comfort. The court further charged that, if the injuries are permanent, the husband could also recover such sum as will be a fair compensation for the future diminished capacity to labor on the part of the wife. This instruction we think is correct and supported by authority. 6 Thomp. Neg. §§ 7341, 7342. It is impossible to lay down a rule by which the value of her services and the loss of the wife's society can be exactly measured in dollars and cents. All the judge can do is to direct the jury to allow such reasonable sum as will fairly compensate the husband therefor, under all the circumstances of the case." It may be added that in this case defendant's servants trespassed upon the husband's property,—his home. He had possession, and they entered after being forbidden to do so.

As to punitive damages, the rule is well settled that when the wrong is wilful or wanton or done maliciously, or accompanied by acts of oppression, insult, or brutality, exemplary damages may be added by the jury, to punish the offender as an example to others, and to vindicate justice. Hale, Damages, p. 209. The subject is fully considered in the recent case of Saunders v. Gilbert, 156 N. C. 463, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 72 S. E. 610; the facts being substantially like those in this case, and we refer to that decision without further discussion of this exception as to the correctness of the court's ruling that the jury could in their discretion allow punitive damages.

We have considered the case as if the defendant's right to enter upon the land as part of the right of way of the North Carolina Railroad Company, by its permission, was clear, though the concession was made only for the sake of argument. It had no right, by itself or its servants, to abuse the license or privilege by grossly violating the rights of others in peaceable possession of the land, and especially it may be said the defendant by its servants did not have the lawful right to enter the home of plaintiffs in the manner adopted by them. Their entry upon the premises had been forbidden and was opposed, though not forcibly, by the owner and occupants of the land. The acts complained of were committed in an effort to overcome this opposition, by over-awing the plaintiffs, in order that defendant's servants might proceed unmolested in the prosecution of their master's business. The other exceptions require no special consideration.

No error.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

ALEXANDER MCKENZIE, Resp't.,

v.

STEVEN GUSSNER et al., App'ts.

(— N. D. —, 134 N. W. 33.)

Party — equitable interest — quieting title — omission — effect.

1. It is not ground for nonsuit that persons having equitable interests, other than Headnotes by Goss, J.

Note. — Occupying claimants act; right to allowance for improvements made before acquiring color of title.

This note is confined to cases directly involving and passing upon the right of an occupant of land to compensation, after his title has been declared invalid, for improvements made upon the land, as affected by the fact that they were made before the acquiring of the color of title under which he claims,—which question has arisen only, as in McKENZIE v. GUSSNER, under various so-called "occupying claimant" or "betterment" or "improvement" acts.

As to rights in respect to compensation for improvements on land, made in good faith, under an oral contract or gift, see note to Luton v. Badham, 53 L.R.A. 337.

As to the right of one holding under an invalid tax deed to be reimbursed for improvements, see note to Parker v. Daly, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 549.

Occupying claimant laws, being in derogation of the common law must be strictly construed. 22 Cyc. 13.

Under the Arkansas betterment act, requiring that the occupant must have had peaceable possession at the time the improvements were made, under color of title and under belief that he was the owner of the land, he cannot recover for improvements made before he acquired his color of title. Anderson v. Williams, 59 Ark. 144, 26 S. W. 818.

And under a section of the Minnesota occupying claimants act, providing that "where any person, under color of title in fee, and in good faith, has peacefully taken possession of any land for which he has given a valuable consideration, . . . neither such person, nor his heirs, represenownership, in real property, title to which is sought to be quieted, are not made parties plaintiff, when such persons participate in the action, through the plaintiff, to an extent that the decree will bind them, equally with the parties to the action, when the action is maintained by the record owner as the real party in interest.

Betterments — made before color of title — effect.

2. A claim for betterments to realty by permanent improvements made thereon is not established by proof of the placing of permanent improvements on the real property of another under no claim, right, or title thereto; nor can the purchase, several years thereafter, of a void but purported title, under which to claim color of title to such realty, permit the allowance of such a claim for betterments, under the provisions of § 7526 of the Code. The good-faith claim of title to the realty must precede the making of such improvements; otherwise the claimant for betterments is not holding realty under color of title, and adversely to the plaintiff from whom he seeks recovery for such improvements made.

(December 11, 1912.)

tatives, or assigns, shall be ejected . . . until compensation is tendered him or then for all improvements," an occupant must have been in possession under color of title in fee, at the time of making the improvements, and an occupying claimant is not entitled, under the statute, to compensation for improvements made before he had acquired color of title. Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 372, 15 N. W. 665.

A mere squatter or trespasser who has made improvements without any color of title cannot recover for them upon the ground that he afterward acquired such color of title. Ibid.

Likewise, under a section of the same act providing that when permanent improvements have been made by a defendant or those under whom he claims, "holding under color of title adversely to the plaintiff, in good faith," the value thereof shall be allowed against the damages of the plaintiff for the use of the property,—it must appear that the improvements were made in good faith while holding under color of title, and if made without color of title, the fact that the occupant afterwards acquired color of title will not be sufficient. McLellan v. Omott, 37 Minn. 157, 33 N. W. 326.

So, under the Kentucky occupying claimant law, an occupant who has seated and improved land without any claim thereto, either in law or equity, founded upon any public record, is not entitled to compensation for the improvements by reason of his having purchased a claim, or identified his possession with a claim of record, since the commencement of an ejectment action against him. Chiles v. Patterson, 1 A. K. Marsh. 444; Young v. Murray, 3 A. K. Marsh. 58.

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Morton County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to quiet title to certain real estate. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Melvin A. Hildreth, for appellants: Simpson, McDonald, and the Todd Land Company, or either of them, are not bound by this action. To insert their names or the names of any of them as parties plaintiff would have been erroneous.

Liebmann v. McGraw, 3 Wash. 520, 28 Pac. 1107; Wilson v. Kiesel, 9 Utah, 397, 35 Pac. 488; Wood v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 96 Mich. 437, 56 N. W. 8.

On petition for rehearing.

Plaintiff is in no position to question the value of the improvements, because he is guilty of unmistakable laches which defeats his rights to the premises.

Stocking v. Hanson, 35 Minn. 207, 28 N. W. 507; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 890; McQuiddy v. Ware, 20 Wall. 14, 22 L. ed. 311; School Dist. No. 8 v. Lynch, 33 Conn. 334; Turpin v. Saunders, 32 Gratt. 27; Samuels v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 210; Kentucky Coal & Timber Development Co. v. Kentucky Union Co. 101 C. C. A. 93, 187 Fed. 945; Godden v. Kimmell, 99 U. S. 201, 25 L. ed. 431; Young v. Engdahl, 18 N. D. 167, 119 N. W. 169; Brown v. Comonow, 17 N. D. 84, 114 N. W. 728; Conrad v. Adler, 13 N. D. 199, 100 N. W. 722."

Messrs. George P. Flannery and W. H. Stutsman, for respondent:

The measure of the sum to be allowed for improvements is the increased value of the premises to the landowner, not the cost of the improvements.

Cleland v. Clark, 123 Mich. 179, 81 Am. St. Rep. 161, 81 N. W. 1080; Haymond v. Camden, 48 W. Va. 463, 37 S. E. 642; Glass v. Abbott, 6 Bush, 622; Dunn v. Dunn, — Tenn. —, 51 S. W. 119.

Goss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff brings this action to determine adverse claims and quiet title to several hundred lots in additions to Mandan. Defendants Gussner assert an interest to cer-

And under the Tennessee statute providing that a person claiming land under a lawful entry shall be entitled to compensation for improvements which he has made thereon, if he is subsequently dispossessed by due process of law, or otherwise put out of possession without his consent, such a claimant is not entitled to compensation for improvements made previous to his entry. Townsend v. Shipp, Cooke (Tenn.) 294.

On the other hand, under the Ohio statute providing that "any occupying claimant, being in quiet possession of land from which he can show a plain and connected title in law or equity," must be paid the value of all lasting and valuable improvements made by him or the person under whom he holds, before he can be evicted by any person setting up and proving an adverse and better title, the court said, in Shaler v. Magin, 2 Ohio, 235: "We discover nothing in the statute that limits the claim of the occupying claimant to a compensation for such improvements as were made after the commencement of his title. . . . There is nothing in the law that excludes a right to receive pay for improvements made by the tenant, or the person under whom he claims, at any time before the commencement of the suit."

This statement, however, seems to have been largely obiter, having been made "independent of this consideration," that it appeared that an entry had been made on the land in dispute, under which the defendant took possession and made the improvements in question, but which, after the improvements had been made, was withdrawn; and that about the same time another entry was made on the same land by the person under whom the defendant claimed in this 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

action,—upon which facts, the court said: "The defendant had an equitable title of record at the time he commenced his improvements, which continued till the improvements were completed. His possession was not interrupted by the withdrawal and re-entry of the warrant, nor were the rights of the plaintiff in any manner affected by that circumstance." And further: "It is not necessary now to decide that an unsuccessful claimant must in all cases be entitled to pay for improvements made before the commencement of his title, although the statute does not contain anything expressly prohibiting it, yet a case might arise accompanied by such circumstances as would take it without both the letter and equity of the statute. All we mean to say is that this is not a case of that character." Ibid.

But in Davis v. Powell, 13 Ohio, 308, citing Shaler v. Magin, supra, it was distinctly held that a person who has taken possession of property in good faith, though under no color of title whatever, and who subsequently acquires such title as brings him within the statute, is, upon eviction by superior title, entitled to compensation for such valuable improvements as he may have made upon the land while in possession, before as well as after acquiring color of title, the court saying: "The equity of the statute embraces all improvements made in the honest belief of ownership, if at the time of rendition of judgment the occupant is in possession under such title as brings him within the meaning of the statute."

And under the Kansas occupying claimant act, adopted from that of Ohio, the provisions of which are expressly for the benefit of any person in possession of and holding any land under any sale for taxes autain lots, and counterclaim, under § 7526, Revised Codes 1905, for permanent improvements placed thereon by them. The trial court allowed defendants a recovery, aggregating $1,037.99, consisting of taxes paid and $500 for a stone foundation on lots 7 and 8, $450 for the value of a dwelling house on lots 14 and 15, and $400 for a barn upon lots 1 and 2, of the tracts in dispute. The amount of recovery was adjudged a lien upon the premises, and, subject thereto, title was quieted in plaintiff, conditional upon the payment within a limited time of such allowance for betterments. From this judgment, defendants appeal, demanding a retrial of all issues of law and fact, and assigning as error "that portion of the third finding of fact, wherein the value of dwelling house on lots 14 and 15 is fixed at $450, and the value of the barns and fences on lots 1 and 2 is fixed at the value of $400." To this respondent contends that nothing should be allowed for the stone foundation in question, nor for the improvements of lots 1 and 2, nor for taxes. We are satisfied, however, that these allowances as to foundation and taxes were proper, and not excessive, and eliminate them from further consideration. The inquiry remaining concerns improvements, consisting of a barn on lots 1 and 2 and a dwelling house and appurtenances on lots 14 and 15, with an additional question of law involved in the court's refusal to dismiss the action, on motion made at the close of the case, for nonjoinder of parties plaintiff.

We will first consider this last question. Plaintiff derails title from the patentee, and has had record title since 1882 to an undivided two-thirds interest in said property. Prior to the commencement of this action, through various channels, the remaining undivided one-third interest was vested by deed of record in plaintiff. Charles McDonald and William Simpson have a joint unrecorded interest with plaintiff in all this property, by reason of advancements for taxes paid and expenses incurred and work done by them, aggregating $2,500 or $3,000. Plaintiff, McDonald, and Simpson have an understanding, whereby, at the termination of these proceedings, and dependent on final judgment, a division of the property or adjustment of interests therein will be had. And to evidence the same, and to secure the advancements made, McKenzie executed and delivered an instrument, in form a deed of a one-third interest in the property, to Simpson, prior to the commencement of this action, and pending trial said deed was returned for correction, and other such deed to Simpson and McDonald, in lieu thereof, issued by a land company in whose hands McKenzie had placed these property matters, but such deed is subject to correction after adjustment of expenses of the litithorized by the laws of the state, if his possession has been obtained without fraud or collusion, an occupant not guilty of fraud in taking possession of and improving land, and who, at the time of the trial of the action in which his title is declared defective, is in possession under a tax deed, is entitled to the benefit of the statute, and may recover for the improvements made before he obtained this deed. Stebbins v. Guthrie, 4 Kan. 353.

Under the Iowa occupying claimant statute, providing that "where an occupant of land has color to title thereto, and in good faith has made any valuable improvements thereon, and is afterwards found not to be the rightful owner," he shall be entitled to pay for such improvements, it is not necessary that color of title concur and coexist with good faith at the time of making the improvements, but if color of title exists when the suit of the rightful owner is brought against the occupant, the latter is entitled to compensation for any valuable improvements made in good faith, though made before he acquired color of title. Litchfield v. Johnson, 4 Dill. 551, Fed. Cas. No. 8,387.

But while "it is possible that the good faith required by the statute may exist when the improvements are made, and that color of title subsequently acquired will authorize a recovery for them," an occupying claimant who took possession of unimproved prairie land as a mere trespasser, without any claim of right or title, merely hoping some day to buy the land, and has subsequently acquired color of title by remaining in possession of the land a sufficient length of time, cannot recover for improvements made before he had color of title, as they were not made in good faith; and the permanent improvements made under such circumstances became at once the property of the rightful owner of the land, whose title was not divested by the occupant's subsequently acquiring color of title. Snell v. Mehan, 80 Iowa, 53, 45 N. W. 398.

Under the Wisconsin improvement act, which allows only claims for improvements made by a party in possession while holding adversely by color of title, asserted in good faith, founded on descent or any written instrument, a person who took possession of real estate under a contract of purchase and in pursuance of its terms, and who afterwards duly received the deed of the vendor, which is subsequently declared void, is entitled to claim for improvements made from the date he entered possession of the premises under his contract, as he entered claiming ownership under a written instrument, and the deed, when made, related back to the date of the contract, making it sufficient color of title under the statute. Dorer v. Hood, 113 Wis. 607, 88 N. W. 1009.

A. C. W.

gation and final determination is had of the property recovered. Simpson, in behalf of himself and McDonald, has actively participated in the prosecution of this action, talking with plaintiff about it, procuring witnesses and evidence, and he and McDonald, pursuant to an understanding had, intend to pay their share of the expenses of this litigation, including attorneys' fees. Simpson testifies to these matters and to his interest to the above extent in the outcome of the suit.

The action is brought in the name of the record owner, the plaintiff. Under any phase of the testimony, he is the real owner thereof, and any deed to an undivided portion thereof is but security against loss for advancements made plaintiff, and for a future adjustment of equities. The deed evidences a security transaction, and is but a mortgage. Jasper v. Hazen, 4 N. D. 1, 23 L.R.A. 58, 58 N. W. 454; O'Toole v. Omlie, 8 N. D. 444, 79 N. W. 849; Wells v. Geyer, 12 N. D. 316, 96 N. W. 289; Merchants' State Bank v. Tufts, 14 N. D. 238, 116 Am. St. Rep. 682, 103 N. W. 760; Smith v. Jensen, 16 N. D. 408, 114 N. W. 306; Miller v. Smith, 20 N. D. 96, 126 N. W. 499. And the interests of Simpson and McDonald under the record are bound by the judgment rendered herein, and are as fully litigated as though they were parties to this action. Boyd v. Wallace, 10 N. D. 78, 84 N. W. 760; Bigelow v. Draper, 6 N. D. 152, 69 N. W. 570; Hart v. Wyndmere, 21 N. D. 383, 131 N. W. 271, at page 277, and authorities there cited. We quote from the opinion in Boyd v. Wallace: "One who is not a party defendant on the record in an action, but who participates in the defense, and has an interest in the matter in controversy in the action, and participates in the defense for the protection of such interest, . . . and where it is known to the plaintiff that such party so participates for the protection of his own interest, he is bound by the decree rendered in the action." The converse of the proposition is equally true, and a party so acting through another as plaintiff is, under the same circumstances, himself bound by the judgment. Plaintiff's interest makes him a proper and necessary party plaintiff. Simpson's and McDonald's equitable interests appearing, they were proper parties to the action, had they been made such; but no application therefor was made, and, they not being necessary parties, and being bound by the judgment rendered under the record, neither the interests of plaintiff nor defendants are prejudiced by their omission as parties to the action. The motion to dismiss for failure to join Simpson and McDonald as parties plaintiff, and because the action is not brought in the names of the real parties in interest, is without merit.

Defendants counterclaim for improvements under § 7526 of the Code, providing: "In such case he may also set forth a counterclaim, and recover from plaintiff or a codefendant for permanent improvements made by him or those under whom he claims, holding under color of title in good faith adversely to the plaintiff or codefendant against whom he seeks a recovery." Based on this statute, defendant claims to recover the value of the dwelling house on lots 14 and 15, fixed by the trial court at $450, and claimed by appellant to be worth $1,800. An examination of the record discloses a purchase of lots 14 and 15 in 1906 for $800, with the lots of the value of $500. From other testimony, including a description of the house at the time of suit, we are satisfied with the trial court's findings as to this item. And the evidence sustains the findings as to the right of defendants' recovery; defendants claiming title to lots 14 and 15 based upon a deed, it a part of a purported chain of title reaching back many years; color of title having its inception in a void tax deed issued in 1891.

But as to defendants' claim for betterments for the barn placed upon lots 1 and 2, a different question is presented. This barn is claimed to be owned jointly by Stevens and George Gussner. It was placed upon these lots in 1903 and 1904, having been built elsewhere and moved thereon. In May, 1908, before the commencement of this action in September of that year, the original owner of the land, who years before had transferred by warranty deed his interest therein to plaintiff and others, quitclaimed to Steven Gussner, for an alleged consideration of $600, lots 1 and 2, and other lots. Steven Gussner transferred in the same month part of said lots to his wife, and lots 1 and 2, with other tracts, for a consideration of $500, to George Gussner. This deed to Steven Gussner constitutes defendants' first color of title to lots 1 and 2, and it appears to be the first time defendants ever asserted ownership to these two lots.

Steven Gussner's testimony on this is as follows:

Q. You knew at the time [1904] you didn't own anything down there except lot 21?

A. That's the first lot I bought.

Q. And these other lots belonged to —

A. I understand they belong to Helmsworth.

Q. Then you, in 1904, paid $48.95 taxes for 1903 on all these lots, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. At that time you had absolutely no claim to these lots at all?

A. No.

Q. How did you come to pay these taxes?

A. I was up to the courthouse and listening, and there was a lot of lots for sale, and I went to work and bought some tax title to it.

Q. You mean in 1904 you bought these lots at a tax sale?

A. Yes.

Q. Got certificates for them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you were using these lots at that time, weren't you?

A. I never used them.

Q. You had fences around them?

A. I put a fence around to keep the cattle out.

Q. You put a big barn on them?

A. Yes, sir; I put a big barn on.

Q. That was six or seven years ago?

A. Yes.

Q. That was put on the time you paid the taxes?

A. Paid the taxes before.

Q. You have been using these lots all these years?

A. They was always laying idle most of the time; the barn is on there now.

Q. Now, when you paid these taxes for 1904, you simply paid it to get the use of the lots?

A. No; I came up there; I had to pay some taxes anyway, and I bought them.

Q. Now in 1907 you bought in these lots for the 1906 taxes, and paid $17.46 at the tax sale, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what was your idea in doing that? to get title of your lots?

A. Well, I got a fence down there, and so I kept the fence around there.

Q. You wanted to keep other people from moving on these lots?

A. Yes, sir.

The reason for the defendants' failure to claim ownership until the obtaining of the quitclaim deed in 1908 is further shown by the uncontradicted testimony of William Simpson, who testifies to a conversation had with Steven Gussner on or about the 3d day of December, 1907, two or three days after the tax sale that year, in which the witness told Gussner that McKenzie was going to redeem from the tax sales, and that if he (Steven) intended to get a tax deed he would never get it; Steven replying: "I am not; I only want to use the lots. I am paying those taxes in order to get the use of the lots." And nowhere in the record do the defendants claim ownership prior to the obtaining of the quitclaim deed in 1908. And the only claim in the answer of defendants as to the improvements to lots 1 and 2 is: "That on or about the 1st day of July, 1908, the said defendant George Gussner, together with defendant Steven Gussner, placed on said lots 1 and 2 a large frame barn, the reasonable value of which is $1,500, in good faith, and in the belief that the defendants, George Gussner and Steven Gussner, had good title to said lots 1 and 2; and the defendant George Gussner claims a lien on said lots 1 and 2 for the sum of $1,500, with legal interest thereon from the 1st day of July, 1908."

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is plain that neither in the pleadings nor the proof is there any pretense or claim whatever of ownership of these lots 1 and 2, until five or six years after the barn in question was moved thereon. At the time the improvements were made, therefore, they could assert no claim whatever to lots 1 and 2. Defendants knowingly affixed these permanent improvements upon the property of others, without leave or license or semblance of title. They were mere trespassers, and as such it is elementary that they are not entitled to compensation for improvements made thereon under the circumstances. See Nesbitt v. Walters, 38 Tex. 576; Stille v. Shull, 41 La. Ann. 816, 6 So. 634; New Orleans & S. R. & Immigration Asso. v. Jones, 68 Ala. 48; Stamper v. Bradley, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 806, 53 S. W. 16; Carpentier v. Mitchell, 29 Cal. 330; Fischer v. Johnson, 106 Iowa, 181, 76 N. W. 658; Hawke v. Deffebach, 4 Dak. 20, 22 N. W. 480; Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. D. 334, 50 N. W. 95; Seymour v. Cleveland, 9 S. D. 94, 69 N. W. 171; Skelly v. Warren, 17 S. D. 25, 94 N. W. 408; 22 Cyc. 16, under note 72; 27 Cent. Dig. Improvements, § 7. "A mere trespasser who makes no claim of right or title, and merely hopes some day to purchase the land, cannot burden it with charges for improvements." 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 86.

The claim of the defendants Gussner for compensation for these improvements under the statute (§ 7526) cannot be allowed, and the contention of the respondent as to this item is sustained. The $400 allowed by the trial court for the improvements of lots 1 and 2 was erroneous, and the judgment appealed from is modified by a reduction in said amount ($400) as of the date of entry of judgment, and as so modified the judgment of the trial court is affirmed. Neither party is to recover costs of this court on this appeal.

Petition for rehearing denied.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

A. HECKSCHER et al.

v.

JAMES W. BLANTON et al.

SAME

v.

J. THOMPSON BROWN et al.

(111 Va. 648, 69 S. E. 1045.)

Election of remedies — contract by trustee to sell real estate — compelling accounting for benefit — return of brokers' commissions.

1. Owners of real estate who have put the title in one of them for sale are estopped from suing the brokers for the commission retained by them for effecting the sale, on the theory that the contract with them was illegal because they agreed to divide their commission with the trustee, by instituting an action against the latter to compel an accounting of the share of commission received by him, since they thereby confirmed the contract.

Trust — profit of trustee — duty to account.

2. One of several joint owners of real estate, in whose name the title is placed for sale, cannot be compelled to account to his co-owners for a bonus paid him by the brokers who effected the sale, for assistance rendered them, where he was guilty of no fraud or concealment, and no agreement for the bonus was made until after the sale was effected, since, by receiving the bonus, he diverts from his associates no

Note. — Right of trustee to retain bonus or gratuity received from third person.

The question whether a trustee is entitled to an allowance for legal services performed for the trust by himself as attorney is not within the scope of the note.

The purpose of the present note is not to discuss the cases or the general question of the right of a trustee to reap advantage from the trust estate, but is rather concerned with the precise question in HECKSCHER v. BLANTON, whether a gratuity or bonus received from a third person is such a profit as is embraced within the general rule that the trustee cannot be permitted to receive unto himself any profit from handling the trust estate. The rule referred to is thus laid down in 39 Cyc. 296: "In administering the trust, the trustee must act for the beneficiaries, and not for himself in antagonism to the interests of the beneficiaries; he is prohibited from using the advantage of his position to gain any benefit for himself at the expense of the cestuis que trustent, and from placing himself in any position where his self-interest will or may conflict with his duties as trustee. And so it is the rule that, except his lawful compensation, a trustee will not be permitted to derive any profit out of the trust, and that the cestuis que trustent may successfully claim any profits made out of the office of trustee or the use of trust funds, or, in case the act from which the profits arose was a breach of trust, they may, at their option, repudiate the transaction and claim interest on the money employed, instead of profits. While the rule giving the profits made by the trustee to the beneficiaries extends only to profits diverted from them, its operation and applicability are not affected by the fact that, in the particular transaction, the trustee incurred a possibility of loss, or, where there are several improper transactions, by the fact that a loss did occur on some of them."

Where a trustee of corporate stock sold the stock in pursuance of authority, as well as stock owned by himself, and as a part of the transaction received from the purchaser a sum of money ostensibly given for an interest in a worthless patent right, but actually given as a bonus to induce the sale, he must account pro rata for the amount of the bonus to the person whose stock he holds in trust. Levi v. Evans, 6 C. C. A. 500, 18 U. S. App. 293, 57 Fed. 677. But it was further held in this case that the fact that the stockholder also held the legal title to the stock of other holders, for the purpose of sale and for a limited time, did not prevent him from selling his own stock upon such terms as he saw fit.

A trustee who joins an underwriters' association for the purpose of receiving a commission upon premiums paid for the insurance of the trust property must account for the commissions so received, less the amount of fees paid for the maintenance of the membership in the association. White v. Sherman, 168 Ill. 589, 61 Am. St. Rep. 132, 48 N. E. 128.

As said in the last case, it is immaterial whether the transaction is beneficial or injurious to the estate, for it is not essential that the estate suffer a loss, it being sufficient that the trustee gain a profit.

So, a trustee is accountable to the estate for gratuities and presents received by him from a tenant of the trust property, and from workmen engaged to repair the same, although they appear to have been by voluntary offerings, and were given to him in nowise at the expense of the estate, and it appears that he made no concealment of the fact that he received them, and was not aware that in accepting them, he was doing anything incompatible with his strict duty. Jacobus v. Munn, 37 N. J. Eq. 48, affirmed as to this point in 38 N. J. Eq. 622, but modified so as to reduce the amount of commissions awarded to the trustee for his services, and to impose costs upon him.

It was declared in Sherman v. Lanier, 39 N. J. Eq. 249, that the receipt by a trustee of a large bonus for lending the trust funds does not afford any evidence that she knew she was making a bad investment for the estate, and especially where she also loaned money of her own in larger amount than fund to which they would otherwise be entitled.

On Rehearing.

Bankruptcy — action against bankrupt — who should appeal.

3. One of several property owners in whose name property is placed by his co-owners for sale, who is sought to be held liable to his co-owners for the broker's commission, because the contract between the parties was illegal, has a right to be heard on appeal from a decree in his favor, although a trustee in bankruptcy was appointed for him before the decree was entered, where he is made a party to the appeal, and his trustee did not become a party to the proceedings or seek a hearing.

(January 13, 1910.)

CROSS APPEALS from a decree of the Law and Equity court of the City of Richmond in a suit to compel an accounting of commission for the sale of real estate; complainants appealing from so much of the decree as denied them a portion of the relief asked; defendants Brown et al. appealing from the overruling of their demurrer, and defendant Blanton appealing from so much as required him to account for a portion of the commission received by him. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel A. Anderson, for complainants:

Blanton's agreement with Brown & Company was illegal as against public policy, in its inception.

Beury v. Davis, 111 Va. 581, 69 S. E. 1050; Ferguson v. Gooch, 94 Va. 1, 40 L.R.A. 234, 26 S. E. 397.

Mr. Hill Montague also for complainants.

Messrs. Montague & Montague and S. S. P. Patteson, for respondents:

Blanton was not such a fiduciary as to preclude him from obtaining his discharge in bankruptcy.

Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. 202, 11 L. ed. 236; Hennequin v. Clews, 111 U. S. 676, 28 L. ed. 565, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576; Upshur v. Briscoe, 138 U. S. 365, 34 L. ed. 931, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 313; Crawford v. Burke, 195 U. S. 176, 49 L. ed. 147, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9; Tindle v. Birkett, 205 U. S. 183, 51 L. ed. 762, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Morse & Rogers v. Kaufman, 100 Va. 218, 40 S. E. 916; Bracken v. Milner, 3 N. B. N. Rep. 714, 104 Fed. 522; Barrett v. Prince, 74 C. C. A. 440, 143 Fed. 302; Re Adler, 81 C. C. A. 564, 152 Fed. 422; Loveland, Bankr. 3d ed. § 294, p. 845; Collier, Bankr. 6th ed. 229-231; Brandenburg, Bankr. 3d ed. 279; 5 Cyc. 398.

Brown & Company had the right to dispose of their commissions in any way they deemed proper, and Blanton could accept them, either as a gratuity or as having been justly earned, because his action in so dothe sum belonging to the estate; but it was intimated that she would be accountable to the estate for the amount received, at least to the extent of the net sum realized by her.

But where a beneficiary in a trust estate gives an order upon the trustee for a sum of money representing a claim against her, which is not an obligation payable by the trustee, nor a matter with which he has any legal connection, and the claimant for his own convenience, and upon a sufficient consideration, sells the order to, or settles it with, the trustee for a lesser sum than the amount named, he is not responsible for the residue to the beneficiary, since in such transaction he is not dealing with the trust estate. Bush v. Webster, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1894, 72 S. W. 364.

And the account of a trustee who is also an attorney should not be surcharged with the amount of fees collected from borrowers for services in extending mortgages held by the estate, since in this country, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the expense incident to a loan on bond and mortgage, for searches and for the preparation of instruments, etc., is borne by the mortgagor, and therefore services rendered in the premises are not services in the affairs of the trust, in the sense that a trustee is required, as an incident to his trust duties, to make searches and to prepare the instruments when the trust estate is the mortgaged. Young v. Barker, 141 App. Div. 801, 127 N. Y. Supp. 211.

And certainly the fact that one of the trustees has, through a law firm of which he is a member, profited to some extent by charges made against third persons dealing with the estate, even if a proper matter for consideration in an application to remove him on that ground, furnishes no reason whatever for the appointment of an additional trustee. Re Leavitt, 135 App. Div. 7, 119 N. Y. Supp. 769.

As to the right of the principal to recover from the broker or other agent, commissions which the latter received from the other party to the contract, see the note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 952.

On the right of real estate broker who acts for both parties, to commissions, see the note in 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 659.

As to whether the custom among real estate brokers to take rebates or commissions from other party affects their right to compensation from the employer, see the note in 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1047.

As to fraud and secret dealings of a real estate broker as affecting commissions, see the note in 45 L.R.A. 33.

As to the right to have trust property wrongfully pledged by a trustee for his individual benefit redeemed by money belonging to his insolvent estate, see the note in 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 487.

L. A. W.

ing in no respect placed him in antagonistic relations with Heckscher or any party in interest.

Jackson v. Pleasanton, 101 Va. 288, 43 S. E. 573; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Church, 21 Ohio St. 498; Gay v. Paige, 150 Mich. 463, 114 N. W. 217; Bristol v. Scranton, 11 C. C. A. 144, 28 U. S. App. 29, 63 Fed. 218; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1073; Lamb Knit-Goods Co. v. Lamb, 119 Mich. 508, 78 N. W. 646.

Blanton had the right to act in every particular as if he had never been adjudicated a bankrupt.

1 Remington, Bankr. § 1644, pp. 1011, 1012; Hahlo v. Cole, 112 App. Div. 636, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1049; Thatcher v. Rockwell, 105 U. S. 467, 26 L. ed. 949; Reed v. Paul, 131 Mass. 329; Herring v. Downing, 140 Mass. 10, 15 N. E. 116; Griffin v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 119 Ga. 664, 46 S. E. 870; Evans v. Brown, 1 Esp. 170; Chippendale v. Tomlinson, 7 East, 57, note, 4 Dougl. K. B. 318; Temple v. London & B. R. Co. 2 Jur. 296; Re Stafford, 18 Week. Rep. 959; Herbert v. Sayer, 5 Q. B. 965, 2 Dowl. & L. 49, 13 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 209, 8 Jur. 812; Fyson v. Chambers, 9 Mees. & W. 460, 11 L. J. Exch. N. S. 190; Smith v. Gordon, 6 Law Rep. 313, Fed. Cas. No. 13,052; Amory v. Lawrence, 3 Cliff. 523, Fed. Cas. No. 336; Taylor v. Irwin, 20 Fed. 615; American File Co. v. Garrett, 110 U. S. 288, 28 L. ed. 149, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Laughlin v. Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. 13 C. C. A. 1, 24 U. S. App. 573, 65 Fed. 447; Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 521, 23 L. ed. 403; United States v. Peck, 102 U. S. 64, 26 L. ed. 46; Sparkhawk v. Yerkes, 142 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 915, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104; Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 29, 36 L. ed. 609, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; King v. Remington, 36 Minn. 15, 29 N. W. 352; Sawtelle v. Rollins, 23 Me. 196; Foster v. Wylie, 60 Me. 109; Nash v. Simpson, 78 Me. 142, 3 Atl. 53.

Mr. Wallace F. Brown also for respondents.

Per Curiam:

These cases, heard together, have been most elaborately and ably argued upon the printed briefs, as well as orally, and a great number of authorities cited; but in our view the issues involved lie within a rather narrow compass.

The pleadings, original, amended, and supplemental, put in issue whether or not the complainants have the right to require J. W. Blanton and J. Thompson Brown & Company (hereinafter spoken of for convenience as Brown & Company) to account 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to complainants for a certain commission—$10,000—received by Brown & Company, and afterwards divided with Blanton, for services in procuring a purchaser and consummating a sale to him of certain pyrites property situated in Louisa county, owned by complainants and Blanton in unequal shares, as members of a syndicate or as partners; Heckscher holding the much largest share, amounting in fact to about four fifths of the whole.

The case here as to Blanton is a sequel to that of Blanton v. Heckscher, decided by this court, and reported in 101 Va. 42, 42 S. E. 915, in which the complainants sought only to recover of Blanton that part of the commissions paid Brown and Company for making sale of the pyrites property theretofore, which Brown & Company voluntarily donated to Blanton in consideration of valuable aid rendered by him to Brown & Company in effecting the sale. By the amended pleadings it was sought to require both Blanton and Brown & Company to account to complainants for the $10,000 of commissions received by Brown & Company for making the said sale, which was consummated nearly three years before.

The learned judge of the law and equity court filed with, and as a part of, the decree now under review his reasons for the conclusions reached, and in so far as the opinion deals with and disposes of the question whether or not Brown & Company are liable to the demands of complainants for the commissions received by the former, we approve and adopt it as a part of the opinion of this court.

So much of the opinion as relates to the liability of Brown & Company to complainants is as follows:

"The facts, so far as the solution of this case is concerned, are as follows: Jos. W. Blanton was the trustee,—i. e., held the legal title to certain mining property in Louisa county, Virginia; but the title he held was for the benefit of himself and certain others, Heckscher, Mann, Shuman, Smoot, Gill, and others, according to their respective interests, and they were to try and bring about a sale of this property, or rather Heckscher, Blanton, Mann, and Shuman were to do so. Blanton retained, shortly after the title was conveyed to him, J. T. Brown & Company to sell this property as his and his associates' agent. It is conceded that Brown & Company knew that Blanton held for the benefit of said associates or syndicate. After Brown secures an option from Crenshaw, which was completed by a purchase by Crenshaw and his associates, Brown writes a letter and agrees to give Blanton one half of his commissions of 10 per cent. It is claimed that this was in pursuance of a secret agreement to this effect at or about the time this property was put in the hands of J. T. Brown & Company for sale. This is denied by Brown & Company, and Mr. Leroy Brown, of this firm, who did most of the negotiations, testifies that prior to the writing of the letter of July 1, 1899, to J. W. Blanton, there was no agreement for a division of any portion of his commissions with Blanton. To the same effect is the testimony of J. T. Brown, and Blanton testifies that no such agreement existed prior to the letter of July 1, 1899.

"The firm of J. T. Brown & Company secured an option from Crenshaw and his associates in February, 1899, which was availed of on July 15th or 14th for $100,000; but, before the facts are further adverted to, it is well for me to state the proceedings in the two suits which are being heard together.

"The first suit was instituted by Heckscher, whose interest was about a four-fifths interest, G. N. Shuman, W. H. Mann, and D. B. Cox, against J. W. Blanton, on June 15, 1900, alleging the sale and division of commissions claiming that the division was in pursuance of a secret agreement between defendant and the brokers, who negotiated the sale under the firm name of J. Thompson Brown & Company, in fraud of plaintiffs' rights, and praying for a discovery and an accounting from defendant Blanton for the amount of money received by him thereunder, as well as for other money alleged to have been collected by said defendant for syndicate. On October 19, 1900, Blanton answered, denying all fraud and collusion, and admitting said division and the amount received by him thereunder, but claiming that it had been voluntarily given him after the said sale was negotiated, in the absence of any agreement or understanding, and that therefore he had a right to receive and retain it. He also admitted that he had on hand a small balance belonging to the syndicate, which he was retaining in anticipation of a settlement of a claim he had preferred against the syndicate, but which he deposited in bank to the credit of the court in said cause, asking that his answer be treated as a cross-bill.

"On July 16, 1901, this suit was heard on bill, answer, general replication thereto, and on certain affidavits alleging and denying that Blanton had disposed of his real estate in order to defeat plaintiffs' recovery, and a decree was entered requiring Blanton to deposit his share of said commissions in bank to credit of court in said cause. This decree was reversed upon appeal to the supreme court of appeals, December 11, 1902.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"On January 7, 1903, the second of these suits was instituted by the same plaintiffs against said brokers, J. Thompson Brown & Company, as defendants. The bill was filed January 22, 1903, alleging the same facts, but praying that said contract with the Browns for commissions be rescinded, and that they be required to pay to plaintiffs the entire amount of commissions retained by them out of proceeds of sale, less any amount plaintiffs might hereafter recover from Blanton in the first suit. On February 4, 1903, the Browns demurred, and on April 23d following they answered, denying all fraud and collusion, admitting said division of commissions, but claiming it was a gratuity. In their answer they pleaded also that plaintiffs were estopped from proceeding against them by laches, acquiescence, and waiver, and were barred by the statute of limitations. On August 4, 1903, plaintiffs tendered amended and supplemental bills in both suits, attempting to make the Browns parties in the first, and Blanton in the second, and enlarging the amount sued for in first suit to $10,000.

"On December 18, 1903, decrees were entered permitting this in first suit, but denying it in second suit, and hearing the amended first suit and the second suit together. The Browns thereupon demurred to said amended and supplemental bill in the first suit; but on July 30, 1904, this demurrer and their said demurrer to the bill in the second suit were both overruled. The depositions have been taken pro and con, and the case is now for decision.

"The statute of limitations is relied on by the Browns, and a strong and forceful argument is made that the one-year limit of the statute applies; but this court is of opinion that the plea of the statute of limitations is not a good plea in this case, and the same will be considered as overruled. And yet, in view of the court's opinion on other branches of the defense, this will not be necessary.

"In the first place, we should bear in mind as to the Browns, that the suit against them for rescission on the ground of fraud was not brought until more than three years and a few months after, according to their own pleadings (i. e., the plaintiffs'), they knew of the fraud on them and their rights; in other words, they sue one of the joint tortfeasors for the recovery of the commissions he received and for an accounting, and two years and six months after instituting this suit against him, and more than three years after knowledge of the plaintiffs of the wrong done them by the other joint tortfeasors, they institute a suit against those others for a rescission and reclamation. This court is not unmindful of the fact that the position now taken after all the depositions and proofs are in is not the same taken on the demurrer; but upon an analysis of the letter of January 30, 1899, which is in evidence, in which the Browns agreed on certain conditions to accept a commission of 5 per cent in case a sale was made by the parties themselves at $75,000, when read in connection with the other evidence showing that the complainants, or the chief one among them, Mr. Heckscher, knew of the division of the commissions of the Browns with Blanton, in the court's opinion it does not relieve the estoppel as against the Browns. The plaintiffs, with a knowledge of the facts entitling them to a rescission, elect to sue Blanton only. It is true it is claimed that the exact amount of the division was not known to them; but, if it was a fraud to divide equally the commissions, it was a fraud to divide the commissions by giving Blanton only a small part thereof.

"Upon the facts as developed in the evidence before this court, and upon the pleadings as they are, the court is of opinion that there can be no relief against J. Thompson Brown & Company, on account of plaintiffs' election made to sue Blanton only, on account of confirmation and acquiescence as shown by the evidence and pleadings; and the court cites as authorities for this proposition Pom. Eq. Jur. 817, 820, 917, 965; Armstead v. Hundley, 7 Gratt. 52; Shoemaker v. Cake, 83 Va. 1, 1 S. E. 387; Max Meadows Land & Improv. Co. v. Brady, 92 Va. 71, 22 S. E. 845; Hudson v. Waugh, 93 Va. 518, 25 S. E. 530; Hurt v. Miller, 95 Va. 32, 27 S. E. 831; Campbell v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 98 Va. 729, 37 S. E. 350; Adams v. Guerrard, 29 Ga. 651, 76 Am. Dec. 624; Slothower v. Oak Ridge Land Co. 2 Va. Dec. 506, 27 S. E. 466.

"In the court's opinion so far, as to the Browns, the case has been treated as if the allegations as to the secret agreement existing about or at the time the property was put into the hands of Brown & Company had been sustained by the proof, under the well-known rules of courts of law and equity as to the proof of fraud. Has this been done? I think not. It may or not be true; but it has not been proven with that clearness and satisfaction that should or could warrant a court of equity in so holding.

"For these reasons the relief sought against the Browns will be denied."

With respect to the liability of Blanton to account to the complainants for the $5,000 donated to him by Brown & Company out of the commissions received by the latter on the sale to Crenshaw, while holding that there was no sufficient proof of the allegations in the bills as to a secret agreement existing about or at the time the property was put in the hands of Brown & Company, between the latter and Blanton, whereby Blanton was to receive a part of the commissions which Brown & Company were to get if they effected a sale of the property, the decree entered upon the view that "Blanton stood in the most confidential relations with his associates, and should not receive any part of those commissions, except his proportion thereof according to his interest in the syndicate as against his associates," required Blanton to pay into bank to the credit of the court in this cause the sum of $5,000, less the proportion that would come to him according to his interest, with interest from the time of the payment to complainants of their proportion of the proceeds of the sale of the property to Crenshaw. This ruling is assigned as cross error by Blanton's counsel, under rule 8 of this court.

To review the voluminous evidence, documentary and oral, as to Blanton's conduct in connection with the sale of the pyrites property by Brown & Company, and the receipt by him of a part of the latter's commissions on the sale, would serve no purpose other than to bring out, perhaps, more prominently, facts which are not denied, but in fact admitted, by Heckscher and his co-complainants, viz., that Blanton's aid to Brown & Company, was valuable, and without it the sale to Crenshaw would probably not have been effected; that Blanton received no part of the proceeds of the sale which belonged to these complainants, or in any way reduced the amounts that they would or should have received had Blanton received no part of Brown & Company's commissions; that the efforts and persistency of Brown & Company, aided by Blanton, brought to complainants in the result thousands of dollars that they would not otherwise have gotten, and especially was this so as to Heckscher, the chief complainant, who was the largest holder in the property, and who had been urging a sale of it at a price much less than was finally obtained; that not only was the putting of the property for sale in the hands of Brown & Company by Blanton acquiesced in by Heckscher and his associates, but approved, and the course and conduct of Blanton in connection with the whole transaction commended; that neither Blanton nor Brown & Company got one dollar out of the transaction that the complainants were entitled to, or ex æquo et bono they could have demanded; and that neither Brown & Company nor Blanton did anything that in the least misled the complainants to their loss or injury.

We are well aware of the established and salutary principle, under a long line of decisions by this court coming down to Tenant v. Dunlop, 97 Va. 235, 33 S. E. 620, and some later, that trustees, partners, or agents cannot, by fraud, deceit, or concealment of facts, make and retain profits out of their cestui que trust, associate, or principal; but that is not this case. We have searched the record in vain for some proof of conduct on the part of Blanton in connection with this transaction which resulted, or might have resulted, in the injury of his associates. It may be that in some of his interviews with Heckscher, after the sale of the property had been consummated, he should have, as a matter of propriety, told Heckscher that Brown & Company had donated to him a part of their commissions; but his failure to do this resulted, and could have resulted, in no injury to Heckscher or others who had been interested in the sale of the property.

It is also well established by the authorities cited for complainants, that if an agent, trustee, or other fiduciary makes, by fraud, deceit, or concealment, a profit out of a sale of the trust subject, "such profit belongs exclusively to the principal;" but, again, that is not this case. There is not the slightest proof that Blanton, by fraud, deceit, or concealment, made a profit in this transaction. On the contrary, the proof is conclusive, as is recognized in the opinion of the lower court, that there was nothing hurtful to Blanton's associates concealed; that Blanton did not know of the purpose of Brown & Company to divide their commissions with him until after the option had been given to Crenshaw, which was binding upon Blanton and his associates. Throughout there is not a fact relied on going to show fraud, deceit, or concealment on the part of either Brown & Company or Blanton, resulting in loss or injury to complainants or either of them. Blanton was a mere naked or dry trustee, holding only the legal title to the property, with no authority to make sale of it, or to receive the proceeds of a sale thereof made by authority of the parties in interest. He received no part of the proceeds of the sale that was made, but the whole went to and was received by the parties in interest, less only the commissions they had agreed to pay Brown & Company; and the fidelity of Blanton is evidenced by the fact that Heckscher offered Blanton handsome commissions if he could sell the property for more than $80,000, provided the Crenshaw option was not taken up, yet Blanton continued his efforts, and was largely instrumental in having the Crenshaw option taken up.

The principle upon which the numerous decisions relied on for complainants turned 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was where the wrongdoer had profits or gain which belonged of right to his principal, partner, or associates; but that principle is not carried, in those cases or others, so far as we are able to find, to the extent that one charged merely with wrongdoing should give up what, ex arguo et bono, the party making the charge could not on any other ground have demanded or been entitled to. Unquestionably one cannot receive and hold from another that which he has acquired by fraud, deceit, or concealment; but if that other was never entitled to that which the alleged wrongdoer has, there is no principle of justice or equity that would entitle the party making the claim to a recovery.

In Tennant v. Dunlop, 97 Va. 234, 33 S. E. 620, the dealings charged to have been fraudulent, deceitful, or misleading on the part of a surviving partner, and hurtful to the legatees of the deceased partner, and which were set aside as void, so far as the legatees were concerned, were between the surviving partner and the executrix of the deceased partner. There the fraud, by concealment practised by the surviving partner, damaging to the complaining legatees, was clearly and conclusively proven, and, upon the established principle to which we have adverted, the wrongdoer, the surviving partner, was required to make good to the legatees of the deceased partner the losses they had sustained by reason of the fraud.

Here the complainants have lost nothing by fraud, deceit, or concealment of Blanton, but are seeking to recover of him that to which they were at no time entitled, and therefore could not have demanded. What Blanton got came from Brown & Company, and only out of money belonging to Brown & Company, and in no event to complainants, as is conceded; so that upon a supposed technicality only, and not upon any principle of right in law or equity, is their demand rested. This technical rule cannot, either upon reason or authority, be carried to the extent to which the complainants invoked it.

The learned author of Pom. Eq. Jur. Vol. 2, 3d ed. § 956, says, of the general principle governing dealings of a person who is placed in such a fiduciary relation towards another that the duty rests upon him to disclose, that, if he intentionally conceals a material fact, with the purpose of inducing the other to enter into an agreement, such concealment is an actual fraud, and the agreement is void without the aid of any presumption; but the conclusion is there stated to be that the question whether or not such a fiduciary should be held to have by concealment been guilty of fraud, and be required to account for any profits he may have received out of the transaction, turns upon whether he has or has not gained by his concealment an advantage over his cestui que trust, principal, or partner. In the first instance he will be held to an accounting, and in the other not.

Blanton, as the record shows, became at no time interested in Brown & Company's commissions on the sale to Crenshaw,—certainly at no time when to do so was forbidden by law, or when he did or could have obtained an advantage over Heckscher and others interested with him in the property. On the contrary, the advantages arising out of Blanton's dealings with the property inured to the benefit of all parties interested, and more especially to the advantage of Heckscher, as he has frankly admitted.

It is not strictly true that all profits made by agents or trustees, such as was Blanton in this case, belong to their principals, but only such profits as are thereby diverted from, and therefore made out of, funds belonging to their principals. They cannot keep as their own what rightly belongs to their principals, but, in order for such result to follow, the agency must be the proximate or direct, not the remote or indirect, cause of the profit,—i. e., the profit must be traceable to the agency as its efficient cause, and not as its mere incidental occasion. This principle is clearly recognized by this court in Blanton v. Heckscher, 101 Va. 42, 42 S. E. 915, where it was held that Blanton could not be required to bring into court the $5,000 received by him of Brown & Company until proof sufficient to overcome Blanton's denial of liability to Heckscher and his co-complainants for this money was adduced. See also Mechem, Agency, § 472; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Church, 21 Ohio St. 492; Lamb Knit-Goods Co. v. Lamb, 119 Mich. 568, 78 N. W. 646; Lewis v. Loper (C. C.) 54 Fed. 237; Gay v. Paige, 150 Mich. 463, 114 N. W. 217.

The line of cases relied on by complainants here, beginning with Carter v. Horne, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 7 (decided in 1728), do not militate against the doctrine above enunciated, viz., that it is necessary in a case like this to show that the profit or gain sought to be recovered was made at complainant's expense, that it was a part of their property, or that they could have claimed or would have gained it, had the recipient thereof not done so. Jackson v. Pleasanton, 101 Va. 282, 43 S. E. 573, where the principle is fully recognized. See also 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1073; Herman v. Martineau, 1 Wis. 151, 60 Am. Dec. 370; Alexander v. North Western Christian University, 57 Ind. 466.

This case, upon the facts proved, is simply
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

this: Blanton was in no sense a trustee, except for the purpose of holding the dry or naked legal title to the trust property, not even having the power of sale. The property was placed with Brown & Company, with the approval of the complainants, to find a buyer willing to buy, ready and able to pay for the property at a price fixed. The commissions of the selling agents were agreed upon, and a binding option given, and there was no way in which Blanton's conduct could have been antagonistic to the complainants, except by agreeing to a secret division with Brown & Company of the commissions, before or at the time the property was placed in the hands of Brown & Company, or before the option was given, which secret agreement was advantageous to Blanton, and to the disadvantage of others interested with him in the property, and Brown & Company would have consummated the sale at less than a 10 per cent commission, the usual and fixed commissions to the selling agent for the sale of such property. Of such conduct on the part of Blanton there is no proof whatever in the record.

We are of opinion that the cross error assigned by Blanton to the decree appealed from is well taken, and that said decree should in this respect be reversed and annulled; and this court will enter the decree the lower court should have entered, dismissing the original and amended bills of complainants in these causes as to Brown & Company, remanding the causes for such further proceedings therein as may be deemed necessary or proper.

Reversed in part.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Buchanan, J., handed down the following additional opinion (January 12, 1911):

In the petition for rehearing it is insisted that J. W. Blanton, one of the appellees, had no right to be heard upon this appeal, because he had been adjudicated a bankrupt and his trustee appointed before the decree appealed from was entered, and that he therefore had no further rights or interest in the litigation.

The trustee was not made, and did not become, a party to the suit, either in the trial court or in this court. Blanton was made one of the appellees in this court, and process served upon him. Under the bankrupt act of 1898 (act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 544, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3418), the trustee has the right to intervene and become a party to a suit prosecuted by or against a bankrupt at the time of his adjudication, but he is not bound to do so. Upon the failure of the trustee to apply to be substituted in place of the bankrupt, or to become a party to the suit, it seems that it may be prosecuted or defended by the bankrupt, whether the result of the litigation inures to his own benefit or the benefit of his creditors, and the trustee, although he does not become a party to the suit, will be bound by the judgment or decree entered in the cause. See 1 Remington, Bankr. §§ 1640, 1644; Griffin v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 11 Am. Bankr. Rep. 622, 623, 119 Ga. 664, 46 S. E. 870, Herring v. Downing, 146 Mass. 10, 15 N. E. 116; Thatcher v. Rockwell, 105 U. S. 469, 470, 26 L. ed. 950; Brown v. Wygant, 163 U. S. 623, 624, 41 L. ed. 286, 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1159; First Nat. Bank v. Lasater, 196 U. S. 115, 49 L. ed. 408, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206.

We are of opinion that Blanton had the right to assign cross error under rule 8 of the court.

The other grounds relied on for a rehearing were fully considered before entering the decree complained of. Upon a reconsideration of those grounds, we see no reason to change the conclusion reached. The opinion filed with the record upon the original hearing contains some slight inaccuracies of statement, which have been corrected, and that opinion, as corrected, will be filed with the record.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

ELLEN A. GOOCH

v.

JOSEPHINE L. ALLEN, Exrx., etc., of J. A. GOOCH, Appt.

(— W. Va. —, 73 S. E. 56.)

Executrix — right of action — exclusiveness.

1. Is a personal representative given exclusive right over creditors, for six months after qualification, to bring the suit provided for by § 7, chap. 86, Code 1906, to subject real estate of a decedent to payment of debts?

Headnotes by BRANNON, J.

Note.—The general subject of moral obligation as a consideration for an express promise is treated in the notes to Trimble v. Rudy, 53 L.R.A. 353, and Muir v. Kane, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 520; and certain specific aspects of the general question are treated in other notes there referred to.

The question whether one may make his own check or note the subject of a gift so that in the absence of payment it may be enforced against him or his representatives is treated in the note to Foxworthy v. Adams, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 308, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Pleading — collection of decedent's debts — allegations.

2. Must a bill in equity under § 7, chap. 86, Code 1906, to subject real estate of a decedent to debts, allege the insufficiency of his personal estate to pay his debts?

Contract — promise without consideration — effect.

3. When there is by law no enforceable obligation to pay, a promise made afterwards to pay wants legal consideration, and is not enforceable.

Note — repayment to parent — consideration.

4. A promissory note given by a son to his widowed mother for money paid by her for his board while at college and his college education, after such expenditure, without promise or expectation of repayment on the part of either, at the time of such expenditure, wants legal consideration, and is not enforceable.

Contract — moral obligation — sufficiency.

5. A merely moral obligation, though not illegal, is not a consideration for a promise to make that promise enforceable.

Subrogation — codebtor paying.

6. A codebtor, not principal debtor, paying a debt secured by a deed of trust executed by both on their land, may have subrogation to the right of the creditor for contribution against his codebtor.

Contribution — preserving security.

7. A deed of trust binding land of several debtors for a debt paid by one not principal debtor, and released by the creditor, is kept alive in equity to give contribution to the debtor paying against a codebtor, notwithstanding such release, and though action at law for contribution is barred by the statute of limitations. Laches, not statutory limitation, may bar such subrogation.

Judgment — interest — date of beginning.

8. It is error to give interest on the sum of principal and interest computed to a date prior to decree. Interest on the sum of principal and interest at date of decree should be given from date of decree.

(November 28, 1911.)

A PPEAL by the executrix from a decree of the Circuit Court for Summers County in plaintiff's favor in a suit to compel a settlement of the accounts of the executrix and for the sale of real estate owned by plaintiff's deceased son for the payment of debts alleged to be due her. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McGinnis & Hatcher, for appellant.

The note to plaintiff having been designed as a gift (and a conditional gift at that) cannot be enforced against the estate of its maker.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1016, 1017; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 179; Fink v. Cox, 18 Johns. 145, 9 Am. Dec. 191; Voorhees v. Combs, 33 N. J. L. 494; Starr v. Starr, 9 Ohio St. 74; Williams v. Forbes, 114 Ill. 167, 28 N. E. 463; Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 43 Ill. 207; Phelps v. Phelps, 28 Barb. 121.

More than five years having passed since the payment of the note, and at the time of bringing her suit, plaintiff's right of subrogation against the estate of J. A. Gooch was barred by the statute of limitations.

21 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 272; Scott v. Nichols, 27 Miss. 94, 61 Am. Dec. 503; Darrow v. Summerhill, 93 Tex. 92, 77 Am. St. Rep. 833, 53 S. W. 680; Junker v. Rush, 136 Ill. 179, 11 L.R.A. 183, 26 N. E. 499; Sadtler v. Kennedy, 26 W. Va. 636; Jackson v. Hull, 21 W. Va. 601; Thayer v. Daniels, 110 Mass. 346.

Messrs. Brown, Jackson, & Knight, and O. P. Fitzgerald, Jr., also for appellant:

While the paying co-obligor may have "contribution," he can in no event have "subrogation," except where the security has been kept alive for his benefit.

Greiner's Estate, 2 Watts, 414; Arnott v. Webb, 1 Dill. 362, Fed. Cas. No. 562; Clark v. Warren, 55 Ga. 575; Engles v. Engles, 4 Ark. 286, 38 Am. Dec. 37; Benton v. Bailey, 50 Vt. 137; Stanley v. Nutter, 16 N. H. 24; Pratt v. Law, 9 Cranch, 456, 3 L. ed. 791; Baily v. Brownfield, 20 Pa. 44.

Messrs. T. N. Read and R. F. Dunlap, for appellee:

The doctrine of contribution is not founded on contract, but is the result of general principles of justice and equity on the ground of equality of burden and benefit.

Rosenbaum v. Goodman, 78 Va. 127; M'Mahon v. Fawcett, 2 Rand. (Va.) 514, 14 Am. Dec. 796; Turner v. Thom, 89 Va. 745, 17 S. E. 323; Thweatt v. Jones, 1 Rand. (Va.) 328, 10 Am. Dec. 538; Neff v. Baker, 82 Va. 401; Wayland v. Tucker, 4 Gratt. 267, 50 Am. Dec. 76.

One of several joint debtors will, as against his codebtors, be subrogated to the securities and means of payment of the common creditor whom he has satisfied, so as to enable him to recover from codebtors, by means thereof, their proportional shares of their indebtedness which he has discharged.

Sheldon, Subrogation, § 169; Morrow v. Peyton, 8 Leigh, 54; Sands v. Durham, 99 Va. 263, 54 L.R.A. 622, 86 Am. St. Rep. 884, 38 S. E. 145; Thompkins v. Mitchell, 2 Rand. (Va.) 428; Willis v. Willis, 42 W. Va. 522, 26 S. E. 515; Schilb v. Moon, 50 W. Va. 47, 40 S. E. 329; Wheatley v. Calhoun, 12 Leigh, 264, 37 Am. Dec. 654; Blair v. Mounts, 41 W. Va. 706, 24 S. E. 620. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Brannon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Ellen A. Gooch brought a chancery suit against the executrix and other representatives of the estate of her dead son, J. A. Gooch, to compel a settlement of the accounts of said executrix, and sell the real estate owned by her son to pay debts due her. A decree was entered in favor of the plaintiff for her demands against the estate, and subjecting certain real estate of the dead son to sale. Josephine L. Allen, the widow, executrix, and devisee of J. A. Gooch, appeals.

There was a demurrer to the bill. One ground of demurrer is that § 7, chap. 86, Code, gives six months' preference after qualification to the personal representative to bring a suit to administer the real assets of a decedent before a creditor can do so, and that this bill does not say whether a suit had or had not been brought by the executrix, or when she qualified. Is a creditor thus compelled to wait for six months after the qualification of a personal representative before he can bring a suit to subject the realty of a dead man to his debts? As we hold this to be a suit to enforce subrogation, we do not decide this point. Speaking only for myself, it does seem that the statute gives the personal representative preference for six months, and delays the creditor. The creditor could always sue the personal estate in equity. Then, when the statute made land liable for the debts of the dead man, he could sue the land for the same reason that he could sue the personality,—that is, that he has a debt for which the land is liable,—but the lawmakers saw proper to give a time to the administrator to see whether the personality would pay debts, without recourse to the land, as he would know best as to this. This is given as a reason for this preference in the Underwood Case, 22 W. Va. 306. It was not intended that any creditor should sue the realty until a reasonable time had been given the administrator to ascertain as to sufficiency of the personal assets, and give him exclusive right of suit for six months. It was further intended to protect the estate from loss by numerous suits, and give the personal representative power, for a time, to bring suit for all creditors. I incidentally express this opinion in Rowan v. Chenoweth, 49 W. Va. 290, 87 Am. St. Rep. 796, 38 S. E. 544. I submit that Judges Snyder and Woods so construed § 7. Reinhardt v. Reinhardt, 21 W. Va. 76; Broderick v. Broderick, 28 W. Va. 385. Judge Dent so construed those cases in Poling v. Huffman, 39 W. Va. 320, 19 S. E. 421. The last case and Hale v. White, 47 W. Va. 700, 35 S. E. 884, seem contra. But are they? Judge

Dent admits the rule above stated, but seems to place those cases on special facts taking them out of the rule. What is the plain import of § 7? So, I would say that a bill filed under § 7 should show that six months had elapsed after the qualification of the personal representative, and that no suit had been brought by him.

It is also urged that the bill does not state that the personal assets are not sufficient to pay debts, and that it is therefore bad on demurrer. Section 7, chap. 86, gives a suit to charge lands with debts "when the personal estate of a decedent is insufficient for the payments of his debts." Remember that this statute recognizes the rule that land shall not be made liable to debts of a dead man except when the personalty is inadequate. Therefore I would say without hesitation that a bill under § 7 must aver that the personalty is inadequate. Such inadequacy is a condition precedent to such suit. But we do not so decide, because this is a suit for subrogation, not one resting on § 7.

Another ground of demurrer is that the qualified personal representative must be before the court. That is so; but she is. This point is made on the fact that the bill named as a defendant "Josephine L. Gooch, executrix." The bill alleges that she was nominated as executrix by the will, "and in pursuance of said nomination has been acting as such." It is claimed that the bill ought to say that she qualified by giving bond and taking the oath prescribed by law. We do not think this point substantial. It is technical. True, the statute says that an executor shall not have powers as such until he qualify by taking oath and giving bond; but we think the presumption would be that the executrix has so qualified, as it is averred that she was acting as such.

Next subject. Has equity jurisdiction of this case? We answer that it has. The bill says that J. A. Gooch, C. H. Gooch, and the plaintiff, Ellen A. Gooch, made to Fox a note of $850 to raise money to pay off debts owing by B. P. Gooch, husband of Ellen A. Gooch, and father of J. A. Gooch and Charles Gooch, and secured it by deed of trust on the real estate left by B. P. Gooch, which deed of trust was on the real estate sought to be subjected in this suit, which deed of trust is an exhibit of the bill; and that the plaintiff as one of the makers of the note paid the note, and that J. A. Gooch never paid the plaintiff his part of the note, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have contribution from his estate of one third of the sum paid by her, and claimed the right to subject the real estate covered by the trust deed, the third descending to J. A. Gooch from his father, for his portion of the debt. It is claimed that the bill does not sufficiently aver the facts authorizing subrogation. We think, as the bill alleges the execution of the deed of trust and exhibits it, that it is sufficient in this respect.

It is claimed that there is no right of subrogation or subrogation in favor of a debtor against a codebtor, as this deed of trust was released. We believe it is not claimed that a surety may not have contribution against a cosurety. That he has is well established. Sheldon, Subrogation, § 140; Wheatley v. Calhoun, 12 Leigh, 264, 37 Am. Dec. 654; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 223; opinion in Sands v. Durham, 99 Va. 263, 54 L.R.A. 614, 86 Am. St. Rep. 884, 38 S. E. 145, and note. But the claim is that, as the deed of trust was released, the deed of trust was dead, and there could be no subrogation, that the release reverted the title to the maker of the trust, and, until that release should be set aside by a legal adjudication, there could be no subrogation. Some authorities support this position; but it is untenable under our law and a great weight of authority. A release does not prevent subrogation. 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 213; Sheldon, Subrogation, § 14. When payment is made, or release is made, the debt is dead in a court of law; but equity keeps it alive for the benefit of the surety or cosurety. A judgment paid is ended at law, but equity keeps it alive for the benefit of the surety. What is the difference between a receipt in full and a release? A multitude of authorities say that payment does not satisfy the judgment or other lien as between the debtor and surety. Therefore we hold that the plaintiff is entitled to subrogation under the deed of the trust.

But it is said that, though there was once a right to subrogation, it is lost by the statute of limitation of five years, the period applicable to the case of a surety demanding payment or contribution of his principal or cosurety. True, action at law would be barred; but this case is governed by the principle of subrogation. The party claims the right in equity under a deed of trust. A deed of trust has no limitation by statute. It is only subject to laches. Presumption of payment in twenty years bars it, unless repelled by evidence. The creditor has that limitation. He is not sooner barred. The surety takes the creditor's shoes, and can avail himself of the creditor's rights. So can the codebtor. The statute of five years does not apply. We are referred to Thayer v. Daniels, 110 Mass. 346. That is no authority, as it was an action at law, and I have said above that a law five years would bar; but we have a suit in equity for subrogation. The other case referred to is Junker v. Rush, 136 Ill. 179, 11 L.R.A. 183, 26 N. E. 499. That does support the contention, but contrary to a great volume of authority. It is a well-known principle that a note secured by a deed of trust may be barred, but that fact does not bar the lien of that deed, the note being one thing, the mortgage another; the one dead, the other yet alive. The creditor could not maintain action on the note, but could resort to his mortgage, though his note is barred. The surety takes the shoes of the creditor, and, as long as the creditor's right would not be barred, neither would the right of the surety. Criss v. Criss, 28 W. Va. 388; Evans v. Johnson, 39 W. Va. 299, 23 L.R.A. 737, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912, 19 S. E. 623. It is claimed that the trustee and creditor under the deed of trust should be parties, but are not. Why so? The deed of trust has been paid so that the creditor has no right. The deed of trust has been released, and the title has been divested from the trustee and reverted to the vendor or his heirs. What right has either involved in this suit? So we conclude that the plaintiff is entitled to contribution under the deed of trust for the Fox debt.

Another subject. Another demand of the plaintiff against the estate of J. A. Gooch is based on a promissory note made by J. A. Gooch to his mother for $2,000. This has been to me the only serious aspect of the case. It is claimed that this note rests on no binding consideration. The plaintiff herself states under oath that she paid out money for the education at college of her son J. A. Gooch, without any contract or understanding that he would repay her, and that she did not expect any repayment. Years afterwards, in consideration of money which she had so paid, he voluntarily gave her this note. That is really the consideration. Is that binding to make the note enforceable? We have several times decided in effect that, where a son claims for service rendered the father, he cannot recover, unless he proves an express contract, or the facts clearly show an expectation or intention on the part of the father to pay for the service. Cann v. Cann, 40 W. Va. 138, 20 S. E. 910; Riley v. Riley, 38 W. Va. 283, 18 S. E. 569; Harris v. Orr, 46 W. Va. 261, 76 Am. St. Rep. 815, 33 S. E. 257. I cite here the many cases found in 7 Enc. Dig. Va. & W. Va. Reports, 304, for the proposition that the law does not raise or imply a promise to pay for services or maintenance or education of a son by a parent on which an action can be based. There was not even a moral obligation on the part of the son to pay the mother for money paid for his education. There was no promise made at the time.

"A mere moral obligation, though coupled with an express promise, will not constitute a valuable consideration, and it is only where there is a precedent duty which would create a sufficient legal or equitable right if there had been an express promise at the time, or where there is a precedent consideration, that an express promise will create or revive a cause of action." Dan. Neg. Inst. § 182.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

I lay down the proposition that, to support an action on a contract, there must be a consideration enforceable at law, and that an express promise can only revive a precedent good consideration which might have been enforced at law through the medium of an implied promise, had it not been suspended by some positive rule of law, but can give no original cause of action if the obligation on which it is founded never could have been enforced at law, though not barred by any legal maxim or statute. 39 Am. St. Rep. 735. In that great work, Page on Contracts, § 319, p. 484, we read as follows: "Past services when rendered under such circumstances as to create no legal liability are not a consideration for a subsequent promise. Illustrations of such services are those rendered by father to son; past services rendered to a father by his daughters without any agreement for compensation; services rendered by a niece living in the family; support furnished a minor daughter by her mother, or medical attendance rendered to an adult." The same work, in § 310, page 460, says that, "if the promise which is invoked as a consideration is itself unenforceable for some reason outside of the form of the promise," it cannot be enforced. Where a father made an advancement to a child, and later the child gave the father his note for its repayment, the note was held not good. Page, Contr. § 310. There we find that past consideration is no consideration under circumstances not creating liability. I would cite for these principles 9 Cyc. 356; Stoneburner v. Motley, 95 Va. 788, 30 S. E. 364; Bailey v. Devine, 123 Ga. 653, 107 Am. St. Rep. 153, 51 S. E. 603; Shugart v. Shugart, 111 Tenn. 179, 102 Am. St. Rep. 779, 76 S. W. 821; Ogden, Neg. Inst. 60. As will be seen in the notes in 39 Am. St. Rep. 735, there has been conflict of authority on this subject, older English decisions holding such promises valid; but later English decisions, and the great current of American authority, holding such consideration as is present in this case is not good for a subsequent promise. This note was given years after the mother had spent money for her son's education without any promise or expectation, at the time, on the part of either of payment. The mother states, also, that she was distressed about not being able to dispose of a house, and the son said to her to sell it, and he would give her the note. It is not distinct what this meant. But this constitutes no shadow of consideration. So we must conclude that this note is not enforceable, and it was error to decree it against the estate of J. A. Gooch.

Josephine Gooch cannot complain that it was not ascertained whether the personal estate would pay indebtedness. She refused to present her accounts as executrix as demanded by decree, and would not reveal the personality, and, being sole devisee and the only appellant, cannot complain of this.

It is complained that sale was decreed subject to the dower of Ellen A. Gooch, widow of B. P. Gooch. This is error. Provision as to it should have been made. Sommerville v. Sommerville, 26 W. Va. 484. Nor was any provision made as to dower of Josephine Gooch.

There is error in decreeing interest from 1st day of October, 1907. Interest on principal should have been brought down to date of decree, and interest given on total from that date.

Too much was decreed for taxes paid by Ellen A. Gooch; but this was not excepted to.

We reverse the decree, and remand the cause for further proceeding.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT. (In Banc.)

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, by U. S. Webb, Attorney General,
v.

BANK OF SAN LUIS OBISPO et al.,
Appts.

(159 Cal. 65, 112 Pac. 866.)

Statute — repeal pending action — effect.

1. The repeal of a statute authorizing the

Note. — Effect of repeal of civil statute pending motion for new trial or appeal from judgment based thereon.

The effect of a repeal, without a saving clause, of a penalty statute or ordinance upon a prior conviction or recovery of penalty thereunder, is treated in the note to Wichita v. Murphy, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 243.

The scope of the present note as indicated by its title does not require the inclusion of cases which the repeal of a statute during the pendency of an appeal has had the effect to convert into moot questions,—as where an injunction is sought against the enforcement of the repealed enactment,—or of cases in which the repeal has the effect to deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction; but is limited to the question whether the rule that the repeal of a statliquidation of an insolvent bank and the placing of its affairs in possession of a receiver, pending appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial after judgment against the bank in such proceeding had been affirmed on direct appeal, which motion did not operate to stay execution of the judgment, does not, in case the order is affirmed, affect any proceeding which had been taken under the statute, or judgment entered.

Same — repeal pending appeal — effect.

2. The repeal of a statute authorizing the liquidation of an insolvent bank and placing its affairs in the hands of a receiver, after a judgment against the bank in proceedings taken in accordance with its terms had been affirmed on appeal, and a subsequent motion for a new trial had been denied, does not affect the right of the bank to prosecute an appeal from the order, where the procedure governing such actions is that which applies to civil actions generally.

(December 28, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for San Luis Obispo County in plaintiff's favor, authorizing the liquidation of an insolvent bank and placing its affairs in the hands of a receiver, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James L. Crittenden for appellants.

Messrs. U. S. Webb, Attorney General, and R. C. Van Fleet, for the People.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the banking act of 1903 (Stat. 1903, chap. 266), action was begun in the name of the people of the state of California by the attorney general, as contemplated by the provisions of the act, for a decree declaring the defendant, Bank of San Luis Obispo, insolvent, ordering it into involuntary liquiute will destroy all rights of action based thereon which are not so perfected that a subsequent repeal of the statute will not affect them, and which have not proceeded to final judgment, is applicable where the statute is repealed during the pendency of a motion for a new trial or of an appeal.

That it is so applicable where the pendency of the appeal has the effect of preventing the judgment of the court below from becoming final seems to be well settled.

Thus in Ettor v. Tacoma, 57 Wash. 50, 106 Pac. 478, 107 Pac. 1061, it is said: "That the repeal of a statute conferring jurisdiction or creating a right of action without a saving clause takes away all right to proceed, and that the repealed act will be considered as if it never existed, except for the purposes of those actions or suits which have been prosecuted and condation, and restraining it from the transaction of a banking business. This action proceeded to judgment in accordance with the complaint of the people, and a receiver was appointed by the court to administer its affairs in liquidation. On appeal to this court the judgment of the trial court was in all respects affirmed (People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 154 Cal. 194, 97 Pac. 306), and this judgment became final in September, 1908. On June 19, 1908, the trial court denied the defendant banks motion for a new trial, and from this order an appeal was taken to this court. Pending the decision on this appeal from the trial court's order refusing to grant the motion for a new trial, the banking act of 1903 (Stat. 1903, chap. 266), under the authority of which this action was prosecuted and these proceedings had, was repealed by the banking act of 1909 (Stat. 1909, chap. 76), which latter act made no provision for continuing in force any pending proceedings or litigation under the repealed act.

The Bank of San Luis Obispo now moves this court to vacate and set aside the judgment given against it, and to direct the trial court to dismiss this action upon the ground that the repeal of the banking act of 1903 put an end to all litigation pending under it, and that within the meaning of the law, the action of the people of the state of California against the Bank of San Luis Obispo was litigation pending and undetermined. The principle which appellant invokes has thus been stated: "When a cause of action eluded which it was an existing law, has been so often stated in the books that it has become axiomatic. It is even held that a repeal after judgment but before entry of judgment works a discontinuance of the suit, and that a repeal pending an appeal to the higher court charged the appellate court with the duty of declaring the litigation ended without right of further prosecution."

As long as the other party has a right of exception to any judgment which may have been rendered in an action based upon statute, such judgment is not final, and the repeal of the statute deprives the courts of any further jurisdiction of the case. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Lumpkin, 99 Ga. 647, 28 S. E. 74.

The repeal of a statute providing for the alteration of the boundary between two school districts upon the petition of a majority of their citizens was held, in School Dist. No. 11 v. School Dist. No. 20, 63 Ark. 543, 39 S. W. 850, to affect a proceeding pending upon appeal; although, in view of the fact that for the purposes of the case there was no essential difference between the statute repealed and the one repealing it, the proceeding did not abate.

Where a judgment awarding a writ of mandamus to compel a village to pass an ordinance disconnecting territory did not so far perfect the rights of the plaintiffs to have their lands disconnected that such disconnection could be carried into effect independently of the statute, and solely and by virtue of the judgment, the repeal of the statute under which it was sought to compel such disconnection during the pendency of the appeal compels a reversal of the judgment. Vance v. Rankin, 194 Ill. 625, 88 Am. St. Rep. 173, 62 N. E. 807; Burchett v. People, 197 Ill. 593, 64 N. E. 543; Bradley v. Martin, 100 Ill. App. 668.

An appellate court will affirm the decree granting an injunction against the opening of a road, where the act under which the proceedings to open the road were taken has been repealed, without any saving clause. Wade v. St. Mary's Industrial School, 43 Md. 178.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The repeal of a statute allowing the auditor of public accounts to assess a tax under certain circumstances, to pay a county subscription for railroad stock, although after rendition of a judgment and pending an appeal, puts an end to proceedings to compel the levy. Mugrove v. Vicksburg & N. R. Co. 50 Miss. 877.

The repeal of a statute requiring a bridge to be built, during the pendency of an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action for mandamus to compel the county commissioners to build the bridge, abates the action; but the judgment below as to the costs will stand. Wikel v. Jackson County, 120 N. C. 451, 27 S. E. 117.

The action of the court below in declining to decree the forfeiture of a slave in a proceeding under a statute providing for the forfeiture of a slave illegally imported will not, even if erroneous, be reversed by an appellate court, where the law on which such proceeding was based has been repealed pending the appeal. State v. Edward, 5 Mart. (La.) 474.

Conversely, where the enactment of a statute operates to enlarge the rights of a party, the appellate court must render its decision in conformity thereto. Thus, in Price v. Nesbitt, 29 Md. 263, it was held that a judgment denying an application for the removal of a suit to another court in order to obtain an impartial trial, although right and proper under the law then in force, would be reversed where subsequent legislation enlarging such right rendered proper the granting of the application.

Error in rendering judgment for the plaintiff, where the defense was established at the trial that, by reason of the failure of plaintiff, a banking corporation, to comply with certain statutory requirements, it was precluded from maintaining any action in the courts of the state, is released by the repeal, pending an appeal of the case, of the statute on which such defense is based. First Nat. Bank v. Henderson, 101 Cal. 307, 35 Pac. 899.

A decision will not be reversed because of error in receiving an unstamped note in is founded on a statute, a repeal of the statute before final judgment destroys the right, and a judgment is not final in this sense so long as the right of exception thereto remains." 1 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 2d ed. § 285. And, says Cyc. (vol. 36, p. 1228): "As a general rule, the repeal of a statute without any reservation takes away all remedies given by the repealed statute, and defeats all actions pending under it at the time of its repeal. The rule is especially applicable to the repeal of statute creating a cause of action, providing a remedy not known to the common law, or conferring jurisdiction where it did not exist before, and is carried to such extent as to abate proceedings pending upon appeal after verdict in favor of plaintiff. A suit, the continuance of which is dependent upon the statute repealed, stops where the repeal finds it." But a consideration of the leading adjudications becomes necessary to determine the precise meaning of the language thus employed,—how broad may be its scope and to what extent the principle is carried.

In Surtees v. Ellison, 9 Barn. & C. 752, the question was whether the evidence of trading which was sufficient to have supported the judgment of bankruptcy under the act of 5th George II. would support a commission in bankruptcy issued, if all previous statutes had been repealed, and the controlling statute was that of 6th George IV. The court of King's bench held that the acts must be those contemplated by the existing statute; in this connection Lord Tenterden saying: "It has been long established that, when an act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered (except as to transactions past and closed) as if it had never existed." And to the same effect is Key v. Goodwin, 4 Moore & P. 341, where, the question being similar, Lord Chief Justice Tindal declared: "I take the effect of repeal-evidence, where the statute by which the note was rendered inadmissible has been repealed. Atwell v. Grant, 11 Md. 104.

The appellate court will not reverse a decree refusing an injunction against the erection of a rival telephone system, however erroneous, when, pending appeal, the exclusive franchise upon which the plaintiff's claim is founded has been rendered nugatory and void. Muskogee Nat. Teleph. Co. v. Hall, 4 Ind. Terr. 18, 64 S. W. 600.

Where, after a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in an action brought under a statute authorizing the recovery of six times the value of timber converted or obstructed in its passage down a river, and while the action was pending for review, the statute upon which the action was founded was repealed, the suit must be dismissed. Sumner v. Cummings, 23 Vt. 427.

A proceeding for the establishment of a drainage ditch is terminated with the repeal of the statute under which it was established, after the proceeding has been remanded to the lower court, and before further steps have been taken. Taylor v. Strayer, 167 Ind. 23, 119 Am. St. Rep. 469, 78 N. E. 236.

In Springfield v. Worcester, 2 Cush. 52, which was an action brought by one town against another for the expense of caring for a sick pauper, and where a verdict had been rendered and questions of law reserved before the repeal of the statute on which the action was founded had become effective, it was held that the court had power, in order to prevent failure of justice, both at common law and under a statute providing that "whenever any motion for a new trial shall be overruled, the court shall render judgment as of the term when the verdict was rendered, whenever it shall be necessary or expedient so to do in order to secure the rights of the prevailing party, or prevent any loss by reason of the death of either party, or otherwise," to cause judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc as of a day previous to that when the repeal became effective.

ment to be entered nunc pro tunc as of a day previous to that when the repeal became effective.

In Curran v. Owens, 15 W. Va. 208, the court, in stating the rule that if, pending an action depending solely upon statute, before there is a judgment, the law which gives the right to bring the suit is repealed without a saving clause as to suits pending, no further step towards judgment can be taken, raised the question whether, if there has been a final judgment in the inferior court, such judgment may be annulled in the appellate on the ground that after it was rendered the law giving the right to the action has been repealed; but, it not being necessary to decide the question, did not discuss it.

That a final judgment cannot be affected by the repeal of the statute under which it was rendered is held in Osborn v. Sutton, 108 Ind. 443, 9 N. E. 410, in which the repealing act seems to have taken effect during the pendency of the appeal.

Where the writ of error does not vacate the judgment below, which continues in force until reversed, the appellate court cannot send the case back to the court below with instructions to enter a judgment of nonsuit, because, since the judgment below and while the writ of error has been pending, the statute authorizing the action has been repealed. Kansas P. R. Co. v. Twombly, 100 U. S. 78, 25 L. ed. 550.

The passage of a statute having the effect to confirm the title of defendants in an action to quiet title and recover possession, after the judgment of the court below has been rendered, and during the pendency of a writ of error, cannot affect the decision of the appellate court, where the writ of error does not vacate the judgment below. Northern P. R. Co. v. Ely, 197 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 639, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 302.

E. S. O.

ing a statute to be to obliterate it as completely from the records of the Parliament as if it had never passed, and that it must be considered as a law that never existed, except for the purpose of those actions or suits which were commenced, prosecuted, and concluded whilst it was an existing law." Rex v. Justices of Peace, 3 Burr. 1456, was an application for mandamus to require the justices to proceed in a matter pending before them after the act regulating the proceeding had been repealed. The matter was regularly before them for consideration, and had by them been adjourned without decision until a day after the repealing act took effect, whereupon they refused further to proceed. The court found the case to be one of great inconvenience and great hardship. "The legislature had the whole affair under their consideration, and they have not thought fit to reserve any jurisdiction to the justices after the 19th of November, 1761." Therefore "Lord Mansfield was very clear, and all the rest of the court concurred with him, 'that no jurisdiction now remained in the sessions.'"

In United States v. The Peggy, 1 Cranch, 103, 2 L. ed. 49, the schooner Peggy was seized as a prize, and by decree of the circuit court condemned and forfeited. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. While the appeal was pending, a treaty was entered into between the United States and France, whereby property not definitely condemned was to be restored to the original owner. Chief Justice Marshall held that the pending appeal forbade the conclusion that the property had been definitely condemned, since the judgment of condemnation had been appealed from and was undecided at the time when the treaty took effect; that therefore, in contemplation of the treaty, the property was not definitely condemned and should be restored, the chief justice saying: "It is, in the general, true that the province of an appellate court is only to inquire whether a judgment, when rendered, was erroneous or not; but if, subsequent to the judgment, and before the decision of the appellate court, a law intervenes and positively changes the rule which governs, the law must be obeyed, or its obligation denied. . . . In such a case the court must decide according to existing laws, and if it be necessary to set aside a judgment rightful when rendered, but which cannot be affirmed but in violation of law, the judgment must be set aside." In Yeaton v. United States, 5 Cranch, 281, 3 L. ed. 101, the schooner and its cargo had been condemned for violation of an act prohibiting intercourse with certain designated ports on the Island of St. Domingo. Judgment of condemnation was pronounced by the district court. This condemnation was affirmed upon appeal by the circuit court, and from this judgment, in turn, an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. While this appeal was pending, the time limit of the law under which the proceedings were taken expired, and the law's existence ceased. Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the court, declared that in admiralty cases an appeal suspends the sentence altogether, and that the judgment is not res judicata until the final sentence of the appellate court be pronounced, and that the cause in the appellate court is to be heard de novo as if no sentence had ever been passed, and, "if no sentence had been pronounced, it has long been settled, on general principles, that after the expiration or repeal of a law no penalty can be enforced nor punishment inflicted for violations of the law committed while it was in force, unless some special provision be made for that purpose by statute." The Rachel v. United States, 6 Cranch, 329, 3 L. ed. 239, was decided upon the principle governing Yeaton v. United States, supra. Under the sentence of condemnation the schooner Rachel had been sold and the proceeds of the sale paid over to the United States while the act was in force. The Supreme Court made a general order for restitution of the property condemned, leaving it to the district court to say whether that order for restitution would be complied with by order for the payment over of the proceeds of the sale, as prayed for by claimants. In Maryland v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 3 How. 534, 11 L. ed. 714, Chief Justice Taney, in a brief sentence, expounds the reason for the rule as follows: "The repeal of the law imposing a penalty is itself a remission." In Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 25 L. ed. 231, Chief Justice Waite declares: "It is equally well settled that if a law conferring jurisdiction is repealed, without any reservation as to pending cases, all such cases fall with the law." But this language was employed under the following state of facts: An act concerning jurisdiction in certain cases upon the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia had been repealed. At the time the repeal became operative, the case was pending before the Supreme Court under a writ of error. The court declared that the single question was "whether there is any law now in force which gives us authority to re-examine, reverse, or affirm the judgment in this case," and held that the repeal of the law conferring jurisdiction deprived the court of jurisdiction. And to the argument that the appellants were derived of a remedy secured to them by the earlier law, and of which they had availed themselves before the repeal of that law, it was answered: "But a party to a suit has no vested right to an appeal or a writ of error from one court to another. Such a privilege once granted may be taken away, and, if taken away, pending proceedings in the appellate court stop just where the rescinding act finds them, unless special provision is made to the contrary." Of like import is Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Ritchie, 5 Wall. 541, 18 L. ed. 540, where Chief Justice Chase delivered the opinion of the court. The chief justice there says: "It is clear that when the jurisdiction of a cause depends upon a statute, the repeal of the statute takes away the jurisdiction." But this was addressed to an action brought when the parties were citizens of the same state, under the act of 1833, contemning such actions. It had been repealed before judgment pronounced, and it was held that the action must fall. In Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L. ed. 264, the same principle is announced by the chief justice. That case also was one where, when the court came to consider an appeal properly taken, it was confronted with the fact that after the appeal had been taken, the law authorizing it had been repealed. Chief Justice Chase, again delivering the opinion of the court, dismissing the appeal, says: "What, then, is the effect of the repealing act upon the case before us? We cannot doubt as to this. Without jurisdiction the court cannot proceed at all in any cause. Jurisdiction is power to declare the law, and when it ceases to exist the only function remaining to the court is that of announcing the fact and dismissing the cause. And this is not less clear upon authority than upon principle. . . . The general rule, supported by the best elementary writers, is that, 'when an act of the legislature is repealed, it must be considered, except as to transactions past and closed as if it never existed.' And the effect of repealing acts upon suits under acts repealed has been determined by the adjudications of this court. The subject was fully considered in Norris v. Crocker, and more recently in Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Ritchie. In both of these cases it was held that no judgment could be rendered in a suit after the repeal of the act under which it was brought and prosecuted. . . . Judicial duty is not less fitly performed by declining ungranted jurisdiction than in exercising firmly that which the Constitution and the laws confer." Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. 429, 14 L. ed. 210, was an action brought under the "fugitive slave act," to recover from defendant a penalty prescribed by that act against one who aided a slave to escape. While the action was pending, and before it had passed to judgment, the provisions of the act fixing the penalty were repealed. Addressing itself to this state of facts, the Supreme Court says: "As the plaintiff's right to recover depended entirely on the statute, its repeal deprived the court of jurisdiction over the subject-matter. And, in the next place, as the plaintiff had no vested right in the penalty, the legislature might discharge the defendant by repealing the law." To like effect, in Assessors v. Osborne (Gates v. Osborne), 9 Wall. 567, 19 L. ed. 748, where, upon the authority of Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Ritchie, supra, it is declared that, where jurisdiction depends wholly on a statute, suits brought during the existence of the statute fall with its repeal. United States v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 88, 20 L. ed. 153, was a criminal case. Tynen was indicted under the act of 1813. The judges of the circuit court divided upon the question of the sufficiency of the indictment. They certified the case to the Supreme Court. While it was there pending, Congress repealed the act of 1813, and it was held that the prosecution of Tynen fell with the repeal. In Re Hall, 167 U. S. 38, 42 L. ed. 69, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 723, a judgment given in the court of claims was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States because interest on the original claim had been improperly allowed. The case was remanded to the court of claims for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of the Supreme Court. The mandate of the Supreme Court was filed in the court of claims, an application was made for judgment in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court, and, pending the decision upon this application, the act of Congress authorizing the original judgment was repealed, and the court of claims declined to enter the judgment as prayed for. The plaintiff thereupon made an application to the Supreme Court for mandamus to require the court of claims to enter the judgment. It was held that the effect of the repealing act was to take away the jurisdiction of the court of claims to proceed further in any case founded upon the repealed act. But the Supreme Court distinctly held that its decision was not to be construed as an intimation that the court of claims would not have jurisdiction to entertain and grant a motion on the part of the petitioner to reinstate the original judgment without interest. In Flanigan v. Sierra County, 196 U. S. 553, 49 L. ed. 597, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 314, the question arose as to the effect of a repeal of an ordinance construed as a revenue ordinance upon proceedings begun before the repeal and pending after it. The action had been commenced in the superior court of the county of Sierra, state of California, by Sierra county, had been removed to the United States circuit court, where judgment was given against Flanigan, which judgment was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. He then obtained from the Supreme Court of the United States certiorari to the circuit court of appeals. The suit was brought on the 21st of June, 1900. On March 23, 1901, the ordinance was repealed. The action was at that time pending and undetermined, and the familiar principle is declared "that no proceedings can be pursued under the repealed statute, though begun before the repeal, unless such proceedings be authorized under a special clause in the repealing act. 9 Bacon, Abr. 226."

Taking up, in turn, the views embodied in the leading decisions of sister states: In Com. v. Duane, 1 Binn. 601, 2 Am. Dec. 497, the defendant was convicted under an indictment for libel against the governor of the state. He moved in arrest of judgment. While his motion in arrest of judgment was pending, the legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act "that from and after the passing of this act, no person shall be subject to prosecution by indictment" for libel as at common law. It was held that the judgment should be arrested, since it had not been pronounced, and that the court cannot "pronounce judgment and inflict punishment when the law declares that the defendant shall not be subject to prosecution." In Balch v. Detroit, 109 Mich. 253, 67 N. W. 122, under an existing statute, the city of Detroit had proceeded to condemn land for street purposes, trial was had as to the value of the property sought to be condemned, a verdict and award of the jury given, and judgment entered, from which neither party took appeal. The act under which these proceedings were taken was then repealed, and substituted therefor was another act containing no saving clause as to pending litigation, but providing specifically that all proceedings to take private property on the part of the city of Detroit should be held and prosecuted under the provisions of the later act. The city of Detroit refusing to pay the award, mandamus was sought to compel it to do so. It defended upon the ground that the repeal of the previous act forbade it from levying an assessment and collecting the amount of the award. But it was held that as the proceedings in confirmation had gone to judgment, and that the judgment had become final, the petitioners had the right to insist that the judgment should stand and to enforce payment of the amount awarded them under it. In Speckert v. Louisville, 78 Ky. 288, a fine was imposed upon the appellants for violating the provisions of a penal ordinance forbidding the sale of liquor on Sunday or after half past 11 o'clock at night. The appellants "suspended the judgments in the various actions against them" by appeal. During the pendency of the appeal, the ordinance imposing the penalty was repealed. Before the appellate court this fact was made known, and it was argued that there was no law in existence under which the judgments could be enforced. It is to be noted that the appeal herein and of itself had the effect of suspending the judgments. It is said: "The right of the legislature to repeal such laws cannot be questioned, and the mere fact that a party may be entitled to the benefits resulting from the prosecution of a penal action gives him no vested right to prosecute the action to a recovery, nor does the fact that a judgment has been rendered below vest him with such a right as cannot be defeated by legislative action had before execution." Sedgwick on Statutory Law is quoted, and Cooley's Const. Lim. 4th ed. 477, to the effect that, "if a case is appealed, and pending the appeal the law is changed, the appellate court must dispose of the case under the law in force when its decision is rendered."

In Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 324, the statute gave a judgment creditor a year from the date of the sale under the mortgage in which to redeem. A subsequent statute, after sale and while the time for redemption was running, shortened the time. After the passage of this act the redemption was attempted within the time limited by the earlier statute, but after the time prescribed by the later act. It was held that the later statute, though operating to shorten the time for the exercise of the previously existing right of redemption, was not unconstitutional; that rights specifically conferred by a statute are lost by its repeal, unless saved by express words in the repealing statute; that where the statute conferred jurisdiction, its repeal takes away all right of proceeding under the repealed statute, even in regard to suits pending at the time of the repeal, which pending proceedings rest for their support upon the jurisdiction conferred by the repealed statute; but that it is otherwise in respect to such civil rights as have been perfected far enough to stand independent of the statute, or, in other words, such as have ceased to become executory, and have become executed. In Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Crawford, 11 Colo. 598, 19 Pac. 673, after judgment obtained, but while the judgment was upon appeal, the statute prescribing a penalty against a railroad company for failure to file with the county clerk notice of the station at which a book should be kept for entering a description of animals killed was repealed, it was held that the repeal put an end to the proceeding, that the appellee could have "no such thing as a vested interest in an unenforced penalty." It is pointed out that the judgment for the penalty does not enforce the penalty, but the penalty must be enforced by the execution of the judgment, and that the power to enforce it had been suspended by the appeal. In Church v. Rhodes, 6 How. Pr. 281, under the law as it existed, a report of referees could be reviewed by rehearing. The provision for a rehearing was repealed, and it was held that the repeal applied to pending and inchoate proceedings; that is to say, to actions commenced before the passage of the repealing act, and in progress for rehearing at the time of the passage, and that the effect was to take away the right to a rehearing. In Vance v. Rankin, 194 Ill. 625, 88 Am. St. Rep. 173, 62 N. E. 807, the law required the trustees of a village to pass an ordinance disconnecting certain designated territory. Mandamus was sued out to compel the trustees so to do, and judgment as prayed for awarded. The trustees appealed from the judgment. While the appeal was pending, the legislature amended the law so as to make it discretionary with the trustees, rather than compulsory upon them, so to do. It was held that the new statute controlled, and that, by reason of the change in the law, it would be improper to enforce mandate where the existing law did not countenance it. In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Smith, 96 Ga. 569, 23 S. E. 899, plaintiff had obtained a verdict and judgment against the defendant under an act imposing penalties upon telegraph companies. Within the time allowed by law, defendant filed its motion for a new trial. The motion was overruled, and a bill of exceptions assigning error in the overruling of the motion for a new trial was sued out by the defendant. While the cause was in this condition, the penal statute was repealed. Says the supreme court of Georgia: "At the time the repealing act was passed, the plaintiff was not entitled to an enforcement of his judgment, and the case must be dealt with as one which was pending when the repeal took place." And then the court declares the established rule that when such a statute is repealed, it ends all pending litigation under it.

In this state it is provided by Code that any statute may be repealed at any time, except when it is otherwise provided therein, and persons acting under any statute are deemed to have acted in contemplation of this power of repeal. Section 327, Pol. Code. It is further provided that "the repeal of any law creating a criminal offense does not constitute a bar to the indictment or information and punishment of an act already committed in violation of the law so repealed, unless the intention to bar such indictment or information and punishment is expressly declared in the repealing act." Pol. Code, § 329. In People ex rel. Thorne v. Hays, 4 Cal. 127, the language of Lord Tenterden to the effect that, "when an act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered the same as if it had never existed," is quoted, with the comment that "no one will question the right of Parliament or the legislature to repeal statutes where subsisting rights are not disturbed or the obligations of contracts impaired." In McMinn v. Bliss, 31 Cal. 122, appeal from a judgment in an action of forcible detention and detainer had been taken. When the case came to be heard on appeal, a motion was made to dismiss upon the ground that the statute under which the action was brought had been repealed. The principle is recognized that the repeal of a statute under which alone a right of action exists operates as an extinguishment of all actions pending when the repeal takes effect, but it was held, for reasons stated, that the statute had not been repealed. In Lamb v. Schottler, 54 Cal. 319, proceedings were taken under an act which contemplated the creation of a board of water commissioners for the purpose of acquiring by condemnation the Spring Valley Waterworks of San Francisco. The supervisors and the board of water commissioners had taken certain steps under the act when the act was repealed. It was declared by this court that the repeal of the statute effectually annulled all proceedings had under it, unless the obligation of a contract would thereby be impaired, or a vested right destroyed, and that, by reason of the repeal, it was impossible for the supervisors and the water commissioners to proceed further. In Spears v. Modoc County, 101 Cal. 303, 35 Pac. 869, a fine had been imposed for violation of a municipal ordinance. Pending an appeal from the judgment, the municipal ordinance was repealed. It was held that such repeal operated as a remission of the penalty for the offense and the fine imposed for its violation, and that, notwithstanding a mistaken affirmation of the judgment by the superior court after the repeal of the ordinance, the enforcement of such a mistaken judgment would be restrained by injunction. It is said in this case: "By the appeal to the superior court, the enforcement of the judgment appealed from was stayed until after the determination of the appeal. Penal Code, § 1470. As no undertaking on appeal was required, the appeal itself operated as a supersedeas. McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 75. The effect of the appeal was therefore to preserve the rights of the parties in the same condition as they were prior to the entry of the judgment (Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co. 98 Cal. 304, 33 Pac. 123); and until the determination of the appeal, the proceeding was a pending action in which the rights of neither party had been conclusively determined." In First Nat. Bank v. Henderson, 101 Cal. 307, 35 Pac. 899, an action by the bank against the defendant upon an account stated, judgment was given in favor of the bank. One of the defenses was the failure of the bank to comply with the provisions of the act of April 1, 1876, requiring the bank to file with the county recorder or to publish the statements required by the act. The defense was established at the trial. Pending the appeal the legislature repealed this statute without a saving clause. It was by this court held that, while ordinarily it is the province of an appellate court to review the judgment of an inferior court as of the time when it was rendered, since ordinarily the judgment of a trial court is a determination of the rights of the parties as they existed at the commencement of the action, the rule was subject to exception, and such an exception was presented in this case, and that the modification of the rule is that if a case is appealed, and pending the appeal the law is changed, the appellate court must dispose of the case under the law in force when its decision is rendered. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 469. It was held that the statute requiring banks to file or publish their statements, under the penalty that a bank so failing could not maintain or prosecute any action, was in its nature penal; that when the legislature had remitted the penalty by repeal of the statute, the appellant was no longer able to avail himself of the privilege and defense which it conferred upon him. In Anderson v. Byrnes, 122 Cal. 272, 54 Pac. 821, an act authorizing a stockholder of a domestic mining corporation to recover from its directors a penalty for failure to comply with the provisions of the act was repealed while an appeal was pending in this court from a judgment given under the act. It was held that the repeal absolutely prevented any further prosecution of the litigation, and that, as no person has a vested right in an unenforced penalty, the proceedings must cease. In Napa State Hospital v. Flaherty, 134 Cal. 315, 66 Pac. 322, the action was brought by the state hospital to secure from defendant provision for the support of his son, an inmate of the asylum. The law countenancing this action had been repealed, and it was by this court held that, if the remedy for a right accorded solely by statute is repealed while the right is still inchoate, and not reduced to possession or judgment, the right is thereby lost, if the repealing statute contains no saving clause. In Ball v. Tolman, 135 Cal. 377, 87 Am. St. Rep. 110, 67 Pac. 339, the action was to recover a penalty under the provisions of an act for the better protection of stockholders. Judgment for plaintiff was entered in the trial court on January 9, 1897. Pending a motion for a new trial, the penal provisions of the act were repealed. The motion for a new trial was denied, and defendant then appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. This court affirmed the judgment and order. Ball v. Tolman, 119 Cal. 358, 51 Pac. 546. The remittitur issued on January 18, 1908. Neither this court nor counsel at the time of the affirmance in this court had actual knowledge of the existence of the repealing statute. Upon subsequent appeal to this court the judgment was vacated and annulled; this court holding, by reason of the repeal, it was without jurisdiction to proceed, and that, "in all cases where a court is rendered incompetent to proceed, its proceedings during such incompetency are as invalid as though it had never possessed jurisdiction." In Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674, plaintiff had recovered a judgment in a civil action under one of its ordinances prescribing a license fee to be paid by every attorney at law. By general statute the power to pass such an ordinance was taken away from municipalities. It was held: "The right given the plaintiff in this case being penal in its nature, and the remedy created solely by statute, its enforcement is dependent upon the statute alone. It is still inchoate, and not reduced to possession nor perfected by final judgment. In such case the repeal of the statute destroys the remedy, unless the repealing statute contains a saving clause."

These cases have been cited as fairly typifying the extremes of judicial determination, and as expressing the reasons upon which their rules of decision are based. In the case of penalties and crimes, the repeal operates to defeat all actions pending. In case of a statute conferring civil rights or powers, the repeal operates to deprive the citizen of all such rights or powers which are at the time of the repeal inchoate, incomplete, and imperfect. In the case of statutes conferring jurisdiction, the repeal operates by causing all pending proceedings to cease and terminate at the time and in the condition which existed when the repeal became operative. In cases of judgment pending upon appeal, the rule of decision is that the proceedings abate and the judgment falls. But the general expressions to this effect employed in the decisions are to be read in each case in the light of the facts which are there disclosed. Here the wise admonition of Chief Justice Marshall in Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 399, 5 L. ed. 290, applies with peculiar force: "It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit, when the very point is presented for decision. The reason of this maxim is obvious. The question before the court is investigated with care and considered in its full extent. Other principles which may serve to illustrate it are considered in their relation to the case decided, but their possible bearing on all other cases is seldom completely investigated." In every case where, after judgment, the proceeding has been declared to be "pending," there will be found a direct appeal from the judgment, which direct appeal either suspended the judgment so that it was not final and enforceable, or, as in Yeaton v. United States, 5 Cranch, 281, 3 L. ed. 101, worked a removal of the cause to the appellate court, where it was to be tried de novo. The reason given why the proceeding must abate under these circumstances is that, because of the suspension of the judgment by appeal, it is without finality; that to give it finality, the court of appeals must itself pronounce its judgment; and that in pronouncing its judgment it must be governed by the existing law. Therefore, when it finds that by the existing law the previous law, under which alone validity could be given to the judgment, has been repealed, the sole prop and foundation for support of the judgment has been removed, and of necessity it must be declared null and void. No case, however, has been found, and we venture to say none can be found, where a judgment which has been affirmed after direct appeal, and has by such affirmance become final during the existence of the statute supporting it, where the judgment itself has been in the process of execution within the law, and where rights have arisen by virtue of this legal execution of the judgment, has ever been held to be destroyed by a repeal of the statute supporting it, because the collateral proceeding of an appeal from an order denying a new trial is pending without supersedeas or stay bond. And to this consideration we now come.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Smith, 96 Ga. 569, 23 S. E. 899, would seem, at first glance, to be in opposition to the declaration just made. There a judgment under a statute imposing a penalty had been recovered. The defendant had moved for a new trial and had secured its bill of exceptions, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

assigning error in the overruling of its motion for a new trial. The supreme court of Georgia held that the situation disclosed was one which brought the case within the accepted rule, that the effect of the repeal is to abate actions for the statutory penalty then pending. But this is based, not alone upon the proposition that the repeal of a statute exacting a penalty is a remission of the penalty, unless at the time the repeal operates the penalty has actually been enforced, but still further the court points out that at the time of the repeal the judgment was in suspicion, and could not have been enforced. Here, not only had the judgment itself been affirmed upon direct appeal, but it was not stayed in law or in fact by virtue of the pending proceedings under the motion for a new trial. The Code of Civil Procedure declares (§ 1049) that "an action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied." In Gillmore v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 65 Cal. 63, 2 Pac. 882, it is said: "While proceedings are pending for the review of a judgment, either on appeal or motion for a new trial, the litigation on the merits of the case between the parties is not ended; and until litigation on the merits is ended, there is no finality to the judgment, in the sense of final determination of the rights of the parties, although it may have become final for the purpose of an appeal from it." This language is quite appropriate to the consideration then before the court. This court there did not have before it the question of the effect of a repeal of a statute upon a judgment which had become final by affirmance after direct appeal, but it was merely considering and interpreting a stipulation between parties, to the effect that judgment should be entered for plaintiff provided such judgment was given for plaintiff in another action between the parties, the same "to be entered when the judgment had become final." Its language was used solely with reference to the stipulation, holding that, within its terms, the judgment had not become final, by reason of the pendency of a motion for a new trial. In Sharon v. Hill (C. C.) 26 Fed. 337, 392, the case of Gillmore v. American Cent. Ins. Co. is quoted from and commented upon; the discussion in the Federal case being addressed to the proposition whether a judgment in a state court could be pleaded as res judicata while an appeal was pending both from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial. Upon the authority of Gillmore v. American Cent. Ins. Co., it is intimated, though not necessary to the decision, that the pendency of a motion for a new trial would be sufficient to forbid the reception of the judgment in evidence by way of res judicata or estoppel. But, upon the other hand, it is now well settled that where a judgment has been affirmed upon appeal, and has thus become final, or where the time for appeal has expired, the judgment may be pleaded as res judicata or in estoppel, notwithstanding the fact that proceedings upon a motion for a new trial are pending, which, if successful, would result in the overthrow of the judgment. In Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 Pac. 589, the matter is discussed, and the conclusions of the court may be summarized as follows: A motion for a new trial, in the absence of an order of the court to that effect, does not stay or suspend the operation of a final judgment. An action under § 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to be deemed pending while an appeal from the judgment is pending, or until the time for such an appeal has expired, but when the judgment upon appeal has been determined by an affirmance of the judgment, or when the time for appeal has expired, the judgment is admissible in evidence as res judicata, and to raise an estoppel in bar of the action. The same ruling as to the effect of a pending motion for a new trial upon the finality of a judgment is declared in Young v. Brehe, 19 Nev. 379, 3 Am. St. Rep. 892, 12 Pac. 564, and the soundness of the rule is intimated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hubbell v. United States, 171 U. S. 203, 43 L. ed. 136, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828, where it is said: "Indeed, it may well be doubted whether the pendency of a motion for a new trial would interfere in any way with the operation of the judgment as an estoppel."

In Spanagel v. Dellinger, 38 Cal. 284, it is said: "Under our system, from the entry of the verdict or filing of the findings of the court, the motion for new trial is a kind of episode, or, in a certain sense, a collateral proceeding,—a proceeding not in the direct line of the judgment,—for the judgment may be at once entered, and even executed, while a motion for a new trial is pending in an independent line of proceeding, which ends in an order reviewable on an independent appeal. The motion may be heard and decided, and an appeal taken on its own independent record, while the proceedings on and subsequent to the judgment may be still regularly going on, and even an independent appeal taken in that line." And this language is quoted with approval by this court in the later case of Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; while to the same effect is Houser & H. Mfg. Co. v. Hargrove, 129 Cal. 90, 61 Pac. 660, and 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 247, 65 Pac. 468. A broad difference exists between the operation and legal effect of a direct appeal from a judgment (which, while the appeal is pending, in the generality of cases, operates to stay the judgment absolutely, and in all cases operates to destroy for it any claim of finality), and the "collateral proceedings" of an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, taken after the judgment itself has become an enforceable finality by reason of its affirmance upon direct appeal. In the former case the courts, when the law which alone will support the judgment given has been withdrawn, have felt, and expressed themselves as, unable to proceed further with the litigation, since they themselves must pronounce a judgment, and can pronounce it, only under the authority of existing law. In the case of appeal from an order refusing a new trial, where no stay has been granted, and where, as here, the judgment has become a finality, the decision which the court renders is not upon the judgment appealed from, but upon the order appealed from; and while the effect of its reversal of the order will, of course, be necessarily the setting aside of the judgment, this, after all, is but an incident to the ruling which it makes, which ruling goes not at all to the sufficiency or finality of the judgment, but only as to whether, within familiar rules and limitations, the judgment was fairly given. Herein our motion for a new trial differs essentially from the common-law motion which was always heard and determined before entry of judgment, so that the appeal from the judgment embraced all questions. Under our system, the appeal from an order denying a new trial is a separate and independent appeal, which, if prosecuted in time, may be taken after the judgment has become final. Excepting when ordered by supersedeas or permitted by stay bond, it in no way suspends the judgment nor interferes with its finality. It is in this respect more in the nature of an equitable bill of review, which, while countenanced in proper cases, even after a judgment of affirmance upon appeal, never operated in and of itself to suspend the decree. Indeed, it has been so expressly declared by this court in Fowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 149 Cal. 151, 154, 86 Pac. 178.

We conclude, therefore, that, as the judgment had become final while the statute authorizing the action was in force, its finality is not disturbed by a pending motion for a new trial which does not operate in any way to stay the execution of the judgment; that as the statute authorizes the people upon the relation of the attorney general, to proceed in equity to have the bank declared insolvent, leaving the proceedings governing the action those which generally obtain in the practice of this state, the repeal of the statute did not destroy the right of the appellant to be heard upon this motion for a new trial; that, if the appeal from the motion for a new trial should be granted, it would necessarily have the effect of vacating the judgment; that, by virtue of the repeal, the action could then no longer be prosecuted; that if, however, the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial should be denied, and the order affirmed, the repeal of the statute would not affect any proceeding taken under it and under the judgment heretofore affirmed.

2. To the consideration of the appeal from the order refusing appellant's motion for a new trial, we now proceed. Many of the propositions advanced go to the alleged errors of the court in admitting evidence of the action and reports of the bank commissioners in the sequestration of the bank's property, and of their report that it was unsafe to permit the bank longer to continue business. They are based upon appellant's contention that, for specified reasons, the act itself is unconstitutional. The objections thus advanced have been completely answered in the opinion upon the appeal from the judgment and do not require further discussion. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 154 Cal. 194, 97 Pac. 306. See also State ex rel. Sparks v. State Bank & T. Co. 31 Nev. 456, 103 Pac. 407, 105 Pac. 567. The evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of the insolvency of the bank. That evidence disclosed that the assets of the bank amounted to $158,903.70; that the principal items of assets were inventoried as "bills receivable $133,332.56; profit and loss account of $5,022.69; and real estate and bank building at $19,000." The cash on hand was $367.35. The bills receivable consisted in large part of fifteen notes signed by the San Luis Land & Improvement Company, a note of the Breeze Publishing Company for $4,000, and $645.75 accrued interest, a note of James L. Crittenden for $22,268.13 principal and $7,779.64 accrued interest, and sundry other notes. The notes of the San Luis Land & Improvement Company were secured by mortgages upon real estate, and there was conflicting evidence as to the value of that real estate. The officers of the Bank of San Luis Obispo likewise constituted the officers of the San Luis Land & Improvement Company. On the debit side of the statement there were certificates of deposit amounting to $54,433.49. Some of these, with accumulated interest, were due and others coming due. Thus, upon July 24, 1906, there was due 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

$400 with accumulated interest upon a certificate of deposit of January 17, 1905, payable six months after date; also $473 upon a like certificate of July 18, 1905; $3,040, with accumulated interest, upon like certificate of February 6, 1905; and $20,000 upon a certificate of September 27, 1902, due and payable twelve months after date. Manifestly, these overdue demands could not be met from cash on hand of $367.35, and it appears that the answer which the bank officials made to the inquiries of the bank commissioners was that Mr. Crittenden, the president, was in San Francisco endeavoring to borrow money to meet the demands against the bank. Without further elaboration of the evidence, it is apparent that it sustained the finding of the court as to the insolvency of the institution.

Wherefore the motion to vacate and annul the judgment and dismiss the proceedings is denied, and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: Shaw, J.; Lorigan, J.; Melvin, J.; Sloss, J.

Petition for rehearing denied January 27, 1911.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

HENRY M. BAKER, Exr., etc., of Mary Baker G. Eddy, Deceased,

v.

CHARLES F. LIBBIE et al.

(210 Mass. 599, 97 N. E. 109.)

Injunction — against publication of letters.

1. An executor may enjoin the publication or multiplication of private letters of his testator, although they are upon commonplace subjects and have no literary merit, but he cannot enjoin the mere sale or trans-

Note. — Injunction: against publication or sale of letters.

The question stated in the title is treated in the note to Press Pub. Co. v. Monroe, 51 L.R.A. 360, wherein it is shown that the modern cases have universally given equitable relief against the unauthorized publication of all kinds of letters, whether they have a literary quality or not, upon the ground of the writer's property in his manuscripts.

In addition to the cases set out in the earlier note, see Roberts v. McKee, 29 Ga. 161, wherein, in holding that one member of a firm, after the dissolution of the partnership, will be restrained from publishing let-fer of such letters, in the absence of some special limitation imposed either by the subject-matter of the letter, or the circumstances under which it was sent.

Literary property — private letters — rights of writer and receiver.

2. The property right in the words of private letters is in the writer, and not in the receiver, except letters written by agents, and those where the conditions indicate that the property in the form or expression is in another than the writer; but the property right in the material on which the letter is written, with the right to transfer it, is in the receiver, in the absence of some special limitations imposed either by the subject-matter, or the circumstances under which it is sent.

(January 4, 1912.)

ters written to him by another member in the course of their business, and pertaining thereto, without the consent of the writer, at least where it did not appear that such a publication was required for purposes of justice, either civil or criminal, the court said: "Conceding that courts of equity act alone upon the principle of protecting the rights of property, and not upon the grounds that such publications tend to wound the feelings, to degrade or injure the author, and to expose him to personal abuse and litigation, or to disturb the peace of society, still we think the jurisdiction can be sustained on one broad and comprehensible ground at least; and one which, when announced, will tend greatly to promote confidence—the only solid foundation upon which society rests—by taking away the temptation to its betrayal; . . . and that is, by sending a letter, the writer has given, for the purpose of reading it, and in some cases of keeping it, a property to the person to whom the letter is addressed, yet that the gift is so restrained that, beyond the purposes for which the letter is sent, the property is in the sender;" and Cadell v. Stewart, 1 Bell, Com. 116, note, which is set out in BAKER v. LIBBIE, and in which it appeared that the sendee of the letters had given them to a bookseller, and that it was the publication by the bookseller that was interdicted at the suit of the children of the writer. See also Andrew v. Raeburn, L. R. 9 Ch. 522, 31 L. T. N. S. 73, 22 Week. Rep. 564, wherein an interlocutory injunction restraining the publication of certain private letters was granted.

The statement quoted in BAKER v. LIBBIE from Bartlett v. Crittenden, 5 McLean, 32, Fed. Cas. No. 1,076, was purely obiter, having been inserted in the earlier opinion merely by way of argument. As to Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 DeG. & S. 652, 1 Macn. & G. 25, 1 Hall & T. 1, 18 L. J. Ch. N. S. 120, 13 Jur. 109, which is also referred to in the BAKER CASE, it did not involve the right to prevent the publication of letters, but dealt with an analogous question.

The few cases upon the question under annotation decided subsequently to the de-
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

RESERVATION by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the determination by the Supreme Judicial Court of questions of law arising in an action brought to restrain the publication of private letters. Decree for complainant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Elder, Whitman, & Barnum and William A. Morse, for plaintiff:

Letters are literary property and entitled to protection.

Drone, Copyright, 133; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379; Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 426, 19 Revised Rep. 87; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush, 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509; Denis v. Leclerc, 1 Mart. (La.) 297, 5 Am. Dec. 712.

cision in Press Pub. Co. v. Monroe, 51 L.R.A. 357, to which the earlier note is appended, harmonize with the rules therein deduced. Thus in Labouchere v. Hess, 77 L. T. N. S. 559, 14 Times L. R. 75, it was held, apparently upon the ground that the writer retained a property right, that equity has jurisdiction to restrain the publication of private letters by the transferee of one to whom the sendee had given them. And the same reasons were adhered to in Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617, 36 Atl. 411, it being said that the writer of personal letters has a special property therein to prevent their publication, and that such right is one which can be adequately protected only in equity. And see Philip v. Pennell [1907] 2 Ch. 577, 78 L. J. Ch. N. S. 663, 97 L. T. N. S. 386, 23 Times L. R. 718, wherein, although admitting that the established rules of law would permit the enjoining of the publication or even paraphrasing of private letters written by the artist Whistler, relating to his habits of life and his personal opinions on current topics, and political, religious, and social matters, it was held that such rule did not prevent the lawful possessors of such letters, who intended writing a biography of such artist, from giving to the world through the medium of their book such information respecting Mr. Whistler personally,—his habits, character, opinions, and doings,—as a study of such letters would afford, so long as they did so without publishing the substance of any letter of which they were not entitled to publish the words.

As to whether injunction will issue to prevent the introduction of letters, etc., in evidence in judicial proceedings, see Barrett v. Fish, 51 L.R.A. 754, and note appended thereto.

The general question of equitable protection of personal rights is treated in the notes to Chappell v. Stewart, 37 L.R.A. 783, and Itzkovitch v. Whitaker, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1147.

As to rights and remedies of author who has parted with property right in work, see note to Cleveland v. Martin, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 629.

G. J. C.

The defendants have no right to sell or show the letters.

Drone, Copyright, 127; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; Werckmeister v. American Lithographic Co. 142 Fed. 830; Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379; Queensbury v. Shebbeare, 2 Eden, 329; Denis v. Leclerc, 1 Mart. (La.) 297, 5 Am. Dec. 712; Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2303; Sweetman v. Bentley (1871), Weekly Notes, 162; Rice v. Williams, 32 Fed. 437; Eyre v. Higbee, 22 How. Pr. 198; Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617, 36 Atl. 411; Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas. 815, 3 C. L. R. 625, 24 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 1 Jur. N. S. 615; Lytton v. Devey, 54 L. J. Ch. N. S. 293, 52 L. T. N. S. 121; Palmer v. DeWitt, 47 N. Y. 532, 7 Am. Rep. 480; Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 548, Fed. Cas. No. 10,784; Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & S. 652, 1 Macn. & G. 25, 1 Hall & T. 1, 18 L. J. Ch. N. S. 120, 13 Jur. 109; Kenrick v. Danube Collieries Co. 39 Week. Rep. 473; Aronson v. Baker, 43 N. J. Eq. 365, 12 Atl. 177; Crowe v. Aiken, 2 Biss. 208, Fed. Cas. No. 3,441; Gilbert v. Star Newspaper Co. 11 Times L. R. 4; Keene v. Kimball, 16 Gray, 545, 77 Am. Dec. 426; Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 32, 43 Am. Dec. 480; United States v. Tanner, 6 McLean, 128, Fed. Cas. No. 16,430; Macgillivray, Copyright, pp. 221, 222, 225; Drone, Copyright, pp. 127, 131; Copinger, Copyright, 53; 25 Cyc. 1491, 1493 "Literary Property."

Messrs. William M. Prest and Frank B. Livingstone, for defendants:

The plaintiff has no literary property in the letters.

St. Hubert Guild v. Quinn, 64 Misc. 336, 118 N. Y. Supp. 582, 16 Cyc. 854; Curtis, Copyright, 11; M. Steinert & Sons v. Tegen, 207 Mass. 397, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1013, 93 N. E. 584; Knowles v. Knowles, 295 Mass. 294, 91 N. E. 213; Hoyt v. Mackenzie, 3 Barb. Ch. 324, 49 Am. Dec. 178; Perceval v. Phipps, 2 Ves. & B. 19, 13 Revised Rep. 1; Wetmore v. Scovell, 3 Edw. Ch. 515; Dickson v. Marshall, 18 Scot. L. Rep. 651; 2 High, Inj. 4th ed. § 1012 & Note; Article, Prof. Joel Parker, 1 Am. L. Reg. 469; 4 Harvard L. Rev. 193, "The Right to Privacy;" Chappell v. Stewart, 82 Md. 323, 37 L.R.A. 784, 51 Am. St. Rep. 476, 33 Atl. 542; Itzkovitch v. Whitaker, 115 La. 479, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1149, 112 Am. St. Rep. 272, 39 So. 499; Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342; Thompson v. Stanhope, 2 Ambl. 737; Denis v. Leclerc, 1 Mart. (La.) 297, 5 Am. Dec. 712; Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402, 19 Revised Rep. 87; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379, 11 How. Pr. 49; Lytton v. Devey, 54 L. J. Ch. N. S. 293, 52 L. T. N. S. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

121; Philip v. Pennell [1907] 2 Ch. 577, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 663, 97 L. T. N. S. 386, 23 Times L. R. 718; Story, Eq. 13th ed. §§ 946-948; Re Wheatcroft, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 97, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 669, 26 Week. Rep. 69; Oliver v. Oliver, 11 C. B. N. S. 139, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 4, 8 Jur. N. S. 512, 5 L. T. N. S. 287, 10 Week. Rep. 18; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush, 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509; Pollard v. Photographic Co. L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 345, 58 L. J. Ch. N. S. 251, 60 L. T. N. S. 418, 37 Week. Rep. 266; Merryweather v. Moore [1892] 2 Ch. 518, 61 L. J. Ch. N. S. 505, 66 L. T. N. S. 719, 40 Week. Rep. 540; Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Macn. & G. 25, 2 De G. & S. 652, 1 Hall & T. 1, 18 L. J. Ch. N. S. 120, 13 Jur. 109; Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. 122 Ga. 190, 69 L.R.A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 50 S. E. 68, 2 Ann. Cas. 561; Foster-Milburn Co. v. China, 134 Ky. 424, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137, 135 Am. St. Rep. 417, 120 S. W. 364; Vanderbilt v. Mitchell, 72 N. J. Eq. 919, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 304, 67 Atl. 97.

Assuming that the plaintiff has a literary property in these letters, the acts alleged against the defendant not only have not interfered, and will not interfere, with that literary property, but are lawful uses by the defendant of his property in the manuscripts.

Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2305; Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. 528, 530, 14 L. ed. 528, 529; Queensberry v. Shebbeare, 2 Eden, 329; Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402, 19 Revised Rep. 87; Philip v. Pennell [1907] 2 Ch. 577, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 663, 97 L. T. N. S. 386, 23 Times L. R. 718; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush, 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509; 2 High, Inj. 4th ed. § 1011; Bramwell v. Halcomb, 3 Myl. & C. 738.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, as executor of the will of Mary Baker G. Eddy, the founder of "Christian Science" so-called, seeks to restrain an auctioneer of manuscripts from publishing for advertising purposes and from selling certain autograph letters of his testatrix. These letters were written in her own hand by Mrs. Eddy, as is said, "during one of the most interesting periods of her career, that is, just after the first publication of her 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,'" in 1875. It is averred in the answer that the letters have no attribute of literature, but are merely friendly letters written to a cousin about domestic and business affairs. Extracts from the letters show that they refer to household matters, to health, and to the work she was doing. The questions raised relate to the existence, extent, and character of the proprietary right of the writer of private letters upon indifferent subjects not possessing the qualities of literature, and to the degree of protection to be given in equity to such rights as are found to exist. These points have never been presented before for decision in this commonwealth. The nearest approach was in Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 32, 43 Am. Rep. 480, where the rights of an author of a dramatic composition put upon the stage, but not printed, were protected against a rival presentation made possible by human memory (overruling upon this point the earlier case of Keene v. Kimball, 16 Gray, 545, 77 Am. Dec. 426), and F. W. Dodge Co. v. Construction Information Co. 183 Mass. 62, 60 L.R.A. 810, 97 Am. St. Rep. 412, 66 N. E. 204, where property rights in valuable commercial information distributed to subscribers in writing, in print, by telegraph or orally, were recognized and protected against use by a rival concern. Neither of these decisions touch at all closely the points involved in the case at bar.

The rights of the authors of letters of a private or business nature have been the subject of judicial determination in courts in England and this country for a period of at least one hundred and seventy years. The first English case was Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342, which was in 1741. It was a suit by Alexander Pope to restrain the publication of letters written by him to Swift and others. In continuing an injunction Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, after remarking that no distinction could be drawn between letters and books or other learned works, said: "Another objection has been made . . . that where a man writes a letter, it is in the nature of a gift to the receiver. But I am of opinion that it is only a special property in the receiver, possibly the property of the paper may belong to him; but this does not give a license to any person whatsoever to publish them to the world, for at most the receiver has only a joint property with the writer. . . . It has been insisted . . . that this is a sort of work which does not come within the meaning of the act of Parliament [as to copy-right], because it contains only letters on familiar subjects and inquiries after the health of friends, and cannot properly be called a learned work. It is certain that no works have done more service to mankind, than those which have appeared in this shape, upon familiar subjects, and which perhaps were never intended to be published; and it is this makes them so valuable."

Thompson v. Stanhope (1774) 2 Amb. 737, was a suit by the executors of Lord Chesterfield to restrain the publication of his now famous letters to his son, which the widow of the latter proposed to print and sell. Some of these possessed literary merit of a higher order. Lord Chancellor Apsley was "very clear" that an injunction should be granted, upon the authority of the foregoing decision and the somewhat kindred cases of Forrester v. Waller, 4 Burr. 2331, and Webb v. Rose, 4 Burr. 2330, where notes and conveyancer's drafts were held to be the literary property of the writer or his representatives, and Queensberry v. Sheb-bear, 2 Eden, 329, where the publication of a part of Lord Clarendon's History by a possessor of the manuscript was restrained.

Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402-426, 19 Revised Rep. 87, was decided by Lord Eldon in 1818. Letters apparently without literary or other special interest, by the plaintiff to the son of her husband, were the subject of the suit, and publication was restrained on the ground of the property right of the writer. In Lytton v. Devey, 54 L. J. Ch. N. S. 293, it was said: "The property in the letters remains in the person to whom they are sent. The right to retain them remains in the person to whom the letters are sent; but the sender of the letters has still that kind of interest, if not property, in the letters that he has a right to restrain any use being made of the communication which he has made in the letters so sent by him." See also Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & S. 652, 1 Macn. & G. 25, 43, 1 Hall & T. 1, 18 L. J. Ch. N. S. 120, 13 Jur. 109. This same principle was followed expressly in the Irish case of Granard v. Dunkin, 1 Ball & B. 207, 12 Revised Rep. 18, and in Labouchere v. Hess, 77 L. T. N. S. 559, 14 Times L. R. 75. There are several dicta to the same effect by great English judges. For example Lord Campbell said in Boosey v. Jefferys, 6 Exch. 580, at 583: "A court of equity will grant an injunction to prevent the publication of a letter by a correspondent against the will of the writer. That is a recognition of property in the writer, although he has parted with the manuscript, since he wrote to enable his correspondent to know his sentiments, not to give them to the world." Lord Cairns said, respecting correspondence in Hopkinson v. Burghley, L. R. 2 Ch. 447, at 448: "The writer is supposed to intend that the receiver may use it for any lawful purpose, and it has been held that publication is not such a lawful purpose." See also Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas. 815, 867, 962, 3 C. L. R. 625, 24 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 1 Jur. N. S. 615. The latest English case on the subject recognizes this as the well-settled rule. Philip v. Pennell [1907] 2 Ch. 577, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 663, 97 L. T. N. S. 380, 23 Times L. R. 718. In 1804 the Scottish court on the suit of his children interdicted the publication of manuscript letters of Robert Burns. Cadell v. Stewart, 1 Bell, Com. 110, note.

The earliest case in this country, Denis v. Leclerc, 1 Mart. (La.) 297, 5 Am. Dec. 712, arose in 1811. A single letter of no literary pretension was there in question, and its publication was enjoined, and the writer's property interest in the letter was distinctly upheld.

The question was elaborately discussed by Mr. Justice Story in Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901, who held that "the author of any letter or letters (and his representatives), whether they are literary compositions or familiar letters or letters of business, possess the sole and exclusive copyright therein; and that no persons, neither those to whom they are addressed nor other persons, have any right or authority to publish the same upon their own account or for their own benefit." In Bartlett v. Crittenden, 5 McLean, 32 at page 42, Fed. Cas. No. 1,076, Mr. Justice McLean said: "Even the publication of private letters by the person to whom they were addressed may be enjoined. This is done upon the ground that the writer has a right of property in his letters, and that they can only be used by the receiver for the purposes for which they were written." In Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379, the question was considered exhaustively, and all the earlier cases were reviewed. The conclusion was reached that the writer of even private letters of no literary value has such a proprietary interest as required a court of equity at his instance to prohibit their publication by the receiver. Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush, 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509, decided that "the recipient of a private letter sent without any reservation, express or implied," held "the general property qualified only by the incidental right in the author to publish and prevent publication by the recipient or any other person." In Barrett v. Fish, 72 Vt. 18, at page 20, 51 L.R.A. 754, 82 Am. St. Rep. 914, 47 Atl. 174, it was said "that a court of equity will protect the right of property in such [private] letters by enjoining their unauthorized publication." The same doctrine has been held, either expressly or by way of dictum, in Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14-22, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617, 36 Atl. 411; Rice v. Williams (C. C.) 32 Fed. 437; Eyre v. Higbee, 22 How. Pr. 198; Palmer v. DeWitt, 47 N. Y. 532-536, 7 Am. Rep. 480.

Against these opinions are Wetmore v. Scovell, 3 Edw. Ch. 515, and Hoyt v. Mackenzie, 3 Barb. Ch. 320, 49 Am. Dec. 178, decided respectively of Vice Chancellor Mc-

Coun and Chancellor Walworth while sitting alone. They were criticized and overruled in Woolsey v. Judd, supra, by a court of six judges. There are also certain doubtful dicta by a vice chancellor in Perceval v. Phipps, 2 Ves. & B. 19, 28, 13 Revised Rep. 1, which are relied upon as asserting a somewhat similar view. But it is not necessary to discuss them in detail, for this review of cases demonstrates that the weight of decisions by courts of great authority, speaking often through judges of high distinction for learning and ability, supports the conclusion that equity will afford injunctive relief to the author against the publication of his private letters upon commonplace subjects, without regard to their literary merit or the popular attention or special curiosity aroused by them.

The same conclusion is reached on principle and apart from authority. It is generally recognized that one has a right to the fruits of his labor. This is equally true, whether the work be muscular or mental or both combined. Property in literary productions, before publication and while they rest in manuscript, is as plain as property in the game of the hunter or in the grain of the husbandman. The labor of composing letters for private and familiar correspondence may be trifling, or it may be severe, but it is none the less the result of an expenditure of thought and time. The market value of such an effort may be measured by the opinions of others, but the fact of property is not created thereby. A canvas upon which an obscure or unskilful painter has toiled does not cease to be property merely because by conventional standards it is valueless as a work of art. Few products of the intellect reveal individual characteristics more surely than familiar correspondence, entries in diaries, or other unambitious writings. No sound distinction in this regard can be made between that which has literary merit and that which is without it. Such a distinction could not be drawn with any certainty. While extremes might be discovered, compositions near the dividing line would be subject to no fixed criterion at any given moment, and scarcely anything is more fluctuating than the literary taste of the general public. Even those counted as experts in literature differ widely in opinion, both in the same and in successive generations, as to the relative merits of different authors. The basic principle on which the right of the author is sustained even as to writings confessedly literature is not their literary quality, but the fact that they are the product of labor.

The existence of a right in the author over his letters, even though private and without worth as literature, is established on principle and authority. The right is property in its essential features. It is therefore entitled to all the protection which the Constitution and laws give to property. From this general statement are to be excepted special instances, such as letters by an agent to or for his principal and others, where the conditions indicate that the property, in the form or expression, is in another than the writer. The absolute right of the author to prevent publication by the receiver may also be subject to limitations arising from the nature of the letter or the circumstances under which it is written or received. Some of these are pointed out in Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901. But these exceptions are narrow and rare, and do not affect materially the general rule.

The extent of this proprietary right, as between the writer and the recipient of letters, requires a closer analysis. It depends upon implications raised by law from the circumstances. This test is a general one, and has been applied to the public delivery of lectures, the presentation of dramas, and other analogous cases. Abernethy v. Hutchinson, 3 L. J. Ch. 209, 1 Hall & T. 28; Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 32, 43 Am. Rep. 480; Nicols v. Pitman, L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 374, 380, 53 L. J. Ch. N. S. 552, 50 L. T. N. S. 254, 32 Week. Rep. 631, 48 J. P. 549. The relative rights of the writer and receiver may vary with different conditions. If there be a request for return, or if the correspondence is marked in definite terms, as personal or confidential, such special considerations would need to be regarded. The case at bar presents the ordinary example of friendly correspondence between kinswomen upon topics of mutual private interest. Under such circumstances, what does the writer retain and what does he give to the person to whom the letter is sent? The property right of the author has been described as "an incorporeal right to print [and it should be added to prevent the printing of, if he desires] a set of intellectual ideas or modes of thinking communicated in a set of words and sentences and modes of expression. It is equally detached from the manuscript or any other physical existence whatsoever." Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2303, at 2396. It has been called also "the order of words in the . . . composition." Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas. 815, 867, 3 C. L. R. 625, 24 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 1 Jur. N. S. 615; Holmes v. Hurst, 174 U. S. 82, 86, 43 L. ed. 904, 906, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros. 222 U. S. 55, 63, 56 L. ed. 20, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 20. The right of the author to publish or suppress publication of his correspondence is absolute in the absence of special considerations, and is independent of any desire or intent at the time of writing. It is an interest in the intangible and impalpable thought and the particular verbal garments in which it has been clothed. Although independent of the manuscript, this right involves a right to copy or secure copies. Otherwise, the author's right of publication might be lost. The author parts with the physical and material elements which are conveyed by and in the envelop. These are given to the receiver. The paper upon which the letter is written belongs to the receiver. Oliver v. Oliver, 11 C. B. N. S. 139, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 4, 8 Jur. N. S. 512, 5 L. T. N. S. 287, 10 Week. Rep. 18; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush, 480, 486, 92 Am. Dec. 509; Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 343; Werckmeister v. American Lithographic Co. (C. C.) 142 Fed. 827, 830. A duty of preservation would impose an unreasonable burden in most instances. It is obvious that no such obligation rests upon the receiver, and he may destroy or keep at pleasure. Commonly there must be inferred a right of reading or showing to a more or less limited circle of friends and relatives. But in other instances the very nature of the correspondence may be such as to set the seal of secrecy upon its contents. See Kenrick v. Danube Collieries Co. 39 Week. Rep. 473. Letters of extreme affection and other fiduciary communications may come within this class. There may be also a confidential relation existing between the parties, out of which would arise an implied prohibition against any use of the letters, and a breach of such trust might be restrained in equity. On the other hand, the conventional autograph letters by famous persons signify on their face a license to transfer. Equitable rights may exist in the author against one who by fraud, theft, or other illegality obtains possession of letters. The precise inquiry is whether indifferent letters written by one at the time perhaps little known or quite unknown, which subsequently acquire value as holographic manuscripts, may be marketed as such. This case does not involve personal feelings or what has been termed the right to privacy. 4 Harvard L. Rev. 193.

The author has deceased. Moreover, there appears to be nothing about these letters, knowledge of which by strangers would violate even delicate feelings. Although the particular form of the expression of the thought remains the property of the writer, the substance and material on which this thought has been expressed have passed to the recipient of the letter. The paper has received the impression of the pen, and the two in combination have been given away. The thing which has value as an autograph is not the intactable thought, but the material substance upon which a particular human hand has been placed, and has traced the intelligible symbols. Perhaps the autographic value of letters may fluctuate in accordance with their length or the nature of their subject-matter. But whatever such value may be, in its essence it does not attach to the intellectual but material part of the letter.

This exact question has never been presented for adjudication, so far as we are aware. There are some expressions in opinions, which dissociated from their connection may be laid hold of to support the plaintiff's contention. See Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14, 22, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617, 38 Atl. 411; Eyre v. Higbee, 22 How. Pr. 198; Palin v. Gathercole, 1 Colly. Ch. Cas. 565. It may well be that title such as appears to exist in the recipient may not go to the extent of being assets in the hands of a decedent, a bankrupt, or an insolvent. Eyre v. Higbee, 22 How. Pr. 198; Sibley v. Nason, 196 Mass. 125, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1173, 124 Am. St. Rep. 520, 81 N. E. 887, 12 Ann. Cas. 938. But on principle it seems to flow from the nature of the right transferred by the author to the receiver, and of that retained by the writer in ordinary correspondence, that the extent of the latter's proprietary power is to make or to restrain a publication, but not to prevent a transfer. The rule applicable to the facts of this case, as we conceive it to be, is that in the absence of some special limitation imposed either by the subject-matter of the letter, or the circumstances under which it is sent, the right in the receiver of an ordinary letter is one of unqualified title in the material on which it is written. He can deal with it as absolute owner subject only to the proprietary right retained by the author, for himself and his representatives, to the publication or nonpublication of ideas in its particular verbal expression. In this opinion, publication has been used in the sense of making public through printing or multiplication of copies.

The result is that an injunction may issue against publication or multiplication in any way, in whole or in part, for advertising or other purposes, of any of the letters described in the bill, and allowing the plaintiff, if he desires, to make copies thereof within a reasonable time, but going no further.

So ordered.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ALLEN THOMAS, by Next Friend, Appt.,
v.

HOUSTON, STANWOOD, & GAMBLE COMPANY.

(146 Ky. 156, 142 S. W. 214.)

Master — discharge of servant — bad conduct — clothing.

1. Contract authority to discharge an employee for bad conduct includes the right to discharge him for refusal to obey a rule requiring street clothes to be kept in the dressing rooms.

Trial — master — reasonableness of rule — question for court.

2. The question of the reasonableness of a rule promulgated by a master for the guidance of his servant is for the court.

Master — rule — reasonableness.

3. A rule that employees in a factory must keep their street clothing in the dressing room and away from machinery is reasonable.

Same — waiver — disregard.

4. An employee cannot, by habitually disregarding a rule, establish the right to treat it as waived, where he is reprimanded whenever his breach of the rule comes to the notice of the master.

(January 10, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Kenton County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged breach of a contract of employment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. F. Graziani for appellant.

Messrs. S. D. Rouse and C. B. Thompson, for appellee:

An employee must obey all reasonable rules and orders of an employer. Where there is an admitted violation and the rule or order violated is clearly reasonable, it is the duty of the court so to decide as a matter of law.

Jerome v. Queen City Cycle Co. 163 N. Y.

Note. — Discharge of employee for disobedience of regulations.

This note includes only cases where the employment was for a specified time, and the servant was discharged before the expiration of term for violation of rules or general orders of master. Cases involving a discharge for refusal to obey a specific order or command limited to the particular occasion have been excluded.

As a general proposition any act of a servant which injures or has a tendency to injure his master's business interests or reputation will justify his dismissal. 26 Cyc. 988.

The rule that an employer may discharge an employee for disobedience of regulation 351, 57 N. E. 485; Sterling Emery Wheel Co. v. Magee, 40 Ill. App. 340; Kendall v. West, 196 Ill. 221, 89 Am. St. Rep. 317, 63 N. E. 683; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 118, 119; Standidge v. Lynde, 120 Ill. App. 418; Butterick Pub. Co. v. Whitcomb, 225 Ill. 605, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1004, 80 N. E. 247; Walker v. Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 75 N. J. L. 281, 68 Atl. 113.

In the case of a discharge, the entire course of conduct of the employee prior to his discharge may be examined into, the inquiry not being confined to the disobedience occurring at the time of the discharge.

Jerome v. Queen City Cycle Co. 163 N. Y. 351, 57 N. E. 485; Siselman v. Cohen, 25 Misc. 529, 54 N. Y. Supp. 991.

seems to have the unanimous support of the authorities. The following are instances which were held to justify the master in discharging a servant for disobedience of regulations:

—overseer's control of slaves against known wishes and positive commands of owner. Lane v. Phillips, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 455.

—disregard by overseer of plantation, of owner's instructions, that overseer himself was not to chastise slaves. Kessee v. Mayfield, 14 La. Ann. 90.

—master's disobedience of owner's orders as to length of time vessel should remain in certain port. Guildford v. Anglo-French S. S. Co. 9 Can. S. C. 303.

—absence from duty of superintendent of factory, in violation of express orders. Jerome v. Queen City Cycle Co. 163 N. Y. 351, 57 N. E. 485.

—failure of traveling salesman to follow route list furnished by employer. Ball v. Livonia Salt & Min. Co. 8 Misc. 333, 28 N. Y. Supp. 537.

—failure of traveling salesman to follow instructions with reference to places to be visited and manner of making sales. Milligan v. Sligh Furniture Co. 111 Mich. 629, 70 N. W. 133.

—salesman's disobedience of rule that offers for goods made by customers should be submitted to employer, where less than price fixed by employer. Dunkell v. Simons, 15 Daly, 352, 7 N. Y. Supp. 655.

—traveling salesman's disobedience of instructions not to sell below certain price. Sabin v. Kendrick, 46 App. Div. 90, 61 N. Y. Supp. 336.

—continued violation by salesman of employer's instruction not to sell goods on consignment. Walsh v. New York & K. Co. 88 App. Div. 477, 85 N. Y. Supp. 83.

—failure of traveling salesman to obey instructions as to writing to employer daily. McCain v. Desnoyers, 64 Mo. App. 66.

—failure and refusal of solicitor for oil company to render daily reports as per instructions. Kenner v. Southwestern Oil Co. 113 La. 80, 36 So. 895.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Winn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On April 9, 1907, the appellee company entered into a written contract of employment of appellant, Thomas, whereby the latter was to work in the manufacturing plant of the former for a period of four years from September 24, 1906, at an annually increasing scale of hourly wages. In the contract it was agreed that the appellee would not discharge Thomas "except for neglect of work, inability to perform work in hand, or for bad conduct." On June 12, 1908, the company discharged Thomas, whereupon he brought his action against the company for an alleged breach of its contract. By an amendment he set up his effort and failure to obtain other —disobedience of instructions as to making out weekly reports. McEdwards v. Ogilvie Mill. Co. 5 Manitoba L. Rep. 77.

—use of sand to cut grease from roll of plate machine and to restore friction, after being instructed to cease using sand, and use fire clay. Matthews v. Park Bros. 146 Pa. 384, 23 Atl. 208, later appeal, 159 Pa. 579, 28 Atl. 435.

—disobedience of instructions not to sign employee's individual name to letters and correspondence relating to employer's business. Russell v. Inman, 79 App. Div. 227, 79 N. Y. Supp. 681.

—violation of rules of shop prohibiting smoking. Forsyth v. McKinney, 56 Hun, 1, 20 N. Y. S. R. 125, 8 N. Y. Supp. 561.

—failure of employee, sent to make collections, to transmit amounts collected according to express and explicit instructions. Voelckee v. Banner Brewing Co. 9 Ohio C. C. 318, 6 Ohio C. D. 80.

—disobedience by manager of stock farm, of owner's orders to make no sales of cattle unless owner was advised and consented. Von Heyne v. Tompkins, 89 Minn. 77, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 524, 93 N. W. 201.

—violation of rule of insurance company forbidding agents to collect premiums by mail. Walker v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 80 N. J. L. 342, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 153, 79 Atl. 354, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 526.

—employee's habitual disregard of employer's instructions to report daily at office at specified hours. Tullis v. Hassell, 22 Jones & S. 391.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 Ky. 667, 141 S. W. 389, it was said that there was no error in instruction to effect that railroad employee who permitted himself to be garnished in violation of rules of company might be properly discharged.

And in Hamilton v. Love, 152 Ind. 641, 53 N. E. 181, 54 N. E. 437, 71 Am. St. Rep. 384, it was held that to justify discharge of servant for violation of rules, the servant must have had notice of such rules.

J. H. B.

work, and by his evidence sustained this part of his case. Upon the principal issue the company answered, admitting the discharge, but justified it by charging that Thomas had for a long time neglected his work, on not less than three occasions had violated its rules and regulations, well-known to him, in force in its factory where he worked, that he was habitually indifferent to his work, and indifferent to and rebellious against those in authority over him,—that for these reasons, and none other, he was discharged. Issue was joined upon these allegations and the case proceeded to a trial. The court placed the burden upon the company.

Upon the trial, it appeared from the company's witnesses that Thomas had sometimes been slow in his work, would slow down the machine he was operating against the direction of his superior, and, according to one of his immediate overseers, was "the contrariest fellow he ever had in the shop." Thomas, upon the other hand, minimizes these instances as casual and of no consequence. He explains that an offensive answer to his superior was joking in spirit, and that he meant no rudeness. It appeared further in the evidence that one of the company's rules governing its operations was a regulation that the men should keep their street clothing in a dressing room maintained by it for that purpose, and away from the machinery at which the men were at work. This rule was persistently broken by Thomas, who was familiar with it, and notwithstanding complaint had been made to him because of his infraction of the rule. He says frankly that he knew the rule; that he had been spoken to about disobedience of it; that he told his superiors that he would discontinue the infraction, but that he did not do as he said he would. In persisting in this, his own, course of action against a rule which he knew, of however little consequence his own judgment may have deemed it, he was undoubtedly guilty of bad conduct, one of the specific grounds upon which he had agreed that the company might discharge him. There is no contradiction of the testimony upon this point; and it need therefore have no further consideration.

Upon the trial the court, among other things, instructed the jury, in substance, that they should find for the defendant company if they should find from the evidence that Thomas "wilfully or repeatedly disobeyed reasonable rules of the defendant adopted by it for the government of the defendant's employees in the performance of the work." To this instruction proper exception was saved by defendant company.

With this instruction and the testimony above outlined in the record, the jury brought in a verdict of $500 for Thomas. The company entered its motion, and filed its grounds for a new trial. Upon consideration a new trial was granted. Upon the second trial the evidence introduced was identical with that upon the first trial. The defendant again had the burden; and at the conclusion of all the testimony, upon motion therefor by the defendant, the court instructed the jury to find a verdict for it. From the final order of dismissal following such verdict, this appeal is prosecuted. As above pointed out, there can be no reasonable question that Thomas violated a rule of the defendant company. In the first trial the instructions left it to the jury to say whether that rule was "reasonable;" and we gather from briefs of counsel that the court granted the new trial because the presiding judge had reached the conclusion that the reasonableness of the rule was for the court to determine, not an issue for determination by a jury. Because of the fact of the infraction of the rule, and its view that that rule was reasonable, the trial court directed the verdict for defendant.

The point here for determination, therefore, is whether in contracts of employment the court or the jury is to decide that a given rule promulgated by the master to the servant for his guidance in the discharge of his duties is a reasonable or an unreasonable exercise of the master's authority and province. In our opinion that duty rests upon the court. The several courts of the Union are not in harmony. But in Kentucky the rule has been declared that the question of reasonableness is for the court, though without any elaborate discussion of the principle involved. In the case of Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Lovell, 141 Ky. 249, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 132 S. W. 569, it was said; "If a written or printed rule is reasonable, and not against public policy, and it is known to the employee or servant, or should be known by him, and the undisputed facts show it was established and in force and that it is applicable to him, and that his violation of it was the proximate cause of the injury he complains of, then the court should take the case from the jury." This statement carries the necessary deduction that the question of reasonableness is for the court. There is no difference in principle between a rule that is written and one that is not, especially when, as here, the servant's knowledge of the rule is conceded. The case cites as authority for its position the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crider, 107 Ky. 600, 54 S. W. 963, a case where the telegraph company had put in evidence its rule against night delivery of messages then in force at Elizabethtown. It was remarked that only the declaration of the courts could fix any permanent understanding of the subject, that, if it were left to the juries, one view would be taken by a jury to-day, and another to-morrow, and that neither party would know his rights or obligations. In the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Brasher, 136 Ky. 485, 124 S. W. 788, this court again said that the matter of whether a given rule was reasonable or otherwise was one for the court, and not the jury, to determine. The same idea is found in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whitemore, 43 Ill. 420, 92 Am. Dec. 138; Jerome v. Queen City Cycle Co. 163 N. Y. 351, 57 N. E. 485; Kendall v. West, 196 Ill. 221, 89 Am. St. Rep. 317, 63 N. E. 683; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 324, 24 S. W. 723; Walker v. Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 75 N. J. L. 281, 68 Atl. 113, and many other cases.

The propriety, the necessity indeed, of the promulgation of such wise and reasonable rules by the master to the servant for his guidance in a large and complicated manufacturing plant like that of appellee, cannot be questioned; for without them would be neither order nor system, nor could the company's business be expedited save by a compact working entity of its employees under such rules. Upon the other hand, they are just as necessary and desirable to the servant; for in the making of such rules by trained and experienced heads of departments, and in obedience to them by the servant, must in large measure lie the latter's safety of life and limb. It would be impossible for us to outline different demands of the many fields of employment in which such rules are proper, or the specific obligations which should be imposed in the different kinds of service. Each instance must be answered by its facts. But it seems to us that the rule as to clothing in the present case was beyond question reasonable. And while the employer in every case should exercise fair dealing, and kind treatment toward his employee, the latter, as well owes to the former to be faithful and diligent in the performance of his services, and to obey his reasonable rules within the nature of his employment. There is no doubt here that the rule was broken; and it follows that the discharge was justifiable.

It is argued that the testimony showed that Thomas's discharge was not because of the infraction of this specific rule, but because of his general conduct, and that his general conduct was for the jury to pass upon. But the specific instance of disobedience or bad conduct entered into and was a part of his general conduct, and was alone 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) sufficient to justify the discharge. About it there was no contrariety of evidence; and the court therefore properly took the case from the jury.

Nor is there any merit in the claim that his habitual disregard of the rule warranted him to treat it as waived; for the evidence shows that there was no acquiescence in, but continued complaint at, the breaking of the rule whenever it came under the notice of the master.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

WALTER B. DOUGLASS
v.

BELKNAP SPRINGS LAND COMPANY
et al.

(76 N. H. 254, 81 Atl. 1086.)

Dedication — purchase by plat — right to streets.

1. The purchaser of lots according to a plat is entitled to have the streets shown on the plat maintained only so far as their existence is material to the enjoyment of the lots purchased.

Same — notice of adverse claim — effect.

2. One who upon purchasing lots with reference to a plat is informed that a portion of the platted tract belongs to a stranger, and that he will do what he wishes with respect to the streets on that portion, cannot prevent the closing of such streets.

Same — plat of stranger — adoption.

3. One selling lots with reference to a plat made and recorded by another is bound to maintain the streets shown on the plat, so far as his grantee is interested in them.

Same — lack of space — effect.

4. The existence of a street shown on a plat upon the shore of a lake cannot be defeated as against claims of persons who buy lots with reference to the plat, by the fact that when the requisite number of lots is laid out according to course and distance no space will be left for the street.

Same — street on lake shore.

5. A purchaser of a lot in a platted tract on the shore of a lake is entitled to have a street shown on the plat to exist along the

Note. — Effect of conveyance of lands laid down on plats to prevent a change in the use or form of the property.

As to right of grantee to claim an easement, implied covenant, or estoppel, as against the grantor, by a call in the deed for a street or alley in which the grantor owns the fee, see the note to Talbert v. Mason, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 878.

The present note, like the one accompanying Herold v. Columbia Invest. & Real lake shore kept open, and it is immaterial that by reason of the configuration of the ground for a portion or the distance it can be used only as a foot path.

(December 5, 1911.)

TRANSFER by the Superior Court for Belknap County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of questions arising in an action brought to enjoin the obstruction of plaintiff's right of way. Case discharged.

In 1889, a tract of land on the lake shore, in Alton, was owned by the Winnepesaukee Land Company, which was divided by them into house lots with adjoining streets, one of which, called Lake Shore avenue, followed the shore line the entire length of the tract. A plat of the tract was recorded and lots sold by reference to it, several of which are owned by plaintiff. The unsold balance of the land was taken on execution, and in 1897 this land lying north of the railroad and bordering on the lake was owned by defendants Russell, and south of the railroad by the defendant company. Buildings were erected across Lake Shore avenue by the purchasers of certain lots. There was a mistake in the survey, and in one place there is considerably less width of land than is shown on the plan. Some of the inside lots border on the avenue, and buildings have been erected on them. Plaintiff knew of the building that was being done, but made no objection until this proceeding was begun.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Estate Co. 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, of which it is a continuation, is limited to the effect of a conveyance as regards the right of the grantee of a lot laid down on a plat to prevent a change in the use or form of the property.

The cases seem to establish three rules, viz.: The strict rule that the rights of the purchaser of a lot laid down on a plat as respects streets, etc., designated thereon, extends only to adjacent streets, etc., and their extensions to the next way; the rule that the purchaser's rights extend to streets, etc., even though remote, the existence of which is material to the enjoyment of his lot; and the broad rule that his rights extend to all the streets, etc., designated on the plat, whether they are continuous to his property or not.

The first class of cases is illustrated by Stover v. Steffey, 115 Md. 524, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 81 Atl. 33, wherein it was held that the doctrine of implied covenant as to streets, etc., arising from a reference to a plat in a deed, applies only to a way over lands platted as a street which are adjacent or contiguous to the lots sold, and extending only to the next street, and that therefore the purchaser of lots laid down on a plat is not entitled to enjoin the use of a lot designated on the plat as a "park," for other than park purposes, where such "park" lot is not adjacent to plaintiff's lot; and by Bartlett v. Harmon, 107 Me. 451, 78 Atl. 842, wherein it was said that in the absence of facts showing a contrary intention, the platting of lands and the sale of lots with reference thereto would constitute a dedication of a portion designated as a "park," sufficient to entitle one holding land on a street abutting on the park to enjoin the sale of such "park" plat for private use; but in this case it was held that the instrument under which the plaintiff held contained provisions which negated as to the plaintiff an intention to dedicate to the public the "park" in question. And in Messick v. Kincaid, — Ky. —, 145 S. W. 375, it was held that the purchaser of a lot laid down on a plat thereby acquires an interest in and a right to use an adjacent street, which entitles him to enjoin the dedicator from fencing up such street so as to deprive him of the use thereof.

The second class of cases is illustrated by Kelly v. Penfield, 67 Misc. 272, 122 N. Y. Supp. 811, as modified in 128 N. Y. Supp. 1129, wherein the strict rule that the right to use of the streets as shown on the plat extends only to adjacent streets was extended to a street the closing of which would materially injure plaintiff's lot, it being said that it was the lot owner's right to have the conditions as to streets, where it appears they are not too remote, remain the same as when he purchased. It will be noted that this in effect was the rule applied in DOUGLASS V. BELKNAP SPRINGS LAND CO.

A case illustrating the third rule is Freeman v. Island Heights Hotel & Improv. Co. 75 N. J. Eq. 491, 72 Atl. 974 (which follows Bridgewater v. Ocean City R. Co. 62 N. J. Eq. 276, 49 Atl. 801, as affirmed in 63 N. J. Eq. 798, 52 Atl. 1130, and Lennig v. Ocean City Asso. 41 N. J. Eq. 606, 56 Am. Rep. 16, 7 Atl. 491, both of which are set out in the note to Herold v. Columbia Invest. & Real Estate Co. 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067), in which it was held that a conveyance of lots according to a map upon which a "camp ground" is laid out, implies a covenant that such ground will be used for no other purposes, and that the purchaser may enforce the covenant. The location of the plaintiff's lot does not appear in the report of the case, but the Bridgewater Case, upon which most reliance was placed, was said to be a case like the present, and in that case the complainant was the purchaser of a lot at some distance from the "park" property therein involved. See also Jessop v. Kittanning, 225 Pa. 583, 74 Atl. 553, wherein it was held that the purchaser of a lot sold according to a recorded plat may restrain the closing and use for private purposes of streets and alleys designated on such plat. From the argument and authorities cited in the opinion it seems that the court would apply this rule to all streets laid down on the plat, whether adjacent to the plaintiff's lot or

Messrs. Stephen S. Jewett and Arthur A. Folsom, for plaintiff:

A deed bounding on a way shown on a plan which is referred to in the deed, and afterward recorded by the grantor in the registry of deeds, estops the grantor and those claiming under him from obstructing the way.

Rodgers v. Parker, 9 Gray, 445; Gawtry v. Leland, 40 N. J. Eq. 323; Thomas v. Poole, 7 Gray, 83; Stetson v. Dow, 16 Gray, 372; Lennig v. Ocean City Asso. 41 N. J. Eq. 606, 56 Am. Rep. 16, 7 Atl. 491; Abbott v. Mills, 3 Vt. 521, 23 Am. Dec. 222; White v. Tide Water Oil Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 1, 25 Atl. 199; Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 510, 27 Am. Dec. 80.

Where an easement or servitude is an-nexed by grant or covenant or otherwise to a private estate, the due and quiet enjoyment of it will be protected by injunction against encroachment.

Bartlett v. Peaslee, 20 N. H. 547, 51 Am. Dec. 242; Winnipissiopee Lake Co. v. Worcester, 29 N. H. 433; Webber v. Gage, 39 N. H. 182.

Plaintiff has the right to insist that Lake Shore avenue shall be kept open throughout its entire length and breadth as shown on the plan. The defendants cannot deny the plaintiff's right nor do anything to interfere with it.

Goodhart v. Hyett, L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 182, 53 L. J. Ch. N. S. 219, 50 L. T. N. S. 95, 32 Week. Rep. 165, 48 J. P. 293; Lockwood Co. v. Lawrence, 77 Me. 297, 52 Am.

not. And see Highland Realty Co. v. Avondale Land Co. — Ala. —, 56 So. 716, wherein, in holding that a sale of lots laid down on a plat vested in a purchaser of such lots the right to have all the streets referred to in the plan remain public, and deprived the owner of the right to pervert any of the platted streets from uses other than public, the court quoted with approval from Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 132, as follows: "Where streets and roads are marked on a plat, and lots are bought and sold with reference to the plat or map, all who buy with reference to the general plan or scheme disclosed by the plat or map acquire a right in all the public ways designated thereon, and may enforce the dedication. The plan or scheme indicated on the map or plat is regarded as a unity; and it is presumed, as it well may be, that the public ways add value to all the lots embraced in the general scheme or plan. Certainly, as everyone knows, lots with convenient cross streets are of more value than those without, and it is fair to presume that the original owner would not have donated land for public ways, unless it gave value to the lots. So, too, it is just to presume that the purchasers paid the added value, and the donor ought not, therefore, to be permitted to take it from them by revoking part of his dedication;" and continuing, said: "This right is not merely a right of personal passageway over the designated streets, or of access to and from the purchased lot, but is a right in the purchaser to have maintained, as against the dedicator, the designated scheme of public ways and places in its integrity, as it existed at the time of his purchase, and that all persons whatsoever may use them as occasion may require." In connection with this case it should be noted that Code 1896, § 3903, provides in effect that the vacation of a platted street by the adjoining owners shall not abridge or destroy any of the rights or privileges of other proprietors in the plat.

In a number of instances the question under annotation has been decided without reference having been made to the location, with respect to the particular street or park involved, of the complainant's lot or lots. Thus, in White v. Moore, 139 App. Div. 269, 123 N. Y. Supp. 1012, it was held that where owners of urban lands lay out the same into lots, streets, and a "park" they cannot afterward deprive their grantees of the benefit of the portion designed as a "park" by excluding the public therefrom and using such lands for private purposes. In this case it does not appear whether the decision is limited to owners of lands adjacent to such "park," or whether remote owners purchasing with reference to the plat were also entitled to have the "park" maintained as a public ground. See also White v. Moore, 73 Misc. 96, 132 N. Y. Supp. 441, which was a subsequent trial of the same case, in which a similar conclusion was reached.

And in Morrow v. Highland Grove Traction Co. 219 Pa. 619, 123 Am. St. Rep. 677, 69 Atl. 41, it was held that purchasers of land laid down on a plat upon which appeared a space marked "grove," which was represented as set aside as a public park, could enjoin the use of the "grove" for any other purpose. Here, again, no reference is made as to the location of the plaintiff's lot with reference to the grove. And the same conclusion was reached in Shertzer v. Hillman Invest. Co. 52 Wash. 492, 100 Pac. 982, where the facts involved were practically identical with those of the Morrow Case. And see Revard v. Hunt, 29 Okla. 835, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 119 Pac. 589, where it was held that the purchaser of a lot sold with reference to a plat could maintain an action to abate the erection of fences and gates which enclosed the streets as laid out on the plat, thereby destroying the purchaser's access to the outside world, under a statute providing that should any part of a plat be vacated, such act will not abridge or destroy any of the rights or privileges of proprietors therein, nor authorize the closing or obstructing of any highway laid out according to law, it being the law that the dedication of streets is accepted by the public whenever anyone purchases a lot on the recorded plat upon which such streets are designated.

G. J. C.

Rep. 763; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Ballou v. Hopkinton, 4 Gray, 324; New England Structural Co. v. Everett Distilling Co. 189 Mass. 145, 75 N. E. 85.

Mr. Frank M. Beckford, for defendants:

Plaintiff's rights were not being curtailed, or taken away by the defendants, nor was there any threatened invasion of rights, and therefore injunction should not issue as a matter of law.

Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 47 N. H. 437; Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 47 N. H. 71; Burnham v. Kempton, 44 N. H. 79; Harvey v. Harvey, 73 N. H. 106, 59 Atl. 621; Davison v. Davison, 71 N. H. 180, 51 Atl. 905; Newcastle v. Haywood, 67 N. H. 178, 37 Atl. 1040; Wilkins v. Manchester, 74 N. H. 275, 67 Atl. 560; Walker v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 441; Harvey v. Harvey, 73 N. H. 106, 59 Atl. 621.

Mr. Charles B. Hibbard for defendant Huse.

Peaslee, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The proposition that the plaintiff has rights in the streets which the defendants cannot deprive him of is well established. Walker v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 438; Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 460; Van O'Linda v. Lothrop, 21 Pick. 292, 32 Am. Dec. 261; New England Structural Co. v. Everett Distilling Co. 189 Mass. 145, 75 N. E. 85; Chapin v. Brown, 15 R. I. 579, 10 Atl. 639; Lord v. Atkins, 138 N. Y. 184, 33 N. E. 1035; Lennig v. Ocean City Asso. 41 N. J. Eq. 606, 56 Am. Rep. 16, 7 Atl. 491; Riedinger v. Marquette & W. R. Co. 62 Mich. 29, 28 N. W. 775. Thus far the authorities are unanimous. As the case is transferred, this entitles the plaintiff to the injunction as prayed for. But it is manifest that other questions are involved in this controversy. They have been argued by counsel, and their consideration is necessary in an equitable determination of the rights involved. These questions are: (1) To what streets do the plaintiff's rights extend? (2) To what lots are they incident? (3) Does a right exist along the shore line, where the land is narrower than is shown upon the plan?

1. The plaintiff insists that as incident to each lot he purchased by the plan he acquired a right to use every street shown upon the entire tract. While cases are to be found which support this hard and fast rule, it cannot be sustained upon principle. The right is not based upon a covenant that the ways exist. Howe v. Alger, 4 Allen, 206. It arises merely by way of estoppel. The time came when the grantor could no longer deny that streets existed as 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) represented on the plan. "That time was when purchasers of lands, upon a consideration enhanced by the inducements held out by the proclamation of these landholders, acquired such rights with reference to their house lots thus purchased, and the convenient and indispensable enjoyment of them, as would render it fraudulent on the part of the vendors to revoke their agreement by changing or abolishing the location of the streets laid down on their recorded plan, with reference to which their sales and conveyances had been made." Walker v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 438, 441. Since this is the foundation of the right here involved, it follows that all the elements of an estoppel by conduct must exist. One of these elements is that the representation made must be material to the action about to be taken. If the representation is immaterial, there is no estoppel. Comings v. Wellman, 14 N. H. 287, 292; Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 324, 333. The true rule, then, is that there is an estoppel to deny the existence of the ways shown upon the plan so far, and so far only, as the existence of the ways would be material to the owner of the land purchased. "In some other cases it is held that the purchaser of a lot described as bounded on a street or way is entitled to have it kept open for the whole distance shown by the plat or description; but the decision in every case has been based upon substantial equities. It could not have been otherwise; for estoppels arise upon equities, and are enforced for their protection." Cooley, J., in Bell v. Todd, 51 Mich. 21, 16 N. W. 304. How far the layout of the whole tract into some 200 lots concerns the purchaser of an individual lot is a question of fact, to be settled in the superior court. In the language above quoted the relation must be such as to create substantial equities before the relief here sought can be granted.

2. As the rights in the streets may extend further for one lot than for another, it is necessary to determine whether the plaintiff can maintain this proceeding as to lands purchased from the defendant company, the deeds to which refer to the Winnepesaukee Company's plan. At the time the confirmatory deed to lot 2 was given, the plaintiff was told that the Russells owned all the unsold lots lying between the railroad and the lake, and that they would do with the proposed streets as they saw fit. The parties then understood the deeds of lots 2 and 46 did not affect the title to "the lands below." It is understood that this refers to the land north of the railroad. In view of these facts, it seems plain that as to lots 2 and 46 no case for equitable relief is made out so far as the streets north of the railroad are involved. What the result might be if the plaintiff conveyed to an innocent third party, who relied upon the representations contained in the deeds from the defendants to the plaintiff, is a question not involved here. The plaintiff could not have relied thereon, and as to him there is no estoppel.

The land south of the railroad was not owned by the Russells; and, unless it appears that they purpose to interfere with the plaintiff's rights therein, no case is made against them as to that tract. This land was, however, owned by the defendant land company. By its reference thereto in its deeds as "shown on the plan of the Winnepesaukee Land Company, recorded in the Belknap county records," it represented that the lands were laid out according to that plan as effectively as though it had also caused the plan to be made and recorded in the first instance. Having made this representation, it is equitably bound to refrain from doing any act in contradiction of the inducements to the contract. As the company denies the right to use the ways as laid out, the plaintiff is entitled to his injunction so far as his interest is established.

The question whether the original laying out of the tract, recording the plan, and selling lots thereby, constituted dedication of the streets to public uses, is not involved in the present proceeding. If an offer of these streets to the public has been made and is still outstanding, it has not as yet been accepted by those who represent the public. P. S. 1901, chap. 67, § 1. The most that could be said would be that an offer is open, and may be accepted or rejected.

3. The plan delineates Lake Shore avenue as following the marginal line of the lake. This line is a definite boundary, and takes precedence over mere courses and distances. Kent v. Taylor, 64 N. H. 489, 13 Atl. 419, and cases cited. The lines of the interior lots shown upon the plan are of the latter class. There was no such land as these lines, or a part of them, indicate. The way is not affected by the fact that a mistake was made as to the quantity of land lying between the lake and the railroad. The plaintiff's lots in right of which a decree is to be entered were all sold before there was any attempt to sell by descriptions which conflict with the existence of the avenue. The most casual inspection of the plan shows an intent that there be a continuous way along the lake front. It would so appear to prospective purchasers of lots. Whether this intent might have been abandoned by a sale of the shore before private rights in the avenue had attached is a question not presented in this case.

The fact that a portion or the whole of the avenue can be used only for a footpath 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

is not necessarily fatal to the plaintiff's claims therein. This tract was laid out for a summer colony, and a footpath along a rugged shore might well be thought to be of value to each cottager. It might even be considered to be of greater value from the fact that it could never be intruded upon by vehicular travel.

It follows from all these considerations that the decree to be entered may not be as broad as the prayer of the bill. It is a question to be settled by a consideration of all the equities of the situation. How far each lot is affected must be determined in the superior court. So far as the plaintiff's lots which were purchased in reliance upon the plan (or any of them) are found to be affected by the general scheme or by particular ways shown upon the plan, he is entitled to be protected by a decree.

Case discharged.

All concur.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

ROBERT B. LUDY

v.

JOHN M. LARSEN et al.

and

RUFUS BOOYE, Appt.

(78 N. J. Eq. 237, 79 Atl. 687.)

Judgment — mechanics' lien — effect on intervenor.

Successive stop notices having been served upon the owner of a building under § 3

Headnote by PITNEY, J.

Note. — Judgment: conclusiveness of as between the plaintiff and one not a party nor privy, who voluntarily conducted the defense.

The cases in which a person becomes a party to the suit by interpleader or otherwise have been excluded, as have also those in which he merely acts as a witness for the defendant.

The cases relating to the effect of a judgment in ejectment against a tenant upon a landlord not a party, who participates in the defense, have been excluded from this note. As to a discussion of that question, see note to Ditlinger v. Miller, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 597.

The general statement as to the conclusiveness of a judgment is that it is binding only upon those who are parties or privies thereto. There is, to this general rule, the well-defined exception that where one who has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, or who may by reason of an adverse decision therein become liable upon some obligation entered into by him, and who of the mechanics' lien law (P. L. 1898, p. 538), and one of the stop notice claimants having commenced suit against the contractors to establish his claim, a subsequent claimant, who had an interest in defeating the claim in suit, undertook and conducted the defense in the name of the contractors and with their consent, but for its own use and benefit: Held, that the party thus undertaking and managing the defense to the suit was concluded by the resulting judgment so far as it established the claim of the plaintiff against the contractors.

(March 6, 1911.)

A PPEAL by the assignee of the claim of John W. R. Maginnis from a decree of Court of Chancery disallowing said claim in an interpleader suit to determine the right to a fund which Maginnis claimed to be due him for work done and materials furnished. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bourgeois & Sooy for appellant.

Messrs. John C. Reed and U. G. Styron for respondent lumber company.

Pitney, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree made in an interpleader suit, whereby the fund in court was disposed of. The ground of the appeal is that the claim of one John W. R. Maginnis (assigned to Rufus Booye, the appellant) was disallowed.

It appears that the complainant, Ludy, openly, and with the knowledge of the opposite party, assumes the defense of the action in such a way that he has the same rights as a party thereto, will be bound by the judgment.

It is a well established rule that a judgment must be binding upon both parties between whom it is attempted to be set up, in order to be binding upon either. In other words, the estoppel of a judgment must be mutual. 23 Cyc. 1238; 2 Black, Judgm. § 548. It will be seen that this rule applies to the conclusiveness of a judgment between the plaintiff and one who assumes the defense of an action.

In Bennett v. Wilmington Star Min. Co. 119 Ill. 9, 7 N. E. 498, affirming 18 Ill. App. 17, it was held that a purchaser of land against which it was sought to impose a mechanics' lien, who employed an attorney to prosecute a writ of error to a judgment in such action, and upon the reversal employed an attorney to conduct the defense, and paid all expenses, was bound by the decree. The court states that the binding effect extends not only as to what was actually determined, but also to any other matter properly involved.

In Lyon v. Stanford, 42 N. J. Eq. 411, 7 Atl. 869, it was held that a judgment in an action of trespass on the case was conclusive upon the wife of the nominal defendant, who actually purchased the property with his own money and had control of the same, although the title had been taken in the wife's name, where she attended the trial and was a witness, and the action was defended on her title by the same means, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if she had been a party on the record. In discussing the relation she sustained to the case, the court says that the defense made was in reality her defense, interposed with her consent by her agent and substantially on her behalf, and that under such circumstances the mere absence of her name would not absolve her from the binding force of the judgment.

In Lamberton v. Dinsmore, 75 N. H. 574, 78 Atl. 620, a judgment in an action of 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

trespass in which the defense of a right of way was set up was held conclusive upon one who filed a formal statement of defense avowing the action of the then defendant as that of a servant, and setting up her own title to the right of way as a defense. It was stated that although there was no formal order that she be made a party, it must be inferred that she was permitted to become one and since there was ample notice to all the parties of her position in the suit, it was determined as between any two of them.

In Carpenter v. Carpenter, 126 Mich. 217, 85 N. W. 576, a judgment in an action in ejectment against a tenant and one who put him in possession was held conclusive upon a claimant thereto, who was the wife of the person who so put the tenant in possession, and for whom her husband made a defense, in a subsequent action involving other lands held by the same parties under the same titles and claims as those involved in the former action, and depending upon the identical questions raised there.

In Carpenter v. Carpenter, 136 Mich. 362, 99 N. W. 395, a judgment in an action against a tenant and his alleged landlord for recovery of property was held conclusive upon the wife of the alleged landlord, who participated in the defense claiming title in herself.

In Boyd v. Wallace, 10 N. D. 78, 84 N. W. 760, an action to determine adverse claims, a judgment in a previous action to foreclose a land contract which had been taken in the name of the wife as a trustee for her husband was held conclusive on the husband, who was the real party in interest, and who employed attorneys to defend, and directed the defense generally, for the protection of his own interests and with the knowledge of the other party.

In Montgomery v. Vickery, 110 Ind. 211, 11 N. E. 38, it was held that a judgment in an action in which a plaintiff was seeking to establish his right to an execution against certain lands in which other judgment creditors appeared and defended for their own benefit was binding upon entered into a contract with the firm of Larsen & Son, whereby they agreed to furnish the materials and do the work of altering and adding to a building owned by the complainant; that the contract was duly placed on file; and that thereafter, while money was in Ludy's hands due under the contract to Larsen & Son, sundry claimants served notices upon Ludy under § 3 of the mechanics' lien law (P. L. 1898, p. 538). Ludy filed his bill of interpleader, and paid into the court of chancery the sum of $2,314.15 as the amount remaining in his hands owing upon the Larsen contract and payable to the stop notice claimants. A decree was made in due course requiring the defendants to interplead, and after the hearing a decree was made establishing all the claims with the exception of that of Maginnis. Besides disallowing his claim, the decree settled the order of priority of the other claims, with the result that so much of the fund as would have gone to satisfy the Maginnis claim, if established, was awarded to the Atlantic City Lumber Company, the next claimant in order.

One ground upon which the Maginnis claim was disallowed was failure to prove the fact or date of service of the Maginnis stop notice upon Ludy. Upon this point Ludy's bill of complaint, after setting forth that on or about March 14, 1905, one B. served, or caused to be served, upon the complainant a written notice to the effect that the contractors were indebted to B. in the sum of $220 for work and labor done such creditors, so as to preclude the assertion of the priority of their claim in a subsequent action.

In McNamee v. Moreland, 26 Iowa, 96, it was held that a judgment in an action between adjoining landowners to determine the true location of a boundary line was conclusive upon a third landowner, who was also interested in the establishment of the disputed line, and who was notified of the pendency of the action, and conducted the defense in the name of the defendant, in a subsequent action involving the right of possession. The claim was made in this case by the person conducting the defense that the defendant was his tenant; this was denied by the other party, who claimed that the defendant was a grantee. The court stated this fact to be immaterial.

In Wood v. Ensel, 63 Mo. 193, a judgment in an action against a bailee was held conclusive upon the bailor, who asserted his claim to the property, appeared as a witness, hired attorneys, and assumed control of the case, in a subsequent action for the recovery of the property.

In Tarleton v. Johnson, 25 Ala. 300, 60 Am. Dec. 515, an action of trover for the conversion of cotton, it was held that a judgment in a previous action against the bailees of the present defendants, in which the present defendants employed counsel and had the sole management of the case, was conclusive upon them as to the title adjudicated in the former action. It is stated by the court that whether their title could have been properly adjudicated is not material, since, as a matter of fact, it was set up and passed upon.

In Board of Education v. Cosgrove, 11 Ohio C. C. 163, 5 Ohio C. D. 343, an action for the salary of a teacher, a judgment in a previous action by the teacher upon the same contract, to compel the treasurer to pay the money called for upon an order issued him by the board of education, was held conclusive upon the board of education, which, subsequent to the issuance of their order, had attempted to revoke it, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) and had assumed the defense of the action against the treasurer.

In Greenwich Ins. Co. v. N. & M. Friedman Co. 74 C. C. A. 114, 142 Fed. 944, where a number of insurance companies which had insurance on a block which was destroyed by fire denied their liability on the ground that the building fell before the fire began, and not as a result of the fire, and entered into an agreement of which the insured had knowledge, that the defense was to be intrusted to a committee appointed by the companies, and such committee was to supervise the litigation and apportion costs and expenses, a judgment in an action against one company defending under this agreement, which negated the defense on which all were depending, estops each of the members to such agreement from denying liability on the same ground. It was urged in a subsequent action against another of the companies, that the judgment was only a legal precedent, and that the defendant had no interest in the previous case which would make the judgment binding on it by way of estoppel. In answer to this the court says that under the agreement it was represented in the action, and that it was liable for the costs at least, and that it could have taken an appeal, and the contention was overruled. Writ of certiorari denied in 200 U. S. 621, 50 L. ed. 624, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 758.

In Bomar v. Ft. Worth Bldg. Asso. 20 Tex. Civ. App. 603, 49 S. W. 914, an action to obtain possession of a lot, a judgment in a previous action to foreclose a mortgage, in which a junior mortgagee employed attorneys to defend for the mortgagor in the interest of the junior mortgagee, was held conclusive upon such junior mortgagee and those holding under him, as to the title to the lot, the right of possession, and the amount requisite, and the right to redeem.

On the contrary, in Falls v. Gamble, 66 N. C. 455, a judgment in an action of trespass was held not to work an estoppel upon one who commanded the trespass complained and performed and materials furnished in and about the premises of the complainant; that payment of said sum had been demanded of the contractors and payment refused, and that complainant was notified and required to retain the amount of money so due and claimed by B. out of the money owing by the complainant to the contractors, proceeded to set forth "that on or about the 12th day of May of said year a like notice was served by John W. R. Maginnis, claiming the sum of $619." The bill of complaint also sets forth that a few days later a like notice was served by the Atlantic City Lumber Company claiming the sum of $4,400, and that the lumber company had notified the complainant not to pay any persons claiming the fund who had served notices prior to the notice of the lumber company, upon the ground that the amounts claimed by them were in excess of the true amounts due. To this bill the Atlantic City Lumber Company filed a cross-bill, setting up, among other things, "that this defendant is informed and believes that one John W. R. Maginnis on or about May 12, 1905, served or caused to be served, upon said complainant a notice purporting to be under the authority and in conformity with the provisions of said section of said act, and by virtue of said notice, claims to have a lien upon said fund and to be entitled to receive thereout the sum of $619, alleged to be due to him and to have been demanded from the said John M. Larsen & Son, contractors, for work done and mater-of, employed counsel, and paid the costs of the suits, justifying under a deed to himself, in a subsequent action to recover the lands, since this is a matter outside the record, and to hold that a person could be constituted a party or privy so as to work an estoppel of record would be to divest such person of his title by parol evidence.

In Clark v. Lyman, 8 Vt. 290, an action to obtain possession of real estate, it was held that a judgment in a previous action in ejectment against the vendor of the real estate, by the creditor of one who was claimed to be one of the vendees, was not conclusive upon another who claimed to be the sole vendee, and who defended the first action and gave a bond to the vendor to indemnify him from costs. The force of this holding is somewhat weakened from the fact that the court states the question to be susceptible of doubt, and the bill was dismissed on other grounds.

In Bailey v. Sundberg, 1 C. C. A. 387, 1 U. S. App. 101, 49 Fed. 583, a judgment in a libel suit in rem against a steamship for injuries resulting from a collision, in which the master of a steamship took an active part in the defense, was held binding upon the plaintiff, so as to prevent a libel in personam against the master. The judgment in dismissing the libel was reversed on other grounds. Writ of certiorari denied in 145 U. S. 628, 36 L. ed. 855, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239.

In Carey v. Roosevelt, 83 Fed. 242, s. c. 91 Fed. 567, a judgment in an action on a claim against the administrator of an estate, in which certain trustees and legatees were informed of the claim, and the defense conducted by one of the trustees at their instance and request, they paying the expenses thereof, was held binding upon the interest of such legatees in the estate in the hands of the trustees, in a subsequent action to enforce payment of the judgment. On an appeal of this case, reported in 43 C. C. A. 320, 102 Fed. 569, the court noted the fact that one of the administrators was also a trustee, and the one who defended, and found that there was no evidence that he defended in any other capacity than administrator, or that any other trustees or legatees assisted in the defense, and the judgment was reversed.

In Re McCauley, 49 Misc. 209, 99 N. Y. Supp. 238, a judgment in an action against the surety on the bond of a deceased administrator was held conclusive upon the assignee of a foreign executor of such decedent, which assignee was also an heir of the deceased administrator, and through him of the estate which was being administered, where the foreign executor had notice of the suit against the surety, and was represented by counsel selected by him. This decision seems to be based more on the relationship of the parties than on the fact of assuming the defense.

In Schmidt v. Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. 99 Ky. 143, 35 S. W. 135, it was held that a judgment in an action against a lessee railroad company, upon the contract of lease, was binding upon another railroad company which had previously purchased the property and franchises of the first company, including the lease in question, of which it assumed the obligations, and employed counsel, and had charge of the defense. A judgment in favor of the defendant was affirmed on other grounds. In the rehearing of this case, in 99 Ky. 156, 36 S. W. 168, it was stated that the binding effect of the previous judgment should have been stated as argument merely, and the opinion was so modified. This case is cited in Morrison v. Price, 130 Ky. 139, 112 S. W. 1090, on the point annotated, but the facts there do not clearly appear. It was there held that, to be available as an estoppel, such a judgment must be pleaded.

In Anderson v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 200 Ill. 329, 65 N. E. 717, a judgment in an action against the lessor railway company, in which the lessee defended, was held conclusive upon the plaintiff therein in a subsequent action against the lessee on the same cause of action; the greater weight, however, seemed to be placed in this case on the fact that the parties occupied the relation of lessor and lessee.

In Harvie v. Turner, 46 Mo. 444, a judgment in an action of forcible entry and ials furnished in and about the premises of the complainant, in pursuance of said contract; but this defendant avers that the sum claimed by the said Maginnis in his said notice was not due and payable at the date of the service thereof, but, if anything, a much smaller sum; that a part of the labor and material, payment for which is claimed and included in said notice, if performed or furnished at all, were not furnished in pursuance of said contract; that said Maginnis had not at the date of the service of said notice, and has not since, performed said work in such manner as to entitle him to any payment by said contractors, and that said notice is in other respects informal, defective, and invalid as against the lien of this defendant upon said fund." Maginnis filed an answer to this cross bill, in which he distinctly asserted the service of a proper stop notice upon Ludy on May 12, 1905, for $619; that afterwards, and within five days thereafter, Larsen & Son served written notice upon said Maginnis to establish his claim by judgment; that, in pursuance thereof, Maginnis instituted suit against Larsen & Son in the Atlantic county circuit court; that the suit was defended; and that the trial resulted in a verdict in favor of Maginnis for the sum of $619, besides interest to date, and that judgment was entered upon the verdict for the sum of $647 and costs.

Upon the hearing before the learned vice chancellor, the complainant, Ludy, testified that the Maginnis notice was served upon detainer against a tenant, of which the landlord's agent was notified he being present at the trial, and actively assisting in the defense, was held conclusive upon the landlord in a subsequent action of forcible entry and detainer against the plaintiff in the former action.

In Crane v. Cameron, 71 Kan. 880, 81 Pac. 480, a judgment in an action against tenants to recover possession of real estate, in which the holder of the legal title assumed the defense, was held conclusive upon such person, so as to entitle the plaintiff in the action to an order of ouster against him, he having gone into possession in the meantime.

In Walsh v. First Nat. Bank, 139 Mo. App. 641, 123 S. W. 1001, an action to cancel certain tax bills, it developed that the defendant was not the true owner of such tax bills, but that the true owner was conducting the defense. The question arose as to whether or not the plaintiff's action should be dismissed, and, in holding that it should not, the court states that a judgment rendered in the case would be binding upon the real owner, who was thus conducting the defense.

In Himes v. Jacobs, 1 Penr. & W. 152, a judgment in an action against the executor of a decedent was held conclusive upon the tenants on the lands of such decedent, who were notified of the action and made defense, as against the purchaser at an execution sale.

In Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1, 6 Pac. 867, it was held that a judgment in an action to recover real estate was conclusive on those who, without being made parties, appeared and filed an answer denying the allegation of the complaint, and claiming right of title and possession to a part of the demanded premises.

In Ramsey v. Wilson, 52 Wash. 111, 100 Pac. 177, a judgment in an action by the state to try title to certain lands was held conclusive upon one who held lands under like conditions to the defendant in that action, and who contributed to the defense of such action, and actively assisted in the case, so as to prevent him from basing a claim of adverse possession on his holding of such lands.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, where a person who has an equitable interest in lands employs counsel and files an answer in a suit, in the name of a party thereto, who holds the land as trustee for the person thus assuming the defense, pays his proportion of the expenses, and controls the litigation, so far as he is concerned, the judgment will be binding. Plumb v. Goodnow (Plumb v. Crane), 123 U. S. 560, 31 L. ed. 268, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216, reversing 64 Iowa, 672, 21 N. W. 133.

Where the defense is not conducted openly, and with the knowledge of the opposite party, the judgment is not binding. Canon River Mfrs. Assn. v. Rogers, 42 Minn. 123, 18 Am. St. Rep. 497, 43 N. W. 792 (action against a bank for the wrongful delivery of money, in which the person receiving the money assumed the defense without the knowledge of the opposite party); Schroeder v. Lahrman, 26 Minn. 87, 1 N. W. 801 (action for conversion of certain posts and rails, in which recovery was disputed on the ground that the land from which the timber had been cut belonged to the wife of the defendant, in which action the wife employed the attorney who appeared for the defendant, and was a witness for the defendant, but without knowledge of the plaintiff that she appeared in any other capacity than as a witness).

In Litchfield v. Goodnow (Litchfield v. Crane), 123 U. S. 549, 31 L. ed. 199, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210, affirming 63 Iowa, 275, 19 N. W. 226, it was held that a judgment in an action to recover taxes was not conclusive in favor of one whose lands were described in the bill, but who was not made a party with other owners of lands involving like questions as to taxes, and who assisted in the defense, and paid part of the expenses, as her lands were entirely separate and distinct from those of the actual parties. It is stated that the decision might be used as a judicial precedent, but not as a judgment binding on her and conclusive as to her rights.

Nor is one who, being interested merely in the outcome of a suit, employs counsel him, and identified a copy thereof, which is dated May 12, 1905. Being asked, "Q. Do you remember when that notice was served on you?" he answered: "I don't remember anything, except it says here May 12, 1905." He testified, however, without objection, that at the time of the filing of his bill of complaint, he swore that May 12th was the date on which he received the notice. Being afterwards examined respecting a notice signed by one Gould, dated May 29, 1905, and asked if that notice was served upon him upon the day of its date, he answered: "I don't know any more than what I see here. All these notices were served on the dates they were marked." At this point counsel for the Atlantic City Lumber Company, which was the only party opposing or interested in opposing the claims referred to, made the following statement to the court: "He has already sworn through the bill, as I understand it. It has been gone through here once. If your Honor please, that these papers were served on the dates as designated therein. That won't be required again. The Court: I put it to counsel to consider whether that is proof. You produce a witness for the purpose of proving the date on which a notice was served, and, in order to prove it, you call his attention to the fact that he has sworn to it in an affidavit. Does that prove it? Mr. Sooy: He afterwards says, refreshing his memory from that affidavit, he can now say it was served on that date. The Court: That escaped me."

to assist in the preparation of briefs and argument of the defendant, entitled to invoke the doctrine of res judicata against the plaintiff in the suit. Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 203 Mass. 159, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 89 N. E. 93; Stryker v. Goodnow (Stryker v. Crane), 123 U. S. 527, 31 L. ed. 194, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203.

Neither is it sufficient that one employed counsel who was present and participated in a trial against its servant, agent, or employee. Central Baptist Church v. Manchester, 17 R. I. 492, 33 Am. St. Rep. 893, 23 Atl. 30.

In Schriber v. Platt, 19 Neb. 625, 28 N. W. 289, it was held that a purchaser of the homestead of another was not estopped from claiming title thereto, by the fact that he had paid attorneys to resist the confirmation of an execution sale against his vendor.

In Hunt v. Haven, 52 N. H. 162, a judgment in an action to obtain possession of land under a mortgage was held not to bind a junior mortgagee who assisted the mortgagor in making defense, and employed and paid counsel for such mortgagor. The term "parties" is stated to include all persons who are directly interested in the subject-matter in issue, who have a right to make defense, control the proceedings, or appeal from the judgment, and the junior mortgagee was not regarded by the court as coming within this definition of a party.

In Cockins v. Bank of Alma, 84 Neb. 624, 133 Am. St. Rep. 642, 122 N. W. 16, it was held that a real estate agent was not bound by a judgment in an action by a rival agent against a landowner for commissions, in which the first agent employed an attorney to assist in the defense, but had not the control of the case nor the right of appeal.

In Koehring v. Aultman, M. & Co. 7 Ind. App. 475, 34 N. E. 30, 35 N. E. 30, in holding that a senior mortgagee was not bound by a judgment in a replevin suit brought by a junior mortgagee against the owner, in which the senior mortgagee was "present in court," the court states that the point most confidently relied upon by the appellants 87 L.R.A.(N.S.)

was that the senior mortgagee had defended the replevin suit before the justice of the peace, to which he was confessedly not a party, but in which it was urged he acted for the mortgagor and owner of the property. It was stated further that the facts were far from showing that appellee was concluded by that judgment; that there was no issue in that case as to any claim on account of appellee's mortgage, and that the appellants did not even offer to show any arrangement between the defendants in that suit and the appellee, in pursuance of which the appellee conducted the defense.

In Braithwaite v. Harvey, 14 Mont. 208, 27 L.R.A. 101, 43 Am. St. Rep. 625, 36 Pac. 38, a judgment in an action against an administrator, in which a foreign administrator of the same estate defended in the name of the first administrator, employed counsel, and produced evidence, was held not binding upon the foreign administrator in the state of his appointment, as he had no authority to act or bind the estate outside of the jurisdiction of his appointment.

In Williamson v. White, 101 Ga. 276, 65 Am. St. Rep. 302, 28 S. E. 846, an action to put a purchaser of real estate under a tax deed, in possession thereof, in which the purchaser was the applicant and the sheriff respondent, where there was no provision of law authorizing anyone to appear and to object, it was held that the owner of the lands, who was represented by an attorney who appeared and stated to the court various reasons why such order should not be granted, and also filed an answer which was afterwards withdrawn and placed in the hands of the sheriff, was not bound by the judgment rendered therein, in a subsequent action in the nature of a quiet-title proceeding.

In Gross v. Whitley County, 158 Ind. 531, 58 L.R.A. 394, 64 N. E. 25, it was held that the right of a county treasurer who had accepted his salary as provided by an act of the legislature, to compensation under a prior act, did not become res judicata by the fact that he contributed to the expenses of an action in which the later statute was declared void.

From the entire record, we think it clear that counsel for the lumber company intended to concede, and was understood by opposing counsel to concede, that sufficient proof had been made as to the dates of serving the notices in question, and that it was to be taken as proving (inter alia) that the Maginnis claim was served upon Dr. Ludy on May 12, 1905. Appellant apparently relied upon that concession, and, at any rate, is entitled to the benefit of it, as settling in his favor the fact and date of the service.

The learned vice chancellor also expressed doubt whether the evidence showed that Maginnis completed his contract with Larsen & Son before his stop notice was served upon Ludy, and whether the claim made by him in the stop notice was not for a larger sum of money than was actually due from Larsen & Son to him. It appeared, however, that, about two months after the service of that notice, he commenced an action at law in the Atlantic county circuit court against Larsen & Son for the recovery of the same sum of money mentioned in the stop notice; that a plea was interposed by the defendants in this action; and that a trial by jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of Maginnis for the entire amount of his claim. The record of this judgment was introduced in evidence upon the hearing before the vice Chancellor, counsel for the Atlantic City Lumber Company making no objection to its admission, but contending that it was not binding upon the lumber company because that company

In Northern Bank v. Stone, 88 Fed. 413, an action involving the validity of taxes, it was held that a judgment in an action against a county involving the validity of taxes growing out of the same revenue act, was not binding on the state and all its agencies because of the fact that the attorney general appeared on behalf of the state after the litigation had reached the court of appeals.

In Turpin v. Thomas, 2 Hen. & M. 139, 3 Am. Dec. 615, it is held that a person not a party to an action is not bound by the judgment rendered therein, from the fact that he was present and cross-examined witnesses.

In Majors v. Cowell, 51 Cal. 478, it was held that a purchaser in good faith of real estate which was the subject of litigation, before his grantor was served with process or appeared in the action, was not bound by the judgment therein by uniting in an appeal therefrom.

In State v. King, 64 W. Va. 546, 63 S. E. 468, a judgment in an action relating to the title to land, in which certain persons participated in the defense on appeal, was held not conclusive upon such persons. It is there stated that they had no opportunity to plead in the court below and set up their claims; that in the appellate court the record was taken as made in the court below, and could not be altered.

Where it is the duty of the person assuming the defense to defend, it was held that he was bound by the judgment.

—where the sureties on a guardian's bond, in an action to set aside a release executed by the ward to the guardian, employed the only counsel who appeared and made a defense throughout the suit. Parr v. State, 71 Md. 220, 17 Atl. 1120;

—where certain mortgagees appeared and defended in an action of trover, claiming the defendant had been their servant, and justifying his taking of the property under their mortgage, in a subsequent action brought by those who assumed the defense in the former action, against the plaintiffs therein to recover possession of the property. Castle v. Noyes, 14 N. Y. 329. It was stated by 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the court that the relation of master and servant is the basis of the estoppel of a judgment in actions of this nature.

And where it is the duty of the one participating in the defense to reveal his interest, it has been held that the judgment will be binding:

—where the wife of a lessee participated in the trial, and defended against the liens which were being asserted in a consolidated action to foreclose certain mechanics' liens, in part of which actions the lessee, and part of which the lessee and wife, had been made defendants, although in the action brought by the appellants in this case, the wife had not been made a party. Douthitt v. Mac-Clusky, 11 Wash. 601, 40 Pac. 186;

—where one holding a deed from the defendant in an action of ejectment concealed her title, and participated in and directed the defense apparently as agent of the ostensible owner. McClellan v. Hurd, 21 Colo. 197, 40 Pac. 445, affirming 1 Colo. App. 327, 29 Pac. 181.

Where the one assuming the defense is acting as agent of the defendant.

In Williams v. Cooper, 124 Cal. 666, 57 Pac. 577, where a person claiming title under a tax deed brought ejectment, and a mortgagee had charge of the defense as agent of the mortgagor, such mortgagee was held not bound by the judgment rendered in such suit, in a subsequent action by him in ejectment after a foreclosure of his mortgage and purchase thereunder.

In Brady v. Brady, 71 Ga. 71, a judgment on the validity of a claim to property filed upon an execution being issued on a judgment of foreclosure, by the wife of the mortgagor, was held not conclusive upon such mortgagor, who employed counsel to prosecute the wife's claim, in a subsequent attempt by him to obtain exemption of the property.

In Perkins v. Goddin, 111 Mo. App. 429, 85 S. W. 936, a person who employed counsel for his wife in a partition suit, and was present in the court room when the decree in such suit was read, was held not was not a party to the action. There is no question that whatever was due to Maginnis when the action at law was commenced was due when his stop notice was served; for the evidence upon the hearing in chancery shows beyond controversy that whatever he did about the performance of his contract was done before the service of his stop notice. As against Larsen & Son, therefore, the judgment conclusively settles in favor of Maginnis both points upon which the learned vice chancellor doubted.

The question is, What is the effect of the judgment upon the Atlantic City Lumber Company? Under the peculiar facts of the present case, we are not called upon to consider whether in ordinary circumstances a judgment at law recovered by stop notice claimant against contractor is conclusive upon the owner or upon subsequent claimants (see Taylor v. Wahl, 69 N. J. L. 471, 55 Atl. 40); for the evidence shows, and it is not disputed, that the lumber company, with the consent of Larsen & Son, undertook and conducted the defense of the Maginnis suit, employing the attorney and paying the expenses of the trial, including the expenses of Maginnis himself, who attended as a witness. In short, it appears, as we think, that the defense of the Maginnis suit, while made in the name of Larsen & Son, was made by the lumber company at its own expense and for its own use and benefit. That company having served upon Ludy a stop notice of its own after the service of Maginnis's notice, and, its claim being sufficient in to be bound by the judgment therein with reference to the distribution of personal property, in a subsequent action by him as administrator of a person whose heirs were parties to the partition suit. It will be noted also in the case that the husband acted in a different capacity in the second suit.

In Thrasher v. Haines, 2 N. H. 443, a judgment in an action in debt, in which a person has charge of the defense as agent of the defendant, was held not to preclude such person from showing that there was in fact nothing due, in a subsequent action against him to obtain possession of land which he had obtained from the original defendant.

In Parker v. Moore, 59 N. H. 454, an award in an arbitration proceeding involving the validity of a mortgage was held not to bind a junior mortgagee who acted merely as agent for the mortgagor, and in the course of the opinion the court said:

"When it is said that adjudication binds 'all who have the right to adduce testimony or cross-examine the witnesses introduced by the other side, all who have the right to defend the suit, or control the proceedings, or appeal from the judgment' (Chamberlain v. Carlisle, 26 N. H. 551), this is not intended to include one who, as an agent or attorney, adduces testimony, cross-examines witnesses, and controls the suit, but one who, being a party, or in privity with one of the parties, or at any rate legally interested in the event of the suit, thus conducts with reference to it."

In Andrews v. National Foundry & Pipe Works, 36 L.R.A. 139, 22 C. C. A. 110, 46 U. S. App. 281, 76 Fed. 168, motion for rehearing denied in 36 L.R.A. 153, 23 C. C. A. 454, 46 U. S. App. 619, 77 Fed. 774, it was held that the principal stockholders of a corporation, who controlled it, were not bound by a judgment in a mechanics' lien suit against it, by reason of the fact that they employed counsel to defend such suit. It was stated by the court that there was no suggestion that they assumed the defense of the suit as one in which their own interests were in question, and further that, 57 L.R.A. (N.S.) in order to work an estoppel, it was necessary that the defense should have been conducted openly, avowedly, and known to the opposite party.

Conclusiveness upon an attorney who has charge of the defense.

In Champlin v. Butler, 124 Ill. App. 41, the purchaser of an athletic association ticket, who afterwards was employed as attorney by his vendor to defend an action brought by one who claimed the ticket as against the vendor, and who neglected the matter until after a default judgment had been entered and thereupon undertook to have the default judgment set aside, without acknowledging any interest in himself, was held bound by the decree, so that he could not thereafter enjoin the enforcement of the judgment and establish his title to the ticket.

A judgment in an action by the city to recover taxes on property which was involved in litigation, in favor of the city, was held binding upon a surety for a party thereto, who was ultimately liable for the taxes, and who was attorney for such party, and conducted the litigation, in a subsequent action brought by the principal and his surety to have the taxes disallowed. Kaye v. Louisville, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 114, 14 S. W. 679.

In Sturdivant Bank v. Wilson, 87 Mo. App. 534, an attorney who conducted the defense of an action, and testified in support of a claim of title made by himself to the note in suit, was held bound by the judgment rendered therein.

In Parsons v. Urie, 104 Md. 238, 8 L.R.A. (N. S.) 559, 64 Atl. 927, 10 Ann. Cas. 278, in an action by certain persons who had paid a mortgage which was released by the mortgagee, to have the mortgage reinstated, and in which the mortgagee was made a party, and the persons who represented him as attorneys and conducted his defense were judgment lienholders, and had full opportunity for making all defenses at their command, a judgment was held binding upon them as fully as if they had been formal parties to the bill.

amount to more than exhaust the moneys remaining in Ludy's hands due to Larsen & Son, it manifestly had a legitimate interest in contesting the Maginnis claim, in order to show, if it could, that either nothing was due to him, or, if anything, a sum less than he had demanded in his stop notice.

Having thus, for reasons affecting its own interest, undertaken and managed the defense to the suit of Maginnis against Larsen, the lumber company is, we think, concluded by the result of that litigation. It is, of course, fundamental that personal judgments conclude only the parties and their privies. But the estoppel is not limited to such as are parties on the record. It includes those who are parties in fact. As Greenleaf well says: "The rules of law upon this subject are founded upon these evident principles or axioms that it is for the interest of the community that a limit should be prescribed to litigation, and that the same cause of action ought not to be brought twice to a final determination. Justice requires that every cause be once fairly and impartially tried; but the public tranquility demands that, having been once so tried, all litigation of that question, and between those parties, should be closed forever. It is also a most obvious principle of justice that no man ought to be bound by proceedings to which he was a stranger; but the converse of this rule is equally true, that by proceedings to which he was not a stranger, he may well be held bound. Under the term 'parties,' in this connection,

Actions against officers.

In Baxter v. Myers, 85 Iowa, 328, 39 Am. St. Rep. 298, 52 N. W. 234, a judgment in an action of replevin against an officer for personal property levied on by him under an execution, and claimed by the plaintiff in the replevin suit, was held conclusive upon the execution creditors who assumed the defense of the officer, and charged that the property was conveyed to the plaintiff in fraud of creditors, in a subsequent action to subject to the payment of their claim certain real property which had been conveyed to the plaintiff in the replevin suit as a part of the same transaction by which the personal property had been conveyed to him.

In Elliott v. Hayden, 104 Mass. 180, a judgment in an action against an officer for wrongful conversion of property under a writ, which action was defended by the execution creditors, who had previously made oath to a bill in equity against the persons bringing the suit and the execution defendant, in which it was stated that they were liable to indemnify the officer against all loss on account of the levy, was held competent, but not conclusive, evidence against them in a subsequent action against them for causing the levy to be made.

In Elder v. Frevert, 18 Nev. 446, 5 Pac. 69, a judgment in an action against a sheriff to recover property taken under an execution, and damages for its detention, was held conclusive as to the character of the property, upon the execution creditors who controlled the defense of such suit, in a subsequent action against them for damages for such detention.

In Tate v. Hunter, 3 Strobb. Eq. 136, a judgment in an action against a sheriff, to compel him to apply certain moneys held by him to the satisfaction of an execution held by the plaintiff, was held conclusive as between the plaintiff therein and another execution creditor who defended the suit, upon his right and title to the money.

In Tootle v. Coleman, 57 L.R.A. 120, 46 C. C. A. 132, 107 Fed. 41, a judgment in an action against an officer for wrongful levy and sale of the goods of the plaintiff, in which the attachment creditors who had instigated the action had given bond to the officer to appear and conduct the defense, was held conclusive against such creditors as to the title and value of the property, in a subsequent action against them for conversion. Writ of certiorari denied in 183 U. S. 695, 46 L. ed. 394, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932.

In Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. 1, 18 L. ed. 129, a judgment in an action against an officer for trespass, in which the attaching creditors, who had given the officer an indemnity bond, employed counsel who had exclusive control of the defense, was held conclusive against such creditors.

Actions upon notes.

In Estelle v. Peacock, 48 Mich. 469, 12 N. W. 659, a judgment in an action on a note given as evidence of the purchase price of personal property was held conclusive upon a claimant of such note who conducted the defense.

And so, in Bachelor v. Brown, 47 Mich. 366, 11 N. W. 200, a judgment in an action on a promissory note by the executor of a decedent was held binding upon one who assumed the defense of the action, claiming the note as his own.

So, in Stoddard v. Thompson, 31 Iowa, 81, a judgment on a promissory note was held conclusive between the plaintiff therein and one who, claiming to be the real owner of the note, employed counsel to defend the action, and paid the costs of the defense, and was a witness upon the trial.

Where, in an action of replevin against one who has a note in his possession for collection, the owner of the note authorizes an attorney to appear and defend, a judgment in such action is binding on the owner, to the same extent as if it had been a party. Marquardt Sav. Bank v. Sheppelman, 97 Ill. App. 31. It is stated by the court that the owner was privy to the action.

Conclusiveness as to question of liability.

In Carter v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 76 Kan.

the law includes all who are directly interested in the subject-matter, and had a right to make defense, or to control the proceedings, and to appeal from the judgment. This right involves also the right to adduce testimony, and to cross-examine the witnesses adduced on the other side." Greenl. Ev. §§ 522, 523. See also § 535. And see, to the same effect, 1 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 174; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. 113, 114; 1 Herman, Estoppel, § 148.

Numerous reported decisions have proceeded upon a recognition of this principle. Lyon v. Stanford, 42 N. J. Eq. 411, 7 Atl. 869; Davenport v. Elizabeth, 43 N. J. L. 149; Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. 1, 18, 18 L. ed. 129, 134; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 672, 18 L. ed. 427, 430; Valentine v. Farnsworth, 21 Pick. 176, 181, 182; Eliott v. Hayden, 104 Mass. 180, 182; Carleton v. Lombard, A. & Co. 149 N. Y. 137, 151, 43 N. E. 422; Stoddard v. Thompson, 31 Iowa, 81; Montgomery v. Vickery, 110 Ind.

211, 11 N. E. 38; Thomsen v. McCormick, 136 Ill. 135, 26 N. E. 373; Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592, 96 Am. St. Rep. 322, 68 N. E. 81; Parr v. State, 71 Md. 220, 17 Atl. 1020; National Marine Bank v. Heller, 94 Md. 213, 50 Atl. 521. See also Hale v. Finch, 104 U. S. 261, 265, 26 L. ed. 732, 733; Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496, 71 Am. Dec. 678; Andrews v. Gillespie, 47 N. Y. 487, 492; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65, 67; Heiser v. Hatch, 86 N. Y. 614.

The decree under review should be reversed, and the record remitted to the Court of Chancery, to the end that a new decree may be made providing for the satisfaction out of the fund in court of the Maginnis claim held by the appellant, together with the appellant's costs in this court and in the Court of Chancery, with priority over the claim of the Atlantic City Lumber Company.

275, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1155, 91 Pac. 178, it was held that the fact that an indemnity insurance company assumed the defense of an action against an employer by an employee did not estop it from denying its liability to such employee for the judgment thus recovered.

So, in Hendricks v. Dean, 105 Minn. 162, 117 N. W. 426, it was held that a grantor of real property who conducted the defense in an action against his tenant to recover possession did not thereby become bound by the judgment to reimburse or pay the plaintiff therein the amount of damages for which the judgment was rendered.

In Leathe v. Thomas, 109 Ill. App. 434, affirmed in 218 Ill. 246, 75 N. E. 810, 4 Ann. Cas. 79, rehearing denied in 233 Ill. 430, 84 N. E. 481, it was held that a judgment in an action against a corporation for debt, which was defended by another for the reason that it was alleged that he was bound to pay the debts of the corporation, was binding upon him in so far as the amount of the debt was concerned, but not as to his liability therefor.

In New Orleans v. Gaines (New Orleans v. Whitney), 138 U. S. 595, 34 L. ed. 1102, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428, a judgment in an action in ejectment, in which the grantor of the owner assumed the defense, was held binding upon such grantor as to the amount of rents, in a subsequent action against the grantor for rents so found due. The defendant in this case was held liable to the plaintiff on the theory that the plaintiff had been subrogated to the rights of the defendant as against the grantor.

In Strong v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 62 Mo. 289, 21 Am. Rep. 417, a judgment in an action against an insurance company was held conclusive upon a reinsurer who agreed with the insurer that he should resist and defend the claim, and for that purpose should retain counsel and manage the defense, and 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

agreed further for a division of the expense of such litigation and a judgment, in case judgment was rendered against the insurer, in a subsequent action by the insured against such reinsurer; the ground on which this liability was based does not appear farther than that it is stated that the reinsurer was privy to the original suit, and assisted in its management. The rule of liability is stated by the court to be that where parties are each interested in the determination of a suit, the one being bound to protect the other from liability, the former is bound by the result of the litigation to which such other is a party, provided he had notice of the litigation and an opportunity to manage and control it.

Patent and trademark cases.

In National Folding-Box & Paper Co. v. Dayton Paper Novelty Co. 95 Fed. 991, a judgment in an action for the infringement of a patent, against a purchaser of the article which was claimed to be an infringement, was held conclusive upon the manufacturer, who paid the expenses of the suit and controlled the litigation and guaranteed the purchasers against loss, as to the part of the profits from the sale of the patented article which were due to the patent of the complainant. Reversed on other grounds in 97 Fed. 331.

In Sacks v. Kupferle, 127 Fed. 569, it was held that a manufacturer who defended a suit against his factor or agent at his own expense, and, in behalf of and in the name of the agent, appealed from the decree, the result being a final judgment that the complainant was not the inventor of the device claimed, was entitled to plead the judgment as conclusive as to any matter that might have been adjudicated, in a subsequent action against him on the same patent, notwithstanding the application by the court in the previous action of a rule of evidence long recognized and well established which the complainant claimed was a surprise to him.

In Bryant Electric Co. v. Marshall, 169 Fed. 426, it was held that where the manufacturer undertook the defense of an infringement suit against a customer, in which a patent of several claims was made the basis of the bill, and no discrimination was made between the claims, and it was entered upon the record that it was stipulated and agreed that the manufacturer was defending the suit, a judgment in such action was conclusive upon the plaintiff therein as to all claims of such patent, so as to entitle such manufacturer to enjoin the prosecution of a subsequent suit against another customer. Affirmed in 107 C. C. A. 599, 185 Fed. 499; writ of certiorari denied in 220 U. S. 622, 55 L. ed. 613, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 724.

In Confectioners' Machinery & Mfg. Co. v. Racine Engine & Mach. Co. 163 Fed. 914, affirmed in 95 C. C. A. 671, 170 Fed. 1021, it was held that a judgment in an action for infringement of a patent against a purchaser, from the manufacturer, who conducted the defense to the suit under an agreement with such purchaser, was conclusive upon a corporation with succeeded to the rights of such manufacturer, and which paid part of the expenses of the suit, in a subsequent action by a corporation that had acquired the patent rights of complainant in former suit, and this notwithstanding the defendant in the first suit did not produce any affirmative proof.

In Penfield v. Potts, 61 C. C. A. 371, 126 Fed. 475, it was held that where a number of defendants in infringements suits agreed to make a mutual and common defense, each paying his proportion of the costs, and a stipulation was entered into that the evidence taken in one case should be used in the others so far as the same was relevant and competent, and all this was done openly and with the knowledge of the opposite party and in defense of their own interests, a judgment in one of the actions was conclusive upon the plaintiff in another, on the issues which were identical to those involved in the first case, and this although the final judgment in the first case was not rendered until after an interlocutory decree on the merits had been rendered in the second.

In Theller v. Hershey, 89 Fed. 575, one who enters into an agreement with defendant in an infringement suit and another to stand together in the defense of the action, and each contributes one third of the costs, in accordance with which agreement attorneys are employed and a defense made, will be concluded by the judgment, in a subsequent action for infringement of the same letters patent as were sued upon in the former action.

In Miller v. Leggett & M. Tobacco Co. 2 McCrary, 375, 7 Fed. 91, it was held that a manufacturing company that had previously issued a circular promising to protect its customers against liability, and, in an action against one such customer, contributed money and employed counsel to defend, but in all other respects was entirely independent, would be bound by the judgment thereon if it had the right of appeal. And since this question had not been decided in the court in which the infringement suit was pending, no final judgment was entered.

In David Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Eagle Mfg. Co. 6 C. C. A. 661, 18 U. S. App. 349, 57 Fed. 980, affirming 50 Fed. 193, it was held that a judgment in an action against a branch house of a manufacturing company, in which the manufacturer conducted the defense in the name of such branch house, was conclusive upon such manufacturer as to the infringement and as to all questions that might have been raised and determined in the suit, in a subsequent action against the manufacturer for the infringement. It was urged that the subsequent suit was prosecuted for an infringement not involved in the prior adjudication, and that the demand was not the same, but the court states that the proper test in cases of this kind is whether the right asserted by the party as the foundation of the suit is the same right determined upon in the previous action. Similar facts and holding appear in Moline Plow Co. v. Eagle Mfg. Co. 6 C. C. A. 673, 18 U. S. App. 371, 57 Fed. 992. Petition for rehearing denied in 7 C. C. A. 442, 18 U. S. App. 455, 58 Fed. 721.

This rule is recognized in Eagle Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 41 Fed. 351, reversed on other grounds in 151 U. S. 186, 38 L. ed. 121, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 310, where, in a suit against an agent to restrain the infringement of a patent, the plaintiff filed an amendment making the manufacturer a party, but no subpoena was issued or served, nor appearance entered; but in which suit the manufacturer, who was bound by contract to protect his agents against the consequences of the infringement, assumed and controlled the management of the defense. The complainant in the case asked that the decree run against the manufacturer, and the court states that such manufacturer was as fully bound by the results of the litigation as though he had been a party to the record; and it is stated that an apt statement might be made in the decree to this effect.

In Empire State Nail Co. v. American Solid Leather Button Co. 21 C. C. A. 152, 33 U. S. App. 522, 74 Fed. 864, reversing 71 Fed. 588, it was held that a judgment as to the validity of the patent in an action against a purchaser for infringement of a patent, in which the manufacturer assumed the defense, was binding upon such manufacturer the same as if he were a party, in a subsequent action against the manufacturer for an infringement of the same patent by the manufacturer of articles similar to those involved in the first suit.

So, in D'Arcy v. Staples & H. Co. 88 C. C. A. 606, 161 Fed. 733, the court recognizes the general rule, but holds that where the infringement is another infringement than that which constituted the cause of action in the previous case, the judgment is not binding.

In Lane v. Welds, 39 C. C. A. 528, 99 Fed. 286, a judgment in an action for the infringement of a patent fence, against one who purchased a machine and materials with which he made the fence, was held not to estop the patentee of the machine from challenging the validity of the patents, although such patentee promised to defend the suit against his vendee, and did pay a small sum to obtain copies of the patents of the plaintiffs, but thereafter refused to proceed further, when the defense was abandoned and a decree by agreement was rendered. It is stated that the patentee took no interest in the former suit except so far as it limited the use of his machine to fences not covered by the plaintiffs' patent, and further that the plaintiffs knew nothing of the defendants' interference, and hence would not be estopped by the judgment, and therefore the defendants would not be estopped.

In Australian Knitting Co. v. Gormly, 138 Fed. 92, it was held that a manufacturer of a patented article, who assumed the defense of a suit against one of his vendees for infringement by the use of the article in question, so as to have the right to control the defense and take an appeal, was not concluded by an interlocutory judgment in a subsequent action against him for making and vending the machine in question so as to preclude him from setting up new defenses therein. There is dictum to the effect that if the manufacturer had been a party in the broad sense of that term, the strict doctrine of res judicata would have applied, and a final judgment would have been binding not only as to all questions actually decided, but as to all that might have been raised and litigated.

In Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Jefferson Electric Light, Heat & P. Co. 135 Fed. 365, affirmed in 71 C. C. A. 481, 139 Fed. 385, s. c. 128 Fed. 751, it was held that a party who has concealed and denied his connection with the defense of an action for infringement cannot, when such litigation has terminated successfully, claim the benefit of such judgment as res judicata in a suit against him for the infringement of a patent.

In Cramer v. Singer Mfg. Co. 35 C. C. A. 508, 93 Fed. 636, a judgment in an action against a manufacturing company and its general agent, from which the company was dismissed for want of service, was held not conclusive upon the plaintiff in such action, in a subsequent action against the manufacturing company for an infringement of the same patent, although such manufacturing company took an active part in the defense and paid a part of the expenses of the first action. It is stated that the evidence falls short of showing that the manufacturing company had such relation to the defense as that it could plead the judgment as a bar: that so far as the evidence discloses the fact, the company's connection with the former litigation was secret, and not known to the plaintiff, that the withdrawal of the company from the case indicated that it did not desire to be bound by a judgment that might be rendered, and this was further evidenced by the fact that, in dismissing the action as to the manufacturing company, it was dismissed without prejudice to commence another suit for the same cause of action. Writ of certiorari denied in 175 U. S. 725, 44 L. ed. 338, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1022.

In Hanks Dental Asso. v. International Tooth Crown Co. 58 C. C. A. 180, 122 Fed. 74, a judgment in an action for the infringement of a patent, in which the patent was declared invalid, is not made conclusive upon the plaintiff therein, in a subsequent action against another defendant, by reason of the fact that a protective association which defended the first suit was defending the second, in the absence of a showing that the protective association contributed openly to the defense of the first suit, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs therein. Judgment for plaintiff was reversed on the ground that there was no legal evidence of infringement. 63 C. C. A. 684, 130 Fed. 1022.

In Lacroix v. Lyons, 33 Fed. 437, a judgment in an action for infringement of a trademark in a suit against a vendee was held not conclusive in favor of the plaintiff, in a subsequent action against the vendor, in the absence of a showing that such vendor was a party to the previous suit, or that he defended the same openly in his own interest.

In General Electric Co. v. Morgan-Dardner Electric Co. 93 C. C. A. 474, 168 Fed. 52, it was held that a judgment in an action for infringement of a patent, in which the manufacturer paid the attorney who appeared for the customer, and a part or all of the court costs, did not bind such manufacturer, in the absence of proof that the attorney was not under the exclusive direction and control of the nominal defendant, or that the manufacturer had any standing except as an interested sympathetic nonparticipant.

In Saxlehner v. Eisner, 140 Fed. 938, it was held that the principal stockholders of a corporation, who controlled the corporation, and who participated in acts constituting an infringement, and who aided in the defense of an action for such infringement, were concluded by a judgment in such action, in a subsequent action against them on the theory that they were joint infringers, and for an accounting from them individually on account of the dissipation of the corporate funds. Affirmed in 77 C. C. A. 417, 147 Fed. 189. Writ of certiorari denied to affirming decision in 203 U. S. 591, 51 L. ed. 331, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778.

In Wilgus v. Germain, 19 C. C. A. 188, 44 U. S. App. 369, 72 Fed. 773, it was held that judgments in several actions against corporations for infringement of a patent, in one of which an officer of the corporation was present and testified, and in another a stockholder was present and took a leading part, were not conclusive upon such officers so as to estop them from advancing a defense there advanced, in a subsequent action against a partnership of which they were members, and which had sold the articles which were the subject of the first suits, since, although they appeared in the first, they were not parties so as to entitle them to the right to control the proceedings, or to adduce or cross-examine witnesses, or to appeal from the judgment; and even if it be conceded that they were parties to the former action, that action could not bind the partnership when sued in a subsequent case.

In American Bell Teleph. Co. v. National Improved Teleph. Co. 27 Fed. 663, it is stated that a licensor of one who is sued for infringement, and whom the licensor had previously contracted to save harmless in case of suit, is bound by a judgment rendered in such suit, as to the validity of the patent, notwithstanding the licensor withdrew from the defense and dismissed the counsel employed by him before the decree was rendered. In the subsequent suit, however, the court examined the question of the validity of the patent on its merits, and did not rely on the former adjudication in the application for a preliminary injunction.

So, in Robertson v. Hill, 6 Fisher, Pat. Cas. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,925, a preliminary injunction was granted as against a defendant who had participated in the defense of the previous suits, with full opportunity to test the validity of the patent.

In United States & F. Salamander Felting Co. v. Asbestos Felting Co. Fed. Cas. No. 16,787, a judgment in an action for infringement of a patent, in which a person who supplied the device for the use of which the suit had been brought, and who assumed and conducted the defense, was held conclusive upon such person as to the matter there decided. W. A. E.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

STONEGA COKE & COAL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

C. M. ADDINGTON.

(112 Va. 807, 73 S. E. 257.)

Damages — breach of contract — duty to minimize.

1. The damages to be awarded to one who has contracted to drive entries in a mine, because of the failure of the other contracting party to perform his agreement to furnish the pumps, piping, and tools necessary to keep the mine free from water, which might be procured at small cost, is the cost of such appliances, and not the cost of the labor of bailing entailed by failure to provide them.

57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Contract — waiver of provisions — furnishing appliances.

2. One contracting to drive entries in a mine waives his contract right to have the other contracting party furnish pumps, piping, and tools to keep water out of the mine, which might be secured at small cost, by working for several months without procuring them or insisting that they be furnished, but informing the other party that he will bail the water out.

(November 16, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wise County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for failure of defendant to furnish to plaintiff certain appliances, necessary for work, in accordance with his agreement. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bullitt & Chalkley for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Bond & Bruce for defendant in error.

Keith, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

C. M. Addington brought an action of assumpsit in the circuit court of Wise county against the Stonega Coke & Coal Company, in which he states that, at the request of the defendant, he had agreed to drive two entries into its mines in the county of Wise for a distance of 1,700 feet, to mine out all the "break-throughs," and to do all the temporary timbering, and to remove and clean up all the slate, dirt, and refuse in said entries and break-throughs, except when there was a fall of slate more than 12 inches in thickness; to drive the head-

Note. — Proceeding with work as water by contractor of stipulations by other party to furnish appliances or facilities for the work.

It will be seen that in STONEGA COKE & COAL Co. v. ADDINGTON, the court places the waiver of the defendant's failure to furnish appliances for removing the water, on the ground that the plaintiff informed the defendant that he would bail the water out, as non constat if the plaintiff had not made this statement, the defendant would have furnished the appliances.

Few cases have been found where the courts have considered the proceeding with work by the contractor in its relation to a breach of a stipulation by the other party to furnish materials or facilities. Most of the cases upon the subject of waiver are of stipulations as to money or time, and the derelictions considered are usually those of the contractor as distinguished from the owner.

It will be seen that while, on the one hand, the proceeding with work by the con-ings of the usual width, and take out all of the coal therein to the roof, unless the entry could be driven 6 feet in height, and leave a roof or top of coal at least 12 inches thick, and in that event the entry was to be left 6 feet in height; and to load into mine cars all of the coal taken out of said entries and break-throughs in driving the same as aforesaid; and the defendant then and there undertook and agreed with the plaintiff to furnish and provide at the drift mouth of said entries all props, crossbeams, and other timbers necessary to support the roof of said mine, and all ties, spikes, partings, and switches and other material and appliances necessary to make the said track, and all pumps, pipes, and wrenches, and tools and appliances necessary to pump or siphon the water out of said mine, and to furnish all cars necessary to load the coal and other material taken from said entries, and to haul all ties, props, rails, and timber into said entries, and haul out all loaded cars as fast as the same were loaded, and to pay the plaintiff $4 per lineal yard for each yard of entry and break-throughs driven by him as aforesaid, and to pay to him on its regular pay day in each month all amounts due to him for the work done under and in pursuance of said agreement for the preceding month. The plaintiff avers that he always, from the time of making the agreement, performed all things on his part to be performed; that he purchased and provided himself with tools, materials, and supplies necessary to do said work, and did tractor is not necessarily a waiver of damages for a default by the other party, on the other hand, there are cases where the contractor may not keep the contract alive by doing what the other party has agreed to do, but has omitted.

Cases of the first class fall within the general principle stated in Starbird v. Barrens, 38 N. Y. 230, where the court said, in holding that a carrier, notwithstanding the shipper's default in not having the goods ready when agreed, might still, after performing as well as he could, recover damages caused by the delay; "I do not understand that a party is not at liberty, if he thinks he sees a fair prospect, or indeed, but a reasonable hope that he may still perform, notwithstanding the default of the other party, — to go on and complete his engagement, and earn the compensation to which in that event he will be entitled; and if he ultimately fails, despite a strenuous effort to perform, to accomplish the result, that he cannot claim all the damages, and repair the losses he has suffered by the default of the other party. While a party thus situated is at liberty to rescind a contract, he is not obliged to do so, and especially is he under no obligation to do this, when it is not probable that a rescission will afford him a remedy adequate to the damages he has sustained. The principle which should govern such a case as this is no where more clearly stated than by Judge Denio, in the case of Cross v. Beard, 26 N. Y. 88; and it is, in my judgment, the true rule applicable here. 'In every contract,' he says, 'between parties where the performance by one of them presupposes some act to be done by the other party prior thereto, or contemporaneously, the neglect or refusal to perform such act not only dispenses with the obligation which the other party was under to perform on his part, but where the circumstances are such that a rescission of the contract will not afford an adequate remedy to the party who was ready to perform, he is entitled to a recompense against the delinquent, equal to the damages which such delinquency has caused him.'"

57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Thus in State v. Arkansas Brick & Mfg. Co. 98 Ark. 125, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 376, 135 S. W. 843, where the state agreed to furnish the defendant with a certain number of laborers for a certain price per man per day, and failed to provide the agreed number; but the defendant while from time to time demanding that the state perform its contract and furnish the agreed number, nevertheless paid each month to the state, during most of the contract, the amount per man agreed upon for the laborers actually furnished, it was held that the defendant had not waived this breach on the part of the state, and might recoup its damages therefor in an action by the state for a balance due under the contract.

(It may be here noted that in F. H. Mills Co. v. State, 110 App. Div. 843, 97 N. Y. Supp. 676, affirmed in 187 N. Y. 552, 80 N. E. 1109, where the defendant agreed to furnish certain persons to work for the plaintiff in making furniture on the defendant's property, and was to complete a certain kiln, it was held that the plaintiff had waived the matter of the kiln, but it appeared in the case that the contract was modified by an agreement for another kiln.)

In El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Eichel, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 130 S. W. 922, where the plaintiffs contracted to crush stone for ballast for the defendant railroad, which was to furnish a crusher of a certain capacity and the necessary coal and water, and the crusher was of much smaller capacity than contracted for, the coal unsuitable and had to be screened, and the water impregnated with alkali and other substances and caused foaming in the boiler, the plaintiffs went on with the contract under these conditions for a certain time and then abandoned it. It was claimed by the defendant: (1) That the plaintiffs, having accepted the plant and used it, were estopped from claiming any additional compensation by way of damages for increased cost incurred by them in producing the ballast, over and above the price at which it might have been produced under different circumstances; and (2) that having abandoned their contract mine and drive a considerable portion of said entries and break-throughs, or the most difficult and expensive part thereof, and did bail and haul out of said mine large quantities of water; and that he was always been ready, able, willing, and anxious to perform and complete the whole of said work in pursuance of his agreement; that the defendant, not regarding its promise; but intending to injure the plaintiff, did not perform the agreement on its part, but failed and refused to furnish and provide the plaintiff with props, crossbeams, and other timbers necessary to support the roof of said mine, and ties, rails, spikes, partings, switches, and other materials and appliances necessary to make the said track, and pumps, pipes, wrenches, tools, and appliances necessary to pump or siphon the water out of said entries and break-throughs, and to furnish cars necessary to load said coal and other material taken from said mine, and to haul the timbers, props, rails, and ties into the said mine, and to haul out the loaded cars; and that in November, 1908, the defendant would not permit or suffer the plaintiff to complete his work, and then and there hindered and prevented him from doing so, and discharged the plaintiff from any further performance or completion of his said agreement, to the damage of the plaintiff $2,000.

The plaintiff's bill of particulars is for damage by reason of the failure of the defendant to furnish pipes, wrenches, and pumps ($200), and for profit on contract and declined to carry it out, they could not lawfully demand of the defendant the profit they would have made upon the performance of the work not in fact performed, and the completion of which they had abandoned. As to the first proposition the court said: "After the plant was accepted, the breach of any condition to be fulfilled by the defendant could be treated by the plaintiffs as a breach of warranty, and not as a ground for rejecting the plant and treating the contract as repudiated; there being no term of the contract, express or implied, to that effect. . . . They were unaware of the plant's defective capacity when they accepted it, and only obtained knowledge of it by demonstration from its use in the work for which it was furnished. Because they had obtained such knowledge in that manner, must they forfeit all the profit they would have reasonably made had the plant been of such capacity as defendant was obligated to furnish, upon the principle they are estoppel from claiming them? If so, why? For what reason?" As to the second proposition the court said: "When the obligation of performance by one party presupposes the doing of some act by the other party thereto, the neglect or refusal to perform such act not only dispenses with the obligation of performance by the other, but also entitles him to rescind, or when rescission will not afford him an adequate remedy, to continue the work and recover such damages as the delinquency has occasioned him.

. . . When these principles are applied to the case under consideration, it seems to us that the obligation of the defendant to furnish the plaintiffs with a crushing plant of the capacity stipulated, while a warranty as well, was a condition precedent, the breach of which discharged the contract (Wald's Pollock, Contr. 3d ed. 655), and justified the plaintiffs in abandoning the performance of their part of it; and that their partial performance did not preclude them from abandoning the performance of their part of it, and recovering damages from defendant by reason of its breach of such condition. Therefore, when it became evident that defendant would not supply plaintiff with an efficient plant, and suitable coal and water with which to operate it as it agreed to do, they had the right to abandon their contract."

In Mansfield v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 205, 6 N. E. 386, where the plaintiffs had agreed to erect an elevator for the defendant, and to commence such erection within five days after notice from the defendant's engineer that the foundations were ready, they alleged as a breach that the defendant failed to have the foundations ready for the erection of the elevator at the time notice was served upon them and they were required to commence work for its construction, and claimed damages therefor by reason of increased expense in doing the work and supplying materials, and loss of gain or profits, arising from the delay occasioned by the want of readiness on the part of the owner. In reversing a judgment for the defendant the court said: "It is also claimed by the respondent that the act of the contractor in commencing the work within five days after receipt of the notice in question constituted a waiver of the breach complained of. The evidence establishes the fact that, immediately upon receipt of the notice, the contractors protested against it, and claimed that it was given in violation of the true meaning and spirit of the contract, and that the foundations were not only not ready, but were in such a condition that they could not commence or prosecute their work, except at increased expense and great disadvantage. Under the solicitations of the engineer, however, as they offered to prove, and without waiving any rights secured to them under the contract, they in fact commenced the prosecution of the work. There is nothing in the facts upon which an intention to waive the damages arising out of the breach complained of can be predicated. When the breach occurred, the contractors undoubtedly had the option of refusing to commence their work until the foundations were actually ready, or to commence and prosecute it, relying upon the covenants of their contract to recover such damages as the breach occasioned them. (Starbird v.

($1,800). The defendant filed a bill of particulars, which is nothing more than an amplification of the plea of nonassumpsit.

The case was submitted to a jury, which found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $800, upon which the court entered judgment, and the case is before us upon a writ of error awarded the defendant.

The first error assigned is that the court erred in giving to the jury a certain instruction asked for by the plaintiff, which is as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff and defendant made the agreement as alleged in the declaration, and that the plaintiff has complied with all the requirements of the contract on his part to be performed, and that there was a material breach of the contract by the defendant, then they must find for the plaintiff.

"The court further tells the jury that if they find for the plaintiff they shall assess such damages as in their opinion he has sustained, and in assessing the damages they shall take into consideration the value of any labor which the plaintiff has done by reason of the failure of the defendant to furnish pipes, wrenches, and pumps, if they believe that defendant was to furnish same, and they shall allow him, also, any profit which, in their opinion, the plaintiff would have made, if he had been permitted to complete the contract."

The defendant, in lieu of this instruction, asked the court to tell the jury that, "al-Barrons, 38 N. Y. 231; Ruff v. Rinaldo, 55 N. Y. 664; Cross v. Beard, 26 N. Y. 88). After express notice to the defendants of their intention to hold them liable for the damages arising from the omission to complete the foundations, they elected to commence the prosecution of the work. This they were entitled to do, and it constitutes no waiver of their claims."

In Miller v. Mantik, — Md. —, 81 Atl. 797, where the plaintiff agreed to furnish certain tomatoes for the defendant, who was to furnish the cans therefor, the action was in assumpsit, not upon the written contract, but upon a quantum meruit for a balance due for goods actually delivered but not paid for by the buyer, and it was claimed by the defendant that the plaintiff made some deliveries after the time when the defendant had refused or failed to deliver cans, and that this showed a waiver on the part of the plaintiff of any right he may have had to abandon the further performance of the contract. It was held, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, that upon the conflicting testimony the question of waiver was for the jury. It seems to have been the opinion of the court below that there would have been a waiver if the jury found that there had not been a demand by the plaintiff, on the defendant, for the cans.

In Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 417, where the plaintiffs were to furnish certain water power to the defendant, who was to make certain instruments for them, and, owing to the breaking of the dam, the water power was diminished while the plaintiffs were repairing the dam and putting in a steam engine, and the defendant, after proceeding with his contract for a time, finally refused to go on with it some time after the putting up of the steam engine but before the restoration of the dam, the court said: "Whether the failure to furnish the stipulated power, between the time of the breaking of the dam and the completion of the steam engine ready for use, was the failure of a condition precedent or not, warranting the defendant to give up the performance of the contract, is immaterial, because in fact, as that evidence shows, he went on with the execution of the contract, until the steam engine was put in motion and ready for use, about the 7th of December. And such continuance was a waiver of the breach of condition to that time." But the court was of the opinion that, if the defendant had suffered loss by the delay in furnishing the power, he would have a remedy by action for the damages he had thereby actually sustained.

Where contractor may not waive.

Where one party to a contract was required to furnish certain sketches, etc., for the other party, a publisher, to insert in his advertising paper, and he notified the publisher that he would not go on with the contract, it was held that the publisher had no right to prepare and publish the advertising matter. Peck v. Kansas City Roofing & Corrugating Co. 96 Mo. App. 212, 70 S. W. 169.

And in Savage Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 19 Me. 147, where the defendant agreed to take and pay for certain machines to be made according to a model to be by him furnished, and did not furnish the model, and the plaintiffs purchased a model such as they supposed the defendant should have furnished, and proceeded to make the machines, it was held that if the defendant did not furnish the model the plaintiffs had no right to do so.

So, in New York Architectural Terra-Cotta Co. v. Williams, 102 App. Div. 1, 92 N. Y. Supp. 808, affirmed in 184 N. Y. 579, 77 N. E. 1192, where an iron company contracted to do certain work on the materials of a building for the owner, who was to "supply all detail drawings," and the owner did supply certain drawings, but the iron company claimed that the drawings meant by the contract were certain "shop drawings and punching machines," and that it was entitled to charge for such drawings made by it, the court, while holding that the owner had supplied all the drawings intended by the contract, said: "But even if the testimony supported the contention though they believe from the evidence that the defendant agreed to furnish the plaintiff with pumps, pipes, and wrenches for the purpose of syphoning the water out of the mine, and did not furnish the same, or did not furnish pumps and pipes which would properly do the work, yet, if the plaintiff continued to work for several months after the defendant had failed to furnish the said appliances, and stated to the company that he would bail the water out, he cannot now claim that the said failure to furnish the said pumps, pipes, and wrenches was a violation of the contract on defendant's part, and cannot recover damages on account thereof."

The court refused to give this instruction as asked, and modified the same by inserting therein, after the words "bail the water out," the following words, viz., "and waived his right to have said appliances furnished him, then," and gave said instruction as so modified. To all of which the defendant excepted.

The giving of the first instruction, considered in connection with the facts in this case, presents an interesting question of law. It is shown by the plaintiff's own evidence that, conceding that the defendant was bound to furnish pumps, pipes, and wrenches, and that it failed to comply with its agreement in this respect, they could have been purchased for a very small sum; and the contention of the defendant is that the cost to the plaintiff of such appliances is the true measure of the damages to which of the Fagan Iron Works, still it is extremely doubtful, in my opinion, whether this charge could be allowed, for then the case would stand thus: The owner was bound to furnish these details as a condition precedent to the performance of the work by the Fagan Iron Works; if he neglected or refused to furnish them, then the remedy of the Fagan Iron Works would have been to refuse to proceed with its contract, and hold the owner liable for damages for the breach. Parr v. Greenbush, 112 N. Y. 247, 19 N. E. 684."

In Parr v. Greenbush, 112 N. Y. 246, 19 N. E. 684, the plaintiff, who had contracted to do certain paving for the defendant village, which was to furnish the necessary sand and gravel and do the grading, sued for damages for the defendant's default as to the sand, gravel, and grading, and alleged that he could not fulfil on his part until the sand and gravel were furnished and the grading done; that he thereupon proceeded to perform on his part the provisions of the contract, and did the grading and furnished the gravel; and that this was done at the special instance and request of the defendant. It appeared that this request was in a resolution which had already been held invalid, and thus not available to the plaintiff. (See 72 N. Y. 463.) The court, while holding that a judgment for the plaintiff must be reversed on account of the fact that the matters were all compromised and settled between the parties, nevertheless said: "Ordinarily, when one party to a contract refuses to perform, that alone does not authorize the other party to go on with the contract and perform for the defaulting party. If A contracts with B to do the labor requisite for the construction of a house upon A's land, who is to furnish the materials for that purpose, and A refuses to furnish the materials so that B can do the work, B is not thereby authorized to furnish the materials himself, and go on and complete his contract. Without A's consent, B has no authority to enter upon his land, and B's only remedy is an action for damages for breach of the contract by A. So here, if the defendant refused to furnish the sand and gravel, and do the grading and thus perform its covenants, the plaintiff had no right to enter upon the street, and do the work and furnish the materials at the expense of the defendant. His only remedy was to stop there and bring an action for damages against the defendant for its breach of the contract. There are cases where one party to a contract may furnish the work and the materials which the other party is bound to furnish, and omits, upon request, to furnish, and where he may recover the expenses of furnishing them, as damages for a breach of the contract by such other party. It is difficult, if not impossible, to define those cases by any general rule. It is sufficient to say that this is not one of them. Those cases are, generally, where one party to a contract has entered upon the performance thereof, and the other party omits, upon request, to do something of no great importance, to be thereafter performed before further progress can be made with the contract, and then the party anxious to perform does the work or furnishes the material which the other party ought to have done or furnished; and, in such case, he may recover the expense of the work done and materials furnished, as damages for a breach of the contract by the other party. Where the lessor has covenanted to repair, and the lessee enters into possession, and repairs thereafter become necessary, which the lessor refuses to make, the lessee may make them and recover the expenses of them, as damages for breach of the lessor's contract. But the cases may be very rare, if, indeed, there are any, where one party refuses to perform a condition precedent which stands in the way of any performance by the other party, and the latter party can nevertheless perform the condition and recover the expense of such performance, as damages for a breach of the contract by the other party. The law, in such cases, recognizes the right and power of one party to defeat performance of the contract by the other party, and leaves him responsible for the damages he thus causes the other party, which damages are usually measured by the value to him of the contract thus practically destroyed. In other he is entitled by reason of the failure of the defendant to furnish them in accordance with its contract, and not the "value of any labor which the plaintiff has done by reason of the failure of the defendant to furnish pipes, wrenches, and pumps." In other words, the defendant invokes the familiar doctrine, that the plaintiff cannot recover for avoidable consequences.

This subject is treated at large in Sedgwick on Damages, 8th ed. §§ 201, 202, and 205, and numerous cases are cited which illustrate the doctrine.

In Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Me. 51, 20 Am. Dec. 341, [Sedgw. Damages, § 201] it is said that "the delinquent party is holden to make good the loss occasioned by its delinquency. But his liability is limited to direct damages, which, according to the nature of the subject, may be contemplated or presumed to result from his failure. . . . If the party entitled to the benefit of a contract can protect himself from a loss arising from a breach, at a trifling expense or with reasonable exertions, he fails in social duty if he omits to do so. For example, a party contracts for a quantity of bricks to build a house, to be delivered at a given time, and engages masons and carpenters to go on with the work. The bricks are not delivered. If others bricks, of an equal quality and for the stipulated price, can be at once purchased on the spot, it would be unreasonable, by neglecting to make the purchase, to claim and receive of the delinquent party damages for the workmen, and the amount of rent which might be obtained for the house if it had been built.' So in trespass in Massachusetts, it appearing that the defendant had broken down the plaintiff's fence in November, but that the plaintiff did not repair the breach till May, in consequence of which cattle got in and destroyed the crop of the next year, and words, a party may repudiate or break a contract, while he cannot deny or destroy its obligations."

Reference may here be made to Thorp v. Ross, 4 Keyes, 546, where the plaintiffs, who were masons, had contracted for the sum of several thousand dollars to do certain mason work for the defendant, including the laying of the drain pipes and connecting them with the sewer, and since, under a city ordinance no connection could be made with the sewer except by a plumber specially licensed for that purpose, who must first obtain a permit and pay a fee of so much for each house, the plaintiffs employed such a plumber, who paid for the permit and was reimbursed by the plaintiffs. It was held in the lower court that at the time of the written agreement there was a collateral parol agreement that the plaintiffs should pay for these permits. The court of appeals, however, in affirming the judgment, said that it could not be sustained on the ground relied on in the lower court, but that if the plaintiffs were bound to pay for the permits by the written agreement, then of course they could not recover it, but that if they were not so bound, then they could not recover it, because they had paid the money without the defendant's request or authority; that it was a mere voluntary payment, and imposed upon him no legal obligation to refund; and that the plaintiffs could not have done this any more than they could have purchased a house upon which they agreed to do certain work when they found that the person with whom they contracted was not its owner. The court said: "And so, generally, where one has contracted to perform work, etc., of the description in question, if he find obstacles in the way which cannot be removed without the payment of money, and it is the duty of the party contracted with to remove such obstacles, and so enable him to perform his contract, he may require such party to remove them, and if such party refuse he will be excused pro tanto from the performance of his contract, and may recover his full profits, but he cannot volunteer to pay the money himself, and then compel the others to repay that which he had refused to pay. It would be strange if a request that the plaintiff pay money could be implied from the refusal of the defendant to pay it."

It may be noted that in Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Peck, 417, where by the contract the defendant was to manufacture irons for the plaintiffs, who were to furnish him all materials used in and about the manufacture, as soon and as often as he should reasonably require, the court said: "Furnishing stock and materials to some extent, and even to the whole amount, if that could be reasonably required, before commencing the work, was a condition precedent to any obligation on the defendant to perform, because he was to work on their materials. But if the plaintiffs, on the defendant's first requisition, had furnished a large quantity of materials, which he had accepted and commenced working upon, he was bound to go on, and finish the work on those materials; a subsequent neglect or refusal to furnish further materials would not excuse the defendant from performance, so far as to finish what he had begun, though it would be a breach of contract for which the defendant would have his remedy by action. And it would also excuse the defendant for all damages, arising from his non-performance, so far as it was occasioned by the want of the rest of the materials. For damages occasioned by nonperformance of such part of the contract, the plaintiffs could not recover, because it would be attributable to their own default; but they would be liable in a cross action, because it would result from a breach of their stipulations."

B. B. B.

the claim being for the loss of the subsequent year's crop, as well as the expense of repairing the fence, the supreme court said: "In assessing damages, the direct and immediate consequences of the injurious act are to be regarded, and not remote, speculative, and contingent consequences, which the party injured might easily have avoided by his own act. Suppose a man should enter his neighbor's field unlawfully, and leave the gate open; if, before the owner knows it, cattle enter and destroy the crop, the trespasser is responsible. But if the owner sees the gate open, and passes it frequently, and wilfully and obstinately, or through gross negligence, leaves it open all summer, and cattle get in, it is his own folly. So, if one throw a stone and break a window, the cost of repairing the window is the ordinary measure of damages. But, if the owner suffers the window to remain without repairing a great length of time after notice of the fact, and his furniture or pictures, or other valuable articles, sustain damage, or the rain beats in and rots the window, this damage would be too remote." "

And in § 205 (Sedgwick, supra), it is said that "the rule applies both in contract and tort, and illustrations may be drawn from every branch of the law."

See also, 13 Cyc. p. 71: "Where an injured party finds that a wrong has been perpetrated on him, he should use all reasonable means to arrest the loss. He cannot stand idly by and permit the loss to increase, and then hold the wrongdoer liable for the loss which he might have prevented. It is only incumbent upon him, however, to use reasonable exertion and reasonable expense, and the question in such cases is always whether the act was a reasonable one, having regard to all the circumstances of the particular case." See Factors & T. Ins. Co. v. Werlein, 42 La. Ann. 1046, 11 L.R.A. 361, 8 So. 435; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 152.

In Warren v. Stoddart, 105 U. S. 224, 26 L. ed. 1117, the rule is thus stated: "Where a party is entitled to the benefit of a contract, and can save himself from a loss arising from a breach of it at a trifling expense or with reasonable exertions, it is his duty to do it, and he can charge the delinquent with such damages only as with reasonable endeavors and expense he could not prevent."

Authorities upon this subject might have been multiplied to an almost unlimited extent, but those we have cited are deemed sufficient.

The testimony shows that the pump worked well at first; that it afterwards got stopped up with coal, by reason of not having a nozzle attached to it.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

One of the witnesses for the plaintiff was asked:

Q. How much did a nozzle cost?

A. Don't know how much it would have cost. Man could have took a tin can and made one.

Q. You just preferred to work it along and let it get stopped up with coal?

A. We was working by the day, and had to work according to Mr. Addington's orders.

And then, with reference to the wrench, the witness was asked:

Q. How much would it have cost to have gotten a wrench?

A. Not a great deal.

Q. How much would a pipe wrench have cost?

A. A large one maybe $1.50 or $1.75; something like that.

Another complaint was that the cylinder of the pump was not properly packed. The question was asked the witness:

Q. That you could have taken out and packed very easily?

A. Yes, sir; a mechanic could have taken it out and packed it.

Q. How long would it have taken to have done that?

A. Oh, a couple of hours.

We think these facts clearly bring the case within the operation of the principle we have discussed, and that it was error to give the instruction asked for by the plaintiff.

The instruction asked for by the plaintiff in error, defendant in the court below, which was refused as asked for and given with an amendment, is predicated upon the theory that the defendant agreed to furnish the plaintiff with pumps, pipes, and wrenches for the purpose of syphoning the water out of the mine; that it did not furnish the same, and did not furnish appliances which would properly do the work; but that plaintiff continued to work for several months after such failure upon the part of the defendant, and stated to the company that he would bail the water out. Then the instruction, as originally prepared, told the jury that the plaintiff could not afterwards claim damages for a violation of the contract on the part of the defendant to furnish pumps, pipes, and wrenches.

Plaintiff could have furnished pumps, pipes, and wrenches at a trifling cost, or, if that could not be done, he might have insisted upon a compliance by the defendant with its contract to furnish them; but having done neither of these things, and having informed the company that he would bail the water out, if the jury believed that such was the fact, he must be taken to have waived his right under the contract; for non constat plaintiff in error, without this statement on the part of defendant in error, would itself have furnished the needed appliances. If the facts stated in this instruction constitute a waiver, then plainly it was error, after the words, "he would bail the water out," to add the words, "and waived his right to have said appliances furnished him, then," for that was equivalent to telling the jury that the facts stated did not constitute a waiver.

As the case has to be reversed for error in instructions, we shall not consider the motion to set aside the verdict as contrary to the evidence.

The judgment is reversed, the verdict set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial to be had not in conflict with the views herein expressed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

UNITED STATES SMELTING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JOSEPH H. SISAM.

(112 C. C. A. 37, 191 Fed. 293.)

Damages — crop — injury and destruction.

1. The measure of damages to a growing crop by a wrongful act which destroys it is its value at the time and place of its destruction.

The measure of the damage to a growing

Headnotes by SANBORN, Circuit Judge.

Note. — Measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of, growing crops.

This note is supplemental to notes on same subject attached to Missouri P. R. Co. v. Sayers, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, and to Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co. 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 267; and also to a note on measure of damages for destruction of perennial crops, attached to Thompson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 310.

The rule as stated in the previous notes, that the measure of damages for the destruction of immatured growing crops is the value at the time of their destruction, has found further support in Gulf Pipe Line Co. v. Bryner, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 124 S. W. 1007 (grass and cornstalks destroyed through negligent escape of oil); Boyd v. Lincoln & N. W. R. Co. 89 Neb. 840, 132 N. W. 529; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

crop injured, but not rendered worthless, is the difference between the value of that crop before and after the injury, at the time and place thereof.

Where a crop is injured from time to time throughout its growing season until its maturity, by sulphurous fumes and their products, but is not destroyed, so that it is cultivated throughout the season, harvested, and marketed, the damage to it may be lawfully measured under these rules by the difference between the value at maturity of the probable crop, if there had been no injury, and the value of the actual crop at that time, less the expense of fitting for market that portion of the probable crop which was prevented from maturing by the injury.

Evidence — injury to crop — elements of damage.

2. Evidence of the kind of crop the land will ordinarily yield, of the stage of the crop's growth when injured or destroyed, of the average yield per acre of similar land in the neighborhood, the crop of which was cultivated in the same way, and was not injured, of the market value of the crop injured, and of the market value of the probable crop without the injury, at the time of maturity, of the expense that would have been incurred after the injury in fitting for market the portion of the probable crop the wrongful act prevented from maturing, of the time of the injury, and of the circumstances which conditioned the probability of the maturing of the crop at that time in the absence of the injury, is competent, and may be weighed by the jury to find the damage to a growing crop at the time of its injury.

Damages — nuisance — injury to residence.

3. The owner of a residence which is rendered inconvenient, uncomfortable, and unhealthy as a home, by the nuisance of sulphurous fumes and their products thrown upon and into it by another, may prove and recover in an action therefor the damages he suffers himself from the discomfort and Flynt, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 125 S. W. 347 (crops destroyed by overflowing of lands).

But in Candler v. Washoe Lake Reservoir & G. C. Ditch Co. 28 Nev. 151, 80 Pac. 751, 6 Ann. Cas. 946, the court, while admitting the general rule that the measure of damages for the destruction of growing crop is its value in its condition at the time of the injury, said that where it appears that the crops have been entirely destroyed or nearly so, and where there appears to be a reasonable certainty that they would have matured but for the wrongful act, the proper measure of damages would be to allow for the probable yield when matured and ready for market, deducting therefrom the estimated expense of producing, harvesting, and marketing them, and also deducting the value of any portion of the crops that may have been saved.

And in Freeman v. Field, — Tex. Civ.

sickness thereby inflicted upon his wife and the other members of his family who live with him therein, although he may not, and his wife alone may, maintain the cause for the direct personal injury to her.

(October 21, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Utah to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's crops and for discomfort and sickness of his family, alleged to have been caused by the fumes from defendant's smelter. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn and Van Devanter, Circuit Judges, and William H. Munger, District Judge.

App. —, 135 S. W. 1073, it was held that a charge to the jury that damages should be assessed "at such sum as you believe from the evidence would be the market value of his said crop of cotton and cotton seed at the nearest market, had the same matured, less the cost of finishing the cultivation of said crop, and the picking, gathering, preparing for market, hauling to, and marketing said crops of cotton and cotton seed," was correct, where unmatured cotton having no market value was destroyed. The court said: "the testimony showed that the crop was destroyed in June, at which time it was matured, and the testimony shows it had no market value in such condition. Plaintiff, in addition, testified as to how much it would cost to finish making the crop, to pick, weigh, and prepare the same for market, and market the same in the nearest market, what the yield would have been, and the value of the cotton and cotton seed in the nearest market. This being the condition of the record, we think the charge above given was correct."

In Enright v. Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. 158 Ill. App. 323, where growing crops were destroyed by being drowned out through the destruction of a tile drain, it was held that the proper measure of damages was the rental value of the ground, together with the reasonable value of the seed and labor expended in bringing the crop to the point at which it was destroyed.

The measure of damages for destruction of turpentine or resin produced, but still on the face of the trees, is its market value. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Davis, 5 Ga. App. 214, 62 S. E. 1022.

Perennial crops.

The earlier cases on measure of damages for injuring or destroying perennial crops are gathered in the note to Thompson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 310.

The measure of damages for destruction 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Messrs. Andrew Howat and H. R. Macmillan, for plaintiff in error:

The measure of compensation for damaging growing crops is ascertained by estimating the actual value of the crops in the condition in which they were at the time the injury is alleged to have occurred.

3 Sedgw. Damages, § 937; 3 Sutherland, Damages, § 1023; Field, Damages, § 1742; Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 27 Utah, 472, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988, 76 Pac. 341, 1 Ann. Cas. 761; Lommelund v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 412, 29 N. W. 120; Burnett v. Great Northern R. Co. 76 Minn. 461, 79 N. W. 524; Ward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Minn. 449, 63 N. W. 1105; Byrne v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 38 Minn. 212, 8 Am. St. Rep. 668, 36 N. W. 340; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Yarrowborough, 56 Ark. 612, 20 S. W.

of a matured crop of alfalfa is its market value standing on the ground. Adam v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 139 Mo. App. 204, 122 S. W. 1136.

Where crops of alfalfa are destroyed and also the stand, and the roots thereof are permanently affected, the owner may recover for the damage to the crops as well as for the permanent injury to the land, by reason of the destruction of the plant itself. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Malone, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 936. The court said: "We think alfalfa and other perennial grasses may be likened to our native grasses, and where the roots thereof are destroyed by water, fire, or any other agency, that the damage is one to the inheritance, for which the owner is entitled to recover."

In Hayden v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 84 Kan. 376, 114 Pac. 384, in an action to recover damages for the destruction of meadow grass by fire, it was held that while an instruction that recovery might be had for the value of growing timothy and clover, in addition to the cost of restoring the field to its original condition, might not be applicable in every case of a similar loss, yet it gave a fair measure of compensation in that case.

The measure of damages for the destruction of a standing but matured crop of timothy is the value of the crop in the market, after allowing for expense in harvesting and marketing (Mattis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 138 Mo. App. 61, 119 S. W. 998); for the destruction of the roots of the grass of a meadow, the cost of restoring the grass, including the loss of rental value while it is being restored (Ibid; Crouch v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 141 Mo. App. 256, 124 S. W. 1077). But for destruction by fire of the roots of wild or prairie grass, the measure is the difference in value of land before and after the fire. Mattis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. supra.

J. H. B.

516; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Lyman, 57 Ark. 512, 22 S. W. 171; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wallis, 82 Ark. 447, 102 S. W. 392; Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co. 151 Cal. 209, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 267, 90 Pac. 944, 12 Ann. Cas. 779; Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Co. 6 Cal. App. 58, 91 Pac. 429; Risse v. Collins, 12 Idaho, 689, 87 Pac. 1008; Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. v. Barnes, — Tenn. —, 60 S. W. 593; Carter v. Wabash R. Co. 128 Mo. App. 57, 106 S. W. 612; Hunt v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 126 Mo. App. 261, 103 S. W. 133; Berard v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 79 Neb. 830, 113 N. W. 538; Smith v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 81 Neb. 186, 115 N. W. 757; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Carter, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 1023; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Mayfield, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 941; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Pape, 73 Tex. 501, 11 S. W. 526; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGowan, 73 Tex. 355, 11 S. W. 337; Colorado Consol. Land & Water Co. v. Hartman, 5 Colo. App. 150, 38 Pac. 62; Hays v. Crist, 4 Kan. 351; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Nicholson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 54.

There was no proof of the cost of maturing the crops.

Candler v. Washoe Lake Reservoir & G. C. Ditch Co. 28 Nev. 151, 80 Pac. 753, 6 Ann. Cas. 946; Anderson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 384, 108 S. W. 607; Berard v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 79 Neb. 830, 113 N. W. 538; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Mayfield, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 941; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Pape, 73 Tex. 501, 11 S. W. 526; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Borsky, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 545, 21 S. W. 1011; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ryan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 21 S. W. 1013; Colorado Consol. Land & Water Co. v. Hartman, 5 Colo. App. 150, 38 Pac. 62; Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 27 Utah, 470, 101 Am. St. Rep. 98, 70 Pac. 341, 1 Ann. Cas. 761; Buist v. Guice, 96 Ala. 255, 11 So. 280.

Messrs. Brigham Clegg and Zane & Stringfellow, for defendant in error:

The difference between the market value of a matured crop on the same or similar land, under similar conditions, at the nearest market, less the cost of harvesting and marketing, and the market value of the injured crop, if any, is the measure of damages.

Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337, 36 Pac. 254; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Borsky, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 545, 21 S. W. 1011; Smith v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co. 38 Iowa, 518; Jones v. Cooley Lake Club, 122 Mo. App. 113, 98 S. W. 82; Anderson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 384, 108 S. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

W. 605; Scanland v. Musgrove, 91 Ill. App. 186.

Damages for discomforts and injuries to his family in his home are wrongs to plaintiff, for which he has the right to recover.

Pierce v. Wagner, 29 Minn. 355, 13 N. W. 170; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Anderson, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 121, 81 S. W. 788; Story v. Hammond, 4 Ohio, 376; Farver v. American Car & Foundry Co. 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 583; Ellis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 63 Mo. 134, 21 Am. Rep. 436.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

Joseph H. Sisam, the plaintiff below, recovered a judgment against United States Smelting Company, a corporation, for $750 damages caused to his growing crops of lucerne, grain, vegetables, fruits, and berries by the sulphurous fumes emitted from its smelter during the years 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, and $50 on account of the discomfort, sickness, and inconvenience inflicted upon him, his wife, and other members of his family, by the nuisance these fumes maintained in and about his home. The smelting company sued out a writ of error which presents its complaints of the course of the trial, which its counsel have reduced to three: (1) That incompetent evidence of damages resulting from the injuries to the crops was received, and a wrong rule for their measurement was given to the jury; (2) that there was no substantial evidence to sustain the recovery of such damages; and (3) that, under the law, the plaintiff could not lawfully prove or recover for injury to the health and comfort of his wife.

The specifications of error on which they rely to sustain their complaint that incompetent evidence of damages to the crops was received are (a) that after the plaintiff had introduced evidence that the fumes from the defendant's smelter injured his crops of potatoes in the year 1903, from time to time when the wind permitted them to float over his land throughout the growing season of the crop, and that he raised only 100 bushels to the acre, and would have raised 350 bushels to the acre if the fumes had not injured his crops, the court permitted him to testify what the value of potatoes was that year at the time of harvesting and gathering them, over the objection that the market value at the time the injury was inflicted was the only competent evidence of value; (b) that, after similar evidence regarding the plaintiff's crop of potatoes in 1904 had been given, like testimony of their market value was received; and (c) that after like testimony regarding the plaintiff's crop of potatoes in 1905 had been given, similar evidence of their market value was admitted. But there was no error in these rulings because, at the time they were made, the evidence was that the injury to the respective crops of potatoes from the fumes was continuous, though intermittent, through out each growing season, and hence that it did not cease until the potatoes matured. The injury to each crop was not done, it was not finished, until the crop ceased to grow, and when the crop ceased to grow the time for gathering and harvesting it had arrived. Conceding, therefore, that the time for measuring the damages was when the injury was done, the testimony of the market value of the potatoes at the time of the gathering and harvesting, which the court below received, was at that time.

The alleged error on which counsel rely to sustain their contention that the court gave to the jury the wrong rule for the measurement of the damages to the crops is that it charged the jury that the general measure of damages to growing crops by wrongful acts was the depreciation of the market price thereof caused by the acts at the time and place of the injury; that this rule could not be applied; that crops growing rarely have any market value; that the complicated circumstances of this case required them to consider the entire damage done to the entire crop injured in each year by the fumes; that this injury took place during the growing seasons from day to day, so that necessarily their attention must be directed to some other period of time than the time of the injury; that the other time to which they should direct their attention was the harvest time, when the crop first had a market value; and, to determine the extent of the plaintiff's injury, they should consider what crop the plaintiff would have raised in each year, if there had been no fumes from the smelter; that they should then ascertain the market value of that crop at the time when it first had a market value, at the nearest place where it had such a value; that they should deduct from that sum the market value of the crop the plaintiff actually raised, and that they should take from the remainder the expense the plaintiff saved because he did not raise, harvest, or gather that portion of the crop he would have raised, which he was prevented from raising by the fumes, and that the result would be the amount of damage to the crop.

It will be noticed that in this charge the court treated the crop of the plaintiff in each season as one and indivisible, and, considered in this way, the injury to it did not cease until its maturity, for the fumes diminished, but did not destroy, his crops of potatoes, wheat, beets, oats, and lucerne, and he harvested them, while some of his crops of berries and fruits were destroyed before maturity. If the request had been made that the jury should be instructed to consider and find separately the damage at the time of their destruction, caused by the destruction of the specific crops, no part of which matured, and that specific rules for the measurement of that damage should be given to the jury, and this request had been denied by the court, questions would have been presented in this case which are not now here. This is a court for the correction of the errors of the court below, and that court commits no errors upon questions upon which it does not rule. No request was made in this case of the character which has been mentioned, and none that a more specific charge upon the subject of the measure of damages should be given, and the only objection urged or exception taken was that the court instructed the jury to find the value of the probable crop and the actual crop in each season at their respective maturities, instead of at the time when the injury was inflicted. It is a complete answer to this criticism that the injury was inflicted at different times during the growing seasons when the direction of the wind and the condition of the atmosphere permitted the fumes and their products to settle on the crops, and this injury was not completed in any year until the crop of that year matured.

The true measure of the damages to a growing crop by a wrongful act which destroys it is its value at the time and place of the destruction. And the true measure of the damage to a growing crop injured, but not rendered worthless, by such an act, is the difference between the value of that crop before, and its value after, the injury, at the time and place thereof. Sedgw. Damages, 937. It is easy to announce this rule, but it is more difficult to determine what evidence shall be considered, and what effect that evidence shall have, in determining these values and the damage. The stronger reason and the great weight of authority are that evidence of the kind of crop the land will ordinarily yield, of the stage of the crop's growth when injured or destroyed, of the average yield per acre of similar land in the neighborhood, the crop of which was cultivated in the same way, and was not injured, of the market value of the crop injured, and of the market value of the probable crop without the injury, at the time of maturity, of the expense that would have been incurred after the injury in fitting for market the portion of the crop the wrongful act prevented from maturing, of the time of the injury, and of the circumstances which conditioned the probability of the maturing of the crop at that time in the absence of the injury, is competent, and may be weighed by the jury to find the damage to a growing crop at the time of its injury. Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 27 Utah, 470, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988, 76 Pac. 341, 1 Ann. Cas. 761; Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co. 151 Cal. 209, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 267, 90 Pac. 942, 944, 12 Ann. Cas. 779; Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Co. 6 Cal. App. 58, 91 Pac. 425, 429; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wallis, 82 Ark. 447, 102 S. W. 390, 392; Risse v. Collins, 12 Idaho, 689, 87 Pac. 1006, 1008; Hunt v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 126 Mo. App. 261, 103 S. W. 133; Berard v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 79 Neb. 830, 113 N. W. 537, 538; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Mayfield, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 940, 941; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Pape, 73 Tex. 501, 11 S. W. 526, 527; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGowan, 73 Tex. 355, 11 S. W. 336; Colorado Consol. Land & Water Co. v. Hartman, 5 Colo. App. 150, 38 Pac. 62, 63; Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337, 36 Pac. 254, 256; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Borsky, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 545, 21 S. W. 1011, 1012; Smith v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co. 38 Iowa, 518, 521; Jones v. Cooley Lake Club, 122 Mo. App. 113, 98 S. W. 82; Anderson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 384, 108 S. W. 605, 607.

There are authorities that damage to growing crops at the time they are injured or destroyed may not be measured by the jury by the difference between the market value at the maturity of the probable crop without the injury, and the value of the injured crop less expense of fitting for market the portion of the probable crop which did not mature. Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 27 Utah, 470, 472, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988, 76 Pac. 341, 1 Ann. Cas. 761; Burnett v. Great Northern R. Co. 76 Minn. 461, 79 N. W. 523, 524; Ward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Minn. 449, 63 N. W. 1104; Bryne v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 38 Minn. 212, 8 Am. St. Rep. 668, 36 N. W. 339; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Yarrowrough, 56 Ark. 612, 20 S. W. 515, 516; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Lyman, 57 Ark. 512, 22 S. W. 170, 171; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wallis, 82 Ark. 447, 102 S. W. 390, 392; Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co. 151 Cal. 209, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 267, 90 Pac. 942, 944, 12 Ann. Cas. 779; Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Co. 6 Cal. App. 58, 91 Pac. 425, 429; Risse v. Collins, 12 Idaho, 689, 87 Pac. 1006, 1008; Carter v. Wabash R. Co. 128 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Mo. App. 57, 106 S. W. 611; Hunt v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 126 Mo. App. 261, 103 S. W. 133; Berard v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 79 Neb. 830, 113 N. W. 537, 538; Gulf, C. & S. R. Co. v. Carter, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 1023; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Mayfield, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 940, 941; Hays v. Crist, 4 Kan. 350, 351. There are also decisions that such damage may be so measured. Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337, 36 Pac. 254, 256; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Borsky, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 545, 21 S. W. 1011, 1012; Smith v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co. 38 Iowa, 518, 521; Jones v. Cooley Lake Club, 122 Mo. App. 113, 98 S. W. 82. The majority of the decisions that hold that such damage may not be so measured adhere to the true rule that evidence of the value at maturity of the probable crop after the injury, of the value of the injured crop at that time, and of the expense of fitting for market the portion of the probable crop that did not mature, is competent, and should be considered by the jury in determining the damage to the growing crop at the time of the injury. The only conceivable reason for the admission of such evidence to the jury is thereby to present to them a basis, and often the best and the only substantial basis, for their finding of the damage to the growing crop at the time of the injury, and the rational meaning, as well as the actual effect, of these decisions, is that the difference between the values at maturity of the probable crop after the injury, and the actual crop, less the cost of fitting for market the portion of the probable crop which did not mature, does not alone fix the measure of the damage to the growing crop at the time of the injury, but that this amount, the probability, at the time of the injury, in view of all the circumstances of each case, that this amount would have been realized by the owner if the injury had not been inflicted, in addition to his actual realization from his crop, and the fact, if that be the fact, that the injury was inflicted some time before the time of the maturity of the crop, should all be considered by the jury, and from all of these facts and circumstances, and not from this amount alone, they should find the amount of the damage which the owner sustained to his growing crops at the time of the injury. This is a reasonable and practical rule for the measurement of such damages. It is not in conflict with the general current of authority, and it is a necessary and natural deduction from the established rule that the value at maturity of the probable crop, the value of the actual crop, and the expense of fitting for market that portion of the probable crop which does not mature, is competent evidence for the jury to consider in determining the damage to the growing crop at the time of its injury. And in view of the continuance of the injury in this case to each season's growing crop as a whole, until that crop matured, and the time for harvesting and marketing had arrived, the court committed no error in its instruction to measure the damage by the difference between the value of the probable crop and the value of the actual crop at that time, less the expense of fitting for market that portion of the probable crop which did not mature.

The next contention of counsel for defendant is that their motion for a directed verdict, and their motion for a verdict for nominal damages only, should have been granted because the plaintiff produced no evidence of the cost of cultivating to maturity that portion of the probable crop which was prevented from maturing by the fumes of the smelter, and because the proof was that the damage to the crops was caused by the fumes from four smelters, only one of which was operated by the defendant, and there was no substantial evidence what part of this damage was caused by the smelter the defendant operated. They claim that there was no substantial evidence of any definite amount of damages in this case, because the proof was that the growing crops of apples, cherries, pears, and berries were destroyed long before the time of their maturity, and there was no substantial evidence what expense of cultivating these crops from the time when their destruction was patent until the time of their maturity was saved to the plaintiff by their destruction. Conceding that this was the proof, and conceding that without such proof of expense the plaintiff was entitled to no damage on account of the destruction of these specific crops, the conclusion that there was no substantial evidence of damage in the case, and that the court should have directed a verdict for the defendant, or should have limited the plaintiff's recovery to nominal damages, does not follow. It does not follow, because there was plenary proof that in 1904 the plaintiff carefully cultivated to maturity 4 acres of potatoes; that his crop would probably have been 300 bushels to the acre, if it had not been injured by the fumes from the smelters; that it was only 100 bushels to the acre; that the market value of potatoes at the time of their maturity was 60 cents per bushel; and that the expense of harvesting and marketing them was 10 cents per bushel. The expense of cultivating in the same way 4 acres of potatoes when they produce 100 bushels per acre is the same as when they produce 300 bushels per acre. There, therefore, was substantial evidence of facts from which the jury could lawfully find a definite amount of actual damage to the plaintiff's crop of potatoes in the year 1904. The record in hand contains similar evidence regarding the plaintiff's crops of potatoes in each of the years 1903, 1905, and 1906, and relative to each of his crops of lucerne, wheat, oats, and beets. The result is that the contention that there was not substantial evidence of a definite amount of damage to plaintiff's crops, because there was no evidence of the expense of cultivating a few of them between the times of their respective destructions and their maturities, is untenable, for the reason that there was ample proof that he had many other crops that he carefully cultivated to maturity, and from which he obtained substantial returns, though much diminished by the fumes of the smelters, and it was as expensive to cultivate these crops to raise the less amounts they produced, as it would have been, in the absence of the fumes from the smelters, to cultivate the land to produce the probable crops without the injury.

The proof was that the fumes of each of four smelters contributed to the injury to the plaintiff's crops. These smelters were the United States, the Bingham, the Highland Boy, and the American. The defendant owned and operated the United States, and the other three were owned and operated by strangers to this action. Was there any substantial evidence what part of the injury to the crops of the plaintiff was caused by the fumes from the United States? There was proof of the distance and direction of each of the smelters from the plaintiff's land, that the United States and the Bingham were about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles westerly, the Highland Boy about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles northwesterly, and the American about 3 miles northerly, from the plaintiff's land. There was proof of the directions and durations of the winds during the growing seasons of the crops, there was testimony of witnesses that a larger part of the injury by the fumes from the smelters was inflicted by those from the United States, and there was the testimony of Prof. Jones, who had studied the effect of fumes from smelters for seventeen years, that the injuries to crops from such fumes decreased under like conditions inversely as the squares of the distances of the crops from the smelters, and there was testimony tending to show the portion of the injury to the plaintiff's crops inflicted by the fumes from the smelter which the defendant owned and operated. Notwithstanding all this evidence, counsel for the defendant argues that the plaintiff might have proved the number of tons of ores smelted and the number of tons of sulphur thrown from the stacks of each of the smelters during the growing seasons of the four years under consideration, and that he might thereby have presented accurate and reliable testimony of the proportion of the injury caused by each of the smelters. But the amount of sulphur thrown from the stacks of each of the smelters would not alone determine the proportion of injury which the fumes from those respective smelters inflicted upon the plaintiff's crops. The amount of that injury would still be conditioned by the distances of the respective smelters from the land, by the directions and durations of the winds during the growing seasons, and by the humidity of the atmosphere. Moreover, the question here is not whether or not the plaintiff produced the best or the most reliable or all the evidence of which this issue was susceptible. It is, Was this evidence, which is conceded to have been competent and material, so slight, indefinite, and insubstantial that the jury could not lawfully be permitted to find from it the portion of the damage to the crops of the plaintiff which the fumes of the defendant's smelter caused? A careful reading and thoughtful consideration of all the evidence upon this subject has forced our minds to the conclusion that there was evidence upon this issue in this case so substantial and definite that the court below fell into no error in submitting it to the jury.

In the second count of his complaint the plaintiff alleged that he resided on his land during the years 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, with his family; that the dust, fumes, and gases from the defendant's smelter were unpleasant and distressing to him, his wife, and family, and that they caused them great discomfort and impaired their health; and he prayed for damages on this account for the sum of $1,000, and recovered $50. On the trial of the case the court permitted the plaintiff to prove, over the objection that he had no cause of action for any damages to his wife or family by reason of the alleged nuisance, that she was made ill by it, and the court charged the jury that if the plaintiff, and if the members of his family living with him on the land, were caused discomfort in the way of coughs and other ailments by the fumes from defendant's smelter, the company must respond in damages therefor. To this charge the defendant excepted, on the ground that it was not liable to respond to the plaintiff for the personal discomfort of the members of his family, and it specifies each of these rulings as error. They present this question: May one whose residence is made uncomfortable and unhealthy by a nuisance prove that his wife and other members of his family who lived with him therein were made uncomfortable and ill thereby, and recover damages therefor? Counsel for the company contend that the discomfort and illness of the wife is an injury personal to her, that under the statutes of Utah, where this cause of action arose, a husband cannot maintain an action for a personal injury of his wife (Comp. Laws [Utah] 1907, § 1201; Code, §§ 2902, 2904; Musselman v. Galligher, 32 Iowa, 383, 384; Long v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [C. C.] 149 Fed. 598; Moiser v. Beale [C. C.] 43 Fed. 358), and that therefore he cannot prove and recover any damages in an action for a nuisance which renders the residence of himself and family unhealthy or uninhabitable, because the nuisance makes his wife and children who live in it with him sick and miserable. But, conceding the premises, does the conclusion follow? Although a husband may not maintain an action for a personal injury to his wife, he may maintain such an action for the consequences to himself of such an injury, such as the loss of her services and the expense of medical attendance upon her. Matthew v. Central P. R. Co. 63 Cal. 450, 451; McDevitt v. St. Paul, 66 Minn. 14, 33 L.R.A. 601, 68 N. W. 178.

The plaintiff's second cause of action in this case is not for the personal injury to his wife and to the members of his family, inflicted by the fumes of the smelter. It is for the direct injury those fumes inflicted upon him by rendering his home inconvenient and uncomfortable, and his wife and the other members of his family who were living with him ill and wretched. He had the right to live and to support his wife and family in his home upon his land. He had the right to breathe, and to have his wife and family breathe, air in and about his home, the pure air that was necessary to their lives, their health, and their comfort. Is it not an injury to him that this air was so polluted by noxious fumes and gases that it made his wife suffocating and sick, and his home, which he had established for the comfort of himself, his wife, and family, an abode of misery? If a stranger establishes and maintains a nuisance in the absence of the owner, which makes the members of his family ill and drives them from his home, may he recover no damages because he was not physically hurt?

In Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 328, 335, 27 L. ed. 739, 743, 745, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, the church, a corporation, brought an action against the railroad company for damages caused by the maintenance of an engine house and machine shop near its house of worship. The court charged the jury that it was doubtful whether or not the alleged nuisance had depreciated the value of the plaintiff's property, but that, although the property had increased in value, the congregation would be entitled to damages because of the inconvenience and discomfort they had suffered from the use of the shop, and that this discomfort was the primary consideration in allowing damages in that action for the nuisance. This instruction was assailed because, in the language of counsel for the railroad company, "it told the jury that it might assess damages against the railroad company on behalf of the church corporation for the personal inconveniences and discomforts suffered by individuals worshipping in the church." But the Supreme Court sustained it, and said: "The plaintiff was entitled to recover because of the inconvenience and discomfort caused to the congregation assembled, thus necessarily tending to destroy the use of the building for the purposes for which it was erected and dedicated. The property might not be depreciated in its salable or market value, if the building had been entirely closed for those purposes by the noise, smoke, and odors of the defendant's shops. It might then, perhaps, have brought in the market as great a price to be used for some other purpose. But, as the court below very properly said to the jury, the congregation had the same right to the comfortable enjoyment of its house for church purposes that a private gentleman has to the comfortable enjoyment of his own house, and it is the discomfort and annoyance in its use for those purposes which is the primary consideration in allowing damages. As with a blow on the face, there may be no arithmetical rule for the estimate of damages. There is, however, an injury, the extent of which the jury may measure."

If a corporation may recover damages because the discomforts of individuals seeking to worship in its building tend to destroy the use of its church for the purposes for which it was erected, may not a householder recover damages because the discomforts of his wife and the other members of his family caused by a nuisance tend to destroy the use of his home and farm for the purposes for which he obtained and maintains it? The following authorities sustain the court below in its affirmative answer to that question: Pierce v. Wagner, 29 Minn. 355, 13 N. W. 170; Friburk v. Standard Oil Co. 66 Minn. 277, 68 N. W. 1090; Mills v. Hall, 9 Wend. 315, 316, 24 Am. Dec. 160; Kearney v. Farrel, 28 Conn. 317, 73 Am. Dec. 677; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Anderson, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 121, 81 S. W. 781, 788; Story v. Hammond, 4 Ohio, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

376; Ellis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 63 Mo. 131, 134, 21 Am. Rep. 436. And the conclusion is that the owner of a residence which is rendered inconvenient, uncomfortable, and unhealthy as a home, by the nuisance of sulphurous fumes and their products thrown upon it by another, may prove and recover in an action therefor the damages he suffers himself from the discomfort and sickness thereby inflicted upon his wife and the other members of his family who lived with him in his residence, although he may not, and his wife alone may, maintain the cause of action for the direct personal injury to her.

The judgment below must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

ALBERT S. C. PENNINGTON

v.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

(252 Ill. 584, 97 N. E. 289.)

Carrier — expired ticket — expulsion of passenger — liability.

1. A carrier is not liable in tort for expelling from its train a passenger who presents for passage, after the day of its issuance, a ticket limited because of reduced fare, to such date, although the agent who sells it assures him that it is good, when he is about to board the train.

Same — agreement of agent — effect.

2. The agent who sells a ticket which, by its terms, must be used on the day of sale or be void, has no implied authority to bind the carrier by agreeing, after it has expired, that it may be used on a subsequent day.

Same — failure to stamp — effect.

3. That the date of purchase of a ticket is not plainly stamped upon it does not affect a provision that it is good only on date of sale, and the conductor may refuse

Note. — The extent of a ticket or passenger agent's implied authority with respect to transportation of passengers, including authority to extend the time limit of tickets, is considered in the note to Hayes v. Wabash R. Co. 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 229.

As to duty of passenger to pay fare wrongfully demanded, in order to avoid expulsion and lessen damages, see notes to Sprenger v. Tacoma Traction Co. 43 L.R.A. 706; Cherry v. Chicago & Alton R. Co. 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 695; and Concinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Harris, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 779. As to rights and duties of passenger receiving defective street car transfer, see notes to Little Rock, R. & Electric Co. v. Goerner, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 97, and Montgomery Traction Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 851.

to honor it on a future day if it carries intelligence to him that it has expired

(December 21, 1911.)

CERTIORARI to the Appellate Court, First District, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful ejection of plaintiff from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John G. Drennan and Edward W. Rawlins, with Messrs. William J. Calhoun, Will H. Lyford, and James M. Sheean, for plaintiff in certiorari:

A passenger is not entitled to ride by virtue of a ticket the limitation of which has expired, and if upon demand of the regular fare he refuses to pay, he may be lawfully expelled from the cars.

Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. §§ 571, 575; Boston & L. R. Co. v. Proctor, 1 Allen, 267, 79 Am. Dec. 729; Elmore v. Sands, 54 N. Y. 512, 13 Am. Rep. 617; Burn v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 153 Ill. App. 319; Hall v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 15 Fed. 57; Burch v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 3 App. D. C. 346, 126 L.R.A. 130; Boice v. Hudson River R. Co. 61 Barb. 611; Johnson v. Concord R. Corp. 46 N. H. 213, 88 Am. Dec. 199; Churchill v. v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 67 Ill. 390; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Dean, 43 Ark. 529, 51 Am. Rep. 584; Lillis v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 64 Mo. 464, 27 Am. Rep. 255; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Parks, 18 Ill. 460, 68 Am. Dec. 562; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Brisbane, 24 Ill. App. 463; Rev. Stat. (Ill.) 1909, chap. 114, § 94; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Herring, 57 Ill. 59; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Quisenberry, 48 Ill. App. 338; Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Skillman, 39 Ohio St. 444; 2 Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. § 1062, p. 1231; 3 Thomp. Neg. 2d ed. § 2602; Hanlon v. Illinois C. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 136, 80 N. W. 223; McClure v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 34 Md. 532, 6 Am. Rep. 345; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Nuzum, 60 Ind. 533; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1324; Harp v. Southern R. Co. 119 Ga. 927, 100 Am. St. Rep. 212, 47 S. E. 206; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481.

Plaintiff was not entitled to ride at the time the ticket was presented so there can be no recovery for the lawful act of expulsion.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Willard, 31 Ill. App. 438; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bannerman, 15 Ill. App. 100; McKay v. Ohio River R. Co. 34 W. Va. 65, 9 L.R.A. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

132, 26 Am. St. Rep. 913, 11 S. E. 737; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connell, 112 Ill. 295, 54 Am. Rep. 238; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Griffin, 68 Ill. 499; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Reed, 75 Ill. 125, 20 Am. Rep. 232; Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 37 Mich. 342, 26 Am. Rep. 531; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277, 11 N. W. 157; Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 53 Mich. 121, 18 N. W. 580; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481.

Mr. James E. McGrath with Mr. John C. Trainor for defendant in certiorari.

Hand, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action on the case commenced by the plaintiff in the superior court of Cook county against the defendant to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by him in consequence of his wrongful ejection at Hyde Park station, in the city of Chicago, from one of the suburban trains of the defendant upon which he was a passenger, on the evening of December 10, 1893. The general issue was filed and a verdict was returned in the plaintiff's favor for $4,500, upon which judgment was rendered. That judgment having been affirmed by the appellate court for the first district, the record has been brought to this court for further review by writ of certiorari.

The facts are as follows: The plaintiff, on November 27, 1893, purchased for 14 cents, of the agent of the defendant, a ticket from the Thirty-Sixth street (or Douglas) station to Kensington station, which read:

Illinois Central R. R.
One passage between Douglas (A)

and

Kensington

On Suburban Trains only

If presented on date of sale shown on back.
A. H. Hanson, Gen. Ticket Agent.

Through the ticket were perforated the figures "331:3," which signified to the employees of the defendant that the ticket had been purchased on the 331st day of the year. The plaintiff did not take passage on the train of the defendant on the 27th day of November, but on the 10th of December, thirteen days later, he presented the ticket to the agent at Douglas station, and after looking at the ticket she returned the ticket to the plaintiff and opened the turnstile and admitted him to the platform, where he took passage on one of the trains of the defendant for Kensington. The plaintiff testified, over the objection of the defendant, that when he presented the ticket to the agent at Douglas station on December 10th he asked her if the ticket was good on that day, and she informed him it was. When the conductor upon the train called upon the plaintiff for his fare, he presented to him the ticket which he had purchased on the 27th day of November. The conductor informed him that the ticket, by its terms, had expired, and that he could not receive it for his passage from Douglas station to Kensington station, and that he would have to pay his fare (31 cents) or get off the train. After some controversy over the payment of the fare between the plaintiff and conductor, the plaintiff, under protest, but without the use of force, left the train at Hyde Park station. The night was cold, and the plaintiff testified he was unable to find the station for some time, although the station and platform were well lighted, and that he froze his hands and feet, and in consequence of exposure was made sick and suffered permanent injury.

At the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and again at the close of all the evidence, the defendant moved the court for a directed verdict, which motion was denied. The action of the court in denying such motion having been assigned as error, the question arises: Do the facts established by the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff, when admitted to be true, make out a cause of action in his favor? The action was in tort for the wrongful ejection of the plaintiff from the defendant's train, and if his ejection was lawful there was no legal wrong committed against him, and there can be no recovery.

The law is well settled that a railroad company may, in consideration of a reduced fare, limit the time in which a ticket may be used, and provide if it is not used within the terms of such limitation it shall thereafter be void. The use of the ticket sold to the plaintiff was limited to the day upon which it was sold, and as it was not used upon the day upon which it was sold it thereafter could not be used by plaintiff. The general rule upon the subject is thus laid down by Hutchinson on Carriers (2d ed. § 575), where it is said: "When the ticket limits the time within which it must be used, it will not entitle its holder to a passage after the expiration of that time. Tickets frequently provide that they shall be good for a certain number of days, and it has been often held in such cases that such words amount to a condition or to a stipulation between the carrier and the holder that if they are not used within a specified time the right to be carried under the contract is lost and all obligation under it on the part of the carrier is at an end."

It is equally well settled that the agent who sells a ticket has no implied authority, after the ticket has expired by its own limitation, to waive such limitation and make a new contract with reference to its use which will bind the carrier. This rule is thus announced in Hutchinson on Carriers, vol. 2, 3d ed. § 1062, where it is said: "An agent authorized to sell railroad tickets has no implied powers after the sale of a ticket is fully completed and his duties in regard to it are at an end, and he cannot then bind the company by representations which contradict the plain terms of the ticket." In Thompson on Negligence, vol. 3, 2d ed. § 2802, it is said: "Mere verbal declarations of the company's ticket agent, made subsequent to the purchase of such ticket, as to its being good at any time thereafter, will not constitute a valid contract, in the absence of proof that the agent had authority to make an oral contract for the company." It is therefore obvious that the ticket which was presented by the plaintiff to the conductor of the defendant's train on the 10th of December did not entitle the plaintiff to ride upon the defendant's train from Douglas station to Kensington station.

The question then arises: Was the conductor of the defendant's train legally justified in requiring the plaintiff to leave the train for the nonpayment of fare? In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Griffin, 68 Ill. 499, the plaintiff purchased a ticket at Mendota from Mendota to Earl. The ticket agent made a mistake and gave him a ticket from Mendota to Meriden. The conductor upon the train upon which the plaintiff took passage insisted on the plaintiff paying his fare from Meriden to Earl, which he declined to do, and the conductor ejected him from the train, and is was held the conductor had the lawful right to collect fare from Meriden to Earl, and upon the refusal of the plaintiff to pay such fare, although he had paid the agent at Mendota his fare from Mendota to Earl, to eject him from the train, and that the conductor was not bound to accept the statement of the plaintiff that he had paid his fare from Mendota to Earl.

It is urged that the ticket purchased by plaintiff in this case was not limited. There is no force in this contention. It stated upon its face that it was good for "one passage . . . if presented on the day of sale." True, the date of sale was not shown on the back of the ticket in such language as was intelligible to the plaintiff, but the perforations on the back of the ticket were placed there for the information of the employees of the defendant, and not for the information of the plaintiff, as the plaintiff knew the day upon which he purchased the ticket, and the printing upon the face of the ticket informed him in plain language that the ticket was not good after the date upon which he purchased the same; and if he was misled by the ticket agent at the Douglas station turnstile, upon boarding the train he was immediately advised by the conductor that the ticket had expired by its own limitations, and was not good on that date, and would not be received for his passage from Douglas station to Kensington station.

It is clear that the conductor of the defendant's train was well within his legal rights in requiring the plaintiff to pay his fare from Douglas station to Kensington station or to leave the train, and, as he was guilty of no legal wrong in requiring the plaintiff to leave the train at Hyde Park, there was no legal liability resting upon the defendant by reason of his ejection at that station, and there can be no recovery for an injury received by plaintiff in consequence of his being required to leave the train at Hyde Park.

It was error for the court to admit in evidence the conversation of the plaintiff with the ticket seller at the Douglas station, as the ticket seller at the time was powerless to bind the defendant by an admission that the ticket was good upon that date. The supreme court of Iowa, in Hanlon v. Illinois C. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 136, 80 N. W. 223, in considering the power of a ticket seller to bind the railroad company after the ticket had been sold and paid for, used the following language: "It is insisted that, as the ticket agent of the defendant at Sioux City was authorized to and did sell the ticket in question, his representations to the effect that it would be good, and might be used for transportation after the expiration of one day from the date of sale, were binding upon the defendant. It will be observed that the representations of the agent were not made at the time the ticket was sold, but on the next day, although within twenty-four hours after the hour of sale. The petition does not allege that the ticket agent had any actual or apparent power to bind the defendant by the representations made, and we are required to determine whether an agent authorized to sell railroad tickets has the implied power to bind the railway company, after the sale is fully completed and his duties in regard to it are at an end, by representations which contradict the plain terms of the ticket sold. We are of the opinion that but one answer can be made to that question. As a general rule, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) a special agent can bind his principal by declarations only when they are made within scope of his employment and at the time of performing the duties to which they relate. . . . An agent whose duty it is to sell tickets for his principal has no implied power to construe the contract after the sale is fully completed and nothing remains for the agent to do."

As there can be no recovery in this case, the judgments of the Superior and Appellate Courts will be reversed without remanding the case.

Petition for rehearing denied February 3, 1912.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

MICHIGAN TRUST COMPANY, Admr. etc., of Mary McNamara, Deceased,
v.

MARY McNAMARA, Appt., et al.

(165 Mich. 200, 130 N. W. 653.)

Interpleader — judgment debtor — determination of attorneys' liens.

A judgment debtor may maintain a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader in a court of equity to determine the respective rights of the judgment creditor and attorneys claiming a lien on the judgment for services, to the fund representing the amount of the judgment, although the judgment is for a claim against a decedent's estate, the funds of which are under the jurisdiction of the probate court.

(March 31, 1911.)

Note. — Right of representative of decedent's estate to interplead claimants.

Exclusiveness of surrogate's jurisdiction.

Speaking generally of the jurisdiction of probate courts, the commentator in 18 Cyc. 640, has this to say: "Jurisdiction of proceedings for the distribution of an estate, or for the payment of a legacy or distributive share, is usually conferred by statute upon the probate court, within such limits as may be imposed by the statute conferring jurisdiction. In some states the probate court has exclusive primary jurisdiction in such proceedings, and an action cannot be maintained against the representative for the recovery of a distributive share, although his account exhibiting a specific balance against him has been settled and confirmed in the probate court. In others, courts of equity exercise a concurrent jurisdiction therein, although such courts will not usually take jurisdiction unless the probate court cannot afford adequate relief. In still others, courts of equity have jurisdiction ancillary to that of the probate court, the for-

APPEAL by defendant Mary McNamara, from an order of the Circuit Court for Kent County, in Chancery, overruling her general demurrer to a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader filed by complainant to determine the respective rights of defendant and attorneys claiming a lien on the judgment for services to the fund which represented the amount of the judgment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. A. Ellis and H. A. Ellis, for appellant:

The circuit court in chancery has no jurisdiction of the fund, because the fund is under the control of the probate court.

Basom v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 682; Re

Palma, 44 Mich. 637, 7 N. W. 200; Nolan v. Garrison, 156 Mich. 397, 120 N. W. 977; Holbrook v. Campau, 22 Mich. 288; MacLennan, Interpleader, 39; Moore v. Partlow, 84 Ill. App. 361, 184 Ill. 119, 56 N. E. 317; Chandler v. Dodson, 52 Mo. 128; Lafferty v. People's Sav. Bank, 76 Mich. 35, 43 N. W. 34; Buss v. Buss, 75 Mich. 163, 42 N. W. 688; Bently v. Strathers, 5 Ohio L. J. 288; Freeland v. Wilson, 18 Mo. 380; Dunovant v. Stafford, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 33, 81 S. W. 101; Re Regan, 29 Misc. 527, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1074, 167 N. Y. 342, 60 N. E. 658; Goodrich v. McDonald, 112 N. Y. 157, 19 N. E. 649; Weeks v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 73 Mich. 256, 41 N. W. 269; Heavner v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 163, 69 N. W. 226.

mer taking jurisdiction usually where there are special circumstances in respect to which the probate court cannot take jurisdiction, or cannot give adequate relief."

But one case has been found in addition to MICHIGAN TRUST CO. v. McNAMARA which expressly discuss the bearing of the foregoing principles upon the question of an executor's right to maintain interpleader.

That case is First Nat. Bank v. Beebe, 62 Ohio St. 41, 56 N. E. 485, holding that an administrator's right to interplead one who was a distributee and creditor of the decedent's estate, and a judgment creditor of the distributee who has made the administrator and the distributee defendants in a bill to enforce the judgment, should not be denied upon the theory that the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction with respect to the decedent's estate, under a statute providing that the probate court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to direct and control the conduct, and to settle the accounts, of executors and administrators, and to order the distribution of the estate, since under such statute the probate court's power is exhausted when, upon final settlement of the account of the administrator, it enters a general order of distribution; and it has not power to determine the persons to whom distribution is to be made and the amount which each shall receive; but the right of claimants and beneficiaries, where there is a conflict, are to be worked out in other tribunals.

Conclusiveness of surrogate's decree.

An executor may maintain an action of interpleader against persons who claim a special fund belonging to the estate as trustees and who have instituted an action for its recovery, and distributees of the estate who have procured an order of distribution directing the payment of the fund to them, under a statute providing that a person upon whom conflicting claims are made for personal property may bring an action against the claimants to compel them to interplead and litigate their several claims among themselves, and that the action of interpleader may be maintained although the titles of the claimants have not a common origin or are not identical, but are adverse to, and independent of, one another; and an injunction pendente lite will be granted to prevent the distributees from enforcing the decree of distribution pending the action of interpleader. Fox v. Sutton, 127 Cal. 515, 59 Pac. 939. It was declared in this case that the decree of distribution could not be regarded as final and conclusive so as to estop the executor from maintaining the action of interpleader, since he did not dispute the claim of the distributees, but sought protection from the demand of the other claimants, who were not bound by the decree. "Under such circumstances," said the court, "it would seem but just that the plaintiff, as executor, should not be compelled to defend said action, and subject himself, perhaps, to liability, not only to pay said money a second time, but also the costs of litigation. Besides, the plaintiff files his bill, not only as executor, but individually, whereas the decree of distribution runs against him of course only as executor."

So, the fact that the surrogate, upon the successful contesting of a will, orders a portion of the estate paid to the contestant, does not affect the right of the executor, who has accepted a draft drawn upon himself by the contestant, which has not been paid, to have the contestant substituted for himself as defendant in an action brought by the attorney who prosecuted the will contest, to fix a lien for his services upon the fund. Davis v. Benedict, 59 Hun, 628, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 266, 14 N. Y. Supp. 178.

On the other hand, it is held that a surrogate's decree procured by an executor upon filing his final account, which directs the payment of a certain sum to a beneficiary under the will, is res judicata, and the executor cannot thereafter maintain a bill of interpleader against a representative and a creditor of the beneficiary, at least where he had full knowledge of the facts relating to the rival claim, and permitted the surrogate to make his decree without

Where an executor or administrator has a clear remedy in the probate court in respect of conflicting claims, he should pursue that remedy, instead of resorting to an action of interpleader.

Freeland v. Wilson, 18 Mo. 380; Baker v. Brown, 64 Hun, 627, 19 N. Y. Supp. 258; Hudson v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 116, 47 L.R.A. 345, 68 Am. St. Rep. 465, 72 N. W. 162; Lafferty v. People's Sav. Bank, 76 Mich. 35, 43 N. W. 34; Patrick v. Howard, 47 Mich. 40, 10 N. W. 71; MacLennan, Interpleader, pp. 136-142; Conner v. Weber, 12 Hun, 580.

A stakeholder or depository of a fund who has a personal interest in the fund, or who claims a personal interest in the fund, cannot file a bill of interpleader.

making the facts known to him. Baker v. Brown, 64 Hun, 627, 19 N. Y. Supp. 258.

And while recognizing that situations are likely to exist when there is a dispute between distributees, that will entitle an administrator to interplead them, the court in Freeland v. Wilson, 18 Mo. 380, held that resort could not be had to that remedy where the bill showed that an order of distribution had been made, but did not show its nature or whether it had been complied with. The court said that if the order of distribution had been complied with, the distribution was conclusive if the order had not been appealed from, and that if no distribution had been made, yet it could be made, and then, if not in compliance with law, the statute prescribed a mode by which its errors might be corrected. And it was further declared that if the order was to distribute generally, without naming the distributees, it was within the power of the court making the order to make it specific, and if the whole share of the decedent had been ordered paid to one distributee, in ignorance of the claim of another, that might be ground for an injunction,—and that since all these things were true, there was no necessity for interpleader.

Indifference of representative.

An executor who, upon the sale of property belonging to the estate, turns the proceeds over to the widow, and subsequently receives them back from her and invests them for her benefit, paying her the income for a number of years, thereby acknowledges such an independent liability to the widow as will preclude him from maintaining a bill of interpleader against her and legatees under the will who also lay claim to the fund. Pratt v. Worrell, 66 N. J. Eq. 194, 57 Atl. 450.

And where a special administrator appointed to receive bank deposits of the decedent appeals from an order directing him to account in the probate court and turn over the funds to the general administrator, he cannot thereafter maintain a bill of interpleader against the general administrator and the estate of the decedent's widow, upon the ground that the funds are claimed for the latter estate. Atkinson v. Flannigan, 70 Mich. 639, 33 N. W. 655 (the ground of the decision, at least in the lower court, was that the complainant had taken sides in the matter).

Mitchell v. Hayne, 2 Sim. & Stu. 63, 25 Revised Rep. 151; Moore v. Usher, 7 Sim. 383, 4 L. J. Ch. N. S. 205; 23 Cyc. 6, note 12; Hyman v. Cameron, 46 Miss. 727; New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Odell, 50 Hun, 279, 2 N. Y. Supp. 873; Bridsburg Mfg. Co's. Appeal, 106 Pa. 275; Cogswell v. Armstrong, 77 Ill. 141; Groves v. Sentell, 153 U. S. 465, 485, 38 L. ed. 785, 792, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 898; 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 465, note 4; Adams v. Dixon, 19 Ga. 513, 65 Am. Dec. 608; Atkinson v. Manka, 1 Cow. 704; Oppenheim v. Wolf, 3 Sandf. Ch. 571; Williams v. Matthews, 47 N. J. Eq. 196, 20 Atl. 261; Public Schools v. Heath, 15 N. J. Eq. 22; Jackson v. Knickerbocker Athletic Club, 49 App. Div. 107, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1109; Westervelt v. Ackerman, 3 N.

So, a trustee in a deed of trust who, after executing the trust and after the demand upon him for the residue by the heirs of the grantor's estate, procures the appointment of an administrator whom he induces to make a demand for such residue, does not occupy such a position of indifference as entitles him to maintain a bill of interpleader against the administrator and the heirs. Swain v. Bartlett, 82 Mo. App. 642.

And trustees under a will have such a direct and personal interest in the question whether there has been an abuse of the trust, as to preclude them from bringing a bill in the nature of interpleader for the purpose of obtaining the advice and protection of the court. Sohier v. Burr, 127 Mass. 221.

So, an executor who is a residuary legatee under the will has such an interest as precludes him from maintaining a bill of interpleader, although he may bring a bill for instructions. Ladd v. Chase, 155 Mass. 417, 29 N. E. 637.

Where the purchase price of land is held by the purchaser, who has been appointed administrator of the vendor's estate, and the fund is claimed both by the distributees of the estate, and by a person claiming adversely to the intestate's estate, and the administrator also claims as a distributee of the estate, he has such an interest both as administrator if the debt is due from him personally to himself as administrator, and as a distributee, as will preclude him from maintaining against the distributees of the adverse claimant either a bill purely of interpleader or a bill in the nature of interpleader. Blue v. Watson, 59 Miss. 619. It was pointed out in this case that the distinction between a bill of interpleader and one in the nature of interpleader is that in the former, the complain-

J. Eq. 325; City Bank v. Bangs, 2 Paige, 570; Badeau v. Rogers, 2 Paige, 209; Bedell v. Hoffman, 2 Paige, 199; Diplock v. Hammond, 2 Smale & G. 141; Bignold v. Audland, 11 Sim. 23, 9 L. J. Ch. N. S. 206, 5 Jur. 51; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Arthur, 90 N. Y. 234; Story, Eq. Pl. § 295; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 821; South Western Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Benson, 63 Ark. 283, 38 S. W. 341; Wing v. Spaulding, 64 Vt. 83, 23 Atl. 615; 11 Eng. Pl. & Pr. 455.

Interpleading cannot be ordered unless the claims threatening the complainant negative each other.

Moore v. Barnheisel, 45 Mich. 500, 8 N. W. 531; Hoyt v. Gouge, 125 Iowa, 603, 101 N. W. 464; Sachsel v. Farrar, 35 Ill. App. 277; Taylor v. Satterthwaite, 2 Misc.

441, 22 N. Y. Supp. 187; Wabash R. Co. v. Flannigan, 192 U. S. 29, 48 L. ed. 328, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Davenport, R. I. & N. W. R. Co. v. Sinnet, 111 Ill. App. 75; Supreme Council, L. H. v. Palmer, 107 Mo. App. 157, 80 S. W. 699; Wallace v. Sortor, 52 Mich. 163, 17 N. W. 794; Byers v. Sansom-Thayer Commission Co. 111 Ill. App. 575; School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85; Phillips v. Regan, 75 Pa. 381.

Messrs. Kleinhans & Knappen, with Mr. Thomas P. Bradfield, for appellee.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is an appeal by Mary McNamara, one of the defendants, from an or-ant only asks to be permitted to pay the money into court and be discharged from liability to the adverse claimant, whereas in the latter, he claims some independent and further relief to which he would be entitled upon the payment of the money; but that an interest in the fund in controversy will as effectually defeat the right to maintain a bill in the nature of interpleader as a bill of pure interpleader.

Interpleading devisee or distributee and his creditor.

See also Davis v. Benedict and Baker v. Brown, supra, under "Conclusiveness of surrogate's decree."

It is held in First Nat. Bank v. Beebe, 62 Ohio St. 41, 56 N. E. 485, that a proper case for interpleader exists where, for the purpose of enforcing his judgment, a judgment creditor of a distributee files a bill against the administrator and the distributee, the court invoking the general equitable doctrine that where two or more persons severally claim the same thing under different titles, and in interests separate from those of another person who does not claim any title or interest in himself, and does not know to which of the claimants he ought to render the debt, he may resort to interpleader, although the case was held not to come within the meaning of the statute limiting the right of interpleader to actions upon contracts or for the recovery of personal property.

And it is held in Westervelt v. Ackerman, 3 N. J. Eq. 325, that an executor might maintain a bill of interpleader against judgment creditors who had issued scire facias against him and the judgment debtors who claimed the funds under notes given by the testatrix to be payable after her death, some of the notes having been given in lieu of land given in trust under the will, and others of them arising from the sale of real estate in which the payee had an interest, and given in consideration of the release of such interest. The court, while intimating that an interpleader will be granted even though there be no actual necessity therefor, expressed the belief that there was necessity for the remedy in this case. It was stated that executors cannot be protected in any degree unless the recovery against them as garnishees will be a good defense for them at all times in the future; and that it was a nice question whether such a defense would prevail against claims of third persons of which the garnishee had notice, without taking measures to have them investigated and adjusted when he might have done so without difficulty. And it was further declared that a bill of interpleader may be filed although the claim of one of the defendants is actionable at law and that of the other cognizable in equity.

But it is held that since it is essential to the maintenance of a petition for interpleader that there be at least two conflicting claims, each apparently well founded, to a fund in the hands of a person having no interest therein, and who as between the conflicting claimants is perfectly indifferent, an order directing an interpleader will not be awarded upon the petition of an executor, where it appears that he is being sued by a devisee for a sum to which she is entitled under the will of the testator, and also by an attorney who asserts a claim upon the interest of the devisee upon an alleged indebtedness for services, in the absence of allegations in the petition for interpleader showing clearly how and upon what account the creditor is entitled to maintain an action against the executor for the recovery to his own use of the sum due the devisee; and that this is so because ordinarily there is no privity between an executor of an estate and a creditor of the devisee under the will. Davis v. Davis, 96 Ga. 136, 21 S. E. 1002.

Interpleading devisee or distributee and one claiming adversely to, or as creditor of, the estate.

See also Fox v. Sutton, supra, under "Conclusiveness of surrogate's decree."

It was declared in Bradford v. Forbes, 9 Allen, 365, that a bill in the nature of inder overruling her general demurrer to a bill of interpleader, so called, filed by the complainant, the Michigan Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Mary McNamara, deceased. A reference to the cases of McNamara v. Michigan Trust Co. 148 Mich. 346, 111 N. W. 1066, and McNamara v. Michigan Trust Co. 155 Mich. 585, 119 N. W. 1074, will aid in understanding the situation.

The bill avers defendant recovered a judgment against the estate of Mary McNamara for $11,217, and that the Michigan Trust Company now seeks to pay into court the amount due on this judgment; that in the course of this litigation against the estate of Mary McNamara she has employed attorneys, some of whom claim she has not paid them for their services, and have filed notices of lien in the circuit court and with the Michigan Trust Company, the complainant, notifying the trust company not to pay the money due on this judgment to the defendant Mary McNamara. The bill sets out an attempt to pay the judgment; that the appellant refused to receive the money due on the judgment, although the administrator has ever since that time, and until notices of other liens than that of McKnight and McAllister, been ready and willing to pay the judgment and interest at the legal rate, subject only to its statutory right to offset the costs taxed against the defendant Mary McNamara.

The bill of complaint sets up in full the amount of the costs taxed against the defendant Mary McNamara, as shown by the records of the supreme court and the records of the Kent circuit court. The bill further sets out that the administrator has never since the 21st day of July, 1908, when the letter was written to the defendant Mary McNamara, claimed any right, title, or interest in or to the amount of the judgment, excepting its right to set off the costs taxed against the defendant, and that the administrator does not know and cannot ascertain the rights of the different defendants under the judgment and notices terpleader brought by an executor to obtain the direction of the court in the execution of his trust is not the proper mode in which to try the right of ordinary creditors of the deceased to collect their respective demands.

It is held that an executor does not occupy such a disinterested position as between one seeking to recover from him under title claimed to be paramount to that of the testator, and specific legatees under the will, as to entitle him to maintain a bill of interpleader against them. Such is essentially the decision in Adams v. Dixon, 19 Ga. 515, 65 Am. Dec. 608, in which the court reasoned that the executor owes no debt or duty to the claimant by title paramount, and that he, as protector of the interest of the legatees, is bound to defend the action by the adverse claimant. It is further stated that the interpleader is not necessary to the ample protection of the executor, since he would be protected against the claims of the legatees by a judgment recovered on title paramount to that of the testator. The same reasons moved the court to deny a further prayer in the bill that the court secure and protect the executor from injury by giving him the benefit of its direction in the marshaling of the assets of the estate.

And a proper case for interpleader was held not to exist in Hall v. Hall, 24 Vt. 630, where it appeared from the bill of the administrator that the commissioners had allowed a claim against the estate for a debt of the decedent, and no appeal from the allowance was seasonably taken; that the creditor had commenced a suit upon the administrator's bond to recover the allowance; and that the heirs of the decedent insisted that the amount of the allowance should be distributed among them, and 37 L.R.A.(N.S.).

threatened to bring proceedings to compel such distribution upon the ground that the allowance was made by fraud. The first reason for denying the interpleader was that the case did not come within the rule that, to justify a bill of interpleader, there should be either some specific chattels, or some definite sum of money to which different parties in the same right or in priority of estate make claim, and that the person bringing the bill should be a mere stakeholder, with no interest in the matter, so that when the court decrees an interpleader the plaintiff can step out of the case entirely. It was said that no specific money or chattels were claimed by the different parties, and also that the administrator was a necessary party to the litigation since he, being also an heir of the decedent, had the same interest as the other heirs in a part of the estate. Another reason for denying the relief was that there was no necessity for it, since the administrator so represented the estate in a legal point of view that a judgment in favor of the claimant, and the decree of the probate court requiring payment of the claim among other debts, would be conclusive upon the heirs.

So, one who purchases land and is subsequently appointed administrator of the vendor's estate cannot maintain a bill of interpleader against the distributees of the estate and another person making an adverse claim to the purchase money, for the purpose of determining whether the distributees or the adverse claimant is entitled to the fund; for if the administrator in good faith, though unsuccessfully, defends against the adverse claim, he is protected from any claim to the same property afterwards asserted by the distributees or creditors. Blue v. Watson, 59 Miss. 619.

And it is held that where property in of liens set up in the bill, and cannot without danger and hazard to itself undertake to decide between the defendant Mary McNamara and the other defendants; that on account of the suit in aid of execution by McKnight and McAllister the administrator has already been put to considerable expense and involved in litigation on account of the conflicting claims of the defendants; that it fears it will become further involved in other litigation and suffer other expense, and be put to further and other costs, trouble, and expense on account of these conflicting claims. The bill denies collusion, and sets up the fact that the suit is commenced by the administrator of its own accord, with the consent of the probate court of the county of Kent, for the sole purpose of paying the amount due upon the judgment into court, and the administrator offers and proffers and asks leave to pay the amount due upon said judgment into court, and asks that the conflicting claimants be required to settle their respective claims among themselves, so that the administrator may not be compelled to suffer unnecessary loss or expense, or pay the judgment more than once.

All of the defendants excepting the defendant Mary McNamara have answered the bill of complaint. The answers all tend to show a disagreement or contest, more or less violent, between the defendant and Mary McNamara and the other defendants, and in some cases a contest between the attorney defendants as to the priority of their alleged liens. The defendant Mary McNamara filed a general demurrer, containing twenty-five reasons why the bill should be dismissed, the important one of which is the first: "First. The defendant Mary McNamara demurs because the circuit court for the county of Kent in chancery has no jurisdiction of the fund, which the demurrant claims is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the probate court, thus giving the administrator an adequate remedy at law." The demurrer came on to be heard before the circuit judge, and, with the files of the case and the records of his court the hands of an executor is claimed, on the one hand, as a gift from the testator, and, on the other, by the residuary legatee under the will, the case is not a proper one for interpleader, since a suit at law by the alleged donee would conclude not only the executor, but the residuary legatee as well. Fitts v. Shaw, 22 R. I. 17, 46 Atl. 42.

And where an executor holds the proceeds of a policy of insurance, which are claimed by the next of kin as assets of the estate, and claimed by another person under an assignment by the intestate, although the administrator may properly ask the direction and protection of a court of equity as to the fund, the case is not a proper one for interpleader. Stevens v. Warren, 101 Mass. 564.

Interpleading distributees.

See also Freeland v. Wilson, supra, under "Conclusiveness of surrogate's decree."

It was held in Martin v. Mayberry, 10 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 169, that an administrator who had not reduced to possession assets in the possession of a distributee could not maintain a bill to interplead this distributee and others claiming the property.

Interpleading persons claiming to be a named legatee or devisee.

An executor may maintain a bill of interpleader to determine which of two claimants is entitled to a legacy, where the name of the legatee in the will is inaccurate and is applicable in some respects to both claimants. Morse v. Stearns, 131 Mass. 389.

So, where an executor and trustee under a will which gives property in trust for a certain religious society is sued by one of two bodies claiming to constitute the society, for the enforcement of the trust, he may have the other body made a party, and require the claimants to interplead. First Presby. Soc. v. First Presby. Soc. 25 Ohio St. 128.

Miscellaneous cases.

Not only the stakeholder, but also any party interested in property of any description held by one person who cannot safely turn it over to its apparent owner by reason of conflicting claims, may invoke the remedy given by a statute providing that whenever money or other property in the hands of one person is claimed by two or more persons, any one of the parties interested may bring a complaint in equity in the nature of a bill of interpleader, making all persons who claim to be interested in such money or property parties to the action, and the court shall hear and dispose of all questions which may arise in such case. Therefore, an administrator may, under this statute, maintain an action in the nature of interpleader to determine the title to a savings bank account deposited in the name of the decedent, as between the estate and the widow, who has possession of the pass book, and claims the money as her own. Brown v. Clark, 80 Conn. 419, 68 Atl. 1001.

An executor whose conveyance to a third person of property belonging to the estate is void for want of power cannot bring a bill of interpleader against persons claiming the purchase money in his hands, without framing his bill so as to present the rights and equities of the purchaser, and to give them an opportunity to be heard. Pratt v. Worrell, 66 N. J. Eq. 194, 57 Atl. 450.

L. A. W.

before him, Judge McDonald, after hearing the arguments and considering the briefs submitted, overruled the demurrer, giving the demurrant leave to answer upon the usual terms.

The case is argued at length in the briefs, and was argued fully orally. We think the trouble with the contention of the appellant is that it is based upon the assumption that the claims of the various persons who have notified the complainant not to pay over the fund are claims against the estate of Mary McNamara, deceased, when, in fact, they are claims against the living Mary McNamara, who has obtained a judgment through the agency of the various courts against the estate of Mary McNamara, deceased, the amount of which judgment is in the hands of the complainant ready to be paid over to defendant Mary McNamara, if her creditors had not laid claim thereto. The theory of the bill is that complainant is in doubt as to who is entitled to the money, and wants that doubt solved so that the money can be paid over safely by her. In 1 Words & Phrases, 779, the following occurs: "A 'bill in the nature of an interpleader' is one in which the complainant asks some relief over and above a mere injunction against suit by the contesting parties, and states facts which entitle him to such relief independent of the fact of the adverse claims of the several defendants. Van Winkle v. Owen, 54 N. J. Eq. 253, 34 Atl. 400, 401." At page 789 of the same volume occurs the following: "A bill of interpleader is a bill filed for the protection of a person from whom several persons claim, legally or equitably, the same thing, debt, or duty, but who has incurred no independent liability to any of them, and does not himself claim an interest in the matter. The equity is that the conflicting claimants should litigate the matter amongst themselves without involving the stakeholder in their dispute. McDonald v. Allen, 37 Wis. 108, 111, 19 Am. Rep. 754 (citing Adams, Eq. 202). . . . A bill of interpleader is a bill filed for the protection of a person from whom several persons claim, either legally or equitably, the same thing, debt, or duty, but who has incurred no independent liability to any one of them, and does not himself claim an interest in the matter. The object and effect of the bill is to compel such claimants to litigate the question among themselves, so that it may be determined which one of them complainant is under obligation to. The bill will not lie where the complainant has incurred any independent liability by means of an express agreement with any one of the defendants. Sprague v. Soule, 35 Mich. 35."

57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85, which was a bill in the nature of an interpleader, there is a very full discussion of the subject of bills in the nature of interpleader. Justice Christianity, speaking for the court, used the following language, which we think is germane to the instant case: "The district, since the money became due, has always been ready and willing to pay, whenever it can be ascertained, in this labyrinth of counterclaims, to whom it ought or can safely pay. The contest is one purely between the respective claimants of portions of this fund, no one claiming the whole fund, but some claiming their entire debts without abatement, others their pro rata, according to arrangement between Potter and the district. Under the circumstances, the district says by this bill: 'While we are ready and anxious to pay over this money to the parties really entitled, it is impossible for us to ascertain who these parties are. We are mere naked trustees, without interest,—mere stakeholders. We have no objection to your litigating or settling your respective claims to this fund between yourselves. We are ready and anxious to comply with such judicial determination, or such settlement, and to pay over the fund accordingly, but we object to being forced, not only to participate in the battle between you, and its risks and embarrassments, but especially to occupying a position between your respective lines, where your thrusts of each can only reach the other through us. This is your own battle, not ours. We ask to be permitted to set aside, and allow you to aim your blows directly at each other, and take upon yourselves all the risks and responsibilities incident to the contest. We ask to be allowed to place the fund which you are all endeavoring to reach in the hands and custody of the court, who may regulate and direct the contest between you in such manner as shall be found best to secure your respective rights, allowing us to retire from the contest with our costs of this litigation to come out of the fund, which we have till this time held in good faith, for the benefit of the parties who may be found entitled to it, or any portion of it.' This, under the circumstances of this case, would seem to be but a reasonable request on the part of this school district; and if no method had yet been invented or recognized by courts of equity, by which the district could be allowed to retire from the contest in which it has no interest, and by placing the funds in the hands of the court, where the contest may be carried on by the parties really interested, and their rights determined, without holding the complainant liable to this multiplicity of suits, and the risks and embarrassments of protracted litigation, we should have to admit a degree of infirmity in courts of equity, a want of adaptation in the remedies they have contrived to meet the exigencies of business and the adjustment of rights, which would be far from creditable." The demurrer, of course, admits the truth of the averments of the bill. Treating these averments as true, we think they establish a case for a bill in the nature of interpleader. See MacLennan, Interpleader, 341.

The decree is affirmed, with costs.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

ROBERT B. BUCHANAN et al., Appts.,

v.

SAMUEL M. KENNARD et al., Respts.

(234 Mo. 117, 136 S. W. 415.)

Charity — denominational hospital — validity.

1. A devise to trustees and their successors forever of property to establish and maintain a hospital for sick and injured persons without distinction of creed, under the auspices of a particular religious de-

Note. — Enforcement of general bequest for charity or religion.

- I. Introductory, 993.
- II. Nature of chancery jurisdiction over charities, 994.
- III. The requisite public character.
  - a. In general, 996.
  - b. Cemeteries, 997.
- IV. Necessary accordance with law and public policy.
  - a. In general, 998.
  - b. Gifts to foreign charities, 999.
- V. Creation and general requisites of the trust, 999.
- VI. Certainty of purpose.
  - a. Generally, 1001.
  - b. Selection of purpose by trustee, 1001.
  - c. Inclusion of purposes not charitable, 1002.
  - d. Particular purposes and classes of purposes.
    1. Religious purposes, 1003.
    2. Educational and literary purposes, 1006.
    3. Relief of the poor, 1008.
    4. Relief of sickness, 1008.
    5. Matters of municipal, governmental, or public interest, 1009.
- VII. Certainty as to trustees.
  - a. Generally, 1010.
  - b. Misnomer of trustee or beneficiary, 1010.
  - c. Absence of incapacity, 1011.
  - d. Corporations as trustees, 1011.

nomination or its successors, creates a valid public charity under the statute of Elizabeth, although the benefit is not limited to poor persons.

Same — objects — definiteness of selection.

2. Provision for the selection of the objects of a public charity is sufficiently definite where the charity is the construction and maintenance of a hospital for sick and injured persons, without distinction of creed, under the auspices of a particular religious denomination, and "under such rules and regulations as the trustees and their successors" shall, from time to time, establish and maintain.

Same — annuities and maintenance of burial lots — effect.

3. The validity of a bequest for the establishment and maintenance of a hospital is not affected by the fact that the fund is charged with the cost of maintaining the burial lot of the donor, and with a small monthly payment to his relatives for life.

(March 31, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the City of St. Louis in defendants' favor in a suit by the heirs of Robert A. Barnes, deceased, to establish title to property in which he had attempted to create a trust, and the title to

VIII. Certainty as to beneficiaries.

- a. Generally, 1012.
- b. Particular applications of English rule.
  1. Religion, 1012.
  2. Relief of poor, 1013.
  3. Education, 1013.
  4. Other matters, 1013.
- c. Where English rule repudiated, 1013.
- d. Partial return to English rule in New York, 1014.
- e. Selection of beneficiaries by trustees, 1017.
- f. Misnomer of beneficiaries, 1019.
- g. Corporations as beneficiaries, 1019.
- h. Unincorporated associations as beneficiaries, 1019.
- i. Change of purpose or condition of beneficiary, 1020.
- j. Miscellaneous, 1020.

I. Introductory.

This note is supplemental to the note to Hadley v. Forsee, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, where the earlier cases are collected. In view of the exhaustive discussion in the former note, the only attempt here made is to set out the recent cases in order.

Owing to the peculiarity of the New York statute, the recent New York cases (with the exception of those relating to cemeteries) have not been classified according to the analysis, but will be found together which was, under his will, vested in trustees. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. R. Russell, T. J. Rowe. A. M. Frumberg, H. N. Moore, and E. J. O'Brien, for appellants:

A trust violating the rule against perpetuities is void, unless the object and purpose of such trust is to create a valid public charity.

2 Perry, Tr. 5th ed. § 687; 2 Underhill, Wills, 1195; Johnson v. Holifield, 79 Ala. 423, 58 Am. Rep. 596; Troutman v. De Boissiere Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, 66 Kan. 1, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 704, 71 Pac. 286; Hillyard v. Miller, 10 Pa. 326; Norfolk v. Howard, 1 Vern. 164; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Robinson, 96 Mo. App. 385, 70 S. W. 372; Mason v. Perry, 22 R. I. 475, 48 Atl. 671; infra, VIII. d, "Partial return to English rule in New York."

For a reiteration of the principle that charitable trusts are favored, see Re Peabody, 154 Cal. 173, 97 Pac. 184; Hagen v. Sacrison, 19 N. D. 160, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 724, 123 N. W. 518.

Recent definition.

In Re Lennon, 152 Cal. 327, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 92 Pac. 870, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024, the court said: "A charitable trust is a gift for the benefit of persons, either by bringing their hearts and minds under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies of disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting to establish them for life, by erecting or maintaining public buildings, or in other ways lessening the burdens or making better the condition of the general public, or some class of the general public, indefinite as to names and numbers. In short, it is a gift to a general public use."

II. Nature of chancery jurisdiction over charities.

The prerogative of the King as parens patriæ under the sign manual does not belong to American courts in construing charities. Hunt v. Edgerton, 9 Ohio C. C. N. S. 353, 29 Ohio C. C. 377; Re Nilson, 81 Neb. 809, 116 N. W. 971.

In Robbins v. Boulder County, 50 Colo. 610, 115 Pac. 526, the court said: "While this court is disposed to favor a bequest for charitable uses, and will strive, whenever it can be done consistently with the established pertinent principles of equity, to uphold and enforce them, it has not the power, like the court of chancery in England, to make a will for a testator which he himself has tried, but failed to make. The cy près doctrine, which, in one aspect, is but that of approximation, is applied in many of our states. But the prerogative of the King, as parens patriæ, under the sign manual, does not belong to the equity courts of this country in construing wills, though it is Coit v. Comstock, 51 Conn. 352, 50 Am. Rep. 29; Detwiller v. Hartman, 37 N. J. Eq. 347.

A trust in which the objects and purposes are not specifically stated and the beneficiaries clearly designated is void, unless the object and purpose of the trust are charitable in a legal sense.

Nichols v. Allen, 130 Mass. 211, 39 Am. Rep. 445; Schmucker v. Reel, 61 Mo. 592; Taylor v. Keep, 2 Ill. App. 368; Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How. 369, 15 L. ed. 80; Pennoyer v. Wadhams (School Land Comra. v. Wadhams) 20 Or. 278, 11 L.R.A. 210, 25 Pac. 720; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Morice v. Durham, 9 Ves. Jr. 399, 10 Ves. Jr. 541, 7 Revised Rep. 232, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 548.

The trust created by the will, so far as conferred upon, and is exercised by, the chancellor in England, as the agent or personal representative of the Crown."

Application of statute of uses in various jurisdictions.

The statute of Elizabeth is a part of the common law of Iowa in so far as it recognizes, defines, or indicates what are charitable uses. Klumpert v. Vrieland, 142 Iowa, 434, 121 N. W. 34.

The statute is in force in Arkansas (McDonald v. Shaw, 81 Ark. 235, 98 S. W. 952); in Colorado (Robbins v. Boulder County, supra); and apparently in Washington (Peth v. Spear, 63 Wash. 291, 115 Pac. 164).

In Robbins v. Boulder County, supra, the court said: "While the statute of 43 Elizabeth is, according to the decision in Clayton v. Hallett, 30 Colo. 231, 59 L.R.A. 407, 97 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 Pac. 429, a part of the law of this state, yet it is not the origin of the doctrine of charitable trusts which the equity courts of England, both before and after its adoption, were wont to enforce." It will be seen that in BUCHANAN v. KENNARD the court takes a similar view.

In Hunt v. Edgerton, supra, the court said that "where the execution is to be by trustee with general or some objects pointed out, then the court will take the administration of the trust, is, we think, the law of practically every state of this union; and we do not hesitate to declare it to be the doctrine of Ohio in relation to trusts. But further than that courts of this state, at least, will not go. So that, notwithstanding the favorable view that courts may take of such public charities, and the desire to enforce such trusts, if it cannot be done according to the intention of the testator, it must fail, the courts will not attempt to direct an independent trust that seems right and proper to the court, without regard to the directions and intention of the testator. This whole question resolves itself into a consideration of whether or not the trustee it relates to the founding of the hospital, is not a legal and valid public charity, and is therefore void.

Jones v. Williams, 2 Ambl. 651; Hinckley's Estate, 58 Cal. 457; Com. v. Thomas, 119 Ky. 208, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 320, 83 S. W. 572; Troutman v. DeBoissiere Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, 66 Kan. 1, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 704, 71 Pac. 286; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Crow ex rel. Jones v. Clay County, 196 Mo. 234, 95 S. W. 369; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1155; Morice v. Durham, 9 Ves. Jr. 399, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 548; Taylor v. Keep, 2 Ill. App. 368; Income Tax Comrs. v. Pemsell [1891] A. C. 531, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 265, 65 L. T. N. S. 621; Century Dict. title, "Hospital;" Murray's New English Dict. title, "Hospital;" Gitzhoffen v. Sisters of Holy Cross Hospital Asso. 32 Utah, 46, 8

L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161, 88 Pac. 691; Bridgman's Duke, Charitable Uses, 122; Atty. Gen. v. Northumberland, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 571, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 745, 26 Week. Rep. 586; Coleman v. O'Leary, 114 Ky. 388, 70 S. W. 1068; Kelly v. Nichols, 18 R. I. 62, 19 L.R.A. 425, 25 Atl. 840; Re Cullimore, Ir. L. R. 27 Eq. 18; Re Clark, L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 500, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 194, 24 Week. Rep. 233; Burke v. Roper, 79 Ala. 138; Re Buck [1896] 2 Ch. 727, 65 L. J. Ch. N. S. 881, 75 L. T. N. S. 312, 45 Week. Rep. 106, 60 J. P. 775; Petersburg v. Petersburg Benev. Mechanics' Asso. 78 Va. 431; Tyree v. Bingham, 100 Mo. 451, 13 S. W. 952; Camp v. Crocker, 54 Conn. 21, 5 Atl. 604; Nichols v. Allen, 130 Mass. 211, 39 Am. Rep. 445; Re Macduff, 65 L. J. Ch. N. S. 703, 74 L. T. N. S. 706 [1896]

of this trust has the right of selection of beneficiaries from the class of individuals named in the will."

In Re Nilson, supra, the court, after stating that it was decided in the case of St. James Orphan Asylum v. Shelby, 60 Neb. 796, 83 Am. St. Rep. 553, 84 N. W. 273, that the provisions of the statute of Elizabeth were not enforceable in Nebraska, and that the doctrine of administering charitable trusts cy près under the kingly prerogative was inapplicable, went on to say: "It is further settled by that case that the courts of this state have equal power in the administration of testamentary trusts for charitable uses as were possessed by the courts of England prior to and dependent of the statutes of 43 Elizabeth, and that testamentary bequests for charitable purposes will be viewed with favor and will be carried into effect, if the same can be done consistent with established principles."

The statute of Elizabeth is not and never has been in force in Maryland. Book Depository v. Trustees of Church Rooms Fund, — Md. —, 83 Atl. 50.

The doctrine of cy près.

While the expression "cy près" may have been at first properly confined to the exercise of the King's prerogative power, it is usual to employ the expression also with reference to the judicial power of the court of chancery, which is held in most jurisdictions sufficient to deal with charitable trusts with liberal powers of construction.

In Keene v. Eastman, 75 N. H. 191, 72 Atl. 213, the court refers to the judicial doctrine of cy près as in force in New Hampshire, and says further: "It is a principle adopted by courts in the construction of charitable trusts, that the absence of a provision for forfeiture is evidence that the donor did not intend the estate should revert while the carrying out of his general purpose is practicable."

For recognition of this judicial doctrine of cy près in California, see Re Peabody, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

infra, VI. d. 1; In Illinois, Mason v. Bloomington Library Asso. infra, VIII. i; in Massachusetts, Richardson v. Mullery, infra, VI. d. 5; Ely v. Atty. Gen. infra, VI. d. 2; Grimke v. Atty. Gen. infra, VI. d. 2; in Rhode Island, Brice v. All Saints Memorial Chapel, infra, VIII. i.

View of cy près doctrine under modern English statutes.

"In Re Weir Hospital [1910] 2 Ch. 124, Cozens-Hardy, M. R., said in his opinion: "The jurisdiction of the charity commissioners in establishing a scheme is, under § 2 of the charitable trusts act 1860, the same as that of the court of chancery. It is therefore necessary to consider the principles upon which the court of chancery proceeded in this matter. The first duty of the court is to construe the will, and to give effect to the charitable directions of the founder, assuming them not to be open to objection on the ground of public policy. The court does not consider whether those directions are wise or whether a more generally beneficial application of the testator's property might not be found. . . .

There are, however, many cases in which what is known as a cy près application is made by the court. In general this is limited to old charities, where, by reason of lapse of time and change of circumstances, the original purpose cannot be carried into effect in the exact way directed by the testator. . . . There may be modern charities in which the cy près doctrine can be properly applied, although such cases rarely occur. For example, the fund may be so large as to satisfy the court that it cannot all be applied to the original prescribed purpose. If so, the general charitable intent will prevail and the particular mode will be disregarded. Wherever the cy près doctrine has to be applied, it is competent to the court to consider the comparative advantages of various charitable objects, and to adopt by the scheme the one which seems most beneficial. But there can be no question of cy près until it is ian Bros. Hospital v. Powers, 10 Mo. App. 283, s. c. 74 Mo. 476; Adams v. University Hospital, 122 Mo. App. 675, 99 S. W. 453; Ingraham v. Ingraham, 169 Ill. 432, 48 N. E. 561, 49 N. E. 320; Atwater v. Russell, 49 Minn. 60, 51 N. W. 629, 52 N. W. 26; Brigham v. Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, 126 Fed. 796, 67 C. C. A. 393, 134 Fed. 513; Woodruff v. Marsh, 63 Conn. 125, 38 Am. St. Rep. 346, 26 Atl. 846; Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 303, 24 L. ed. 450; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174, 27 L. ed. 401, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Philadelphia v. Elliott, 3 Rawle, 170; Burbank v. Burbank, 152 Mass. 254, 9 L.R.A. 748, 25 N. E. 427; Reading v. Lane, Duke Charitable Uses, 81; Atty. Gen. v. Kell, 2 Beav. 575; Pelham v. Anderson, 2 Eden, 296, Bro.

2 Ch. 451, 45 Week. Rep. 154; Nash v. Morley, 5 Beav. 183, 12 L. J. Ch. N. S. 336, 6 Jur. 520; Re Gassiot, 70 L. J. Ch. N. S. 242, 17 Times L. R. 216; Grant v. Saunders, 121 Iowa, 80, 100 Am. St. Rep. 310, 95 N. W. 411; Kronshage v. Varrell, 120 Wis. 161, 97 N. W. 928; Re Good [1905] 2 Ch. 60, 74 L. J. Ch. N. S. 512, 53 Week. Rep. 476, 92 L. T. N. S. 796, 21 Times L. R. 450; Atty. Gen. v. Haberdashers' Co. 1 Myl. & K. 428, 5 Sim. 478, 2 L. J. Ch. N. S. 33; Schmucker v. Reel, 61 Mo. 592; Re Sidney [1908] 1 Ch. 488, 77 L. J. Ch. N. S. 296, 98 L. T. N. S. 625, 24 Times L. R. 296, 52 Sol. Jo. 262; Kendall v. Granger, 5 Beav. 300, 11 L. J. Ch. N. S. 405, 6 Jur. 919; Barkley v. Donnelly, 112 Mo. 561, 19 S. W. 305; State ex rel. Alex-

clearly established that the directions of the testator cannot be carried into effect." In this case the scheme adopted by the board of charity commissioners was set aside as unauthorized; and Kennedy, L. J., said in his opinion: "Neither the court of chancery nor the board of charity commissioners, which has been intrusted by statute, in regard to the application of charitable funds, with similar jurisdiction, is entitled to substitute a different scheme for the scheme which the donor has prescribed in the instrument which creates the charity, merely because a coldly wise intelligence, impervious to the special predilections which inspired his liberality, and untrammelled by his directions, would have dictated a different use of his money. The cy pres doctrine can properly be applied only where (to borrow language from Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Re Campden Charities, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 323, 50 L. J. Ch. N. S. 646, 45 L. T. N. S. 152, 30 Week. Rep. 496) it is or has become impossible beneficially to apply the property left by the founder or donor in the exact way in which he has dictated it to be applied, and it can only be applied beneficially to similar purposes by different means."

Effect of rules against perpetuities.

In Kasey v. Fidelity Trust Co. 131 Ky. 609, 115 S. W. 739, it was held that where a gift was given to a charity in case of the death of a beneficiary without issue, that under the circumstances, an indefinite failure of issue was not intended, but a failure of issue in the lifetime of the parent; and that therefore, the rule against perpetuities did not interfere with the gift to the charity. It was held in the same case that a period of accumulation was not against the rule against perpetuities, where the accumulation was only to take place during the life of the parent, and if she died leaving issue, the property would go absolutely to her issue.

In French v. Calkins, 252 Ill. 243, 96 N. E. 877, where a gift to charity was to be paid after a certain annuity, it was held 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that this did not create a perpetuity, as there was but a single life, and an annuity was not an estate in property.

Where a will directed that the executor should sell land not later than five years after the death of the testator, and with the proceeds establish a specified charity in a foreign country, it was held that there was no illegal suspension of the power of alienation. Hagen v. Sacrison, supra.

But in Re Barnett, 24 Times L. R. 788, where it was provided that a failure on the part of the trustees to comply with certain conditions of the will should cause the whole fund to go over to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, it was held that such a gift might take effect after a perpetuity, and it was therefore void.

III. The requisite public character.

a. In general.

In Laverty v. Laverty [1907] 1 I. R. 9, where a will provided as to certain funds that the trustees were "to pay out of the income thereof the sum of £100 for masses for the good of my soul, and to pay towards the support and education in Ireland of any Roman Catholic boy or boys, man or men, of the surname of O'Laverty or Laverty. O'Lafferty or Lafferty, being between the ages of eleven years complete, and twenty-three years complete, until such boy or man shall have obtained a trade or profession, which sums as said trustees may think proper," the trustees having power to select the boys or men, and to accumulate the fund for the above purpose, it was held that this was not a public charitable trust, as not limited to necessitous persons, nor was it a private bequest to a class of individuals.

But a gift for providing recreation and music and the teaching of singing for the residents of a locality was sustained as for a charitable and public purpose in Shillington v. Portadown Urban Dist. Council [1911] 1 I. R. 247, where a testator directed that certain income should be applied by his

Ch. 444, note; Vaughan v. Farrer, 2 Ves. Sr. 182; Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 421.

A trust is not charitable unless the testator has devoted the fund to some charitable purpose so definitely and exclusively that the trustees cannot apply any part of such fund to a noncharitable purpose without violating the express terms of the trust.

Morice v. Durham, 9 Ves. Jr. 399, 10 Ves. Jr. 541, 7 Revised Rep. 232, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 548; Mason v. Perry, 22 R. I. 475, 48 Atl. 671; Kelly v. Nichols, 17 R. I. 323, 19 L.R.A. 413, 21 Atl. 906; Atty. Gen. v. Soule, 28 Mich. 153; Nichols v. Allen, 130 Mass. 212, 39 Am. Rep. 445; Taylor v. Keep, 2 Ill. App. 368; Kinike's Estate, 155 Pa. 101, 25 Atl. 1016; Re Shattuck, 193 N.

Y. 446, 86 N. E. 455; Re Sutro, 155 Cal. 727, 102 Pac. 923; Johnson v. Johnson, 92 Tenn. 559, 22 L.R.A. 179, 36 Am. St. Rep. 104, 23 S. W. 114; Kendall v. Granger, 5 Beav. 300, 11 L. J. Ch. N. S. 405, 6 Jur. 919; Fifield v. Van Wyck, 64 Am. St. Rep. 756, note; 2 Perry, Tr. 5th ed. § 732; James v. Allen, 3 Meriv. 19, 17 Revised Rep. 4; Grimond v. Grimond [1905] A. C. 124, 74 L. J. C. P. N. S. 35, 92 L. T. N. S. 477, 21 Times L. R. 323; Re McCauley, 28 Ont. Rep. 610.

A charitable trust must be for the general public use; that is, the benefit must inure to the entire public.

Jones v. Williams, 2 Ambl. 651; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Robinson, 96 Mo. App. 385, 70 S. W. 372; Cocks v. Manners, L. R.

trustees for the purpose of fostering, encouraging, and providing the means of obtaining healthy recreation, including the teaching of singing in classes or choruses, for the residents of the town of Portadown and the surrounding districts, and for the purpose of providing music and instruments (in so far as my trustees think advisable) for the town band, in such manner and form as "my trustees shall, in their absolute discretion, consider best; but in no case shall my trustees pay away any moneys derived out of my estate for prizes for football, or for rowing for speed."

b. Cemeteries.

In Chapman v. Newell, 146 Iowa, 415, 125 N. W. 324, it was held that the maintenance of public cemeteries was a charitable use, and therefore within the recognized exceptions to the operation of the statute against perpetuities; and the trusts for the benefit of the public cemeteries in the will were valid, one of which gave the income to the trustees of the cemetery, the other gave property for the benefit of other cemeteries named, and the will authorized the court to appoint trustees as to all the cemeteries.

In Roe v. Doe, — Del. —, 80 Atl. 250, where land was granted to grantees and to their successors, to be elected as therein mentioned, as trustees in trust for a public burial ground, and for building thereon a house of worship erected by contributions to be received, with authority to the trustees to sell and convey the church building when erected and the ground upon which it should stand, and the distribution of the proceeds of sale were provided for, the vacancies in the trustees to be filled by the "subscribers," meaning evidently those persons who should contribute to the cost of erecting the house of worship, it appeared that the church part of the property had been conveyed and that a statute had been passed vesting in the town the property vested in the original grantees so far as the burial ground was concerned, and the chancellor having appointed the town as the trustee of the burial ground, it was held that the town might maintain ejectment for the land, without deciding whether the appointment by the chancellor was necessary or not.

But in Van Syckel v. Johnson, — N. J. Eq. —, 70 Atl. 657, it was held that a trust for keeping in good repair and condition that part of the graveyard attached to a certain church wherein the testator's family were buried, and also the rest of the graveyard, was void as not a charitable trust.

Private cemeteries.

In Mason v. Bloomington Library Assn. 237 Ill. 442, 86 N. E. 1044, 15 Ann. Cas. 603, it was held that a bequest to a trustee, the income to be applied to the care of the decedent's burial plot, was not a gift to any public use, that its purpose was purely private and secular, and that it was void.

So, in Hilliard v. Parker, 76 N. J. Eq. 447, 74 Atl. 447, it was held that a gift of a fund for the purpose of keeping in order a graveyard lot was void as not a charitable use, but a purely private trust. See also to the same effect, Van Syckel v. Johnson, supra.

It will be noticed that the court in BUCHANAN v. KENNARD does not seem to pass upon this question.

In Lounsbury v. Square Lake Burial Assn. — Mich. —, 129 N. W. 36, decided in a jurisdiction where the statute of Elizabeth is not in force, where the testator gave $100 to the trustees of a certain cemetery "as a perpetual fund to be kept at interest by said trustees and the interest used to take care of the graves on my lot in said cemetery, and keep the said lot in order," and gave other property to the trustees of the same cemetery, "to be used to build a good and substantial iron fence around the said Square Lake Cemetery, and whatever is left after erecting said iron fence around the same is to be used by said trustees to build a vault in said cemetery for the use thereof, to be controlled by the trustees of said cemetery," it was held that the first gift of $100 was void as a perpetuity, but that

12 Eq. 574, 40 L. J. Ch. N. S. 640, 24 L. T. N. S. 869, 19 Week. Rep. 1053; Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L.R.A. 360, 53 Am. St. Rep. 48, 18 So. 394; Re Lennon, 152 Cal. 327, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 92 Pac. 870, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024; Lackland v. Walker, 151 Mo. 210, 52 S. W. 414; Coe v. Washington Mills, 140 Mass. 547, 21 N. E. 966; Drury v. Natick, 10 Allen, 180; Field v. Drew Theological Seminary, 41 Fed. 371; People v. Powers, 8 Misc. 628, 29 N. Y. Supp. 950; Delaware County Institute v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 166; Re Nottage [1895] 2 Ch. 653, 64 L. J. Ch. N. S. 695, 12 Reports, 571, 73

L. T. N. S. 269, 44 Week. Rep. 22; Pennoyer v. Wadhams (School Land Comra. v. Wadhams) 20 Or. 278, 11 L.R.A. 210, 25 Pac. 720; Troutman v. De Boissiere Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, 66 Kan. 1, 5 L.R.A. 704, 71 Pac. 286; Tyssen, Charitable Bequests, 4.

There is no public purpose or public benefit in the treatment of sickness or injury unless such treatment is restricted to the poor, whose support is a public duty.

State ex rel. Garth v. Switzerland, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L.R.A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 45 S. W. 245; Deal v. Mississippi County, 107 Mo. 464, 14 L.R.A. 622, 18 the other gift was valid, and was not invalid by reason of the cemetery being unincorporated, as the gift was not charged with a permanent use, and in any event was to certain trustees, and not direct.

Decisions under particular statutes.

Where a will gave a sum of money to a town council "to be held by the said town council and their successors in office in perpetual trust, to apply the income of said sum to the ornamenting and keeping in repair of my said burying ground forever," and the town council declined to receive the legacy, it was held that the gift was saved by the statute permitting town councils to take funds for the purpose of the gift in question, but that the court had no power to appoint another trustee; and leave was given the executor to pay the money into court, so that he might account, and that opportunity might be offered to the town council to accept the legacy as trustee within a reasonable period of time. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Warwick, 29 R. I. 393, 71 Atl. 644.

In Driscoll v. Hewlett, 132 App. Div. 125, 116 N. Y. Supp. 466, affirmed in 198 N. Y. 297, 91 N. E. 784, it was held that under the religious corporation law of 1895, a religious corporation might take and hold property in trust for a private cemetery lot, as that was evidently the intent of the statute.

While the language of the statutes is not identical, it seems that after the case of Driscoll v. Hewlett, a different decision would be made in a case like Re Waldron, 57 Misc. 275, 109 N. Y. Supp. 681, where a will gave to the village of Waterford a sum "in trust, to be invested and reinvested by the trustees of said village and their successors in office . . . and to apply and expend the income therefrom, . . . in keeping my lot in the Waterford Rural Cemetery and the stone and monument thereon and such as may be erected thereon, clean and in good order and repair;" and it was held that this was not a charitable trust, and could not be sustained under the act of 1893, as to charitable, etc., uses, and that the village of Waterford was not entitled to take it under its act of incorporation. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tion, nor under the general village law, which provided: "The board of cemetery commissioners of a village may take and hold any property given, bequeathed, or devised to it in trust, to apply such property or the income thereof for the improvement or embellishment of such cemetery, or the erection or preservation of a building, structure, fence, or walk therein, or for the removal, erection, or preservation of a tomb, monument, stone, fence, railing, or other erection or structure on or around any lot therein, or the planting or cultivation of trees, shrubs, flowers, or plants in or about a lot therein, or for otherwise caring for and maintaining a lot therein according to the terms of such grant, devise, or bequest,"—as this statute did not provide for a trust for perpetual care.

In Re Perkins, 68 Misc. 255, 124 N. Y. Supp. 998, where a joint will provided: "First: After all my just debts and funeral expenses are paid, our monument in Washington Street Cemetery in Fair Haven, Vermont, is properly lettered and perpetual care of the lot in the above named cemetery is secured," the court said: "Under the provisions of §§ 113 and 114 of the real property law (Consol. Laws, chap. 50), a trust for the purpose of lettering the monument and the perpetual care of the lot is not invalid, if the same were to be administered within this state. And as the trust operates upon personal property in this state, to be expended for the purposes mentioned without the state, I think, in accordance with the opinion of Judge Houghton, in Catt v. Catt, 118 App. Div. 742, 103 N. Y. Supp. 740, that the provisions of the instrument in question created a valid trust as to the part of the personalty necessary to provide for the lettering of the monument and the care of the lot. This trust can be administered by the supreme court."

IV. Necessary accordance with law and public policy.

a. In general.

In Kramph's Estate, 228 Pa. 455, 77 Atl. 814, it was held that a gift for the education of ministers, who were to teach the doctrine of the New Jerusalem as laid down in

S. W. 24; State ex rel. Industrial Home v. Pike County, 144 Mo. 275, 45 S. W. 1096; Citizens Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Rev. Stat. 1890, §§ 8993, 8994; State ex rel. Griffith v. Osawkee Twp. 14 Kan. 418, 19 Am. Rep. 99; William Deering & Co. v. Peterson, 75 Minn. 118, 77 N. W. 508; Thomas v. Edmonson County, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 265; McIntire v. Pembroke, 53 N. H. 467; Hudgins v. Carter County, 115 Ky. 133, 72 S. W. 730; Dodge County v. Diers, 69 Neb. 361, 95 N. W. 602, 5 Ann. Cas. 232; Board of Health v. Renville County, 89 Minn. 402, 95 N. W. 221; Labrie v. Manchester, 59 N. H.

120, 47 Am. Rep. 179; Clinton v. Clinton County, 61 Iowa, 207, 16 N. W. 87; Jay County v. Fertich, 18 Ind. App. 1, 46 N. E. 699; Knightstown v. Horner, 36 Ind. App. 139, 75 N. E. 13; Vionet v. First Municipality, 4 La. Ann. 43; Tollefson v. Ottawa, 228 Ill. 134, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 990, 81 N. E. 823; Re Yturburru, 134 Cal. 567, 66 Pac. 729; Wisconsin Keeley Institute v. Milwaukee County, 95 Wis. 153, 36 L.R.A. 55, 60 Am. St. Rep. 105, 70 N. W. 68; Re House, 23 Colo. 89, 33 L.R.A. 832, 46 Pac. 117; Webster v. Rapides Parish, 51 La. Ann. 1204, 25 So. 988; Baltimore v. Keeley Institute, 81 Md. 106, 27 L.R.A. 646, 31 Atl.

the writings of Swedenborg, was not invalid from the fact that certain of the doctrines of Swedenborg might not have been in accordance with the morality of the country, as it did not appear that any of such doctrines in any unfavorable way were a part of the religious doctrine of the New Jerusalem Church.

It may be noted that where, at the time of the testator's death, neither land in England nor in Ontario could be devised to charitable uses, it was held that a gift to such uses by one domiciled in England of mortgages secured on freehold properties in Ontario was not permissible. Re Hoyles, 26 Times L. R. 516, [1910] 2 Ch. 333, 79 L. J. Ch. N. S. 720, 103 L. T. N. S. 127, 54 Sol. Jo. 582, affirmed in 27 Times L. R. 131, [1910] W. N. 275.

b. Gifts to foreign charities.

Gifts to charity to be distributed out of the jurisdiction are frequent.

Thus the courts have sustained:

—an Iowa bequest "to the poor of Voorst, Gelderland, Netherlands," in Klumpert v. Vrieland, infra, VIII. b, 2;

—a North Dakota gift for the care and support of destitute children in Sweden, in Hagen v. Sacrison, infra, VIII. e; —Nebraska gifts to certain churches in Norway for the relief of certain classes of poor persons, in Re Nilson, infra, VIII. e.

See also Re Perkins, supra, III., where a provision in a New York will for the care of a cemetery lot in Vermont was upheld.

See also, as to a gift for missions to a corporation of another state, Jordan v. Universalist General Convention, infra, VII. d.

In Miller v. Ahrens, infra, VIII. g, it was held that a bequest to a foreign corporation was to be construed under the circumstances as if made to a voluntary association.

In Green v. Fidelity Trust Co. 134 Ky. 311, 120 S. W. 283, 20 Ann. Cas. 861, upon the question whether the court would administer a foreign charity, the court said that it might perhaps technically be held that the proper course would be for the trustee to pay over the income to a foreign trustee to administer the charity in the foreign jurisdiction. See also, as to assuming that the foreign court will appoint a trustee, Hagen v. Sacrison, infra, VIII. e.

V. Creation and general requisites of the trust.

In Robbins v. Boulder County, 50 Colo. 610, 115 Pac. 528, it was held that a bequest for a hospital building in a city, provided the city will support and maintain the same, is invalid, as dependable upon an impossible, legally nonenforceable condition precedent.

Precatory words.

In Gilchrist v. Corliss, 155 Mich. 126, 130 Am. St. Rep. 568, 118 N. W. 938, where a will provided: "I request that at my death, my said wife, Ella J. Potter, make her will, and will at least two thirds of what she receives under this, my will, to some charities, named and designated by her, said charities to be in the city of Alpena, Michigan, and the amount so willed to be payable at her death, as it is my wish that she have and use all the income from that portion of my estate willed to her as long as she lives," it was held that this only gave one third of the estate to the wife absolutely, and that upon her failure to exercise the power of appointment there was an intestacy as to the other two thirds.

In Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist. 75 N. H. 408, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 75 Atl. 100, where the will provided: "I give and bequeath to the trustees of Pembroke Academy the sum of $1,000 in money, the annual income of which sum I wish to be expended in paying the tuition of such poor boys in said town of Epsom, of good moral character, as may be recommended from time to time to the trustees of said academy by a majority of the board of selectmen of said town of Epsom as worthy and deserving this privilege," it was held that the words of the testator were not precatory, but a command.

In Re Burley [1910] 1 Ch. 215, where a testatrix by a codicil provided: "I wish Colonel Russell to use £ 1,000, part of the legacy given to him by my above will, for the endowment in his own name of a cot in the Ipswich and East Suffolk Hospital, and to retain the balance of the said legacy 437; Leavitt v. Morris, 105 Minn. 170, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 984, 117 N. W. 393, 15 Ann. Cas. 961.

A hospital merely for sick and injured persons is not necessarily charitable, in the sense of fulfilling a public purpose.

People ex rel. New York Institute v. Fitch, 16 Misc. 464, 39 N. Y. Supp. 927; University of Louisville v. Hammond, 127 Ky. 564, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 784, 128 Am. St. Rep. 355, 106 S. W. 219; Adams v. University Hospital, 122 Mo. App. 675, 99 S. W. 453; Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 211 Mo. 419, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1167, 124 Am. St. Rep. 786, 111 S. W. 109, 14 Ann. Cas. 742; Washingtonian Home v. Chicago, 157 Ill. 414, 29 L.R.A. 798, 41 N. E. 893; State ex rel. Alexian Bros. Hospital v.

Powers, 10 Mo. App. 263; Hennepin County v. Brotherhood of Gethsemane, 27 Minn. 460, 38 Am. Rep. 298, 8 N. W. 595; Cook County v. Chicago Policlinic, 233 Ill. 268, 84 N. E. 220; People ex rel. Thompson v. Ravenswood Hospital, 238 Ill. 137, 87 N. E. 305; Gray Street Infirmary v. Louisville, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1274, 55 L.R.A. 270, 65 S. W. 11; Wathen v. Louisville, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 635, 85 S. W. 1195; Thiel College v. Mercer County, 101 Pa. 530; Webber Hospital Asso. v. McKenzie, 104 Me. 320, 71 Atl. 1032; Gitzhoffen v. Sisters of Holy Cross Hospital Asso. 32 Utah, 46, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161, 88 Pac. 691; Brown v. La Société Française, 138 Cal. 475, 71 Pac. 516.

for his own use and benefit," and by a second codicil provided: "I wish Colonel Russell, after endowing a cot as provided by the first codicil, to use the balance of the legacy given to him by my will for such charitable purposes as he shall in his absolute discretion think fit," it was held that the legacy was given for the charitable purposes mentioned in the codicils, and that the precatory words were positive directions.

In French v. Calkins, 252 Ill. 243, 96 N. E. 877, it was held that a bequest "to the rector, wardens, and vestry" of a certain church, where there was an additional statement in the will that the money is to be used and applied in such manner as the rector, wardens, and vestry deem proper, as a memorial to the family of the testatrix, was a valid gift, the court saying: "The precatory words following the bequest, expressing a wish that it should be used in the purchase of real estate for the erection of permanent improvements in connection with the church property, to remain as a permanent memorial of affection for the church body and the membership thereof, were sufficient to create a trust and require that the bequest be devoted to that use, which was unquestionably of a charitable nature."

Trust as distinguished from absolute gift to trustee.

In Re Morgan, 56 Misc. 235, 107 N. Y. Supp. 393, affirmed sub nom. Re Durand, 127 App. Div. 945, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1118, which was affirmed in 194 N. Y. 477, 87 N. E. 677, where the will provided that in a certain contingency "I desire to use my said estate for the purposes of female education of high grade in the city of Rochester, and under the management of the trustees of said university; the said institution to be made a part of said university if the trustees choose to make it such, or to be kept independent and subject to their management and control. When said trustees shall have signified their acceptance of said devise and bequest, I direct my said executors to pay over the said proceeds of my estate into the hands of the said trustees of the University of Rochester, to be held by them as a perpetual fund, and the income thereof to be devoted to the objects named," it was held that this was an absolute gift to the University of Rochester, without any trust.

In Gilmore v. Lee, 237 Ill. 402, 127 Am. St. Rep. 330, 86 N. E. 568, where a dying woman handed a priest of the Roman Catholic Church a certificate of deposit, and said it was to be used for masses for the repose of her soul, it was held that it was "for a charity, and in support of the form of worship to which the deceased belonged, and if the priest accepted it for that purpose, he would be bound to perform the religious services to which it was to be applied, and, as a priest, would earn the money by so doing, and that the disposition of the certificate was valid.

In Re Meech [1910] 1 Ch. 426, where a testator gave certain real property upon trust, for and to be held by the masters, etc., of one of the London companies, "for the general purposes of the said company," and authorized the company or his trustees to make and formulate any scheme, etc., "for the temporary or permanent administration of the charity hereby created," or to vest the trust property in the said company or in any existing charity, etc., it was held that inasmuch as the company was not a charitable corporation, although the testator may have been mistaken in that respect, it took the property absolutely free of all charitable trust.

See also Stoepeel v. Latterthwaite, infra, VIII. c.

Disposition to meet failure.

Where a will provided for gifts over to other charities in the event of the refusal of the first legatee of a charity to accept, it was held that if such gift failed, either by refusal to accept or by there being no charity, or if the charity named had no existence, the second gift would take effect. Ege v. Hering, 108 Md. 391, 70 Atl. 221.

In Larkin v. Wikoff, 75 N. J. Eq. 462, 72

The care of a burial lot is a strictly private purpose.

Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Sim. N. S. 255, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 596, 16 Jur. 306; Rickard v. Robson, 31 Beav. 244, 31 L. J. Ch. N. S. 897, 8 Jur. N. S. 655, 7 L. T. N. S. 87, 10 Week. Rep. 657; Fowler v. Fowler, 33 Beav. 616, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 674, 10 Jur. N. S. 648, 12 Week. Rep. 972; Hoare v. Osborne, L. R. 1 Eq. 585, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 345, 12 Jur. N. S. 243, 14 L. T. N. S. 9, 14 Week. Rep. 383; Johnson v. Holifield, 79 Ala. 423, 58 Am. Rep. 596; Coit v. Comstock, 51 Conn. 352, 50 Am. Rep. 29; Bates v. Bates, 134 Mass. 110, 45 Am. Rep. 305; Kelly v. Nichols, 17 R. I. 323, 19 L.R.A. 413, 21 Atl. 906; Knox v. Knox, 9 W. Va. 124; Hartson v. Elden, 50 N. J. Eq. 522, 26 Atl. 501;

Re Corle, 61 N. J. Eq. 400, 48 Atl. 1027; Van Syckel v. Johnson, — N. J. Eq. —, 70 Atl. 657.

Where an unapportioned and unascertainable portion of a trust fund is bestowed upon an invalid or unlawful purpose, the whole trust fails, regardless of the validity of the other portions.

Atty. Gen. v. Hinxman, 2 Jac. & W. 270, 22 Revised Rep. 119; Fowler v. Fowler, 33 Beav. 616, 10 Jur. N. S. 648, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 674, 10 L. T. N. S. 682; Cramp v. Playfoot, 4 Kay & J. 481; Chapman v. Brown, 6 Ves. Jr. 404, 5 Revised Rep. 351; Beckman v. People, 27 Barb. 280; Limbrey v. Gurr, 6 Madd. Ch. 151, 22 Revised Rep. 262; Hunter v. Atty. Gen. 68 L. J. Ch. N. S. 449, [1899] A. C. 309, 47 Week. Rep. 673, Atl. 98, affirmed in 77 N. J. Eq. 589, 78 Atl. 1134, the court said: "Of course, the doctrine of cy pres—that is, the doctrine that a fund for charity, being impossible of application according to the intention of the donor, shall be applied as nearly as may be according to his intention—can have no existence when the donor himself provides for the application of the fund in the event of the failure of the charitable use to which he, in the first instance, directed that it should be devoted." In the same case it was held that where the trustees of a charitable trust are given a certain absolute discretion by the deed, the court will not interfere with it unless there has been mala fides.

VI. Certainty of purpose.

a. Generally.

In Korsstrom v. Barnes, 167 Fed. 216, the testator gave his residuary estate to his executors in trust to sell, and after paying necessary expenses, to pay the proceeds of said sale to "the trustees of the Theosophical Society at Adyar, Madras, India, or wherever the said Theosophical Society may be located, appointed or acting under a deed of trust, dated the 14th day of December, A. D., 1892, and duly enrolled," and stating: "It is my express will that the said legacy to the said Theosophical Society in India be used for the purpose, as far as possible, in obtaining translations into English of the ancient Hieratic Scriptures, believed to exist in India and elsewhere, for the use of the Theosophical Society and its branches all over the world." The court, in holding the gift invalid as the trustees could not be identified, as the purpose was uncertain, and as there was a perpetuity, said: "The defendants are required to convert the whole residue of the estate into money, the money is bequeathed in trust to an official board, the members of which are designated in an enrolled deed of trust which cannot be identified with certainty, for a use which cannot be defined with certainty, and for the benefit of a cœtui que trust 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) which is merely an aggregation of people in all parts of the world, and not an organized entity, and there is no prescribed limitation of time within which the trust is to be executed or the fund expended."

b. Selection of purpose by trustee.

In McPherson v. Byrne, 155 Mich. 338, 118 N. W. 985, where the statute of Elizabeth is not in force, it was held where a woman dying delivered certain certificates of deposit to a friend, to be used for charity, "just as he wished," after paying last expenses, that this was an attempt to make a gift for charitable purposes with the charity wholly indefinite, and that the gift failed.

In Wilcox v. Atty. Gen. 207 Mass. 198, 93 N. E. 599, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 833, where property was given in trust to carry out certain purposes mentioned to the trustee "relating to certain benevolent and charitable institutions," the homestead estate to be known as the "Eliphal Tucker Borden Play Grounds," it was held that the trust was so indefinite that it could not be executed.

But testamentary provisions have been upheld as charitable bequests:

—where the residue of the estate was given to trustees to distribute "among such charitable institutions, persons, or objects, in such amounts, upon such terms, and for such purposes, as they decide to be most worthy, having regard, but in their sole discretion, to such as I have been interested in during my life." Gill v. Atty. Gen. 197 Mass. 232, 83 N. E. 676;

—where the will created a special trust, mentioning the name by which the fund was to be designated, and authorized the trustees to devote the unexpended income to such charitable purposes as they and their successors "judge will do the most real good, and giving preference to several objects instead of a few." Selleck v. Thompson, 28 R. I. 350, 67 Atl. 425;

—where, in default of written directions, the trustees were to distribute the residue of the estate 'among such religious, charit-

80 L. T. N. S. 732, 15 Times L. R. 384; Mason v. Perry, 22 R. I. 475, 48 Atl. 671; Kelly v. Nichols, 17 R. I. 306, 19 L.R.A. 413, 21 Atl. 906; Coit v. Comstock, 51 Conn. 352, 50 Am. Rep. 29; Van Syckel v. Johnson, — N. J. —, 70 Atl. 657; Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 14 L.R.A. 33, 27 Am. St. Rep. 487, 28 N. E. 880; RoBards v. Brown, 167 Mo. 456, 67 S. W. 245; Stevens v. De La Vaulx, 166 Mo. 20, 65 S. W. 1003; Lockridge v. Mace, 109 Mo. 162, 18 S. W. 1145; Shepherd v. Fisher, 206 Mo. 208, 103 S. W. 989.

Messrs. Thomas F. Galt, A. Lee and J. F. Lee, for respondents:

The will of Robert A. Barnes created a public charitable trust in these defendant trustees, because:

able, and benevolent purposes and objects, or institutions, as in their discretion shall be best and proper," there being an expression of confidence in their ability and integrity, and a release of any liability on their part to account for the fund. Dulles's Estate, 218 Pa. 162, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1177, 67 Atl. 49. The court said: "The practical questions, therefore, in such cases, are, first, is the testator's general intent ascertainable? and, second, is there any tribunal provided to ascertain the specific objects to which such intent is to be applied? If so, the trust is not void for uncertainty, whether it is for a technical charity or not. The testatrix's will in this case complies with both these conditions, and is entitled to be carried out according to its terms;"

—where the trustees were empowered to divide the residue "amongst such local or Scottish charitable institutions, and schemes already constituted, or which may hereafter be constituted (and which may include these hereinbefore named) [to which specific legacies had been given], as they may select, or any one or more of such institutions and schemes, and that at such time, in such manner, or in such proportions, all as they, in their absolute discretion, may deem proper." Dick v. Audsley [1908] A. C. 347.

c. Inclusion of purposes not charitable.

Most of the recent cases on this branch of the subject illustrate the rule set forth in the note to Hadley v. Forsee, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, that in order that the gift shall possess that certainty which will give it validity, the language must require that the fund shall be expended for charity and for nothing else.

In Re Sutro, 155 Cal. 727, 102 Pac. 920, the court said: "Without violating the directions of the will the entire fund could be devoted to institutions of learning and science carried on for private gain, of which there are many, or to the encouragement of abstract scientific discoveries not tending to benefit mankind, or to reward inventions calculated to profit the inventor alone. or 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(a) It was devised in trust for the benefit of an unlimited number of undesigned persons.

(b) For the purpose of healing the sick and injured generally,—a charity.

(c) No person engaged in the management of the charity could derive any profit from it.

Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 539; Cause v. Nottingham Lunatic Asylum [1891] 1 Q. B. 585, 60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 485, 65 L. T. N. S. 155, 39 Week. Rep. 461, 55 J. P. 582; Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 310, 24 L. ed. 451; 6 Cyc. 897, 902; Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205; Missouri Historical Soc. v. Academy of Science, 94 Mo. 459, 8 S. W. 346; Hinckley's Estate, 58 Cal. 457; Troutman v. De Bois those to whom he should transfer his secret or patent. The trustees could apply a part to each of the different objects, or they could apply the whole of it to one of them, to the exclusion of any other. These objects not being exclusively or necessarily charitable, it follows, under the rule stated, that the entire trust was invalid."

In Van Syckel v. Johnson, — N. J. Eq. —, 70 Atl. 657, where a testator gave certain money to his executors in trust to be invested and the interest to be applied to keeping in good repair and condition that part of the graveyard attached to a certain church wherein his family were buried, and also the rest of the graveyard, and if the church should fail to make up the salary of the pastor, the balance of the interest, or so much as necessary, should go toward the salary, it was held that the entire bequest was void, as the good gift for the salary of the pastor was mingled with the noncharitable object of the provision for keeping the graveyard in order.

So, in Moseley v. Smiley, — Ala. —, 55 So. 143, where a man for a valuable consideration conveyed a parcel of land to himself and two others, "trustees for Tabernacle Alliance Hall and Schoolhouse, and to their successors in office," Tabernacle Alliance being a voluntary unincorporated association whose members were admitted by ballot, it was held that the deed did not require that the property be used solely for charitable purposes, and if it might be so applied to other purposes, it was too indefinite for the court to execute.

The recent English cases enforce the same doctrine. Thus, gifts have been held entirely void as not necessarily entirely for charitable purposes:

—where a testator, gave personal property to trustees "upon trust, to dispose of the same for such charitable uses or for such emigration uses, or partly for such charitable uses and partly for such emigration uses, as they shall, in their absolute and uncontrolled discretion, think fit." Re Sidney [1908] 1 Ch. 488 (affirming [1908] 1 Ch. 126);

—where a will provided: "I desire that siers Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, 66 Kan. 1, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 704, 71 Pac. 286; Tyssen, Charitable Bequests, pp. 4, 5; State ex rel. Alexian Bros. Hospital v. Powers, 10 Mo. App. 263; Bispham, Eq. 6th ed. ¶ 12; Adams v. University Hospital, 122 Mo. App. 675, 99 S. W. 453; McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Hearn v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595; Burke v. Roper, 79 Ala. 138; Hennepin County v. Brotherhood of Gethsemane, 27 Minn. 460, 38 Am. Rep. 298, 8 N. W. 595; Doughten v. Vandever, 5 Del. Ch. 51; Weeks v. Hobson, 150 Mass. 377, 6 L.R.A. 147, 23 N. E. 215; Hoeffer v. Clogan, 171 Ill. 462, 40 L.R.A. 730, 63 Am. St. Rep. 241, 49 N. E. 527; Union P. R. Co.

v. Artist, 23 L.R.A. 581, 9 C. C. A. 14, 19 U. S. App. 612, 60 Fed. 365; Long v. Rosedale Cemetery, 84 Fed. 135; Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 200 Mass. 465, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 487, 86 N. E. 909; Webster v. Wiggin, 19 R. I. 73, 28 L.R.A. 510, 31 Atl. 824; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Asso. 73 N. H. 556, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 497, 64 Atl. 190; 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 9th ed. 1896, Laws 1893, chap. 498; Burbank v. Burbank, 152 Mass. 254, 9 L.R.A. 748, 25 N. E. 427; Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L.R.A. 602, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42; Ellenherst v. Pythian, 110 Ky. 923, 63 S. W. 37; Jenkins v. Berry, 119 Ky. 350, 83 S. W. 594; Sisters of Third Order v. Peoria County, 231 Ill.

my executors, with the assistance of Mr. J. R. H., Mr. —, the art master, and any persons they may call in to assist them, shall expend the said residue in any manner they may think desirable to encourage artistic pursuits or assist needy students in art." Re Ogden, 25 Times L. R. 382; —where a testator gave property to trustees to hold in trust for the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster for the time being, to be distributed and given by him at his absolute discretion between such charitable, religious, or other societies, institution, persons, or objects, in connection with the Roman Catholic faith in England, as he shall, in his absolute discretion, think fit. Re Davidson, [1909] 1 Ch. 567.

So, in Re Freeman [1908] 1 Ch. 720, where the testator gave part of his estate to the treasurers for the time being of the Charity Organization Society in London, or any other society or corporate body which might thereafter be formed to take over its property to carry on its work, upon trust to invest the same, and out of the annual income arising from such investment to pay and retain one-tenth part of such income "for the purposes of the society, as the governing body may think fit, and to divide and pay the residue of such annual income to such other society or societies as shall, in the opinion of the governing body of the Charity Organization Society, be most in need of help, besides fulfilling the standard of good management, efficiency, and economy of such Charity Organization Society," it was held that this was not a charitable trust, as the society might select a society which was not a charitable one, and that the gift was void.

It will be seen that in BUCHANAN v. KENNARD the court decided that a charitable trust would not fail because a small portion of the income was to be devoted to keeping the donor's cemetery lot in repair, but the court does not seem to pass upon the question whether the provision for such repair was a charitable use or not.

Where trustees were directed to pay over the fund to a hospital of a certain character, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to be selected by them under certain circumstances, it was held that the testatrix could not have contemplated that the hospital selected should be one conducted for profit. French v. Calkins, infra, VIII. e.

Sustaining valid part of gift.

The reader will notice that in BUCHANAN v. KENNARD the court considers that the addition of a noncharitable purpose is not important when not commingled with the charitable bequest.

In this connection, reference should here be made to Tate v. Woodyard, 145 Ky. 613, 140 S. W. 1044, where it was held that a deed to the master of a lodge of Masons, and to his successors in office, of a tract of land for the "purpose of a lodge room and Baptist church and a graveyard," was, under the Kentucky statute relating to charitable uses and religious societies, a valid trust for charitable purposes in so far as it provided for a church and a graveyard.

d. Particular purposes and classes of purposes.

1. Religious purposes.

The word "religious" has been held to be prima facie charitable in Re Salter, [1911] 1 I. R. 289, where a will provided that the income should be disposed of "for the use of the Protestant Orphan Society of the county of Carlow, or for or towards the relief and benefit of such poor and necessitous Protestant widows and widowers, resident in the county of Carlow, or to both of such objects or purposes, or to such other merely and purely charitable or religious purpose or purposes for the benefit of, or advantage of, members of the Church of Ireland, or other Protestant denomination within the said county of Carlow, in such shares and proportions, and in such manner, as my said trustees shall, in their uncontrollable discretion, think fit." It was held that this was a valid charitable gift. The court said: "The word 'religious' is prima facie charitable, and it does not appear to me that the testator has in the words 'charitable or re-317, 83 N. E. 272; Cook County v. Chicago Policlinic, 233 Ill. 268, 84 N. E. 220.

Where the intent of the testator to create a charitable trust is once shown, courts of equity will construe the trust with the greatest liberality.

Atty. Gen. v. Haberdashers' Co. 1 Myl. & K. 428, 5 Sim. 478, 2 L. J. Ch. N. S. 33; Mason v. Perry, 22 R. I. 475, 48 Atl. 671; Ingraham v. Ingraham, 169 Ill. 450, 48 N. E. 561, 49 N. E. 320; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 1165; 2 Perry, Tr. 630; Sanderson v. White, 18 Pick. 333, 29 Am. Dec. 501; Doughten v. Vandever, 5 Del. Ch. 51.

A hospital for sick and injured persons generally, without distinction as to rich or poor, and without profit, is necessarily charitable in the sense of conferring a public benefit.

Jenkins v. Berry, 119 Ky. 350, 83 S. W. 594; Hennepin County v. Brotherhood of Gethsemane, 27 Minn. 460, 38 Am. Rep. 298, 8 N. W. 595; Sisters of Third Order v. Peoria County, 231 Ill. 317, 83 N. E. 272; Cook County v. Chicago Policlinic, 233 Ill. 268, 84 N. E. 220; McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 31 L.R.A. 224, 33 Atl. 595; Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L.R.A. 602, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42; Webber Hospital Assn. v. McKenzie, 104 Me. 320, 71 Atl. 1032; People ex rel. Ellert v. Cogswell, 113 Cal. 129, 35 L.R.A. 269, 45 Pac. 270.

ligious' drawn such a contrast or distinction as would show an intention to enable the trustees to apply the gift to purposes religious, but not charitable, or would deprive the word 'religious' of its prima facie charitable meaning."

In Gordon v. Craigie [1907] 1 Ch. 382, where the testatrix bequeathed a sum to the vicar and churchwardens for the time being of Kingdom, "to be applied by them in such manner as they shall, in their sole discretion, think fit," it was held that this was a good charitable legacy for the benefit of the parish of Kingdom for ecclesiastical purposes.

See also, in this connection, French v. Lawrence, infra, VIII. e; Huger v. Protestant Episcopal Church, infra, VIII. a.

In Re Charlesworth, 26 Times L. R. 214, 101 L. T. N. S. 908, where a testator by his will bequeathed to certain officers for the time being of a certain clerical society, certain property upon trust, to appropriate the dividends arising therefrom in payment of the expenses of the annual dinners which the society held, and which had hitherto been paid by members of the society out of their own pockets, the court said: "It seems to me that the result of relieving the members from the expense of the dinner must tend to increase the objects calculated to advance religion. I do not think I should be justified in holding this gift to be bad because some of the members were perfectly well able to pay for the dinner. I therefore hold that the bequest is a good charitable gift."

But in Re Barnett, 24 Times L. R. 788, it was held that a legacy to one of the London guilds "upon trust to give a livery dinner on each anniversary of my birthday, the 6th of May, and to invite to such livery dinner the churchwardens for the time being of St. Leonard, Foster lane, in the city of London," was not a good charitable gift.

Education and support of ministry.

In Kramph's Estate, 228 Pa. 455, 77 Atl. 814, where a testator made certain gifts to 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

trustees, "In trust, for the purpose of endowing a university of the New Jerusalem, to be founded in the consolidated city of Philadelphia, for universal New Church education in these United States, and for the education of New Church ministers, who are to teach the doctrine of the New Jerusalem, as laid down in the writings of the Honorable Emanuel Swedenborg, said New Church University to be under the care and superintendence of a body of trustees rendered corporate by a perpetual charter legally obtained," the court directed that the property should be given to the Academy of the New Church, an incorporated institution, as satisfying the requirements of the testator, except that it was in the suburbs of Philadelphia, and not in the city, and this the court thought was within its power in the premises.

For other gifts for the education and support of the ministry, see McDonald v. Shaw, infra, VII. a; Washburn College v. O'Hara, infra, VIII. e.

Church property.

See French v. Calkins, supra, V.

Sunday schools.

In Sprowl v. Blankenbaker, — Ky. —, 127 S. W. 496, where a will gave certain property "to the Sunday school cause, under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Missionary Baptists of Kentucky, each denomination to receive equally of said bequest, and to be deposited in some reliable bank, or loaned to responsible persons, all to be under the management of the Broadway Street Methodist and Broadway Street Baptist churches of Louisville, Jefferson county, Kentucky, and the annual interest to be applied, or appropriated to the subject specified," it was held that this was a good charitable trust, and that the two churches last named, together with a life beneficiary, had power of sale.

The item directing the trustees to care for the grave of Mr. Barnes, and pay $25 per month to William A. Barnes for life, does not defeat the charitable trust.

Tiedeman, Real Prop. 3d ed. ¶¶ 200-203; Clarke v. Brookfield, 81 Mo. 503, 51 Am. Rep. 243; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174, 27 L. ed. 401, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Piper v. Moulton, 72 Me. 155; Giles v. Boston Fatherless & Widows' Soc. 10 Allen, 355; Drury v. Natick, 10 Allen, 183; Nourse v. Merriam, 8 Cush. 11; Hornberger v. Hornberger, 12 Heisk. 635; Re Williams, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 735, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 92; Fisk v. Atty. Gen. L. R. 4 Eq. 521, 15 Week. Rep. 1200; Dawson v. Small, L. R. 18 Eq. 114; Rev. Stat. 1899, § 5216.

Missions.

In Re Redish, 26 Times L. R. 42, where a will gave property upon trust, to convert and hold the same in trust for two persons named, or the survivor of them or other the editors of a certain missionary periodical, "to be applied by them or him for the furtherance of missions in Central Africa in such manner as the editors, in their uncontrolled discretion, may think fit, for the use of the brethren labouring there," it was held that this was a good charitable bequest.

See also, as to missions: Re Johnston, infra. VII. b; Guild v. Allen, infra, VIII. h; Jordan v. Universalist General Convention, infra, VII. d; Re Kenny, infra, VII. c.

—cy près doctrine as to a gift to missions.

In Re Peabody, 154 Cal. 173, 97 Pac. 184, where a testatrix gave all her real estate "to my executors, to be transferred by them to the Woman's Occidental Board of Missions, . . . with the Executive Committee of the Woman's Presbyterian Missionary Society of the Los Angeles Presbytery as trustees and managers thereof. . . . This property to be used as a temporary resting place, not for invalids, . . . but for the weary Christian workers in limited circumstances from either the Home or Foreign field," and gave the income of all the residue of her property, together with that of the proceeds of any sales of real estate, to be used in aiding to meet the expenses of such house of rest, it was held that this was not within the inhibition of the California statute against trusts to convey, as it would be construed as intended that the executor should simply turn the property over to the beneficiary. And inasmuch as the statute restricting gifts to charity where there are legal heirs cut down the gift to one third of the California property, it was held that under the cy près doctrine the court would be authorized to direct the trustees to sell the undivided one-third interest and use the proceeds in a manner indicated by the court to carry out the intent of the testatrix, although not precisely in the manner she may have contemplated. The court said: 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kennish, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit in equity was instituted in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis on the 18th day of August, 1909, by the appellants, as heirs of Robert A. Barnes, deceased, against Samuel M. Kennard, Samuel Cupples, and Murray Carleton, as trustees under the last will and testament of the said Robert A. Barnes. One of the said heirs, who did not join as plaintiff, was made a codefendant. By the provisions of the will of the said Robert A. Barnes certain bequests were made to said trustees for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a hospital for sick and injured persons, and the purpose of this suit was to have such bequests adjudged invalid, the trus-

"As this court said in Hinckley's Estate, 58 Cal. 512: 'We entertain no doubt that, in the general devolution upon the courts of this state of all judicial power, with respect to charities, is included the power cy près, so far as the same may be employed in directing trustees named in a will or deed to carry into effect the general lawful and charitable intent, when the particular scheme is impracticable.'"

Masses.

In Gilmore v. Lee, 237 Ill. 402, 127 Am. St. Rep. 330, 86 N. E. 568, where a dying woman handed a priest of the Roman Catholic Church a certificate of deposit, and said it was to be used for masses for the repose of her soul, it was held that it was for a charity and in support of the form of worship to which the deceased belonged; and that if the priest accepted it for that purpose, he would be bound to perform the religious services to which it was to be applied, and, as a priest, would earn the money by so doing, and that the disposition of the certificate was valid.

So, in Kavanaugh's Will, 143 Wis. 90, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 470, 126 N. W. 672, where the will left the residuary estate for masses for the repose of the souls of the testator and certain specified relatives. "The masses will be said according to the direction of Thomas J. Fenlon and J. P. Watt, of Maple Grove, Wisconsin, and I hereby appoint them to direct where and when to say said masses," it was held that "a bequest for masses for testator and certain specified relatives being, under the doctrine of the Catholic Church, for the benefit of all mankind, is a valid public charity, and not subject to statutory provisions governing the creation of private charities;" and it was also held that the statute as to the distribution of land was not controlling, as the will effected an equitable conversion which was required in order to carry out this purpose.

And in Re Eppig, 63 Misc. 613, 118 N. Y. Supp. 683, where the will directed the executors to pay and expend a certain sum, "the same to be applied by them from time to tees divested of all title thereto, and the title vested in the heirs of the said Robert A. Barnes, and for general relief. A demurrer to the petition was sustained, and the plaintiffs declining to plead further, a final judgment was entered against them, from which they appealed to this court.

The full text of the will and six codicils thereto, all of which are of unusual length, are set forth in the petition. By the provisions of the will it appears that property of great value was therein disposed of and many bequests were made to charities, relatives, and friends. This suit is concerned only with those provisions by which bequests are made for the erection and maintenance of a hospital for sick and injured persons and for the endowment thereof.

time in their discretion to the payment of the expense of Roman Catholic masses to be procured by them to be said for the repose of the souls of my deceased parents," the court said: "A bequest for the saying of masses for the repose of the dead is a gift for a religious use. . . . It is to be observed that the executors are not directed merely to pay these sums to an unnamed beneficiary. The direction is that the executors by such payment, and as an accompanying duty, shall procure the masses to be said. It is also required that the executors shall exercise their discretion as to the application of the sums bequeathed. There is no discretion as to whether or not these sums shall be used. The direction as to their use is absolute; but the duty is laid upon the executors to determine, from time to time, what portion of the fund shall be at any given time devoted to the masses, and over what period these disbursements shall spread. To see to it that the purposes of the payment shall be fulfilled and, as an incident thereto, to control the rate and progress of the payment, is an active and continuing responsibility which cannot be effectually discharged without possession of the gift. It seems, therefore, that there is a gift to the executors for a religious use upon a valid and effectual trust."

But in Re Lennon, 152 Cal. 327, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 92 Pac. 870, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024, where a bequest was given to a bishop "to have the same amount of masses celebrated as soon as possible for my soul," it was held this bequest lacked every element of a bequest for charity or charitable use, it was not for the public nor a class, nor had it continuance and perpetuity; that it was not prohibited as a bequest for a superstitious use in California, and that it was not affected by the statute prohibiting bequests for charity in a will made within thirty days before the death of the testator, and restricting them in other wills, where there were legal heirs, to one third of the estate.

2. Educational and literary purposes.

In Hilliard v. Parker, 76 N. J. Eq. 447, 74 Atl. 447, in sustaining the validity of a 37 L.R.A.(N.S.;

These provisions and the purposes thereof, together with the issues tendered thereon, are referred to and concisely stated in the following passages from plaintiffs' petition, namely:

"These plaintiffs further state that by items 18, 19, and 20 of said original will, item 3 of the first codicil thereto, items 7, 9, and 10 of the said third codicil thereto, item 2 of the said fourth codicil thereto, and items 2, 3, and 6 of the said fifth codicil thereto, said testator, Robert A. Barnes, deceased, willed, devised, and bequeathed to certain trustees therein named certain definite and specific real and personal property, together with all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate, real or personal, and of whatever kind, nature, or de-bequest of money, the net interest to be annually paid to the treasurer of a certain library, "to be expended in the purchase of books, and to be and remain always a fund for that purpose," the court said: "I think it manifest that the donee in this bequest referred to must be regarded as an association charitable, in a legal sense, so far as the rule against trusts in perpetuity is concerned. It is manifestly an association formed and conducted for the public good in the dissemination of learning, and in no sense for private gain or profit."

In Godfrey v. Hutchins, 28 R. I. 517, 68 Atl. 317, where a will provided: "To the treasurer of any one or more societies or organizations whose object is the improvement and education of the colored people of the South, (1) I give the sum of $10,000 for the uses and purposes of said societies, but I leave it wholly to the judgment of my said trustees or trustee for the time being, as to the time when, how much of, and to what society or societies or organizations said sum of $10,000 or any part thereof, shall be paid, having reference to the ability of my estate and the efficiency of any of said societies in the above object," the court said: "That gifts for the advancement of learning, science, and the useful arts, without any particular reference to the poor, are regarded as charities, is well settled. . . . The class is designated, viz.: the colored people of the South, and the fund is to be given to any one or more societies or organizations whose object is the improvement and education of said class. The societies and organizations are to be selected by the trustees or trustee for the time being. And whenever a discretion is given by the founder of a charity to trustees to select the beneficiaries out of a class, it is not necessary that they be designated by name, or specifically pointed out. . . . In our opinion, therefore, the gift is a perfectly valid one for charitable uses, and not void for indefiniteness or uncertainty. . . . The trustees have not the discretion not to pay said legacy or any part thereof, but, when the existence of efficient societies or organizations of the kind named in the will scription, not otherwise specifically bequeathed or devised, all of which will more fully appear in said items as hereinabove fully and at large set forth, in trust forever, to said trustees and their successors in the trust therein and thereby attempted to be created, for the following uses and purposes, and none other, to wit:

"(1) To furnish a site for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon a hospital for sick and injured persons, without distinction of creed, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the United States, or its successors, and under such rules and regulations as said trustees and their successors shall from time to time establish and maintain, to be forever called and known as the 'Barnes Hospital.'

"(2) To erect and furnish the Barnes Hospital buildings upon the site above mentioned.

"(3) As an endowment for the use and benefit of said Barnes Hospital hereinbefore provided for, for the support and maintenance of said hospital.

"(4) To keep the lot of said testator, Robert A. Barnes, in Bellefontaine cemetery, and all improvements thereon, in the best repair and condition forever.

"(5) To pay to William A. Barnes, a cousin of the testator, the sum of $25 per month during his lifetime.

"That plaintiffs are advised by counsel, and believe, that the said provisions con-is established, must exercise the discretion, given them by the will, of selecting the beneficiary or beneficiaries from among them."

In Chapman v. Newell, 146 Iowa, 415, 125 N. W. 324, where a testator made a gift "to the permanent school fund of Louisa County, Iowa," and stated in his will "that there is no better way of remembering the present generation than to assist, so far as I can, in advancing the interest of the public schools of this county," the court held that this was a valid gift, that it was proper to speak of school moneys which were apportioned by the state among the various counties, and were in a sense permanent, as a permanent school fund, that the county had power by statute to receive the gift, and that in any event the court would not allow the trust to fail for want of a trustee.

For other trusts for educational purposes see Green v. Fidelity Trust Co. infra, VIII, b, 3; Barker v. Petersburg, infra, VIII, b, 3; Maxcy v. Oshkosh, infra, VII, d.

Education in art.

In Mason v. Bloomington Library Asso. 237 Ill. 442, 86 N. E. 1044, 15 Ann. Cas. 603, the court said: "That the creation of a trust to establish for the benefit of the public an art studio or art gallery and studio for the advancement of education in art is, within the meaning of all the authorities, a charitable trust, we have no question." Compare Re Ogden, supra, VI, c.

Education in socialism.

In Peth v. Spear, 63 Wash. 291, 115 Pac. 164, where land was conveyed in trust for the benefit of the "membership now existing and hereafter to exist of the Brotherhood of the Co-operative Commonwealth," which was described as an "unincorporated association or body of persons acting together for the purpose of owning, acquiring, operating, conducting, and maintaining a communal industrial institution, and the education of the people in the principles of socialism," the court said in holding the trust valid: "Since the purpose of its donors was to provide a place where the doctrines of socialism could be taught by example as well as by precept, the trust can be said to belong to that species of charitable trusts known as educational. As such it is among the objects enumerated as charitable by stat. 43 Eliz. chap. 4, and within practically all the definitions of a charitable use as announced by the authorities. . . . Nor is the trust rendered invalid by the fact that the beneficiaries of the trust are an indefinite number of persons or of an uncertain body or class. Indeed, these requisites are essential to a charitable trust."

Cy près doctrine.

In Ely v. Atty. Gen. 202 Mass. 545, 89 N. E. 166, where the testatrix provided in her will: "The residue of my estate, real and personal, I give, bequeath, and devise for the purpose of founding a Kindergarten Home for Deaf Children, to be located on the old estate owned by me,—to be founded strictly on the family system, the object being to prepare a limited number of young children to enter, under favorable circumstances, those institutions where the deaf are taught to speak by lip movements," and the whole of the estate was insufficient for the purpose intended, owing to a fire after the death of the testatrix, and the accumulation of property sufficiently for carrying out the intention would require an indefinite time, the court said, in enforcing the doctrine of cy près: "It seems to have been her purpose to provide for these children the advantages of a home of the kind referred to, and that this intention was paramount in her thought." And it was held that the charity should be administered by a certain home which was carried on for similar purposes to those intended by the testatrix, and in a manner to be approved by the court.

Ely v. Atty. Gen. supra, was approved in Grimke v. Atty. Gen. 206 Mass. 49, 91 N. E. 899, where the property was insufficient and the time of the accumulation would be indefinite, and the court invoked the cy près doctrine, there being a general intention expressed by the will for the education tained in the said items last hereinabove specifically mentioned and referred to unlawfully suspended the absolute power of alienation of such portions of the estate as are herein embraced, and they therefore allege on information and belief that the said provisions are, and each of them is, illegal and invalid in law. That plaintiffs are advised by counsel, and believe, that all of said provisions of said will are indefinite and uncertain in their objects, purposes, and subjects, invalid and unauthorized by law, and that they therefore allege on information and belief that said provisions are, and each of them is, illegal and invalid in law."

Item 18 of the will, by which the testator of young colored persons beyond the particular intention of founding a specific home for them.

3. Relief of the poor.

In Weir v. Crum-Brown [1908] A. C. 162, where a will provided: "I direct my trustees to employ the whole residue of my said estate, means, and effects in instituting and carrying on a scheme for the relief of indigent bachelors and widowers of whatever religious denomination or belief they may be, who have shown practical sympathy either as amateurs or professionals in the pursuits of science in any of its branches, whose lives have been characterized by sobriety, morality, and industry, and who are not less than fifty-five years of age, or of aiding any scheme which now exists or may be instituted by others for that purpose,"—it was held that the fact of indigency stamped the bequest as charitable and that it was not void or uncertain. It appeared that the intention of the testator was that the inmates should be residents or natives of Scotland.

In Re Donald [1909] 2 Ch. 410, where there was a gift "to the officer commanding the Northamptonshire Militia for the mess of that regiment, or for the poor of the regiment, £100," the court said: "Now, I think, on the authority of Re Good [1905] 2 Ch. 68, that that was a gift for charitable purposes within the statute of Elizabeth, and that it comes within the last clause of the preamble of that statute.—"The aid or ease of any poor inhabitants concerning payments of fifteens, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes."

For other cases on the relief of the poor, see Masonic Education & Charity Trust v. Boston, infra, VIII. a; and the following cases, infra, VIII. c, viz., Hillard v. Parker; Re Nilson; and Hagen v. Sacrisson.

4. Relief of sickness.

In Re Burnham, 74 N. H. 492, 60 Atl. 720, a will gave the residue of an estate "for the establishment and maintenance of a sought to create the public charity in controversy, is as follows:

"I will and devise to Richard M. Scruggs, Samuel M. Kennard, and Samuel Cupples, as trustees, and to their successors in this trust, as hereinafter provided for, either of the following described parcels of land, which they may select, situate in said city of St. Louis: first, a parcel of land in city block number 362, commencing at a point 50 feet east of North Twelfth street, and on the north line of Madison street, with a front running eastwardly from that point of 100 feet and extending with that width northwardly to the depth of 96 feet and 70 feet to Clinton alley, now called 'Clifton place;' second, a parcel of land in city block number 2366, having a front of 100 hospital to be located at said Manchester, and to be known as the Balch Hospital," to "be administered by five trustees, to be appointed by the judge of probate. . . . Said trustees may adopt rules and regulations for the management of the trust and constitute officers, committees, and agents in furtherance of the charitable objects of this institution. . . . So much of said rest and residue shall remain unexpended by my trustees after the establishment of the hospital as that the income thereof shall be amply sufficient to pay all taxes," and expenses of maintenance, repair, etc., "and said trustees are directed, as soon as practicable after they shall receive said remainder, to commence the establishment of said hospital, and to prosecute the work as rapidly as may be consistent with the best interest of the hospital." It was found that the fund constituting the residue amounted to $170,000; and although there were three general hospitals in Manchester when the will was executed in 1901, that the scheme for building another general hospital there, endowed as provided in the will, was not impracticable. A decree was entered that the will created a valid charitable trust and the trustees were advised that the intent of the testatrix was to establish and maintain a general hospital, and that they should so execute the trust.

In Bowden v. Brown, 200 Mass. 269, 128 Am. St. Rep. 419, 86 N. E. 351, where a will provided that "the remainder shall . . . be given to the town of Marblehead toward the erection of a building that should be for the sick and poor, those without homes. I leave this in the hands" of certain persons named, and the town declined to accept the property, which was insufficient for the erection and maintenance of the building, it was held that, while this gift constituted a public charity, the testatrix evidently expected that the building would be erected and maintained by the town with the aid of her gift, and it not appearing that she included, or intended to include, any other charity than that specified, and it being impossible to do that which she had in mind, or to discover a feet on the west line of Elliot avenue, and extending with that width westwardly along the north line of Montgomery street to the depth of 127 feet and 6 inches; to have and to hold, subject to the conditions and limitations hereinafter provided, to said trustees and their successors forever, in trust for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon a hospital for sick and injured persons, without distinction of creed, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the United States or its successor, and under such rules and regulations as said trustees and their successors shall, from time to time, establish and maintain, to be forever called and known as the 'Barnes Hospital;' and I hereby will and direct that in case said trusttees shall deem neither of the said parcels of land last aforesaid described eligible for a site for said hospital, then and in that case my executors are hereby empowered and directed to sell at private sale, at a price not less than the sum fixed by said trustees, and convey said parcels of land, and pay the proceeds thereof to said trustees with which and from the fund for this purpose in item 18 hereof provided, they shall purchase and acquire other real estate in the central portion of said city of St. Louis, as a site for said hospital, which premises so acquired shall be held in trust by them and their successors forever, and used for the same purpose as the said parcel of land hereinbefore to them devised. This devise and bequest is made upon the purpose of a similar character, the gift must fail.

For other cases of relief of sickness, see BUCHANAN v. KENNARD; Webber Hospital Asso. v. McKenzie, infra, VII. c; Ege v. Hering, infra, VIII. g.

In this connection the following English cases are of interest:

In Re Unite, 22 Times L. R. 242, 97 L. T. N. S. 292, where a testatrix by her will, made three years before her death, gave £20,000 "towards the rebuilding and equipment, to the satisfaction and under the direction of my executors, of" a certain hospital, "the enlargement of which has been recommended, and which charity I have long desired to benefit," and at the death of the testatrix the hospital was nearly totally rebuilt, but it was only partially plastered, and was neither painted, furnished, nor equipped, it was held that the gift was for a specified purpose, and not to the charity, and that if there was any surplus, that then the question as to what should be done with it must be argued in the presence of the attorney general; —in Gordon v. Craigie [1907] 1 Ch. 382, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 240, 76 L. T. N. S. 357, 23 Times L. R. 256, it was held that a gift to the sick and poor fund of the parish church at Cheltenham was good, and ought to be paid to the official trustee of charitable funds, and the income paid to the rector until further order.

5. Matters of municipal, governmental, or public interest.

A donation of land to trustees for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of a certain town is a good charitable use. New Castle Common v. Megginson, — Del. —, 77 Atl. 565.

So is a devise to a city, the income to be applied to the maintenance and improvement of courts and commons. Burr v. Boston, 208 Mass. 537, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 143, 95 N. E. 208.

In Re Graves, 242 Ill. 23, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, 134 Am. St. Rep. 302, 80 N. E. 672, 17 Ann. Cas. 137, where the testator gave 57 L.R.A.(N.S.)

$30,000 to the park commissioners of the city for the erection of a drinking fountain or drinking basin for horses, and in connection therewith provided that a bronze statue of a horse of a certain name should be included, together with a certain inscription thereon, it was held that the court would not look to the motives of the donor as personal or selfish, but rather to the nature of the gift and the object which was to be attained by it; and that the gift was for a charitable purpose, and therefore not subject to the inheritance tax.

In Staub's Succession, 123 La. 119, 131 Am. St. Rep. 350, 48 So. 766, where a bequest was given to "the city insane asylum," and it appeared that at the time of the will the city was accustomed to take care of its insane, but later sent them to the state institution, as the law before and afterwards had required, the court said, in sustaining the gift: "A point is sought to be made of the circumstance that the city had permanent charge of the insane while the so-called City Insane Asylum existed, whereas since then she has had charge of them only temporarily, until she can transfer them to Jackson. But we take it to be plain that, the legacy being for the benefit of the insane in the care of the city, irrespective of individuals, it can make no difference whether the particular patients are to spend one day or their entire lives in the hospital, so long as the supply of them is constant and unfailing, which the evidence shows is the case."

In Richardson v. Mullary, 200 Mass. 247, 86 N. E. 319, where a bequest was "to be given to the life-saving station to be built and established in Marblehead or Nahant, not yet decided upon," and at the time of the death of the testatrix a life-saving station had been established, built at Nahant, the court said: "The charitable nature and object of the gift, and the fact that its benefits are to extend generally to all the members of the class or classes for whose benefit the life-saving station is established, make it a public charity." And the United States government having failed to accept the trust, it was held that it might condition and limitation that said real estate or any part thereof, so selected or purchased, as aforesaid, shall never be mortgaged or otherwise encumbered by said trustees or their successors.

"In case of the death, resignation, or removal from said city of St. Louis, of any one of said trustees or of their successors in said trust, or of his failure to, or his becoming incapacitated to, act as such, from time to time, the bishop presiding at the St. Louis Conference of the said Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or its successor, next preceding such death, resignation, removal, failure, or becoming incapacitated, as aforesaid, shall appoint in writing a successor in said trust, who, by virtue of said appointment, shall be vested with all the same rights, powers, and duties as if he had been one of the said original trustees herein named.

"It is expressly provided that said trustees and their successors, or any of them, shall not receive or be paid any salary, reward, or remuneration of any kind, for any work or labor done or services performed in or about their or his said office or position, for no one is fit for said position who would not act therein gratuitously. This provision is not deemed necessary as to the above named trustees, whom I know, but they may be important in regard to their successors.

"It is further expressly provided that said trustees and their successors, from time to time, shall annually, between the 1st and be properly considered to have been within the intention of the testatrix that the gift was not only for the benefit of the officers and men of the life-saving station, but for the benefit of the saving of lives on the seashore, and that it could be administered under the doctrine of cy pres.

VII. Certainty as to trustees.

a. Generally.

Where a testatrix gave certain property, real and personal, to the pastor of a certain Roman Catholic parish, "to be used by the said pastor for the purpose of helping to establish a school in said parish for the education of Catholic boys, and for helping to educate young men of the parish for the priesthood," it was held that "the testatrix meant to constitute the pastors of the church in succession as the trustees under the will," and that the gift was a public charity, and not too indefinite. McDonald v. Shaw, 81 Ark. 235, 98 S. W. 952.

See also in this connection Korsstrom v. Barnes, supra, VI. a; Re Burnham, supra, VI. d, 4; Chapman v. Newell, supra, III. b.

b. Misnomer of trustee or beneficiary.

Where there is a misnomer, the decision must of course depend upon the facts of each particular case.

In Gilchrist v. Corliss, 155 Mich. 126, 130 Am. St. Rep. 568, 118 N. W. 938, it was held under the evidence that under the provision, "To women's work in foreign fields, and to women's work in home lands (not Tank Home) I give ($5,000)," the legatees respectively entitled to take were two corporations respectively named "Women's Board of Missions of the Interior," and the "Woman's Home Missionary Union of the Congregational Churches of Michigan." In the same case it was also held that a gift to the Protestant missionary work among the poor colored people of the South was intended for the American Missionary Association.

In other cases it has been held:

—that by the "Woman's Health Protection Association of New York City" the testatrix intended the "Ladies' Health Protective Association of the City of New York." in Wait v. Political Study Soc. 68 Misc. 245. 123 N. Y. Supp. 637; —that a legacy to "the trustees of the Presbyterian Home for Old Ladies, situated in Richmond, Virginia," there being no such corporation, was intended for the Richmond Home for Ladies, a corporation, in Jordan v. Richmond Home, 106 Va. 710, 56 S. E. 730;
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

—that a gift to "the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy at Fort Smith, known as Saint Anne's Convent," "for the purpose of helping to educate poor Catholic children," was good charitable a gift to "the Sisters of Mercy of the Female Academy of Fort Smith," a corporation, in McDonald v. Shaw, 81 Ark. 235, 98 S. W. 952.

In Re Johnston, 141 Iowa, 109, 119 N. W. 275, where the testatrix in the third clause of her will made a bequest to the First Presbyterian Church of Toledo, Iowa, of which she was a member, and the fourth clause provided: "I further give, devise, and bequeath to home and foreign missions $200 in money, to be divided equally, share and share alike," it was admitted that said church is embraced in the Presbyterian Church of the United States, which maintains a board of foreign missions and a board of home missions, both being incorporated, for the advancement of Christianity at home and abroad, and to which the church at Toledo made contributions at stated intervals to enable them to carry on their charitable enterprises, and it was held that the bequest was valid to the boards.

See also Guild v. Allen, infra, VIII. b.

But in Re Parkes, 25 Times L. R. 523, where the testator gave his entire estate up on charity, to be divided between certain charities, one of which was "The Protestant Church Bible Society," and it appeared that there was no such society, although there were Bible societies claimant, it was held that it was plain that the testator was thinking not of a particular society, but of certain objects; and that the legacy

15th days of January of each year, make and deliver to the said bishop, presiding at the said conference aforesaid, next preceding said 1st day of January, and publish daily for one week in a prominent newspaper, published in said city, their report in writing, showing the state and condition of said hospital and its finances during the next last preceding year, the number of patients received and discharged, the income received and from what sources, the expenditures made and for what purposes, and the amount of the then-present assets in their hands, and in what they consist, and how invested, and where their funds are kept. And none of the moneys or funds to them at any time belonging shall be deposited or kept in any bank whose capital stock paid in, exclusive of surplus, is less than $500,000."

In other parts of the will relating to and making bequests for the proposed hospital language is employed by the testator which discloses his deep solicitude and concern for the accomplishment in due time of that charitable purpose, but we do not deem it necessary to a proper understanding of the issues presented that these several provisions should be set forth in this statement.

Eleven separate points are stated in appellants' brief and a large number of authorities cited in support of each. In the printed argument the propositions relied upon are set forth in the following compact form, namely:

"(1) That the will of Robert A. Barnes failing, there must be a scheme and an application of the money cy pres.

c. Absence or incapacity.

The court will not allow a charitable trust to fail for want of a trustee. Re Crawford, 148 Iowa, 60, 126 N. W. 774.

In Hagen v. Sacrison, 19 N. D. 160, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 724, 123 N. W. 518, the court said: "Charitable trusts do not fail for want of trustees. The legal estate, in such a case, is regarded in abeyance, or as vested in the heirs or executors of the donor for the use of the beneficiaries, or the court will appoint a trustee to carry out the charitable purposes of the testator. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 920, and vol. 1, Supplement thereto, 959, and cases cited. See generally upon the subject of charitable trusts, the exhaustive note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 155."

In Re Kenny, 97 L. T. N. S. 130, where a will directed the payment of money to a certain person, "to be paid and applied by him to or for such missionary object or objects at home, abroad, or in the colonies, as he shall, in his absolute discretion, select," and the legatee lived for a number of years after the testatrix, but did not make any selection of the beneficiaries for the money, his personal representatives were permitted to carry out the purpose and to administer the fund.

In Webber Hospital Asso. v. McKenzie, 104 Me. 320, 71 Atl. 1032, where a will provided: "The balance of my estate and property, real and personal, and all that shall accrue to said estate, not otherwise mentioned, to constitute a fund which, when it shall have amounted to $75,000, the income from which to be used for the maintenance of a free hospital in Biddeford, Maine, where the unfortunate may receive good care and skilful treatment. If a hospital shall not have been built when the above hospital fund shall have amounted to $75,000, $25,000 of the principal may be used for building one, provided a sufficient sum is guaranteed for its maintenance," it was held that this created a valid trust 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) within the scope of a public charity, and that the court could appoint a trustee.

But in Ingraham v. Sutherland, 80 Ark. 596, 117 S. W. 748, where the will provided that at the death of the testator's wife and son "what of my estate is left, if any, shall be appropriated to building a house of worship belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) and a Masonic Hall. My desire is that the church and hall should be built together, either on my premises or somewhere near, as may be agreed upon by the neighborhood. But if the church and hall shall be built separately, then the amount of my estate shall be equally divided between the two interests," the court said: "The part of the estate of the testator intended to be appropriated to the building of a church and Masonic Hall was not bequeathed or devised to anyone. The beneficiaries for whom the appropriation for a Masonic Hall was intended were not named. No description of the hall to be built is given; and no one was appointed or authorized to be appointed to direct how and according to what plans it shall be built, or to accept it when built. The devise for the hall is too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to be capable of enforcement, and is void."

See also Robbins v. Boulder County, infra, VIII. e; Chapman v. Newell, supra, VI. d, 2; Green v. Fidelity Trust Co. infra, VIII. b, 3; French v. Lawrence, infra, VIII. e.

d. Corporations as trustees.

In Jordan v. Universalist General Convention, 107 Va. 79, 57 S. E. 652, where the remainder in certain real estate was given to "the trustees of the Universalist General Convention, and by them to be sold and the money applied to mission work in the United States of America," and it appeared that said general convention was a New York corporation, it was held that the gift was valid and the corporation might take it.

In Kasey v. Fidelity Trust Co. 131 Ky. 609, 115 S. W. 739, a gift to the Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Company, the income under consideration creates a trust in perpetuity, such as can be upheld only in the case of a legal and valid public charity.

"(2) That said will is so lacking in designation of specific beneficiaries, and is so indefinite in its purposes and objects, that it cannot be upheld as a private trust, and is void, unless it is a legal and valid public charity.

"(3) That said trust as created by said will is not a legal and valid public charity."

The correctness of the first two of the foregoing propositions is conceded by respondents, and the sole remaining question is the third, which is more fully stated elsewhere in appellants' brief, as follows: "The trust created by the will, so far as it relates to the founding of the hospital, is not a legal and valid public charity, and is therefore void."

Although the first two of the foregoing propositions are not controverted, it may be said with reference to them that the testator evidently sought and intended to create a public charity by the devise and bequests of item 18 of the will. That purpose plainly appears from these two provisions of the bequest: (1) The objects of the charity are indefinite, vague, and uncertain. (2) The grant to the trustees is made in perpetuity. Both of these provisions are recognized as valid—the first as essential—in a public charity, while either of them would render invalid a devise or bequest intended as a private trust. Therefore it is apparent that this bequest cannot to be paid to the American Bible Society, was upheld as a good charitable trust.

In Maxcy v. Oshkosh, 144 Wis. 238, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 787, 128 N. W. 899, 1136, it was held that a public charitable trust was created by a will devising property to trustees, with directions to erect a memorial manual training school, to be perpetually maintained, and after the building is erected, to turn the property over to a municipal corporation, the unexpended balance of the fund to be used for the maintenance of the school, in connection with tuition fees, with no provision for reverter in case of diversion of the property. In the same case it was held that a municipal corporation may accept and perpetually administer a trust, where the donation is made to aid some public purpose, charitable in its nature, which it is the legal duty of the municipality to support and provide for. And it was further held that where the gift was made conditional on other contributions for the same purpose, the city, as part of its general system of education, could make such contributions, and that the provision that "a tuition fee shall be charged which, in the judgment of the city of Oshkosh or trustees appointed by said city of Oshkosh, shall be sufficient, together with the income of the aforesaid fund, to perpetually properly maintain said school," should be construed to mean that only those persons from whom a tuition fee could lawfully be exacted should pay it.

See also Barker v. Petersburg, infra, VIII. b, 3.

VIII. Certainty as to beneficiaries.

a. Generally.

In Masonic Education & Charity Trust v. Boston, 201 Mass. 320, 87 N. E. 602, where the question was as to whether certain property was for a public charity, and therefore exempt from taxation, the court said: "This bequest is made expressly for the benefit of indigent and needy Masons within a designated territory, by making provision for their relief and comfortable support at a home to be erected when the fund with accumulations should be sufficient, and which should bear the testator's name. The object to be accomplished being purely charitable, and the number to be benefited indefinite, even if the gift is limited to a class, these features are sufficient in law to constitute the gift a public charity."

See also Korsstrom v. Barnes, supra, VI. a; Wilcox v. Atty. Gen. supra, VI. b.

b. Particular applications of English rule.

1. Religion.

In Huger v. Protestant Episcopal Church, — Ga. —, 73 S. E. 385, where a landowner executed a deed to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Georgia, described as a corporation, "in trust, nevertheless, for the use and benefit of the religious congregation in the county and state first mentioned, called St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, its successors and assigns," there was evidence tending to show that there was at that place an existing congregation known as St. John's Church, or St. John's Mission, though it was never formally organized as St. John's Church, and it was held, that the trust so created was not void for want of a beneficiary, as even if there was no such church in actual existence when the deed was executed, but it was only in contemplation, this would not of itself render the trust void; and that under a deed of the character above set forth, it could not be declared that the trust therein created had failed or become impossible of accomplishment, so as to cause a reversion to the founder or her heirs, although there had been no active or organized congregation known as St. John's Church for some fourteen or fifteen years before the commencement of litigation.

See also Re Peabody, supra, VI. d. 1; McDonald v. Shaw, supra, VII. a; Brice v. All Saints Memorial Chapel, infra, VIII. 1.

be upheld as a private trust, and that it must be upheld, if at all, as a public charity.

We are now to consider whether the bequest in item 18 of the will creates a valid public charity. In the determination of this question we are to deal with the subject in its legal sense; that is, a public charity recognized as such by the law, and which may be enforced and the bequests therefor administered in accordance with the purpose and intention of the founder of the charity, under the jurisdiction and guidance of the equity powers of the courts. Public charities for the temporary and immediate relief from the consequences of public calamity or visitation, though of frequent occurrence and most commendable in those engaged therein, aid us but little in determining what is a public charity in the sense involved in this inquiry. Neither can we look for light from any legislative act or declaration of the lawmaking body of this state, notwithstanding the fact that public charities, in the legal sense, are well recognized by our laws and many at the present time are in force and contribute in no small degree to the material well-being of our people. The question must be decided by resort to the common law of England, as built up and construed by the courts, and which by statute has been made a part of the law of this state.

Trusts for charitable uses or public charities, as known at the present time, are of ancient origin, and have long been recog-

2. Relief of poor.

In Clumpert v. Vrieland, 142 Iowa, 434, 121 N. W. 34, where a bequest "to the poor of Voorst, Gelderland, Netherlands," was sustained, the court said: "The answer averred, and it is to be taken as true on demurrer, that Voorst is a municipal corporation of the Netherlands, and by the poor of that place are meant all who are supported by its institutions of charity; and under the laws there such a bequest is to be distributed among such institutions, according to the number of persons supported by each. Though the bequest is to be construed according to the laws of this state, it is to be executed in a foreign country, and the testator, in directing that his bounty be bestowed on 'the poor of Voorst,' may well be assumed to have accorded to this expression the meaning it has in that place as identifying the beneficiaries intended."

See also Re Nilson, infra, VIII. e.

3. Education.

A gift by the will of a resident of Kentucky to a lodge of Masons to erect and maintain in or near the corporate limits of a certain city of Indiana, a building, such as the income of the gift, accumulated for a certain time, would suffice "to erect and conveniently maintain under its perpetual supervision, direction, and control, and shall maintain forever the same as an institution for the nurture, support, and education of the poor [white] infant orphans under the age of seventeen years of the Free Masons of the state of Indiana," creates a good public charity. Green v. Fidelity Trust Co. 134 Ky. 311, 120 S. W. 283, 20 Ann. Cas. 861, where the trustee nominated by the will not having accepted the trust, the will further provided that the court might appoint a trustee, which was done.

In Barker v. Petersburg, 41 Ind. App. 447, 82 N. E. 996, where a testatrix gave the residue of her estate to a town "for the erection of a public school building in said town," it was held that she could have had 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) in mind only the children entitled under the law to the benefit of public schools of the town, and that these were not only ascertainable, but ascertainable by reference to rules prescribed by the legislature; that the will was not void for indefiniteness, and that the town had power to take as trustee.

Where the testator directed that his trustees "pay and apply the income of the trust funds exclusively for the maintenance, support, education, or otherwise for the benefit of blind persons resident in the city of Newcastle or the county borough of Gateshead, and only to such blind persons as are hereinafter referred to,—that is to say, for the benefit of blind persons only who, in the opinion of my trustees, intend to be or are likely to be honest, steady, industrious,—my intention being that the payment or application of the said income shall not take away or weaken the self-respect of the blind persons from time to time deriving benefit therefrom, but shall tend to make the same blind persons fit for work and capable of earning an independent living,"—it was held that this was a good charitable gift. Re Elliott, 102 L. T. N. S. 528.

See also Ely v. Atty. Gen. supra, VI. d, 2; Grimke v. Atty. Gen. supra, VI. d, 2; Godfrey v. Hutchins, supra, VI. d, 2; Hunt v. Edgerton, infra, VIII. e.

4. Other matters.

See Richardson v. Mullery, supra, VI. d, 5; and as to relief in sickness, see BUCHANAN v. KENNARD.

c. Where English rule repudiated.

In Arnett v. Fairmont Trust Co. — W. Va. —, 73 S. E. 930, it was held that bequests, one of $40,000, to trustees named, "to be placed and used to the very best of said parties' knowledge in helping the poor those who are deserving, in lifting young men up and helping the work along in putting down intoxicants drinks and saving souls. Let this money be used in the way God may direct for His cause;" the other nized as a part of the common law. In England, courts of chancery exercised jurisdiction over them during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in which, as appears from the records of such courts, many cases were brought for the purpose of enforcing compliance with the provisions of the trust in question in order that the bequest might be administered in accordance with the intention of the founder of the charity. 2 Perry, Trusts & Trustees, 6th ed. 694.

In the forty-third year of the reign of that sovereign, and after the jurisdiction of courts of equity to enforce such trusts had become well established, what is known and referred to as the "statute of charitable uses," or Stat. 43 Eliz. chap. 4, was enacted by Parliament, and that act has had a most important bearing upon the subject of public charities from that date until the present time. That statute, together with the common law of England upon the same subject, was made a part of the law of this state, and with the decisions of this court now constitute the law upon public charities by which we must be governed in the determination of this case. In the preamble of Stat. 43 Eliz. chap. 4, a number of classes of public charities are set forth as then existing and to which the act applied. As appellants contend that the bequest in controversy in this case cannot be upheld as a public charity unless it can be shown to fall within some one or more of the classes thus enumerated, we shall set of "$10,000 to be placed in the Baptist Church to be used for Lord's work in the way he may direct," are void for uncertainty.

In Stoepel v. Satterthwaite, 162 Mich. 457, 127 N. W. 673, where a will stated: "Having been at the Sanitarium many times, and knowing personally the amount of charity work done in connection with his business, and feeling the importance of this work, I hereby give and bequeath to William H. Jones the sum of two thousand ($2,000) or four shares of Calumet & Hecla copper stock, to be used as he sees best for carrying on the work of relieving suffering," it was held that this was not a personal gift to Dr. Jones, and that it must fail for indefiniteness, and uncertainty of the beneficiary.

A. Partial return to English rule in New York.

In New York, as shown in the note to Hadley v. Forsee, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, there has been by statute a partial return to the English rule.

In Fralick v. Lyford, 107 App. Div. 543, 95 N. Y. Supp. 433, affirmed in 187 N. Y. 524, 79 N. E. 1105, where a will gave $5,000 to "the Progressive Spiritual Society of Waverly, New York, to be used by the said society in such manner as it may deem most expedient for the development and advancement of spiritualism at Freeville, Tompkins county, New York," it was held that as the beneficiary named was not incorporated, it could not take the legacy; that the bequest was a direct bequest, and one not in trust; that the statute of 1893 did not apply except where the gift was in trust, and probably did not apply where the trustee was incapable of taking, and that the legacy was void.

So, in Wait v. Political Study Soc. 68 Misc. 245, 123 N. Y. Supp. 637, where the will gave certain bonds to the executor in trust, the proceeds from the principal and interest derived from the said bonds to be distributed in part to the Society of Political Study of New York City, which was 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

not incorporated at the death of the testatrix, but was incorporated afterwards and before the distribution, it was held that this could not enable it to take the bequest, and that the act of 1893 did not so enable it. It was also held that the statute of 1893 would not sustain a legacy which was direct to an unincorporated institution, and not in trust, following Fralick v. Lyford.

So, in Re Compton, 72 Misc. 289, 131 N. Y. Supp. 183, it was held that a direct gift to an unincorporated association could not be sustained for charitable purposes.

In Catt v. Catt, 118 App. Div. 742, 103 N. Y. Supp. 740, where the testator disposed of part of his property, real and personal, as follows: "To the Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, to be used to found as many scholarships of one hundred ($100) dollars as the income of the same shall provide," the fund to be known as the "Geo. W. Catt Scholarship Fund," and the "scholarships shall be given to the most needy students in the sophomore year," etc., the Iowa State College not being a corporation or association, nor having any legal entity at all, being merely an institution conducted by the state, it was held that it could not take the gift, and that the state of Iowa could not take a gift which was partly real estate in the state of New York, upon a trust of this kind, the will containing no equitable conversion, and that the statute of 1893 did not affect the matter.

In Tavshanjian v. Abbott, 59 Misc. 642, 112 N. Y. Supp. 583, modified as to costs in 130 App. Div. 863, 115 N. Y. Supp. 938, and so affirmed in 200 N. Y. 374, 93 N. E. 978, where a will directed the executors promptly to cause the incorporation of a society under the laws of the state of New York, to be managed by five trustees, to be named by the executors, and that immediately after the incorporation of said society, the executors should pay over to the trustees thereof the sum of $5,000, "to be under the complete control of such trustees, and is to be loaned in sums of $500 or less at a time, to any honest and deserving Armenian, to help him in his business, out the title and preamble of that act. They are as follows:

An Act to Redress the Misemployment of Lands, Goods, and Stocks of Money Heretofore Given to Certain Charitable Uses.

Whereas Lands, Tenements, Rents, Annuities, Profits, Hereditaments, Goods, Chattels, Money and Stocks of Money, have been heretofore given, limited, appointed, and assigned, as well by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, and her most noble Progenitors, as by sundry other well disposed Persons; some for Relief of aged, impotent, and poor People, some for maintenance of sick and maimed Soldiers and Mariners, Schools of Learning, free Schools, and Scholars in Universities, some for Repair of Bridges, Ports, Havens, Causeways, Churches, Sea-Banks, and Highways, some for Education and Preferment of Orphans, some for or towards Relief, Stock, or Maintenance for Houses of Correction, some for Marriages of poor Maids, some for Supportation, Aid, and Help of young Tradesmen, Handicraftsmen, and Persons decayed, and others for Relief or Redemption of Prisoners or Captives, and for Aid or Ease of any poor Inhabitants concerning Payments of Fifteens, setting out of soldiers, and other Taxes; which Lands, Tenements, Rents, Annuities, Profits, Hereditaments, Goods, Chattels, Money and Stocks of Money, nevertheless have not been employed according to the charitable Intent of the givers and Founders thereof, by reason of the loan to be repaid, with interest, and to be made only on business principles, and upon such security as said trustees shall deem advisable," the court said: "This provision contemplates a profitable business enterprise to be incorporated without provision for the issue of stock, and consequently a kind of corporation not capable of being created under the existing laws of the state of New York. Such a corporation might conceivably be created by special act; but since the trust must meanwhile be necessarily uncertain, the ownership and power of alienation over the fund would be suspended otherwise than by the statutory lives, and consequently this bequest is in violation of the statute." The court held further that the statute of 1893 could not help the case, as this was a business enterprise, and not a charitable use.

In Re Shattuck, 193 N. Y. 446, 86 N. E. 455, reversing 118 App. Div. 888, 103 N. Y. Supp. 520, it was held that the following clause in a will was invalid, owing to the indefiniteness and uncertainty of the beneficiaries: "All the rest, residue, and remainder of my real and personal property I give, devise, and bequeath to my executor hereinafter named, in trust, however, the rents, profits, and income thereof to be expended by him annually, and to be paid over to religious, educational, or eleemosynary institutions as in his judgment shall seem advisable, not more than $500, however, to be paid to any one such institution in any one year." The court said: "It is manifest that it is necessary for a testator to define his purpose and intention in making a trust sufficiently so that the court, at the instance of the attorney general, representing the beneficiaries, can by order direct in carrying out the trust duty. . . . The act of 1893 doubtless saves a trust from being invalid because the beneficiaries are indefinite and uncertain, but a trust may be so indefinite and uncertain in its purposes as distinguished from its beneficiaries as to be impracticable, if not impossible, for the courts to administer. We make these suggestions for the express purpose of calling attention to the fact that 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) there must be some limitation upon the power of a testator to make a valid trust, if he leaves his objects and purposes undefined and the beneficiaries indefinite and uncertain. . . . In this will the testatrix, without defining the use to which the income of the trust fund is to be applied, directs generally that it be paid over to such particular ones of certain institutions as, in the judgment of the trustee, seems advisable. The power of the court to control the trustee is bounded by the directions of the testatrix. It cannot add to or take from the terms of this will, properly construed, any more than it could if the testatrix had specified by name the particular institutions entitled to the income of the trust fund, and she had included among them one or more manufacturing or transportation corporations. The possible devotion of the income of said trust in whole or in part to private use necessarily affects the entire gift, and requires that the same shall be held invalid."

And in Re Compton, supra, where the will provided: "I desire that the sum of $1,800 (eighteen hundred dollars), invested in the Lord's work in care of Miss S. A. Lindenberger (of which I receive the income during my lifetime), shall not be withdrawn from said work at my decease, but shall wholly remain in that work;" the court, in holding that this gift could not be sustained as a charitable use, referring to the statute, said: "The act doubtless saves a trust from being invalid because the beneficiaries are indefinite and uncertain; but a trust may be so indefinite and uncertain in its objects and purposes, as distinguished from its beneficiaries, as to be impracticable, if not impossible, for the courts to administer."

So, in Re Seymour, 67 Misc. 347, 124 N. Y. Supp. 637, where the testatrix directed that certain property should be turned over to a certain individual, stating: "It is my desire that if I should be taken away that the said Schuyler C. Pew have this property, to use as he may desire in the Master's work," the court said: "The provisions of the will are ambiguous, their mean-

Frauds, Breaches of Trust, and Negligence in those that should pay, deliver, and employ the same: (2) For Redress and Remedy whereof, Be it enacted by Authority of this present Parliament. . . .

Referring to that statute as a part of the law of this state, appellants maintain the following: "So it may be considered as settled that the statute of charitable uses is in force in Missouri. And the question then arises whether the trust created by this will is a charity under that statute. In every state where this statute is considered in force, courts look to this statute for the purpose of ascertaining what uses are charitable and what are not." There is no doubt as to the correctness of appellants' proposition that the statute of charities uses is in force in this state, but it is equally true that the common law of England upon the subject of such uses, as it existed at the time of and before the enactment of that statute, is also in force in this state. Rev. Stat. 1909, § 8047; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Missouri Historical Soc. v. Academy of Science, 94 Mo. 459, 8 S. W. 346; 2 Perry, Trusts & Trustees, 6th ed. 694.

In the case of Chambers v. St. Louis, supra, this court, speaking through Judge Scott, said: "Of late years the subject of charities has undergone a great deal of investigation, both in England and the United States; and the result of that investigation has strengthened the opinion ing obscure. In my opinion the provisions must be construed as an ineffectual attempt to create a trust; ineffectual because her objects and purposes are undefined and the beneficiaries indefinite and uncertain."

But in Re Robinson, 203 N. Y. 380, 96 N. E. 925, post, 1023, the court sustained a provision that the executor should pay over the residue to certain named trustees, who were authorized to add five to their number, and to disburse the principal or interest or both, in their discretion: "To provide shelter, necessaries of life, education, general or specific, and such other financial aid as may seem to them fitting and proper, to such persons as they shall select as being in need of the same. Preference is to be given to persons who are elderly or disabled from work, and to persons who are Christians, of good moral character, members of one of the so-called evangelical churches, to wit, the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Moravian, or Episcopal, and who are not addicted to the use of intoxicants or tobacco, nor to attendance at theatrical entertainments." The court said: "The personal property law, so far as necessary for the present discussion, is as follows: 'No gift, grant, or bequest to religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, which shall in other respects be valid under the laws of this state, shall be deemed invalid by reason of the indefiniteness or uncertainty of the persons designated as the beneficiaries thereunder in the instrument creating the same. It is doubtless true that the paragraph of the will by which the trust is attempted to be created is susceptible of more than one construction; but a construction which is fairly within the rules of law, and that sustains the trust, and devotes the fund included therein to purposes permitted by law and to the good of humanity, should be preferred.'"

So, in Manley v. Fiske, 139 App. Div. 665, 124 N. Y. Supp. 149, affirmed in 201 N. Y. 546, 95 N. E. 1133, where a will provided: "The sum remaining I desire my executors to divide the surplus among such American charities they may think well of, and I would like these sums to be given to any 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) society that assist poor needlewomen (seamstresses) whose toil is so poorly required. If no such organization exists, the money to be divided for the benefit of incapacitated sailors and their families," it was held that the testator intended a trust, and that it was valid under the statute of 1893. The court said: "I see no difficulty in the way of upholding this provision as a trust for charitable uses, the object of it being the assistance of poor needlewomen. That purpose may be accomplished through the medium of any incorporated society having that for its object. The purpose is sufficiently indicated to enable the court to control the action of the trustees, and it is made the duty of the attorney general to see that the trust is properly administered. This will was evidently drawn by the testator himself. His purpose is reasonably plain, and I think that it should be carried out, if any effect whatever is to be given to the statute in question. It was improper to appoint the attorney general as trustee. The statute contemplates that he shall act in another capacity. The judgment should be modified by striking out the provision appointing the attorney general as trustee."

In Re Deming, 112 N. Y. Supp. 170, where a legacy was given "to the Genesee Conference Permanent Fund Association, to be used by them for the relief of aged ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, $200," and it appeared that the corporation named, had been dissolved before the death of the testatrix, it was held that the money should be paid into court under that statute of 1893, to be administered by it according to the provisions in the will.

In Starr v. Selleck, 145 App. Div. 869, 130 N. Y. Supp. 693, where the testator gave certain property to trustees "to be used towards the purpose of maintaining a clubhouse or clubrooms for the social resort of young men and boys upon the west side of the city of New York, borough of Manhattan, or to the purposes of similar work, social or educational, for such young men or boys, as individuals," it was held that this trust was properly sustainable that the law of charities did not derive its existence from the statute of 43 Elizabeth, and that there was an inherent jurisdiction in the court of chancery over the subject of charities before the enactment of that statute. The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Philadelphia Baptist Association, in which a contrary doctrine was intimated, has not given satisfaction; and in subsequent cases occurring in the state courts it has not been followed. Judge Story, speaking of that case in the subsequent one of Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 196, 11 L. ed. 233, says: "Very strong additional light has been thrown upon this subject by the recent publications of the commissioners on the public records in England, which contain a curious and very interesting collection of the chancery records in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and in the earlier reigns. Among these are found many cases in which the court of chancery entertained jurisdiction over charities long before the statute of 43 Elizabeth; and some fifty of these cases, extracted from the printed calendars, have been laid before us. They establish in the most satisfactory and conclusive manner that cases of charities, where there were trustees appointed for indefinite and general charities as well as for specific charities, were familiarly known to, acted upon, and enforced in the court of chancery." What-ever doubt, therefore, might be properly entertained on the subject when the case of the Philadelphia Baptist Asso. v. Hart, 4 under the statute of 1893, but it was also held, however, in that case, that whether it was or not a good trust under that statute, the attacking party was estopped from contesting it.

e. Selection of beneficiaries by trustees.

In French v. Calkins, 252 Ill. 243, 96 N. E. 877, where a will gave property to trustees and directed that after a certain annuity and other purposes "the trustees shall pay over the money or securities to some hospital offering care and treatment for tubercular patients, or such a corporation or society conducting such a hospital as the trustees may select, and in making such selection the trustees are to consult with and be largely guided by the homeopathic medical board of the city of Chicago as to the institution most deserving of the bequest," it was held that this was a valid charitable gift, that it was not void for uncertainty, and that the testatrix could not have contemplated that the hospital selected should be one conducted for profit.

In Re Nilson, 81 Neb. 809, 116 N. W. 971, where the will of a resident of Nebraska contained bequests to two churches in different places in Norway, the bequest in one case to be invested, the principal to remain inviolate, "and the interest shall be paid annually on the 1st day of December, and be distributed on the following Christmas to worthy and needy servant girls and the widows and orphans of deceased sailors and fishermen who are not a public charge," the other bequest being in the same language, except that the widows and orphans were to be "of deceased peasants or under-tenants who strive and use their best efforts to maintain themselves and families so as not to depend on charity, but who are, from force of circumstances, unable to do so;" and appointed in each case the pastor, the president of the county commissioners, and the county treasurer of the respective localities, and their successors in office, as trustees to carry out the provisions of the bequest, it was held that the trust was a 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) valid, charitable trust, sufficiently definite as to the trustees and the class of beneficiaries, and as to the selection of the individuals who were to receive the charity, and that the trust was in all respects valid and enforceable. The beneficiaries were held to be clearly limited to persons of the classes named, living in Norway.

Where the testator provided after the death of his wife, whom he appointed executrix, "if any property is left after paying funeral expenses and liabilities, I desire the same to be divided into four equal parts . . . one part to the feeble Congregational churches of New Hampshire," it was held that the testator knew that his trust must be administered under such person as the court might appoint to carry out his will after the death of his wife, and that it would be necessary for some person to make a selection among the churches as to which ones were feeble, and the administrator was directed to divide the fund into four equal parts, and to pay over and distribute one of them among the feeble Congregational churches in New Hampshire. French v. Lawrence, 76 N. H. 234, 81 Atl. 705.

In Hilliard v. Parker, 76 N. J. Eq. 447, 74 Atl. 447, it was held that a provision that the net interest arising from a certain fund should "be annually expended by my executor in the purchase of fuel for the most needy women of the borough of Woodstown, to be selected by my surviving executor as he shall judge of their needs; provided the same shall not extend to women living with their husbands, and shall be a perpetual fund forever," was a good charitable trust.

Where the will appointed the trustee and stated: "It is my will that the yearly interest arising from said fund be applied by my trustee to the education of colored children, by which I mean, in whole or in part of negro blood," and authorized the trustee to combine the money of the testatrix with other funds for similar purposes, and expressed a preference that in such case, a manual labor school after the plan of one then in existence should be established and supported, the court, in concluding that the bequest was a valid one and that the trust

Wheat, 1, 4 L. ed. 499, was before the court (1819), these doubts are entirely removed by the late and more satisfactory sources of information to which we have alluded." And in the case of Missouri Historical Soc. v. Academy of Science, supra, this court, discoursing upon the subject of what is a public charity under the law of this state, and the effect of the statute of Elizabeth upon the subsequent jurisdiction of courts of equity over such charities, said: "Any gift not inconsistent with existing laws, which is promotive of science or tends to the education, enlightenment, benefit, or amelioration of the condition of mankind, or the diffusion of useful knowledge, or is for the public convenience, is a charity within the meaning of the authorities cited; and it is none the less a charity because not so denominated in the instrument which evidences the gift. And the validity of such charitable gifts is not at all dependent on Stat. 43 Eliz. chap. 4, nor does the jurisdiction of courts of equity in such cases depend on that statute. The contrary view was at one time entertained by the Supreme Court of the United States (Philadelphia Baptist Asso. v. Hart, supra), but that idea was reversed and thoroughly exploded in the Girard Will Case, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205, which has since been followed."

These cases are cited, and many of the same import could be added, to show that the purpose of the statute of Elizabeth was not constructive or definitive as to the law of charitable uses, but was intended solely toe had power to select the individual beneficiaries of the class named, said: "The great weight of American authorities on this are to the effect (1) that the individual beneficiaries of a charitable trust must necessarily be vague and uncertain, and it is sufficient if a class is designated from whom the trustee can select the same. (2) That a trustee clothed with the power of administering a trust fund for such public charity has, without special delegation thereof, incidental authority to select from the classes named the individual beneficiaries thereof." Hunt v. Edgerton, 9 Ohio C. C. N. S. 333, 29 Ohio C. C. 377.

In Washburn College v. O'Hara, 75 Kan. 700, 90 Pac. 234, where the testator bequeathed all of the remainder of his estate, in trust, to the trustees of an incorporated educational institution, to be held by them as a perpetual fund for the higher education of young men, to be selected by such trustees for the Christian ministry, it was held that such bequest created an educational trust, which is a public charity. The court did not seem to think it worth reference that the will provided: "In case of several applicants for the benefit of this fund, my grandchildren or great-grandchildren are to have first preference on the same conditions as others, and the children of Kansas home missionaries the second preference."

In Hagen v. Sacrison, 19 N. D. 160, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 724, 123 N. W. 518, where the will provide: "I desire that there shall be founded, established, and maintained in my native county or district, known as Taskog Sogn Darsland, in the Kingdom of Sweden, a children's home for the reception, care, nurture, succor, and support of the destitute children of that vicinity, and that such children's home, when so established, shall be under the charge and custody of the proper officers of such district of Sogn having the proper supervision of the poor, but whose official designation is not known to me at this time, the selection of such officers being left to my executor, to be selected and designated in accordance with the laws of the Kingdom of Sweden;" 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) and the testator directed that part of the fund should be devoted by his executor to the building and establishing of the home, and that the remainder should be turned over to the proper foreign officers for its benefit, to be invested by them according to the laws,—it was held that this was a valid charitable trust, and that it was not necessary to determine whether the foreign municipality was legally designated to execute it, as it appeared that it was capable and ready to do so. The court said: "Where a charitable bequest is made to a trustee in a foreign country, the court will not assume that, should the trustee refuse to act, a foreign court will permit the trust to fail, but will assume that it will appoint a trustee;" and that it was immaterial whether the title meantime vested in the heir by operation of law or not, as the executor had the necessary power of sale and other powers in the premises. It further held that the beneficiaries were not uncertain as to class, as the words "of that vicinity" meant of the socken or county, and that the beneficiaries were by the testator intended to be selected by the officials. (It may be noted that it was held by the lower court in this case that under the laws of Sweden, only one half of the testator's property could be applied to the purpose indicated, but this question was not before the court on the appeal.)

But it was held in Robbins v. Boulder County, 50 Colo. 610, 115 Pac. 526, that "where there is an entire absence of trustees, and no details or plans for carrying out the testator's object, and no method prescribed for executing the trust, and no delegation of power to anyone to select the particular beneficiaries where they are designated in the will merely as belonging to a general class, the same cannot be enforced by the courts."

For other cases on this subject, see BUCHANAN v. KENNARD; Gill v. Atty. Gen. supra, VI. b; Pembroke Academy v. Epescm School Dist. supra, V.; Selleck v. Thompson, supra, VI. b; Dulles's Estate, supra, VI. b; Godfrey v. Hutchins, supra, VI. d, 2; Re Kenny, supra, VII. c.

to provide a new jurisdiction or legal machinery to correct existing abuses in such charities, for the reason, as stated in the act, that the properties theretofore given to the charities therein named, "as well, by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, and her most noble Progenitors, as by sundry other well disposed Persons . . . nevertheless have not been employed according to the charitable Intent of the givers and Founders thereof, by reason of Frauds, Breaches of Trust," etc. Speaking of this statute and its effect, it has been said that "since the passage of this statute all the objects named therein are considered charitable. There are also many other uses, not named, and not within the strict letter of the statute, but which, coming within its spirit, equity, and analogy, are considered charitable." 2 Perry, Trusts & Trustees, 6th ed. § 692. But this statute, even though remedial and not intended to establish a new standard as to what was a public charity, did enumerate the several classes of such charities for which the remedy was provided, and, as there was no reason for omitting any from the benefits thereof, it must be conceded that it was intended to include the leading charities then known, and it has been said that one of the things accomplished by it was: "It established an enumeration, or kind of definition, standard, or test, to which all gifts and grants in trust could be brought, in order to determine whether they were charitable." 2 Perry, supra, § 696.

g. Misnomer of beneficiaries.

See supra, VII. b.

g. Corporations as beneficiaries.

In Baltzell v. Church Home, 110 Md. 244, 73 Atl. 151, where a will directed the trustees to pay and distribute over funds, "One half or part to the Church Home and Infirmary of Baltimore city, to whom I give and bequeath the same to be kept by said legatee as a separate fund . . . and the income thereof used in maintaining aged and infirm persons in said home, or in maintaining free beds in their infirmary, in the discretion of said legatee, and to pay over the remaining part . . . to the Emmanuel Church Home in the city of Baltimore, to whom I give and bequeath the same, to be kept as a separate fund, . . . and the income thereof used under their rules and in the discretion of said legatee in assisting or maintaining poor, respectable sewing girls or apprentices, unable to pay over $2 a week for their board, or unable to pay anything,"—it was held that the gifts were direct to the corporations, and being for purposes authorized by their charters, were valid; that the class of beneficiaries was not too indefinite, and that the trust was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities.

In Ege v. Hering, 108 Md. 391, 70 Atl. 221, the court held and said: "We . . . think that the gift to the Church Home and Infirmary, 'to endow a bed according to the custom and purpose of said institution,' was a valid one. The mere fact that it was, by the terms of the will, to be applied to a particular clear and well-defined object plainly within the sphere and function of the institution has been several times held by us not to avoid a gift which would have been good if it had been made to the same institution for its general corporate purposes."

Under the Constitution of West Virginia, providing: "No charter of incorporation shall be granted to any church or religious denomination. Provision may be made by general laws for securing the title to church property, and for the sale and transfer thereof, so that it shall be held, used, or transferred for the purposes of such church or religious denomination," and statutes providing that local societies should have control of devices, etc., of land as a place of public worship or as a burial place, or as a residence for a minister, not exceeding 60 acres outside of a city, town, or village, and the statute further inhibiting foreign corporations from powers other than those granted to domestic corporations, it was held in Miller v. Ahrens, 150 Fed. 644, that a devise of several thousand acres to a trustee to sell at public or private sale, and pay over the proceeds "to the First Spiritualist Church of Baltimore city, a corporation created under the laws of the state of Maryland and existing in Baltimore city," was void for uncertainty, as the church must be considered as a voluntary association, and that such devise was for the benefit of an association of individuals unnamed, who might increase and add to its number to-day and lose by death and withdrawal to-morrow, and whose membership was not known and was indeterminate.

See also Re Morgan, supra, V.

h. Unincorporated associations as beneficiaries.

In Guild v. Allen, 28 R. I. 430, 67 Atl. 855, where there was a gift to "Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, connected with the First Baptist Church of Providence, Rhode Island," and there was no Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society connected with the said church, but there was an unincorporated voluntary association connected with said church, called the Woman's Foreign Missionary Association, which sent out its funds through the corporation known as the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, it was held that this corporation should receive the bequest on receipt of an agreement from its executive officers that the same should be expended as directed by the will. In the same will, where it was provided: "I give

From the foregoing authorities, it clearly appears that the statute cannot be looked to as the sole test of what it a public charity, but that "many other uses, not named, and not within the strict letter of the statute, but which, coming within its spirit, equity, and analogy, are considered charitable." As supporting this view of the law, it may be noted that one of the more than fifty cases in which the courts of England had exercised chancery jurisdiction over public charities before that statute was enacted is reported as follows: "Bill to compel defendant, who is feoffee in trust, to and bequeath to the Home Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church of Providence, Rhode Island, one thousand ($1,000) dollars," and it appeared that there was no Home Missionary Society of such church, but that the Woman's Baptist Home Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church of Providence, Rhode Island, was an unincorporated voluntary association, and that the Woman's American Baptist Home Missionary Society of Boston was a corporation under the laws of Massachusetts, it was held that the unincorporated association was entitled to the money, which could be paid to the individuals composing it, or to any agent whom they duly authorized to receive it.

See also Peth v. Spear, supra, VI. d, 2; Korstrom v. Barnes, supra, VI. a; Huger v. Protestant Episcopal Church, supra, VI. d, 1.

4. Change of purpose or condition of beneficiary.

In Mason v. Bloomington Library Asso. 237 Ill. 442, 86 N. E. 1044, 15 Ann. Cas. 603, where the will gave in trust to trustees certain property "to establish, in connection with the Bloomington Library Association, an art studio or art gallery and studio, meaning thereby a suitable place wherein works of art will be collected, kept, preserved, or exhibited for the advancement of education in art, the conduct, management, and supervision of which art gallery and studio shall be in charge of the officers of the Bloomington Library Association. The said art gallery or studio shall be named the 'Russell Art Annex,' or some suitable name or appellation of which the name Russell shall be a part, in commemoration of my mother, Rachel P. Russell. The said trustees may, in their discretion, turn over to said Library Association the whole or a part of the principal sum of said fund for the use aforesaid, or may put and keep the whole, or a part thereof, at interest upon good security, collect the interest thereof, and pay the same as collected to said Bloomington Library Association for the use as aforesaid," and it appeared that, long before, the Bloomington Library Association had conveyed all of its property to the directors of the Withers Public Library, an association organized under the laws of the state of Illinois, it was held that, under the cy pres doctrine, "the fund disposed of by that paragraph of the will should be held by trustees for the purpose of establishing, in connection with the Withers Public Library, an art studio or art gallery and studio, wherein works of art might be col- 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) lected, kept, and preserved or exhibited, for the advancement of education in art."

In Brice v. All Saints Memorial Chapel. 31 R. I. 183, 76 Atl. 774, where the court's decision was that the controlling instrument was a declaration of trust, the court said: "The primary object disclosed in all these instruments is the establishment of a chapel for the celebration of religious worship according to the forms and usages of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America. The other provisions are all subordinate to that. If conditions have changed so as to render it impossible to continue the execution of the trust in strict conformity with all the particular provisions, that cannot be permitted to defeat the trust. . . . A general charitable intent is expressed in said trust instruments, and the trust property may properly be applied cy pres."

Where the testator in his will gave £25,000 to the Institute of Medical Sciences Fund, University of London, and after this had been paid, the scheme was given up and the funds returned to the donor, a suggestion by the attorney general that the money had been devoted to a charitable purpose, and that therefore it ought to be applied cy pres, was denied by the court. Re University of London Medical Sciences Institute Fund [1909] 2 Ch. 1, 78 L. J. Ch. N. S. 562, 100 L. T. N. S. 423, 25 Times L. R. 358, 53 Sol. Jo. 302.

j. Miscellaneous.

It may be noted that where contributions were made by various individuals upon what they believed to be a promise upon the part of the board of directors of a certain corporation connected with the Methodist Church to afford an appropriate meeting room for the gratuitous use of the Methodist Church for all proper uses, under their direction, which corporation issued certain shares of its stock as representing such contributions to "treasurer" or "treas" "church room fund," and later ceased to furnish the room, and proposed to distribute the proceeds derived from its own liquidation among other stockholders, with no reservation for the protection of the aforesaid shares, it was held, although the statute of Elizabeth was not in force in the jurisdiction, that to sanction such a proceeding would operate as a fraud, both upon the original contributors and upon the associations or organizations for the benefit of which the contributions were made. Book Depository v. Trustees Church Rooms Fund, — Md. —, 83 Atl. 50.

B. B. B.

make an estate in certain lands in Tottenham and Hornsey, to the hospital of St. Bartholomew, in West Smithfield, for the endowment of a chapel there, 'because great multitudes of Christian people of all parts of England and other nations for sickness, poverty, and misery, continually of custom resort to the said hospital, and there relieved; and finally have their Christian sepulture round about the said chapel.'" Wakering v. Bayle, Proceedings in Chancery, vol. 1, cited in note on Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 156, 11 L. ed. 217. It is evident from this report that the hospital there recognized as a public charity was not limited to "aged, impotent, and poor people," but that the sick were also the recipients of its bounty, though neither poor nor miserable.

The purpose of the devise and bequest in controversy is stated in the will to be "in trust for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon a hospital for sick and injured persons, without distinction of creed, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the United States, or its successors, and under such rules and regulations as said trustees and their successors shall from time to time establish and maintain." The position of appellants in assailing the validity of the foregoing provision as creating a public charity is stated as follows: "There is no restriction of the benefits of this hospital to the poor, and it is the absence of any such restriction that precludes the conclusion that any charity is thereby created. This is the vital question in this case: Is a 'hospital for sick and injured persons,' without any further designation or restriction, a charity in the sense of relieving the poor? . . . Both in England, where the statute of charitable uses originated, and in those states of the Union where it has been followed, the rule is universal that, unless the gift or trust is for public educational purposes, public religious purposes, or works of public utility, benefiting and open to the general public, it must be in some form or manner for the relief of poverty. . . . Charity, in the sense of relieving or benefiting individuals, is synonymous with charity in the popular meaning,—the relief of the poor."

Under this contention, the poverty of the recipients of the charity is made an essential element of a valid public charity in all cases where the charity is to be bestowed upon individuals instead of upon the general public. This contention, even if we confine the definition of public charities to such as are included in the statute of Elizabeth, as insisted by appellants, is placing too restricted a construction upon the law, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for, under the first class, "aged, impotent, and poor people," it is manifest that if the aged or impotent must be poor, in order to be proper objects of a public charity, then the words "aged" and "impotent" are meaningless and add nothing to the requirement of poverty. As to the subsequent classes, "maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners," and "aid and help to young tradesmen," it may also be said that, if poverty be necessary to entitle them to bounty, they would have been comprehended within the words "poor people," as used in the first class. We have not overlooked a few cases cited by appellants in support of their contention, but they are not in accord with the spirit of the law in this state, or with the current of authority upon the subject.

While poverty is the condition generally recognized in the bestowal of public charity upon individuals, it is not the only condition, as abundantly appears from the authorities. Indeed, it is not the fact of poverty alone which makes a person a proper object of charity, and this is shown by the existence of penal laws in England, along with the law of public charities, for the punishment of sturdy beggars. It is the need or want of food, clothing, shelter, or other bodily ministrations, so commonly found among the poor, which prompts the exercise of public charity to that class. But a person who is sick, injured, or afflicted, or in a helpless condition, is none the less a proper object to be included in the purpose of a public charity, although he may not be poor. This is the broad sense in which in Webber Hospital Asso. v. McKenzie, 104 Me. 326, 71 Atl. 1035, speaking of a hospital as a public charity, the court said: "It was to be open to all. The rich should not be turned away because of their wealth, nor the poor because of their poverty,"—and in which this court in Missouri Historical Soc. v. Academy of Science, 94 Mo. 459, 8 S. W. 346, defined a public charity as "any gift not inconsistent with existing laws, which is promotive of science or tends to the education, enlightenment, benefit, or amelioration of the condition of mankind, or the diffusion of useful knowledge, or is for the public convenience." In 2 Perry, Trusts & Trustees, 6th ed. § 687, that author includes in charitable trusts "all gifts for the relief and comfort of the poor, the sick, and the afflicted." And at § 692 the same author continues: "Since the passage of this statute, all the objects named therein are considered charitable. There are also many other uses, not named, and not within the strict letter of the statute, but which, coming within its spirit, equity, and analogy, are considered charitable." And in 6 Cyc. 902, public charities are defined as follows: "Charities are either public or private. Every public trust, though benefitting the rich and the poor alike, is a charitable trust, and these terms have the same meaning." In accordance with the foregoing doctrine, public charities have been upheld in which the bequest was made to relieve "the great suffering, distress, famine, and want caused by the destruction of life and property by storms, floods, fires, and other accidental and natural causes" (Kronshage v. Varrell, 120 Wis. 161, 97 N. W. 928); and where a bequest was to a life-saving station (Richardson v. Mullery, 200 Mass. 247, 86 N. E. 319); and "to give shelter to homeless people at night, irrespective of creed, color, or condition" (Croxall's Estate, 162 Pa. 579, 29 Atl. 759); and for the purpose of establishing a fund and maintaining a hospital for the benefit of "infirm, afflicted, or unfortunate persons who are residents of said Pittsfield at any time, and who may be admitted into said hospital by the officers or authorities thereof for treatment; and also for all who may reside elsewhere, and who may be admitted therein for treatment" (Burbank v. Burbank, 152 Mass. 254, 9 L.R.A. 748, 25 N. E. 427); and "for the purpose of founding and supporting, or uniting in the support of any institution that may be then founded, to furnish a retreat and home for disabled or aged and infirm and deserving American mechanics" (Hayes v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 37 L. ed. 279, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503); "for the maintenance of a free hospital in Biddeford, Maine, where the unfortunate may receive good care and skilful treatment" (Webster Hospital Asso. v. McKenzie, 104 Me. 320, 71 Atl. 1032). From the foregoing cases it must be taken as settled that public charities for the relief of persons who are made objects of the charity for reasons other than their poverty will be upheld. The language of the case last cited, as to the purpose of the trust, does not differ materially from that of the bequest under consideration, and, construing it, the court said: "The rich should not be turned away because of their wealth, nor the poor because of their poverty." And why is not that, as was the purpose of the testator in this case, the true spirit of public charity? It was said of old, "The poor always ye have with you;" and because of that truth, and the need, want, and distress which closely wait upon poverty, the poor have always been, and ever will be, the chief concern of those who have means and are moved by the noble purpose of devoting it to the well-being of their fellow men. But sickness, pain, and suffering are the heritage of all. We are continually attended by peril and may at any time, and when least expected, be stricken by misfortune and affliction. No man can be so rich or so circumstanced as to be exempt from this condition. And, if so overtaken, is charity to withhold its ministrations because the stricken sufferer may not be poor? Is the Samaritan to refuse to bind up the wounds of the unconscious man on the wayside because he may have means to pay a physician? Charity, whether public or private, sees the need, or want, or affliction, or suffering, and its first concern is to bring relief. The question of whether the recipient is able to pay is the merest incident and of minor importance. In the case under consideration, the ability of the sick or injured to pay may be regarded as almost an intrusion into the high charitable purpose of the benefactor, who would relieve "sick and injured persons, without distinction of creed." Such a gift and for such a purpose, aside from the aid of the liberal rule of construction applied by the courts in such cases, comes well within the language of this court in upholding as public charities, "gifts which are for the amelioration of the condition of mankind." Nor have counsel for appellants, with all of the ability, research, and learning shown in their brief, called the attention of this court to a single case in which any court has pronounced a bequest made for such a purpose invalid and insufficient to establish a public charity.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The testator gave directions that the bequest should be "under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the United States, or its successor, and under such rules and regulations as said trustees and their successors shall from time to time establish and maintain." It was not necessary that the bequest should have been more definite as to the selection of the objects of the public charity, or for administering and carrying out the purposes of the gift, than it was made in this provision of the will. The sufficiency of the bequest in this regard, and the contention that the trustees are given such power as would authorize them to select the rich as patients and exclude the poor, are answered by the case of Chambers v. St. Louis, supra, in which the court (loc. cit. 589, 590, 29 Mo.) said: "If, under such circumstances, the uncertainty of the persons to be relieved by a charitable fund could be available to destroy it, few charities could be sustained. If all the recipients of a charity could be designated with certainty at the time of its creation, there would be no necessity for a law for charitable uses different from that which governs all other trusts. The only difficulty in the way would be the law against perpetuities, and that would not exist where the donation in trust was made to a corporation. From the very nature of the subject, charitable gifts must be objects vague and uncertain. The subjects of the charity may be numerous, and they are to be sought for and ascertained by those to whose discretion and judgment the dispensation of the relief is intrusted. The founder of a charity, by placing his fund in the hand of a competent trustee, . . . with power to carry that object into effect, makes the trustee his substitute or delegate. Cannot any individual who has the means employ them for the relief of 'poor emigrants and travelers coming to St. Louis on their way to settle in the West?' If he can carry out this charity himself, may he not appoint another to do it for him? Could it be objected to such a course that the trustee would not know how to act? As the donor of the bounty is willing to confide its management to the discretion of his agent, so long as the agent acts in good faith his acts are the acts of his principal, and there is no one but the principal to complain. If the agent abuses his trust, he, like all other fiduciary agents, is subject to the control of the courts."

The fact that bequests made for the payment of a sum to a relative of the testator monthly, and of another sum for the keeping of the burial lot of the donor in repair, were made charges upon a part of the fund bequeathed for the erection and maintenance of the hospital, is not important in its bearing upon the validity of the bequest. These bequests are not commingled with the purpose of the bequest for the hospital. They are merely charges upon the fund bequeathed to the trustees for the purpose of the principal charity, and their only effect is to diminish the available funds to that extent.

We have examined carefully the bequest involved in this litigation, and the many authorities of this and other courts cited as to the law governing the subject of public charities, and we have arrived at the conclusion that the testator, by the provisions of his will, created a valid public charity under the laws of this state. The charity thus provided for is of such extent and of such possibilities for good among the people of the city where the testator lived, and where he directed it to be established, that there should be no unnecessary delay in bringing to the objects of his bounty and solicitude the blessings of his praiseworthy gift.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Entertaining the foregoing views, the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

All concur, except Valliant, Ch. J., absent.

Petitions for rehearing denied April 11, 1911.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

RE PROBATE OF WILL OF MARY S. ROBINSON, Deceased.

BURTON C. MEIGHAN, Exr. and Trustee, et al., Appts.

(203 N. Y. 330, 96 N. E. 925.)

Charity — will — indefinite designation of persons.

1. The words, "and such other financial aid" to persons in need as may seem fitting and proper, in a will establishing a trust to provide shelter, necessities of life, education, and such other financial aid, etc., with preference for elderly and disabled Christian persons of good moral character, members of Evangelical churches, will be construed as requiring aid of the same general character as the purposes specified, so as to come within the statute providing that no gift for religious, educational, charitable, or beneficent purposes shall be invalid by reason of the indefiniteness and uncertainty of the beneficiaries.

Same — specific education — validity.

2. Providing a fund for the specific education of the poor does not destroy the charitable nature of the gift.

Will — construction — charity — sustaining.

3. In case a will attempting to create a charity is susceptible of more than one construction, that one should be preferred which, if fully within the rules of the law, sustains the trust and devotes the fund to purposes permitted by law and to the good of the community.

Trust — nonresident beneficiaries — enforcement.

4. A court will not refuse to sustain a charitable trust because the beneficiaries are not confined to residents of the state.

(November 28, 1911.)

APPEAL by the executor and trustees of the will of Mary S. Robinson, deceased, from the portion of the order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, which affirmed a decree of the Surrogate's Court of Westchester

Note. — As to enforcement of general bequests for charity or religion, see notes to Hadley v. Forsee, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, and Buchanan v. Kennard, ante, 993.

County declaring a certain trust attempted to be created by said will invalid and void in a proceeding for the probate of the will. Reversed.

Statement by Chase, J.:

Mary S. Robinson, the testatrix, died a resident of Westchester county, October 16, 1909, leaving an estate consisting of personal property only. She left an instrument in writing, bearing date January 26, 1904, purporting to be her last will and testament. It was offered for probate in the surrogate's court of Westchester county, and her next of kin and the attorney general of the state of New York were duly cited to appear in the proceeding. The next of kin and said attorney general thereafter duly appeared, and one of said next of kin filed an answer to the petition for the probate of said will, expressly putting in issue the validity, construction, and effect of the sixth to eleventh paragraphs, inclusive, of said instrument, and in said answer denied that the said provisions constitute a valid disposition of personal property by will under the laws of this state.

The surrogate found that the will was duly executed in accordance with the laws of the state of New York, and that it is the last will and testament of said deceased; but he found, as a conclusion of law, that the trusts attempted to be created by the sixth, seventh, and ninth paragraphs of said will are invalid, and that the eighth, tenth, and eleventh paragraphs of said will are void, and that the testatrix died intestate as to all of her property, except that part thereof given and bequeathed by the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of her said will, and that the next of kin of the testatrix are entitled to her residuary estate in equal shares. Re Robinson, 71 Misc. 87, 129 N. Y. Supp. 1020. An appeal was taken by the executor and trustees named in the will from the decree of the surrogate's court, entered in accordance with said findings, to the appellate division of the supreme court, so far as it declares parts of said will invalid or void. The appellate division modified said decree by declaring valid the trust set forth in the sixth and seventh paragraphs of the will, and as so modified said decree was affirmed. Re Robinson, 145 App. Div. 925, 130 N. Y. Supp. 259.

The eighth paragraph of the will provides, in case of the death of certain persons and the survivor of them, or of certain other contingencies, for a gift over of the fund given in trust by the sixth and seventh paragraphs of the will to the fund provided by the ninth paragraph of the will. The eleventh paragraph of the will provides that if any person named in the will contests the same, such person shall forfeit any right to participate in the estate.

The ninth and tenth paragraphs of the will are as follows:

"Ninth. I direct my said executor to pay over the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate to the said Burton C. Meighan and Frank B. Upham, in trust, however, for the following uses and purposes: The said trustees are to invest such portion of the fund as shall not be used for the purposes herein specified, in the securities prescribed by law as savings bank investments, and they are to disburse the principal or interest, or both, of said fund in their discretion as follows, to wit:

"To provide shelter, necessities of life, education, general or specific, and such other financial aid as may seem to them fitting and proper to such persons as they shall select as being in need of the same. Preference is to be given to persons who are elderly or disabled from work, and to persons who are Christians, of good moral character, members of one of the so-called Evangelical churches, to wit, the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Moravian, or Episcopal, and who are not addicted to the use of intoxicants or tobacco, nor to attendance at theatrical entertainments.

"Tenth. I authorize and empower my said trustees, in their discretion, to appoint other persons, not exceeding five, to act with them in the execution of the trusts, or either of them, herein provided for; and I direct that the execution of said trusts shall thereupon devolve upon all of the said trustees jointly and upon the survivors of them. If the said two trustees, Burton C. Meighan and Frank B. Upham, deem it advisable, they may cause a corporation to be created for the purpose of executing the trusts provided for in this will."

The executor and trustees named in the will appeal from that part of the order of the appellate division which affirmed the decree of the surrogate, declaring the ninth paragraph of the will invalid and the tenth and eleventh paragraphs void.

Mr. Arthur M. Johnson, with Mr. Henry Necarsulmer, for appellants:

Trusts for religious, charitable, educational, or benevolent uses are recognized by the statute law of the state of New York, and such trusts are not invalid by reason of the indefiniteness or uncertainty of the beneficiaries named therein, and are not subject to the statute against perpetuities.

Re Shattuck, 193 N. Y. 450, 86 N. E. 455; Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568; Rothschild v. Schiff, 188 N. Y.

331, 80 N. E. 1030; Bowman v. Domestic & F. Missionary Soc. 182 N. Y. 494, 75 N. E. 535; Mount v. Tuttle, 183 N. Y. 358, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 428, 76 N. E. 873; St. John v. Andrews Institute, 191 N. Y. 254, 83 N. E. 981, 14 Ann. Cas. 708; Murray v. Miller, 178 N. Y. 316, 70 N. E. 870.

The construction of the provisions of ¶ 9 of the will of deceased, made by the surrogate and adopted by the appellate division, was erroneous.

Roosa v. Harrington, 171 N. Y. 350, 64 N. E. 1; Kahn v. Tierney, 135 App. Div. 903, 120 N. Y. Supp. 663; Crozier v. Bray, 120 N. Y. 375, 24 N. E. 712; Hermance v. Ulster County, 71 N. Y. 487; People ex rel. Huber v. Feitner, 71 App. Div. 481, 75 N. Y. Supp. 738; Re Reynolds, 124 N. Y. 395, 26 N. E. 954; Donahue v. Keeshan, 91 App. Div. 606, 87 N. Y. Supp. 144; DuBois v. Ray, 35 N. Y. 166; Mee v. Gordan, 187 N. Y. 400, 116 Am. St. Rep. 613, 80 N. E. 353, 10 Ann. Cas. 172; Lewis v. Howe, 174 N. Y. 340, 66 N. E. 975, 1101; Haug v. Schumacher, 166 N. Y. 506, 60 N. E. 245.

Properly construed, the provisions of ¶ 9 of the will of deceased constitute a valid gift in trust for educational, charitable, and benevolent uses.

Kelly v. Hoey, 35 App. Div. 273, 55 N. Y. Supp. 94; Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568; Re Shattuck, 193 N. Y. 446, 86 N. E. 455; Manley v. Fiske, 139 App. Div. 665, 124 N. Y. Supp. 149, 201 N. Y. 546, 95 N. E. 1133; Re Griffin, 167 N. Y. 71, 60 N. E. 284; Farmer's Loan & T. Co. v. Ferris, 67 App. Div. 1, 73 N. Y. Supp. 475; Re Durand, 56 Misc. 235, 107 N. Y. Supp. 393.

The purpose and intention of the testatrix in making the trust contained in the ninth paragraph of the will are sufficiently defined, and no objection on that ground can properly be urged to the validity of the trust.

Re Shattuck, 193 N. Y. 451, 86 N. E. 455; Rothschild v. Schiff, 188 N. Y. 330, 80 N. E. 1030; St. Johns v. Andrews Institute, 191 N. Y. 254, 83 N. E. 981, 14 Ann. Cas. 708; Fairchild v. Edson, 154 N. Y. 211, 61 Am. St. Rep. 609, 48 N. E. 541; Kelly v. Hoey, 35 App. Div. 273, 55 N. Y. Supp. 94; Bowman v. Domestic & F. Missionary Soc. 182 N. Y. 494, 75 N. E. 535; Hull v. Pearson, 36 App. Div. 224, 55 N. Y. Supp. 324; Re Griffin, 167 N. Y. 71, 60 N. E. 284; Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 146, 55 N. E. 568.

Mr. Lewis E. Carr also for appellants.
Mr. Edward R. Otheman, for respondent:

The ninth clause of the will does not constitute a charitable trust, and was correctly held by the appellate division to be void.

37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Re Shattuck, 193 N. Y. 456, 86 N. E. 455; Schettler v. Smith, 41 N. Y. 328; Morice v. Durham, 9 Ves. Jr. 399, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 548; Re Scott, 31 Misc. 85, 64 N. Y. Supp. 577; Re Seymour, 67 Misc. 347, 124 N. Y. Supp. 637; Re Stokes, N. Y. L. J. Feb. 23d 1910; Manley v. Fiske, 139 App. Div. 665, 124 N. Y. Supp. 149.

Chase, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Gifts for religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, to indefinite or uncertain beneficiaries, are now permitted in this state by express provision of statute. Personal Property Law, § 12 (Laws of 1909, chap. 45 [Consol. Laws 1909, chap. 41]); Real Property Law, § 113 (Laws of 1909, chap. 52 [Consol. Laws 1909, chap. 50]).

The law relating to gifts for charitable uses, as it existed prior to chapter 701 of the Laws of 1893, which was substantially re-enacted in said personal property law and said real property law, has been changed. Re Shattuck, 193 N. Y. 446, 86 N. E. 455; Bowman v. Domestic & F. Missionary Soc. 182 N. Y. 494, 75 N. E. 535; Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568.

The spirit of love and religion which is the basis of charity should be exercised in construing the provisions of such acts. A will, however, must sufficiently define the beneficiaries and the purpose of the testator, so that the trust can be enforced by the courts; otherwise the will does not come within the provisions of the acts. The gifts must be also for a public, and not for a private, purpose. This court has recently construed the provisions of the act of 1893 in the Shattuck Case, 193 N. Y. 451, 452, 86 N. E. 456, and there say: "It is manifest that it is necessary for a testator to define his purpose and intention in making a trust sufficiently so that the court, at the instance of the attorney general, representing the beneficiaries, can by order direct in carrying out the trust duty." And the court further say: "The intention of the legislature in passing the act of 1893 was to save to the public charitable gifts made in trust to uncertain and indefinite beneficiaries. Gifts for the benefit of private institutions or individuals were not intended to be included within its provisions."

It is not seriously contended but that the trust attempted to be created by the ninth paragraph of the testatrix' will is within the provisions of the personal property law, and can be carried out, providing the purpose and intention of the testatrix in defining the beneficiaries is lawful and sufficiently clear, so that the same can be enforced by the courts. The important question for determination on this appeal is whether the gift provided by the will is confined to religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses. The answer to such question involves the purpose of the testatrix.

The personal property law, so far as necessary for the present discussion, is as follows: "No gift, grant, or bequest to religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, which shall in other respects be valid under the laws of this state, shall be deemed invalid by reason of the indefiniteness or uncertainty of the persons designated as the beneficiaries thereunder in the instrument creating the same." The purpose of the trust must come within the uses specified in the act. In construing the will now under consideration, the words "such other financial aid" must be read with the words that precede them and the expression of preference in selecting persons to receive the fund, subsequently stated in the same paragraph; and as so read, the preceding words not being exhaustive, such comprehensive words should be held to refer to financial aid of the same general character and purpose as that included in such preceding words. They should be construed to mean other financial aid for similar urgent and necessary purposes. Re Reynolds, 124 N. Y. 388, 26 N. E. 954; Re Hermance, 71 N. Y. 481, 487; Lewis v. Howe, 174 N. Y. 340, 346, 66 N. E. 975, 1101; People ex rel. Huber v. Feitner, 71 App. Div. 479, 75 N. Y. Supp. 738; Garvey v. Garvey, 150 Mass. 185, 22 N. E. 889; 1 Jarman, Wills, 5th ed. 417.

The rule which we are applying is that, where certain things are enumerated, and such enumeration is followed or coupled with a more general description, such general description is commonly understood to cover only things ejusdem generis with the particular things mentioned. In such case it is presumed that the testator had only things of that class in mind. Given v. Hilton, 95 U. S. 591, 24 L. ed. 458.

The word "need" is used in the same paragraph of the will as a noun, and as such it is defined to mean: "A state requiring supply or relief; pressing occasion for something; urgent want; necessity; exigency." It is also defined to mean: "The lack of anything desired or useful, as, 'He felt the need of a better education.'" The latter meaning is by lexicographers said to be its meaning in a milder sense. Its general and more commonly accepted meaning is stated in the first-quoted definition, and also as: "Want of the means of subsistence; poverty; indigence; destitution."

Reading the statement of preference in the selection of beneficiaries in connection with the words "shelter, necessities of life, education, general or specific," and also associating with such words the thought of want and necessity, which, in the connection in which they are used, they naturally and commonly imply, it is plain and unmistakable that the testatrix intended the trust for the benefit of those in need, who require shelter, necessities of life, and education, and not for those simply desiring something useful; and that the discretion vested in her trustees extends only to selecting such persons as to them shall seem fit and proper among those in want, necessity, exigency, poverty, indigence, and destitution. Construed as stated, the purpose of the testatrix was within the language of the statute, which authorizes gifts "to religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses." Shelter, necessities of life, education, and other like benefactions to be supplied to those in need, to be selected by the trustees, is a definite purpose.

It is urged, however, by the respondent that the will authorizes the trustees to expend the fund for special education, and that to such extent it is not within the terms of the statute. The language of the statute does no confine educational uses to such as are general. There is nothing in the fact that specific education, as distinguished from general or common-school education, was contemplated by the testatrix that condemns the trust as being one other than for charitable uses. Charity at least includes any department or extent of education primarily and fairly calculated to make the recipient self-supporting. A gift is not without the bounds of charity because the training contemplated thereby may include special or specific education. St. John v. Andrews Institute, 191 N. Y. 254, 83 N. E. 981, 14 Ann. Cas. 708; Rothschild v. Schiff, 188 N. Y. 327, 80 N. E. 1030; Re Shattuck, 193 N. Y. 446, 86 N. E. 455.

The respondent refers to the Shattuck Case, 193 N. Y. 452, 86 N. E. 456, as specifically holding that the word "educational," as used in the statute, does not necessarily indicate a public charitable use. In that case this court say: "The word 'educational' does not necessarily describe a public or charitable institution, and for that reason, as we will show, the trust is not saved by the provisions of the act of 1893." That language was used with reference to an educational institution, and in connection with a will that gave, in general terms, the trustee authority to use the income of the trust by paying the same "to religious, educational, or eleemosynary institutions as in his judgment shall seem advisable."

It was there held that an educational institution includes a private, as well as a public, institution, and that, so far as it included a private institution, it was without the terms of the statute.

In the will now under consideration, a gift to an institution is not contemplated. It authorizes the use of the money included in the trust to furnish an "education, general or specific." A specific education is no more without the charitable purpose of the testatrix than is a general education, and the construction of the words relating to education are in no way controlled by what was said in the Shattuck Case.

It is doubtless true that the paragraph of the will by which the trust is attempted to be created is susceptible of more than one construction; but a construction which is fairly within the rules of law, and that sustains the trust and devotes the fund included therein to purposes permitted by law and to the good of humanity, should be preferred. Crozier v. Bray, 120 N. Y. 366, 375, 24 N. E. 712; Mee v. Gordon, 187 N. Y. 400, 410, 116 Am. St. Rep. 613, 80 N. E. 353, 10 Ann. Cas. 172; Young Women's Christian Home v. French, 187 U. S. 401, 47 L. ed. 233, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184; Goodwin v. Coddington, 154 N. Y. 283, 48 N. E. 729; Kelly v. Hoey, 35 App. Div. 273, 55 N. Y. Supp. 94; Thomas, Estates Created by Wills, 1657. In our judgment, the construction of the will as we have indicated is the more reasonable one. It being determined from the will that the trust and the purpose of the testatrix in her attempt to establish it are for the uses enumerated in the statute, the courts can and will, at the suit of the attorney general of the state, compel the trustees to carry out the same according to such purpose and for such uses.

Trusts otherwise valid under the acts mentioned are sustained, although the beneficiaries are not necessarily or in terms confined to residents of this state. St. John v. Andrews Institute, 191 N. Y. 254, 83 N. E. 981, 14 Ann. Cas. 708; Manley v. Fiske, 139 App. Div. 665, 124 N. Y. Supp. 149, affirmed in 201 N. Y. 546, 95 N. E. 1133; Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568; Rothschild v. Schiff, 188 N. Y. 327, 80 N. E. 1030; Bowman v. Domestic & F. Missionary Soc. 182 N. Y. 494, 75 N. E. 535.

A gift for the uses specified in the statute may, under the direction of the will, be administered and enforced by and through a corporation subsequently created for that purpose. St. John v. Andrews Institute, supra.

The validity and effect of the eleventh paragraph of the will was not discussed, nor was a decision upon the appeal, so far as it relates thereto, insisted upon in this court.

The order of the Appellate Division, so 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

far as it relates to the ninth and tenth paragraphs of the will, should be reversed, and the provisions of the said paragraphs of the will should be declared valid and enforceable, with costs to all parties appearing and filing briefs, payable out of the fund.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Haight, Vann, Werner, Willard Bartlett, and Hiscock, JJ., concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM J. HAGAN, Appt.,

v.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT OF LIMESTONE COUNTY et al.

(160 Ala. 544, 49 So. 417.)

Tax — limitation of indebtedness — excess — constitutional construction.

1. A constitutional provision allowing counties to levy a special tax in addition to the amount they may have regularly collected, to pay for public buildings, has no operation in counties where the indebtedness exceeds the limitation imposed upon them by another section.

County — indebtedness — special tax levy.

2. A county cannot avoid the constitutional limitation upon its indebtedness by agreeing to pay the contract price of a public building, with interest, out of the proceeds of a special tax levy laid for a series of years for that purpose, although the contract expressly provides that no debt is created or incurred by the county.

Same — indebtedness — determination.

3. In determining whether or not a debt incurred for a public building will exceed the constitutional limitation upon the indebtedness which the county may incur, the aggregate amount of the contract price must be considered, although it is to be paid in instalments out of the tax levies for a series of years.

(April 6, 1909.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Limestone County dissolving a temporary injunction in a suit to enjoin the assessment of a certain tax and the issuance of tax warrants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sanders & Thach, for appellant:

A municipality indebted to the limit cannot evade the Constitution and incur further debt, by creating a "special fund" to pay the debt, when such special fund has its source in general taxation of the community.

Note. — See note, post, 1058.

Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, pp. 1080, 1084, 2105, 2106; Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co. 59 L.R.A. 604, 56 C. C. A. 219, 119 Fed. 315; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222, 24 S. W. 872; Voss v. Waterloo Water Co. 163 Ind. 69, 66 L.R.A. 95, 106 Am. St. Rep. 201, 71 N. E. 208, 2 Ann. Cas. 978; Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 32 L. ed. 1060, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 29 L. ed. 132, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar, 128 Mo. 188, 32 L.R.A. 157, 26 S. W. 1025, 31 S. W. 756; Eaton v. Minnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 73 Pac. 754; Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279; Tally v. Commissioners' Ct. — Ala. —, 39 So. 167.

Mr. M. K. Clements also for appellant.

Mr. W. R. Walker, for appellees:

Where a special tax is levied to pay upon a contract, and the proceeds thereof assigned in payment thereof, no debt within the Constitutional interdiction is created.

State ex rel. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 24 Mont. 521, 55 L.R.A. 336, 81 Am. St. Rep. 453, 63 Pac. 99; Prince v. Quincy, 128 Ill. 443, 21 N. E. 768; Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476; Swanson v. Ottumwa, 118 Iowa, 161, 59 L.R.A. 620, 91 N. W. 1048; Kiehl v. South Bend, 36 L.R.A. 228, 22 C. C. A. 618, 44 U. S. App. 687, 76 Fed. 921; Saleno v. Neosho, 127 Mo. 627, 27 L.R.A. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 S. W. 190; Johnson v. Pawnee County, 7 Okla. 686, 56 Pac. 701; Shannon v. Huron, 9 S. D. 356, 69 N. W. 598; Western Town-Lot Co. v. Lane, 7 S. D. 1, 62 N. W. 982; Lawrence County v. Meade County, 10 S. D. 175, 72 N. W. 405; Darling v. Taylor, 7 N. D. 538, 75 N. W. 766; Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279; Eaton v. Minnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 73 Pac. 754; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Koppikus v. State Capitol Comrs. 16 Cal. 248; People ex rel. McCullough v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 175; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 224, 24 S. W. 872; Fenton v. Blair, 11 Utah, 78, 39 Pac. 485; State ex rel. Barton v. Hopkins, 14 Wash. 59, 44 Pac. 134, 550; Hanley v. County Ct. 50 W. Va. 439, 40 S. E. 389; Sackett v. New Albany, 88 Ind. 473, 45 Am. Rep. 467; Denny v. Spokane, 25 C. C. A. 164, 48 U. S. App. 282, 79 Fed. 719; Stephens v. Spokane, 14 Wash. 298, 44 Pac. 541, 45 Pac. 31; McEwen v. Spokane, 16 Wash. 212, 47 Pac. 433; Winston 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

v. Spokane, 12 Wash. 524, 41 Pac. 888; Baker v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 576, 27 Pac. 462; Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, 24 L. ed. 659; Re State Warrants, 6 S. D. 518, 55 Am. St. Rep. 852, 62 N. W. 101; Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, §§ 2063, 2076, 2078; Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 492, 69 N. E. 970; Jacksonville R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 114 Ill. 562, 2 N. E. 478.

Mr. G. W. L. Smith also for appellees.

Denson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court of county commissioners of Limestone county, under the power and authority conferred upon them by § 133 of the Code of 1907, having first determined that it was necessary that a new courthouse for that county should be erected, on the 19th day of November, 1908, in the regular way, entered into a contract with the Falls City Construction Company, a corporation, of New Jersey, for the erection of the same. According to the resolution adopted by the court, the contract price agreed upon and fixed was not to exceed the principal sum of $59,000, and the interest thereon at the rate of 6½ per centum per annum, payable semiannually.

The court adopted the following, among other, resolutions: "Be it further resolved by the court that there shall be levied, and there is hereby levied, a special county courthouse tax of one fourth of 1 per centum on all taxable property of said county, upon the assessment last made for state taxes, for the years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, in payment of the said sum, not to exceed the principal sum of $59,000 and the interest thereon, as represented by the county courthouse warrants provided for in the contract made with said company herein set out, for the erection, completion, and furnishing of said building, and which tax levy and this resolution ordering the same shall constitute and is a continuing contract between said county and said company, their successors and assigns, and shall not be in any way limited or repealed so long as any of said county courthouse warrants (which may be agreed upon) and the interest thereupon shall remain outstanding."

The contract with the company is fully set out in the resolutions of the court, and adopted by the court. Article 19 of the contract, or so much of it as is necessary for present purposes, is in this language:

"It is further stipulated and agreed that the consideration herein set forth, to discharge the obligation to the contractor by said county, said court and said county hereby sells, assigns, transfers, sets over, and confirms to the said Falls City Construction Company, all of the special county courthouse tax levy and all of the proceeds derived from the levy and collected of the special courthouse tax and levy thereof of one fourth of 1 per centum on all the taxable property of said county for and during the years hereinafter mentioned, as provided by §§ 128 and 145, both inclusive, of the Code of 1907, and out of which tax levy said contractor or its assigns shall be and are entitled to receive the following proceeds, with interest from February 1, 1909, at the rate of  $6\frac{1}{4}$  per centum per annum, payable semiannually, that is to say, said contractor shall receive, to wit:

Out of said tax levy for the year 1908..$2,000
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1909..$6,500
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1910..$7,000
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1911..$7,500
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1912..$8,000
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1913..$8,500
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1914..$9,000
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1915..$9,500
 Out of said tax levy for the year 1916..$1,000

"The foregoing principal instalments, except the one for \$2,000, shall bear interest at the rate of  $6\frac{1}{4}$  per centum per annum from February 1, 1909, payable semiannually, until each of said instalments accrue, and provided further that said foregoing described interest, added to the foregoing principal instalments, create and make the regular total instalments of the amounts the contractor is entitled to receive from said tax fund, which are as follows," etc.

The itemized amounts are then set out, making: Total principal, $59,000; interest, $15,989; grand total, $74,989. The contract continues in this language: "And said county and this court agrees to levy said special courthouse building tax of one fourth of 1 per centum per annum during the years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, for the purpose of creating the proceeds and revenue above set forth, and further agrees to evidence said sum and instalments above set out by the issuance of valid and lawful warrants drawn on said fund for the principal and interest thereon, and said warrants shall be of the denomination of $500 each, and have coupon warrants annexed to them representing the interest. It is agreed that no debt is hereby created or incurred by said county, but instead thereof a transfer and assignment of the proceeds of said special tax levy to the amounts herein stated for the foregoing named years are made to said contractor as the consideration and payment for the erection, completion, and furnishing of said courthouse building."

A taxpayer filed the present bill, and by it seeks to have the assessment of the tax and the contract declared void, the judge of probate enjoined from issuing the warrants called for in the contract, and the parties restrained from tearing down the old courthouse. A temporary injunction was granted. The defendants attacked the equity of the bill by demurrer, and moved to dissolve the injunction. On the hearing the demurrer was sustained and the injunction dissolved. From the decree the complainant appealed, assigning the same for error.

The theory of the bill is that the contract creates a debt against the county, which, added to the debt of the county in existence at the time the contract was entered into, exceeds the debt limit prescribed by § 224 of the Constitution of 1901. That section, so far as the same is applicable here, is in this language: "No county shall become indebted in an amount including present indebtedness, greater than  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per centum of the assessed value of the property therein," etc. The averments of the bill show that the assessed value of the property in the county, for the year 1908, was \$4,228,319, and that the indebtedness of the county was \$135,000. Three and one-half per centum on the valuation would give \$147,991.16, and the difference between this amount and the indebtedness would be \$12,991.16. Thus, it is shown by the averments of the bill, that, if the amount the contractor is to receive for the courthouse should be determined to be a debt, the limit prescribed by the Constitution has been exceeded, and the contract, together with the levy of taxes to meet its requirement as to consideration, should be held void, unless the effect of § 215 of the Constitution of 1901, on account of the purposes for which the levy and contract were made, is to exempt them from the inhibition contained in § 224.

Section 224 is peculiar to the Constitution of 1901; that is to say, such a provision never existed in the organic law of the state prior to the adoption of that Constitution. Hence there is no decision by our own court for our guidance in the construction of such constitutional provision. Many of the states of the Union, however, have similar provisions in their organic law. Gray, in his work on Limitations of the Taxing Power and Public Indebtedness, writing in respect to such provisions, says: "In the decision of questions arising under these constitutional debt limits, considerations of policy have no place. While it is true that all questions of policy are for the legislature or the people, there are many questions of construction in which the courts allow policy to have some weight, at least when they feel so inclined. But these provisions limiting indebtedness are purely arbitrary, and when the people adopt them all questions of policy are deemed settled. They are to be construed neither liberally nor with excessive strictness, but solely in accordance with their plain meaning. If the people of a state have adopted a mistaken policy in their Constitution, the only remedy is an amendment of that instrument." [p. 1061.]. The intention or purpose in incorporating such a provision in the Constitution is obvious. It was to curb the improvident creation of debts by counties, and thus protect the taxpayers against excessive and unnecessary burdens. It may well be that another reason (one suggested by appellees' counsel) also influenced the framers of the Constitution, namely, that the credit of the counties might be strengthened, and the counties thereby possibly enabled to secure reductions in the rates of interest to be paid on their obligations; but, however this may have been, it is reasonable and proper, in considering the question in hand, that the first-mentioned purpose should be borne in mind.

Upon its face § 224 would seem to afford no room for construction. Its language is clear and explicit and self-construing. But it is thought that the question at issue becomes a complicated one when viewed in the light of § 215 of the Constitution, and it is therefore appropriate at this point to bring that section into view. It provides: "No county in this state shall be authorized to levy a greater rate of taxation in any one year on the value of the taxable property therein, than one half of 1 per centum; . . . provided further, that to pay any debt or liability now existing against any county, incurred for the erection, construction, or maintenance of the necessary public buildings or bridges, or that may hereafter be created for the erection of necessary public buildings, bridges, or roads, any county may levy and collect such special taxes, not to exceed one fourth of 1 per centum, as may have been or may hereafter be authorized by law, which taxes so levied and collected shall be applied exclusively to the purposes for which the same were so levied and collected." It is under this section that the levy of the taxes mentioned in the contract was and is contracted to be made, and the revenues to be derived from such levy are those which the resolution adopted by the court and the contract purport to sell and assign to the construction company, in payment of the courthouse, completed and furnished. Construing the two sections of the Constitution together, it is obvious that § 215 is without any field of operation in a county the indebtedness of which is up to the limitation fixed by § 224, or whose indebtedness, added to the debt contemplated or about to be contracted, will exceed that limitation; and it is only in those counties not so indebted that § 215 may be brought into play and applied. We think amplification of this point unnecessary, as both parties hereto seem to concede the correctness of the above construction of the two sections in question.

The vital question in the case then is: Would this contract create an indebtedness?

It is frankly admitted in brief of one of appellees' counsel that the contract here involved "is bottomed upon, and patterned after, the holdings of the supreme court of Illinois," as set forth in the case of Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626, and Law v. People, 87 Ill. 400. Further, that the endeavor of the respondents has been to meet the phases which might arise, should it be held that § 215 is not exempt from the limitation imposed by § 224. This is an important, though perhaps an unnecessary, admission; for few could read the contract without being impressed with the conviction that the parties thereto must have been sensible of the difficulties which the Constitution interposed in their way, and that the phraseology of the contract was ingeniously framed for the purpose of avoiding the restrictions imposed by the organic law; but, in considering the contract, we must not forget that we are dealing with substance, not with form. It is the thing done, or sought to be accomplished, which must determine the question of the power of the county to levy the tax and make the contract. This depends upon the true construction and effect of the whole contract in connection with the constitutional limitations, and not upon the form or mere phraseology of some of the parts of the contract.

Taking up the question then: Does this contract create a debt within the meaning of the Constitution? It is argued that, under the rulings made in the Illinois case, no debt was created, "in that, in the moment of its creation, it became satisfied by payment; and that therefore, though there may have been in one sense a debt created sufficient to authorize the levy of the special tax, yet that debt was immediately paid by the appropriation, in accordance with the Constitution and statutes of this state, of the proceeds of said tax to the liquidation of said debt." The statutes here referred to are embraced in article 3 of the Code of 1907, §§ 133 to 139 inclusive. These sections provide, among other things, in conformity to § 215 of the Constitution, for the levy of a special tax to pay for the erection of county buildings, and further provide that the taxes collected shall not be used for any other purpose. Adverting to the argument of counsel, based on the Illinois cases, in support of the theory that no debt was created in this case, we confess that the reasoning employed seems to us rather too subtle for practical purposes,—the construction of a written Constitution. As has been stated, the Constitution is not to have a narrow or technical construction, but must be understood and enforced according to the plain, common-sense meaning of its terms. So understood and interpreted, the obvious intent of § 224 is to restrain counties from obtaining money either upon the general credit of the county, or by pledge or transfer of its revenue or assets, thereby creating a debt and imposing additional burdens upon the citizens, which, whether directly or indirectly, involve increased taxation.

In regard to the Illinois cases, the Constitution of that state contained this provision: "No county, city, . . . or other municipal corporation, shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to an amount, including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding 5 per centum on the valuation of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the last assessment for state and county taxes, previous to the incurring of such indebtedness. Any county, city, . . . or other municipal corporation, incurring any indebtedness as aforesaid, shall, before or at the time of doing so, provide for the collection of a direct annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on said debt as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal thereof within twenty years from the time of contracting the same." [Art. 9, § 12.] There were set out certain sections of the city's charter, involved in the cases, but these are not necessary to be repeated. The city of Springfield, indebted up to the constitutional limitation, borrowed money in large sums, and for its repayment and payment of the interest thereon, at 10 per centum per annum, which was taken out in advance, issued warrants on its treasury; it being provided in the warrants or bonds that, if the same were not paid when due, they should bear interest until paid. The warrants were issued presumably when there were no funds in the treasury for their payment, and no tax had been levied to raise revenues for that purpose. The city was enjoined from levying taxes where-with to pay the warrants, and on appeal to the supreme court it there contended that "when liabilities are created, and appropriations are made, which are within the limits of the revenue accruing to meet them, they are not debts within the meaning of 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the Constitution; and that temporary loans are not, when within the limits of the revenue expected to be realized."

Answering the contention, the court said: "The first branch of this position has support in Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396, People ex rel. McCullough v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 175, Koppikus v. State Capitol Comrs. 16 Cal. 253, State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 455, State v. Medbery, 7 Ohio St. 522, and State ex rel. School Directors v. New Orleans, 23 La. Ann. 358. These cases maintain the doctrine that revenues may be appropriated in anticipation of their receipt, as effectually as when actually in the treasury; that the appropriation of moneys [which] when received meets the services as they are rendered,—thus discharging the liabilities as they arise, or rather anticipating and preventing their existence." After referring to the rule for construing the constitutional clause involved, and holding that the borrowed money constituted a debt notwithstanding warrants were issued to cover it, the court said: "If a contract or undertaking contemplates, in any contingency, a liability to pay, when the contingency occurs the liability is absolute, the debt exists, and it differs from a present unqualified promise to pay only in the manner by which the indebtedness was incurred. . . . In this view we are only prepared to yield our assent to the rule recognized by the authorities referred to, with these qualifications: First, the tax appropriated must at the time be actually levied; second, by the legal effect of the contract between the corporation and the individual, made at the time of the appropriation, the appropriation, and issuing and accepting of a warrant or order on the treasury for its payment, must operate to prevent any liability to accrue on the contract against the corporation. The principle, as we understand, is, there is, in such case, no debt, because one thing is simply given and accepted in exchange for another. When the appropriation is made, and the warrant or order on the treasury for its payment is issued and accepted, the transaction is closed on the part of the corporation—leaving no future obligation, either absolute or contingent, upon it, whereby its debt may be increased." "But," said the court, "until a tax is levied, there is nothing in existence which can be exchanged, and an obligation to levy a tax in the future, for the benefit of a particular individual, necessarily implies the existence of a present debt in favor of the individual against the corporation, which he is lawfully entitled to have paid by the levy. If the making of the appropriation, and issuing and accepting a warrant for its payment, does not have the effect of relieving the corporation of all liability, or, in other words, if it incurs any liability thereby, it must manifestly incur, either absolutely or contingently, a debt."

The other case from the Illinois court (Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385), cited and relied upon by appellees, merely reiterates and emphasizes the expression contained in the case above quoted from.

Assuming that the expressions or rulings found in those cases are exempt from the principle of obiter dicta, and without for the present turning to other authorities, let us for a moment examine by their light the resolutions and contract in judgment. The resolutions purport to levy a tax of one fourth of 1 per centum, for a series of nine years, to raise the money wherewith to pay the price agreed upon for the courthouse, not to exceed the principal sum of $59,000, with interest thereon at the rate of 6½ per centum, payable semiannually. The principal sum is divided into nine annual instalments. The resolutions also purport to sell, transfer, and assign to the construction company all of the special county courthouse tax levy and all the proceeds derived therefrom, for and during the years mentioned; out of which the contract stipulates the contractor is to receive the annual instalments of the principal and interest from February 1, 1909. Warrants were to be issued for the several instalments, in the denomination of $500, with interest coupons attached. The resolutions then purport to make the tax levy, together with the action of the court levying the same, a continuing contract between the county and the company, "their successors and assigns, and [to provide that same] shall not be in any way limited or repealed so long as any of said county warrants and the interest thereupon shall remain outstanding."

We do not think it can be said with any show of reason that the resolutions and contract in question square with the rulings of the Illinois court. In the first place, no warrants have been issued or accepted, either for principal or for interest; but granting, for the sake of the argument, issuance and acceptance of warrants, how, may we ask, can there be interest without a debt? "Interest" necessarily involves the idea of a debt, a continuing liability, as its foundation. It is defined by Webster to be: "Premium paid for the use of money, usually reckoned as a percentage; as, interest at 5 per cent per annum on $10,000." International Dict. So this view of the case repels the idea that the transaction would be a closed one, even if the warrants had been issued, delivered, and accepted. This position is reinforced by the stipulations 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) that the resolutions levying the tax shall not be limited or repealed "so long as any of said warrants and the interest thereupon shall remain outstanding." If the warrants were considered a full discharge of the obligation of the county, why should interest have been considered at all? Why should it have been stipulated for? Or if, according to the contention of the appellees, "in the moment the debt was created it became satisfied by payment, by the appropriation of the taxes," why should there have been a stipulation for interest running through a series of years? And why should the contract stipulate that the warrants shall be held in trust for the construction company, to be delivered in the future as the work contracted to be done shall progress?

Furthermore evincing that the contracting parties realized the probable invalidity of the tax levy made for a series of years subsequent to the year 1909, the contract stipulates that the county and court agree to levy "said special courthouse building tax of one fourth of 1 per cent per annum during the years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, for the purpose of creating the proceeds," etc. Thus it seems clear that the contract creates an obligation on the part of the county to make the levy in the future for the benefit of the company. In this respect it is obvious that, according to the decision in the case of Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626, the existence of a present debt is necessarily implied, in favor of the company and against the county. State ex rel. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 24 Mont. 521, 55 L.R.A. 337, 343, 81 Am. St. Rep. 453, 63 Pac. 99; Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co. 59 L.R.A. 604, 56 C. C. A. 219, 119 Fed. 315; Coulson v. Portland, Dead, 481, Fed. Cas. No. 3,275.

But it is urged that no debt is created because the stipulation in the contract is explicit to the effect that "no debt is hereby created or incurred by said county, but instead thereof a transfer and assignment of the proceeds of said special tax levy to the amounts herein stated for the foregoing-named years are made to said contractor as the consideration and payment for the erection, completion, and furnishing of said courthouse building." The case of Swanson v. Ottumwa, 118 Iowa, 161, 59 L.R.A. 620, 91 N. W. 1048, is cited and relied upon as supporting this contention; and it must be conceded that it does so. Not only is this true, but it is quite apparent, from a comparison of the resolutions and the contract there involved with those dealt with in this case, that the scheme here to be passed upon was extracted in toto from the Swanson Case. It therefore becomes necessary to consider that case at some length. The case was decided by the supreme court of Iowa, and the opinion, by Weaver, J., evinces industrious research; but, as was said by the annotator of the case as reported in 59 L.R.A.: The case "well illustrates the result when the effort on the part of the courts to encourage municipal improvement in the face of constitutional restrictions is carried to its logical conclusion. Stripped of subterfuges, that decision permits a municipality which is already indebted beyond the constitutional limit, to impose an additional indebtedness . . . upon its taxpayers, by making a distinction between the taxpayers in their organized capacity and the same persons as individuals." Furthermore, the same questions involved in the case decided by the Iowa supreme court were presented to and decided by the United States court of appeals, in Iowa, in the case of Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co. 59 L.R.A. 604, 56 C. C. A. 219, 119 Fed. 315, and were determined adversely to the rulings made by the state court, while counsel for appellees here insist that it was the duty of the Federal court to follow the decision of the state court. The opinion of the court of appeals, as we apprehend it, not only accentuates the fact that the court concurred in the state court's interpretation of the Constitution, but makes very clear the point that the difference between the two courts arose, not in the construction of the Constitution, but in the interpretation of the contract or transaction in issue.

But, however this may have been, we are not bound to follow either of those courts, and are at liberty to place upon our own Constitution that construction which to us may seem rational. We do not here recite the facts of those cases; but it will be readily seen, upon a cursory examination of those cases, that the plan there resorted to, to evade the constitutional limitation, has an exact counterpart in the instant case. The same contention was made in those cases as is here urged, to wit, that the transaction would not create a debt on the part of the city, because the municipality only anticipated for its use specific revenues provided to accrue in the future. It would extend this opinion to too great length to quote all of the opinion of the Federal court in criticism of the rulings made by the state court, but we will indulge a limited excerpt: "We have examined carefully the opinion in Swanson v. Ottumwa, and cases which are supposed to give support to its conclusions. It will not be profitable to review in detail the reasoning employed to reach the result arrived at. To our minds it is not persuasive, and we decline to be guided by it. Its citations exhibit the unceasing attempts in that state [Iowa] and some others to nullify and evade wholesome constitutional limitations upon the power of municipalities to create indebtedness, and thus place intolerable burdens on the taxpayers; and its reasoning but adopts the ingenious, but obviously untenable, arguments by which such attempts have ever been supported." The conclusion reached was that the proposed bonds, if issued, would create an indebtedness against the city, wholly in violation of the Constitution.

"To say that a sum of money due or owing by A to B is not a debt, because A has promised to appropriate, or has appropriated, a portion of his future income to its payment, is a proposition in legal metaphysics" that seems incomprehensible. It does seem plain that the fact that the commissioners' court provide for the levy and collection of taxes to pay the warrants and the interest coupons is a recognition of the fact that their issuance will create a debt against the county. It would be a useless task to attempt to reconcile the decisions of the different courts of the Union in respect to the question. They are out of harmony. But many of them have been read with care, and, bearing in mind the purpose which inspired the adoption of § 224 (heretofore adverted to), and remembering that "Constitutions are the result of popular will, and their words are to be understood ordinarily as used in the sense that such words convey to the popular mind (6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 924, 925), we are constrained to hold that there is nothing in either § 224 or § 215 which indicates that the term "debt" was there used otherwise than in its ordinary and popular sense. On the foregoing considerations, it seems to us that the contract would create a debt, notwithstanding the ingenious plan adopted to show otherwise.

If this is not a sound conclusion,—if the sum contracted to be paid for the courthouse, completed and furnished, is not a debt, because there is a levy of taxes running through a series of years, to be annually collected from all the taxable property in the county, "till the sum to be paid is paid therefrom," and because the contract provides nonliability, and that the warrants shall be paid only from such taxes so specially levied,—then it must be in the power of the court of county commissioners, by mere "jugglery with words," to evade the plain mandate of the Constitution. If that court, by the method adopted, can levy, for a series of nine years, a tax to raise money wherewith to pay for a courthouse, why could it not, at the same time and at the same session, similarly levy a tax to begin at the end of the nine years, and to run through a series of years, to raise money wherewith to pay for a poorhouse; and then levy a tax to begin at the expiration of the poorhouse tax series, and to run through still another series of years, say fifty years, to raise money for the construction of public roads? All of these improvements are provided for in § 215 of the organic law.

We cannot assent to the reasoning by which the conclusion is reached that the contract in question does not create a debt. "By means of such artificial reasoning and unlooked-for construction of popular and plain terms and phrases, Constitutions might be stripped of every prohibition upon the legislative power of taxation and creating indebtedness, which the wisdom or fears of the people might place on them." Our conclusion is that, whatever may be the decisions of the courts of other jurisdictions, the contract in question creates an indebtedness. Coulson v. Portland, Deady, 481, Fed. Cas. No. 3,275; Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co. 59 L.R.A. 604, 56 C. C. A. 219, 119 Fed. 315; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222, 24 S. W. 872; Prince v. Quincy, 128 Ill. 442, 21 N. E. 768; State ex rel. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 24 Mont. 521, 55 L.R.A. 336, 81 Am. St. Rep. 453, 63 Pac. 99; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 29 L. ed. 132, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476.

We are also of the opinion, and so hold, that the amount to be considered in determining whether the debt exceeds the limitation is the aggregate amount of the contract. Culbertson v. Fulton, 127 Ill. 30, 18 N. E. 781; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222, 24 S. W. 872; Salem Water Co. v. Salem, 5 Or. 30; Prince v. Quincy, 128 Ill. 443, 21 N. E. 768; Earles v. Wells, 94 Wis. 285, 59 Am. St. Rep. 886, 68 N. W. 964. Adding the $59,000 which the contract provides shall be paid for the courthouse, to the present indebtedness, carries the total indebtedness of the county greatly beyond the constitutional limitation, and, from the considerations which have been adverted to, it logically follows that the contract is obnoxious to the Constitution, and is void.

We have not overlooked the case of Tally v. Commissioners' Ct. — Ala. —, 39 So. 167; but even a cursory glance at the facts will disclose that that case did not involve the question of debt limitation, and it is therefore not here in point.

It follows that the decree of the Chancellor 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

lor must be reversed, and a decree will be here rendered overruling the demurrer and the motion to dissolve the injunction.

Dowdell, Ch. J., and Simpson and Mayfield, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied May 11, 1909.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

EX PARTE CITY OF NEWPORT, Appt.

(141 Ky. 329, 132 S. W. 580.)

Municipal corporation — debt limit — coextensive corporations.

In determining whether or not a municipal corporation has reached its constitutional debt limit, the indebtedness of an independent school district which is coincident with its territorial limits, and which has been created by the legislature a distinct municipality, with power to create indebtedness to a certain amount, is not to be considered.

(December 16, 1910.)

A PPEAL by the city from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Campbell County holding an ordinance providing for the issue and sale of bonds for street improvements valid. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. T. Baker for appellant.

Lassing, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By an ordinance duly and regularly passed by the general council, and approved by its mayor, the city of Newport provided for the issue and sale of $100,000 worth of its bonds for street improvement purposes. Prior to the passage of this ordinance, two thirds of the voters voting at an election held for that purpose, in compliance with § 157 of the Constitution, voted in favor of the issue of these bonds. Thereafter a question arose as to the right of the city to issue that amount of bonds, the claim being made that it would increase the city's indebtedness beyond the constitutional limit. Suit was accordingly brought to test the validity of the ordinance. The case was prepared and submitted to the circuit judge for judgment, and upon consideration he held the ordinance valid, and the city appeals.

The only question affecting the validity of this ordinance is whether a certain indebtedness of the board of education of the city of Newport is to be regarded and treated as an indebtedness of the city. If it is, then the ordinance does in fact provide for an indebtedness in excess of that which the Constitution authorizes; whereas, if the indebtedness of the board of education is not to be considered and treated as a part of the indebtedness of the city, then the indebtedness provided for is within the constitutional limitation, and the ordinance is valid. .

Note. — See note, post, 1058.

Cities of the second class are not permitted to incur an indebtedness, including existing indebtedness, exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent of the assessment next before the last assessment previous to incurring the indebtedness. It is shown that the assessment for the city for the year 1909 was $13,209,357. When the ordinance was passed, the limit of indebtedness which the city could incur, therefore, was $1,320,935.70. At that date the indebtedness of the city, after deducting the amounts in the sinking and sewer funds, is shown to have been $1,160,977.54. At that time the indebtedness of the board of education was $95,000. If the indebtedness of the board of education is to be treated as an indebtedness of the city, the city would not be authorized to incur an additional indebtedness in excess of $64,958.16, for this amount would bring its total indebtedness up to 10 per cent of the assessment of the previous year.

In Brown v. Board of Education, 108 Ky. 783, 57 S. W. 612, this court held that under § 157 of the Constitution, the board of education had not authority to become indebted beyond the income for any one year without the consent of two thirds of the legal voters of the city. And it is therefore argued that as the board of education could not, in any one year, incur an indebtedness beyond a certain amount, except by a vote of the people interested, the indebtedness of the board must be treated as part of the indebtedness of the city. This is not a necessary inference. The question here involved was not raised in that case; nor has it been passed upon by this court. But in Gray on Limitations of Taxing Power & Public Indebtedness, § 2148, the rule, supported by the weight of authority in other states, is said to be that, "where two or more municipal corporations or political bodies are wholly or partly coincident in territory, they are nevertheless regarded as separate bodies for the purposes of constitutional debt limitations, unless the contrary is expressed in the Constitution. In reckoning the indebtedness of a county, the indebtedness of a city within its borders is not to be considered; in reckoning the indebtedness of a city, the debt of an independent school district wholly or partly in the city limits is not to be considered; and vice versa."

In Campbell v. Indianapolis, 155 Ind. 186, 57 N. E. 920, the supreme court had under consideration the question as to whether or not the indebtedness of the school board of the city of Indianapolis should be taken into account as a part of the city's indebtedness in determining whether or not the constitutional debt limit of the city had been reached. It was held that the debts of the civil city of Indianapolis and those of its school corporation are not to be aggregated to determine the debt limit to which either is entitled under the Constitution, but that the right or power of each of these corporations to contract an indebtedness not in excess of the limit fixed by the Constitution is affected only by its own existing debts. A similar conclusion was reached by the supreme court of Illinois in Wilson v. Sanitary Dist. 133 Ill. 443, 27 N. E. 203. To the same effect are State ex rel. Marinette, T. & W. R. Co. v. Tomahawk, 96 Wis. 73, 71 N. W. 86; Board of Education v. National L. Ins. Co. 36 C. C. A. 278, 94 Fed. 324; Todd v. Laurens, 48 S. C. 395, 26 S. E. 682.

While it is true that the indebtedness of the board of education must be finally met by a tax levied upon all of the property in the city, it is equally true that its bonded indebtedness is secured by a lien upon the school property. The legislature has seen fit to make the board of education in cities of the second class an independent and distinct municipal corporation. Board of Education v. Townsend, 140 Ky. 248, 130 S. W. 1105; Brown v. Board of Education, supra. An examination of the acts creating said boards discloses the fact that they are given more independent powers than have the boards of education in cities of any other class. They have ample authority to do everything that is necessary to control and maintain the schools in said cities,—full power to create indebtedness and issue bonds within certain restrictions and limitations, and to pledge any property that may be acquired for school purposes, together with its equipment, to secure said indebtedness. In these matters they have exclusive control, free from any supervision or direction on the part of the general council. There is no constitutional restriction upon the legislature denying it the right to create school boards, giving to them these general powers. On the contrary, § 183 of the Constitution specially directs the legislature to provide by proper legislation for an efficient system of common schools. Under this authority the legislature has created the school board as an independent and distinct mu-municipal corporation, exercising its rights and powers throughout the city limits.

The opinion in the case of Richmond v. Powell, 101 Ky. 7, 27 S. W. 1, relied upon as an authority by the city, is not in point, for the reason that Richmond is a city of the fourth class, and the power and authority of school boards in cities of the fourth class is entirely unlike that which may be exercised by school boards in cities of the second class; and, further, the bonds referred to in that case were issued by the city itself, and, of course, there could be no question but that the city would be liable for its bond issue, no matter for what purpose the indebtedness may have been created. The bonds evidencing the indebtedness of the school board in this case were issued, not by the city, but by the school board. Hence the case of Richmond v. Powell throws no light upon the question involved in this case.

In some jurisdictions where this question has arisen, school boards are given the right to make the tax levies for school purposes, while in this state, in cities of the second class, the board does not have such power. But it is given the right to determine the needs of the school for the current year, and to require the council to make a levy to meet these demands. No substantial distinction can be drawn between an act which gives to the board the right to levy the tax and an act which gives it the right to require it to be done. The result is the same. In creating the school board an independent corporation, the legislature invested it with certain rights and powers, among them being the power to determine the amount of money necessary to meet the school needs during any one year, and, under certain contingencies and conditions, to borrow money and pledge the school property to secure it. But this power is not unlimited, for we find that such board may not incur an indebtedness in excess of 2 per cent of the taxable property of the district. If this indebtedness, so incurred, were to be treated as a part of the indebtedness of the city, why the necessity for placing any limitation as to amount? The provision of the Constitution quoted fixes the limit beyond which the city may go, and if the indebtedness of the school board is to be treated as a part of the indebtedness of the city, and the city should have already reached its constitutional limit, then the power granted to the school board authorizing it to incur an indebtedness of 2 per cent would be a nullity. The legislature, instead of granting it this right to incur an indebtedness of 2 per cent, should have granted this right provided such indebtedness, when so incurred, would not increase 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the indebtedness of the city beyond its constitutional limit. Evidently the legislature did not place this construction upon § 158 of the Constitution, but, in making provision to meet the requirements of § 183 of the Constitution, it authorized the school boards of cities of the second class to incur an indebtedness of not exceeding 2 per cent of the taxable property of the district, if the needs of the school required, without regard to the city's financial condition. This was the plain legislative intent, and, there being no constitutional provision denying to the legislature this right, the act should be upheld.

The Chancellor having reached this conclusion, his judgment is affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

CITY OF LOGANSFORT et al., Appts,
v.
MICHAEL A. JORDAN.

(171 Ind. 121, 85 N. E. 959.)

Municipal corporation — debt limit — necessary improvements.

1. That a sewer is necessary to receive and dispose of the storm water in a municipality, and thereby prevent actions against it for damages, does not justify its incurring indebtedness for the sewer in violation of the constitutional limitation of its indebtedness.

Same — when indebtedness arises.

2. An indebtedness of a municipality for public improvements arises, for the purpose of determining whether or not it is exceeding its constitutional debt limit, when the work is completed and accepted, and it is not necessary first to assess the special benefits and ascertain the amount of the cost which the municipality is required to pay.

Injunction — municipal indebtedness — debt limit.

3. If, at the time a public improvement is completed and accepted by a municipal corporation, its constitutional debt limit has been exceeded, the city may, at the suit of taxpayers, be enjoined from taking any steps to raise money by levying a tax against the taxpayers of the city to pay for the improvement.

Municipal corporation — debt limit — avoiding — annual instalments.

4. A municipal corporation cannot avoid a constitutional limitation upon the amount of its indebtedness, by attempting to pay for a public improvement completed and accepted at a time when such limit has been exceeded, by dividing the cost into instalments and levying one each year until the entire amount is paid.

Note. — See note, post, 1058.

Appeal — nonprejudicial error.

5. A judgment which is right on the law and facts will not be reversed for intervening errors of procedure.

(October 29, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Cass County enjoining the assessment and collection of taxes for certain improvements in alleged violation of a constitutional debt limit. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. W. Funk, M. Winfield, Lairy & Mahoney, D. B. McConnell, G. C. Taber, McConnell, Jenkins, & Stuart, and Myers & Yarlott for appellants.

Mr. George W. Walters, B. F. Long, W. H. H. Miller, C. S. Shirley, and S. D. Miller for appellee.

Jordan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted on October 1, 1906, by appellee, a resident taxpayer of the city of Logansport, to enjoin that city from incurring and paying any indebtedness in its corporate entity, in violation of the provisions of article 13 of the state Constitution, which provides: "No political or municipal corporation in this state shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to any amount in the aggregate exceeding 2 per centum on the value of taxable property within such corporation, to be ascertained by the last assessment for state and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount, given by such corporations, shall be void: Provided," etc. Members of the city's common council and others of its officials, together with certain other persons, were made codefendants. The indebtedness in controversy, as claimed, arises out of the construction of a certain sewer by the city of Logansport. On a trial before the court on the issues as joined, there was a finding in favor of plaintiff, and, over the separate motions for a new trial by the several defendants, the court entered its decree perpetually enjoining the city of Logansport "from making any appropriation of money from the treasury of said city for the payment of any part of the cost of constructing the Herring system of sewerage on the West Side of said city of Logansport, constructed by the defendant Uhl under contract with said city." The decree further provided that the "defendants are each and all perpetually restrained, enjoined, and prohibited from levying any tax upon the property in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

said city, to be collected or used for the purpose of paying any part of said cost of such sewerage system, and from in any manner providing for the payment of the cost of said system in said city," etc. From this decree, the city and the other defendants prosecute this appeal, and have jointly and severally assigned errors.

A condensed statement of the facts appears to be as follows: For many years the city of Logansport had experienced trouble in taking care of the storm water from its streets and alleys in that part of the city known as the "West Side." At various points it overflowed private property after every heavy rain, and did much damage. There was no sewerage system in this part of the city. This condition of affairs apparently was controlling in causing the city council, on March 1, 1905, to pass a declaratory resolution for the construction of a sewerage system to drain said part of the city. On September 5, 1903, an owner of property on the West Side filed suit against the city for damages resulting from the discharge of storm water from the streets and alleys upon his property, and for an injunction against the further continuance thereof. Trial in the case was had and a special finding of facts was made, with conclusions of law thereon, and filed by the court on March 8, 1905. This was eight days after the declaratory resolution ordering the construction of the sewerage system was passed by the city council. On March 9, 1905, the court rendered its decree, granting plaintiff $100 damages, and perpetually enjoining the city from permitting the water from its streets and alleys to accumulate and overflow on plaintiff's property, and mandating the city to remedy the situation complained of by making alterations and improvements in certain streets and gutters. While this case was pending, but before any finding had been made, the city council passed a resolution, as hereinbefore stated, declaring the existence of a necessity for the construction of a sewerage system on the West Side of the city, and providing for the construction of said system, and adopting detailed plans and specifications therefor, which action was taken, and the sewer ordered constructed under the provisions of the act of the general assembly of the state of Indiana approved March 11, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 401, chap. 179). Bids were advertised for and received April 5, 1905, and were opened on April 7, 1905, and on April 11th the contract was let to appellant Dennis Uhl, and a contract entered into between him and the city.

The sewerage system, as ordered, appears to have been intended not only for the benefit of property owners, but also for the general benefit of the city of Logansport, by furnishing an outlet for the storm water from the streets and alleys of the city; and because of this fact said sewer was constructed much larger than it would have been if the system had been only for sanitary purposes and for the benefit of private property. The work of constructing the sewer under the contract was done under the supervision of the board of public works of the city, and was completed on or before February 19, 1906, and was found to cost under the contract the sum of \$173,574.39; and on this latter date was accepted by the city as completed. Soon thereafter the common council referred the matter of making assessments for the payment of the cost of the sewer to the board of public works, under the provisions of the act of March 11, 1901, and on June 16, 1906, this board filed its report with the clerk of the city showing all its proceedings and setting out the assessments it had made, which showed that the aggregate assessments against private property, representing the total special benefits, was \$121,195.96, and the balance of \$52,378.43 was assessed against the city of Logansport. This report was received by the council on July 3, 1906. On August 1, 1906, the common council, by resolution duly adopted, and after a hearing extended to property owners, modified the assessments made and reported by the board of public works, by reducing all assessments against private property  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, and added the reduction to the amount assessed against the city, and confirmed the assessments as so modified. By this resolution the total special assessments on private property aggregated \$106,083.30, and the balance of \$67,491.09 was assessed and charged against the city as its portion of the benefits derived from the sewer. By this resolution the council further provided that this \$67,491.09 should be paid in ten equal annual instalments, and that a special tax levy should be made each year for that purpose. Soon after this assessment was made against the city, a property owner and taxpayer of the city filed suit against the appellants, praying that the city be enjoined from paying or providing for the payment of any part of the assessment against the city, on the ground that the city was already indebted far beyond 2 per cent of its taxable property, and had no cash on hand with which to pay any part of the assessment. Hearing was had before the court, and a temporary injunction granted as prayed. Soon after this, the defendants in the latter suit moved that the court modify this injunction by confining it strictly to the assessments made by the city council on August 1, 1906. In September, 1906, for the purpose of securing a new assessment, contractor Uhl, one of the appellants in this case, as relator, filed an action in the Cass circuit court against the city of Logansport and its board of public works, praying that they be mandated to make a new assessment for the payment of the contract price of said sewerage system, in accordance with the provisions of "An Act Concerning Municipal Corporations," approved March 6, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 219, chap. 129), it being the theory of the plaintiff that the former assessments had been made under a wrong statute. The result of this action was that a peremptory writ of mandate was issued by the court, directing the board of public works to proceed at once to make a new assessment under the act of 1905. In pursuance of this mandate of the court, the city's board of public works immediately convened, and by resolution voted to begin at once the work of making new assessments, and at the time of the commencement of the suit at bar it was engaged in making such assessment. On October 1, 1906, before the commencement of this suit, the board of public works had proceeded so far in making these assessments that it had determined approximately what the assessment against the city would be. On that day the board addressed an official communication to the city comptroller, announcing therein that the benefits accruing to the city from the sewerage system in question were "largely in excess of \$15,000," and asking for an appropriation "for the use of our department in that amount to pay the same." In pursuance of this communication and request, the comptroller, with the assistance of the city's attorney, proceeded to prepare his recommendation to the mayor, therein advising the appropriation of \$15,000 for the payment of part of the city's benefits derived from the sewer, and the making of a special levy of 17 cents on each \$100 by which to raise the amount. These steps appear to have been taken on the evening of October 1, 1906, at which time members of the common council and the mayor of the city were waiting in the office of the city attorney to have prepared the proper ordinances making the appropriation and tax levy suggested. The attorneys for appellant Uhl were in consultation with the board of public works, members of the common council, and city officials.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

There is evidence to show that it was the intention of the proper city authorities to make the suggested appropriation and tax levy; but, while the city attorney was engaged in preparing the recommendation of the comptroller to the mayor, and before he had time to prepare the appropriation or tax levy ordinances, the suit in bar was commenced, and a temporary restraining order served on appellants, preventing further action. It is shown that the city of Logansport, at the time the proceedings for the construction of the sewer in question were instituted by the common council, and at the time said sewer was completed and accepted, and also at the time this suit was commenced, was already indebted over the 2 per cent limit, as fixed by article 13 of our Constitution, and at the time this suit was commenced, there was no cash on hand to be devoted to sewer purposes, and all money that would be received by the city from taxes or other sources for the year 1905 and preceding years, which was collectable in 1906, had already been appropriated for other necessary purposes. The tax levy for 1906 and all appropriations for the year 1907 had been made a week or two before this suit was instituted, but no provision had been made for money with which to pay any part of the cost of the sewerage system in controversy. It appears that the matter in respect to the sewer had been before the common council and the city officials continuously since March 1, 1905, with the full knowledge that a large portion of the cost of the sewer would have to be paid by the city, but the city made no provision for meeting this obligation. This being true, the city was, by the provisions of said article, prohibited from incurring any new or additional indebtedness, unless such indebtedness could be paid out of the current revenues of the city not devoted to other purposes. It will be observed that the language of the Constitution is positive and imperative. It declares that "no political or municipal corporation in this state shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose." (Our italics.) It is therefore wholly immaterial for what purpose the indebtedness in excess of the constitutional limit is incurred. It falls within the prohibition if the amount thereof exceeds the current revenues of the municipality. Valparaiso v. Gardner (1884), 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. (1896), 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Perry County v. Gardner (1900), 155 Ind. 165, 57 N. E. 908; Cason v. Lebanon (1899), 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768; Voss v. Waterloo Water Co. (1904), 163 Ind. 69, 66 L.R.A. 95, 106 Am. St. Rep. 201, 71 N. E. 208, 2 Ann. Cas. 978; French v. Burlington (1876), 42 Iowa, 616. This holding is not to be understood as contravening the decision of this court in Logansport v. Dyke- man (1888), 116 Ind. 15, 17 N. E. 587, wherein it is held that a city indebted beyond the constitutional limit is not prohibited from contracting with an attorney or agent for his services to contest the validity of the city's indebtedness, or to secure a reduction thereof. Such indebtedness is held not to come within the scope of the constitutional provision. In this case, so far as the constitutional inhibition is concerned, it makes no difference, nor does it afford the city of Logansport or its authorities justification by reason of the fact, that the construction of the sewer in question was necessary in order to dispose of the storm water, and thereby prevent suits against the city for damages. The prohibition of the Constitution operates upon the indebtedness coming within it, without regard to the necessity thereof, and without regard to its form or the manner or method by which it is evidenced. Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768; Culbertson v. Fulton (1888), 127 Ill. 30, 18 N. E. 781.

Having said this much as preliminary, and in answer to some of the contentions of appellants, we shall consider what the parties herein regard as the pivotal questions in the case. There appears to be a wide difference between counsel for the respective parties in respect to the time at which the indebtedness incurred by the city for its portion of the cost of the construction of the sewer arises. The contention of appellants' counsel is that no indebtedness could arise or be created against the city of Logansport until the final estimate of the benefits resulting to the city by reason of the sewer was ascertained, and an assessment therefor levied against the city. It is therefore argued that the fact that no assessment had been made against the city when this suit was instituted rendered the suit premature, and for this reason alone the relief demanded should have been denied by the lower court and the proceedings dismissed. The contention of appellee's counsel is that the indebtedness of the city for its share of the cost of the sewer was incurred at the time the work of constructing the sewer was completed by the contractor, and the sewer accepted by the city. The theory adopted by the trial court apparently was that the indebtedness against the city for its portion of the cost of the sewer arose at the time the work was completed, and was accepted by the city, and, as at that time the city was already indebted beyond the constitutional limit, and there being no provision for the payment of any part of the indebtedness, the latter, under the provisions of the Constitution, was void in its entirety, and the injunction would lie. Appellants' counsel concede that this would be the result if the theory advanced by the trial court is correct, but they insist that, under the facts in the case and the law relative thereto, this theory is not correct, and cannot be sustained. They assert that the court adopted this theory in the very teeth of the holdings in the appeals of Quill v. Indianapolis (1890), 124 Ind. 298, 7 L.R.A. 681, 23 N. E. 788; Voss v. Waterloo Water Co. 163 Ind. 69, 66 L.R.A. 95, 106 Am. St. Rep. 201, 71 N. E. 208, 2 Ann. Cas. 978; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768. These cases do not sustain this latter assertion. If, under the facts in this case, it can be held that the obligation of the city for its share of the cost of the sewer, which may be assessed against it at the time the final estimate is made, was created at the time the work was completed by the contractor, and accepted by the city, then it is settled that the city has no legal authority to pay such assessment. Cason v. Lebanon, supra, was a suit to enjoin the city of Lebanon from letting a contract for improving a street in that city. Among the grounds upon which it was sought to base the right to injunctive relief was that the city would incur an indebtedness on account of street and alley crossings to the amount of $1,500, which indebtedness, as charged in the complaint, would be in violation of the provisions of article 13 of the state Constitution. This court, in considering the constitutional question there involved, said: "If the city does not have the money with which to pay its share of the cost of said improvement when the same is completed and accepted, as well as its ordinary current expenses that came into existence at or before the time of said acceptance, it has no right or authority to pay the same at any time thereafter, and may be enjoined from so doing."

We are constrained to differ with appellants' learned counsel that in no sense could any indebtedness exist against the city for its share of the cost of the construction of the sewerage system until the final assessment of special benefits arising therefrom was made by the board of public works, and the amount determined which the city would be required to pay. Section 3544, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1905, Acts 1905, p. 219, § 120, pertaining to towns and cities, provides: "In making assessments against each lot or parcel of land for the construction of any sewer, as provided for in this 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

act, said board of public works shall, as soon as any contract for the construction of any such sewer has been completed, make out an assessment roll with the names of the property owners and descriptions of the property primarily assessed for such sewer or drain, as hereinbefore provided. . . . The board shall also have the power to determine what part, if any, of the benefits resulting from such improvement, accrue to said city, and any amount so found shall be assessed against such city on said roll, and paid out of funds appropriated to the use of said board for such purpose by the common council: Provided, that no more than $500 shall be paid out of the city funds for any one improvement, unless pursuant to an ordinance specially appropriating the same for such specific improvement." While it is true that there is no positive declaration in the statute that any indebtedness shall accrue in favor of the contractor against either the benefited property owners or the city for the cost of making the improvement, nevertheless it will be noted that § 3544, supra, requires the board of public works, "as soon as any contract for the construction of any such sewer has been completed," to make out an assessment roll, etc.; or, in other words, to take the necessary steps, and determine, primarily at least, the special benefits accruing to the several lots and parcels of land. The provisions of this section also empower and require the board of public works to determine what portion, if any, of the benefits resulting from the improvement, shall be apportioned on the assessment roll to the city, such assessment roll, when completed, to be delivered to the department of finance. When the contractor, in such cases, has fully completed his work according to the contract, then the duty, under the law, devolves upon the city, through its proper officials, to receive and accept it. The contract price for the work, when so completed, certainly had been earned by the contractor, and when the city accepts the work as completed, it is manifest that at such time an indebtedness comes into existence against the city in its corporate entity, for whatever benefits it derives therefrom. The power to determine the amount of money which the city shall pay as the equivalent of the benefits derived by it, by reason of the improvement, is by law lodged in the board of public works. The mere determination of such amount by the board certainly cannot be said to create the indebtedness against the city for its share of the work.

It is not material when the city's share of the indebtedness which arises out of the construction of the sewer becomes due and payable to the contractor. The real question is, at what time did the debt come into existence? for, as said by this court in Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588: "The rule is that the cash must be in the treasury to pay the same when the debt comes into existence, not when it becomes due." The maturity of the debt is not controlling. In Springfield v. Edwards (1877), 84 Ill. 626, the court said: "A debt payable in the future is obviously no less a debt than if payable presently, and a debt payable upon a contingency, upon the happening of some event, such as the rendering of service or the delivery of property, etc., is some kind of a debt, and therefore within the prohibition." Of course, no indebtedness can be said to arise against the city in advance of anything being supplied to it; but let us suppose, by way of illustration, that a city should purchase, on a deferred payment, horses necessary for its use, could it in reason be asserted that an indebtedness would not be created against the city for the amount of the purchase price of the horses at the time they were furnished to and accepted by the city under the purchase contract? With what plausibility then can it be argued that when the contractor in this case furnished to the city the sewer completed according to the contract, and it was accepted by the city, an indebtedness was not created against the city for whatever benefits it derived by reason of the construction of such sewer? Again, suppose that A should furnish to B, for his use certain property, under a mutual agreement that the amount of its value to be paid by B should thereafter be determined by certain designated persons. Under such circumstances certainly an indebtedness would be created against B in favor of A at the time the property was accepted by B, for the amount of its value as subsequently determined by the persons designated for that purpose. This we think fairly illustrates the view that the indebtedness against the city in this case, was created at the time the sewer was completed, received, and accepted by the city. We are confirmed in this view of the question, and in so holding we are supported, by the following authorities: Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768; Culbertson v. Fulton, 127 Ill. 30, 18 N. E. 781; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; French v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 616; Buck v. Eureka (1899), 124 Cal. 61, 56 Pac. 612. In Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. supra, the court said: 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"It is clear that the indebtedness came into existence December 18th, when the work was completed and accepted, if not before. There was not sufficient cash in the city treasury to pay such indebtedness at that time, and the constitutional provision was violated." In Buck v. Eureka, 124 Cal. 61, 56 Pac. 612, which was an action to recover for the value of the services of an attorney at law, it was said in the syllabus: "The implied liability was incurred when, from time to time, the services were fully rendered, and the city, with knowledge, accepted the benefit of them." At the time the sewer was completed and accepted by the city, at which time, as we hold, the indebtedness came into existence, it was already indebted beyond the constitutional limit, and there was no money in its treasury available to pay any part thereof. Certainly, any attempt on the part of the city officials to raise money by levying a tax against the property of appellee and other taxpayers of the city, to pay the prohibited indebtedness, either in whole or in part, would be without the warrant of law, and could be enjoined. Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768.

The officials of the city apparently entertained the view that the total assessment against the city could be met by it in annual instalments, and thereby an indebtedness could be avoided by the city's levying a tax to pay each of such annual instalments. The law, however, affords no warrant for this view of the question. The sewer was not contracted for upon any instalment plan. Necessarily, therefore, whatever part of its cost which was chargeable to the city would have to be assessed against it as an entirety and so paid. However, were such view correct, the unfortunate financial condition of the city left it without any money to apply to the payment, in whole or in part, of even the first instalment of $15,000, for which, as it appears, the board of public works requested an appropriation. It was conceded at the trial that the city would have no money during the year 1906 to apply upon the assessment, or on any instalment thereof, and that the only source from which it expected to secure funds to apply to the payment of this instalment was the proposed levy of 17 cents, which was about to be made on October 1, 1906. This levy would have realized for the city about $15,000 for the year 1907.

Certain alleged intervening errors are presented and urged by appellants for reversal; but, as the judgment of the lower court, under the facts established and the law applicable thereto, is clearly right, it must be affirmed without regard to any under the provisions of the Constitution, was void in its entirety, and the injunction would lie. Appellants' counsel concede that this would be the result if the theory advanced by the trial court is correct, but they insist that, under the facts in the case and the law relative thereto, this theory is not correct, and cannot be sustained. They assert that the court adopted this theory in the very teeth of the holdings in the appeals of Quill v. Indianapolis (1890), 124 Ind. 298, 7 L.R.A. 681, 23 N. E. 788; Voss v. Waterloo Water Co. 163 Ind. 69, 66 L.R.A. 95, 106 Am. St. Rep. 201, 71 N. E. 208, 2 Ann. Cas. 978; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768. These cases do not sustain this latter assertion. If, under the facts in this case, it can be held that the obligation of the city for its share of the cost of the sewer, which may be assessed against it at the time the final estimate is made, was created at the time the work was completed by the contractor, and accepted by the city, then it is settled that the city has no legal authority to pay such assessment. Cason v. Lebanon, supra, was a suit to enjoin the city of Lebanon from letting a contract for improving a street in that city. Among the grounds upon which it was sought to base the right to injunctive relief was that the city would incur an indebtedness on account of street and alley crossings to the amount of $1,500, which indebtedness, as charged in the complaint, would be in violation of the provisions of article 13 of the state Constitution. This court, in considering the constitutional question there involved, said: "If the city does not have the money with which to pay its share of the cost of said improvement when the same is completed and accepted, as well as its ordinary current expenses that came into existence at or before the time of said acceptance, it has no right or authority to pay the same at any time thereafter, and may be enjoined from so doing."

We are constrained to differ with appellants' learned counsel that in no sense could any indebtedness exist against the city for its share of the cost of the construction of the sewerage system until the final assessment of special benefits arising therefrom was made by the board of public works, and the amount determined which the city would be required to pay. Section 3544, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1905, Acts 1905, p. 219, § 120, pertaining to towns and cities, provides: "In making assessments against each lot or parcel of land for the construction of any sewer, as provided for in this act, said board of public works shall, as soon as any contract for the construction of any such sewer has been completed, make out an assessment roll with the names of the property owners and descriptions of the property primarily assessed for such sewer or drain, as hereinbefore provided. . . . The board shall also have the power to determine what part, if any, of the benefits resulting from such improvement, accrue to said city, and any amount so found shall be assessed against such city on said roll, and paid out of funds appropriated to the use of said board for such purpose by the common council: Provided, that no more than $500 shall be paid out of the city funds for any one improvement, unless pursuant to an ordinance specially appropriating the same for such specific improvement." While it is true that there is no positive declaration in the statute that any indebtedness shall accrue in favor of the contractor or against either the benefited property owners or the city for the cost of making the improvement, nevertheless it will be noted that § 3544, supra, requires the board of public works, "as soon as any contract for the construction of any such sewer has been completed," to make out an assessment roll, etc.; or, in other words, to take the necessary steps, and determine, primarily at least, the special benefits accruing to the several lots and parcels of land. The provisions of this section also empower and require the board of public works to determine what portion, if any, of the benefits resulting from the improvement, shall be apportioned on the assessment roll to the city, such assessment roll, when completed, to be delivered to the department of finance. When the contractor, in such cases, has fully completed his work according to the contract, then the duty, under the law, devolves upon the city, through its proper officials, to receive and accept it. The contract price for the work, when so completed, certainly had been earned by the contractor, and when the city accepts the work as completed, it is manifest that at such time an indebtedness comes into existence against the city in its corporate entity, for whatever benefits it derives therefrom. The power to determine the amount of money which the city shall pay as the equivalent of the benefits derived by it, by reason of the improvement, is by law lodged in the board of public works. The mere determination of such amount by the board certainly cannot be said to create the indebtedness against the city for its share of the work.

It is not material when the city's share of the indebtedness which arises out of the construction of the sewer becomes due and payable to the contractor. The real question is, at what time did the debt come into existence? for, as said by this court in Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588: "The rule is that the cash must be in the treasury to pay the same when the debt comes into existence, not when it becomes due." The maturity of the debt is not controlling. In Springfield v. Edwards (1877), 84 Ill. 626, the court said: "A debt payable in the future is obviously no less a debt than if payable presently; and a debt payable upon a contingency, upon the happening of some event, such as the rendering of service or the delivery of property, etc., is some kind of a debt, and therefore within the prohibition." Of course, no indebtedness can be said to arise against the city in advance of anything being supplied to it; but let us suppose, by way of illustration, that a city should purchase, on a deferred payment, horses necessary for its use, could it in reason be asserted that an indebtedness would not be created against the city for the amount of the purchase price of the horses at the time they were furnished to and accepted by the city under the purchase contract? With what plausibility then can it be argued that when the contractor in this case furnished to the city the sewer completed according to the contract, and it was accepted by the city, an indebtedness was not created against the city for whatever benefits it derived by reason of the construction of such sewer? Again, suppose that A should furnish to B, for his use certain property, under a mutual agreement that the amount of its value to be paid by B should thereafter be determined by certain designated persons. Under such circumstances certainly an indebtedness would be created against B in favor of A at the time the property was accepted by B, for the amount of its value as subsequently determined by the persons designated for that purpose. This we think fairly illustrates the view that the indebtedness against the city in this case, was created at the time the sewer was completed, received, and accepted by the city. We are confirmed in this view of the question, and in so holding we are supported, by the following authorities: Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768; Culbertson v. Fulton, 127 Ill. 30, 18 N. E. 781; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; French v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 616; Buck v. Eureka (1899), 124 Cal. 61, 56 Pac. 612. In Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. supra, the court said: 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

"It is clear that the indebtedness came into existence December 18th, when the work was completed and accepted, if not before. There was not sufficient cash in the city treasury to pay such indebtedness at that time, and the constitutional provision was violated." In Buck v. Eureka, 124 Cal. 61, 56 Pac. 612, which was an action to recover for the value of the services of an attorney at law, it was said in the syllabus: "The implied liability was incurred when, from time to time, the services were fully rendered, and the city, with knowledge, accepted the benefit of them." At the time the sewer was completed and accepted by the city, at which time, as we hold, the indebtedness came into existence, it was already indebted beyond the constitutional limit, and there was no money in its treasury available to pay any part thereof. Certainly, any attempt on the part of the city officials to raise money by levying a tax against the property of appellee and other taxpayers of the city, to pay the prohibited indebtedness, either in whole or in part, would be without the warrant of law, and could be enjoined. Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768.

The officials of the city apparently entertained the view that the total assessment against the city could be met by it in annual instalments, and thereby an indebtedness could be avoided by the city's levying a tax to pay each of such annual instalments. The law, however, affords no warrant for this view of the question. The sewer was not contracted for upon any instalment plan. Necessarily, therefore, whatever part of its cost which was chargeable to the city would have to be assessed against it as an entirety and so paid. However, were such view correct, the unfortunate financial condition of the city left it without any money to apply to the payment, in whole or in part, of even the first instalment of $15,000, for which, as it appears, the board of public works requested an appropriation. It was conceded at the trial that the city would have no money during the year 1906 to apply upon the assessment, or on any instalment thereof, and that the only source from which it expected to secure funds to apply to the payment of this instalment was the proposed levy of 17 cents, which was about to be made on October 1, 1906. This levy would have realized for the city about $15,000 for the year 1907.

Certain alleged intervening errors are presented and urged by appellants for reversal; but, as the judgment of the lower court, under the facts established and the law applicable thereto, is clearly right, it must be affirmed without regard to any intermediate errors, as such errors under the circumstances can exert no influence over the merits of the case. Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Pitcher (1903), 160 Ind. 392, 64 N. E. 921, 66 N. E. 1003, and authorities there cited.

After a careful consideration of this appeal, we discover no available error. The judgment is therefore in all things affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES F. ALLISON et al., Appnts.,
v.

CITY OF CHESTER et al.

(69 W. Va. 533, 72 S. E. 472.)

Municipal corporation — debt limit — contract extending over years.

A contract of a municipal corporation with a waterworks company, for a supply of water for public use, for a stipulated number of years, at a stipulated price per year, payable in quarter-annual payments, is not void, by § 8, article 10, of the Constitution (Code 1906, p. lxxix), limiting municipal indebtedness, because the aggregate of such payments for the full term of the contract, with existing indebtedness, exceeds the amount for which such municipality is, by said section, allowed to become indebted. The validity of such contract is tested by the aggregate of the quarterly payments for the first year.

(September 9, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Hancock County dismissing their bill and dissolving an injunction restraining defendants from carrying into effect certain ordinances providing for the payment of money to the defendant water company by the defendant city for a water supply. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. B. Sommerville, for appellants:

The contract of the municipality with the water company for its supply of water was void.

List v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501; Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279; Brannon v. County Ct. 33 W. Va. 789, 8 L.R.A. 304, 11 S. E. 34; Davis v. County Ct. 38 W. Va. 104, 18 S. E. 373; Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, 67 W. Va. 525, 68 S. E. 118; Walla Walla v. Walla

Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 341, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Miller, 19 W. Va. 408; Welch Water, Light & P. Co. v. Welch, 64 W. Va. 373, 62 S. E. 497; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222, 24 S. W. 872; Salem Water Co. v. Salem, 5 Or. 29; Coulson v. Portland, 1 Deady, 481, Fed. Cas. No. 3,275; Chicago v. McDonald, 176 Ill. 404, 52 N. E. 982; Dawson v. Dawson Waterworks Co. 106 Ga. 396, 32 S. E. 907; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 130; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385.

Messrs. Hubbard & Hubbard, Billingsley & Clark, and W. B. Moore, for appellee South Side Waterworks Company:

The obligation incurred by the city by virtue of these ordinances does not constitute a debt within the meaning of the term as used in § 8 of article 10 of the Constitution.

Weston v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y. 110; Garri-son v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 458; Wentworth v. Whittemore, 1 Mass. 470; People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 525; Saleno v. Neosho, 127 Mo. 627, 27 L.R.A. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 S. W. 192; Re Adams, 12 Daly, 457; Clark v. Nevada Land & Min. Co. 6 Nev. 208; McElhaney v. Crawford, 96 Ga. 174, 22 S. E. 895; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156.

A limitation of municipal indebtedness is not violated by a contract for a supply of water at an annual rental, merely because the aggregate of the rentals during the life of the contract may exceed the limit of indebtedness.

Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 341, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 239, 24 S. W. 872; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1002; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1175; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 417; McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, 44 Pac. 358; List v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501; Welch Water, Light & P. Co. v. Welch, 64 W. Va. 373, 62 S. E. 497; Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, 67 W. Va. 525, 68 S. E. 118; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. Corry, 197 Pa. 41, 80 Am. St. Rep. 812, 46 Atl. 1035; Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 398; Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396; Cunningham v. Cleveland, 39 C. A. 211, 98 Fed. 657; Columbia Ave. Sav. Fund, S. D. Title & T. Co. v. Dawson, 130 Fed. 157; Fidelity Trust & G. Co. v. Fowler Water Co. 113 Fed. 560; Ludington Water-Supply Co. v. Ludington, 119 Mich. 480, 78 N. W. 558; Anoka Water-works, E. L. & P. Co. v. Anoka, 109 Fed. 580.

Mr. George D. Ingram for appellee city.

Headnote by MILLER, J.

Note. — See note, post, 1058.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The decree appealed from, dissolving the preliminary injunction and dismissing the plaintiffs' bill, presents for decision a single question, a question of constitutional limitation.

Amendatory of a prior ordinance of November 20, 1903, the council of the city of Chester, on November 4, 1909, adopted an ordinance reciting the passage of the former ordinance, by which it had contracted with the South Side Waterworks Company for a supply of water for extinguishing fires and for other purposes, and since which time the growth of the city had been such as to require the laying of a more extensive system of water mains than originally contemplated and provided for, and that further extensions would be required from time to time, and that the making of such extensions and additions as was and would be required, and was proposed, to meet the new and continually increasing demands, the waterworks company would be required to expend a large amount of money; and furthermore reciting that, in order to justify said company in making such expenditures, and to enable it to secure the funds necessary to extend and enlarge its plant as desired, and proposed, it was then ordained as follows:

"Section 1. That said contract entered into by said ordinance of November 20, 1903, and the acceptance thereof by the South Side Waterworks Company, be altered so that said company shall, for a period of thirty years, supply fire hydrants and water to said city for extinguishing fires and for other purposes, and the said city shall during the said period pay for the same at the rate and upon the conditions following, to wit:

"(1) Said waterworks company shall maintain the fire hydrants already in place in said city and connected with said company's mains, and said company shall also furnish, install, and maintain at such points on said company's mains as may be designated by council such additional fire hydrants as council may from time to time require. Hydrants which may be installed shall be of the same pattern, or equal efficiency with those already in use, and no hydrant once installed or maintained under this contract shall be discontinued during the term thereof.

"(2) Said waterworks company shall, at all times during the term of this contract, except in case of accident to machinery or mains, or when making connections, furnish water at all of said fire hydrants at such pressure and in volume as may be reasonably required for fire protection.

"(3) Said waterworks company shall furnish, erect on its mains, and supply with necessary water, free from all charges to the city, such iron drinking troughs for horses as council may approve, not to exceed four in number, which troughs shall be maintained and kept in good repair by council during the term of this contract.

"(4) The city shall have the right to use water from said fire hydrants for extinguishing fires, and to a reasonable extent for sprinkling and cleaning streets or fire department practice.

"(5) The city of Chester, in consideration of the foregoing stipulations on the part of the waterworks company, agrees to pay said company at the rate of forty-five dollars ($45), during the term of this contract for each fire hydrant now maintained or hereafter installed under order of the council, up to and including fifty in number. Water for flushing sewers shall be paid for at the rate of 10 cents per thousand gallons. Payments hereunder shall be made quarterly by the city in full for all service rendered by the waterworks company during the preceding quarter."

Section 8, article 10, of the Constitution (Code 1906, p. lxxix.), provides: "No county, city, school district, or municipal corporation, except in cases where such corporations have already authorized their bonds to be issued, shall hereafter be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to an amount, including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding 5 per centum on the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the last assessment for state and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; nor without, at the same time, providing for the collection of a direct annual tax sufficient to pay, annually, the interest on such debt, and the principal thereof, within, and not exceeding, thirty-four years: Provided, that no debt shall be contracted under this section, unless all questions connected with the same shall have been first submitted to a vote of the people, and have received three-fifths of all the votes cast for and against the same."

It is conceded that the annual payments provided for in the contract can be paid each year out of the current revenues of the city, but that the aggregate of such payments cannot be so met, and that if such aggregate constitutes an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution, the contract is void; for it is also conceded that the questions connected with the making of the contract had not, prior to entering into the same, been first submitted to the vote of the people, as required by the provisions of the organic law.

The sole question presented for decision then is, Should the aggregate of all the quarter-annual payments provided for in the contract be treated as an indebtedness of the city of Chester, within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition, or only that portion thereof which were thereby to become due the first year?

It is well settled in this, and in other states having like or similar constitutional provisions, that municipalities may not become indebted absolutely or contingently beyond the constitutional limitation, for present delivery of property, or for services performed, or to be performed, as in the building of waterworks or any other kind of municipal improvements, even though the time of payment be postponed to future dates, no matter what may be the form of the contract. Our own cases of List v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501; Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279; Honaker v. Board of Education, 42 W. Va. 170, 32 L.R.A. 413, 57 Am. St. Rep. 847, 24 S. E. 544; Shinn v. Board of Education, 39 W. Va. 497, 20 S. E. 604; Dempsey v. Board of Education, 40 W. Va. 99, 20 S. E. 811; Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, 67 W. Va. 525, 68 S. E. 118, and Davis v. County Ct. 38 W. Va. 104, 18 S. E. 373, all with the cases cited, sustain and illustrate the application of this well-settled rule.

But it is contended for appellant, with respect to Davis v. County Ct., not that it was a case on all fours with the case at bar, but that the principles announced therein, and, as it is claimed, substantially approved in Spilman v. Parkersburg, Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, and other cases, go farther, and, using the language of the decision, hold that, where such municipal authorities "attempt to or do bind, without a proper vote of the people, the levies of future years in any manner or for any purpose whatsoever, either by contract, express or implied, their action in so doing is a usurpation of power, and an infringement of the Constitution, and such contract is null and void." The language of Judge Holt, in Spilman v. Parkersburg, much relied on, is: "By the term 'indebtedness' as here used, is meant the state of being by voluntary obligation, express or implied, under legal liability to pay in the present or at some future time, for something already received, or for something yet to be furnished or rendered. This includes every kind of indebtedness, no matter in what manner created or voluntarily brought about; or for what purpose, whether it be for municipal self-preservation or not; whether for pure air, pure water, good light, clean and convenient and safe streets and sidewalks; whether it be payable now or hereafter, payable quarterly or annually, or at any 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) date running on for thirty-four years; whether for current expenses or fixed and definite debts or charges; whether for personal property or real property, leasehold or freehold; it is none the less indebtedness, created in some manner and for some purpose, and is within the purview and the bar of the Constitution." This very broad and comprehensive definition of the term "indebtedness" clearly comprehended the case which the court there had in hand. It is substantially the definition of the term given in 22 Cyc. 75, but this authority says: "It is a word of large meaning, and must be construed in every case in accord with its context." So that when our Constitution makes use of the term "indebted," we must look to the whole context to interpret its meaning. As throwing light on this question the words of the same article of the Constitution: "Nor without, at the same time, providing for the collection of a direct annual tax sufficient to pay, annually, the interest on such debt, and the principal thereof, within, and not exceeding, thirty-four years." Clearly the liability of the contract we have here is not such an indebtedness as is comprehended by this clause, which apparently is applicable to all indebtedness not inhibited by the Constitution.

Moreover, the language of a court should always be interpreted with reference to the particular case in hand. In the Davis Case the controversy related to certificates of indebtedness, or so-called road orders, issued by the county court, apparently, in payment of a county bridge. In Spilman v. Parkersburg, the subject of controversy was a contract in the form of a lease, by the terms of which the city of Parkersburg, at the termination of the lease, if all annual payments provided for had been paid, was to become the owner of an electric lighting plant, constructed by the lessor, as provided by the contract. Unquestionably the contracts involved in each of those cases constituted debts from their inception, and although in the latter case the contract for lighting the streets was in form a lease, it was in fact a conditional purchase of the property, binding the levies of the city for future years, an indebtedness of the city, and void as an infraction of the constitutional inhibition against the creation of such indebtedness without submitting the question pertaining thereto to a vote of the people.

The record before us presents no such case as was presented in Davis v. County Ct. or Spilman v. Parkersburg. The contract here involved relates to an annual supply of water; the water may never be furnished, or furnished for only a portion of the term provided for; it amounts in our opinion to a mere provision for the necessary current annual expenses of the city, the aggregate of the payments not comprehending an indebtedness inhibited by the Constitution.

It is conceded, however, that there are decisions in other states, notably in Illinois, holding that contracts such as is here involved do constitute indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution of those states. Culbertson v. Fulton, 127 Ill. 30, 18 N. E. 781, and Chicago v. McDonald, 176 Ill. 404, 52 N. E. 982, among other cases, are cited and relied on.

We deem it wholly unnecessary to enter into any extended review or analysis of these cases, or those to the contrary, on which we base our conclusions, or to discuss the underlying principles involved. That has been sufficiently accomplished, we think, in prior decisions of this court, and the numerous cases cited and relied on in the text-books and decisions cited.

In disposing of this case it seems only necessary to say that we are disposed to follow the great weight of judicial authority, including the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and many other state and Federal cases, and, as we think, the better supported by reason, in holding that where the contract or ordinance, as in the case at bar, is one intended to provide for the furnishing of a municipality with water to be used for public purposes, the payment therefor to be made from year to year, such contract should not be construed or treated as the creation of an indebtedness within the inhibition of our Constitution, except as to the amount actually fallen due; but as a mode or means of providing for the necessary current expenses of the municipal government. True, the revenues of succeeding years, to a certain extent, become bound for the future performance of the contract, and beyond the discretion of the municipality to alter or abrogate; but a supply of water is an absolute necessity, indispensable to the very existence of the people, and without such authority to so contract, a municipality would be entirely helpless. Judge Brannon, arguendo, citing many cases, expresses approval of this doctrine, in Welch Water, Light & P. Co. v. Welch, 64 W. Va. 373, 62 S. E. 497, 498, and we think it sound, and that it is not in conflict with any prior decision of this court. Some of the many cases so holding are Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 341, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 24 S. W. 872, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 232, and note; Higgins v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670; McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, 44 Pac. 358; Voss v. Waterloo Water Co. 163 Ind. 69, 66 L.R.A. 95, 106 Am. St. Rep. 201, 71 N. E. 208, 2 Ann. Cas. 978; South Bend v. Reynolds, 155 Ind. 70, 49 L.R.A. 795, 67 N. E. 706; Cunningham v. Cleveland, 39 C. C. A. 211, 98 Fed. 657; Grant v. Davenport, 38 Iowa, 396; Stedman v. Berlin, 97 Wis. 505, 73 N. W. 57; Wade v. Oakmont, 165 Pa. 479, 30 Atl. 959; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans, 42 La. Ann. 188, 7 So. 559; Raton Waterworks Co. v. Raton, 9 N. M. 70, 49 Pac. 898; Ludington Water-Supply Co. v. Ludington, 119 Mich. 480, 78 N. W. 558. In 28 Cyc. 1544, citing in notes the above and many other cases, the law is stated thus: "A contract by a municipality to pay for water, lights, sewage, and the like, at stated times in the future, does not create an indebtedness for the aggregate amount of such payments, within the meaning of a provision limiting the indebtedness of municipalities, and the validity of such a contract is to be tested by the amount of the first payment thereunder."

We hold that the decree appealed from is right, and our opinion is to affirm it.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 2.)

C. O. TRASK, Respt.,
v.

LIVINGSTON COUNTY, Appt.

(210 Mo. 582, 109 S. W. 656.)

County — indebtedness — accrual.

The time of letting the contract for a bridge, and not that of its acceptance and the issuance of warrants therefor, is that when the county becomes indebted, within the meaning of a constitutional provision forbidding it to become indebted to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, where the statute requires an appropriation to be made for the bridge before the contract is let; at least where the contract requires the bridge to be completed within the year in which the contract is let.

(March 31, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Linn County in plaintiff's favor in an action upon certain county warrants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John H. Taylor and F. Sheets & Sons, for appellant:

The county did not become indebted on the bridge contract until the bridges were completed and accepted.

Note. — See note, post, 1058.

Lum v. The Buckeye, 24 Miss. 565; Trowbridge v. Sickler, 42 Wis. 417; Chicago v. Galpin, 183 Ill. 408, 55 S. E. 731; Saleno v. Neosho, 127 Mo. 639, 27 L.R.A. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 S. W. 190.

Messrs. Tatlow & Mitchell, for respondent:

The mere acceptance of the bridges and the use thereof by the public did not create an indebtedness; nor did the mere issuance of the warrants create the indebtedness.

Heidelberg v. St. Francois County, 100 Mo. 69, 12 S. W. 914; Anderson v. Ripley County, 181 Mo. 46, 80 S. W. 263; Wolcott v. Lawrence County, 26 Mo. 272; Phillips v. Butler County, 187 Mo. 713, 86 S. W. 231; Unionville v. Martin, 95 Mo. App. 36, 68 S. W. 605; Dougherty v. Excelsior Springs, 110 Mo. App. 626, 85 S. W. 112; Mountain Grove Bank v. Douglas County, 146 Mo. 42, 47 S. W. 944.

The contract was necessarily made with reference to the "income and revenue" of a particular year, and could not be so made as to be ambulatory in its nature and applicable to the year in which the bridge might happen to be completed.

State ex rel. Exchange Bank v. Allison, 155 Mo. 334, 56 S. W. 467; Gray, Limitations of Taxing Powers & Public Indebtedness, § 2076; 2 Beach, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. Smith's ed. § 902.

In the absence of any such showing to the contrary, the presumption is that the bridge company kept and performed its engagement and completed the bridges in the year 1889, and had them ready for use by the public on the 1st day of January, 1890.

Lenox v. Harrison, 88 Mo. 496; State ex rel. Gracy v. Bank of Neosho, 120 Mo. 160, 25 S. W. 372; Agan v. Shannon, 103 Mo. 601, 15 S. W. 757; McCallister v. Ross, 155 Mo. 87, 55 S. W. 1027; State use of Public Schools v. Crumb, 157 Mo. 545, 57 S. W. 1030.

Gantt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by the plaintiff as the assignee of seventeen warrants issued by the county court of Livingston county, to the original holders thereof, for materials furnished and work and labor done for said county in the year 1890. The petition counts separately upon each warrant and its assignment to plaintiff, its presentation to the county treasurer, and its dishonor and protest, and judgment is prayed for the aggregate of all of said warrants with interest. The answer pleads that the said several warrants were issued in excess of the revenue of said county for the year 1890, and also invokes the five-year statute of limitations. The reply was a general 27 L.R.A. (N.S.)

denial. The venue was changed to Linn county. A jury was waived, and the cause tried to the court, and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff for $2,407.75, at the December term, 1904. The facts developed on the trial were as follows: Plaintiff offered and read in evidence warrants 1 to 16, inclusive, which correspond with the several counts of the petition based thereon; and, as no point is made on them, by agreement of counsel they were omitted from the bill of exceptions. Plaintiff then read in evidence the following stipulation: "In the Linn circuit court, October term, 1904. C. O. Trask v. Livingston County. For the purpose of saving costs, the parties in the above-entitled suit agree that the total income and revenue provided for the year 1890 for the said Livingston county, Missouri, amounted to the sum of $21,283.66. Second. That the following is a complete and correct copy of the register of warrants for the year 1890 in Livingston county, Missouri, and as contained in the county clerk's warrant register No. 2, beginning at warrant No. 4963, issued on January 6, 1890, and ending with warrant No. 5988, issued on December 30, 1890, which are not copied herein, but amount to total issue of $26,782.86. Third. That the signatures to the warrants sued on, to wit, the signatures of the county clerk and the presiding judge of the county court of said county, are genuine as well as the signatures of the county treasurer, showing the respective dates of presentment and protest of said warrants; and also the signatures of the respective assignments thereon are likewise genuine. Fourth. It is agreed that any additional proof may be offered by either side as to these facts or any other facts material in this case." Plaintiff then offered and read in evidence Exhibit B, consisting of copies of eleven warrants with their indorsements, Nos. 5379 to 5390, inclusive, all payable out of money in the treasury appropriated for bridge fund, and each for $500, except the last, which is for $197. As no point is made as to their form, it is unnecessary to set them out at length. All of which eleven warrants were payable to the Clinton Bridge & Iron Company, each for $500, except No. 5390, which was for $197; all protested May 20, 1890; all of which were assigned to the Clinton National Bank, and by it assigned to W. F. Carter, Jr. and upon which an action was brought in the circuit court of Livingston county, and then pending, to the introduction of which defendant duly objected as irrelevant and not the best evidence. Plaintiff then offered the report of the road and bridge commissioner or the bids for building a county bridge over Grand river, between Chillicothe and Utica, showing the bid of the Clinton Bridge & Iron Company to be $4,874, and the lowest bid thereof; and of H. Hedges, of the same company, for the bridge over Shoal creek, for $820, to be the lowest bid, which were approved by the county court, and contracts ordered to be let, and an appropriation made for each, on the 5th day of September, 1889, at the August adjourned term of said county court. Contracts were entered into in writing by said bridge company and the road and bridge commissioner of said county, on September 7, 1889, whereby said bridge company agreed to complete said bridges on or before January 1, 1890, and maintain the same for four years from and after their completion, for which the county agreed to pay said sums of $4,874 and $820 in county warrants, to be drawn at the first meeting of the county court after the completion and acceptance of said bridges. The bridge company also entered into a bond for its faithful performance of said contracts. Afterwards, on May 19, 1890, said bridges were accepted, and on May 20, 1890, warrants were ordered issued, and were issued therefor. At the conclusion of all the evidence, defendant prayed the court to declare the law to be that, under the pleadings and the evidence, the finding must be for defendant, which was refused, and defendant excepted. Thereupon the court found all the issues for plaintiff on each of said counts, and rendered judgment in the aggregate for $2,407.75, to bear interest at 6 per cent from its rendition. On the same day defendant filed its motions for a new trial and in arrest, which were heard and overruled, and defendant excepted.

1. From the foregoing statement it becomes apparent that there is one single issue on this appeal, and that is, Were the warrants sued on issued in excess of the income and revenues of Livingston county for the year 1890? or, stated in a different form, Did said county become indebted on September 7, 1889, the date of the bridge contract, to the amount of $5,694, or on May 20, 1890, when it issued its twelve warrants to the Clinton Bridge & Iron Company? It is conceded and agreed that the total income and revenue of said county for the year 1890 was $21,283.66, and the warrants issued that year amounted to $26,782.86, and this last sum included the twelve bridge warrants, aggregating $5,694. If the $5,694 is to be deducted from the total amount of warrants, $26,782.86, issued by the county in 1890, then the warrants chargeable against the income and revenue for that year amounted to $21, 088.86, a sum less than the total income and revenue, to wit, $21,283.66, and they are a valid indebtedness. On the other hand, if these bridge warrants, to the amount of $5,694, are not to be subtracted, then the warrants for 1890 exceeded the total income and revenue for 1890; and, as the warrants sued on were among the last issued that year, they were in excess of the income and revenue, and plaintiff is not entitled to recover. The simple question then is, When did Livingston county become indebted to the Clinton Bridge Company? In September, 1889, when the county court accepted its bid, and directed the bridge and road commissioner to enter into the contract for the construction of said bridges, and he entered into said contract; or not until it accepted said bridges, and drew its warrants therefor, May 20, 1890? If in September, 1889, that indebtedness was not for 1890, and is not to be charged against the revenue provided for 1890, and plaintiff's warrants, issued for indebtedness created in 1890 and within the revenue provided for that year, are valid. The circuit court held that the bridge contract was an indebtedness incurred in 1889, and not in 1890, and that plaintiff's warrants were issued for indebtedness incurred for current expenses in 1890, and were issued within the revenue provided for the year 1890, and plaintiff was entitled to recover. By § 12, art. 10, Mo. Const. 1875 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 287), it is ordained: "No county . . . shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year. . . ." Counsel for the county insist that the county did not become indebted to the bridge company until the bridges were accepted and the county court issued the warrants therefor, on May 20, 1890, and in support of their position rely upon the decisions of this court in Saleno v. Neosho, 127 Mo. loc. cit. 639, 27 L.R.A. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 S. W. 190; Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar, 128 Mo. 188, 32 L.R.A. 157, 26 S. W. 1025, 31 S. W. 756; Neosho City Water Co. v. Neosho, 136 Mo. 511, 38 S. W. 89; Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar, 140 Mo. 156, 39 S. W. 768; and Mountain Grove Bank v. Douglas County, 146 Mo. 56, 47 S. W. 944.

On the other hand, counsel for plaintiff distinguish those cases, and insist the indebtedness accrued when the court accepted the bridge company's bid, made the appropriation, and the road and bridge commissioner, under the order of the court, made and entered into the contract to pay the amount bid when the bridge should be completed according to the contract, which required the bridge to be completed on or before January 1, 1890. It may as well be stated here and now that the county did not show that the bridges were not completed, according to the contract, in the year 1889, though it did show they were not formally accepted until May, 1890, and the warrants issued then. The constitutional provision found in § 12 of article 10 of that instrument has often been construed by this court. In Book v. Earl, 87 Mo. loc. cit. 246, it was well said: "The evident purpose of the framers of the Constitution and the people who adopted it was to abolish, in the administration of county and municipal government, the credit system, and establish the cash system, by limiting the amount of tax which might be imposed by a county for county purposes, and limiting the expenditures in any given year to the amount of revenue which such tax would bring into the treasury for that year. Section 12, supra, is clear and explicit on this point. Under this section the county court might anticipate the revenue collected, and to be collected, for any given year, and contract debts for ordinary current expenses, which would be binding on the county to the extent of the revenue provided for that year, but not in excess of it." For a proper determination of whether the county became indebted for the bridges to the Clinton Bridge & Iron Company in 1889 or in 1890, the law of this state in regard to building and providing bridges where the estimated expense exceeds $50 must be kept in view and considered. Section 5183, Rev. Stat. 1899 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 2705), requires all such bridges to be built by the county. By § 5185 the county court must determine in what manner and of what materials the bridge shall be built, and the probable cost thereof, and require the road commissioner to proceed to the spot where the bridge is to be built, and make an accurate estimate of the cost of the building of the same according to any plan or plans ordered by the court, or such as in the commissioner's opinion may be best, and without delay make report thereof to the court, and order the commissioner to let the contract for building and keeping the same in repair for not less than two or more than four years, to be determined by the court.

The commissioner is required to advertise the time and place of letting the bridge not less than twenty days prior to letting the contract. The commissioner, at public outcry or by sealed bids, lets to the lowest bidder, subject to the approval or rejection of the county court. "If such letting be approved by the court, it shall make an appropriation for building such bridge, and order the commissioner to contract therefor at the price and let and take a bond payable to the county with two good and sufficient sureties, sufficient to cover all damages that may accrue from the breach of the contract." By § 5188 "the commissioner is forbidden to do anything toward building the bridge or letting thereof until an appropriation for the same shall first be made by the county court." Section 5190 forbids any county court in this state to approve any contract for building or repairing any bridge not made in the manner provided by said chapter 84, Rev. Stat. 1899 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 2705). It will be observed the statute requires the county court to make an appropriation to pay for the bridge before it is let or built, and expressly forbids the making of a bridge contract in any other manner than as provided by that chapter. It can be stated as the settled law in this state, that, if the bridge company had, without any public letting, written contract, or appropriation, built these bridges, and completed them on May 19, 1890, and the county court had, on May 20, 1890, issued warrants for what it conceived was the reasonable value thereof, such warrants would not have constituted a valid indebtedness of said county. Heidelberg v. St. Francois County, 100 Mo. 69, 12 S. W. 914; Anderson v. Ripley County, 181 Mo. 46, 80 S. W. 263; Wolcott v. Lawrence County, 26 Mo. 272; Phillips v. Butler County, 187 Mo. 698, 86 S. W. 231. In Mountain Grove Bank v. Douglas County, 146 Mo. 42, 47 S. W. 944, it was expressly held that the mere issuance of the warrants did not create an indebtedness. Hence the indebtedness for these bridges was created, if at all, by a compliance with the law governing the letting and contracting for bridges already noted. When the county became indebted on these bridge contracts must be determined by the "income and revenue provided for such year," which, under the Constitution, must be looked to for the payment of such indebtedness, and it was the "income and revenue provided" for the year 1889, which the county court was authorized to appropriate for that purpose, and not the revenue for the year 1890, which, at the date of the contract for the building of said bridges, had never been assessed, levied, or collected. The language of the Constitution is: "No county . . . shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year." It has been uniformly construed that this provision of the Constitution permits the anticipation of the current revenues to the extent of the year's income in which the debt is contracted or created, and prohibits the anticipation of the revenues of any future year. Any other construction would render § 12 of article 10 nugatory; for, if the county court of Livingston county, in September, 1889, could anticipate the revenue of 1890, it could also anticipate the revenues of 1891 and 1892, and would leave the power of the county, with reference to indebtedness, what it was before the Constitution of 1875 was adopted. In Gray's Limitations of Taxing Power & Public Indebtedness, § 2162, the author expresses the view that "the time when the debt actually comes into existence as a binding obligation on the municipality is the time to which all calculations as to its validity should be made."

But it is earnestly urged by counsel for the county that the decisions of this court in Saleno v. Neosho, 127 Mo. 639, 27 L.R.A. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 S. W. 190, and the subsequent cases of Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar, 128 Mo. 188, 32 L.R.A. 157, 26 S. W. 1025, 31 S. W. 756, and Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar, 140 Mo. 156, 39 S. W. 768, settled this question by holding that the indebtedness of the county was not created until the bridges were completed. In Saleno v. Neosho, supra, and the kindred cases following it, the question was whether a contract by which the city agreed to pay the water company for the use of water for the city and other purposes, $2,000 per year for a term of twenty years, was a creation of a debt in the aggregate for $40,000, or was an obligation to pay $2,000 a year, if the water was supplied according to contract; and it was ruled that it was not the creation of indebtedness for the aggregate of the instalments to be paid under the contract, this court saying: "A debt is understood to be an unconditional promise to pay a fixed sum at some specified time, and is quite different from a contract to be performed in the future, depending upon a condition precedent, which may never be performed, and which cannot ripen into a debt until performed. Here the hydrant rental depended upon the water supply to be furnished to defendant; and, if not furnished, no payment could be required of it." In Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar, 128 Mo. loc. cit. 222, 32 L.R.A. 157, 26 S. W. 1025, 31 S. W. 760, this court quoted with approval from Judge Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations, as follows: "Under the constitutional provisions in Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, and Pennsylvania referred to, it is held that a corporation may make a contract (at least for necessities) covering a series of years, upon which an obligation to pay may arise from 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) year to year, as the thing contracted for is furnished; and in such case, the whole amount which may ultimately become due does not constitute a debt within the constitutional prohibition. But in order to ascertain whether the corporation by such contract is transgressing the limit, regard is had only to the amount which may fall due within a certain year or other period; and if the revenues for that year or other period are sufficient, over and above the payment of the other expenses, to pay such amount, there is no debt incurred within the constitutional prohibition." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 1890, § 136a. In that case it was further said: "The term 'indebtedness' is a wide one, and must be construed in every case, in accord with its context. It has been very recently considered in its application to the subject in hand, by the court in banc; and the conclusion was announced that such an obligation to pay an agreed sum year by year, for the furnishing of certain necessary supplies during a term of twenty years, was not an immediate indebtedness for the entire amount that might ultimately become due by instalments during that term. . . . Saleno v. Neosho, 127 Mo. 627, 27 L.R.A. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 S. W. 190."

It will, we think, be seen, upon close examination of Saleno v. Neosho and the Lamar Cases, that the great question was whether there was an aggregate indebtedness created in the beginning which would exceed the debt-making power of the corporation, or whether the indebtedness should be treated only as an obligation which would arise from year to year as the water contracted for was furnished; and, in order to ascertain whether the municipal corporation was transgressing the constitutional limit, regard was had only to the amount which might fall due within a certain year, and, if the revenue for that year was sufficient, over and above the payment of other expenses, then there was no debt incurred within the constitutional prohibition. In other words, it was practically decided that, although the contract was for twenty years, it was considered by the court, from the debt-creating point of view, as if it had been twenty separate contracts, one covering each year. And the authorities all agree that, if the amount to be paid in any year under such a contract exceeds the income and revenues for such year, against which it is a charge, it would be invalid, at least to the extent of such excess. There are many considerations which, in our opinion, sustain the decisions in those cases, but they afford no authority for holding that the county court in this state, under the bridge act, can contract for a supply of bridges covering a period of years, one bridge to be built each designated year, and to be paid for out of the revenue for the year in which it shall be built. All the provisions of the bridge act are inconsistent with any such power in the county court.

We think that the indebtedness for these bridges was incurred, if at all, by the letting and making of the contract therefor, in September, 1889. In Culbertson v. Fulton, 127 Ill. 30, 18 N. E. 781, the supreme court had this question before it. The city, on August 15, 1887, entered into a contract for the construction of a system of water-works for the city, and the plant was completed in February, 1888. If the indebtedness was created on the date of the contract, then the assessment for the year 1886 was to govern; if created in February, 1888, at the time the plant was completed and ready for acceptance, then the assessment of 1887 governed. The question was, When was the debt incurred? And the court held that, by entering into the contract on August 15, 1887, the city became indebted within the meaning of the Constitution of Illinois, which, on this subject, is almost in the exact words of our Constitution, the court saying: "It cannot be said that the indebtedness did not come into being until the work was completed and accepted by the city. The city bound itself to pay for the work when it should be completed, and could be compelled to do so if the work should be done according to the contract.

. . . A debt payable in the future is obviously no less a debt than if payable presently." In Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Tele. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588, it was held that a contract by a city for a fire alarm system, at a time when the city was indebted more than 2 per cent on the assessed valuation of its taxable property, was void under the provision of article 13 of the Constitution of that state, limiting municipal indebtedness to 2 per cent of the value of the taxable property, where such city had no money in the treasury to pay for such system either at the time the contract was made, or when the same was completed and accepted, although there were sufficient funds on hand to pay for it at the time fixed by the contract for such payment. Said the court: "The controlling question in this case is, Do the facts found show an indebtedness of appellant within the inhibition imposed by the foregoing article of the Constitution? A debt in its general sense is a specific sum of money which is due or owing from one person to another, and denotes not only an obligation of the debtor to pay, but the right of the creditor to receive and enforce payment. State ex

rel. Cohen v. Hawes, 112 Ind. 323, 14 N. E. 87; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486, 13 L.R.A. 647, 28 N. E. 94. It is the rule in this state that, when a municipal corporation contracts for a usual and necessary thing, such as water or light, and agrees to pay for it annually or monthly as furnished, the contract does not create an indebtedness for the aggregate sum of all of the instalments, since the debt for each year or month does not come into existence until it is earned. The earning of each year's or month's compensation is essential to the existence of a debt [citing authorities]. If the city can pay this indebtedness when it comes into existence, without exceeding the constitutional limit, there is no indebtedness, and therefore no violation of the Constitution. But if the indebtedness of the city already equals or exceeds the constitutional limit, and the current revenues are not sufficient to pay such indebtedness when it comes into existence, including other expenses for which the city is liable, an indebtedness is thereby created, and there is a violation of the Constitution." It will be observed that the Indiana supreme court takes the same view of water and light contracts for which the city or county is to pay annually as the water or light is furnished, that this court took in the Neosho and Lamar Cases, and yet it held that the contract in that case for the fire alarm telegraph constituted an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution, and distinguished it from cases in which the debt is created in instalments payable annually when the water or light is furnished.

But, confining ourselves to the facts in evidence and the statute governing the building of bridges, as already said, the statute required the county court to make an appropriation before the road and bridge commissioner let the contract. The record shows that the county court, on the 5th of September, 1889, made an appropriation to pay for the building of the bridges. Now, out of what revenue was it authorized to make this appropriation, that of 1889, or that of 1890? We think the Constitution answers this question. They could only make it out of the revenue of 1889; and, in this particular case, this conclusion is reinforced by the fact that the bridges contracted for were to be completed in the year 1889, and, as the obligation was incurred in 1889, and the bridges were to be built in that year, and the appropriation was made in that year, we think there can be no escape from the conclusion that the indebtedness thereby created was a charge against the revenues provided for the year 1889, and not the revenues of 1890. Clearly the county court was not authorized to appropriate revenues which were to be derived from taxation in the year 1890, when such taxes had never been assessed, levied, or collected. While the county court may in any one year draw warrants after the revenue has been provided and the taxes levied, within the scope of the levy and income for such year, it is too plain for argument that the Constitution forbids the anticipation of the revenues of any subsequent years. If not, all that has been said in regard to the force and effect of § 12 of article 10 of the Constitution, to the effect that its purpose was to put counties upon a cash system, instead of the old credit plan, has been in vain.

In our opinion the bridge warrants offered and read in evidence were, if valid at all, chargeable against the revenues of said county for 1889, and we think should be deducted from the total amount of warrants issued in 1890, and, this being so, the plaintiff's warrants were a legal and valid charge for the current expenses of the said county for the year 1890, and the judgment of the Circuit Court awarding plaintiff's judgment therefor was correct, and is affirmed.

Fox, P. J., and Burgess, J., concur.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES CUNNINGHAM et al., Appts.,
v.

FRANK SALING, County Clerk, et al.,
Respts.

(57 Or. 517, 112 Pac. 437.)

County — irregular employment of detective — ratification.

1. The allowance by the county court of a claim for services rendered to the county by a detective ratifies an irregular employment of him by the county attorney.

Same — debt limit — effect on governmental functions.

2. That a county has reached its constitutional debt limit does not prevent it from incurring liabilities for services necessary to the preservation of the peace and good order of the community.

(Slater, J., dissents.)

(December 31, 1910.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Umatilla County in defendant's favor in a suit to enjoin the payment of an allowance by the county clerk of a claim for detective services rendered to the county. Affirmed.

Statement by McBride, J.:

This is a suit to enjoin the delivery and payment of a warrant drawn by order of the county court of Umatilla county in favor of the Thiel Detective Agency for $356, for services rendered the county in procuring evidence to convict violators of the local option law in such county. The evidence tends to show that in the year 1908, violations of the local option law became so frequent and flagrant as to become a public scandal. The local officers were appealed to by the district attorney to assist in procuring evidence against the offenders, but either could not or would not afford him any assistance. The court not then being in session, he brought the matter of procuring a detective before the county judge, who agreed that such was the proper course and assured him that it was probable that the county court would ratify such action. Thereupon, on request of the district attorney, the Thiel Detective Agency sent an operative, through whose efforts a large number of offenders were convicted, and a large amount of money in fines was paid into the county treasury. The agency presented a bill for $356 for this service to the county court, which approved the same and ordered it paid. The indebtedness of the county at the time exceeded the $5,000 limit prescribed in the Constitution.

Messrs. Carter & Smythe, for appellants:

Payment of an indebtedness in excess of the constitutional limit may be enjoined at the suit of a taxpayer.

Or. Const. art. IX, § 10; Wormington v. Pierce, 22 Or. 606, 30 Pac. 450; Brownfield v. Houser, 30 Or. 534, 49 Pac. 843.

Officers intrusted with the management of public affairs involving the expenditure and disbursement of public revenues should have a clear warrant of law for every such expenditure and disbursement.

Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 54 Pac. 174.

Messrs. A. M. Crawford, Attorney General, and G. W. Phelps, for respondents:

The ordinary expenses of a county within the limit of current revenues, or within a tax levied for a special purpose, may be paid, and should not be classed as voluntary indebtedness, nor the creation or incurring of indebtedness or liabilities, so long as such claims do not exceed the revenues for the current year.

Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 347, 54 Pac. 174; Fenton v. Blair, 11 Utah, 78, 39 Pac. 485; State ex rel. Barton v. Hopkins, 14 Wash. 59, 44 Pac. 134, 550; Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396; Council Bluffs v. Stewart, 51 Iowa, 385, 1 N. W. 628.

Even though the indebtedness was not provided for within the current revenues, it was in any event an involuntary indebtedness, and incurred in the enforcement of the criminal laws of the state, and such a debt as could not be avoided in the ordinary administration of the governmental affairs of the county.

Burnett v. Markley, 23 Or. 440, 31 Pac. 1050; Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 344, 54 Pac. 174; Grant County v. Lake County, 17 Or. 463, 21 Pac. 447; Wormington v. Pierce, 22 Or. 613, 30 Pac. 450; Burness v. Multnomah County, 37 Or. 472, 60 Pac. 1005.

The authority to transact county business is vested in the county court, and the employment by such court of persons to assist the regular officers in the discharge of their duties when necessary, and when such employment does not interfere with the powers and duties of such officers, is a valid exercise of such authority.

Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes (Or) § 912; Taylor v. Umatilla County, 6 Or. 394; Burnett v. Markley, 23 Or. 436, 31 Pac. 1050; State ex rel. Herren v. Hall, 37 Or. 481, 63 Pac. 13.

McBride, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. While the original employment of the detective in this matter was irregular and legally unauthorized, the action of the county court in allowing the bill and directing the payment of it amounted to a ratification of the original employment, so, in this respect, the case stands in the same condition as if the county court had employed the detective in the first instance. Steiner v. Polk County, 40 Or. 124, 66 Pac. 707.

2. While the testimony makes it clear that the indebtedness of the county exceeded the constitutional limit, yet it has been held that the constitutional inhibition only extends to voluntary indebtedness, and not to such as is thrust upon it by operation of law, by which phrase is meant such expenses as cannot be avoided without danger to the peace and good order of the community. Thus, in Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 339, 54 Pac. 174, it was held that the employment of an expert to check the county books to ascertain whether there had been any embezzlement of the county funds was a duty imposed upon the county by operation of law, and that a warrant issued in payment of such services was valid, although the county had already greatly exceeded the constitutional 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

limit of indebtedness. It was no doubt true that county authorities could have refrained from hiring an expert, and have trusted to chance, and to the honesty of the official concerned, as to the outcome. They had the physical power to do so, but as the court said: "It was such a service, so far as we are informed by the record, as the county could not well dispense with for the time being even, and perform understandingly and intelligently the functions pertaining to its organization." In the same case the court say: "The most important function of the county is to maintain a local government subordinate to, but as an arm of, the state. Now, the expense incident to and necessary under the laws prescribed by the state to organize and maintain such a government may be said to be thrust upon it by law." This is good law and fits the case at bar. The principal function of every county government is the protection of society, the enforcement of law, and the punishment of crime. This is the highest and most pressing duty which the law imposes upon any county or upon the county authorities, and any expense necessary to punish crime and bring the guilty to justice is an expense imposed upon the county by law. It is a duty that admits of no volition. The authorities cannot avoid it if they would; they should not if they could. In all expenditures for the punishment of crime the real question is, Are they necessary in order to secure the enforcement of the criminal laws? If they are, then a duty exists to make the expenditure, and it may be said to be involuntary in the sense that it is not an expense sought and incurred as the result of deliberate bargain, but arises from the necessity of enforcing the law.

In this case it is evident that the law was being flagrantly violated, and that the local authorities either sympathized with its violation or were too inefficient to prevent it. Under such circumstances there rested upon the county court the duty to use such measures as were necessary to prevent and punish crime, and they have done so effectually. To hold with the contention of plaintiffs would allow many crimes to go unpunished. If a murder should be committed in Umatilla county, and it became necessary to offer a reward, some friend of the murderer, under the guise of a taxpayer, could come forward and enjoin the county from doing so, on the pretext that it was exceeding its indebtedness. The hands of the county authorities ought not to be so fettered, and they will not be.

Judgment affirmed.

Slater, J., dissenting:

I cannot give my assent to the conclusion reached in this case. The debt in question was incurred by the district attorney of Umatilla county with the consent of the county judge, in employing special detectives to assist in discovering violators of the local option laws, and in procuring evidence of such violation. The excuse for obtaining such special assistance is that local officers would not render the necessary aid to the district attorney to ferret out violators of the law. This case should not be confounded with one where some person has been charged by complaint in a court with the commission of a crime, and the duty is thrust by law upon the prosecuting officer to secure evidence to convict; but it rests primarily upon a mere suspicion or assertion of an officer that the law in some respect is being violated, and upon an assertion that local officers, who were appealed to by the district attorney to assist in procuring evidence thereof, either could not or would not render him assistance. The constitutional limitation (§ 10, art. 11), upon counties contracting debts, reads: "No county shall create any debts or liabilities which shall, singly or in the aggregate, exceed the sum of $5,000, except to suppress insurrection or repeal invasion. . . ." If the plain meaning of the words of this clause be followed, no doubt or confusion can arise, and no justification can be found for injecting constructive interpolations into it. It was early held by this court in the case of Grant County v. Lake County, 17 Or. 453, 21 Pac. 447, that where the debt in question was not created by the county, but the liability was imposed by the legislature, it was not within the prohibition. There is no straining of the ordinary signification of the words in such construction; and undoubtedly, when the legislature creates an office and requires the salaries and other expenses thereof to be paid out of the county funds, the debt is created not by the county, but by legislative power, and hence is not within the limitation. Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 412, 33 Pac. 1128. From this the distinction arose between a class of debts said to be voluntarily created by the county and those imposed upon it by law. But when it is said, as it is in the majority opinion, as the rationale of the decision, that "the most important function of the county is to maintain a local government subordinate to, but as an arm of the state," and that, "the expense incident to and necessary under the laws prescribed by the state to organize and maintain such a government may be said to be thrust upon it by law," all limitation upon debts created by the county has practically been taken away. The expression quoted is from the opinion of Mr. Justice Wolverton in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 344, 54 Pac. 174. But in a later case (Eaton v. Minnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 73 Pac. 754) the whole question was reviewed at some length by Mr. Justice Bean. He expressly concedes that it is not safe to rest the distinction upon the unqualified statements above quoted, for he says: "It manifestly cannot be held that all liabilities arising from the mere discharge of some public duty by a county, or in the performance of some powers conferred upon it by law, are involuntary obligations, and therefore not an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution. A large part of the obligations incurred by every county may, without any great impropriety, be said to be involuntary, in the sense that the discharge of the duty in which they were incurred would not have been neglected or avoided without disregarding some provision of law; but if that test alone is to be the standard, a county is practically left free to contract unlimited obligations, notwithstanding the provisions of the Constitution. This would be violating the language of that instrument, and frittering away its meaning by construction."

Although it is admitted in that opinion that it is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down any general rule whereby so to classify such obligations, a further definition of the interpolated phrase "a liability imposed upon a county by law" was deemed essential, and it was there held that a liability which the county is not at liberty to evade or postpone is not within the prohibition, and the converse was stated as "a liability arising from the performance of some public duty of a discretionary character, or which the county authorities may, in their discretion, postpone indefinitely or temporarily until means are provided for the payment of the expenses incident thereto, cannot be so held." This, it seems to me, is a very uncertain and unsatisfactory rule by which so important a constitutional limitation is to be judged and applied. Indeed, it was said in that case that each case must be determined largely from its own facts, and by the doctrine of exclusion and inclusion. The plain intent of this clause of the Constitution is to require counties to transact business upon practically a cash basis. The county has authority to levy taxes annually upon all the taxable property within its limits, with which to raise sufficient revenue to pay its expenses (Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes [Or.] § 3085); and the law and the Constitution contemplate that it will exercise its powers in that respect.

So, also, certain offices have been created, and the duties thereof defined, to secure the enforcement of the criminal laws of the state. If the law contemplates that any expenditure, aside from the salaries of such officers, is to be made to assist them in the performance of their official duties, then it is also contemplated that such provision should be made by the county, under the taxing power, to provide in advance sufficient funds therefor.

The sheriff is the executive officer of the county, and his duties are specifically defined by § 1017, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes (Or.), and under certain circumstances he may command the power of the county (§ 1015); but the law contemplates that the necessary and usual expense incurred by him in the performance of his official duties must be provided for in advance, for, from the constitutional limitation, debts or liabilities incurred to suppress insurrection or invasion only are expressly excepted. Again, the district attorney is the public prosecutor (§ 991, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes [Or.]), and is required to institute proceedings before magistrates for the arrest of persons charged with or reasonably suspected of public offences, when he has information that such an offense has been committed (§ 993, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes [Or.]). And, again, a grand jury, having power to compel all persons to come before it and give testimony, is provided to inquire into suspected commission of crimes. Where the law has thus specifically provided methods and means to enforce the law, and to ascertain who, if any, have violated the criminal law, and to secure evidence against those charged, I do not think it can be consistently said, with sound reasoning, that the law has imposed upon the county an unavoidable duty to adopt other and different means at great expense to the county, to reach a coveted end, simply upon the claim that some officer has failed to effectively discharge his duty, or even upon a claim that the usual and legal method has proved ineffective in the particular case.

Certain it is that the debt in question was created by the act of the county, and was not imposed upon it by law; but, measured by the rule heretofore adopted by this court, and by which it is now attempted to be sustained as not within the prohibition, is was not created by the county in the performance of a duty imposed upon it by law, which could not be avoided or postponed, because it was not incurred in the manner that the law contemplates such duty is to be performed. Pacific Undertakers v. Widber, 113 Cal. 201, 45 Pac. 273. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

SUPERIOR MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 63, KIOWA COUNTY.

(28 Okla. 293, 114 Pac. 328.)

School district — limitation of indebtedness — contracts.

1. Under the provisions of § 4 of an act of Congress approved July 30, 1886 (24 Stat. at L. 171, chap. 818), a school district of a territory cannot become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to any amount which, in the aggregate, including existing indebtedness, exceeds 4 per centum of the value of the taxable property within such school district, to be ascertained by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and any contract entered into by its officers in violation of this section is void.

Same — acceptance and retention of supplies.

2. Where the aggregate indebtedness of a school district located in a territory is an excess of four per centum of the value of the taxable property within such school district, as shown by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes, the acceptance, retention, and use of furniture or supplies by the officers of such school district in its behalf will create no liability against the district for the value of the same.

(November 16, 1910.)

ERROR to the County Court for Kiowa County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover upon a warrant issued by defendant to plaintiff for the purchase price of certain school supplies and furniture sold to defendant and for the value of said property retained and used by it. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Morse & Standeven and James H. Wolverton, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant must either restore the property which it claims was unlawfully received, or it must compensate the owner for the value thereof.

Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. 676, 19 L. ed. 1040; Kenicott v. Wayne County, 16 Wall. 465, 21 L. ed. 320; Nugent v. Putnam County, 19 Wall. 252, 22 L. ed. 89; Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S. 492, 23 L. ed. 582; East Lincoln v. Davenport, 94 U. S. 806, 24 L. ed. 324; United States v. State Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 30, 24 L. ed. 647; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 299, 26 L. ed.

Headnotes by DUNN, Ch. J.

Note. — See note, post, 1058.

155; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 27 L. ed. 238, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 442; Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 355, 27 L. ed. 381, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 123, 27 L. ed. 675, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. 131 U. S. 371, 33 L. ed. 157, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770; Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 182, 37 L. ed. 1044, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; Aldrich v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 176 U. S. 620, 44 L. ed. 612, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498; Wrought-Iron Bridge Co. v. Utica, 17 Fed. 316; Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 56 Fed. 903; Provisional Municipality v. Lehman, 6 C. C. A. 349, 13 U. S. App. 411, 57 Fed. 324; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 65 Fed. 158; Mercer County v. Provident Life & T. Co. 19 C. C. A. 44, 43 U. S. App. 21, 72 Fed. 623; Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 3 Utah, 200, 2 Pac. 201; Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 256; Brown v. Atchison, 39 Kan. 37, 7 Am. St. Rep. 515, 17 Pac. 465; Lyons v. Woods, 5 N. M. 327, 21 Pac. 352; Paul v. Kenosha, 22 Wis. 266, 94 Am. Dec. 598; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 63, 20 Am. Rep. 504; Hays v. Galion Gaslight & Coal Co. 29 Ohio St. 330; Thompson v. Lambert, 44 Iowa, 239; State ex rel. Northwestern Nat. Bank v. Dickerman, 16 Mont. 278, 40 Pac. 698; Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91; Livingston v. School Dist. No. 7, 11 S. D. 150, 76 N. W. 301; Beach, Pub. Corp. § 226; Taylor, Priv. Corp. § 314; Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 176; Alleman v. Oklahoma City, 21 Okla. 142, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 511, 95 Pac. 468, 17 Ann. Cas. 184.

Mr. Thomas W. Conner for defendant in error.

Dunn, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents error from the county court of Kiowa county, being originally brought in that county by plaintiff in error as plaintiff, to recover judgment against the defendant in error as defendant, for $175.40 with 6 per cent interest from the 2d of September, 1903. The petition is in two counts; the first being upon a warrant issued and delivered by defendant to the plaintiff to cover the purchase price of certain school supplies and furniture sold and delivered to the defendant, and the second count is for the value of the said property which was delivered and received by the defendant, and which it still retains and uses.

It is conceded on the part of counsel for plaintiff in error that, under the rule of this court in the case of Ray v. School Dist. No. 9, 21 Okla. 88, 95 Pac. 480, it is not entitled to recover upon the warrant issued; 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) but it is insisted that it is entitled to recover a judgment against the district for the value of the property which it delivered and which the district received, retained, and still uses. At the time this property was sold and delivered to the school district, Oklahoma was a territory, and the defense to the action is made that plaintiff cannot recover on either count by reason of the provisions of § 4 of the act of Congress approved July 30, 1886 (24 Stat. at L. 171, chap. 818), commonly known as the "Harrison act," and which provides "that no political or municipal corporation, county, or other subdivision in any of the territories of the United States, shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to any amount, in the aggregate, including existing indebtedness, exceeding 4 per centum of the value of the taxable property within such corporation, county, or subdivision, to be ascertained by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness, and all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount, given by such corporation, shall be void. . . ."

It is conceded that, at the time of the purchase and delivery of the furniture, the price or value of which is herein sued for, the defendant school district was indebted in an amount in excess of the 4 per cent above mentioned. Notwithstanding this, however, it is the contention of counsel for plaintiff that the officers of the school district could not purchase, and the district receive, retain and use, the furniture without being liable. And a number of authorities are cited in support of the proposition that the obligation to do justice rests upon all persons, natural and artificial, and that if the school district obtained the money or property of others without authority of law, independent of any contract, it would be compelled to make restitution or compensation. Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall, 676, 684, 19 L. ed. 1040, 1042; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 299, 26 L. ed. 153, 155.

The facts and the law involved in these cases, however, are such as do not render them an authority to sustain in all particulars the contention which plaintiff here advances. Nor is plaintiff's contention sustained by the case of Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, 24 L. ed. 659, for, in that case, the Supreme Court of the United States, referring to the terms of the charter of the city alleged to have been violated, holds that the provision involved could not have been intended to prohibit incurring an indebtedness exceeding the sum named; that it was in no sense a limitation of the debt of the city. The rule laid down in the case of Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. 131 U. S. 371, 33 L. ed. 157, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770, relating to the ultra vires contracts entered into by officers of private corporations, where the concern has accepted and is enjoying the benefits, is as follows: "According to many recent opinions of this court, a contract made by a corporation, which is unlawful and void because beyond the scope of its corporate powers, does not, by being carried into execution, become lawful and valid, but the proper remedy of the party aggrieved is by disaffirming the contract and suing to recover, as on a quantum meruit, the value of what the defendant has actually received the benefit of." But this rule has, so far as our investigation has gone, never been extended to the point of creating an obligation against a municipal corporation to pay the value of goods, supplies, or other property, although it has received and retained them, where the same exceeded the legal limit of its debt-incurring power.

The language of the statute invoked is that a municipality shall not "become indebted in any manner or for any purpose." This same language is used in the Constitution of Illinois (§ 12, art. 9), and received a construction at the hands of the supreme court of that state in the case of Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626. Referring to this particular language, the court in the opinion says: "There is no difficulty in ascertaining the natural signification of the words employed in the clause of the Constitution under consideration, and to give them that meaning involves no absurdity or contradiction with other clauses of the Constitution. The prohibition is against becoming indebted,—that is, voluntarily incurring a legal liability to pay, 'in any manner or for any purpose' when a given amount of indebtedness has previously been incurred. It could hardly be probable that any two individuals of average intelligence could understand this language differently. It is clear and precise, and there is no reason to believe the convention did not intend what the words convey."

In other words, this language is intended as a limitation absolute, and is for the protection of the taxpayers against any liability on contracts or purchases made on behalf of the municipality by its agents or officers, beyond an amount certain. After that point is reached, they are powerless, and cannot in any manner or for any purpose burden it with any greater. It is manifest at a glance that to yield to the contention of counsel for plaintiff would virtually wipe out the protection intended by this statute, because, if the district could be made liable to any extent in excess of the legal limit for the value of property received, this would be one manner of creating indebtedness, and would be the manner to which resort would always be made whenever the necessity or desire to evade the law existed. And in such cases the more the actual danger of excessive indebtedness, and the greater the need for the protection afforded by the act, the greater would be the certainty of its being evaded and an enforceable liability incurred. One of the statutes of Illinois provided that the authorities of a school district might appropriate to the purchase of libraries and apparatus any surplus funds, after all necessary school expenses were paid. A district, prior to the existence of the conditions named in the statute, purchased a library, which was by the district received and used. On the district repudiating the contract, the party who sold the library contended that, having received and enjoyed it, the district was bound to pay its value. The supreme court of that state, in the case of Clark v. District No. 1, 78 Ill. 474, considering this contention, said: "The authority given to school directors by statute to 'appropriate to the purchase of libraries and apparatus any surplus funds, after all necessary school expenses are paid,' is a limitation of their power to make such purchases to the circumstances named, and is an implied restriction of any power to purchase generally on credit. A purchase of such articles by the school directors on a credit, where it does not appear that there were any surplus funds after all necessary school expenses were paid, applicable to such purchase, is void, and there is no contract implied by law to pay for articles thus purchased, arising from their receipt and use. The only remedy of the seller, under such circumstances, is to claim the property itself."

An exhaustive examination of the authorities on this subject discloses that, while courts have been astute to require and compel private corporations to pay for property purchased ultra vires by their agents and officers, where it has been of value and retained and used, they have guarded zealously the rights of taxpayers under statutes similar to the one we are now considering, and have with practical unanimity, held that persons dealing with public officers of municipalities do so at their peril, and are charged with full knowledge of the rights and powers of these agents and officers to make contracts which will bind their principals. The question has arisen in almost every conceivable form; but the conclusion reached by the courts has been one, and that to relieve the municipality of any liability whatsoever, either on the contract or for the actual value of the property delivered and received.

In the case of Salt Creek Twp. v. King Iron Bridge & Mfg. Co. 51 Kan. 520, 33 Pac. 303, it appeared that certain officers of a municipal township, without authority, entered into a written contract for the construction of a bridge in that township, the price of which was to be met by issuing bonds. The bridge was constructed in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract, and was accepted by the officials of the township. On suit being brought, it was contended on the part of the township that its officers were without power to make the contract for the bridge or to create any liability against the property of the township to pay therefor. The bridge company answered that the township officials supposed that they were proceeding according to law in making the contract; that they accepted the bridge and continued to use and retain it; and that if the officials of the township had no authority or exceeded their authority, in making the contract, the township should be required to pay the reasonable value of the bridge. In discussing these claims, the supreme court of that state, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Horton, said: "It is a well-settled rule that township or other municipal officers cannot do by indirection that which they might not do directly. State ex rel. Reed v. Marion County, 21 Kan. 419. If township officers may disregard all of the statutory provisions concerning the construction of and payment for bridges, and create a liability against the people of a township by accepting bridges or other work without any power so to do, and thereby make the township liable, then the provisions of the statute defining how bridges should be built and paid for have no force whatever. Under such a rule, the township officers may at any time build and accept bridges and create liabilities against the people of the township without a vote and without limit. As the contract between the township officers and the bridge and manufacturing company is void under the statute, we do not think the other facts disclosed show the township is estopped from asserting the want of power on the part of the township officers, or from defending against any liability for the bridge. There is no innocent holder of bonds in this case, and in fact no innocent parties. The township officers, as well as the bridge and manufacturing company, are presumed to know the law. The statute clearly declares the conditions upon which a municipal township may obtain bridges; but if the provisions of the statute are overlooked, or voluntarily cast aside by the parties, with full knowledge of all the facts, no estoppel of any kind can be created. There is a seeming hardship in refusing to pay for the bridge after the money of the company has completed it and it is in use upon a regular laid out public highway. But the want of legal authority to contract was known, or ought to have been known, by the company before it expended any of its money. Therefore it is at fault. Those dealing with a township must see to it that its officers have power to act. In this case nothing was concealed, and all the facts appear upon the public records. A township or other municipality can only act by the mode prescribed by law. Any other rule leaves the taxpayers at the mercy of the officers of the township and contractor, and would render all statutory provisions of limitation of power nugatory. Lewis v. Bourbon County, 12 Kan. 186; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1124; Daly v. San Francisco, 72 Cal. 154, 13 Pac. 321; Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 138; Newbery v. Fox, 37 Minn. 141, 5 Am. St. Rep. 830, 33 N. W. 333 (1887); Reichard v. Warren County, 31 Iowa, 381; Brady v. New York, 2 Bosw. 187; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. Of course, as the bridge was constructed upon the highway with the permission of the authorities, the company may remove the same. As the township refuses to pay for the bridge, it can have no interest or right to keep it."

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Additional authorities to the same effect as those above cited may be noted as follows: Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 153; Lee v. Monroe County, 52 C. C. A. 376, 114 Fed. 744; Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Utica (C. C.) 17 Fed. 316; La France Fire Engine Co. v. Syracuse, 33 Misc. 516, 68 N. Y. Supp. 894; Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Wilkes County, 111 N. C. 317, 16 S. E. 314; Harrison County Ct. v. Smith, 15 B. Mon. 155; Paul v. Kenosha, 22 Wis. 266, 94 Am. Dec. 598.

While, under the circumstances arising in this class of cases, all the authorities deny the right of recovery either on the contract or quantum meruit, still all agree that the municipality cannot keep the property, and that plaintiff is entitled to retake it. This seems to be the only remedy available.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court was correct, and the same is accordingly affirmed.

All concur, except Williams, J., not sitting.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Note. — Creation of indebtedness within the meaning of debt limit provisions.

- I. Scope, 1058.
- II. Definitions, 1058.
- III. Object of restricting indebtedness, 1060.
- IV. When indebtedness arises.
  - a. In general, 1062.
  - b. Obligations payable in instalments, 1063.
- V. Obligations payable out of special fund or current receipts.
  - a. In general, 1070.
  - b. Local improvements, 1072.
  - c. Income of year, 1077.
  - d. Anticipation of revenue, 1080.
  - e. Money in treasury, 1085.
  - f. Pledge or mortgage of receipts or property, 1085.
- VI. Obligations imposed by law.
  - a. In general, 1086.
  - b. Torts, 1097.
- VII. Refunding transactions, 1099.
- VIII. Miscellaneous obligations.
  - a. In general, 1103.
  - b. Purchase of equity of redemption, 1105.
  - c. Interest, 1106.
  - d. Judgments, 1107.
- IX. Coincidence of boundaries of municipalities, 1108.

I. Scope.

This note is limited to a discussion of the question of what amounts to the creation of an indebtedness within the meaning of debt limit provisions in the constitutions of the various states, in charters of municipalities, or in other statutes relating thereto. It does not include cases on the question of what are to be deemed assets to be deducted from liabilities in estimating the indebtedness of a state or municipal corporation in determining whether it has reach the limit;<sup>1</sup> nor does it include cases on the question of what constitutes borrowing within the meaning of statutes restricting the power of municipalities to borrow money.<sup>2</sup>

For earlier cases on effect of limitation of municipal indebtedness upon the acquisition of a water supply or sewer system, see note to Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co. 59 L.R.A. 604; and for a discussion of the question as of what time the assessed valuation is to be taken for purposes of determining the debt limit of a state or municipality, see note to Lewis v. Brady, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 149.

II. Definitions.

In a number of cases dealing with debt limit provisions, an attempt has been made to define the word "debt," but very little help can be gotten from such definitions. Whatever the word may mean when applied to ordinary transactions between individuals, it has been so modified in construing the constitutional and statutory provisions with reference to the creation of obligations, that the decisions involving a given state of facts must be relied on rather than the definitions. A few of these definitions, however, will be given. It has been said that a debt means a fixed and certain obligation to pay money or some other valuable thing or things, either in the present or in the future.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, it is said that the word has no fixed legal significance as has the word "contract," but is used in different statutes and constitutions in sense varying from a very restricted to a very general one. Its meaning, therefore, in any particular statute or constitution, is to be determined by construction, and decisions upon one statute or constitution often tend to confuse rather than aid in ascertaining its signification in another relating to an entirely different subject.<sup>4</sup> This is an accurate statement of what will be found in the decisions. It has been said that whether a claim or demand is a debt

<sup>1</sup> Jordan v. Andrus, 27 Mont. 22, 60 Pac. 118; Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y. 178, 89 N. E. 569; Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 492, 69 N. E. 470; Kelly v. Minneapolis, 63 Minn. 125, 30 L.R.A. 281, 65 N. W. 115; Brooke v. Philadelphia, 162 Pa. 123, 24 L.R.A. 781, 29 Atl. 387; Bank for Savings v. Grace, 102 N. Y. 313, 7 N. E. 162.

<sup>2</sup> Richmond v. McGirr, 78 Ind. 192; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 221, 17 L. ed. 531.

<sup>3</sup> Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 398.

There is no doubt of the meaning of the word "debt" as used in the law. It means "something owed;" "money due or to become due upon express or implied agreement." 1 Bouvier's Law Dict. title Debt.

<sup>4</sup> L.R.A. (N.S.)

It denotes not only an obligation of the debtor to pay, but the right of the creditor to receive and enforce payment. Burnham v. Milwaukee, 98 Wis. 128, 73 N. W. 1018.

<sup>4</sup> McNeal v. Waco, 89 Tex. 83, 33 S. W. 322.

The word "debt" as used in a constitutional provision that "not debt shall ever be created by any city, unless at the same time provision be made to assess and collect annually a sufficient sum to pay the interest thereon and create a sinking fund of at least 2 per cent thereon," and "no debt for any purpose shall ever be incurred in any manner by any city or county, unless provision is made, at the time of creating the same, for levying and collecting a or not is in no respect determined by reference to the time of payment. A sum of money which is certainly and in all events payable is a debt, without regard to the fact whether it be payable now or at a future time. A sum payable upon a contingency, however, is not a debt, and does not become a debt until the contingency has happened.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, it is held that a sum payable in any event, but not yet due, is a debt,—debitum in presenti, solvendum in futuro.<sup>6</sup>

Under a constitutional provision forbidding any municipal corporation from becoming indebted in any manner or for any purpose beyond a certain sum, the word "indebtedness" has been held to mean an agreement of some kind by the city to pay money, where no suitable provision has been made for the prompt discharge of the obligation imposed by the agreement.<sup>7</sup> It is said that an indebtedness cannot arise unless there is either a legal, equitable, or moral obligation to pay a sum of money to another who occupies the relation of creditor, and who has the legal or moral right to call upon or constrain the debtor to pay. It is not always essential to the existence of the indebtedness, that there should be an absolute legal right to coerce payment. It is, however, essential to the idea of a debt, that an obligation should have arisen out of a contract, express or implied, which entitles the holder thereof unconditionally to receive from the promisor a sum of money which the latter is under a legal or moral duty to pay without regard to any future contingency.<sup>8</sup> Indebtedness has been declared to be a state of being in debt, and a debt is defined to sufficient tax to pay interest thereon and provide at least 2 per cent as a sinking fund," means any pecuniary obligation imposed by contract, except such as was, at the date of the contract, within the lawful and reasonable contemplation of the parties, to be satisfied out of the current revenues for the year or out of some fund then within the immediate control of the corporation. Ibid.

The word "indebtedness" as used in a section of the Constitution providing that municipalities shall not become indebted to an amount "exceeding in any way the income and revenue provided for such year without the assent of two thirds," etc., refers to indebtedness created by contract. O'Brien v. Owensboro, 113 Ky. 680, 68 S. W. 858, 69 S. W. 800.

It is essential to the idea of a debt that the obligation must have arisen out of a contract, express or implied, in favor of someone occupying the relation of creditor, which entitles the latter to receive a sum of money, which obligation by possibility he might or ought to enforce against another. State ex rel. Cohen v. Hawes, 112 Ind. 323, 14 N. E. 87.

<sup>5</sup> People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 524.

A contract between the shippers of a cargo and the owners of a ship, that the latter shall receive a share of the profits, does not create a debt of the former to the latter until the termination of the voyage. Davis v. Ham, 3 Mass. 33; Frothingham v. Haley, 3 Mass. 68.

Under the trustee laws of Massachusetts, it has been held that the wages of a sailor, being contingent upon the arrival of the ship, are not a debt until the ship has arrived, and therefore, until then, not attachable. Wentworth v. Whittemore, 1 Mass. 471.

A covenant to pay rent quarterly creates no debt until it becomes due, for, before that time, the lessee may quit with the consent of the lessor, or he may assign his term with his consent, or he may be evicted 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by a title paramount to that of the lessor; in either of which cases he will be discharged from his covenant. Wood v. Partridge, 11 Mass. 488.

<sup>6</sup> People v. Arguello, supra.

Standing alone, the word "debt" is as applicable to a sum of money which has been promised at a future day as to a sum now due and payable. If we wish to distinguish between the two, we say of the former that it is a debt owing, and of the latter that it is a debt due. In other words, debts are of two kinds: solvendum in presenti, and solvendum in futuro. Ibid.

A debt payable in the future is no less a debt than if payable presently. Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626.

<sup>7</sup> Sackett v. New Albany, 88 Ind. 473, 45 Am. Rep. 467.

<sup>8</sup> Quill v. Indianapolis, 124 Ind. 292, 7 L.R.A. 681, 23 N. E. 788.

No good reason has been advanced why, under constitutions providing that no indebtedness shall be created "in any manner or for any purpose" beyond a certain amount, the word "indebtedness" should have any other than its ordinary signification, that is, the contraction of an obligation for which there is no present means of payment. Brashear v. Madison, 142 Ind. 685, 33 L.R.A. 474, 36 N. E. 252, 42 N. E. 349.

A debt in its general sense is a specific sum of money which is due or owing from one person to another, and denotes not only the obligation of the debtor to pay, but the right of the creditor to receive and enforce payment. Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Tele. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 45 N. E. 588, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124.

A debt in a general sense arises out of an express or implied promise made by one person to another to pay a sum of money. Heinl v. Terre Haute, 161 Ind. 44, 66 N. E. 450.

be "that which one person is bound to pay to another," or an "obligation." It is that which is due by express agreement, and its definition is not affected by the manner or condition upon which it is to be paid. The constitutional provision is a limitation upon the power of the city to be indebted, that is to say, to contract any indebtedness which shall exceed an amount fixed with reference to its taxable real estate; and if the question whether liabilities upon contract obligations are not to be included in ascertaining the present indebtedness is a debatable one, then it should be resolved in favor of the view which effectuates the purpose of the provision in all its entirety.<sup>9</sup>

III. Object of restricting indebtedness.

In interpreting debt limit provisions in the constitutions of the states and local statutes and charters of municipal corporations, the conditions which existed prior to their enactment, which they were designed to remedy, should not be forgotten. It was not until the people in many states found themselves carried along by a wave of public extravagance which was likely to bring them to bankruptcy, that they determined to put an end to the danger by setting a limit to expenditures, in the constitutions themselves. The evil was one of extreme seriousness. The debt limit provisions were written in the fundamental law to be obeyed. It is stated in a Pennsylvania case, in referring to the time when the constitutional provision in that state was first adopted, that "it is part of the open history of the times that many municipalities, in haste to get the advantages enjoyed by older and wealthier communities, entered recklessly into all kinds of projects under the name of public improvements, and in a few years found themselves, like heirs to an estate burdened with post-obits at ruinous rates, on or beyond the verge of bankruptcy. At the time of the framing of the Constitution, the subject was fresh in the public mind, notably in the cases of county and city bonds in aid of railroads, etc., in the western states, as found in the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States. Pennsylvania was not without its own experience two generations ago in the default of interest, nobly atoned for in the dark days of depreciated currency during the Civil War by the payment of all its obligations in gold, even though not so specified in the bond. The constitutional provision is intended as a restraint on this spendthrift tendency, to curb the extravagances of municipal expenditure on credit, to prevent municipalities from loading the future with obligations to pay for things the present desires, but cannot justly afford, and in short to establish the principle that beyond the defined limits they must pay as they go."<sup>10</sup> This was, no doubt, the experience of many other jurisdictions.<sup>11</sup> The clear and unmistakable pur-

<sup>9</sup> Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y. 178, 89 N. E. 569.

The Constitution is to be understood, prima facie at least, as using words in their general and popular sense, unless they are clearly technical in their nature. While the word "debt" has a technical use, of somewhat more limited signification than its common meaning, yet it is not naturally or usually a technical word. And it is to be noted that the Constitution uses in immediate and synonymous connection, the word "indebtedness," which is of wider and even less technical significance; and debt and indebtedness in the section in question are not used in any technical way, but in their broad general meaning of all contractual obligations to pay in the future for consideration received in the present. Keller v. Scranton, 200 Pa. 130, 86 Am. St. Rep. 708, 49 Atl. 781.

For what constitutes an "indebtedness" within the meaning of constitutional and statutory restrictions of indebtedness of municipal corporations, see also note to Beard v. Hopkinsville, 23 L.R.A. 402.

<sup>10</sup> Keller v. Scranton, 200 Pa. 130, 86 Am. St. Rep. 708, 49 Atl. 781.

<sup>11</sup> In Hopkins County v. St. Bernard Coal Co. 114 Ky. 153, 70 S. W. 289, it is said: "It is a part of the history of this state that in times of popular excitement many of the counties and towns of the state had voted subscriptions to railroads and other public improvements which had well-nigh wrecked them; and this section of the Constitution, which was borrowed from other states, was adopted as a remedy for the evil."

In adopting the constitutional provisions that no city, etc., shall incur indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without, etc.,—the framers had in mind the great and ever growing evil to which the municipalities of the state were subjected by the creation of a debt in one year, which debt was not, and was not expected to be, paid out of the revenues of that year, but was carried on into the succeeding year, increasing like a rolling snowball as it went, until the weight of it became almost unbearable upon the taxpayers. It was to prevent this abuse that the constitutional provision was enacted. McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, 44 Pac. 358.

The system previously prevailing in some of the municipalities of the state, by which liabilities and indebtedness were incurred by them far in excess of their income and revenue for the year in which the same were contracted, thus creating a floating indebtpose of the framers of the organic law, in inserting this provision, was effectually to protect persons residing in municipalities from the abuse of their credit, and the consequent oppression of burdensome, if not ruinous, taxation.<sup>12</sup> The mischief to be prevented was the creation of an excessive debt for local improvements or public works, or the loaning of municipal credit, so payable that the burden should not fall upon those who contracted the obligations, or on their revenues, but on posterity.<sup>13</sup> edness which had to be paid out of the income and revenue of future years, and which, in turn, necessitated the carrying forward of other indebtedness, was a fruitful source of municipal extravagance. The evil consequences of that system had been felt by the people at home, and witnessed elsewhere. It was to put a stop to all of that, that the constitutional provision in question was adopted. San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641.

At the time the Constitution was framed, the history of the country and of the state afforded examples of municipal corporations which had become bankrupt through the reckless and extravagant management of their governing bodies, and its framers doubtless had under consideration the evils which result both to the taxpayers and the creditors of such corporations, from an unlimited power to create debts. They seem to have kept prominently in view two objects,—the one to protect the inhabitants of municipalities against oppressive taxation; the other to protect the creditors and to preserve the financial honor of such corporations. Terrell v. Dessaint, 71 Tex. 770, 9 S. W. 593.

A recurrence to the history of the times will show that many counties and municipalities had become largely indebted beyond their capacity to pay, for public improvements of various kinds. In many of these states, for a considerable period of time, counties and municipalities aided railway builders, and many of them became bankrupt by reason of the obligations and liabilities incurred in such aid of railway companies and various other public improvements which were deemed advantageous in the rapid development of the territory included within the county. Rauch v. Chapman, 16 Wash. 568, 36 L.R.A. 407, 58 Am. St. Rep. 52, 48 Pac. 253.

<sup>12</sup> Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. The court said that under the Constitution of 1818 there was no limit to the power of the municipal assembly to borrow money on the credit of the state, or to authorize municipal bodies to incur indebtedness. Under the Constitution, the general assembly entered upon a gigantic system of internal improvements, paid for by money borrowed by the state; but it ended in bankrupting the state, and almost in the ruin of its citizens. Whilst laboring under the disastrous effect of this policy, the convention 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the main the courts have shown a disposition to uphold the debt limit provisions in the spirit in which they were enacted, although various schemes have been devised to evade them. The only tendency the courts have shown to waver has been where the obligations sought to be legalized, when beyond the debt limit, were those incurred in carrying on the necessary administration of the government of the state or municipality. Such obligations, when sustained, have been upheld on the theory that convened that framed the Constitution of 1848, and inserted as part of the instrument the 37th section of article 4, by which the power of the state to incur indebtedness was limited to $50,000, except to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or defend the state in war, or when the people should vote to create a debt.

When the convention of 1870 assembled, the abuse of municipal credit under legislative authority had become so manifest, and the necessity for its restriction so apparent, that it was supposed to be wise to apply a restriction to such bodies as well as to the state.

It was obviously the intention of the legislature in submitting, and of the people in adopting, the constitutional provision that no political or municipal corporation of the state whatever shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to an amount beyond a certain sum, arbitrarily to restrict the power of the municipal corporations to contract debt, to a limited per centum of their taxable property, and to require, when that limit of indebtedness has been reached, that such corporations should be prepared to pay for whatever of value they might obtain without the incurrence of any further indebtedness for any purpose whatever. Sackett v. New Albany, 88 Ind. 473, 45 Am. Rep. 467.

<sup>13</sup> Bank for Savings v. Grace, 102 N. Y. 313, 7 N. E. 162.

The constitutional provision was aimed at an actual, not a theoretical, indebtedness,—at a substantial liability which can be discharged only by the enforcement of a tax or an assessment which, when levied, will be a charge upon the taxpayer and a burden for him to remove,—not a formal obligation which may remain as evidence of a once existing debt, but which can in no way be regarded as a present debt to be enforced, and which, if not before canceled, becomes waste paper by the mere efflux of time. Ibid.

In Gubner v. McClellan, 130 App. Div. 716, 115 N. Y. Supp. 755, it is said that it has been the general policy of the state to meet certain expenses by taxation, and to distribute the payment of permanent public improvements over a period of years by the issuance of bonds of the municipalities, or, as denominated in the city of New York, corporate stock.

they were imposed by law; but, even in respect to this class of debts, some of the courts have stood firm, holding them to be within the constitutional inhibition. Many municipalities were indebted beyond the constitutional limit at the time of its adoption, and yet they have been able to carry on the public business without creating further indebtedness. The history of both states and municipalities since the adoption of the pay-as-you-go policy beyond a certain limit has been satisfactory, proving the wisdom of limiting public expenditure, and showing that there is no reason why these provisions should not be rigidly enforced.

IV. When indebtedness arises.

a. In general.

Under provisions limiting indebtedness in any year to the income and revenue provided for the year, it may become important to know when an indebtedness arises, in order to determine whether it exceeds the limit set by the Constitution. Where the contract is entire, and payments are not to be made in instalments, it has been held, as in TRASK v. LIVINGSTON COUNTRY, that the indebtedness arises where the contract is made. The decision in LOGANSPOUT V. JORDAN is not in conflict with this rule, since in that case the amount which the city was to pay for the local improvement was not ascertained until the final assessment of special benefits arising therefrom was made, and hence the indebtedness was held to arise at that time. In the case of a contract the amount of the indebtedness would be determinable at the time it is made. So it has been held that where the proposition for county aid to a railroad upon stipulated conditions has been submitted to the electors of the county, and approved by their vote, and a contract is entered into pursuant thereto, an indebtedness is then created against the county, and not at the time of the completion and acceptance of the work.<sup>14</sup> A contract for lighting, to be performed partly within the year in which it is executed, and partly in future years, creates a liability when the contract is made.<sup>15</sup> Outstanding contracts validly entered into by a city for a public improvement create an indebtedness against the city within the purview of the Constitution. They are not mere agreements for future indebtedness to be incurred upon performance by the party contracted with.<sup>16</sup> But the acceptance of a bid for the construction of a schoolhouse, it has been held, will not be considered as the creation of an indebtedness, where, at the time the bid was accepted, it was understood between the school board and the contractor that a formal contract was to be signed at a future date, the contract to be acceptable to the board, the contractor to furnish a bond subject to the approval of the board, it being apparent that the parties did not on the day of the acceptance assent to all the terms of the contract.<sup>17</sup> And under a statute providing that no corporate bonds issued in exchange for railroad stock "shall be delivered, or be valid if delivered," until the road shall have been completed and in operation, a municipality issuing such bonds has been held not to incur indebtedness thereafter until the completion of the road.<sup>18</sup>

And a debt has been said to be created

<sup>14</sup> Crogater v. Bayfield County, 99 Wis. 1, 74 N. W. 635, 77 N. W. 187.

<sup>15</sup> Kiichli v. Minnesota Brush Electric Co. 58 Minn. 418, 49 Am. St. Rep. 523, 59 N. W. 1088.

The rule that the liability of a city is to be determined at the time the engagement was entered into, asserted in Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 308, was recognized in Nankivil v. Yeosock, 7 Kulp, 518. See infra, IV. b, note 35.

<sup>16</sup> Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y. 178, 89 N. E. 569. It was the referee's opinion that the indebtedness to be taken into account is the indebtedness or the amount due and payable under such a contract "at the time the test is made." Gray, J., in an extended consideration of this question, said that if the provision applies, not to the time of the execution of the contract, but only to the time when payment becomes due, very remarkable results may follow. "To illustrate," said he, "if, prior to the time of the completion of the contract for an extensive public improvement, made when the margin of the city's debt 37 I.R.A. (N.S.) limit, as measured by an indebtedness consisting in direct or absolute obligations, seemed to warrant it, the debt limit is reached through the issuance of bonds to meet payments upon other contracts subsequently made, but completed at an earlier date, is the obligation of payment upon the first contract avoided? Can the provision be invoked by a taxpayer to defeat an obligation of the city valid and binding when incurred? I do not think we should agree to that. Then, may the validity of a contract obligation depend upon conditions as determined by subsequent facts? If contracts are binding when made, are they to be invalidated by after-occurring events in the city's financial career? If the answer is obvious it is at once suggested to the mind that the constitutional debt limitation does include within its provision the actual or estimated indebtedness upon such contracts."

<sup>17</sup> Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 423, 63 N. E. 262.

<sup>18</sup> State ex rel. Marinette, T. & W. R. Co. v. Tomahawk, 96 Wis. 73, 71 N. W. 86.

when services are rendered or goods sold and delivered, and not when warrants therefor are issued.<sup>19</sup> A debt, it has been declared, is created within the meaning of a constitutional provision limiting the power of the legislature to create indebtedness beyond a certain amount, when a statute is passed authorizing an expenditure, and not when the bonds issued therefor are sold, and the money received therefor.<sup>20</sup>

b. Obligations payable in instalments.

In determining whether a municipality which has reached or nearly reached its debt limit may contract for an obligation payable in instalments, the aggregate amount of which would be greater than it would be permitted to engage for, two important questions arise: First, whether a present indebtedness is created for the full amount or for the amount of a single instalment, and second, whether such an obligation may be said to create an indebtedness within the meaning of the debt limit provisions for anything more than the single instalments as they become due. Contracts payable in instalments may be divided into two kinds: Those in which the liability of the municipality is to a certain extent contingent, that is, dependent upon the furnishing of something for which it agrees to pay a certain amount annually or monthly for a period of years; and those in which the liability may be fixed, but payable in instalments, as a contract for the erection of a public building or a waterworks plant, or for the digging of a sewer, payment for which is postponed to the future. This distinction is made in some of the cases, but is not observed in others.<sup>21</sup> There would seem to be little ground for the distinction where the only contingency is the performance of the contract, as in a case where instalments on a construction contract are to become due as the work is completed; but if the contract price is payable in instalment, after the work is finished and accepted there would be no contingency. The ground upon which many of the cases treating of service furnished municipalities in instalments are based is that a present liability is not created for the contract price, the indebtedness arising only when the service is furnished. So, in holding that a statutory provision that no contract shall be made or expenses incurred by a city, unless an appropriation shall have been previously made concerning such expenses, etc., does not apply to a contract for the supply of gas for a period of years, the court said that no indebtedness was to accrue until after the company had commenced supplying gas, and that what this would be it was impossible to determine in advance. If a prior appropriation was essential to the validity of the contract, then it could not have been executed at all,

<sup>19</sup> Mountain Grove Bank v. Douglas County, 146 Mo. 42, 47 S. W. 944.

Under a paving contract providing that payments were to be made as the work progressed, and the whole to be paid when the job was completed, it was held that the compensation to the contractor was not a debt within the sense of the charter provision limiting the amount of expenditure during the year, until the services were performed and the contractor entitled to be paid. Weston v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y. 110.

<sup>20</sup> Lewis v. Brady, 17 Idaho, 251, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 149, 104 Pac. 900.

<sup>21</sup> Under a contract in which it was agreed to build an addition to a county courthouse, and to complete the same within a certain time, it was held that the constitutional and statutory provisions by which a county is forbidden "to incur any indebtedness exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year" were not violated, where it appeared that the income and revenue of the county for the year when the payments were due were sufficient to meet the payments falling due under the terms of the contract, and to discharge the other current obligations of the county. Smilie v. Fresno County, 112 Cal. 311, 44 Pac. 556.

In McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, 44 Pac. 358, in holding that annual payments for 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

a sewer farm are not for a present liability, and do not violate a provision of the Constitution that contracts for indebtedness in excess of the revenue for each year are void, the court declared that in a certain very restrictive sense it may be said that a liability is created by such a contract, but to call it a present liability for the aggregate amount of the payment in the contract, and contemplated thereafter to be made, is not legally permissible.

In a case of contract extending over a period longer than one year, it may be readily seen that the municipality is abundantly protected, and that it is the contractors therewith who subject themselves to the peril and risk of loss. If there are not revenues for any given year sufficient and available for the payment of his claims for that year, those claims become waste paper, and are not carried over as a charge against the income and revenue of a succeeding year. Ibid.

A contract for the construction of a courthouse and jail, and the payment of an annual rental, the title at the end of the rental period to vest in the county, does not create a present indebtedness against the county, for a sum equal to the aggregate amount of such rentals for the entire period for which the contract is to run. Giles v. Dennison, 15 Okla. 55, 78 Pac. 174.

for the reason that it was impossible to compute the amount which would be due during the twenty-five years that the contract had to run, even if it had the power to make such an appropriation for such a length of time, or during any part of said time.<sup>22</sup> In Illinois, however, instalment contracts for public service are held to be within debt limit provisions.<sup>23</sup> If the obligation, whether for public service or the purchase of property, or anything else, is contingent, it has been held that there is no indebtedness in the constitutional sense.<sup>24</sup> But in Illinois, although it has

<sup>22</sup> Leadville Illuminating Gas Co. v. Leadville, 9 Colo. App. 400, 49 Pac. 268.

It is the rule of Indiana that when a municipal corporation contracts for necessary things, such as water or light, and agrees to pay for it annually or monthly as furnished, the contract does not create an indebtedness for the aggregate sum of all the instalments, since the indebtedness for each year or month does not come into existence until it is earned. The earning of each year's or month's compensation is essential to the existence of the debt. LaPorte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 350, 45 N. E. 588.

<sup>23</sup> In East St. Louis Gaslight & Coke Co. v. East St. Louis, 45 Ill. App. 591, it was said that the time when gas is furnished under a lighting contract is the time when the debt therefor is incurred, not when the contract was executed.

And the aggregate sum due on a thirty-year lighting contract was said not to be a debt incurred at the making of the contract, within the meaning of the constitutional debt limit provision. East St. Louis v. East St. Louis Gaslight & Coke Co. 98 Ill. 415, 38 Am. Rep. 97. The court said that there was no indebtedness in advance of anything being furnished, but the indebtedness arose as gas was furnished from night to night during the whole period. When the company had furnished gas for a certain month, then there was a liability, but not a debt.

But this was declared to be obiter in Chicago v. McDonald, 176 Ill. 404, 52 N. E. 982.

Some cases have held that a contract by the municipality to pay for the annual supply of necessities, such as light and water, upon rendering the services or furnishing the supplies, is not the incurring of a present indebtedness in the constitutional sense; but Illinois is committed to a contrary doctrine. Ibid.

An agreement to pay $1,610 annually for arc lights, during thirty years, would constitute an indebtedness for the whole amount, and if the aggregate amount were in excess of the debt limit, the contract would be illegal. Evans v. Holman, 244 Ill. 596, 91 N. E. 723.

For a similar reason, a contract for furnishing electric lights to a city, to be paid for monthly, was held void. Schnell v. Rock Island, 232 Ill. 89, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 874, 83 N. E. 462.

<sup>24</sup> In Toomey v. Bridgeport, 79 Conn. 229, 64 Atl. 215, 7 Ann. Cas. 148, in holding that a contract for the removal of garbage, calling for the payment of a sum of money greater in the aggregate than the amount allowed by the city charter to be appropriated in any one year, was valid, the court said: "There is a clear distinction between the expenditure of a sum, or the making of a contract, creating a present indebtedness for a sum during any one year in excess of the revenues or appropriations for that year, and a contract stipulating for the payment of annual sums creating an annual indebtedness for several years. the aggregate amount of which payments or debts would exceed the revenue or appropriation for any one year, but no one of which annual payments or debts would exceed the revenue or appropriation for the year in which it was to be made or incurred. Such restrictions in municipal charters upon the expenditures of each year as those contained in the one before us are not to be construed as prohibiting the municipalities from making contracts for a reasonable term of years for usual and necessary things, and stipulating therein for annual payment, which will be within the revenue and appropriations for the several years in which they are to be made, when it is for the best interests of the municipalities that such contracts should be made, and their provisions are fair and reasonable."

A contract by which it is agreed to supply a city with a fire alarm and police telegraph system within twelve months from the date of the contract, the contract to continue for five years for the completion and acceptance of the system, the city to pay a certain sum per month rent each and every month during the running of the contract, with the privilege of purchasing the plant and system at any time during the five years for a certain sum, was held not to create a present liability so as to bring it within the inhibition of the constitutional provision that no city "shall incur an indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it in such year," and of a charter provision that "in no case shall a levy be created or a warrant drawn against any fund beyond the actual amount of money existing in the fund wherewith to meet the same." The liability was held to be one that might never become due. Doland v. Clark, 143 Cal. 176, 76 Pac. 953.

Where a city, the owner of certain land, entered into a contract with a person by which he was to build a city hall thereon for the use of the city, the building to remain his property, unless the city should exercise the option to purchase the same, the cost not to exceed $75,000, the building, when completed, to be leased to the been said that a contingent debt is some sort of a debt,<sup>25</sup> it has been recognized that an obligation might be contingent so as not to create an indebtedness within the meaning of debt limit provisions.<sup>26</sup> city for twelve years, with the right of renewal for five years longer, at a rental of $7,200, to be paid annually as the sum should accrue from year to year, was held not to create an indebtedness for the aggregate amount. South Bend v. Reynolds, 155 Ind. 70, 49 L.R.A. 795, 57 N. E. 706. The court said that the city was under no obligation whatever to pay anything for the erection of the building or the purchase of the same when erected. If it attempted to exercise its option, but could not do so without violating the constitutional limitation as to indebtedness, it might be enjoined from doing so.

While, in a plain case of indebtedness be-

Where a city entered into a contract for the purchase of a new cemetery, in which it had the right to acquire title to a tract of land for cemetery purposes on payment of a certain sum, part of which amount was paid, and the city had the option of quitting payment at any time, and of taking title to such property as it had paid for, it was held that this did not create an indebtedness, because whether or not the city should pay anything further on the contract was optional. Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476.

So, the mere fact that a statute offering $5 for each coyote killed did not specify the total amount that would be paid, and that under its terms, in the course of years, claims might possibly accrue and remain unpaid that, with other debts, would exceed the constitutional debt limit, would not render it invalid. Bickerdike v. State, 144 Cal. 681, 78 Pac. 277.

In Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396, it is said: "Suppose a man having a family to support and is without other means to do it except his salary, which is adequate for that purpose. He is compelled to rent a house to live in, and by a contract for a term of years he can reduce its cost, and he therefore makes a lease for ten years at $300 per year, or $3,000 for the term, the rent being payable monthly, quarterly, or annually. Has that man created an indebtedness of $3,000? Does any fair or legitimate meaning of the word 'indebtedness' or 'indebted,' or does any general acceptance of its meaning, require us to affirm that he is indebted? We think not. Or, if, instead of renting a house, he should contract for the board of his family for a like term, at $1,000 per year, does he thereby become indebted in the sum of $10,000? It seems to us not."

<sup>25</sup> A debt payable upon a contingency, as upon the happening of some event, such as the rendering of services or the delivering of property, etc., is some kind of a debt, and therefore within a constitutional provision forbidding the incurring of legal liability to pay "in any manner or for any purpose." Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626. The court said that if the contract or undertaking contemplates in any contingency a liability to pay, when the contingency occurs the liability is absolute,—the debt exists,—and it differs from a present unqualified promise to pay only in the manner by which the indebtedness was incurred.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

yond the constitutional limit, the fact that to disallow it might cripple the administration of municipal affairs would have no weight, this fact has apparently had some influence in moving the courts to their decisions when the question was considered

<sup>26</sup> In the McDonald Case, supra, note 23, the only contingency or uncertainty as to whether or not the city would be liable to pay at the end of the month was that which might arise from the failure of the contractors to perform the contract, the amount to be paid being definitely ascertained and fixed by the terms of the agreement when entered into. In the case of Chicago v. Galpin, 183 Ill. 399, 55 N. E. 731, the question was whether the amount of a contract for the furnishing of lights was not unascertained, and to be determined at the end of each month by the number of lamps actually lighted. Under a contract providing that the lamps to be lighted were a certain designated number "more or less," it was held that the amount was not thereby rendered indefinite and uncertain, the parties simply recognizing by the use of the words "more or less" the probable result that one or more of the lamps for one or more nights during a month might not be lighted, the agreement on the part of the city being in effect to pay for the whole number of lamps. But the court said: "It can readily be seen that a contract which leaves the amount to be paid to be ascertained at the end of a month or a year cannot in all cases be treated as creating an indebtedness at the time the contract is entered into, violative of these limitations. Suppose, in this case, the city had not yet reached the limit of indebtedness, but the complainants had contended that the liability created by these contracts would carry it beyond that limit. In that case, if the contracts left the amount uncertain and undetermined, the conclusive answer to the contention would be,—whether or not the amount, when ascertained, added to the indebtedness already incurred, will exceed the constitutional limit, cannot be ascertained until the end of the month, when the lamps lighted and maintained are counted. We are inclined to the view that if the contracts properly construed do not fix the amount of their liability from their dates, they should not be held to create an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution. If it be said some indebtedness would arise, though the amount is undetermined, the answer would doubtful, as where the contracts have called for payment in instalments.<sup>27</sup> The weight of authority favors the view that obligations for public service under contracts calling for payment in instalments as it is rendered do not create an indebtedness against the municipality until the service is performed, at which time the instalments become due.<sup>28</sup> It has been said that a contract for water and light which is payable in instalments, to run for a number of years, does not create an indebtedness for the aggregate amount of the contract price, since the indebtedness would arise only as the water and lights were furnished and used, and if paid for as agreed would never be a fixed sum is as necessary to the creation of indebtedness by contract, in the common acceptance of the term 'indebtedness,' as other requisites of the contract. A debt or 'indebtedness' means a determinate or definite liability."

A contract for the aggregate indebtedness of $13,000 for the purchase of an electric light plant, payable in annual instalments, cannot be said to be not fixed because it includes the payment of interest, taxes, operating expenses, repairs, and insurance, the cost of some of which items cannot be definitely known in advance. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. People, 200 Ill. 541, 66 N. E. 148.

<sup>27</sup> In Toomey v. Bridgeport, 79 Conn. 229, 64 Atl. 215, 7 Ann. Cas. 148, the court said that it would be unfortunate for its taxpayers, if a municipality was required each year to make a new contract for the removal and disposal of its garbage, or for its supply of water or gas and like necessities. The fact that persons and corporations making such contracts must necessarily incur a large expense merely for carrying a suitable plant or equipment for performing the work to be done would generally make it necessary for municipalities to expend a much larger sum to procure the performance of such a contract for a single year, than the annual sum required to be paid under such a contract for a term of several years.

If a city were not allowed to contract for light for some reasonable length of time, and the individual or company were compelled to trust, for his compensation from year to year, to the varying mood of city councils, no one would engage in such a hazardous enterprise. Denver v. Hubbard, 17 Colo. App. 346, 68 Pac. 993.

A contract to furnish a town with lights for a series of years is not invalidated, because, in the aggregate, the sum due in yearly instalments exceeds the debt limit. Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486, 13 L.R.A. 647, 28 N. E. 94. The court said that if municipal corporations could not contract for a long period of time for such things as light and water, the result would be disastrous, for it is a matter of common knowledge that it requires a large outlay of money to provide machinery and appliances for supplying towns and cities with light and water, and that no one will incur the necessary expenses for such machinery and appliances, if only short periods are allowed to be provided for by contract. The courts cannot presume that the legislature meant so to cripple the municipalities of the state as to prevent them from 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) securing light upon reasonable terms, and in the ordinary mode in which such a thing as electric light or gas is obtained.

In Welch Water, Light & P. Co. v. Welch, 64 W. Va. 373, 62 S. E. 498, Brannon, J., said: "Why cannot a town make an agreement for light and water for a period beyond a year, to be paid for in instalments in future after the light and water shall have been furnished, though the aggregated instalments would exceed the limit of the Constitution? If it could not, it would be hurtful to the town's powers. It can make a contract for one year, and why not for several, if the cost for one year does not go beyond the limit? Is it not current expense? The Constitution is intended to forbid a fixed present debt payable in the future of a permanent nature, not current annual expenditures."

In Dively v. Cedar Falls, 27 Iowa, 227, the court said that "the obligation to pay, so far as the time of its inception as between the parties is concerned, is one thing, and an actual indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution quite another. If A should undertake to build a courthouse within three years, doing so much and to be paid accordingly each year, the obligation of the contract would arise when executed, but the indebtedness under the Constitution (if there was none other) would be measured by that to be paid each year. If this is not so, then it would be impossible in a majority of instances to even contract for the most necessary public buildings without a prior levy and deposit of the funds in the public treasury. This the Constitution never intended. And while fully disposed to so construe this provision as to guard well the public against onerous and unjust taxation, we are not justified in so reading it as to stop every public improvement or municipal work."

<sup>28</sup> A contract for necessary expenses payable in instalments does not create an indebtedness for the aggregate amount. South Bend v. Reynolds, 155 Ind. 70, 49 L.R.A. 795, 57 N. E. 706.

An annual sum to be paid monthly, for lighting the streets for a limited term, is not the incurring of a new indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution. Wade v. Oakmont, 185 Pa. 479, 30 Atl. 939.

A contract for gas, to be paid for from month to month when furnished, does not create a debt against the municipality. New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans, 42 La. Ann. 188, 7 So. 559.

A contract for the supply of water for a term of years for fire purposes, at a certain sum annually, is not a debt. Mer- exceed the rate of a single instalment.<sup>29</sup> A municipal corporation may contract for a future supply of water for the city's needs, and stipulate for the payment of an annual rental as the water is furnished, notwithstanding the aggregate of such payments during the life of the contract may exceed the amount limited by the charter.<sup>30</sup> A contract to pay for rent for suitable offices for the officers of a city, annually or monthly, does not create an indebtedness for the amount of all the annual or monthly payments.<sup>31</sup> So, a contract by a county to pay an accountant $3,300 as his work of examcantile Trust & Deposit Co. v. Columbus, 161 Fed. 135.

If the execution of a contract for the supply of a city with electric lights creates a debt at all, within the purview of the debt limit provision in the Constitution, the extent of the debt is only the amount of the annual payment provided for, and not the aggregate amount contracted for. Denver v. Hubbard, 17 Colo. App. 346, 68 Pac. 993.

A contract to pay for lighting at a certain sum annually does not create a debt for the aggregate sum of the annual instalments, since the debt for each year does not come into existence until the compensation for each year has been earned. Foland v. Frankton, 142 Ind. 546, 41 N. E. 1031; Seward v. Liberty, 142 Ind. 551, 42 N. E. 39.

Contracts whereby municipal corporations make provision in advance for such prime necessities as light and water, and incur obligations therefor, to be met from time to time, as those necessities are furnished, from current revenues, do not fall within the restrictive operation of Rev. Stat. 1876, § 2448, which prohibits such corporations from contracting debts without providing, in the ordinance by which they are contracted, for their payment. Blanks v. Monroe, 110 La. 944, 34 So. 921.

The rule that a promise to pay for prospective services as they are performed, or instalments of interest for future forbearance of money, does not constitute any indebtedness until each instalment becomes due, is not changed in respect to hydrant rentals by a city, by the fact that the city agrees to pay the rentals to the trustees of the mortgage on the plant, on the theory that the city could not, under such circumstances, be released by the waterworks company, from the obligation. Connor v. Marshfield, 128 Wis. 280, 107 N. W. 639.

<sup>29</sup> Anoka Waterworks, E. L. & P. Co. v. Anoka, 109 Fed. 580.

Where the contract was for the rental of lights for the use of a city, and payment therefor was to be made only upon the performance of the services provided for, and the annual rental did not exceed the amount the city council was legally authorized to collect and appropriate for each year, it was held not to create an indebtedness against the city within the meaning of the Constitution, forbidding the creation of an indebtedness by the city without providing for the collection of a sufficient amount to pay interest thereon and provide a sinking fund of at least 2 per cent. Dallas Electric Co. v. Dallas, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 323, 58 S. W. 153.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Under a charter provision that a city shall have no power to borrow money or contract any debt which cannot be paid out of the revenue of the fiscal year, etc., the fact that a lighting contract is to run for eight years will not render it illegal, where it does not appear that the city will not be able to meet the instalments as they fall due without exceeding the revenue of the fiscal year. Merrill R. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 80 Wis. 358, 49 N. W. 965.

Indebtedness for the entire period an electric light plant contract is to run, and the amount of wages of teachers for the entire period covered by their contracts, need not be taken into consideration in determining whether the city has reached the debt limit. Herman v. Oconto, 110 Wis. 660, 86 N. W. 681.

<sup>30</sup> Joseph v. Joseph Waterworks Co. 57 Or. 586, 111 Pac. 864, rehearing denied in 57 Or. 592, 112 Pac. 1083.

An objection that a contract for the supply of water and light provides for an expenditure of $100,000 in twenty years, and that the city is forbidden to make such an expenditure without the vote of the people, is inapplicable to a contract providing for a comparatively small annual rental. Cunningham v. Cleveland, 39 C. C. A. 211, 98 Fed. 657.

A contract for the supply of water for a number of years, payable quarterly, does not create an indebtedness for the aggregate amount of the contract price. ALLISON v. CHESTER. The court said that where the contract is intended to provide for the furnishing of a municipality with water to be used for public purposes, the payment therefor to be made from year to year, such contract should not be construed or treated as the creation of an indebtedness within the inhibition of the Constitution, except as to the amount actually fallen due, but as a mode or means of providing for the necessary current expenses of the municipal government. True, the revenues of succeeding years, to a certain extent, become bound for the future performance of the contract, and beyond the discretion of the municipality to alter or abrogate; but a supply of water is an absolute necessity, indispensable to the very existence of the people, and without such authority so to contract a municipality would be entirely helpless.

<sup>31</sup> South Bend v. Reynolds, 155 Ind. 70, 49 L.R.A. 795, 57 N. E. 708.

A prison lease contract for $10,000 a month is not unconstitutional on the theory that it appropriates $600,000 in the aggregate, and creates a debt or liability against the city in excess of the debt limit, ining the books progressed, at the rate of $50 on each year investigated, and the rest when completed, made after it had passed its debt limit, was held not shown to be invalid, where it did not appear that the county would not be able to pay out of its current revenues all of its current expenses as well as the instalment to become due under the contract.<sup>33</sup>

The distinction between contracts for public service payable in instalments as the service is rendered, and contracts for the payment of a definite sum in the future in instalments, as already pointed out, is that there is no contingency as to the latter contracts, after that which has been contracted for is rendered and accepted, and nothing remains but to pay the contract price in since the appropriation is to take effect in the future as the services under the contract are rendered. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429. The court said that the lessee could not have claimed at any time after the making of the contract the aggregate of all the monthly instalments, because the state never owed him that amount. The state became indebted only as the services were each month performed. The aggregate amount of the salaries of the justices of the supreme court and of the several district courts of the state would exceed during the period of six years for which they were elected the limit of debt fixed by the Constitution, and yet it would hardly be contended that an act of the legislature appropriating money for their salaries as they respectively became due would be for that reason unconstitutional.

The decision in the McCauley Case, was adhered to in People ex rel. McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11.

<sup>33</sup> Perry County v. Gardner, 155 Ind. 165, 57 N. E. 908.

<sup>34</sup> The distinction between a contract for the furnishing of gas to the city, and a contract to build and set up waterworks for a specified sum, one fourth to be paid down and the balance at different times in the future, is that in the former case the liability is not incurred until the article is furnished from time to time, the consideration being received at stated times during the life of the contract, while in the latter case the entire consideration is to be received at once and to be paid in the future. In the first case an indebtedness is created, and in the second case no liability arises on the execution of the contract. East St. Louis v. Flannigan, 36 Ill. App. 50.

A contract for the erection of a building at a certain specified price, the building to be complete at a certain date, and payment for which is to be made as the work progresses, on estimates to be made by certain architects, is in effect a contract to pay the price agreed on by the date of the completion of the work, and where the amount thereof is more than can constitutionally be raised by taxes without the future instalments.<sup>35</sup> Although a contract for the supplying of a city with lights may not create a debt until the lights are furnished, this rule does not apply to the construction of a plant for the purpose of supplying electric lights. Where the contract is for the construction of such a plant, and the time of payment is postponed to a later date, and no special levy for the purpose of erecting such a plant is authorized, the rule is well settled that the sums to become due in the future must all be taken into account in estimating the amount of existing indebtedness of the municipality.<sup>36</sup> A contract by which a market house is to be built for a city, the city to pay a rental equal to 6 per cent of the entire cost of the building and value of the real estate, the authority of the voters exhibited by election, the contract creates a debt not authorized by such Constitution. Butts v. Little, 68 Ga. 272. But the court stated that if the liability to be incurred could be so arranged as not to exceed one fifth of 1 per cent annually on the assessed value of the taxable property of the county, the contract might stand.

But in Lewis v. Lofley, 92 Ga. 804, 19 S. E. 57, it was held that under a provision which forbids any county to incur a debt without first submitting the matter to a popular vote, "except for a temporary loan or loans to supply casual deficiencies of revenue, not to exceed one fifth of 1 per centum of the assessed value of taxable property therein," a contract for the building of a courthouse without the sanction of popular vote is illegal, although so arranged that, with the means on hand, the cost of the building can, as it falls due, be met annually by a levy of one fifth of 1 per cent on the assessed value of the taxable property of said county, and the liability to be incurred can be so arranged as not to exceed one fifth of 1 per cent. The last-mentioned case was overruled on this point.

<sup>36</sup> Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476. The court said that otherwise the city might, by such contracts, absorb all the general revenue in advance, and leave nothing for the payment of current expenses. "Suppose," declared the court, "a city should anticipate all its general revenues, and thus leave nothing for the payment of current expenses, and suppose, further, that it should issue warrants for the payment of these expenses, which were not paid for want of funds, could not the holder of these warrants enforce them against the city, and, if enforced, and the city is compelled to pay (as no doubt it would be obliged to do) the amount thereof in addition to the amounts previously appropriated for improvements, would not the very object of the constitutional provision be thwarted, and a wise provision of our fundamental law rendered nugatory? The answer to agreement being for a term of twenty-five years, with the right of election on the part of the city to purchase the property during the term in the manner specified in the agreement, was held to create a debt against the city, although the amount to be paid is specified as rental.<sup>35</sup> A contract for the purchase of an electric light plant by the city for $13,000, payable in annual instalments of $1,000, creates an indebtedness in the aggregate amount, within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>36</sup>

But where a city has already exceeded its debt limit, it cannot create an indebtedness even by instalment, since each instalment would be an indebtedness as it becomes due.<sup>37</sup>

In Illinois, however, where, as has been these propositions is so obvious that no amount of refinement can add anything to the conclusion."

That a city does not obligate itself to pay more under a contract for a lighting plant and the expense of operating the same, than it had theretofore paid for the lighting alone, does not authorize it to enter into a contract for the construction of such a plant, in violation of the constitutional debt limit provision. Ibid.

A city indebted beyond the constitutional limit cannot, through a statutory city hall commission appointed by the city, become further indebted by the issuing of the bonds of the commission for a sum necessary for the erection of a city hall, the city to convey to the commission intrust its present city hall lots and buildings for the purpose of securing the payment of the bonds, the buildings to be erected on such lots to be held for the payment of the bonds, the city to raise such sum annually as may be necessary to pay all expenses for repairs, insurance, and management of such building, in a sum equal to the annual interest on the bonds issued and outstanding, the city to become a tenant of the building, under such provisions and directions as the city council may direct, the city being authorized to assume the indebtedness represented by the bonds whenever it could do so constitutionally, the city, and not the commission, being liable for damages in respect to the erection and repair of the building. Reynolds v. Waterville, 92 Me. 292, 42 Atl. 553. The majority of the court considered the true nature of the transaction to be the hiring of money by the city upon the credit of city property through the intervention of a trustee.

A city cannot, on the pretense of renting a city hall through a commission appointed for that purpose, create a debt beyond the constitutional limit, when it is apparent that the city is to have not merely the use of the building, but the building itself, the city really undertaking to purchase the property on the instalment plan, what are denominated rentals in the contract being really partial payments of the cost. Ibid. The court said that it would be willing to adopt the middle doctrine on which some of the authorities stood, which allows a municipal corporation, although its indebtedness has already reached the constitutional limit, to make time contracts in order to provide for certain municipal warrants, which involve only the ordinary current expenses of municipal administration. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tion, provided there is to be no payment or liability until the services be furnished, which are then to be met by annual appropriations and the levy of taxes, so that each year's services shall be paid for by each year's taxes; the scheme being universally denominated in the cases as a business or cash or pay as you go transaction, and the like. The court inclined to the belief that on this principle a town or a city might contract for the use of a hall for a term of years to be used strictly for municipal purposes, provided that principle be fairly applied in any case, and not abused; not, however, allowing a hall to be hired for the purpose of subletting either the hall or any part of it. Municipal necessities only were to be regarded.

<sup>35</sup> Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 398.

<sup>36</sup> Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. People, 200 Ill. 541, 66 N. E. 148.

Under a constitutional provision prohibiting municipalities from becoming indebted in any manner or for any purpose beyond a certain amount, and providing that any municipality incurring any indebtedness as aforesaid shall also, at the time of so incurring the same, provide for the collection of a direct annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such debt as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal within twenty years, payments made by the city for rental for an electric light plant constitute a class of indebtedness prohibited, although the payment of the amount thereof is not deferred to a fixed time in the future, and does not bear interest. Ibid.

A contract between a city and an electric company, by which the latter agreed to install an electric plant, for which the city agreed to provide a suitable site, to pay all taxes, etc., to lease the plant from the company for five years, and pay quarterly a certain sum for the use thereof, the city, at the expiration of the term of five years, to have the right to buy the same at the price of $1, was held to be a present binding agreement for the creation of a prospective debt. Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279.

<sup>37</sup> Brockway v. Roseburg, 46 Or. 77, 79 Pac. 335; Chicago v. McDonald, 176 Ill. 404, 52 N. E. 982.

A contract by which a city proposes to add to its bonded indebtedness in the sum of $42,000 each year for fifty years, for the supply of water and lights, where it has already reached its debt limit, is unlawful. Duncan v. Charleston, 60 S. C. 532, 39 S. E. 265.

seen, the courts are very rigid in their construction of debt limit provisions, it has been said that it would seem that a contract payable in instalments is of a divisible nature, so that the aggregate amount of indebtedness extending over a period of years cannot be made the test of the validity of the whole contract.<sup>33</sup>

V. Obligations payable out of special fund or current receipts.

a. In general.

It is well settled that a contract which provides that the cost of any improvement shall be paid out of a fund expressly created therefor is valid, notwithstanding the provision of the charter as to the limit of the city's indebtedness.<sup>34</sup> It has been held that, notwithstanding the fact that a town has reached its debt limit, it may contract for stone for highways, if it has money in the treasury at that time specially set apart for the payment of such claims, or if the town had means in its treasury to meet the indebtedness, or would have it in anticipation of its current revenue.<sup>35</sup> But the mere fact that a special fund is created for payment is not enough to make the obligations valid. The creditor must look to the fund alone for his recompense; and if the municipality is liable generally, an indebtedness is created within the meaning of the debt limit provisions.<sup>31</sup>

So, where a city is indebted beyond the charter limit, it has been held that the fact that a contract for lighting provides that payments shall be made in "valid warrants" does not render the warrants valid, on the theory that the contract contemplates that the city will provide a special fund for the payment of the warrants as issued, so as not to make them evidence of indebtedness within the meaning of the charter.<sup>32</sup> But in order to render obligations valid on the theory that they are payable out of a special fund, it has been

The question was first raised in Kentucky in Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 23 L.R.A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222, 24 S. W. 872, in which it was held that a contract by a city to pay an annual rental for the use of water hydrants and electric lights creates an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution, when the city, at the time of the execution of the contract, had passed the debt limit, although the income from taxation and other sources would be sufficient to pay all the current expenses, including such rental. It was the contention in this case that under the contract, as the contractor furnished the water and light, and thus earned the money, he was paid therefor, and that consequently the liability was extinguished as soon as it came into existence.

It is said that an obligation in the future upon such a condition as furnishing water in the future is a debt within the meaning of the Constitution. It becomes due when the water is furnished, and if the aggregate indebtedness already exceeds the constitutional limitation, no further contract for the payment of money can be enforced while the city is so situated. Pontiac Water, Light, & P. Co. v. Pontiac, 149 Ill. App. 57.

<sup>33</sup> Chicago v. McDonald, 176 Ill. 404, 52 N. E. 982.

For right of municipal corporation to secure public utilities by piecemeal, to avoid constitutional debt limit, see note to Overall v. Madisonville, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433.

<sup>34</sup> Little v. Portland, 26 Or. 235, 37 Pac. 911.

Certificates of indebtedness issued against a special fund do not constitute indebtedness of a state, but are mere evidence of the holder's right to receive payment out of the fund when collected. Brown v. Ringdal, 109 Minn. 6, 122 N. W. 469. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But bonds of a town issued to secure funds with which to rebuild a schoolhouse create a debt against the town, within the meaning of the debt limit provision of the Constitution, since this is not an obligation payable out of specific funds, but is a contract to pay money generally. Winamac v. Huddleston, 132 Ind. 217, 31 N. E. 561.

<sup>35</sup> McAleer v. Angell, 19 R. I. 688, 36 Atl. 588.

The drawing of warrants for a road against a special road fund already provided, and certain to be paid during the fiscal year, for their payment, is not the creation of a debt or debts within the constitutional prohibition. Hockaday v. Chaffee County, 1 Colo. App. 362, 29 Pac. 287. The court said that the application of a special fund to the purpose of its creation, by the drawing of warrants against such a fund, unless the amount drawn during the year exhausts the amount provided for such fund and supposed to be available, is not the creation of a debt, although it anticipates the revenue to be collected, as they are drawn against existing values,—hence cannot be classed and regarded as the debt of the county prohibited by the Constitution, unless in excess, in some year, of the money provided for their payment during that year.

<sup>41</sup> That a statute directing a county to issue warrants in payment for a proposed courthouse requires the county court to levy a tax annually for five years for the payment thereof does not render the warrants valid on the theory that no indebtedness is created, where the payment of such warrants is not limited to any special fund or the money to be raised by special tax. Eaton v. Mimnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 73 Pac. 754.

<sup>48</sup> Brockway v. Roseburg, 46 Or. 77, 79 Pac. 335

held that there must be a special fund, or at least the tax for the purpose of providing such a fund must have been levied.<sup>43</sup> Where, however, a city intending to contract for the purchase of boilers agreed that an appropriation should be made therefor at a future date, and stipulated that the boilers were not to be paid for until such appropriation should be made, and warrants drawn on a special fund providing therefor, and that no agreement or contract for the purchase of such boilers would be made whereby the seller would ask or receive of the city any warrants or money for such boilers until the appropriation was made for payment of the same, and warrants issued on such appropriation, it was held that this did not create an indebtedness against it.<sup>44</sup> If the creditor is to be paid out of a special fund which has been created, and the municipality is not otherwise liable, the debt limit provisions are not violated.<sup>45</sup>

Where a contract for a street improvement contained a stipulation that the contractors should look for payment only to the fund to be raised by an assessment of the property benefited, and that they would not require the city, by any legal process or otherwise, to pay for the same out of any other fund; and when the improvement under the contract was completed, warrants were drawn upon the treasury in favor of the contractors and made payable out of said fund, it was held that no indebtedness against the city was created until it failed to collect the fund within a reasonable time, and hence its authority to enter into the contract was not affected by a charter debt limit provision.<sup>46</sup> And where the expenses of the construction of a canal were to be met by certificates of indebtedness, and both the principal and interest of the certificates were to be paid out of funds received for carriage by water, or in payment for lands, and the act authorizing the construction expressly provided against any indebtedness being incurred on the part of the state, it was held that it was not in conflict with the constitutional debt limit provision.<sup>47</sup> An agreement to pay a balance of twenty-four installments of the purchase price of a waterworks plant was held not to create a debt against a city, where the contract provided for the creation of a special fund, without resorting to the power of taxation, and the waterworks company was required to look alone to that fund in the first instance.<sup>48</sup> A statute creating a levee company, providing for an annual collection by taxation, and appropriation to the company for a number of years, of a certain sum, was held not to create a debt against the state, the money collected being set apart in a special fund, and the state not obligating itself to pay for any sum contracted by the levee com-

<sup>43</sup> Outstanding warrants or orders drawn by a municipality against cash in the treasury, or specifically payable out of a fund to be raised from a tax which has been actually levied, do not constitute an indebtedness within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition. Blanchard v. Benton, 109 Ill. App. 569.

A provision in a lighting contract that the city shall each year draw and deliver its order in favor of the company, on the treasurer of the city, as soon as the annual levy and appropriation for the lighting of the streets of the city shall have been made, and payable out of the street lighting fund when collected, for a sufficient sum, etc., was held valid. Hay v. Springfield, 64 Ill. App. 671.

In Griawold v. East St. Louis, 47 Ill. App. 480, it was said obiter that if warrants were payable from a specific appropriation of the taxes levied, but not yet collected, which were accepted in exchange for light furnished, this would be an exchange of one thing for another, creating no debt against the city, but being full payment for such services.

But a debt is created against a city within the meaning of the Constitution, for an amount due for gas furnished to a city prior to the levy of taxes to meet the payment of such sum, although it was agreed in the contract that the fund thereafter to be appropriated and levied for the payment was alone to be looked to. East St. Louis v. Flannigen, 36 Ill. App. 50.

<sup>44</sup> Bailey v. Sioux Falls, 19 S. D. 231, 103 N. W. 16.

<sup>45</sup> Obligations payable out of a particular fund, and for which the fund only, and not the municipality, is liable, are not within the inhibition. Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588; Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124.

<sup>46</sup> Little v. Portland, 26 Or. 235, 37 Pac. 911. The court said that the reasons assigned by these decisions for the application of the foregoing rule is that materials furnished to and labor performed for a municipal corporation are exchanged for warrants to be drawn upon the treasury and made payable out of a specific fund which has been created by an assessment or levy of taxes, and appropriated to that purpose, under the agreement that the person furnishing the materials or performing the labor will rely upon the specific fund only for payment, and that the corporation shall incur no liability whatever.

<sup>47</sup> Re Canal Certificates, 19 Colo. 63, 34 Pac. 274.

<sup>48</sup> State ex rel. Smith v. Neosho, 203 Mo. 40, 101 S. W. 99.

pany.<sup>49</sup> But where a city charter forbade the passage of an ordinance obligating the city for the payment of more than $1,000 except in a certain manner, and an ordinance for the extension of waterworks was not passed in this manner, it was held to be illegal, although it provided that the indebtedness should be met by setting aside a special fund out of the receipts from the waterworks.<sup>50</sup> The court said that, although the city did not contract for a general indebtedness, it did contract for a special indebtedness, and obligated itself to the establishment of a special fund and for the payment of the money in the special fund, which was, within the meaning of the ordinance, obligating itself as much as if a general indebtedness had been created. The character of the fund did not disturb the obligation. It determined only the character of the obligation and the manner of its enforcement.

If warrants are drawn on a special fund in excess thereof, such warrants, as to such excess, would undoubtedly be invalid, providing the municipality had reached the debt limit, but would probably not render those within the fund void.<sup>51</sup>

b. Local improvements.

It is well settled that contracts for local improvements, the cost of which is to be borne wholly by the property benefited, form no part of the indebtedness of the municipality within the meaning of the debt limit provisions.<sup>52</sup> Improvement bonds do not constitute indebtedness within the mean-

<sup>49</sup> State ex rel. Louisiana Levee Co. v. Clinton, 25 La. Ann. 401.

<sup>50</sup> Savage v. Tacoma, 61 Wash. 1, 112 Pac. 78.

In Coulson v. Portland, Deady, 481, Fed. Cas. No. 3276, it was held that interest coupons to railway bonds payable half yearly through a period of twenty years, amounting in the aggregate to a sum largely in excess of the debt limit, could not lawfully be issued on the theory that, as the ordinance providing for the issue of these coupons also provided for raising revenue, and appropriated it to the payment of them as they fell due, no indebtedness or liability was thereby created or incurred. The court declared that to say that a sum of money due or owing from A to B is not a debt, because A has promised to appropriate, or has appropriated, a portion of his future income to its payment, is a proposition in legal metaphysics that cannot be comprehended. A debt exists against the city whenever the city agrees to pay money in return for services or for money borrowed. Every one of the interest coupons, when issued by the mayor and auditor as presented in the ordinance, is a promise by it to pay to the holder so much money. If this is not a debt, or evidence of one, then an ordinary promissory note is not. The fact that the ordinance appropriates money to pay these coupons, as they fall due, makes no difference. There is no magic in the legislative formula,—"there is hereby appropriated." That does not change the fact that the city owes these coupons, and what it owes to another is a debt due that other. Besides there is no money in fact set apart by this formula of appropriation, until it is collected. The charter prohibition as to indebtedness in this case included all forms of indebtedness, "whether incurred by borrowing money, loaning the credit of the city, or otherwise."

<sup>51</sup> Whether or not warrants so drawn on a special fund in excess of it can be classed with the general indebtedness of a county so as to swell the aggregate, and render the 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

warrants void under the constitutional prohibition, the court did not find it necessary to determine, but said that if they could in any case be so considered, it would not invalidate all the warrants of that year, but only those drawn after the fund was exhausted and in excess of it. Hockaday v. Chaffee County, 1 Colo. App. 362, 29 Pac. 287.

<sup>52</sup> The making of local improvements, the expense of which is to be assessed upon and borne by the property benefited thereby, is not within the scope of charter restrictions upon the power of the city to contract indebtedness, since the obligation rests primarily upon the owners of the property benefited. Baldwin v. Oswego, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 62, 2 Keyes, 132.

Money held by the city treasurer, with which to pay assessment warrants when presented, is in no sense a debt of the city. Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 492, 69 N. E. 470.

A local improvement contract payable by special assessment on abutting property does not create a debt against the city within the meaning of the Constitution. Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 73 C. C. A. 439, 142 Fed. 329.

A debt forbidden by the Constitution is not created by an ordinance for a street improvement providing for a special assessment upon abutting property to pay the cost. Coleman v. New Kensington, 140 Fed. 684.

A city has the power, although indebted up to the constitutional limit, to contract for street improvements so far as they are to be paid for by special assessments on abutting property. Ft. Dodge Electric Light & P. Co. v. Ft. Dodge, 115 Iowa, 568, 89 N. W. 7.

Contracts for street improvements made under a statute providing therefor, the cost of which is to be assessed upon abutting property, and payment therefor made by delivering to the contractor the assessment certificates, with a special provision specifying the manner in which probable deficiencies shall be raised, do not create municipal ing of the Constitution, where the cost is assessed back on the property benefited, and the amounts assessed become a lien on such property, and where it is provided that the proceeds arising from the assessment shall constitute a special fund for the payment of the cost of the improvement and the bonds and certificates, and where it is required that the bonds shall bear the name of the street or alley improved or sewer constructed, and that they shall be payable out of a special fund provided for in the act, since there is no liability against the city, the city authorities being merely an agency for making and collecting the assessment, and the custodian of the fund when the assessments are collected.<sup>53</sup> And street improvement warrants chargeable to and payable out of particular funds to be derived from local assessments at least do not create a present indebtedness against the city.<sup>54</sup>

And bonds issued to raise money for the construction of free gravel roads do not create indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution, not being payable out of a general fund of county or township, but being payable out of a particular fund to be raised by a special tax imposed as a benefit, assessed according to its value not upon all the taxable property of the county, but upon all the taxable property in the taxing district.<sup>55</sup> And park certificates issued upon judgments already indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution. Corey v. Ft. Dodge, 133 Iowa, 666, 111 N. W. 6.

But in French v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 614, it was held that the constitutional provision being that no municipal corporation shall become indebted in any manner or for any purpose beyond a certain amount, this includes necessary, as well as convenient, improvements of the streets, and all other things deemed necessary for the proper comfort and health of the people of the city. It matters not how or for what purpose the indebtedness is incurred. It is prohibited, unless it can be shown to be reasonably certain that such indebtedness can be liquidated and paid from ordinary current revenues of the city.

<sup>53</sup> Quill v. Indianapolis, 124 Ind. 292, 7 L.R.A. 681, 23 N. E. 788.

An obligation arising from the issuance of local improvement bonds chargeable against property benefited does not create a municipal indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution. Guilfoyle v. Maysville, 129 Ky. 532, 112 S. W. 666.

Street improvement bonds payable only out of the special assessments levied for the purpose of their payment do not constitute obligations against a city, within the meaning of the Constitution. Vickrey v. Sioux City, 116 Fed. 437.

A statute allowing a city to order the original construction of street improvements at the exclusive cost of the abutting owners, and to issue ten-year bonds against the property, which does not pay any cash, does not create municipal indebtedness within the meaning of the constitutional provision limiting municipal indebtedness, since the liability is solely against the property. Guilfoyle v. Maysville, supra.

<sup>54</sup> Baker v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 576, 27 Pac. 462.

Street grading warrants issued against assessments do not create an indebtedness against the city, within the meaning of a charter provision limiting indebtedness. Denny v. Spokane, 25 C. C. A. 164, 48 U. S. App. 282, 79 Fed. 719.

A city is not excused from repairing a sidewalk on the theory that it has reached the debt limit, since assessments for street improvement or street repairs are not generally taxes payable by the people, but are made against those whose property is benefited; and the corporation as such is not therefore liable for such assessments. New Albany v. McCulloch, 127 Ind. 500, 26 N. E. 1074.

So, where a city was prohibited from "borrowing" for "general purposes" more than a specified amount, it has been held that a sidewalk improvement is not a "general purpose" within the meaning of the provision. Galveston v. Loonie, 54 Tex. 517. The court said that the ultimate reimbursement of the city being secured by a lien on the abutting lots, there would be less reason for limiting the power to borrow for such a purpose, than for general purposes where the city was unsecured, citing Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 349, 24 L. ed. 661.

<sup>55</sup> Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124. The court said that the money thus raised according to benefits declared by the legislature could not be appropriated to any purpose except to pay the bonds, and the money raised from the sale of said bonds could be used only to build said roads. No other provision was made for the payment of said bonds, except from the fund raised by said assessment, and the same was pledged by the statute for that purpose, and could not be devoted to any other purpose.

Bonds issued to raise money for the construction of free gravel roads are not the obligations of the county. Braun v. Benton County, 17 C. C. A. 166, 34 U. S. App. 393, 70 Fed. 369.

Bonds issued for the construction of free gravel roads do not create a debt against a township. Switzerland County v. Reeves, 148 Ind. 467, 46 N. E. 995.

The issuance of bonds to meet the expenses of the building of a free gravel road is not the creation of an indebtedness within the meaning of a provision of the Constitution fixing the debt limit, where such bonds are not payable by the county, or out of the general funds of the county treasury, but are payable out of a particular fund to be raised by the collection of obtained in favor of a city for unpaid assessments of special benefits, collectable on execution, the holders to get their pro rata share as the collections are made, the provision of the charter being that the city shall be liable on such certificates to the holders thereof for the sums collected from the special assessments upon which the certificates are issued, "but not otherwise," have been held not to create an indebtedness against the city.<sup>55</sup> Where, before the issue of ditch bonds, assessments are made upon lands within a certain district to pay them, it is said they cannot be considered in determining the capacity of a county to incur a debt.<sup>57</sup>

The rule in this respect is the same as in the case of any other special fund. The holders of the obligation must look alone to the fund for their payment.<sup>58</sup> The fact that local improvement bonds are to be paid out of assessments which are made a lien upon the property benefited does not render them legal on the theory that they do not create an indebtedness against the city, where the bonds provide for the pledging of assessments made on lands adjacent to such roads, divided in such manner as to meet principal and interest of said bonds, and placed as divided upon the tax duplicates against the lands assessed, and collected in the same manner as other taxes, which fund, when so collected, is to be applied to no other purpose than the payment of such bonds and interest. Strieb v. Cox, 111 Ind. 299, 12 N. E. 481; Burton v. State, 111 Ind. 600, 12 N. E. 486.

Bonds issued to raise money for the construction of free turnpike roads were held to create an indebtedness within the meaning of the debt limit provision of the Constitution, although a special fund or resource was provided by assessment for their payment, and notwithstanding the fact that in most cases the assessments would ultimately prove collectable in sums sufficient to pay the debt and interest, where it was not provided that no other fund might be used for the same purpose. Kimball v. Grant County, 21 Fed. 145.

<sup>55</sup> Kansas City v. Ward, 134 Mo. 172, 35 S. W. 600.

<sup>57</sup> Johnson v. Norman County, 93 Minn. 290, 101 N. W. 180.

<sup>58</sup> In Atkinson v. Great Falls, 16 Mont. 372, 40 Pac. 877, the court said: "It would seem that, if the city has taken the proper steps under the law to assess the property abutting on the street intended to be paved under the contract in question, with the cost of the improvement, and if, in entering into the contract, it has expressly and clearly excepted and protected itself from any liability thereunder for such cost, and the liability created by such contract is confined and restricted to the special fund created by the special assessment upon the property abutting on the street to be paved, and the contractor has expressly agreed to accept the fund raised by said special assessment, and has expressly waived all right to hold the city in any wise responsible or liable for the cost of the paving of said street, then such contract would not create such an indebtedness of the city as is prohibited by § 4, article 13, of the Constitution of the state."

When a city directs a local improvement to be made at the exclusive cost of the abutting property, and a statute requires it to be borne exclusively by the abutting property, the liability for the cost of the improvement is in no sense that of the city. The contractor must look alone to the property designated by the ordinance directing the improvement, for pay for his work and materials. The city acts for the abutter in making the contract. Catlettsburg v. Self, 115 Ky. 669, 74 S. W. 1064.

Bonds issued by a city to cover the cost of a street improvement, chargeable wholly against abutting property, the holders of the bonds being compelled to look alone to the fund created by the collection of assessments against the property for their payment, do not create a liability against the city, within the meaning of the Constitution. Adams v. Ashland, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 184, 80 S. W. 1105.

District improvement bonds payable from special assessments made against the owners of abutting property, and in no other manner, and accepted in full satisfaction for the work done, do not create a debt against a city, within the meaning of the Constitution. Clinton v. Walliker, 98 Iowa, 655, 68 N. W. 431.

Paving and sewerage bonds and warrants issued under a law specially providing for the payment of the costs of the improvement by assessments against the property improved, such assessments, when paid into the treasury, to constitute a fund out of which the warrants issued are to be paid, the contract for the improvement expressly stating that the city assumes no liability, do not create an indebtedness against it. Vallyelly v. Park Comrs. 16 N. D. 25. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 61, 111 N. W. 615.

And whether refunding bonds, in which the credit of the city is pledged to the payment of the cost of local improvement bonds, do not create a debt within the meaning of the Constitution, may be doubted. Catlettsburg v. Self, supra.

Certificates given for the purchase price of land for park purposes, secured by mortgage on the land purchased, each certificate stating that the city is indebted to the payee in the sum therein mentioned, and reciting that the consideration therefor is the conveyance to the city by the payee, of land for park purposes, and that the certificate is secured by mortgage on the land sold, and that it is payable out of the funds arising from assessments made upon real estate specially benefited by the park established on the land, and concluding with the faith of the city for the payment of principal and interest thereon.<sup>59</sup> Assessment bonds issued to pay the cost of local improvements constitute indebtedness of a city to be taken into consideration in ascertaining whether the city has reached the debt limit, although the cost is assessed back more or less upon the property benefited, the bonds being absolute and unqualified obligations of the city, issued upon its faith and credit alone, and, when due, payable directly.<sup>60</sup> Street improvement bonds not expressly declared to be payable only out of the funds realized from a special assessment provided for their payment create an indebtedness of the city.<sup>61</sup>

A contract for paving by which a city obligates itself by an absolute promise to pay for work, and fixing a definite price, payments to be made as follows: "Estimates will be made by the board of public works monthly during the progress of the work, and 75 per cent of the actual amount of work done according to such estimates will be paid by said city to the said second party monthly. The remaining 25 per cent will be retained for the period of thirty days after the acceptance of the work, and at the expiration of said period will be paid to said second party by said city; and said city agrees to accept or reject the work within ninety days after the completion of the whole work provided for in this contract,"—creates an indebtedness against the city within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>62</sup> But where the obligation which a city attempted to assume by a contract for paving was in terms confined to its power these words, "it being expressly understood and agreed that there is no liability on the part of the city to pay the amount evidenced by this certificate and secured by the above-described mortgage, out of any other fund than the fund above specified," do not create an indebtedness against the city. Kelly v. Minneapolis, 63 Minn. 125, 30 L.R.A. 281, 65 N. W. 115. The court said that if park certificates were secured by mortgage on any portion of the property of the city previously owned by it, or by pledge of its revenue, the certificate would be a part of the indebtedness of the city, for the statute providing a debt limit for cities cannot be evaded by a makeshift of issuing bonds or other obligations of the city making them payable only from the general revenues of the city to be derived from a particular source, or by securing them upon its public buildings or other property which, if sold to pay the obligations, must be replaced by taxation to enable the city to discharge its governmental functions.

<sup>59</sup> Covington v. McKenna, 99 Ky. 508, 38 S. W. 518.

<sup>60</sup> Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y. 178, 89 N. E. 569.

Local improvement bonds chargeable upon property benefited constitute indebtedness of the city, where the city therein unconditionally and absolutely acknowledges itself to be indebted to, and promises to pay, the bearer, etc., the sum specified therein. Fowler v. Superior, 85 Wis. 411, 54 N. W. 800.

Local improvement bonds cannot be said not to increase the indebtedness of the city, on the theory that they are a mere substitute for the assessments which the city owns as a resource for their payment. Ibid. The court said: "The language of the Constitution, 'become indebted in any manner or for any purpose,' is to be understood not in its commonly accepted sense. Cannot one become indebted," asked the court, "if he has pecuniary resources sufficient to pay it?"

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where a city charter provides that the city shall be liable for the payment of both principal and interest of local improvement bonds, they create an indebtedness which cannot be incurred if the city has already reached the constitutional limit, although the cost of the improvement is to be assessed against the land benefited. Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 667, 27 Pac. 557.

Local improvement bonds create an indebtedness against the city, although they recite that they are issued to provide for street improvements, the cost of which is assessable against abutting property, and is made a lien thereon, where the promise on the part of the city is absolute, and it is apparent from the statute authorizing their issuance that it is not expected that the abutting owner shall be liable for the whole cost, and there is no requirement that they shall be payable out of a particular fund. Burlington Sav. Bank v. Clinton, 111 Fed. 439.

<sup>61</sup> Vickrey v. Sioux City, 115 Fed. 437.

When a city claims that it is not indebted for the contract price for the paving of a street, because the same is to be paid out of a special fund assessed upon property abutting upon the street to be paved, it must prove these allegations by showing that the warrants or other obligations drawn, and to be drawn, by the city on these special funds, are so specific and unequivocal in their terms as to fix the liability for the payment thereof on such special funds, and leave no question that the city is in any way liable therefor. "This," said the court, "can only be properly done by keeping these warrants or other obligations in evidence, so that the court may determine, from an inspection thereof, whether the special funds are solely liable for the payment thereof, or whether or not they constitute an indebtedness of the city." Atkinson v. Great Falls, 16 Mont. 372, 40 Pac. 877.

<sup>62</sup> Allen v. Davenport, 107 Iowa, 90, 77 N. W. 532.

to impose the collection of assessments for the improvement, and if collected by it to pay the same in certificates to the contractors or other persons entitled thereto, and it was expressly provided that upon the transfer of the certificates, the liability of the city to the contractors and to the persons claiming under them should cease, and the city did not attempt to issue any obligation for the payment of money, and agreed only to perform such duties in respect to the certificates, and it did not attempt to guarantee the payment of the certificates, although it guaranteed their regularity and the right to recover on them, it was held that this did not create an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>63</sup> And it has been held that a contract for paying which does not create an indebtedness because payable by special assessment levied against abutting property is not rendered unconstitutional because it is further provided that in case such special assessment prove insufficient to pay the amount earned under the contract, the deficiency is to be paid out of a "general paving fund of the city," by warrants drawn thereon.<sup>64</sup> And that where the city has reached the debt limit, it has power to pass an ordinance providing for local improvements, although it specifies that part of the cost of the improvement shall be raised by general taxation, since this is not the creation of a debt, or even the anticipation of a tax levy.<sup>65</sup>

The fact that the municipality may fail to collect assessments on abutting property, and thereby create a deficiency in the fund, does not alter the rule as to its indebtedness.<sup>66</sup>

But the distribution of payment of warrants of a city upon different parts of the aggregate of property does not bring them within the local assessment rule, so that

<sup>63</sup> Tuttle v. Polk, 92 Iowa, 433, 60 N. W. 733.

A statute providing that if, by reason of the prohibition contained in the debt limit section of the Constitution, it should at any time be unlawful for a city to issue bonds provided for by the act, it should be lawful for the city to provide for the issuance of certificates to contractors in payment for the improvement constructed, the certificates to state the amount or amounts of one or more of the assessments made against a lot owner or owners in the payment of the cost of such improvement, and to transfer to the contractor all the right of the city thereto, and to authorize the contractor to receive and collect such assessments by the legal method for the collection of assessments for local improvements, was held not to make the city in any manner liable for the payment of the certificates, but merely to authorize the transfer to the contractor or his assignee, of all the right and interest of the city in the assessments, in payment of the improvements made. It was therefore held constitutional. Id.

Where the statute expressly provided for the payment of the costs of local improvements by assessments against the property improved, and such assessments when paid into the treasury constituted a fund out of which the warrants when issued were to be paid, it was held that no indebtedness was created by the issue of such warrants. The court considered this to be the rule even without the provision which the warrants in the case contained, that the city should not be liable. Valley v. Park Comrs. 16 N. D. 25, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 61, 111 N. W. 615.

<sup>64</sup> Corey v. Ft. Dodge, 133 Iowa, 666, 111 N. W. 6. The court said that the most the city could do in this respect was to pledge itself to meet that contingency by some appropriate fund which it had the legal right to provide for that purpose. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

<sup>65</sup> Jacksonville R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 114 Ill. 562, 2 N. E. 478.

And a street improvement ordinance is not rendered invalid as to abutting owners, because of the fact that part of the expense is to be borne by the city, thus creating a debt against it beyond the constitutional limit. Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768.

In a proceeding for the assessment of damages for land taken for a public street, the question as to the city's debt limit cannot be raised, although the improvement ordinance provides that any part of the compensation, damages, or costs that are not finally assessed against the property benefited shall be paid out of the general funds of the city, where it is apparent from the whole ordinance that the intention is to pay for the property taken by special assessment upon property benefited, and it appears that the city has taken a penal bond from interested property owners conditioned that the city shall not be called upon to contribute any funds to the expense of the improvement. State ex rel. Thomas v. Superior Ct. 42 Wash. 521, 85 Pac. 256.

Amounts which a city has been assessed for public benefits in assessment cases, and which remain unpaid, are not debts of the city within the sense of the constitutional limitation. Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 492, 69 N. E. 970.

<sup>66</sup> That failure to collect part of an assessment for street improvements created a deficit did not require a city to foresee that such would occur, and treat it as a debt within the meaning of the Constitution. Beaumont v. Masterson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 142 S. W. 984.

Where land has been taken pursuant to the power of a city to widen streets, under a statute requiring the assessment of benefits as part of the condemnation proceedings, and there has been such an assessment

it may be said that they are not debts of the city within the meaning of a debt limit statute, where the statute authorizing their issue expressly makes them the indebtedness of the city.<sup>67</sup> And bonds issued to raise funds to enable a city to reimburse itself for payments of an illegal debt created for paving are void, although stating on their face that they are payable out of a paving fund created by the collection of a special tax on abutting property.<sup>68</sup>

In an action by a contractor to foreclose a street improvement assessment lien against a property owner, it has been held that the latter cannot raise the question whether the city, at the time of making the contract, was indebted beyond the constitutional limit.<sup>69</sup>

c. Income of year.

If the contracts and engagements of a municipal corporation do not overreach the dependable current resources for which provision exists at the time the contracts and engagements are assumed, no lawful objections to them can be interposed, however great the indebtedness of the municipality may be.<sup>70</sup> A town may expend its current revenues and accrued funds, and may make contracts to that end. To do so is not to contract debts within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition.<sup>71</sup> The purpose of constitutional provisions limiting current expenditures to the revenues of the year was simply to prevent the fastening of obligations incurred in one year upon the resources of another, and therefore to compel municipalities in effect to conduct the administration of their affairs on a cash basis.<sup>72</sup>

It has been held that it is not necessary to the invalidity of municipal indebtedness under a provision that no county shall become indebted in any manner in any year to an amount exceeding in any year the income in each case of condemnation, the neglect of the city to collect does not make the claims of the landowners under the awards general city indebtedness. Baker v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 576, 27 Pac. 462.

<sup>67</sup> Martin v. Territory, 5 Okla. 188, 48 Pac. 106; Spencer v. Gray, 5 Okla. 216, 48 Pac. 110.

<sup>68</sup> Allen v. Davenport, 107 Iowa, 90, 77 N. W. 532.

<sup>69</sup> Hughes v. Parker, 148 Ind. 692, 48 N. E. 243.

<sup>70</sup> Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, 67 W. Va. 525, 68 S. E. 118.

The true test whether or not a note given for supplies furnished a city creates a debt within the meaning of the Constitution is whether it imposes a burden on the revenues of the city for future years. Cleburne v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 1072.

<sup>71</sup> Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, supra.

The rule that "when a contract made by a municipal corporation pertains to its ordinary expenses, and is, together with other like expenses, within the limit of its current revenues and such special taxes as it may legally and in good faith intend to levy therefor, such contract does not constitute the 'incurring of indebtedness' within the meaning of the constitutional provision limiting the power of municipal corporations to contract debts," was approved in Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 398, and in Reuting v. Titusville, 175 Pa. 512, 34 Atl. 916. To the same effect Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396.

<sup>72</sup> Under art. 7 of § 7 of ¶ 1 of the Georgia Constitution, providing that a debt hereafter incurred by any county, municipal corporation, or political division of this 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

state, except as in this Constitution provided for, shall never exceed 7 per centum of the assessed value of all the taxable property therein, and that no such county, municipality, or division shall incur any new debt, except for a temporary loan or loans to supply casual deficiencies of revenue, not to exceed one fifth of 1 per centum of the assessed value of taxable property therein, with the assent of two thirds of the qualified voters thereof, at an election for that purpose to be held as may be prescribed by law; but that any city, the debt of which does not exceed 7 per centum of the assessed value of the taxable property at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, may be authorized by law to increase at any time the amount of said debt 3 per centum upon such assessed valuation, the general fiscal policy outlined for political subdivisions, such as counties and municipalities, was to provide a system of finance for subordinate public corporations, under which there could be made each year contracts for the expenses of the year, and these were to be paid out of moneys arising from taxes during the year. A liability for a legitimate current expense may be incurred, provided there is, at the time of incurring the liability, a sufficient sum in the treasury of the county or municipality which may be lawfully used to pay the liability incurred, or if a sufficient sum to discharge the liability can be raised by taxation during the current year. Butts County v. Jackson Bkg. Co. 129 Ga. 801, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 567, 121 Am. St. Rep. 244, 60 S. E. 149.

It was evidently the intention of the framers of the constitutional provision that no city "shall incur any indebtedness or liability in anything or for any purpose, exand revenue provided for such year, without the consent of two thirds of the voters, that the municipality shall have made provision for its payment. The inhibition is against creating an indebtedness in any year that the municipality is unable to pay out of its resources for that year.<sup>73</sup> But in Illinois temporary loans made to a city after it has reached the constitutional debt limit are illegal, although within the limits of the revenue expected to be raised.<sup>74</sup> In Wisconsin debts for the ordinary running expenses of a city, and debts within the power of the city to contract, payable within a year out of the incoming revenues actually levied, or in good faith intended to be levied, are not such as are comprehended within the constitutional provision. If, however, the debt is made to mature at such a time as would make it a charge upon the future resources of the city beyond the period stated, then the levy of the tax is necessary to its validity.<sup>75</sup> In Indiana, if the indebtedness of a city already equals or exceeds the constitutional limit, and the current revenues are not sufficient to pay such indebtedness when it comes into existence, including other expenses for which the city is liable, an indebtedness is thereby created, and the Constitution is violated.<sup>76</sup> In New York revenue bonds consisting of such as have been issued under the authority of a city charter, "for purposes other than to meet expenditures under the appropriation for each current year," and which are made redeemable "out of the tax levy for the year next succeeding the year of their issue," under an appropriation therefor in the budget for such years, do not constitute part of the permanent city debt.<sup>77</sup> And in Texas, under constitutional provisions that "no debt shall ever at any time be created by any city, unless at the same time provision be made to assess and collect annually a sufficient sum to pay the interest thereon, and to create a sinking fund of at least 2 per cent thereon," and "but no debt for any purpose shall ever be incurred in any manner by any city or county, unless provision is made at the time of creating the same for levying and collecting a sufficient tax to pay the interest thereon, and to provide at least 2 per cent as a sinking fund," a debt for current expenses, in order to be valid, must run concurrently with the current resources for such purposes, and such a debt cannot be created without such compliance, which matures at such a time as would make it a charge upon the future resources of the city.<sup>78</sup>

The provision of the Utah Constitution that "no debt in excess of the taxes for the current year shall be created by any county . . . in this state, unless the proposition to create such debt shall have been submitted to a vote of such qualified electors as shall have paid a property tax therein in the year preceding such election, and a majority of those voting thereon shall have voted in favor of incurring such debt," means debts which cannot be paid out of the revenues of the year.<sup>79</sup> ceeding in any one year the income and revenue provided for it in such year," that the income and revenue of each year pay the indebtedness and liability incurred during such year, and that the revenues and income of a subsequent year shall not be applicable to pay levies of a past fiscal year. Doland v. Clark, 143 Cal. 176, 76 Pac. 958.

In San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641, it is said that the framers of the provision in the California Constitution, that no county, city, town, etc., shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, etc., meant that no such indebtedness or liability shall be incurred, except in the manner stated, exceeding in any year the income and revenue actually received by such county, etc. In other words, that each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year.

<sup>73</sup> Lawrence County v. Lawrence Fiscal Ct. 130 Ky. 587, 113 S. W. 824.

<sup>74</sup> Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

<sup>75</sup> Herman v. Oconto, 110 Wis. 660, 86 N. W. 681.

<sup>76</sup> South Bend v. Reynolds, 155 Ind. 70, 49 L.R.A. 795, 57 N. E. 706.

Whenever a city whose indebtedness exceeds the constitutional limit does not have money on hand arising from current revenues to meet its debts of whatever character, as they come into existence, whether for light, water, labor, or any other expenses, the city has become indebted, and the Constitution is violated. Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359. 45 N. E. 588.

It is not enough, however, merely to have on hand enough money to pay each indebtedness as it comes into existence, but the same must be paid as it comes into existence, or there must be enough on hand to pay all of such debts outstanding, or there will be an indebtedness created, and the Constitution will be violated. Ibid.

<sup>77</sup> Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y. 178, 89 N. E. 569.

<sup>78</sup> Terrell v. Dessaint, 71 Tex. 770, 9 S. W. 593.

<sup>79</sup> Fritsch v. Salt Lake County, 15 Utah. 83, 47 Pac. 1026. The contention in this case was that the liabilities which the rev-

Under the rule laid down in this class of cases, a liability for a legitimate current expense may be incurred, provided there is, at the time of incurring the liability, a sufficient sum in the treasury of the municipality which may be lawfully used to pay the liability incurred, or if a sufficient sum to discharge the liability can be raised by taxation during the current year.<sup>80</sup> Where a city council came into office at the beginning of a fiscal year, and executed a note for supplies payable within the year, and, at the time of its execution, the council reasonably contemplated and intended that the note should be paid out of the current revenues of the city for that municipal year, and had reasonable grounds for believing that the revenues would be sufficient for that purpose, it was held that the note did not create an indebtedness against the city within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>81</sup> A contract for the repair of a portion of a street, for a sum abundantly covered by funds in the treasury available therefor, does not create an indebtedness against the city within the meaning of the debt limit provision of the Constitution.<sup>82</sup>

And a fire alarm system procured as part of the expenses for fire protection, the amount to be expended therefor being within the sum appropriated for fire, does not create a debt within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>83</sup>

And it was held that the payment of rent for a building used by a city would not be enjoined, although the city had reached its debt limit, where the money therefor was in the treasury and had been appropriated for the purpose.<sup>84</sup>

Where, under a charter of a city, the comptroller is authorized to borrow in anticipation of its revenues, not to exceed in amount the amount of such revenues, such sums as may be necessary to meet expenditures under the appropriation for each current year, and for this purpose revenue bonds may be issued to be redeemed out of the proceeds of the taxes levied, it was held that, in ascertaining the capacity of a city to become indebted under the Constitution, only such of these bonds were to be included in ascertaining the indebtedness as had been outstanding more than five years since their issue; and that it was not essential to their exception under the constitutional provision, that these revenue bonds should have been issued during the year when the tax became payable against which they were issued; provided that when issued they represented those taxes within the amount of the levy unpaid, and were payable from the proceeds of their collection, neither venue was sufficient to pay during the year did not, in a legal sense, constitute indebtedness, and that therefore the expression, "no debt in excess of the taxes of the current year shall be created," means that a debt shall not be created in excess of the revenue of the year and an amount equal to the tax levy of the year; or, in other words, that the liabilities of the year may equal the entire revenue of the year, including the tax levy, and in addition a sum equal to the tax levy; that the county may expend the entire revenue, and in addition create indebtedness equal to the tax levy. The court said that it appears to be clear that a debt exceeds the taxes when it remains after they have been expended, and, if taxes are construed to mean the entire revenue, that the debt is in excess of it, if it remains after it has been expended.

<sup>80</sup> Tate v. Elberton, 136 Ga. 301, 71 S. E. 420.

Under a provision that "no county . . . shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose," it is not sufficient to show that warrants sued upon were issued in excess of the revenue of the year, but it must be shown that the limit of indebtedness had been reached at the time the warrants were drawn. Geo. D. Barnard & Co. v. Knox County, 2 L.R.A. 426, 37 Fed. 563. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Under a statutory provision that whenever debts and liabilities have been created, which, added to the salaries of county officers and other estimated liabilities fixed by law for the remainder of the year, equal the aggregate revenue of the county for current expenses, no further allowance of any accounts must be made, it is the estimate of the revenue at the time an account is presented for allowance which must control the action of the board in allowing or refusing it. The word "revenue," as used in the section, does not mean the actual money which shall be received in the county treasury, but the estimated revenues. Babcock v. Goodrich, 47 Cal. 488.

<sup>81</sup> Cleburne v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 1072.

A note payable within the year of its execution, and within the fiscal year of the city which gives it, does not create a debt against the city, within the meaning of the constitutional provision requiring the creation of a sinking fund to liquidate it, since it matures concurrently with the city's revenues for the year, and, if paid according to promise, would not be chargeable upon the revenues of future years. Ibid.

<sup>82</sup> Reuting v. Titusville, 175 Pa. 512, 34 Atl. 916.

<sup>83</sup> Brashear v. Madison, 142 Ind. 685, 33 L.R.A. 474, 36 N. E. 252, 42 N. E. 349.

<sup>84</sup> Booth v. Weiss, 15 Phila. 159.

Constitution nor charter fixing the time for issuing them, that being a matter left to the discretion of the comptroller, to be governed in its exercise by the city's needs and the amount of the particular year's uncollected taxes.<sup>85</sup>

But it was held that an ordinance obligating a city to raise each year $1,000 to maintain a library, in case it is donated to the city, creates an obligation beyond the revenues for the year, within the meaning of the constitutional provision forbidding such indebtedness without the assent of the voters.<sup>86</sup> It was urged in this case that the library would be maintained as the city maintains its fire and police department, and that its cost would be simply a part of the annual expenses of the city; but the court said that the purposed ordinance would bind all subsequent councils to levy a sufficient tax to support the library.

That the county loses money after its collection will not affect the validity of the obligation.<sup>87</sup> But it has been held that where the Constitution limits the obligation of the municipality upon any indebtedness or liability that it may incur, to the incoming revenue provided by it for the year in which such indebtedness and liability is incurred, one who has performed labor in plumbing, gas fitting, and tinning upon engine houses of the city, under the employment of officers in charge of the fire department, cannot recover out of the revenue of the subsequent year, because of the fact that the revenue or the fund out of which his claim would otherwise be payable has been exhausted by expenditures for a general election in excess of the estimate therefor made by the supervisors.<sup>88</sup>

Where, however, by reason of the fact that an unexpected portion of a fund out of which the plaintiff's claim for work is payable exists when the contract is made, the claim is valid at its inception, he is, upon its completion, entitled to a judgment, with the direction therein that it should be satisfied only out of the income or revenue provided by the city for the fiscal year in which the liability in his favor was incurred.<sup>89</sup>

d. Anticipation of revenue.

Whether obligations are payable out of a particular fund or current revenues, the rule is that appropriations in anticipation thereof do not create an indebtedness within the meaning of debt limit provisions. Public revenues may be appropriated in anticipation of their receipt, whether there are funds in the treasury to meet them or not.<sup>90</sup> In an Iowa case, it is said that in ascertaining whether the contemplated indebtedness is within the current revenues, a fair, and perhaps liberal, view should be taken of the city's finances. It will not do to say that the revenue which is absolutely

<sup>85</sup> Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y. 178, 89 N. E. 569.

<sup>86</sup> Ramsey v. Shelbyville, 119 Ky. 180, 68 L.R.A. 300, 83 S. W. 116, 1136.

That it cannot be determined how long the library will run or remain in existence does not change the rule, on the theory that it cannot be determined that any indebtedness beyond the first year's levy will be incurred. The court said that an obligation payable in the future is no less a debt within the meaning of the provision than if payable at once. An obligation to pay which may be defeated upon the happening of some contingency—as in this case the library ceasing to exist—is certainly an obligation until the contingency happens. Such an obligation must fall within the words "indebtedness in any manner or for any purpose." Ibid.

City revenue bonds not issued as the New York Constitution permits, in anticipation of the collection of the taxes levied in the year in, or in advance of, which they are issued, and payable out of such taxes; but issued in the year following the collection of such taxes levied, after the time for the collection has expired, and only for the arrears thus ascertained, and issued for a fixed term of ten years, form part of the permanent debt of the city, which must be taken into consideration in determining 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) whether the city has exceeded its debt limit. Gibson v. Knapp, 21 Misc. 499, 47 N. Y. Supp. 446.

<sup>87</sup> Lawrence County v. Lawrence Fiscal Ct. 130 Ky. 587, 113 S. W. 824.

The fact that money has been paid out on warrants issued after those claimed illegal does not affect their validity. Mountain Grove Bank v. Douglas County, 146 Mo. 42, 47 S. W. 944.

<sup>88</sup> Weaver v. San Francisco, 111 Cal. 319, 43 Pac. 972.

<sup>89</sup> Ibid.

<sup>90</sup> State ex rel. Ash v. Parkinson, 5 Nev. 15.

The amount of anticipation tax warrants is not a debt of the city in the constitutional sense. Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 492, 69 N. E. 970.

It is well settled that even though the limit of municipal indebtedness may have been reached, an appropriation of anticipated income does not create an indebtedness. Little v. Portland, 26 Or. 235, 37 Pac. 911.

If a municipal corporation be indebted to the constitutional limit, valid appropriations of the revenue may be made in anticipation of the collection thereof, to meet the ordinary expenses of the current fiscal year. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 414, 15 Pac. 36.

certain to be received by the collection of taxes may not be anticipated, at least to some extent, and an indebtedness accordingly contracted. But on the other hand, the rule will not be so relaxed as to appear to render the Constitution nugatory.<sup>91</sup>

In an advisory opinion of the judges of the supreme court as to the legality of an act of the legislature to provide for the issue of warrants by the state to defray current expenses, based on revenues assessed, and not yet collected, in upholding the statute, it was said that if the legislature had not power so to appropriate funds, then the appropriations of each legislature in excess of the cash actually in the hands of the state treasurer, and in the fund from which such appropriations were made, would, to the extent of such excess, constitute the creation of a debt against the state. It is well understood that the aggregate of the general appropriations of each legislature of a state generally greatly exceeds the amount of actual cash in the hands of the state treasurer when such appropriations are made. The taxes levied and in process of collection are treated as in the state treasury, though not yet actually paid over to the state treasurer.<sup>92</sup> It has been said that if a city obligates itself to pay, no matter what its revenues from special assessments, a debt is created which falls within the constitutional inhibition. If, however, it simply appropriates a part of its revenue, and pledges that to the payment of the obligation, or if it simply undertakes as trustee or agent to collect these assessments, and apply them on the work without liability on its part for anything further, no debt is created. Or, if it appears that it has on hand, at the time the debt is created, a sufficient fund to meet the indebtedness, or if the debt is payable in instalments, and it has enough in its hands at the time the instalments mature to pay them, then there is no debt in a constitutional sense.<sup>93</sup> So, it has been held that where warrants for money borrowed to pay a city's current expenses are made absolutely payable without grace on the day named, and bear interest thereafter, they are invalid when issued after the city has reached the debt limit, although they specify that they are payable out of taxes levied for the fiscal year in which they are issued, stating that the taxes have been levied, and that they are issued for an amount not exceeding the appropriation, and not exceeding the amount of uncollected taxes appropriated to their payment, and which will be thus applied, where they do not state that they are payable only out of these taxes or the fund for which the advance has been made. The court said that the recitals do not limit the right of the holder to payment out of these taxes, nor

<sup>91</sup> French v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 614.

If a city has on hand, at the time a warrant for supplies is issued, funds with which to meet it, without trenching upon the rights of creditors for current expenses of the city, the warrant is valid, although such funds may thereafter be wrongfully applied to other purposes. Phillips v. Reed, 107 Iowa, 331, 76 N. W. 850, 77 N. W. 1031.

A charter provision that a corporation shall not issue any bond, note, or other obligation or evidence of indebtedness, except as therein provided, whereby the city shall become obligated to pay any sum of money, was held not to prevent the city from anticipating the collection of its revenues. Alpena v. Kelley, 97 Mich. 550, 56 N. W. 941. The court said that to hold that a city could in no case anticipate the actual collection of any portion of the taxes might result in delaying the city unreasonably in making contracts, and subject the city to actions for negligent injuries; or on the other hand, in requiring the spreading of a tax so large that the promptly paid portions thereof would be sufficient to meet all expenses.

<sup>92</sup> Re State Warrants, 6 S. D. 518, 55 Am. St. Rep. 852, 62 N. W. 101.

A statute of Illinois provides: "That, whenever there is no money in the treasury of any county, township, city, school district, or other municipal corporation, to 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

meet and defray the ordinary and necessary expenses thereof, it shall be lawful for the proper authorities of any county, township, city, school district, or other municipal corporation, to provide that warrants may be drawn and issued against, and in anticipation of, the collection of any taxes already levied by said authorities for the payment of the ordinary and necessary expenses of any such municipal corporation, to the extent of 75 per centum of the total amount of any said tax levy: Provided, that warrants drawn and issued under the provisions of this section shall show upon their face that they are payable solely from said taxes when collected, and not otherwise, and shall be received by any collector of taxes in payment of the taxes against which they are issued, and which taxes, against which said warrants are drawn, shall be set apart and held for their payment." Under this statute anticipation warrants are invalid, which recite that they are to be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, and do not show that they are payable solely from taxes already levied and from said taxes when collected, and not otherwise. Coles County v. Goehring, 209 Ill. 142, 70 N. E. 610.

<sup>93</sup> Allen v. Davenport, 107 Iowa, 90, 77 N. W. 532.

could he be so limited by the language of the certificates.<sup>94</sup>

In order that appropriations in anticipation of revenues to be received from taxation may be valid, it has been held that the levy must have been made the reason, for this has been well stated in an Illinois case<sup>95</sup> in which it is said: "Courts of the highest standing in other states have regarded the word 'debt' as a term of variable and flexible meaning, and have been able to construe it as meaning something different from the common understanding. They have been unable to see any line of demarcation between the appropriation by a municipality of taxes which have been already levied, and are legally certain to reach the treasury, where the appropriation operates only to assign the fund without creating any obligation on the part of the municipality, and a contract by which a municipality obligates itself to make levies in the future, and appropriate the same to a designated object."

Notwithstanding the fact that the indebtedness of a county has reached the debt limit, warrants issued for meeting the current expenses of the county, and in anticipation of the collection of taxes already levied, are valid obligations, to the extent of the amount of the taxes so levied and collectable; and the issuance of such warrants does not increase the amount of the existing indebtedness of the county, within the meaning of the Federal limitation. And to render such warrants invalid, it must affirmatively appear that no taxes had been provided for their payment when the warrants were issued.<sup>96</sup>

Another requirement is that the fund alone shall be liable to satisfy the obligations. Whatever form the particular transaction may take, its effect must be that of an assignment pro tanto without recourse, by the municipality, of the fund to accrue from the current levy of taxes, and the warrant or instrument of assignment must be expressly made payable out of the incoming revenue for the current year. Since all persons must know the law, it is not absolutely necessary that the assignment should state on its face that it is accepted in full satisfaction of the claim on account of which it is given, and that no liability is incurred by the county because of its issue. The instrument issued, is accepted, and must be construed, as though all constitutional and statutory provisions bearing upon its stability were expressly set out among its written or printed terms and conditions.<sup>97</sup>

The rule applicable to this class of cases

<sup>94</sup> Fuller v. Chicago, 89 Ill. 282.

A warrant drawn as follows: "No. — $ — Chicago — 187—, Treasurer of the City of Chicago: Pay to —, or bearer, — dollars, and charge to department of Public Works Appropriation. — Mayor. Countersigned — Comptroller,—was held to be drawn on the treasurer generally, and not on any particular fund, and therefore not a warrant in anticipation of revenue. Ibid.

That the city only intends to pay certificates of indebtedness out of the taxes levied for the year in which the advances were made cannot be held to be an anticipation. To have that effect, the warrant on the treasurer should be specifically drawn against the uncollected taxes of a particular year, a fund against which the money was advanced, and not against a general fund, or other fund in the treasury. Ibid.

Contracts create obligations against a city within the meaning of the Constitution, where the city agrees to issue warrants to levy a tax for the payment of the same, and obligates its revenues to the payment of such warrants. Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476.

<sup>95</sup> Schnell v. Rock Island, 232 Ill. 89, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 83 N. E. 462.

<sup>96</sup> Johnson v. Pawnee County, 7 Okla. 686, 56 Pac. 701.

Warrants issued upon a fund to create which a tax has been duly levied do not constitute a debt within the meaning of the 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Constitution. The warrants merely represent the tax levied, but not then collected. The fact that a municipality is indebted to the full constitutional limit does not prevent the same from levying such taxes as it is authorized to levy by law, and issuing its warrants within the limits of such levy, in anticipation of their collection; and as long as the warrants issued are within the amounts lawfully levied, they do not create an additional debt. To render such warrants invalid, it must affirmatively appear, therefore, that no tax had been provided for their payment when the warrants were issued. Western Town-Lot Co. v. Lane, 7 S. D. 1, 62 N. W. 982, followed in Shannon v. Huron, 9 S. D. 356, 69 N. W. 598; Lawrence v. Meade County, 10 S. D. 176, 72 N. W. 405.

The allowance of claims against the county equal to the revenues of the current year is not a creation or incurring of any indebtedness or liability. Fenton v. Blair, 11 Utah, 78, 39 Pac. 485. The court said that while the taxes for the current year are not collected until the end of the year, they are undoubtedly, after they are levied, regarded as a legal certainty, and are to be treated as if already collected, and allowances may be made against such taxes to the extent of such levy.

<sup>97</sup> People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 404, 12 Pac. 838.

There can be no legal indebtedness beyond the constitutional limit. After such limit is reached, therefore, warrants or is well stated in Springfield v. Edwards,<sup>98</sup> a leading case on the subject, in which the court said that it was prepared to yield its assent to the doctrine that revenues may be appropriated in anticipation of their receipt as effectually as when actually in the treasury, with these qualifications: First, the tax appropriated must at the time be actually levied; second, by the legal effect of the contract between the corporation and the individual made at the time of the appropriation, the appropriation, and issuing and accepting of the warrant or order on the treasurer for its payment, must operate to prevent any liability to accrue on the contract against the corporation. The court said: "The principle, as we understand, is, there is in such case no debt, because one thing is simply given and accepted in exchange for another. When the appropriation is made, and the warrant or order on the treasury for its payment is issued and accepted, the transaction is closed on the part of the corporation,—leaving no future obligation, either absolute or contingent, upon it, whereby its debt may be increased. But until a tax is levied, there is nothing in existence which can be exchanged; and an obligation to levy a tax in the future, for the benefit of a particular individual, necessarily implies the existence of a present debt in favor of the individual against the corporation, which he is lawfully entitled to have paid by the levy. If the making of the appropriation, and issuing and accepting a warrant for its payment, do not have the effect of relieving the corporation of all liability, or, in other words, if it incurs any liability thereby, it must manifestly incur, either absolutely or contingently, a debt."<sup>99</sup>

Certificates of indebtedness purporting to bind a city, not drawn against the revenue or taxes levied for any particular year, not stating that they can be paid out of any particular tax or fund, cannot be said to have been issued in anticipation of revenue already levied and collected, so as to bring them within the rule that certificates so issued do not constitute indebtedness.<sup>100</sup> other instruments representing supposed municipal liability are of no legal force or effect. The annual taxes cannot be collected at the beginning of a fiscal year, and hence necessary labor or materials can in certain counties seldom be paid for in cash when furnished. Therefore the question is, How should the cost of such labor or materials be discharged without money in the treasury, and without incurring indebtedness? Ibid.

But where the county warrants issued after the debt limit had been reached were general in form, and did not purport to be payable by any particular fund, or out of the revenue from the taxes of any specified year, and it was not claimed that when the instruments issued it was the intention to restrict in any manner the county's liability or the supposed indebtedness represented thereby, it was held that it could not be treated as an assignment of anticipated revenue. Ibid.

<sup>98</sup> 84 Ill. 626.

<sup>99</sup> To the same effect, East St. Louis v. Flannigan, 26 Ill. App. 449.

Where a warrant or order payable from a specific appropriation of a tax levied, but not yet collected, is accepted in exchange for services rendered or to be rendered, or for materials furnished or to be furnished, so that there is in fact but the exchange of one thing for another, the duty remains for the proper officers to collect and pay over the tax in accordance with the appropriation; but obviously for any failure in that regard, the remedy must be against the officers, and not against the corporation, for otherwise a contingent debt would in this way be incurred by the corporation. Springfield v. Edwards, supra.

It is not enough in Illinois that the object is to pay under some fixed and definite scheme, from some particular fund which is pledged for payment. Schnell v. Rock Island, 232 Ill. 89, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 83 N. E. 462.

<sup>100</sup> Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. The court said that the theory is that a corporation which has reached the constitutional limit of its power to create indebtedness may, when a tax is levied, but not collected, draw against the fund thus levied and provided, although not in the treasury, and thus appropriate and virtually assign the amount specified in the warrant on the treasurer, to the person to whom it is issued and delivered, and the amount, being assigned or set apart to him, when collected, he has the right to receive, and it becomes the duty of the officers to collect and pay it to him, and failing in their duty, he can have an action against them for its recovery. But with a corporation thus situated, the legal effect of issuing and receiving the warrant is that the person receiving an assignment or appropriation of so much of the specific tax already levied, and against which the warrant is drawn, by receiving it, discharges the corporation from all liability on account of the services or articles for which it is drawn, and agrees to look to the tax thus levied and appropriated, and to the officers, for his pay, and he thereby discharges the corporation from any and every kind of liability therefor. In such a case the warrant is given and received in full satisfaction for the services rendered or material furnished. Where a corporation is thus situated, and it hires labor or it purchases material, as it can incur no debt, it may, thus hiring or purchasing, agree thus to transfer so much of the tax then levied as will pay for the same, to the person performing labor or furnishing material.

37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

But although revenues may be anticipated, they cannot be anticipated to such an extent as to permit or pay off indebtedness incurred in one year out of the revenues of following years.<sup>1</sup> Anticipation warrants cannot be issued against the aggregate amount of taxes for ten years.<sup>2</sup> The difficulty is not obviated by authorizing the issue of anticipation warrants to the amount that the levy would produce on the assessment of the preceding year upon the taxable property of the county.<sup>3</sup> That there was a failure or misappropriation of a part of the current revenue will not affect the validity of warrants issued and received in full for the ordinary necessary and current expenses of a city, for a purpose authorized and required, and within the limit of the revenues of the city for the year.<sup>4</sup>

If the written assignment of the portion of the incoming revenue be accepted as payment in full for labor or materials furnished to the county, no debt is incurred. One thing is simply exchanged for another. Since, in such case, the assignee takes all the risk if the taxes are not collected, relying upon his right to compel the proper officers to perform their duty in the premises, no liability, contingent or otherwise, attaches to the county. But the taxes from which the revenue assigned is to accrue must have been levied previous to such assignment. It is a plain legal, as well as business, principle, that no valid assignment can take place of a fund that has no existence either in fact or in law. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 414, 15 Pac. 36.

A warrant drawn as follows: "From the taxes of the year . . . appropriated and levied for the police department, when received by you, pay . . . or bearer the sum of . . . dollars, being for services rendered (or materials furnished), and payable out of the appropriation for said department, and charge the same to the police fund. The taxes to be collected for account of this fund are specially appropriated, set apart, and pledged to the payment of this and all warrants drawn thereon, and which warrants do not exceed eighty-five per cent of the appropriation made therefor. This warrant is also receivable in payment of city taxes for the year," does not create a debt against the city, since such warrants have no legal effect except as an assignment without recourse on the city, made by the city to the holder of the warrant, of the part of the uncollected taxes mentioned in the warrant. Fuller v. Heath, 89 Ill. 296.

An indebtedness is not created where the agreement is to accept certificates of assessment in full satisfaction. Laporte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588.

So, a contract for a fire alarm system was held invalid, where made at a time when the city had passed the debt limit, when there was not enough money in the treasury at the time the contract was made or accepted to pay for the same, although there were funds on hand sufficient to pay therefor at the date set in the contract for payment. Ibid.

<sup>1</sup> French v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 614.

<sup>2</sup> Hodges v. Crowley, 186 Ill. 305, 57 N. E. 889. In order to authorize the issuing 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of warrants upon an appropriation, so as to give the transaction the effect contemplated by the foregoing rule, it is a prerequisite that the tax appropriated upon which the warrants are drawn must at the time be actually levied; and second, that the legal effect of the contract between the corporation and the individual receiving the warrants, made at the time of the appropriation, must be that the appropriation, and issuing and accepting of the warrants on the treasury for their payment, are such as to prevent any liability on the contract against the corporation.

Granting that a city has the right to levy a special assessment for the purpose of maintaining and operating an electric light plant, it does not follow that it can anticipate its future general revenues for the purpose of erecting such a plant. Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476.

<sup>3</sup> Hodges v. Crowley, supra. The court said that there is no reason for presuming much less could it be ascertained as a fact, that the assessment for the year preceding the levy was not greater in amount than for the year following, or for each of the remaining nine years. To say, if it proves insufficient, the loss must fall upon the holders of the warrants, did not meet the question before the court, which was whether anticipation warrants could be lawfully drawn upon a levy the amount of which could not be ascertained, so as to relieve the transaction on the part of the county of the character of "becoming indebted" beyond the constitutional limit.

<sup>4</sup> Cedar Rapids v. Bechtel, 110 Iowa, 196, 81 N. W. 466.

In Darling v. Taylor, 7 N. D. 538, 75 N. W. 766, in holding that warrants for current expenses may be issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes already levied, the court said: "We fully appreciate the fact that the . . . rule adopted, . . . in its practical operation, may be attended by some embarrassments; but, if no more warrants are ever drawn against an existing tax levy than the aggregate amount of such levy, the corporate indebtedness will not be increased by issuing such warrants, except in cases of a partial or total failure to collect the taxes actually levied. In legal theory, this failure never occurs, and if in fact there should, in an exceptional instance, be a deficit occasioned by such failure, the same could lawfully be met and extinguished by an additional levy of taxes for that purpose. The constitu-

But it has been held that a county cannot, in addition to the ordinary current expenses and other liabilities payable within a year, create a liability in anticipation of uncollected taxes. It has no power to anticipate in a year more than a year's uncollected taxes assessed at the maximum rate;<sup>5</sup> and that unappropriated current revenues, including those past due and uncollected, cannot be anticipated by voluntary indebtedness of the county, especially when the county is otherwise largely indebted for the ordinary current expenses.<sup>6</sup> And the debt limit having been reached, assignments of a portion of the incoming revenue, made in excess of the amount covered by the annual levy, would be illegal.<sup>7</sup> And a contract for the construction of an electric light plant for a city has been held within the provisions of a statute prohibiting municipalities from anticipating their revenues.<sup>8</sup>

e. Money in treasury.

There seems to be a conflict of opinion on the question whether obligations incurred after the debt limit has been reached constitute indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution, where there is money in the treasury to meet them. It has been held that the issue of city warrants in any sum, however great, above the debt limit, does not create a debt in violation of the Constitution, if the city has money in its treasury to meet its indebtedness;<sup>9</sup> and that, if there is in the treasury of a city an amount of cash sufficient to cover the excess of a bond issue beyond the constitutional debt limit, the bonds will be valid, and in the absence of any evidence on the point, the holders of the obligations will prevail.<sup>10</sup> In a Kentucky case it is said that the amount of debt created by the appropriation of a sum of money for the building of a courthouse is the difference between the available assets on hand and the contract price of the work. To the extent that there is money on hand or assets available for the purpose in view, to that extent there is no creation of any debt.<sup>11</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that the fact that funds may be in the treasury to pay the instalments of purchase money for an electric plant as they fall due is not enough to validate the contract, where the city has reached its debt limit and no levy has been made to meet them;<sup>12</sup> and that the salaries of officers and employees of the county, if not paid as the official or other service is rendered, become county indebtedness; and the price of lumber or other material purchased, if not paid for on delivery, becomes indebtedness.<sup>13</sup> It would seem, however, that under the rule that cash on hand constitutes assets, the new obligations would not constitute indebtedness within the meaning of the debt limit provisions, when there is sufficient cash on hand to pay them, unless the money in the treasury was destined to take care of current expenses.

f. Pledge or mortgage of receipts or property.

The rule that a city or village does not create an indebtedness by obtaining property to be paid for wholly out of the income thereof is a reasonable one. Under this rule<sup>14</sup> the pledging of water receipts to the construction of waterworks, and the transfer from the general to a special fund, do not create a new indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>15</sup> But the property pledged must be the only property liable to satisfy the obligation. If the creditor may look beyond this, an indebtedness is created within the meaning of the debt limit provisions.<sup>16</sup> So it has been held that certificates issued by the city to raise money to acquire a street railway constitute indebtedness, although there is no right of action against the city on account thereof, where the property of the city, other than the railway tional limit does not at all abridge the right to levy taxes."

<sup>5</sup> Rogers v. LeSueur County, 57 Minn. 434, 59 N. W. 488.

<sup>6</sup> Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 54 Pac. 174.

<sup>7</sup> People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 414, 15 Pac. 36.

<sup>8</sup> State ex rel. Knollman v. King, 109 La. 799, 33 So. 776.

<sup>9</sup> Dively v. Cedar Falls, 27 Iowa, 227.

<sup>10</sup> German Ins. Co. v. Manning, 95 Fed. 597.

<sup>11</sup> Field v. Stroube, 103 Ky. 114, 44 S. W. 363.

<sup>12</sup> Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279.

<sup>13</sup> L.R.A. (N.S.)

<sup>14</sup> Fritsch v. Salt Lake County, 15 Utah, 83, 47 Pac. 1026.

<sup>15</sup> Evans v. Holman, 244 Ill. 596, 91 N. E. 723.

<sup>16</sup> Griffin v. Tacoma, 49 Wash. 524, 95 Pac. 1107.

<sup>17</sup> A contract by which a city indebted beyond the constitutional limit acquires an electric lighting plant to be paid for out of the annual levy for lighting purposes, but without further obligating itself, the language of the contract being: "But it is understood and agreed by said company, that in case the city accepts this proposition, such acceptance shall create no indebtedness against said city in favor of this company," was held valid. Hay v. Springfield, 64 Ill. App. 671.

property and its income, is pledged to the payment.<sup>17</sup> Where it is provided that payment is to be secured in case the income of the waterworks plant is insufficient therefor, out of a fund created by levying a tax of 1 per cent for a certain period of years, the fact that the special tax is levied for the payment has been held not to alter the rule.<sup>18</sup>

The limitation as to indebtedness cannot be evaded by providing that when the corporation has issued bonds in payment of debts beyond the constitutional limit, for labor and materials furnished in the erection and furnishing of a building and making improvements for the corporation, the bondholders shall have a lien upon such building or furniture and effects therein, and upon the land of the corporation on which such building or improvements are constructed, to the amount of such indebtedness, on the theory that this does no more than to compel the surrender of that which the corporation has acquired by the void obligations, since the provision is for the appropriation of the whole building and land upon which it stands, its practical operation being to appropriate in part the lawful property of the corporation in payment of a void obligation.<sup>19</sup>

Contracts for the purchase of park lands, under statutes granting the city power to purchase lands on credit and providing that "for that purpose the proper officers of said city may execute and deliver to the vendor of such land or property purchased, an instrument creating a lien thereon. . . . for such purchase money, without creating any corporate liabilities therefor. to secure the whole or any part of the price," etc., were held not to create an indebtedness within the meaning of the debt limit provision of the Constitution.<sup>20</sup> And the purchase by a city of a waterworks plant subject to a mortgage secured by the payment of bonds was held not to create an indebtedness on the part of the city to the amount of the bonds, other property of the city not being liable to be taken therefor; and it was declared not to alter the rule, that the bondholders, by enforcing their right to take away the water plant, may deprive the city of so much of its money as up to that time has been paid upon the purchase.<sup>21</sup>

VI. Obligations imposed by law.

a. In general.

The question whether debt limit provisions apply to obligations imposed upon states and municipalities by law, as distinguished from those that are discretionary or voluntary, has been a troublesome one for the courts, and has led to opposite results in the decisions, and also to a conflict of views upon this important matter. When the debt limit has been reached, some means must be devised for carrying on governmental functions. In some jurisdictions the problem has been solved by declaring that indebtedness imposed by law <sup>17</sup> Street railway certificates issued for the purpose of acquiring a street railway create an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution, although it is provided therein that such certificates shall "under no circumstances, be or become an obligation or liability of the city, or payable out of any general fund thereof, but shall be payable solely out of a specified portion of the revenues or income to be derived from the street railway property for the acquisition of which they were issued," where the use of the streets is mortgaged for the benefit of the holders of such certificates for a period of twenty years after foreclosure, since this would be giving the holder more than a purchase money mortgage on the property acquired with the fund derived from the use and sale of such certificates. Lobdell v. Chicago, 227 Ill. 218, 81 N. E. 354.

The rule applicable in special assessment cases does not apply to the issuance of certificates to raise money for the acquirement of a street railway system, where, in addition to the property of the railway to be acquired, the right to the use of the street for railway purposes for twenty years is pledged to the payment of the certificates. Ibid.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

<sup>18</sup> East Moline v. Pope, 224 Ill. 386, 79 N. E. 587. The court said it would be different if nothing but the income of the waterworks were pledged.

<sup>19</sup> Mosher v. Independent School Dist. 44 Iowa, 122. The court said that if it were possible to ascertain the exact property acquired by the selling of the void bonds, so as to place the parties in statu quo, there might be some force in the argument.

<sup>20</sup> Burnham v. Milwaukee, 98 Wis. 128, 73 N. W. 1018. It was urged that even if there were no debts created by these contracts, in the ordinary signification of the term, still there was such an inchoate obligation that manifestly the city, from mere prudential reasons, would feel bound to make the payments in order to save the property. The case was distinguished from the class of cases holding that a debt is created where the power exists to enforce payments out of the corporate property by reason of the pledge or hypothecations thereof, by saying that here the city acquired no title to the lands covered by the contracts until it paid all of the instalments.

<sup>21</sup> Connor v. Marshfield, 128 Wis. 280, 107 N. W. 639.

on the political organization is not indebtedness within the meaning of the debt limit provisions. The Oregon cases, which support the doctrine that involuntary indebtedness is not prohibited, rest upon the peculiar wording of the Constitution of that state, which is that the political body shall not "create" any debts beyond the specified limit. This is said to have a different meaning from provisions that a state or municipality shall not "become indebted" beyond a certain amount.<sup>22</sup> But this is adhering strictly to the letter of the law. It is doubtful if those who enacted the constitutional provisions had any such distinction in mind. Very likely the difference in language was accidental. If the authors of these provisions had the distinction in mind, it would have been an easy matter to have made it clear. It is probable, then, that the object of the enactments, although differing in language in the respect pointed out in the Oregon decisions, was the same.<sup>23</sup> Most of the decisions, however, holding indebtedness incurred for the purpose of maintaining the political organization of the state or municipality involuntary, rest not upon the letter of the restric-

<sup>22</sup> The provision in the Oregon Constitution is "no county shall create any debts or liabilities which shall, singly or in the aggregate, exceed the sum of $5,000, except to suppress insurrection or repel invasion." Or. Const. art. 1, § 10. It does not provide, as in many other states, that a county shall not "be allowed or permitted to become indebted" beyond a certain sum, but simply prohibits it from "creating" such an indebtedness. Eaton v. Mimnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 73 Pac. 754.

The state Constitution prohibits a county from "creating" an indebtedness in excess of a certain amount, and does not apply to involuntary indebtedness thrust upon it by operation of law. Brockway v. Roseburg, 46 Or. 77, 79 Pac. 335.

But where the language of a city charter is that the indebtedness of the municipality "must never exceed" a certain amount, the rule is different. Ibid.

The constitutional inhibition that no county shall create any debts or liabilities which shall, singly or in the aggregate, exceed the sum of $5,000, except to suppress insurrection or repel invasion, does not apply to all debts and liabilities against a county over and above that sum, but only to those created by the county. Grant County v. Lake County, 17 Or. 453, 21 Pac. 447. The court said that a county is mainly a mere agency of the state government,—a function through which the state administers its governmental affairs,—and it has but little option in the creation of debts and liabilities against it. It must pay the salaries of its officers, the expenses incurred in holding courts within and for it, and various and many other expenses the law charges upon it, and which it is powerless to prevent. Debts and liabilities arising out of such matters, whatever sum they may amount to, cannot in reason be said to have been created in violation of the provision of the Constitution referred to, as they are really created by the general laws of the state, in administration of its governmental affairs.

This construction was recognized in Wormington v. Pierce, 22 Or. 600, 30 Pac. 450, and still later approved in Burnett v. Markley, 23 Or. 436, 31 Pac. 1050.

Before it can be said that a county has exceeded the constitutional limit of indebtedness, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) it must appear that the debts have been voluntarily created by the county in its corporate capacity. Burnett v. Markley, supra.

In Eaton v. Mimnaugh, supra, it was contended that the Constitution prohibits the county, but not the legislature, from incurring the debt; that while a county cannot of itself create any debt in excess of the constitutional limit, the legislature may create a liability for any legitimate governmental purpose, and impose its payment upon the county, regardless of the Constitution; but the court said that under such a construction, the Constitution would afford but little protection to taxpayers. To rid itself of the undesirable restraint, it would only be necessary for the county to secure the enactment of a law imposing debts upon it for the construction of expensive jails, courthouses, highways, or other public improvements, regardless of its financial condition or the wishes of its people; or, if the county authorities were unwilling to incur such indebtedness, designing persons might secure such legislation.

<sup>23</sup> In Grand Island & N. W. R. Co. v. Baker, 6 Wyo. 369, 34 L.R.A. 835, 71 Am. St. Rep. 926, 45 Pac. 494, in holding salaries of officers within the inhibition of the Constitution, it is said: "We are not unmindful of the difference in language between the Constitution of this state and that of some of the other states above referred to, but in respect to the present inquiry we fail to observe that the courts have drawn or indicated any distinction by reason of such difference in language. The object in either case is the limitation upon municipal indebtedness. To 'become indebted' would seem to be no broader, nor to be any more restrictive, than to 'create a debt.' If a county is prohibited from becoming indebted, we are not able to impart to that language any greater restriction upon the character of the indebtedness, than if the prohibition is against the 'creation of a debt.' If the constitutional limitation operates to restrain the legislature from imposing obligations upon a county in excess of the limitation in the one case, so far as the mere difference in words is concerned, it would have the like effect in the other case."

tive clause, but upon the broader ground of necessity, and the rule adopted is that debt limit provisions apply only to those obligations that are entered into voluntarily, that is, to those as to which the governing powers have some discretion.<sup>24</sup> But having decided that debt limit provisions do not apply to obligations imposed by law, the next problem which arises is the determination of what are and what are not voluntary or involuntary obligations, that is, obligations as to which the political body may exercise a discretion, or obligations which it has thrust upon it by law,<sup>25</sup> and in the solution of this problem each case must be determined largely from its own facts.<sup>26</sup> In general, it may be said that the necessary expenses incident to the maintenance of the political organization will be deemed involuntary obligations, or liabilities imposed by law.<sup>27</sup> Included in such expenses are the salaries of officers

<sup>24</sup> Strictly speaking, an indebtedness cannot be created except by a contract either express or implied. An indebtedness prohibited by the Constitution is such as is created by voluntary action by both debtor and creditor. Thomas v. Burlington, 69 Iowa, 140, 28 N. W. 480.

Constitutional provisions limiting the amount of county indebtedness that may be incurred are to be construed as having reference to that class of debts which it is optional with the court or other governing body to the county to incur, and not to be taken as having reference to compulsory obligations cast on the county by operation of law, as where a county is required to pay the ordinary expenses attending the maintenance of courts and the enforcement of the laws within the county, or where particular officers are required to provide, at the expense of the county, the necessary supplies for the proper discharge of the duties of their office. George D. Barnard & Co. v. Knox County, 2 L.R.A. 426, 37 Fed. 563.

The constitutional provision that "whenever the boundaries of any city are the same as those of a county, or when any city shall include within its boundaries more than one county, the power of any county included within such city, to become indebted, shall cease, etc.," is not violated by an act making certain county offices salaried offices, and providing for the payment of the salaries of the incumbents thereof, since the indebtedness which the counties so situated are prohibited from incurring is only such as is created for purposes other than for the maintenance of their political organization. Indebtedness created for this purpose is impliedly sanctioned by a provision expressly excepting from the operation of the constitutional provision certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes for the year. McGrath v. Grout, 171 N. Y. 7, 63 N. E. 647.

<sup>25</sup> In Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 54 Pac. 174, it is said that it is difficult to lay down a rule by which to discriminate clearly between debts voluntarily incurred and those imposed by law. The most important function of the county is to maintain a local government, subordinate to, but as an arm of, the state. Now, the expense incident to, and necessary under the laws prescribed by the state to organize and maintain, such a government, may be said to be thrust upon it by law; but such as the county court, acting in its capacity as fiscal agent of the county, has volition to contract, or such as may be wholly within its discretion to impose upon the county or not, as its judgment may dictate, is that against which the constitutional inhibition is directed. The undoubted purpose of this particular clause was effectually to protect persons residing within the county, from the abuse of their credit and the consequent oppression of burdensome, if not ruinous, taxation; and it ought to be clear that a county is powerless to prevent, before it should be permitted to incur, any indebtedness beyond the limits thereby imposed. If there is a doubt whether a debt has been cast upon a county by operation of law, or has been voluntarily created, those who have the burdens to bear consequent upon such determination should have the benefit of the doubt, and the protection of the Constitution. Officers intrusted with the management of public affairs, involving the expenditure and disbursement of public revenues, should be able to find a clear warrant of law for every such expenditure or disbursement.

<sup>26</sup> "Each case," said the court in Eaton v. Minnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 73 Pac. 754, "must be determined largely from its own facts, and by the doctrine of inclusion and exclusion. It manifestly cannot be held that all liabilities arising from the mere discharge of some public duty by a county, or in the performance of some powers conferred upon it by law, are involuntary obligations, and therefore not an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution. A large part of the obligations incurred by every county may, without any great impropriety, be said to be involuntary, in the sense that the discharge of the duty in which they were incurred could not have been neglected or avoided without disregarding some provision of law; but if that test alone is to be the standard, a county is practically left free to contract unlimited obligations, notwithstanding the provisions of the Constitution. This would be violating the language of that instrument, and frittering away its meaning by construction."

<sup>27</sup> A debt for current expenses is not such a debt as contemplated in § 5, art. 11, of the Texas Constitution. Dwyer v. Brenham, 65 Tex. 526.

Appropriations for other than necessary current expenses, creating obligations not and employees of the government,<sup>28</sup> policemen, marshals,<sup>29</sup> or persons sworn in to assist the sheriff.<sup>30</sup> The fees paid the architect for the preparation of plans and specifications may properly be regarded as a part of the general expense of construct-already existing, without adequately providing a revenue therefor, create a debt within the meaning of the Constitution. State v. Clinton, 28 La. Ann. 201.

Under a constitutional provision that a municipality shall not become indebted to an amount "exceeding in any way the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two thirds," etc., current expenses for the year cannot be counted as an existing debt. O'Bryan v. Owensboro, 113 Ky. 680, 68 S. W. 858, 69 S. W. 800.

Necessary governmental expenses made mandatory by the Constitution are not within the county debt limit prohibition of the Constitution. Rauch v. Chapman, 16 Wash. 568, 36 L.R.A. 407, 58 Am. St. Rep. 52, 48 Pac. 253. The court said there has been much controversy at times among our statesmen as to the necessary and proper limitations upon the powers of government, both state and municipal, but all are agreed that certain necessary fundamental functions of government must always be expressed and exercised. The protection of life, liberty, and property, and preservation of peace and good order in the state, cannot remain in abeyance, and it would make these various provisions of the Constitution contradictory, and render some of them nugatory, if a construction were placed upon the limitation of county indebtedness which would destroy the efficiency of the agencies established by the Constitution, to carry out the recognized and essential powers of government. It cannot be conceived that the people who framed and adopted the Constitution had such consequences in view.

But where a part of the warrants issued for necessary expenses were issued at a time before the county had reached the debt limit, the amount of such warrants cannot be deducted from the amount of indebtedness outstanding, in order that an equal amount of warrants issued for other purposes after the debt limit had been reached may be substituted and rendered valid. Duryee v. Friars, 18 Wash. 55, 50 Pac. 583.

The rule announced as to necessary expenditures for counties is applicable to municipalities, although a municipal corporation is voluntarily organized and the county is an involuntary quasi corporation. Hull v. Ames, 26 Wash. 272, 90 Am. St. Rep. 743, 66 Pac. 391.

The employment of an architect by a city to prepare plans and specifications for buildings which it proposed to construct was not the creation of a debt, within the purview of §§ 5 & 7 of art. 11 of the Constitution, which prohibits the creation of a debt by a municipal corporation, unless at the time of its creation, a tax be levied to provide a fund to pay the interest and create a sinking fund for the payment of the debt at maturity. Houston v. Glover, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 177, 89 S. W. 425.

<sup>28</sup> A constitutional provision that no county, city, etc., shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the qualified voters, etc., does not apply to the salary of an officer, which a statute of the state requires to be paid. Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 412, 33 Pac. 1128. The court said that it was quite apparent that this clause of the Constitution refers only to an indebtedness or liability which one of the municipal bodies mentioned has itself incurred,—that is, an indebtedness which the municipality has incurred, or a liability resulting in whole or in part from some act or conduct of such municipality. The clear intent expressed in the clause was to limit and restrict the power of the municipality as to any indebtedness or liability which it has discretion to incur or not to incur. But the stated salary of a public officer, fixed by statute, is a matter over which the municipality has no control and with respect to which it has no discretion, and the payment of his salary is a liability established by the legislature at the date of the creation of the office. It is not therefore an indebtedness or liability incurred by the municipality within the meaning of this clause of the Constitution.

Warrants issued for the payment of salaries of county officers, after the county has reached the debt limit, are valid as compulsory obligations of the county, imposed by the Constitution and laws of the state. Farquharson v. Yeargin, 24 Wash. 549, 64 Pac. 717.

Salaries and wages of officers and employees of a city, for services rendered by them in the necessary conduct of the city's ordinary affairs, or material or supplies furnished the city, necessary for its use in the conduct of its ordinary affairs, constitute valid items of expenditure, although the city is beyond its debt limit. Pilling v. Everett, — Wash. —, 120 Pac. 873.

And where the debt limit section has a proviso that it shall not be construed to apply to the ordinary and necessary expenses authorized by the general laws of the state, salaries of city officers and employees, and a judgment obtained against the city by reason of a defective sidewalk, come within the proviso. Butler v. Lewiston, 11 Idaho, 393, 83 Pac. 234.

<sup>29</sup> Services as policeman, marshal, and treasurer come within the requirement of necessities, since without these the police powers of the municipality must fail. Hull v. Ames, 26 Wash. 272, 90 Am. St. Rep. 743, 66 Pac. 391.

<sup>30</sup> The provision in the Constitution forbidding municipalities from becoming indebted in any manner or for any purpose

ing the buildings; but the contract for the payment of such fees may be entirely distinct from the contract for the erection of the buildings, and its validity in no way depend upon the validity of the building contract.<sup>31</sup> Other obligations held to be involuntary are those incurred in effecting a compromise of indebtedness,<sup>32</sup> for examining county books,<sup>33</sup> furnishing supplies,<sup>34</sup> insurance, books, and stationery,<sup>35</sup> for printing,<sup>36</sup> and coal for a waterworks plant.<sup>37</sup> Warrants issued for guarding quarantine patients have been held compulsory obligations, since the protection of the health of the citizens from contagion is an imperative duty of the city.<sup>38</sup>

Where, at the time a courthouse was erected, the county seat was a new mining camp, which but a short time before had been destroyed by fire, and most of the buildings were small frame cabins, none of them being a suitable place to deposit the county records, or to accommodate the county officers, it was held that a county beyond a certain amount will not prevent the county from contracting for the payment of services of persons sworn in by the sheriff to guard property. Hopkins County v. St. Bernard Coal Co. 114 Ky. 153, 70 S. W. 289. The court said that the duty of preserving the public peace, and protecting life and property, cannot be avoided because the income provided for the year by the fiscal court will be insufficient to pay the guards provided by statute. It is the duty of the fiscal court to provide a sufficient fund for this purpose when the necessity arises, if it has not been provided before. It was not the purpose of the Constitution to disable the municipalities of the state from maintaining the public peace or protecting the good name of the state. On the contrary, the Constitution was enacted by its makers, "grateful to Almighty God for the civil, political, and religious liberties we enjoy," that "the great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and established."

<sup>31</sup> Houston v. Glover, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 177, 89 S. W. 425.

<sup>32</sup> In Logansport v. Dykeman, 116 Ind. 15, 17 N. E. 587, it was held that a contract for services rendered in effecting a compromise and settlement of a large outstanding bonded indebtedness of a city did not create a new and additional debt, within the meaning of the section of the Constitution imposing the debt limit, since to give the Constitution such a construction would effectually tie the hands of municipalities, so to speak, and disable them from entering into any arrangement for refunding or reducing the amount of their pre-existing indebtedness by new promises to pay, or by any arrangement looking to a compromise.

The last-mentioned case is cited with approval in Perry County v. Gardner, 155 Ind. 165, 57 N. E. 908, in which the action was to recover for services rendered as an accountant. The court said that to ascertain from the accounts, books, and records, through the agency of an expert accountant, the financial condition of certain offices the true amount and nature of the outstanding indebtedness, the character and amount of allowances made by the board of commissioners, and the sums which may have been wrongfully charged, retained, embezzled, or lost through the negligence or fraud of their officers, may be and is quite as important to the municipal corporation as to obtain a compromise or reduction of liabilities already known to exist. Indeed, such a previous investigation is an indispensable preliminary to any measures having for their object the protection of the municipality against imposition and fraud, and the recovery of moneys justly due it.

<sup>33</sup> Services rendered in bringing county books up to date, and in examining them to ascertain whether there has been any stealing or not, are necessary to the orderly and prudent management of the business and governmental affairs of the county, and a charge therefor creates an involuntary indebtedness not within the inhibition of the Constitution. Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 54 Pac. 174.

<sup>34</sup> A claim for supplies for prisoners furnished under a contract with a city and county falls within the same rule. Goldsmith v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 36, 46 Pac. 816.

<sup>35</sup> Warrants issued for the insurance of city buildings, services in making assessment rolls, city printing, postage, stationery for city officers, and necessary expenses of the city clerk, are compulsory obligations. Gladwin v. Ames, 30 Wash. 608, 71 Pac. 189.

Necessary books and stationery for the use of county officers are included in the compulsory obligations of the county. George D. Barnard & Co. v. Knox County, 2 L.R.A. 426, 37 Fed. 563.

<sup>36</sup> A debt for printing the ordinances of a city was held to be one for current expenses, and therefore not such a debt as is contemplated in the debt limit provision of the Constitution. Dwyer v. Brenham, 65 Tex. 526.

Warrants for publishing notices and printing ballots are an obligatory expense, since a city organized under our form of government cannot be maintained without elections, and the law governing elections and insuring their efficacy cannot be enforced without expense. Gladwin v. Ames, supra.

A claim for the public printing of the state, including the printing of the laws and the decisions of the courts, is one for necessary current expenses. State v. Clinton, 23 La. Ann. 201.

<sup>37</sup> Martin-Strelau Co. v. Dubuque, 149 Iowa, 1, 127 N. W. 1013.

<sup>38</sup> Gladwin v. Ames, 30 Wash. 608, 71 Pac. 189.

building was absolutely necessary for county officers and the proper care of the records, and was therefore within the rule of authorized compulsory obligations.<sup>39</sup>

If the obligation is one which, as already stated, is discretionary, it falls within the inhibition of the debt limit provisions.<sup>40</sup> Although there may be circumstances under which the building of a new courthouse would be deemed an involuntary obligation, in general it has not been so regarded.<sup>41</sup>

<sup>39</sup> Farquharson v. Yeargin, 24 Wash. 549, 64 Pac. 717. The court said that while ordinarily warrants issued in payment of money expended in building a courthouse would not fall under the class of compulsory obligations, the conditions existing here made them such.

Warrants for labor and materials furnished in the building of a county jail are compulsory obligations within the meaning of the rule. Gladwin v. Ames, 30 Wash. 608, 71 Pac. 189.

The reasonable cost and expenses of making repairs upon a courthouse is incidental to the management of the affairs of a county, and not unlawful, even though the amount thereof, added to other items of current expenses, exceeds the statutory limitation of the taxing power of the county. Upton v. Strommer, 101 Minn. 97, 111 N. W. 956. "The situation," it is said, "is no different from a case where by storm or other calamity, the buildings of a county are unroofed or otherwise damaged, and rendered unfit for occupancy, in which case it would be the clear duty of the county board to provide economically all necessary repairs, the cost of which would constitute a necessary expense, to which the statute limiting the power of taxation would not apply."

But Brown, J., who did not concur in the disposition of the case, was of the opinion that the transformation of an ordinary village engine house or village hall, into a courthouse, amounts to something more than making repairs to an existing courthouse owned by the city. Ibid.

<sup>40</sup> Generally speaking, it may be said that a liability imposed upon a county by law, which it is not at liberty to evade or postpone, is involuntary, and not within the terms of the Constitution. But a liability arising from the performance of some public duty of a discretionary character, or which the county authorities may, in their discretion, postpone indefinitely or temporarily until means are provided for the payment of the expenses incident thereto, cannot be so held. Eaton v. Mimnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 73 Pac. 754.

<sup>41</sup> Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 54 Pac. 174.

In no event, and under no possible construction of the Constitution, does it seem that a debt incurred by a county for the building of a new courthouse can be said to be involuntarily incurred. It is the duty of a county to provide offices for its

It has been said that there is a plain distinction between a contract for the use of rooms or a building for city purposes, and the erection by a city of a building to be used for such purposes. The one is an ordinary expense, while the other involves municipal ownership of the building or rooms, and means of furnishing the offices, and is an extraordinary expense.<sup>42</sup> The matter of placing shelving and boxing in courthouse vaults, insuring county property, officers, and rooms and accommodations for holding its courts, jails for the confinement of prisoners, and the like. It is assumed, however, that this will be done within the current revenue. The county has authority to levy taxes annually upon all the taxable property within its limits, with which to raise revenue sufficient to pay its expenses (Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Stat. § 3085); and the law and the Constitution contemplate that it will exercise its powers in that respect. Eaton v. Mimnaugh, supra.

When a county is already provided with an ample courthouse, the provisions of the Constitution cannot be avoided by a mere change of the county seat. Ibid.

Remodeling, and building three new additions to, a courthouse, do not fall within the meaning of current county expenditures. Book v. Earl, 87 Mo. 246.

The purchase of a courthouse site at the expense of $4,000 is not an ordinary expense, within the meaning of a provision of the Constitution permitting ordinary expenses, without the submission of the question to the vote of the people. Bannock County v. Bunting, 4 Idaho, 156, 37 Pac. 277.

<sup>42</sup> South Bend v. Reynolds, 155 Ind. 70, 49 L.R.A. 795, 57 N. E. 706.

In Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396, it is said that it is very manifest that a city, already indebted to its maximum limit, cannot purchase upon credit real property with buildings thereon suitable for its offices, council rooms, etc.; nor can it, having real estate, make a valid contract upon its credit for the erection of such buildings; nor employ laborers to put up such buildings, and issue daily, weekly, or otherwise its warrant for such labor, where its cost is manifestly above the amount it can pay out of its ordinary current revenues and at the same time defray its other necessary and current expenses. But it may rent such real estate and buildings for a like use, and agree to pay at fixed periods a reasonable rent not exceeding, with the other expenses, its ordinary current revenue; and such a contract for payment of rent would not be creating an indebtedness, for it is in effect a cash transaction where the payments are made pari passu with the accumulation of the rent; and the length of time the contract is to continue, whether it be for thirty days or thirty years, does not alter its effect.

and purchasing toll roads, of constructing and repairing county bridges under a statute authorizing their construction in the discretion of the county courts, the repairing of courthouses, jails, and other necessary buildings for the use of the county, have been held discretionary, and an obligation created therefor is voluntary, and therefore invalid if beyond the debt limit.<sup>43</sup> Under the same rule fall contracts for replatting and reindexing records and for the purchase of a poor farm.<sup>44</sup> The cost of engines and other apparatus has been held not included in the expenses of a fire department, within the meaning of the statutory limitations imposed on fire department expenses.<sup>45</sup> And the requirement of an electric light plant by a city, to supply itself and inhabitants with light, has been declared not a reasonable and necessary current expense, such as a city which has reached the debt limit is allowed to incur only under a statutory provision.<sup>46</sup>

And an act appropriating a sum of money to reimburse a public printer for loss sustained by him by being compelled to negotiate state warrants at a discount has been held to create a new indebtedness against the state, within the debt limit provision.<sup>47</sup> The building of a garbage plant has been held in New York an extraordinary expense, within the meaning of a charter provision requiring the submission of the question of such expenses to vote.<sup>48</sup>

In many jurisdictions, however, the doctrine that debt limit provisions do not apply to obligations imposed on political organizations by law is denied, and the rule has been adopted that it applies to all obligations arising ex contractu.<sup>49</sup> When a municipality has reached the debt limit, therefore, in these jurisdictions, it

<sup>43</sup> Municipal Secur. Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 54 Pac. 174.

<sup>44</sup> A contract for the work of replatting and reindexing records of a county, under a statute according counties a wide discretion in the matter, is a voluntary obligation. Ibid.

The purchase of a poor farm, being discretionary, creates a voluntary obligation against the county. Ibid.

<sup>45</sup> Leonard v. Long Island City, 47 N. Y. S. R. 761, 20 N. Y. Supp. 26.

<sup>46</sup> Palmer v. Helena, 40 Mont. 498, 107 Pac. 512.

<sup>47</sup> State ex rel. Salomon v. Graham, 23 La. Ann. 402. The court said that if the revenues of the state are inadequate to meet the interest of the public debt and the current expenses of the necessary state agencies to preserve the government, an appropriation (whereby the liabilities of the state are increased) for any other purpose than the support and maintenance of the machinery of the government is a debt within the meaning of the Constitution.

<sup>48</sup> Mander v. Coleman, 109 App. Div. 454, 95 N. Y. Supp. 696.

Likewise an expenditure for voting machines is an extraordinary expenditure. People ex rel. United States Standard Voting Mach. Co. v. Geneva, 45 Misc. 237, 92 N. Y. Supp. 91.

<sup>49</sup> The legislature cannot impose upon a county a compulsion to incur debt, nor can a county involuntarily assume it, as against the disability of a constitutional prohibition. Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 32 L. ed. 1060, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651. The court said: "We cannot say, as a matter of law, that it was absurd for the framers of the Constitution for this new state to plan for the establishment of its financial system on a basis that should closely approximate the basis of cash. It was a scheme favored by some of the ablest of the earlier American statesmen. Nor can the fact disclosed in the bill of exceptions, that, after the adoption of the state Constitution, the county officials and many of the people, designedly or undesignedly, disregarded the constitutional rule, render the plan absurd. If it was a mistaken scheme, if its operation has proved or shall prove to be more inconvenient than beneficial, the remedy is with the people, not with the courts."

A county in Colorado cannot be made liable for a debt contracted above the amount fixed by said constitutional provisions, although the debt is for ordinary county expenses, evidenced by county warrants. The court said: "We must decline to read the expression in § 6, 'and the aggregate amount of indebtedness of any county, for all purposes, etc., as if it were written 'and the aggregate amount of such indebtedness.'" Ibid.

In Guthrie v. Territory, 1 Okla. 188, 21 L.R.A. 841, 31 Pac. 190, Mr. Justice Burford, speaking for the court, said: "And even if it should appear that the claims were in excess of the limit, it would not invalidate the statute. 'This congressional provision is a limit on the municipal authorities, but does not limit the power of the legislature to levy assessments on the property within the corporation by proper legislation.'" But the court in Martin v. Territory, 5 Okla. 188, 48 Pac. 106, said that this was a dictum, and it was expressly overruled in Guthrie v. New Vienna Bank, 4 Okla. 194, 38 Pac. 4, in which it was held that a legislature has no power to impose a liability upon a city beyond the debt limit.

The act of Congress of July 30, 1886, is a limitation upon the legislature as well as upon the city authorities, in the creation of city indebtedness; and any indebtedness, whether created by the city authorities or by the legislature, in excess of the limit of 4 per cent of the assessed valuation of property within the city, determined by the last assessment thereof for territorial and county purposes, is without authority of law and void. Martin v. Territory, supra.

must manage somehow thereafter to pay as it goes. Where a statute provided that that no town shall incur any debt in excess of 3 per centum of the taxable property of such town, etc., it was urged that, as the statute imposes upon towns the duty of keeping their highways in repair, and makes them liable for damages sustained by reason of the highways being out of repair, a debt necessarily incurred in the discharge of said duty is a compulsory obligation, or a debt created by law, and hence binding, notwithstanding the statute; but the court held otherwise, saying it is true that in a certain sense all town debts may be said to be created by law, and hence compulsory, because the town has no authority to incur any debt except as such authority is conferred upon it by law; and while the duty is devolved upon it to keep its highways in repair, to provide for its paupers, and to do many other things requiring the expenditure of money, still it is governed by the statute in the performance of all these duties, and must keep within the limits prescribed thereby, or else the statute is rendered inoperative and of no avail. In short, it is the imperative duty of municipal corporations so to manage their affairs as to keep within the debt limit prescribed by the legislature.<sup>50</sup> Where the involuntary expense doctrine is denied, expenditures beyond the debt limit cannot be allowed on the plea of necessity,<sup>51</sup> or because it will embarrass or cripple the administration of the government,<sup>52</sup> it being

<sup>50</sup> McAleer v. Angell, 19 R. I. 688, 36 Atl. 588.

In holding that a statute forbidding a town to draw warrants upon its treasurer when it had no money in the treasury, etc., did not apply to supplies for the poor, the court said: "That the aggregate indebtedness of the town shall not exceed the constitutional limitation is the only restriction upon the power of a town to become indebted to discharge such duties devolved upon it by law." Kankakee v. McGrew, 178 Ill. 74, 52 N. E. 893.

<sup>51</sup> The necessity for an electric light plant constitutes no justification or excuse for the violation of the constitutional provision as to the debt limit. Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476.

A contract for electric lighting which creates an indebtedness beyond the constitutional debt limit cannot be justified on the theory that such lighting is one of the necessities of city life; that to provide it is one of the urgent items of current expenses; that a modern plant cannot be obtained by a yearly contract, and that it is so costly that no one will take the risk of supplying it in that way. Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279.

That a fire alarm telegraph may be necessary for the welfare of the city will not enable the city to install it, if it is already indebted beyond the constitutional debt limit, where the provision of the constitution is that the corporation shall not "in any manner or for any purpose" become indebted beyond the amount fixed. Brashers v. Madison, 142 Ind. 685, 33 L.R.A. 474, 36 N. E. 252, 42 N. E. 349. The court said that in such circumstances the most necessary expenses must be met by the current revenues, and that a debt cannot be contracted even for cleaning the streets, or for protecting the city from fire.

Where the constitutional provision is that no public or municipal corporation of the state shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to an amount in the aggregate exceeding a certain amount, it will be considered as applicable to debts contracted on account of the current and ordinary expenses of the respective municipalities to which it refers, such as a contract for fire alarm strikers and signal boxes. Sackett v. New Albany, 88 Ind. 473, 45 Am. Rep. 467.

The necessity for the construction of a bridge does not warrant the expenditure of money therefor in excess of the constitutional debt limit. Ada Twp. v. Kent Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 77, 72 N. W. 35.

That a county may be in need of a courthouse, and that it is the duty of the county commissioners to provide one, will not give the county the right to incur an indebtedness therefore in excess of the statutory limit. Rogers v. LeSueur County, 57 Minn. 434, 59 N. W. 488.

Though a county has outgrown its courthouse, this does not authorize the county to contract for the erection of a new one, where it has reached its debt limit, under a proviso permitting expenditures in emergencies where the public health and safety require it. Fiscal Ct. v. Com. 139 Ky. 307, 117 S. W. 301.

The fact that a statute empowers the city to build or rent a market house, and that a market house is necessary for the convenience of the people, will not authorize the city to contract for the rental or purchase of one after it has reached its debt limit. Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 398. The court said corporations, like natural persons, must do without conveniences when they have not the money to pay for them. If the ordinary revenues of the city are not sufficient to meet its legitimate wants, and if it must continually take upon itself new obligations for that purpose, it is clear that bankruptcy and financial ruin must occur sooner or later, and when these do occur, it must learn volens volens, to live within its revenues.

That it is necessary, under the revenue law, to borrow money in anticipation of the city's revenue, will not justify the city in incurring indebtedness for such purpose, after it has reached the debt limit. Fuller v. Chicago, 89 Ill. 282.

<sup>52</sup> Where the legislature is allowed to deemed the duty of the court to declare the law as it is written.<sup>53</sup> It must be remembered that the debt limit provisions are not a limit on the power of taxation to contract debts beyond the constitutional limit only in case of war, invasion, or insurrection, ordinary expenses of the government do not fall within the exception, and it will not be held that these expenses are excepted from the inhibition of the Constitution on the theory or the supposition that a different ruling will lead to injurious consequences. Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65.

In support of the position that the constitutional limitation does not apply to debts for the necessary running expenses of a county, it was urged that a contrary ruling would produce conflict between different parts of the Constitution itself; that such construction would disable certain counties from incurring debts for the payment of officers' fees and other necessary running expenses, so that the business of such counties would not be efficiently transacted, and that they would, to a great extent, be shorn of their usefulness. That thus the beneficent constitutional provisions relating to county organization and government would, as to certain counties, be largely, if not completely, neutralized. It was also urged that serious public disasters would result from the stoppage of the wheels of county government because of inability to incur debts. In People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 404, 12 Pac. 838, the court, in replying to these suggestions, said that the validity of the constitutional provisions does not depend upon the ability of the counties to create indebtedness; nor do the apprehended consequences necessarily follow from the inhibition against further liability. The constitutional provision simply prohibits indebtedness beyond a certain sum. It does not limit the amount of taxes the county authorities shall levy to defray county charges for a given year. The members of the constitutional convention were not dealing with the subject of county expenses or expenditures, provided the county pays as it goes. Their purpose was to protect the municipal credit, and to relieve the people from the oppressive burden that always results from a large corporate indebtedness. If the running expenses are necessarily heavy, or if the people are inclined to extravagance, and indulge in what might be termed "municipal luxury," still the credit remains good, and the evils against which the convention legislated, do not exist, provided these expenses, whether necessary or unnecessary, economical or extravagant, are paid when incurred.

Replying to the contention that a rigid construction of the Constitution would occasion inconvenience to city officials in administering its governmental affairs, the court, in Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385, said that no inconvenience had been experienced by the state under this restriction, but that on the contrary, for nearly one third of a century, there had been an almost unprecedented career of prosperity. It had 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

grown vastly in population, wealth, and material greatness. The state had paid a vast debt with its interest, and all of its expenses, and no reason was perceived why the great municipality of Chicago, under the same prudence, economy, and financial ability, should not be able to manage its financial affairs with like results.

Where a city had reached the debt limit, and authorized a contract for the construction of a capitol for a sum not exceeding $300,000, and provided that payments should be made in bonds of the state, redeemable in thirty years, it was held that this could not be done. Nougues v. Douglass, supra.

<sup>53</sup> In McAleer v. Angell, 10 R. I. 688, 36 Atl. 588, the court said: "We are aware of the fact that to hold that a town which has reached its debt limit is incapable of contracting any additional indebtedness may so cripple it for the time being as to seriously interfere with the management of its municipal affairs, and while it is proper for the court to take into account the consequences which may result from its decision in a doubtful case, yet, where the law is plain and unambiguous, no such consideration can be allowed to have weight in the determination of the question. It is the plain and imperative duty of the court to declare the law as written, leaving it to the general assembly to make such changes as new circumstances may require."

Where a county is already indebted in a sum exceeding 5 per cent of the value of the taxable property therein, it cannot incur a further indebtedness for building a courthouse, or for any other purpose; and a tax levied to pay such further alleged indebtedness is void. The court said that arguments of convenience, of policy, or of present necessity, should not be allowed, by loose construction, to weaken the force or limit the extent of a constitutional prohibition so necessary and so beneficently intended. Hebard v. Ashland County, 55 Wis. 145, 12 N. W. 437.

Under a constitutional limitation that cities shall not incur any indebtedness exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without the assent, etc., when the revenue for the given year has been determined, and such revenue collected and expended before the expiration of the fiscal year, the city cannot, for the purpose of providing for pressing wants of the municipality during the residue of such year, incur debts and liabilities to be met with and discharged from the revenues of a subsequent year. It was urged that it was a plain duty of the government to provide for that without which the government could not exist as an active entity, but the court deemed it to be a solecism to say that the duty to contract debts and liabilities on behalf of the city exists in a case where the Constitution expressly inhibits it. Bradford v. San Francisco, 112 Cal. 537, 44 Pac. 912.

raise money to defray necessary expenses on a cash basis.<sup>54</sup>

That the adoption of a rigid rule to keep debts within the debt limit may cause great hardship to persons who have in good faith furnished labor and materials to the municipality is held not to justify any departure therefrom.<sup>55</sup> He who contracts with a municipality, whereby indebtedness is created, must at his peril take notice of the financial condition of the city, and whether the purposed indebtedness is in excess of the constitutional limit. Any other rule would place the taxpayer at the mercy of the officers of the city and contractor, and would render the constitutional provision nugatory.<sup>56</sup>

Where the provision forbids incurring liability "in any manner or for any purpose," it can make no difference whether

An expenditure in excess of the debt limit for a new courthouse cannot be authorized on the theory that it was not the purpose of the Constitution to disable the fiscal court from providing for the courts and the people a sufficient courthouse, where the county has occupied the old courthouse for years, and the proposition is to incur an indebtedness for a new and more imposing building, on the ground that the county has outgrown the old one. Lawrence County v. Lawrence Fiscal Ct. 130 Ky. 587, 113 S. W. 824.

<sup>54</sup> To the argument that the constitutional limitation of county indebtedness could not have been intended to include expenditures for necessary county expenses, because the rate fixed was so low that the county officials would be seriously embarrassed and crippled in the management of county affairs, and unable to meet the ordinary expenses of the county, it has been answered that the limitation imposed by the Constitution is a limitation of indebtedness, and not a limitation of the amount that may be raised by taxation to meet the necessary current expenses of the county. It is simply a declaration that the county within certain limits shall live within its income, and not that its income shall be more or less. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 Pac. 641.

<sup>55</sup> The ruling of the court on the question whether a warrant is worthless because issued for an obligation beyond the debt limit cannot be controlled by the fact that to declare it to be void will be a hardship to the plaintiff. It is the duty of persons dealing with counties and the county officials, as well as the county officials themselves, to take notice of the limitations prescribed by the Constitution. Barnard & Co. v. Knox County, 105 Mo. 382, 13 L.R.A. 244, 16 S. W. 917.

The fact that to consider certificates of indebtedness after a city had reached the constitutional debt limit as debts of the city, and therefore invalid, would work hardships on the holders hereof, will not warrant the court in holding them bad. Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. The court said: "The liberty of the citizen and his security in all his rights in a large degree depend upon a rigid adherence to the provisions of the Constitution and the laws, and their faithful performance. If courts, to avoid hardships, may disregard and refuse to enforce their provisions, then the security of the citizen is imperiled. Then the will, it may be the unbridled will, of the judge, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

would usurp the place of the Constitution and the laws, and the violation of one provision is liable to speedily become a precedent for another perhaps more flagrant, until all constitutional and legal barriers are destroyed, and none are secure in their rights."

In Wolcott v. Lawrence County, 28 Mo. 272, it is said that if any effect is to be given to the law at all, its plain directions must be followed, and to allow a manifest departure from them would not only be a violation of an established rule that governs the relations of principal and agent, but would remove all of the restrictions which the law has imposed upon the county courts in contracting debts to be paid by the county.

That a ruling that a county had no power to contract for the remodeling of a courthouse will work great hardship, inasmuch as the work contracted for was done according to contract, and was worth the price agreed upon to be paid, and was accepted and used by the county, does not authorize the court to relieve against it. Book v. Earl, 87 Mo. 246.

That the work of building a courthouse was worth the price agreed to be paid, and was accepted and used by the county, will not enable the court to grant relief to the builder thereof, in the face of the debt limit provision. Anderson v. Ripley County, 181 Mo. 46, 80 S. W. 263.

<sup>56</sup> French v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 614.

Whoever deals with a municipality does so with notice of the limitation of its powers, and with notice also that he can receive compensation for his labor or materials only from the revenues and income previously provided for the fiscal year during which his labor and materials are furnished, and with knowledge too that all other persons dealing with the municipality have the same rights to compensation, and are subject to the same limitations, as he is. Even though, at the time of making his contract, there are funds in the treasury sufficient to meet the amount of his claim, he is charged with notice that these funds are liable to be paid out for municipal expenditures before his contract matures into a claim against the city, and if others whose claims have accrued subsequent to his are able to intercept these funds, he is in the same condition as any creditor who deals with one whose assets are exhausted before he presents his claim. In dealing with the municipality, he must rely upon the integrity of its officers that they will the debt be for necessary current expenses or for something else.<sup>87</sup> A constitutional provision that the aggregate amount of indebtedness of any county "for all purposes" shall not exceed a certain amount includes debts incurred by operation of law as well as by contract, so that, the constitutional limitation having been reached, a debt for the statutory fee of an officer or a statutory liability in connection with any other municipal employment or expense, is as much inhibited as is indebtedness for labor performed or materials furnished under contract.<sup>88</sup> The prohibition being against the incurring of indebtedness in any manner or for any purpose, beyond a certain per centum of the taxable property, all legislation in conflict therewith must yield, and it makes no difference whether the legislation authorizes the building of not incur any liabilities during the year in excess of the income and revenues provided for that year, and as a prudent man he will ascertain not only the amount of that income, but also the amount of the claims already existing, and of those that are likely to be incurred. Weaver v. San Francisco, 111 Cal. 319, 43 Pac. 972.

In San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641, the court said: "We have neither the right nor the disposition, by judicial interpretation, to take away the wholesome restriction upon municipalities thus imposed by the Constitution. Of course, in giving effect to this radical change from the pre-existing condition of things, it will not be strange if some shall be found to suffer. But it must be remembered that all are presumed to know the law, and that whoever deals with a municipality is bound to know the extent of its powers. Those who contract with it, or furnish it supplies, do so with reference to the law, and must see that limit is not exceeded. With proper care on their part and on the part of the representatives of the municipality, there is no danger of loss."

<sup>87</sup> Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626.

If a city has reached the debt limit, it cannot incur other liabilities on the ground that they are ordinary or current expenses of the city government. Prince v. Quincy, 105 Ill. 215.

A debt cannot be made, even for current expenses, beyond the constitutional limit, no matter how urgent. Laporte v. Game-well Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 466, 35 L.R.A. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588.

A provision forbidding municipalities to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, beyond a certain amount, is applicable to outstanding warrants issued for current city expenses. Council Bluffs v. Stewart, 51 Iowa, 385, 1 N. W. 628.

A general assembly is inhibited, in absolute and unqualified terms, from making appropriations or authorizing expenditures for the support of the government or its institutions in time of peace, in excess of the total tax then provided by law and applicable to such appropriation, unless such general assembly shall provide for levying a sufficient tax, within constitutional limits, to pay the same within such fiscal year. Re General Assembly, 13 Colo. 316, 22 Pac. 464.

If the general assembly passes acts making appropriations or authorizing expenditures in excess of constitutional limits, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

such acts are void, and create no indebtedness against the state. Ibid.

Debts to provide for casual deficiencies of the revenue cannot be contracted by the state in excess of the limit prescribed in § 3, art. 11, Const. A casual deficiency of the revenue is one that happens by chance or accident, and without design or intention to evade the constitutional inhibition. Ibid.

A county cannot lawfully contract for an extraordinary expenditure beyond the debt limit. Monroe County v. Strong, 78 Miss 566, 29 So. 530.

The fact that a judgment against a county, growing out of negligent conduct of its officers or agents, constitutes a liability regardless of its indebtedness, does not require the adoption of the rule that necessary expenses of a county are also excepted from the debt limit provision. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 404, 12 Pac. 838. The court said that it is clear that the language under consideration deals with indebtedness that is reasonably anticipated as a result of voluntary action by the legislature or county authorities,—such indebtedness as springs from express or implied contracts. Involuntary liability, arising ex delicto, is a subject that is not contemplated by the provision.

<sup>88</sup> Ibid.

In Potter v. Douglas County, 87 Mo. 239, it was held that the claim of a sheriff for the keeping of prisoners committed to an other county by the sheriff of the defendant county, as commanded by law, was an obligation which the county must pay, although it had reached the constitutional debt limit. It was said that to hold otherwise would be destructive of peace and good order, and that the inhibition of the Constitution was leveled against the incurring of indebtedness in the ordinary way by the action of the county court, the financial agent of the county. Here the indebtedness was involuntarily incurred by the command of the law.

But the last-mentioned case was overruled in Barnard & Co. v. Knox County, 105 Mo. 382, 13 L.R.A. 244, 16 S. W. 917, in which it was held that a provision of the Constitution prohibiting the incurring of indebtedness in any manner or for any purpose, applied even to a debt imposed by law. The court said: "This strong and comprehensive language admits of no distinction between debts created by a county court and debts created by law. In a sense all county debts are created by law, for the counties possess those powers, and those waterworks, the erection of libraries, schools, or hospitals.<sup>60</sup> So, an indebtedness for the burial of the indigent dead is not taken out of the operation of the constitutional provision forbidding the incurring of any indebtedness or liability for any purpose exceeding, in any one year, the revenue provided for that year, etc., on the theory that the obligation is imposed by law.<sup>61</sup> And an act making it obligatory upon counties to pay a reward for the discovery of artesian wells has been held invalid, where it appears that the county at the time has reached its debt limit.<sup>61</sup>

b. Torts.

The courts are in harmony on the proposition that debt limit provisions do not apply to obligations sounding in tort.<sup>62</sup> only, which are conferred upon them by the Constitution and laws of the state. While it is the duty of the county court to care for paupers and insane persons, and to build bridges and repair roads, still the county court is governed by the statute in the performance of these duties. Debts incurred for such purposes may be called debts created by law as well as debts incurred by the county clerk for books and stationery." The debt in this case was for such supplies.

The obligation to pay the salary of a health officer of a city is a debt within the meaning of the Constitution. Norton v. East St. Louis, 36 Ill. App. 171.

The Federal limit imposed upon county indebtedness includes indebtedness incurred by operation of law as well as that arising from express contracts, and therefore a warrant issued by a county in payment of the salary of the county clerk is within the prohibition of the act; and it is a good defense to an action upon such a warrant, that, at the time the services were performed and the warrant issued as an evidence thereof, the indebtedness of the county was above the maximum limit fixed by the provisions of the act. D County v. Gillett, 9 Okla. 593, 60 Pac. 277.

<sup>60</sup> East Moline v. Pope, 224 Ill. 386, 79 N. E. 587.

<sup>61</sup> Pacific Undertakers v. Widber, 113 Cal. 201, 45 Pac. 273.

<sup>62</sup> McRae v. Cochise County, 5 Ariz. 26, 44 Pac. 299.

Where the amount offered as a reward for the discovery of an artesian well, together with the expense of taking proof of the compliance with the terms of the law by the claimant of the reward, is made an obligation to be paid by the treasurer of the county on the warrant drawn for such reward and costs, it creates a debt against the county within the meaning of the debt limit statute. Ibid.

A township cannot, under an act authorizing it to sink artesian wells for public

Where an action for damages against a city is not based upon failure to grade its streets or to make gutters, but for the doing of the grading and making of gutters in a careless, negligent, and unskilful manner, it is no defense that, at the time of the injuries and long prior thereto, the city was indebted beyond the constitutional limit.<sup>63</sup> And it is no defense to an action for injuries received from a defective sidewalk, that the city had no money in its treasury with which to make the necessary repairs, and that it was indebted beyond the constitutional limit.<sup>64</sup> An action against a city for failure to put the necessary machinery in motion, and to prosecute in good faith and with reasonable diligence the means afforded to it, under its charter, to raise and collect the funds by an assessment of the property affected by a street purposes, and to issue bonds therefor, incur an indebtedness beyond the constitutional limit. Dring v. St. Lawrence Twp. 23 S. D. 624, 122 N. W. 664.

<sup>63</sup> In the trial of an action for tort, a city cannot resist the claim although it is already indebted to an amount in excess of the debt limit. Bloomington v. Perdue, 99 Ill. 329.

That a city has reached its limit of indebtedness is no defense to an action for damages for personal injury. Lorence v. Bean, 18 Wash. 36, 50 Pac. 582.

The liability of a municipality for the want of fidelity of those who act for it is not within the constitutional and statutory limitations in regard to the creation of indebtedness. Chicago v. Sexton, 115 Ill. 230, 2 N. E. 263.

The language of the Constitution that a city should not be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for that year, etc., said the court in Conner v. Nevada, 188 Mo. 148, 107 Am. St. Rep. 314, 86 S. W. 256, shows that it is an indebtedness incurred by assent, agreement, or contract. The word "debt" has a well-recognized meaning in law, distinguished from liability for damages. After a claim for damages is reduced to a judgment, it becomes, in a technical sense, a debt, but it is a debt imposed by law, not one assumed by contract.

<sup>64</sup> Bartle v. Des Moines, 38 Iowa, 414.

<sup>65</sup> Rice v. Des Moines, 40 Iowa, 638.

A judgment against a town for damages resulting from dangerous and unsafe highways, although a debt, cannot properly be said to be a debt within the meaning of the Constitution, providing that no town shall incur any indebtedness beyond a certain amount, the prohibition evidently being against debts voluntarily created in the ordinary manner. McAleer v. Angell, 19 R. I. 622, 36 Atl. 588.

improvement, is an action ex delicto, and the municipality cannot escape liability therefor, under the plea that its indebtedness has reached the constitutional limit.<sup>65</sup> A city's liability for damages arising out of an erroneous assessment is not a debt within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>66</sup> Money paid into a city treasury under a void tax sale does not become the absolute property of the city, and its repayment is not the incurring of a debt within the meaning of the Constitution.<sup>67</sup>

<sup>65</sup> Little v. Portland, 26 Or. 235, 37 Pac. 911.

But unliquidated damages to landowners from a public improvement constitute a debt against a city, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that the debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality, or incorporated district shall never exceed 7 per cent upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, and that such municipality or district shall not incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount, exceeding 2 per cent upon such assessed valuation of property, without the assent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law. Keller v. Scranton, 200 Pa. 130, 86 Am. St. Rep. 708, 49 Atl. 781. This is not a liability arising from tort. The court said: "It is true that the Constitution does not exempt municipalities, how great soever their indebtedness, from liability for wrongful and tortious acts. But it does not authorize the voluntary assumption of obligation to pay money by the scheme of a tort. The distinction between real or unpremeditated torts, and voluntary acts under the technical name of torts, done by agreement for the accomplishment of a purpose prohibited to be done by contract, is clear and substantial. And that is what we have here. The taking or injury to land by eminent domain is not a tort in the sense of a wrongful act. When the broad distinction of actions into those ex contractu and those ex delicto was established, damages from the exercise of eminent domain were unknown. When they came into existence, they did not strictly fit into either class, but, as they were certainly not founded on express contract with the landowner, they were put in the only other class, as torts. But when, as in the present case, the act which is called a tort is done under a contract, and the assumption of the consequent damages is an express term of such contract, we have a perfectly clear case outside of the principle that makes municipalities liable for their wrongful acts without regard to their indebtedness, and within the constitutional prohibition of a contractual obligation to pay in future for a consideration in the present."

The amount owing by a city to the owners of private property taken for public use is indebtedness, to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the debt limit, and the amount with interest may be approximated by taking the assessed value of the property at least as the measure of the awards. Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y. 178, 89 N. E. 569.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The awarding of damages to owners of land taken for a public road has been held, however, not to be the creation of a debt within the meaning of the constitutional debt limit provision, but in the nature of a sale for cash, the commissioners having no power to draw any orders for the payment of the damages, unless there is a fund on hand for their payment or a tax levy has been made for that purpose. Highway Comrs. v. Jackson, 165 Ill. 17, 45 N. E. 1000.

<sup>66</sup> Ft. Dodge Electric Light & P. Co. v. Ft. Dodge, 115 Iowa, 568, 89 N. W. 7.

<sup>67</sup> Phelps v. Tacoma, 15 Wash. 367, 46 Pac. 400. For a case announcing the same principle, see Richards v. Klickitat County, 13 Wash. 509, 43 Pac. 647.

Taxes unlawfully assessed and paid under protest do not constitute a debt of a city, even within the meaning of a constitutional provision forbidding municipalities from becoming indebted in any manner or for any purpose beyond a certain amount. Thomas v. Burlington, 69 Iowa, 140, 28 N. W. 480. The court said that the city did an act it had no right to do, and by wrongful action received or seized money the property of the plaintiff. It did not become the money of the city by such wrongful seizure or enforced payment. The money belonged to the plaintiff as fully as it did prior to the payment. The plaintiff was seeking to recover his own property. There could not be a debt or debtor unless there was a creditor, and while, in a certain sense, the plaintiff might be regarded as the creditor of the city, he was not such in contemplation of the Constitution. He was not a voluntary creditor, but an involuntary creditor. He became such by compulsion. The Constitution, in providing that the city cannot become indebted in such a manner, implied an assent on the part of the creditor, and thus it is that the prohibited indebtedness is incurred, that is, it is created by the voluntary act of both parties. Beck, J., in a dissenting opinion, considered the provision of the Constitution broad enough to cover the obligation of the city to repay the amount collected, saying that it is the duty of taxpayers to resist by proper proceedings the collection of illegal taxes. The majority of the court, however, thought this to be an inadequate protection; that, when the tax is levied, an apparent lien is created on the taxpayer's property, and thereby his title is clouded. This cannot be removed except by an action, which takes time. In the meantime, he may be unable to sell or mortgage his property for legitimate purposes. The only efficient and sufficiently speedy remedy in such cases may be the payment of the taxes.

VII. Refunding transactions.

The question whether refunding bonds increase the debt of a state or municipality, within the meaning of debt limit provisions, has produced some conflict in the decisions, but the general disposition of the courts has been to hold that they do not, the result of a refunding issue being declared merely to change the form of an existing indebtedness.<sup>68</sup> All of the courts hold that the exchange of the new obligations for the old does not add to the existing debt.<sup>69</sup> But

In McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591, a charter provision that a city should not become indebted beyond the sum of $500,000 except in a specified manner was held not to apply to a claim against the city for money paid by mistake. The court said that the liability of the city in this respect is independent of the restraining clauses of the charter, and arises from the obligation to do justice,—to restore that which belongs to others,—which rests upon all persons, whether natural or artificial, and that it might well be doubted whether it would be competent for the legislature to exempt the city any more than private individuals, from liability under circumstances of this character.

The restriction can in any event apply only to liabilities dependent for their creation upon the volition of the common council, and hence does not include liabilities arising from torts or trespasses or mistakes. Ibid.

<sup>68</sup> Bonds which are issued to fund a valid indebtedness neither create any debt nor increase the debt of the municipality which issues them. They merely exchange the form of an existing indebtedness. Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 49 L.R.A. 534, 30 C. C. A. 38, 57 U. S. App. 593, 86 Fed. 272; Fairfield v. Rural Independent School Dist. 54 C. C. A. 342, 116 Fed. 838; Hamilton County v. Montpelier Sav. Bank & T. Co. 84 C. C. A. 523, 157 Fed. 19; Butler v. Lewiston, 11 Idaho, 393, 83 Pac. 234; Cedar Rapids v. Bechtel, 110 Iowa, 196, 81 N. W. 468; Farson v. Sinking Fund Comrs. 97 Ky. 119, 30 S. W. 17; Hotchkiss v. Marion, 12 Mont. 218, 29 Pac. 821; Re Menefee, 22 Okla. 365, 97 Pac. 1014; Hirt v. Erie, 200 Pa. 223, 49 Atl. 796; National L. Ins. Co. v. Mead, 13 S. D. 37, 48 L.R.A. 785, 79 Am. St. Rep. 876, 82 N. W. 78, rehearing denied in 13 S. D. 342, 83 N. W. 335; Miller v. School Dist. No. 3, 5 Wyo. 217, 39 Pac. 879; Blanton v. McDowell County, 101 N. C. 532, 8 S. E. 162; McCreight v. Camden, 49 S. C. 78, 26 S. E. 984; Los Angeles v. Teed, 112 Cal. 319, 44 Pac. 580; Re State Bonds, 81 Me. 602, 18 Atl. 291.

The old indebtedness is not extinguished by the refunding transaction, and a new indebtedness incurred thereby; but the old indebtedness still exists, being evidenced by a different obligation. Klein v. Kinkaid, 16 Nev. 194.

The debt limit provision, the object of which was to prevent the creation of indebtedness, should not be so construed as to prevent the reduction of indebtedness by the refunding of bonds. Ewert v. Mallery, 16 S. D. 151, 91 N. W. 479.

A statute authorizing the refunding of 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

indebtedness does not authorize the creation of an indebtedness, within the meaning of the Colorado Constitution, the bonds being merely the legal evidence of the debt. Geer v. Ouray County, 38 C. C. A. 250, 97 Fed. 435.

The fact that the debt of the county exceeds the constitutional limit at the time refunding bonds are issued will not, in itself, invalidate them, since they do not create or increase the debt of the county, but simply change its form. Lake County v. Keene Five-Cents Sav. Bank, 47 C. C. A. 464, 108 Fed. 505.

The issuance of bonds in compromise of an old debt, at the rate of 50 cents on the dollar, is simply a new form of the old debt, which was reduced 50 cents to the dollar in the change of form. Bank of Columbia v. Taylor County, 112 Ky. 243, 65 S. W. 451.

A levy of taxes for the payment of interest on county funding bonds cannot be defeated on the ground that they exceeded the amount for which the county could lawfully become indebted, where there may have been simply a change in the form of an indebtedness which was incurred before the limitation was imposed, and all the facts concerning the indebtedness, the time when it arose, and the circumstances under which it was created, do not appear. Maish v. Arizona, 164 U. S. 599, 41 L. ed. 567, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193.

If a county owes a valid and enforceable indebtedness, refunding bonds issued under authority of an act of the legislature, for the purpose of taking up such enforceable indebtedness, are not invalid because they may exceed the debt limit. In such case, the refunding bonds are valid, because they represent a valid indebtedness. In suits, therefore, upon refunding bonds representing prior indebtedness, it is necessary, in order to sustain the defense of invalidity, to show that the indebtedness merged in and represented by the refunding bonds was itself invalid and nonenforceable, either in whole or in part. Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, 44 Fed. 329.

Under a statute authorizing money to be taken from a permanent school fund and invested in city bonds, money to the amount thereof to be transferred to the general fund of the city, to be at once used in the reduction of outstanding general fund warrants,—the indebtedness of the city is not increased. State ex rel. Winston v. Rogers, 21 Wash. 206, 57 Pac. 801.

<sup>69</sup> An exchange of bonds does not increase the indebtedness of a school district. Taylor v. School Dist. 97 Fed. 753.

Bonds exchanged for a fundable debt in the method prescribed by law neither ina distinction has been made between a sale of the refunding bonds, where the money received therefrom is placed in the treasury for the purpose of canceling the old obligations, and the exchange of the one for the other. It is said that where a city is indebted beyond the constitutional limit, it cannot issue and sell bonds for the purpose of putting into the treasury money with which to take up and pay former obligations, because after the new bonds are sold, and before the old bonds can be called in, the indebtedness of the city would be increased; but the city may provide for the exchange of the new bonds for the old, the new bonds not to be delivered until the old bonds are exchanged therefor, and can-old bonds are exchanged therefor, and can the Supreme Court of the United States,<sup>71</sup> and of the courts of some other jurisdictions.<sup>72</sup> But the doctrine has been justly crease nor diminish the debt of a municipality, but merely change its form. Independent School Dist. v. Rew, 55 L.R.A. 364, 49 C. C. A. 198, 111 Fed. 1.

The issuance of a funding bond in exchange for valid warrants is in no sense the creation of a debt. It merely changes the form of the obligation. Lake County v. Stanley, 24 Colo. 1, 49 Pac. 23.

In Poughkeepsie v. Quintard, 136 N. Y. 275, 32 N. E. 704, it was held that a provision in a statute authorizing the extension of the bonded debt of a city, by the exchange of new bonds for old bonds, is not in conflict with a charter provision forbidding "any pecuniary obligations whatever on the part of the city, which should not be payable in the current year, and which cannot be discharged from the income of the same year," since this is not the borrowing of money within the meaning of the charter. The court said that there was a new creditor, but the same old debt. That the municipal liability was not increased, but merely suffered to remain, and that not a dollar of new or added debt resulted.

Where the express provision of a bond ordinance is that refunding bonds shall be issued only to the holders of outstanding warrants in exchange and as a substitute therefor, the indebtedness of the city is not increased thereby, as the transaction operates only as an exchange of one evidence of indebtedness for another. Morris & Whitehead v. Taylor, 31 Or. 62, 49 Pac. 660.

<sup>70</sup> Heins v. Lincoln, 102 Iowa, 69, 71 N. W. 189; Reynolds v. Lyon County, 121 Iowa, 733, 96 N. W. 1096.

<sup>71</sup> In Doon v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 35 L. ed. 1044, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220, in referring to the difference in effect between the sale and exchange of refunding bonds for the purpose of extinguishing the old debt, the court said: "There is a wide difference in the two alternatives which this statute undertakes to authorize. The second alternative, of exchanging bonds issued under the statute for outstanding bonds, by which the new bonds, as soon as issued to the holders of the old ones, would be a substitute for and an extinguishment of them, so that the aggregate outstanding indebtedness of the corporation would not be increased, might be consistent with the Constitution. But under the first alternative, by which the treasurer is authorized to sell the new bonds and to apply the pro- 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ceeds of the sale to the payment of the outstanding ones, it is evident that if (as in the case at bar) new bonds are issued without a cancellation or surrender of the old ones, the aggregate debt outstanding, and on which the corporation is liable to be sued, is at once and necessarily increased, and if new bonds equal in amount to the old ones are so issued at one time, is doubled; and that it will remain at the increased amount until the proceeds of the new bonds are applied to the payment of the old ones, or until some of the obligations are otherwise discharged. It is true that if the proceeds of the sale are used by the municipal officers, as directed by the statute, in paying off the old debt, the aggregate indebtedness will ultimately be reduced to the former limit. But it is none the less true that it has been increased in the interval; and that unless those officers do their duty, the increase will be permanent. It would be inconsistent alike with the words, and with the object, of the constitutional provision, framed to protect municipal corporations from being loaded with debt beyond a certain limit, to make their liability to be charged with debts contracted beyond that limit depend solely upon the discretion or the honesty of their officers."

<sup>72</sup> The sale of refunding bonds increases the indebtedness of state. State ex rel. Jones v. McGraw, 12 Wash. 541, 41 Pac. 893.

Although the purpose of a school district in issuing bonds was to use the money derived from their sale in taking up and canceling its outstanding indebtedness, they nevertheless constitute an additional indebtedness of the district. State ex rel. Atkinson v. Ross, 43 Wash. 290, 86 Pac. 575. The court in this case refused to recede from its established position on the question, although saying that it might be a somewhat technical view of the matter and opposed to the weight of authority.

The fact that the sale of new bonds for the purpose of applying the proceeds in satisfaction of a matured debt will only temporarily increase the city's indebtedness will not authorize their issuance, where it has already reached the constitutional limit, and where the language of the Constitution is that a debt shall never exceed a specified percentage of the assessed valuation of taxable property. Birkholz v. Dinie, 6 N. D. 511, 72 N. W. 931.

The court said: "If the action which the criticized,<sup>73</sup> and can scarcely be said to be supported by the weight of authority. And in this connection the singular example has been set of a lower Federal court refusing to be bound by the decision of the Supreme Court.<sup>74</sup>

The assumption in the cases holding that the sale of the bonds increases the debt for a short interval is extremely technical,<sup>75</sup> and is, in fact, unsound; for if a municipality has cash in the treasury with which to meet all its outstanding obligations, it can hardly be said to be indebted in the constitutional sense. The cash in the treasury produced from the sale of refunding bonds, even while the old obligations are outstanding, is an asset to offset the liability which the outstanding bonds evidence. Instead of doubling the liability as the Supreme Court supposes, the assets and the old obligation simply balance, and the indebtedness evidenced by the new bonds merely equals that of the old, or, in other words, is the same. The form of the obligation only is changed. This has been very clearly pointed out in a South Dakota case.<sup>76</sup> And the fact that the funds received on the sale of refunding bonds may city officials proposed to take was a mere exchange of new city bonds for old city bonds, we would hold such action to be legal upon the facts in this record. Nor do we consider it necessary that an exchange of bond for bond should be made. We think that the mere execution of refunding bonds may be authorized even beyond the debt limit, and that they may then be put on the market and sold, on the condition that they are not to be delivered until an equal amount of the old bonds are surrendered. The resolution might provide that simultaneously with the delivery of the refunding bonds and the payment of the cash therefor, there should be at hand an equal amount of the old bonds to be then and there extinguished by the use of the cash so received, and delivered up to the city as part of the same transaction."

<sup>73</sup>In Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 49 L.R.A. 534, 30 C. C. A. 38, 57 U. S. App. 593, 86 Fed. 272, in referring to the distinction between an exchange and sale of refunding bonds, the court considered it to be more nice than real.

<sup>74</sup>In spite of the decision in the Doon Case, the majority of the court in Pierre v. Dunscomb, 45 C. C. A. 499, 106 Fed. 611, refused to follow it, the court saying that the contention that the indebtedness was temporarily increased by the sale of the bonds had been repeatedly examined and held untenable. Caldwell, J., in a dissenting opinion, referred to this as judicial insubordination, saying: "The attitude of the majority of the court on this question is an unseemly one. It is a distinct avowal that they will not be bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, unless those decisions accord with their views of the law. If such judicial insubordination should be indulged by all inferior courts, the country would speedily be precipitated into a condition of judicial anarchy. The suggestion that the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Doon Case is entitled to any less consideration because there was a strong dissent is wholly untenable. The judgment of the majority of the court has the same conclusive and binding force as if it expressed the unanimous judgment of the court. This rule, so essential to a due and orderly administration of justice, has never before been doubted."

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Lawrence County v. Jewell, 41 C. C. A. 109, 100 Fed. 905, refunding bonds were held valid, although at the time issued the municipality had exceeded its debt limit, and notwithstanding that the sale of the bonds temporarily increased the amount of the debt while the funding operation was in progress, and notwithstanding that the bonds were sold at a discount of 10 per cent.

<sup>75</sup>Reynolds v. Lyon County, 121 Iowa, 733, 96 N. W. 1096. Replying to the criticism that this construction is purely technical, in that the object is not to create a new indebtedness or increase the old, but merely to change its form and decrease the interest, the court said that the difficulty with this suggestion is that a new debt is, for the time being, created, and that one day's continuance of it in addition to that evidenced by the old bonds is as much within the dominion of the letter and spirit of the Constitution as that of a year. It would not do to say that officers may be relied upon to use proceeds derived from the sale of the bonds to wipe out existing obligations. The very object of this article of the Constitution is to protect the interests of the people against their own improvidence and extravagance. If such bonds are not within the prohibition, it would be within the power of dishonest officials, by indirection, to circumvent the fundamental law, and through diversion of the proceeds of new bonds saddle both them and the outstanding debts as burdens on the people.

<sup>76</sup>National L. Ins. Co. v. Mead, 13 S. D. 37, 48 L.R.A. 785, 79 Am. St. Rep. 876, 82 N. W. 78. The court said that the argument that the indebtedness is instantly increased by the delivery of funding bonds, unless an equal amount of outstanding obligations is thereby extinguished, is without force, where available resources or assets may be considered in determining when additional indebtedness is created. The delivery of funding bonds, when sold at par, operates as an exchange of paper promises to pay for an equal amount of money instantly available for the extinguishment of an equal amount of other promises to pay. Assuming that this money remains in the treasury until used for the purpose intended, there is no moment of time when the financial condition of the city is in any be misappropriated does not furnish a reason for adopting a different rule.<sup>77</sup>

It has been held in a number of cases that the recitals in refunding bonds that they have been issued in conformity to law will estop the municipality issuing them from questioning their validity on the ground that they increase the debt beyond the constitutional limit.<sup>78</sup> But that question is without the scope of this note.

But whichever doctrine be adopted, refunding bonds, to the extent that their proceeds have been used to extinguish prior indebtedness, do not increase the indebtedness of a municipality, within the meaning of the debt limit provision.<sup>79</sup>

It has been held that the issuance of new bonds for the purpose of funding a city debt is not the creation of a new indebtedness, within the meaning of the constitutional debt limit provision, where the new bonds are issued to provide for the payment of interest already due, or where coupons are attached for the payment of future interest when it shall become due.<sup>80</sup>

Of course, to render the refunding bonds substantial manner affected. Notice to holders of matured obligations stops the running of interest, and the city, with its proceeds of funding bonds on hand, is in as good position as it would be if in possession of the evidence of its paid obligations duly canceled. Opinion adhered to on rehearing, 13 S. D. 342, 83 N. W. 335.

<sup>77</sup> Ibid. The court pointed out that the method of exchanging new obligations for the old would be open to the same objection. Should the officer authorized to exchange new for old bonds, disregarding his official duty, accept money instead of outstanding obligations, and should the bonds thus placed upon the market fall into the hands of bona fide purchasers, the city debt would be increased or innocent parties made to suffer. Extravagant or corrupt officers may successfully employ either method to increase taxation or defraud bona fide creditors. Such creditors should never be made to suffer by reason of the misappropriation of funds actually received by officers of the municipality.

The rule laid down in the last-mentioned case was adhered to in Hyde v. Ewert, 16 S. D. 133, 91 N. W. 474, in which it is said that the law of this subject should be regarded as settled in that jurisdiction. To the same effect is Walling v. Lummis, 16 S. D. 349, 92 N. W. 1063.

In Palmer v. Helena, 19 Mont. 61, 47 Pac. 209, it was held that the issue and sale of new bonds by a city, for the purpose of refunding a like amount of old bonds, does not create a new debt.

<sup>78</sup> But the fact that the debt of a city was temporarily increased by refunding prior obligations will not render the refunding bonds in the hands of innocent purchasers invalid, where, by exchanging new bonds for the old obligations, they would have been legal, the refunding bonds reciting that they had been issued in conformity to law. Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, supra. The court said that if, upon any theory, the bonds of the municipality could be valid, an innocent purchaser has a right to presume that they are so, and that the recitals in them are true, and after he has completed his purchase, the presumption is conclusive on the corporation.

<sup>79</sup> Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, 82 Fed. 929.

The fact that the new bonds are issued 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

before the old are all paid and canceled does not increase the debt of the state to the extent that the old obligations are outstanding at the time the new bonds are issued, where the money received from the sale of the new bonds is not only placed in the treasury, but actually appropriated to the payment of the old bonds, since the outstanding bonds are to be deemed paid in effect. Robertson v. Tillman, 39 S. C. 298, 17 S. E. 678.

Obligations executed by a city for the purpose of funding its outstanding indebtedness do not increase the indebtedness of the city, where, when delivered, the old debts are taken up and extinguished. Tyler v. Jester, 97 Tex. 344, 78 S. W. 1058.

<sup>80</sup> Powell v. Madison, 107 Ind. 106, 8 N. E. 31. The court said that interest is the premium allowed by law for the use of money. It is accessory or incident only to the principal debt upon which it accrues. The principal is a fixed sum, and the interest, as the accessory or incident, is necessarily an accruing one. The obligation to pay interest is in many instances imposed by law; and whether so imposed or resulting from a special contract, such an obligation becomes an incidental part of the contract for the payment of the principal sum, and continues to run until such principal sum is fully paid, or such contract is otherwise discharged, the principal sum being in all cases the basis upon which accruing interest runs. After interest has accrued, the parties may by agreement change its character to that of principal, and then interest upon the amount so transformed may commence to run.

Since § 10 of the Constitution of the United States declares, among other things, that no state shall pass an ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, a constitutional debt limit provision could not have any retrospective effect upon an existing indebtedness of a municipal corporation at the time of its adoption. For the same reason, such a provision does not impair, and was presumably not intended to impair, the obligation of any of the contracts into which municipal corporations had already entered, whether for the payment of a principal sum of money or of interest which had accrued, or might thereafter accrue thereon. Ibid.

legal, the obligations of which they are to take place must have been legal. It has been held that a refunding bond issue is illegal, if part of the debt funded is unlawful because made in excess of the constitutional limit.<sup>61</sup> And where the original obligation was contingent or has lapsed, it has been held that the new bonds create an additional debt.<sup>62</sup>

In New York it has been held that a debt created by a city for the purchase of grounds for a market, represented by a single instrument, is not a funded debt, within the meaning of a statute forbidding a municipal corporation to contract any "funded debt" except in a specified manner.<sup>63</sup> But it is unnecessary to draw this distinction in reference to provisions limiting the amount of indebtedness, for manifestly if the obligation to be canceled were represented by a single instrument, which was to be replaced by a single instrument, the rule would be the same as if the transaction were divided into so many parts or shares.

VIII. Miscellaneous obligations.

a. In general.

A statute authorizing a county to levy a special tax for the purpose of paying the interest and principal of indebtedness already authorized has been held not to create a new indebtedness within the meaning of a section of the Constitution limiting a county's indebtedness, since its purpose is simply in aid of the original act in its due administration.<sup>64</sup> And it has been held that a provision in a charter that "the common council shall not make, or permit to accrue, any debt or liability which in the aggregate, with all the former debts or liabilities, exclusive of the funded debts, shall exceed . . . [a certain sum] over and above the annual estimated revenue of the city at the time of incurring such debt or liability," does not mean that the floating debt of the city, prior to the passing of the charter, is to be taken into consideration in making up the indebtedness, but applies to debts thereafter created.<sup>65</sup> A constitutional provision that no county shall contract any debt by loan in any form, and that indebtedness contracted in any one year shall not exceed the rate of the taxable property in such county specified, and that the aggregate amount of indebtedness of any county for all purposes, exclusive of debts contracted before the adoption of the Constitution, should not at any time exceed twice the amount specified, it has been declared, is not to be regarded as a limitation of county indebtedness by loan only.<sup>66</sup> Certificates of indebtedness for temporary loans bearing inter-

<sup>61</sup> Leavitt v. Somerville, 105 Me. 517, 75 Atl. 54.

<sup>62</sup> But bonds of a state to relieve the state from its obligation to guarantee bonds of a railroad create a new debt, there having been no absolute debt previous thereto. Williams v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 637, 26 L. ed. 595.

So, an issue of bonds to extinguish an obligation of the state to indorse or guarantee bonds of a railroad company which had lapsed because of failure of the company to construct its road within the required time create an indebtedness of the state, within the meaning of the Constitution. State v. Clinton, 28 La. Ann. 393; State ex rel. Citizens' Bank v. Funding Board, 28 La. Ann. 249.

<sup>63</sup> Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356, Selden, J., said: "The term 'fund' was originally applied to a portion of the national revenue set apart or pledged to the payment of a particular debt. A 'funded debt,' therefore, was a debt for the payment of the principal or interest of which some fund was appropriated. . . . The term 'funding,' however, has been sometimes applied in this country to the process of collecting together a variety of outstanding debts against corporations, the principal of which was payable at short periods, and borrowing money upon the bonds or stocks of the corporation to pay them off; the principal of such bonds or stocks being made payable at periods comparatively remote. But I am not aware that, even in common parlance, the term has ever been made use of to describe an ordinary debt growing out of a transaction with one individual and represented by a single instrument, as in this case. I think it is essential to the idea of a funded debt, even under the broadest use of that term, that the debt should be divided into parts or shares, represented by different instruments, so that such parts or shares may be readily transferable."

<sup>64</sup> Sisk v. Cargile, 138 Ala. 164, 35 So. 114.

<sup>65</sup> Soule v. McKibben, 6 Cal. 142.

<sup>66</sup> People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 Pac. 641.

But where the original charter of a city gave the council the power to borrow on the credit of the city, not to exceed $20,000, and also to appropriate money, and to provide for the payment of all debts and expenses of the city, and by an amendment it was provided that no debt beyond the amount authorized shall be incurred unless the question of contracting the same should be submitted to the people, it was held that this statute put a limit to the creation of municipal liabilities in a specified manner, that is, by borrowing money, and did not prohibit the creation of a debt for necessary buildings. Rice v. Keokuk, 15 Iowa, 579.

To raise a sum of money by the pledge or hypothecation of stocks held by a city is to borrow it, and the person from whom est, intended to be paid out of the revenue of the current year, but not so stated in the certificates, and upon which money was loaned to the city to meet its expenses, have been held invalid, where issued when the city has reached its debt limit.<sup>87</sup>

The fact that a statute authorizing the construction of a state capitol provides that the entire cost shall not exceed a specified amount, which would be in excess of the debt limit, it has been held, does not make the act unconstitutional, since such an act does not authorize the expenditure of the sum of money, but only indicates the amount within which the work is to be constructed, and furnishes a guide in the adoption of a plan for the building. The act is valid, for the commissioners are authorized to contract and to expend only within the debt limit, although a plan may be adopted by them which may require in its execution a sum in excess of the debt limit.<sup>88</sup>

The Maine Constitution, which limits the indebtedness of towns and cities, does not apply to trust funds, since it is expressly provided that the section shall not be considered as applying to any fund received in trust by a city or town.<sup>89</sup>

An implied liability for the value of services as attorney at law is within the inhibition of the constitutional provision forbidding the incurring of any indebtedness or liability exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such a year.<sup>90</sup>

Indebtedness contracted or incurred for necessary and lawful purposes, by any political or municipal corporation or any subdivision of the territory of Oklahoma, created and existing under and by virtue of the organic act and the laws of the territory of Oklahoma, prior to the taking of the first assessment for the purpose of territorial and county taxation, was held valid, if issued within 4 per centum of the value of said taxable property as ascertained when said first assessment was made, and warrants may be issued in evidence thereof.<sup>91</sup>

the money is obtained loans it, and the purpose of the transaction cannot be disguised by calling it "furnishing" and "returning" the money. Baltimore v. Gill, 31 Md. 375.

<sup>87</sup> Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. The court said that the framers of the Constitution could not have used the term "indebtedness" in the sense that the sum must be due, to be indebtedness, as this is not the generally received meaning of the word, and to apply such a meaning would remove all limit on the amount of indebtedness that might be incurred, except to the extent of the credit of the municipality. Such debts, declared the court, are usually created on time, and if such are not prohibited, then, if persons could be found to purchase such paper, the indebtedness could be increased even beyond the value of all the property in the city. Hence such could not have been the meaning attached to the language by those who adopted the provision.

A proviso that the debt limit provision shall not be considered as applicable to temporary loans to be paid out of money raised by taxation during the year in which they are made will not permit a loan temporary in its inception to be carried over to another year. Blood v. Beal, 100 Me. 30, 60 Atl. 427. It was the contention in this case that the temporary loan may be paid at any time, provided that it is paid out of taxation raised during the year in which the loan was made. But the court said that it would be unsafe to assume that any sum of money that had been collected through taxes, and turned into the city treasury, should be regarded as a credit upon such loan until it was either actually paid or specially set apart, by a vote of the city council, for the special purpose of application to such payment.

Where a statute authorizes the creation, 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

under certain circumstances, of a funded debt in a certain amount, and prohibits the creation of a second funded debt until the first has been paid, where it amounts to 1 per cent of taxable property, and the language of the section is that no second loan shall be made "as above provided" until the first is paid, this does not interfere with the incidental power of the county to which it applies to make temporary loans to meet temporary emergencies. Miller v. Dearborn County, 66 Ind. 162.

<sup>88</sup> Koppikus v. State Capitol Comrs. 16 Cal. 248.

<sup>89</sup> Ayer v. Bangor, 85 Me. 511, 27 Atl. 523.

The use of a trust fund appropriated to the support of a public library, for the purpose of erecting a city hall or building, does not increase the municipal indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution, since the municipality is absolutely liable for the fund, whether it is invested or used for the purpose proposed or not. Ibid.

<sup>90</sup> Buck v. Eureka, 124 Cal. 61, 56 Pac. 612. To the same effect is Buck v. Eureka, 119 Cal. 44, 50 Pac. 1065, although the point was not necessary to the decision, in the earlier report of the case.

<sup>91</sup> Hoffman v. Pawnee County, 3 Okla. 325, 41 Pac. 566, followed in Sauer v. McMurtry, 4 Okla. 447, 46 Pac. 576.

A newly organized county in this territory has the power to incur a valid indebtedness, and issue warrants as an evidence thereof, prior to the making of an assessment of the taxable property therein for the purposes of territorial and county taxation, to meet the ordinary and necessary expenses of carrying on and conducting the function of county government; and the incurring of such indebtedness is not in

Sums charged for mileage and per diem of the commissioners, and the expenses of county surveyors, it has been held, should not be added to the contract price in arriving at the amount of indebtedness incurred on account of the construction of a bridge, since necessary services of county officers, as such, devoted to a project which the county has in hand, are a part of their ordinary duties, within the meaning of the constitutional provision that "no county shall incur any indebtedness or liability for any single purpose, to an amount exceeding ten thousand dollars ($10,000), without the approval of a majority of electors thereof, voting at an election to be provided by law."<sup>92</sup>

Overdrafts on a fund over which the common council has no control except to pay regular demands upon it have been held to constitute a debt against the city, within the meaning of the debt limit provision of the Constitution.<sup>93</sup>

It has been held that no indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution is created by a statute requiring the payment of local salaries of a public service commission, where the money for the payment of the same is to be raised by taxation in the manner in which other moneys are raised by taxation, for other government purposes.<sup>94</sup>

An act providing for the refunding of taxes illegally collected was held void because not providing for ways and means of payment of the current interest and of the principal when due, as required by the Constitution.<sup>95</sup>

A contract for work on a school building, it has been held, cannot be said to be invalid because the indebtedness of the district, added to the indebtedness which it is proposed to incur, would exceed the debt limit.<sup>96</sup>

And it has been held that a bonded indebtedness exceeding the debt limit of a school district is void only as to the amount exceeding the limit;<sup>97</sup> and that a provision that no municipal corporation "shall hereafter create or assume an aggregate indebtedness" beyond a certain amount operates prospectively only.<sup>98</sup>

A provision forbidding a corporation to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose prohibits an indebtedness in the form of a bond, note, or any kind of obligation, whether it be in writing or by parol, express or implied.<sup>99</sup>

b. Purchase of equity of redemption.

It seems that the debt limit provisions cannot be evaded by the purchase of the equity of redemption in property only, where the full value of the property is such that it cannot be bought without carrying the municipality beyond the amount allowed by the Constitution. It was held that where the price of an electric lighting plant which a village desires to acquire cannot be purchased outright, because it is beyond the debt limit, the village cannot, violation of § 4 of the act of Congress of July 30, 1886, which prescribes, among other things, that no county shall ever become indebted in excess of 4 per centum of the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained from the last assessment for territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness. Hall Lithographing Co. v. Roger Mills County, 8 Okla. 378, 58 Pac. 620; Roger Mills County v. Rowden, 8 Okla. 406, 58 Pac. 624; Hoffman v. Pawnee County, 3 Okla. 325, 41 Pac. 566; McMurtry v. County Comrs. 6 Okla. 60, 55 Pac. 1069.

<sup>92</sup> Jenkins v. Newman, 39 Mont. 77, 101 Pac. 625.

<sup>93</sup> Rice v. Milwaukee, 100 Wis. 516, 76 N. W. 341. "In other words," said the court, "the council had no right to divert the money belonging to funds such as the school fund and the like, to pay overdrafts on other funds, and consider it as a debt paid, when attempting to ascertain its financial condition in relation to the debt limit. It would seem to be very clear that when money is raised for a special purpose, under an express limitation to a particular use, it cannot lawfully be used for any other purpose. Any diversion of it to other purposes, in order to increase the debt limit, cannot be tolerated. The debt remains in point of law, and must be considered just as substantial as though it had never been paid. Borrowing the money from the prohibited fund does not extinguish the debt. Any other holding would commit us to the palpable absurdity of saying that a person may pay his debts by taking money from one pocket and putting it in the other."

<sup>94</sup> Gubner v. McClellan, 130 App. Div. 716, 115 N. Y. Supp. 765.

<sup>95</sup> State ex rel. Blackemore v. Graham, 25 La. Ann. 625.

An ordinance of a municipal corporation, which provides for the payment of money by the town without providing the means wherewith to make such payment, creates an indebtedness against such corporation, within the meaning of the Constitution. Murphy v. East Portland, 42 Fed. 308.

<sup>96</sup> Peck-Williamson Heating & Ventilating Co. v. Board of Education, 6 Okla. 279, 50 Pac. 236.

<sup>97</sup> McPherson v. Foster Bros. 43 Iowa, 48, 22 Am. Rep. 215.

<sup>98</sup> Tiffin v. Griffith, 74 Ohio St. 219, 77 N. E. 1075.

<sup>99</sup> Mosher v. Independent School Dist. 44 Iowa, 122, cited with approval in Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 175, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 470.

by causing the plant to be mortgaged for the amount above the debt limit, thereafter purchase the equity, although it is provided that the village shall not assume and agree to pay the mortgage, since this is a transparent scheme to avoid the Constitution.<sup>100</sup> The court said that the mortgage debt was nevertheless a debt of the village, since the village would have to pay the debt for which the property was pledged, or have it taken away.

In Massachusetts a city desiring to purchase property to the amount of $226,000, being unable to do so on account of the constitutional debt limit provision, arranged with the owners that they should mortgage the property, worth $202,000, to third parties, payable with interest after three years from the conveyance to the city, with the privilege reserved in the mortgages to the owners, their grantees and assigns, to pay the mortgages and interest at maturity, or earlier if they should so desire. The city was to pay $24,000 for the purchase of the equity in the property, which sum it could pay without extending its liability beyond the debt limit. The mortgages were to be placed on the property before it was conveyed to the city, and it was arranged that the property should be conveyed subject thereto, but it should not be mentioned therein, and that the deeds should contain a statement that the city was not to be liable in any way for the payment of the mortgages or the interest thereon. It was held that this transaction was in reality a sale of the property and created an indebtedness to the full amount.<sup>1</sup> "It is true," said the court, "that no action could be maintained against the city for the balance of the purchase price, and that in that sense the city would not be indebted for such balance. But the property when conveyed will be subject to the mortgages that have been placed upon it pursuant to the arrangement that has been made, and the city either will have to pay them, or submit to have the property taken from it by foreclosure proceedings. It will thus become indirectly liable for the amount secured by the mortgages, and the taxpayers would ultimately be obliged to pay it as contemplated. In a sense, therefore, . . . the city would be indebted for the sums secured by the mortgages. Certainly no account of its assets and liabilities would be correct which omitted this property from the one, and the amount for which it was mortgaged from the other."

c. Interest.

It is generally held that interest is not to be taken into consideration, although expressly reserved in the contract, in determining whether a city has reached its debt limit.<sup>2</sup> The indebtedness created by the issuance of bonds is the face value of the bonds. The term "indebtedness" as used in the Constitution was not intended to include future interest. The lawmakers, it has been said, were not looking at the incident of the indebtedness, but to the indebtedness proper.<sup>3</sup> Interest coupons do not constitute indebtedness within the meaning of the constitutional debt limit provision, and the fact that they may be detached from the principal obligation does not change their character. If the bonds when issued are within the debt limit, they cannot be rendered illegal because, by lapse of time, interest is to become due.<sup>4</sup>

Interest is not a debt within the meaning

<sup>100</sup> Evans v. Holman, 244 Ill. 596, 91 N. E. 723.

<sup>1</sup> Browne v. Boston, 179 Mass. 321, 60 N. E. 934.

If the city had itself mortgaged the property, and had stipulated in the mortgage that it should not be liable, and that the mortgagee should look to the land alone, such a transaction would be within the debt limit provision, and would not be upheld. Ibid.

The object of the statute is to protect the taxpayer by confining the indebtedness of the city within a prescribed limit. The manner in which the indebtedness is created is immaterial, if its result is to subject the city to a present liability, direct or indirect, which the taxpayers will eventually be called upon to meet. Ibid.

For mortgage debt as part of indebtedness, see note to Eddy Valve Co. v. Crown Point, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 684.

<sup>2</sup> Carlson v. Helena, 39 Mont. 82, 102 Pac. 39, 17 Ann. Cas. 1233.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

<sup>2</sup> Ashland v. Culbertson, 103 Ky. 161, 44 S. W. 441.

<sup>4</sup> Durant v. Iowa County, 1 Woolw. 69, Fed. Cas. No. 4,189.

Interest coupons attached to bonds do not constitute indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution. Blanchard v. Benton, 109 Ill. App. 569. The court said that interest on municipal indebtedness is a mere incident of property, and not to be reckoned as part of an indebtedness.

That interest is allowed on warrants does not make them void on the theory that the interest creates a debt beyond the constitutional limit. State ex rel. Ash v. Parkinson, 5 Nev. 15. "If it be true," said the court, "that the issuance of a warrant creates no debt, and that no debt within the purview of the Constitution pre-existed. . . . how can the addition of interest make that an unconstitutional debt which was not so before? Interest constitutes no part of the original demand; it is simply a statutory allowance for delay. If the money be in

of the Constitution, until it is earned and becomes due.<sup>5</sup> The court said that any other construction would lead to most startling results. Many business men and corporations could be forced to the wall if the interest they had agreed to pay on loans made was to be considered a present indebtedness. Men who had reported their financial standing to obtain credit could be called to account for not having taken into consideration their interest obligations which were to become due at some time in the future. There would be no end to the complications that might arise, and not the least would be the overturning of municipal obligations already incurred. Interest rests upon much the same grounds as contracts for light and water. There may exist an obligation to pay, but under the Constitution, the indebtedness as to interest comes into existence each year as the obligation matures. It cannot be said to be a present indebtedness, under any reasonable construction of the Constitution. But it would seem that after the interest has been earned, it would become an indebtedness,<sup>6</sup> and although it would not be invalid if the principal obligation were within the debt limit when entered into, it would nevertheless have to be taken into consideration in determining whether the debt limit has been reached.

the treasury, then no interest accrues; if not, the party holding the warrant is compensated for waiting until there is. It may be said that the allowance of interest presupposes a debt, for that there can be no interest except upon some principal; but upon the theory of the cases . . . there is a debt, but not a debt repugnant to the Constitution, as it is only contingent, — a debt existent, but payable only upon the collection of revenues. In this view, as the interest follows the principal; that being contingent, so the interest."

<sup>5</sup> Herman v. Oconto, 110 Wis. 660, 86 N. W. 681.

<sup>6</sup> Accrued interest on corporate indebtedness is a debt within the meaning of the Constitution. Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 492, 69 N. E. 970.

The debt of an individual, corporation, state, etc., when the word is taken in the sense that it ordinarily conveys to the popular mind, is the principal and accrued interest on a given date. Unearned interest is not in such a sense a part of the debt. Epping v. Columbus, 117 Ga. 263, 43 S. E. 803.

The debt of a municipal corporation, within the meaning of that provision of the Constitution which prohibits such a corporation from incurring a debt which exceeds 7 per centum of the assessed valuation of all the taxable property within the municipality, is to be ascertained by adding to the principal of all outstanding indebted-

And if the principal obligation is invalid, it would naturally follow that the interest would also be unlawful.<sup>7</sup>

d. Judgments.

Judgments rendered against municipalities are evidence of debts which must be taken into consideration in determining whether the debt limit has been reached;<sup>8</sup> but it has been held that county warrants given in satisfaction of judgments against the county are not rendered invalid by the fact that, at the time the judgments were obtained, the county had reached the debt limit. The question was held to be whether the debt limit had been reached at the time the contract was made for which the judgments were rendered.<sup>9</sup> The mere fact that the aggregate of judgments against a township exceeds the debt limit is not conclusive of the validity of the demands upon which the judgments are founded.<sup>10</sup> A judgment against a municipal corporation is not in itself the creation of a debt, but only the evidence of a pre-existing indebtedness.<sup>11</sup>

In a number of cases it has been held that a judgment cannot be resisted on the ground that it was rendered for a debt beyond the debt limit,<sup>12</sup> but this doctrine rests on estoppel, which is beyond the scope of this note.

ness, the amount of all accrued interest that may be past due and payable on the day the amount of the debt is to be fixed. In ascertaining the amount of such debt, future interest, which is not due on the day it becomes necessary to fix the sum of the indebtedness, is not to be counted. Unearned interest is not, within the true intent and meaning of the Constitution, a part of the debt of the municipality. Ibid.

<sup>7</sup> In Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385, it was held that a certificate of indebtedness being void because issued after the city had reached its debt limit, the interest must be equally void, and the levy of a tax to pay it was as effectually prohibited as incurring the principal debt. The court said that the interest is as much a debt as the principal on which it accrues.

<sup>8</sup> Judgments against a city constitute debt within the meaning of the constitutional debt limit provision. Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 492, 69 N. E. 970.

<sup>9</sup> Wilder v. Rio Grande County, 41 Fed. 512.

<sup>10</sup> Plains Twp's Appeal, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 68.

<sup>11</sup> Edmundson v. Independent School Dist. 98 Iowa, 639, 60 Am. St. Rep. 224, 67 N. W. 671; Thompson v. Independent School Dist. 102 Iowa, 94, 70 N. W. 1093.

<sup>12</sup> It is no defense to an application for a writ to compel the payment of a judgment against a town, that the contract upon which it was founded was void because,

IX. Coincidence of boundaries of municipalities.

The limitation of indebtedness placed upon corporations, enumerated in a Constitution, applies to each standing as a separate and distinct political division, and not to another and larger municipality of which they form but an integral part.<sup>13</sup> So, it has been held that, in determining whether a municipal corporation has reached its debt limit, the state debt is not to be considered;<sup>14</sup> and that a county debt is no part of the debt of a city within its borders, or vice versa.<sup>15</sup> If a school district is a distinct and independent corporation, it is held that its indebtedness is distinct from that of the larger corporation of which it forms a part, otherwise not,<sup>16</sup> when entered into, the town had exceeded its debt limit, since a judgment bars not only every defense that was raised, but every defense that might have been raised. Smith v. Ormsby, 20 Wash. 396, 72 Am. St. Rep. 110, 55 Pac. 570.

In an action to enforce the collection of bonds or coupons issued in payment of a judgment entered by default against a municipal or quasi municipal corporation, the judgment conclusively estops the corporation from making the defense that the indebtedness evidenced by the judgment was in excess of the amount which the corporation had the power to create, under the limitations of the Constitution of the state in which it was incorporated. Lake County v. Platt, 25 C. C. A. 87, 49 U. S. App. 216, 79 Fed. 567.

A judgment, and the issuance of mandamus to compel the levy of a tax to pay for the same, are "conclusive upon the question whether the levy ordered was in excess of the statutory power of the school district. Holt County v. National L. Ins. Co. 25 C. C. A. 469, 49 U. S. App. 376, 80 Fed. 686.

<sup>13</sup> Straw v. Harris, 54 Or. 424, 103 Pac. 777.

The constitutional prohibition that "no county, city, school district, or other municipal corporation, shall become indebted," etc., applies to each corporation singly, and not to two or more in the aggregate. Wilson v. Sanitary Dist. 133 Ill. 443, 27 N. E. 203.

<sup>14</sup> Lancaster School Dist. v. Robinson-Humphrey Co. 64 S. C. 545, 42 S. E. 998.

<sup>15</sup> In Tuttle v. Polk, 92 Iowa, 433, 60 N. W. 733, the court said arguendo that the Iowa Constitution recognizes counties and other political and municipal corporations as being distinct entities. Although none can incur an indebtedness in excess of 5 per centum of the value of taxable property within its limits, yet the same territory may be included within the limits of different corporations, as those of a county, city, town, and school district, and be subject to taxation for the debt of each.

In Todd v. Laurens, 48 S. C. 395, 26 S. E. 682, it was held that a county debt was no part of the debt of the city, of which county the city was a part.

In computing the indebtedness of a county to ascertain whether it has exceeded the constitutional limit, the debt of a city forming part of it is not to be included. The constitutional provision is to be taken distributively, and not collectively. Adams v. East River Sav. Inst. 136 N. Y. 52, 32 N. E. 623. The court said that when a county containing, as the county of Kings does, a city of more than 100,000 inhabitants, desires to create an additional debt, the 10 per cent limitation is not reached until the county debt equals 10 per centum of the valuation of all the real estate in the county, including, of course, the real estate in the city which forms a part of the county; but in ascertaining when the limitation is reached in such a case, the debt of the city cannot be charged against the county any more than its proportionate share of the state debt or the debt of the several towns within its limits.
37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

<sup>16</sup> The indebtedness inhibited by the Constitution is that contracted by the city for its own purposes, and does not refer to the indebtedness of a school district, an independent and distinct corporation organized for a special purpose not within the province of the city government proper. The precedents generally are to that effect. Valley v. Park Comrs. 16 N. D. 25, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 61, 111 N. W. 615.

Where by statute a school district is made a body politic and corporate, separate and distinct from the city, governing itself, a bonded debt for school purposes is no part of the debt of the city, although the school district is composed entirely of the territory of the city. Todd v. Laurens, supra. The court thought the law would be subverted by allotting such proportion of the debt to the city as its proportion of the property assessed for taxation might require.

Interest-bearing promissory notes executed by the trustees of a school city, which is part of the civil city, in the name of the school city, do not constitute an applied liability of the civil city, to be taken into consideration in determining the debt limit of the city, on the theory that the trustees were not authorized by law to contract the indebtedness for which the notes were given, where the civil city is not shown in any manner to have authorized the execution of such notes, or in any way to have been instrumental in contracting the indebtedness. Heinl v. Terre Haute, 161 Ind. 44, 66 N. E. 450.

Where a school district is formed by uniting several common school districts, the amount of the indebtedness of the common school districts cannot affect the indebtedness of the high school districts, unless their aggregate exceeds 15 per centum of the value of all the taxable property of the entire territory. Welch v. Getzen, 85 S. C. 156, 67 S. E. 294.

Notwithstanding the boundaries of the and this, it would seem, is the rule applicable to all cases.<sup>17</sup>

Section 5 of article 10 of the South Carolina Constitution of 1895 provides that whenever there shall be several political divisions or municipal corporations covering or extending over the same territory or portions thereof, possessing the power to levy a tax or contract a debt, then each of such political divisions or municipal corporations shall so exercise its power to increase its debt under the foregoing 8 per cent limitation, that the aggregate debt over and upon any territory of the state shall never exceed 15 per cent of the value of all taxable property in such territory, as valued for taxation by the state.<sup>18</sup> school corporation coincide with the boundaries of the city, the indebtedness of the former cannot be considered in ascertaining whether the indebtedness of the latter exceeds the constitutional limitation. Hyde v. Ewert, 16 S. D. 133, 91 N. W. 474.

In Richmond v. Powell, 101 Ky. 7, 27 S. W. 1, it is held that a provision in the Constitution forbidding any municipality from becoming indebted in any manner or for any purpose, in an amount exceeding the income for the year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters, etc., applies to an indebtedness created by the city council of a city of the fourth class for school purposes.

The last-mentioned case (101 Ky. 7) was distinguished in Ex parte Newport, in which it is pointed out that the power and authority of school boards in cities of the fourth class are entirely unlike that exercised by school boards in cities of the second class, and that the bonds in that case were issued by the city itself.

The decision in the Powell Case, that the Constitution applies to all indebtedness including that created for school purposes, although containing a provision that a tax rate of cities and towns, etc., "for other than school purposes," shall not exceed a certain rate, was approved in Com. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 105 Ky. 206, 48 S. W. 1092.

<sup>17</sup> That a city within a township is indebted up to the constitutional limit will not prevent the township from appropriating a sum of money in aid of a railroad, on the theory that this will increase the indebtedness of the city beyond the debt limit. Irwin v. Lowe, 89 Ind. 540. The court said that the city was an integral part of the township, but that it was not the township; nor was the township the city. They were distinct corporations, with distinct powers, privileges, and rights. The debt of the township which included the city within its limits was not the debt of the city, in the sense in which that term is used in the Constitution.

Where bonds issued for the construction of free gravel roads are payable out of a particular fund to be raised by special taxes assessed upon the taxable property of a taxing district, the mere fact that the boundaries of a taxing district and of a township are the same, and that the property within these boundaries is liable to be assessed with the benefits according to its value, does not make the bonds the debt of the township. Monroe County v. Harrell, 147 Ind. 500, 46 N. E. 124.

But where the park board of a city is not a distinct municipal corporation, its indebtedness is that of the city, within the meaning of the debt limit provision of the Constitution. Orvis v. Park Comrs. 88 Iowa, 674, 45 Am. St. Rep. 252, 56 N. W. 294.

A magisterial district cannot, by subscription to works of internal improvement, become indebted up to 5 per cent of its taxable property, and, in addition, the county up to 5 per cent of its whole taxable property; but such district subscription, for the purpose of the limitation upon county indebtedness fixed by § 8, article 10, of the Constitution, is to be regarded as county indebtedness, and included with other county indebtedness in determining whether the total county indebtedness will exceed that limitation. Neale v. County Ct. 43 W. Va. 90, 27 S. E. 370.

<sup>18</sup> Todd v. Laurens, supra.

But in respect to this 15 per cent limitation, the state debt is not to be apportioned to any such political division or municipal corporation as a part of the debt to be estimated in ascertaining whether or not such limitation has been reached. Lancaster School Dist. v. Robinson-Humphrey Co. supra.

H. C. S.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

EDGAR O. FOGG

v.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF LITTLETON
et al.

(76 N. H. 296, 82 Atl. 173.)

School — duty to transport pupils.

Although under a statute requiring school districts to provide such schools as will give all the scholars of the district as nearly equal advantages as may be practicable, and authorizing expenditure of a portion of the school money for transporting pupils to and from school, a pupil living too far from a school to walk has no absolute right to transportation, yet the Note. — Schools: duty of public to furnish free transportation to pupils.

In the absence of a statute specially enjoining the duty of providing free transportation for school children upon township trustees, such trustees are under no duty to furnish free transportation to pupils, to and from school, under a statute providing merely that "it shall also be cause for transfer, if the nearest school to any child entitled to school privileges shall be more than 1 mile from the residence of such child, and there be a school in an adjoining corporation within  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile, unless free transportation is provided;" nor are such trustees authorized to provide such transportation, under a statute authorizing them to levy a special tax, in their respective townships, "for the construction, renting, or repairing of schoolhouses, for providing furniture, school apparatus, and fuel therefor, and for the payment of other necessary expenses of the school, except tuition,"—although 150 children of school age in the township live over 1 mile from the school building, 100 over 2 miles, 30 over 3 miles, and several over 4 miles, so that, unless free transportation is provided to and from school, many of them will be unable to attend, and some will be transferred, at the expense of the township, to some other school corporation. State ex rel. Beard v. Jackson, 168 Ind. 384, 81 N. E. 62; Nelson v. State, 168 Ind. 491, 81 N. E. 486.

And a town is not bound to provide transportation to and from school for the children of school age of lighthouse keepers living on a small island within the limits of the town, but about a mile distant from the mainland, on which the schoolhouse is located,—especially where access from the island to the mainland is always inconvenient, and at certain seasons of the year impossible. Newcomb v. Rockport, 183 Mass. 74, 66 N. E. 587.

Nor, in the absence of a statute expressly providing that school funds may be used for the purpose of hauling children to and from school, and in the absence of a vote district must furnish him such transportation as it can without substantially decreasing the school advantages of the other scholars in the district.

(January 2, 1912.)

TRANSFER by the Superior Court for Grafton County for the opinion of the Supreme Court, upon exceptions by plaintiff after dismissal, of a petition for mandamus to compel defendants to furnish to plaintiff's son some means of education or some means of transporting him to some school in the district. Sustained.

Plaintiff, who lives more than 4 miles from the nearest school, has a son of nine years of age. The distance being too great for him to walk, and the defendants de-by the people of the school district authorizing such use, have the school directors any right or authority to use school funds for hauling the children to and from school, although some of them live  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles from the schoolhouse, under a statute providing merely that it shall be their duty to establish and keep in operation a sufficient number of schools for the accommodation of all children in the district, "and shall secure for all such children the right and opportunity to an equal education in such free schools." Mills v. School Directors, 154 Ill. App. 119.

A statute, however, providing for an allowance to the parents or guardians of pupils residing 3 or more miles from the schoolhouse, of a limited compensation for conveying their children to school, to be paid out of public funds, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it diverts money raised by taxation to private and individual uses. School Dist. No. 3 v. Atzenweiler, 67 Kan. 609, 73 Pac. 927.

Nor is an act containing such provision in one of its sections, while all the other sections thereof relate to the subject of depopulated school districts, unconstitutional on the ground that it contains two subjects,—the one general subject of the act being schools. Ibid.

But under most, if not all, of the statutes providing for the free transportation of pupils, such transportation is a matter of sound discretion with the proper school authorities, and not a matter of right. Thus, under a statute providing that a town may appropriate money "for conveying pupils to and from public schools, . . . the same to be expended by the town committee in its discretion," a town is not under any obligation to make such an appropriation, nor, if it does, is the school committee bound to act. Newcomb v. Rockport, 183 Mass. 74, 66 N. E. 587.

And under a statute authorizing a board of school directors to furnish transportation for pupils of schools which, in the discretion of the board, have been closed by reason of small attendance, while a board may discharge its duty to furnish suitable clining to convey his son, and finding it impracticable to provide a school in the district, plaintiff brought this action.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Edward J. Cummings, for plaintiff:

If the school board are unable to so arrange the schools as to give all the scholars reasonably equal advantages, they may, by providing conveyance, render such advantages as equal as practicable. But if the amount of expenditure permitted for that purpose is insufficient to provide the necessary transportation, the remedy is to be found in an additional number of schools which will require less expenditure for the conveyance of scholars.

State v. Hall, 74 N. H. 61, 64 Atl. 1102.

and adequate school facilities and accommodations for all of the school children of their district, by hiring children of a sub-district transported to another school at a cost per pupil not to exceed the cost per pupil of maintaining a school in the sub-district in which they reside, they are not obliged to do so, but may either provide a school in the subdistrict, or provide reasonable school facilities in another district, in the manner pointed out by the statute. Re West Fallowfield School Dist. 29 Pa. Co. Ct. 600.

So, under a statute providing that "said schools shall be within the limits of said town, and at such places, and held at such times, as in the judgment of the board of directors will best subserve the interests of education and give all the scholars of the town as nearly equal advantages as may be practicable; and said school board may use a portion of the school money, not exceeding 25 per cent thereof, for the purpose of conveying scholars to and from such schools," the question of transporting scholars is left to the discretion of the school directors, and they cannot be compelled by mandamus to transport pupils living two and one quarter miles from the school, where they have exercised their best judgment and discretion in locating the schools for the town, and in conditionally declining to provide transportation for such pupils until it can be ascertained by experience whether the distance is too great for them to travel. Carey v. Thompson, 66 Vt. 665, 30 Atl. 5.

And in Iowa, under a statute providing that "when there will be a saving of expense, and children will also thereby secure increased advantages," the board of directors of the district township "may arrange with any person outside the board for the transportation of any child to and from school in the same or in another corporation, and such expenses shall be paid from the contingent fund," a board will not be required by mandamus to provide transportation for a child at the cost of the district,—at least in the absence of a showing that the board has actually found that a

Messrs. William H. Mitchell and Smith & Smith, for defendants:

There was no abuse of discretion in this case.

Carey v. Thompson, 66 Vt. 665, 30 Atl. 5.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

"The school board of every district shall provide schools at such places within the district, and at such times in each year, as will best subserve the interests of education, and will give to all the scholars of the district as nearly equal advantages as may be practicable. They may use a portion of the school money, not exceeding 25 per cent, for the purpose of conveying scholars to and from the schools." Pub.

saving of expense would be effected, and increased advantages secured, by the transportation of the child, or that a saving of expense or increased advantages would, in fact, be effected thereby,—but the remedy, upon the board's refusal to make such an arrangement as is contemplated by the statute, is by appeal to the county superintendent. Queeney v. Higgins, 136 Iowa, 573, 114 N. W. 51.

Under the section of the New Jersey school law providing that "whenever in any district there shall be children living remote from the schoolhouse, the board of education of such district may make rules and contracts for the transportation of such children to and from school," the failure of the board of education to provide transportation for children living remote from the schoolhouse is not the failure to "provide suitable school facilities and accommodations for all children residing in the district and desiring to attend the public schools therein," within the meaning of the section authorizing the county superintendent of schools, for such failure, to transmit to the custodian of the school moneys of the school district an order directing him to withhold from the district all moneys in his hands to the credit of such school district, received from the state appropriation or from the school tax, until such suitable facilities or accommodations shall be provided. Board of Education v. Atwood, 74 N. J. L. 638, 65 Atl. 999, affirming 73 N. J. L. 315, 62 Atl. 1130.

And under a statute providing that when a school has been discontinued on account of small attendance, it shall be the duty of the township trustee to provide and maintain means of transportation for all such pupils as live at a greater distance than 2 miles, and for all pupils between the ages of six and twelve that live less than 2 miles, and more than 1 mile, from the schools to which they may be transferred as a result of such discontinuance, a township trustee cannot be compelled to cause such children to be taken from and returned to their several homes, but he fulfils his duty by causing a proper conveyance to be

Stat. chap. 92, § 1. One contention of the plaintiff is that the last sentence of this statute is mandatory, and not permissive, and that upon a true construction of the statute the word "may" should be given the force of "must," when there are scholars who live at a greater distance from an established school than it is reasonable for them to walk. The argument in effect is that, if there is a single scholar who is unable to walk from his home to the nearest school on account of the distance, the school board has no discretion in the matter, but is obliged to transport him to and from school, at an expense, if necessary, not exceeding the statutory limit. It is said that the object of the statute is to provide for such an arrangement of schools in the town district as well "give to all the scholars of the district as nearly equal advantages as may be practicable." But this statutory language necessarily implies that the board is invested with a large discretion in the establishment of schools, and that entire equality of privilege in attending school is not required. Manifestly, if it were, its attainment would be impossible. The degree of inconvenience which different scholars experience in going to and from school must vary according to the location of their homes. Some must walk a mile or two, while others are only obliged to walk as many rods. It might be said that this is a great inequality of privilege, but no one would deny that it is an inequality that could not be avoided in the present system of town schools. As much inequality of privilege must exist, not alone in this but in many other respects, in providing for public education, it is apparent that a discretionary power must be lodged in someone, or in some board of officials, to determine the numerous questions of convenience and suitability of school advantages, as they arise. But this discretion is not a captious one; it is not equivalent to unlimited power in the matters to which it pertains. In the language of the statute, it is such a discretion "as will best subserve the interests of education" in the town, and as will "give to all the scholars of the district as nearly equal advantages as may be practicable."

These limits upon the discretionary power of the board, in regard to the times and places for maintaining schools, doubtless also apply in the decision of questions of transportation. In the original statute authorizing the expenditure of money for the transportation of pupils, it was expressly provided that the money should be "expended under the order and at the discretion of the officers charged with the prudential affairs of the district." Laws 1878, chap. 55, § 4. And the same idea seems to be implied in our present permissive statute upon that subject. But, as above suggested, the discretion vested in the school board must be exercised for "the interests of education," and for the "equal advantage" of all the scholars in the town, so far as that "may be practicable." One question, therefore, presented to the school board of Little-driven over a route so established and maintained as to bring the conveyance within reasonable distance of the dwelling place of each pupil, whereby all the children can be gathered in one wagon and delivered to the schoolhouse within a total time of one hour and fifteen minutes, and returned in about the same time, while to drive to each home would either require a second wagon, team, and driver, or would require three hours in the morning and the same in the evening, for the trip, thus necessitating an unreasonably early start in the morning and afternoon, and keeping some of the children from five to six hours per day in the wagon. Lyle v. State, 172 Ind. 502, 88 N. E. 850.

Under the New Hampshire statute involved in Fogg v. Board of Education, it was held, in State v. Hall, 74 N. H. 61, 64 Atl. 1102, that the facts that a parent or guardian resides so far from the place where the school is taught that the child in his custody and control cannot reasonably be required to walk, and that no conveyance has been provided by the school board, constitute a defense to an indictment under a statute providing that "every person having the custody and control of a child between the ages of eight and fourteen years, . . . residing in a school district in which a public school is annually taught, shall cause such child to attend the public school all the time such school is in session, unless," etc.,—as the parent or guardian is under no legal obligation to convey the children under his care.

And in Harris v. Salem School Dist. 72 N. H. 424, 57 Atl. 332, an action by a pupil against a town school district which had undertaken to transport pupils from a discontinued district to a school at the center of the town, for injuries alleged to have resulted from the defendant's negligence in failing to provide a suitable conveyance and to convey the plaintiff in a proper manner, the court said: "If it was the duty of the defendants to provide the plaintiff with transportation to and from school (a question not considered), it was a public duty from which the district derived no benefit or advantage . . . ; and the right of the plaintiff to be transported was one he enjoyed in common with other scholars in the district, and was also public."

As to power to require carriers to give reduced rates to classes of persons, including school children, see note to Com. v. Interstate Consol. Street R. Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 973.

A. C. W

ton in reference to the transportation of the plaintiff's son, was whether it was practicable, in promoting the interests of education in that town, to hire a team and a driver to bring him to school in the morning and to carry him home in the afternoon of every school day during the term of perhaps ten or twelve weeks; in other words, whether the money required for that purpose, if so used, would not so far diminish the facilities for general education in the town as to be deemed impracticable for that reason.

If, for instance, the money required to pay for the transportation of one pupil from a remote part of the district might be used to substantially increase the educational advantages of a hundred other pupils in the town, as by adding a week or two to the length of the school year, it is evident that the aggregate educational advantages derived from the public school system in the district would be enhanced by expending the money in that way. It might appear that it was not practicable to furnish transportation for one scholar, when it would occasion a substantial curtailment of school advantages to all the other scholars in the town, because the interest of the public in the intelligence of the people generally is paramount to the special interest or desire of a single individual. The expense of transporting one scholar might be so much in excess of the average expense of educating all other scholars in the district as to result in a gross and unreasonable inequality of expense and a consequent lowering of the degree of efficiency in all the schools of the town. Such a result would not "best subserve the interests of education," in its public governmental aspect, and for that reason it might be deemed impracticable to expend the money in that way. The pupils' equality of privilege under the statute is limited or modified by its practicability, which involves a consideration of its effect upon the success of the school system in the district as a whole.

The primary purpose of the maintenance of the common-school system is the promotion of the general intelligence of the people constituting the body politic, and thereby to increase the usefulness and efficiency of the citizens, upon which the government of society depends. Free schooling furnished by the state is not so much a right granted to the pupils as a duty imposed upon them for the public good. If they do not voluntarily attend the schools provided for them, they may be compelled to do so. Pub. Stat. chap. 93, § 6; State v. Hall, 74 N. H. 61, 64 Atl. 1102; State v. Jackson, 71 N. H. 552, 60 L.R.A. 739, 53 Atl. 1021. While most people regard the public schools as the means of great personal advantage to the pupils, the fact is too often overlooked that they are governmental means of protecting the state from the consequences of an ignorant and incompetent citizenship. Knowledge and learning generally diffused through a community being essential to the preservation of a free government, and spreading the opportunities and advantages of education through the various parts of the country being highly conducive to promote this end, it shall be the duty of the legislators and magistrates, in all future periods of this government, to cherish the interest of literature and the sciences, and all seminaries and public schools." Const. art. 82 [83]. In accordance with this injunction, the state has always maintained for its protection, and at great expense, a common school system, which long ago became one of the most important governmental agencies.

"The statute in question forms a part of the laws relating to our common-school system, and must be read as a part of those laws. The duty of providing for the education of the children within its limits, through the support and maintenance of public schools, has always been regarded in this state in the light of a governmental duty resting upon the sovereign state. It is a duty not imposed by constitutional provision, but has always been assumed by the state, not only because the education of youth is a matter of great public utility, but also and chiefly because it is one of great public necessity for the protection and welfare of the state itself. In the performance of this duty, the state maintains and supports at great expense, and with an ever watchful solicitude, public schools throughout its territory, and secures to its youth the privilege of attendance therein. This is a privilege or advantage, rather than a right in the strict technical sense of the term." Bissell v. Davidson, 65 Conn. 183 190, 191, 29 L.R.A. 251, 32 Atl. 348, 349. See also Learock v. Putnam, 111 Mass. 499, 501.

If, as seems to be clear, the fundamental purpose of the public-school system is the protection and improvement of the state as a political entity, the school board of Littleton may have believed that the interest of the public in education as a whole in that town would be unduly or unreasonably sacrificed or retarded by furnishing transportation for the plaintiff's son for the entire school year. In view of this public or governmental interest, they may have found that it was not "practicable" to incur the expense of such transportation. If a pupil's home is located several miles from a school, in a rough, mountainous, and uninhabited part of the town, it is not probable that the legislature intended that a considerable part of the public-school money should be expended in providing daily conveyance for him to attend school. The inconvenient location of his home is his misfortune, which the state does not attempt to overcome for his benefit by substantially reducing the efficiency of all the schools in town. The rule of equality of advantage in his case prescribed by the legislature would be impracticable, unless the interest of the public in the education of its youth is to be subordinated to the interest of a single individual.

In Massachusetts towns are authorized by § 15, chap. 25, Revised Laws, to appropriate money "for conveying pupils to and from the public schools . . . the same to be expended by the school committee in its discretion." In Newcomb v. Rockport, 183 Mass. 74, 66 N. E. 587, it was held that under this statute a town is not obliged to make such an appropriation, and, if it does, the school committee is not bound to act. In Davis v. Chilmark, 199 Mass. 112, 85 N. E. 107, the same result was reached. The plaintiff lived with his family on an island upon which no school was kept, situated about 4 miles from the island of Martha's Vineyard, where there were adequate school accommodations for the plaintiff's children. The court not only held that the town was not obliged to maintain a school on the island inhabited by the plaintiff, but that it was not obliged to furnish transportation for his children to Martha's Vineyard for school purposes. What arrangement, if any, should be made for their education, was deemed to be a matter within the discretion of the school committee, as appears from the remarks of the court: "There are no regular means of communication between the island upon which he has fixed his residence and the main island upon which the public schools of the town are situated, and such communication is often difficult and sometimes impossible. Doubtless the peculiar circumstances here existing might appeal to the discretion of the town or of the school committee, and lead them to make such arrangements as might be found to be reasonably practicable, with perhaps some sacrifice also on the part of the petitioner himself, to facilitate the attendance of his children upon the public schools. . . . But we can only pass upon the question of law raised by the report. Petition dismissed."

In Vermont, a similar result has been reached under § 6, No 20, Acts of 1892, which provides that "said schools shall be within the limits of said town, and at such places, and held at such times, as in the judgment of the board of directors will best subserve the interests of education and give all the scholars of the town as nearly equal advantages as may be practicable; and said school board may use a portion of the school money, not exceeding 25 per cent thereof, for the purpose of conveying scholars to and from such schools." In construing this statute, the court say, in Carey v. Thompson, 66 Vt. 665, 666, 30 Atl. 5: "The directors are authorized by this provision to use a portion of the school money, not exceeding a certain per cent, for the transportation of scholars. The permissive form of the provision is not conclusive as to the nature of the enactment. It is to be construed as imposing an imperative duty, if such was the purpose of the legislature. That purpose is to be gathered from the language of the act, the nature of the subject-matter, and the ends sought to be accomplished. The end sought here is equality of school privileges: but the statute clearly recognizes the fact that entire equality is impossible of attainment, and that much must be left to the discretion of those in whose hands the administration of the law is placed. The difference in the number of scholars to be provided for, in the means available for the various demands of the work, in the proximity of schools and the condition of roads, and in the ages and strength of scholars, are such as to induce a belief that absolute rules would be more likely to work injustice than the exercise of official discretion. We think it was obviously the intention of the legislature to leave the question of transporting scholars to the discretion of the school directors." It was alleged in the petition for mandamus that the directors "have neglected to support a school within 2½ miles of the relator's house, and have refused to use any part of the school money of the town for the purpose of conveying his children to and from any school, and have under no attempt whatever to give his children school advantages equal to those enjoyed by the other scholars of the town." These facts were substantially admitted in the answer, but the petition was dismissed for the reason above suggested.

The conclusion cannot be successfully resisted that the plaintiff's son has no absolute right under the statute to be carried to and from school at public expense, though the distance may be too great for him to walk. Both principle and authority support that result. It is a privilege or advantage which may be accorded to him in the discretion of the school board, governed by a due consideration of the interests of the public in the success of the common-school system and the equality of privilege granted to the individual, so far as it is reasonably practicable. The school board cannot legitimately determine the question without taking into consideration these two important facts; one alone cannot furnish the rule for their guidance to the exclusion of the other. And any action on their part upon the subject of the transportation of pupils, which shows they have disregarded them or unduly minimized their importance, would be illegal and subject to revision. If the expense of transporting a single pupil for some part of the school year would afford him some substantial benefit, and at the same time would not unreasonably diminish the schooling advantages of the other pupils in the district, the expense should be incurred. The board could not legitimately decline to furnish him any transportation under those circumstances.

As we understand the reported facts upon which the court denied the petition, the defendants' refusal to furnish transportation for the plaintiff's son was based upon the ground that the expense incident to such transportation would materially diminish the general effectiveness of the town system of education by reducing the amount of money otherwise available for that purpose. But in order to equalize school privileges so far as may be practicable, the legislature has plainly indicated a purpose that a part of the school money should be used for transporting pupils. "One general purpose of the law abolishing school districts was to gather the children together into larger schools, where they might receive better instruction for longer terms. The conveyance was intended as a substitute for school accommodations in a neighborhood where the scholars were too few to render the maintenance of a separate school reasonable or profitable." State v. Hall, 74 N. H. 61, 64 Atl. 1102. Money expended for the conveyance of a pupil, which does not unduly or substantially diminish the general school advantages of the town, should be so expended; for that was the evident intention of the legislature in providing for such an equality of school advantages as is practicable.

The plaintiff lives a little over 4 miles from the school nearest to his home. It is conceded that it is unreasonable to expect or require his boy to walk that distance to attend school, and that the plaintiff is not obliged to convey him to school. The only objection raised by the defendants to providing conveyance as authorized by the statute is the expense. But it is apparent that the expense for a few weeks during the year would not substantially decrease the schooling advantages of all other scholars in the town, while it would afford the plaintiff's son some opportunity for acquiring an education. It may not be expedient to afford him advantages equal to those enjoyed by other scholars, but there is no valid reason why he should not be accorded such advantages as may be practicable. The action of the board, under the facts disclosed by the case, in practically denying him the means of attending a public school for any part of the school year, is unauthorized and illegal. It was evidently the result of giving too much weight to the interests of education in general, or too little to the equality of advantages granted to the individual scholars, or to both errors combined. As above suggested, both these elements must be duly considered by school boards in determining the question of the transportation of pupils. We are of the opinion that the mere matter of the expense does not justify the board in refusing to furnish any transportation for the plaintiff's son during any part of the school year.

It may be that the petition ought to have been brought in the name of the son, instead of the father; if so, the defect can be remedied by an amendment.

Exception sustained.

All concur.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

MARY E. R. WEBBER, Resp't.,

v.

SALT LAKE CITY, Appt.

(— Utah, —, 120 Pac. 503.)

Limitation of action — action created by statute — constitutional power.

1. A right to damages for injuries to abutting property by the change in the grade of a street, which is given by a Constitution, does not depend upon a statute passed to harmonize the statutory law with the Constitution, and is not given by the statute, within the meaning of a statutory provision that actions for liability created by statute must be brought within a specified time after the cause of action accrues.

Highway — removal of trees — liability.

2. A city is not, under a Constitution making it liable for property damaged for public use, liable for the diminution in value of abutting property by the removal

Note. — Measure of damages for injury to or destruction of trees or shrubbery not valuable for timber or firewood.

This note is supplemental to a note on same subject attached to Cleveland School Dist. v. Great Northern R. Co. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 757, and the earlier notes there referred to.

The measure of damages for destruction of sugar tree farm where sugar is principal of useful and ornamental trees from the street the fee of which is in itself, which becomes necessary in making a lawful and careful change in the grade of the street.

(December 28, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injury to abutting property alleged to have been caused by a change of grade in the street. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. J. Dininny and P. J. Daly, for appellant:

Section 282 is clearly a statutory provision, for before it was passed no such law was in force, and plaintiff had no common-law remedy for consequential damage caused by a change of grade of a street.

Swift & Co. v. Newport News, 105 Va. 108, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 404, 52 S. E. 821; People ex rel. New York v. Stillings, 134 App. Div. 480, 119 N. Y. Supp. 298; affirmed in 200 N. Y. 525, 93 N. E. 1128; Re Grade Crossing Comrs. 138 App. Div. 349, 122 N. Y. Supp. 922; 201 N. Y. 32, 94 N. E. 188; Kimball v. Salt Lake City, 32 Utah, 253, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 483, 125 Am. St. Rep. 859, 90 Pac. 395; Ettor v. Tacoma, 57 Wash. 50, 106 Pac. 479, 107 Pac. 1061.

Plaintiff was not required to file her claim with the city council.

Brown v. Salt Lake City, 33 Utah, 234, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 93 Pac. 570, 14 Ann. Cas. 1004; Dawes v. Great Falls, 31 Mont. 9, 77 Pac. 310.

If in making a certain street conform to the established grade it becomes necessary to remove trees, or if they become injured in doing the work, if done with reasonable care, the lot owner has no legal cause for complaint.

paying product of farm is the reduction in value of farm. Kilby v. Erwin, 84 Vt. 206, 78 Atl. 1021.

And in Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. Phillips, 97 Ark. 54, 133 S. W. 191, where an orchard was destroyed by fire, it was held that testimony as to value of trees was properly admitted for purpose of enabling jury to arrive at the difference in value of land.

Where a landlord, unlawfully, without the consent of or acquiescence of the tenant, enters upon the demised premises, and makes an unnecessary and improper trimming of peach trees the limbs of which are full of peaches, the measure of damage is the actual loss. Morris v. Hazel, — Del. —, 77 Atl. 760.

Where the grantee in a timber deed wrongfully cuts trees undersized, the measure of damages is the difference between the 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Morris v. Salt Lake City, 35 Utah, 484, 101 Pac. 373; Kemp v. Des Moines, 125 Iowa, 643, 101 N. W. 474; Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 313, 15 L.R.A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898, 51 N. W. 500; Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L.R.A. 671, 19 S. E. 767; Castleberry v. Atlanta, 74 Ga. 170; Atlanta v. Holliday, 96 Ga. 554, 23 S. E. 509; Scott v. Marshall, 110 Mo. App. 183, 85 S. W. 98; Baker v. Normal, 81 Ill. 109; Wilson v. Simmons, 89 Me. 259, 36 Atl. 380; Colston v. St. Joseph, 106 Mo. App. 714, 80 S. W. 590; Landry v. Lake Charles, 125 La. 210, 51 So. 120; Southern Bell Teleph. Co. v. Francis, 109 Ala. 224, 31 L.R.A. 193, 55 Am. St. Rep. 930, 19 So. 1; Gallaher v. Jefferson, 125 Iowa, 331, 101 N. W. 124; Mt. Carmel v. Shaw, 155 Ill. 37, 27 L.R.A. 580, 46 Am. St. Rep. 311, 39 N. E. 584; Hildrup v. Windfall City, 29 Ind. App. 592, 64 N. E. 942; Murray v. Norfolk County, 149 Mass. 328, 21 N. E. 757; Miller v. Detroit, Y. & A. R. Co. 125 Mich. 171, 51 L.R.A. 955, 84 Am. St. Rep. 569, 84 N. W. 49.

Messrs. Howat & Macmillan, for respondent:

The liability of the defendant to answer to the plaintiff for damages done to her property by change of the grade of the street was created by the constitutional provision, and not by statute.

Montgomery v. Maddox, 89 Ala. 181, 7 So. 433; Kimball v. Salt Lake City, 32 Utah, 257, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 483, 125 Am. St. Rep. 859, 90 Pac. 395.

The claim of the plaintiff for damages was one that had to be presented to the city council for allowance or rejection, before suit could be maintained thereon.

Kimball v. Salt Lake City, 32 Utah, 253, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 483, 125 Am. St. Rep. 859, 90 Pac. 395; Hempstead v. Salt Lake City, 32 Utah, 261, 90 Pac. 397.

value of the land before and after the wrong was committed, for, as was said in the latter case cited, "it could not be merely the value of the fallen trees, as, if undersized or very small, they might have no appreciable value." Williams v. Elm City Lumber Co. 154 N. C. 306, 70 S. E. 631, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 917; Jenkins v. Montgomery Lumber Co. 154 N. C. 355, 70 S. E. 633.

Where sapling and young trees are destroyed by poisonous smoke, fumes, and gases from smelter, the measure of damage is the difference in the value of the land before and after the injury. Doak v. Mammoth Copper Min. Co. 192 Fed. 748.

And in Hunter v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 45 Pa. Super. Ct. 468, the same rule was applied where young trees and sprouts were destroyed by fire started from sparks of engine. J. H. B.

It is proper to take into consideration the depreciation in value of the abutting property caused by the destruction of shade trees in the street.

McEachin v. Tuscaloosa, 164 Ala. 263, 51 So. 153; Seaman v. Washington, 172 Pa. 467, 33 Atl. 756; Cook v. Ansonia, 66 Conn. 413, 34 Atl. 183.

Frick, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Respondent brought this action for the recovery of consequential damages, alleged to have been sustained to her premises abutting upon a public street in Salt Lake City. She alleges that the damages were caused by appellant in making a change in the grade of the street in front of her property. A trial to the court, without a jury, resulted in findings and judgment in favor of respondent, from which appellant prosecutes this appeal.

It is conceded on all sides that the appellant had the legal authority to make the improvement in the street; that it was properly made; and that the liability in this case arose, either by virtue of the provisions of our Constitution, or by virtue of a certain statute to which we shall refer hereafter.

This case, so far as the question of a change of an established grade is concerned, falls squarely within the decisions of this court in Kimball v. Salt Lake City, 32 Utah, 253, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 483, 125 Am. St. Rep. 859, 90 Pac. 395; Hempstead v. Salt Lake City, 32 Utah, 261, 90 Pac. 397; and Felt v. Salt Lake City, 32 Utah, 275, 90 Pac. 402. In view of the rule laid down in the cases just referred to, the change of grade in this case was clearly a change of an established grade, and, as the evidence is sufficient to sustain such a finding, no further discussion of that question is necessary.

One of the principal errors assigned is that the court erred in overuling appellant's demurrer to the complaint. The demurrer is based upon the ground that the alleged cause of action is barred by the "provisions of §§ 312, 313, and 2877 of the Compiled Laws of 1907." Section 312 in effect provides that certain enumerated claims against a city shall be presented to the city council for allowance within thirty days after the injury or damages sued for arose, and, unless so presented, the right to prosecute the action is barred. It is made to appear from the record that the street improvement which respondent alleges caused the damages in question was completed on April 13, 1908; that claim for damages was duly filed with the city council on May 8, 1908; and that this action was commenced May 10, 1909. Appellant's counsel insist that the claim in this case was not one which was required to be lodged with the city council under the provisions of § 312, supra, but that the claim in suit is one which falls within the provisions of subd. 1 of § 2877, supra, which, so far as material here, provides: "An action for liability created by . . . the statute of this state, other than a penalty or forfeiture, . . . shall be begun within one year." Counsel therefore contend that the right to bring this action was complete on April 13, 1908; that, inasmuch as it was unnecessary to file a claim, the filing of one could not extend the time within which an action must be begun, and as this action was not begun until May 10, 1909, the cause of action was barred by the provisions of § 2877, supra. Whether the foregoing contention is sound or not depends upon whether the liability set forth in this action is one created by statute. Appellant's counsel assert that this action is grounded on § 282, Comp. Laws, Utah 1907, which is to the effect that damages resulting to abutting property and the improvements thereon, by reason of changing an established grade of a street, may be recovered in an action brought for that purpose. As we pointed out in Kimball v. Salt Lake City, supra, which was an action like the one at bar, § 282, just referred to, was adopted in 1896, after the Constitution of this state had been adopted, and said section was evidently passed for the purpose of harmonizing the statutory law of this state with § 22 of article 1 of the Constitution, which provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." Appellant's counsel concede that this constitutional provision is self-executing, and to make it available required no legislative aid. The right to recover consequential damages for injury to private property by reason of making public improvements therefore does not rest upon § 282, supra, but is based upon the provision quoted from § 22 of article 1 of our Constitution.

As we have pointed out, the constitutional provision existed when § 282 was adopted. Moreover, the right to recover damages would continue precisely the same, although § 282 were repealed. If a right or liability—call it what you will—therefore existed before § 282 was adopted, such right or liability was not created by that section. Again, if the right or liability will continue in full force and effect, although that section were repealed, such right is not even exercised by virtue of that section. In other words, for the purposes of an action like the one at bar, the provisions of § 282 are not controlling or even material.

From what has been said, it follows that this action is not based upon § 282. Even though it be conceded, therefore, that the provisions of subd. 1 of § 2877, supra, are applicable to § 282, yet, as this action is based upon the constitutional provision to which we have referred, this action is not affected by § 2877.

With respect to what is the limit within which actions for consequential damages to abutting property, which are caused by lawfully constructing or operating a steam railroad in a public street by authority of the city, must be commenced, we held, in O'Neill v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. — Utah, —, 114 Pac. 127, that such actions fall within the provisions of § 2883, Comp. Laws 1907, and hence are not barred, if commenced within four years from the time the cause of action accrued. The right to recover in the O'Neill Case, as in the case at bar, was based upon § 22 of article 1 of our Constitution. In so far as the statute of limitations is concerned, therefore, we can see no material difference between actions for consequential damages to abutting property, caused by the lawful interference by a railroad company by using a public street, which interference is based upon the authority of the city, and such interference by the city itself. In either case, if the improvement which causes consequential damages, whatever it may be, is authorized by law, and is executed with due and proper care, the abutting owner is nevertheless entitled to recover for such consequential damages, by reason of the constitutional provision referred to, and not otherwise.

Nor is this action barred by the provisions of § 312, supra. This is so for the reason that, if it was necessary to file a claim in an action like this, then the claim was filed within the time provided by statute. In view, therefore, that the claim was filed in time, the question of whether the respondent was legally required to file one or not becomes entirely immaterial in this case; and hence we express no opinion upon that point.

There are a number of assignments relating to the admission and exclusion of evidence. If it were assumed that, with regard to some of the errors complained of, the court had technically erred, yet the errors, if any, are entirely harmless; and hence require no further consideration.

The next assignment relates to the damages which were allowed by the court, and even counsel for respondent concedes that this is a question "worthy of serious consideration." At the trial respondent, over appellant's objections, was permitted to show that in lowering the grade of the street in front of her lot and dwelling house, in which she lived appellant removed a row of shade trees which respondent had planted and cared for, and which were growing in the street; that said trees were both ornamental and useful, and the removal of which materially affected the market value of her property. It is conceded by counsel for respondent that the fee to the street on which the improvements were made is in the city; that in lowering the grade of the street the city proceeded lawfully; that it made the improvement with due care; and that in lowering the grade it was necessary to dig up and remove the trees in question. The court, after finding that in the year 1888 respondent had erected a dwelling house upon her lot, and had planted shade trees in front thereof in the street in question, further found that in changing the grade of the street aforesaid, respondent's "real estate was damaged and diminished in market value in the sum of $2,006.25; $1,000 of such damages and diminution in the value being caused by the destruction of said shade trees planted in said street by the plaintiff [respondent], as aforesaid." Appellant now urges that the court erred in admitting and in considering the evidence regarding the destruction of said trees, and in allowing respondent any amount as damages therefor. The question is therefore squarely presented whether a city, while proceeding lawfully and properly in changing an established grade of a public street, is liable in damages for the removal of shade or ornamental trees which were planted and are growing in the street, and the removal of which was necessary and unavoidable in changing the grade of the street the fee to which is in the city.

It is contended by counsel for respondent that, under § 22 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state, to which we have referred, the city is liable for whatever diminution of value was caused to respondent's lot, with the dwelling thereon, by the removal of the trees in question. In other words, if, by reason of the removal of the trees, respondent's property was made worth less than it was with the trees standing in the street, she is entitled to recover such difference as consequential damages. The question is not free from difficulty; nor are the courts in perfect harmony with respect to the allowance of damages under such or similar circumstances. Upon a careful examination of the constitutional and statutory provisions of the different states upon which some of the decisions are based, and of the reasons that have induced the courts to decide particular cases in a particular way, the diversity of opinion among the courts is, we think, more apparent than real.

The decisions, roughly speaking, may be divided into three classes. In the first class, it is held that the question of whether, in removing trees without the owner's consent, it is necessary to remove them from the public street, where they were planted by the abutting owner, is one of fact, subject to review by the courts, and if, upon such a review, it be found that the trees were wantonly, unnecessarily, or negligently removed the city is liable; but if it be found that it was necessary to remove them, either as an obstruction, or in making a necessary and lawful improvement in the street, such as laying a sidewalk, or grading, or changing the grade, then the city is not liable, and the owner has no redress. Frostburg v. Wineland, 98 Md. 239, 64 L.R.A. 627, 103 Am. St. Rep. 399, 56 Atl. 811, 1 Ann. Cas. 783, and Wilson v. Simmons, 89 Me. 242, 36 Atl. 380, are fair illustrations of the doctrine promulgated in the first class.

The cases coming within the second class hold that the question of whether an improvement in a public street and the removing of trees growing therein are necessary or not is in its nature legislative, and is one for the city authorities to determine, and when properly determined by such authorities their action is not reviewable by the courts. It is accordingly held, therefore, that, unless the city acts wantonly or negligently in removing the trees, the property owner has no cause of action against the city for removing them; nor can he review the question as to whether it was necessary to do so. The following well-considered cases sustain the foregoing doctrine: Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 313, 15 L.R.A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898, 51 N. W. 560; Vanderhurst v. Tholcke, 113 Cal. 147, 35 L.R.A. 267, 45 Pac. 266; Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L.R.A. 671, 19 S. E. 767; Baker v. Normal, 81 Ill. 108, followed in Mt. Carmel v. Shaw, 155 Ill. 37, 27 L.R.A. 580, 46 Am. St. Rep. 311, 39 N. E. 584; Kemp v. Des Moines, 125 Iowa, 640, 101 N. W. 474; Castleberry v. Atlanta, 74 Ga. 170; Atlanta v. Holliday, 96 Ga. 546, 23 N. E. 509; Landry v. Lake Charles, 125 La. 214, 51 So. 121; Murray v. Norfolk County, 149 Mass. 328, 21 N. E. 757; Miller v. Detroit, Y. & A. R. Co. 125 Mich. 171, 51 L.R.A. 955, 84 Am. St. Rep. 569, 84 N. W. 49.

Judge Dillon, in speaking of the effect of the doctrine maintained by the foregoing cases, says: "The title or interest of the abutting owner in the shade trees must yield to the power of the city to grade the street, or to build sidewalks, or otherwise improve it. For any injury resulting there- 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

from, the abutting owner has no redress." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 721.

In Castleberry v. Atlanta, 74 Ga. 170, the supreme court of Georgia, in speaking of the correlative rights of an abutting owner and the municipality with regard to shade trees growing in a public street, says: "We think that shade trees on the city's sidewalks and streets belong to the city, and in grading the streets and sidewalks they may be removed, if necessary to the grading. There was no error in charging to that effect, and in charging that damage resulting from their being killed must have been caused by neglect and carelessness in the work. While there is a degree of convenience and comfort about the shade trees on sidewalks fronting a house, yet these must yield to the control of the city authorities over the public walks; and the court certainly went to the extreme of the law, when it authorized damage for negligently and carelessly killing them."

In Landry v. Lake Charles, 125 La. 214, 51 So. 121, the supreme court of Louisiana, in passing upon the right of the municipality to remove shade trees growing in a public street, says: "The municipality, for the purpose of improving the sidewalk, has the authority to remove trees without having to pay for their value, provided the removal is not wanton. Ornamental trees inspire a commendable sentiment, which moves the owner nearly always properly to consider them valuable. But the municipality, when an improvement becomes necessary, cannot, in the nature of things, be made to pay a considerable amount for shade trees."

In Miller v. Detroit, Y. & A. R. Co. 125 Mich. 171, 51 L.R.A. 955, 84 Am. St. Rep. 569, 84 N. W. 49, Mr. Justice Grant, in speaking for the majority of the court, says: "It is established beyond controversy that municipal authorities have the entire control over their highways, streets, and sidewalks, and may remove shade trees, whenever they are an obstruction to the use of the highway for public travel, without compensation to the owner."

The supreme court of Michigan, however, holds to the rule that before shade trees may be removed by the city the abutting owner must be notified to remove them, and upon his failure so to do the city may do so. This requirement was at one time statutory in Michigan, but the statute has apparently been repealed. Mr. Justice Hooker dissents from the proposition that the owner is entitled to notice, and contends that the city has the right to remove the trees without notice; his contention being based on the fact that the statute referred to is no longer in force in Michigan.

The supreme court of Illinois, in Baker

v. Normal, 81 Ill. 108, says: "The town, under its charter, has the control of the streets, may improve them and adorn them. It may permit its citizen to improve and adorn that part of the street in front of his lot, but the improvement and adornment does not thereby become the property of the citizen. The planting of a shade tree in a street by a citizen, by permission of the village or city authorities, is a gratuity to the public, and the citizen has no more right to control the shade tree so planted than he would have had it been planted by the city authorities."

In Murray v. Norfolk County, 149 Mass. 328, 21 N. E. 757, the rule prevailing in Massachusetts is stated in the headnote as follows: "If trees standing within the lot limits of the street become an obstruction by reason of its widening, the town officers have the right to remove them, without making compensation to the abutting property owner."

It is, however, contended by respondent's counsel that many of the foregoing cases are not in point in this case, because in those cases the actions were not, like in the case at bar, brought to recover damages, but were brought to prevent the removal of trees. It is manifest, however, that the courts in those cases denied the relief, not because the action was equitable, but because the abutting property owner had no rights to vindicate under the circumstances. It is quite true that the courts might have denied equitable relief in those cases, when there was in fact a legal cause of action; but the courts in the equity cases certainly had the power to determine the question of whether the claimant had any rights, legal or equitable, in the subject of the action. Indeed, it would seem obvious that, in determining whether a claimant has the right to invoke the aid of a court of equity, the court must possess the undoubted power to determine whether any of his legal rights were invaded. If the claimant, in no event, has a legal right with regard to the subject of the suit, neither a court of equity nor of law can legally interfere in his behalf. Such is the status of the cases in which the proceedings were equitable, and, in our judgment, and in the judgment of all the courts and text writers who have cited the cases to which we have referred, the cases are treated as authoritative upon the question of the right to recover for the removal of shade trees by the abutting owner. In our opinion, those cases have the same force and effect as precedents as those cases in which the action was one at law for damages. For the foregoing reason, we made no discrimination in referring to the cases.

We think that the doctrine promulgated 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and enforced in the cases which we have last cited is based upon sound principles, and, in our judgment, the doctrine is sustained by the great weight of American authority. Counsel for respondent assert (and this assertion is not questioned by counsel for appellant) that the cases to which we have just referred are not based upon constitutional provisions like those of § 22, art. 1, of our Constitution. This assertion was, no doubt, inadvertently made. In view, however, that the assertion is seriously made, and is not questioned, we have made a thorough search of the Constitutions and statutes of the several states from which we have cited cases, to determine whether or not the assertion is correct. From the research we have made, we have become satisfied that if counsel had carefully examined either the constitutional or statutory provisions prevailing in the states referred to they would have discovered that in nearly all, if not all, of them provisions are found which require that just compensation must be made for damaging, as well as for taking, private property which is to be devoted to public use. For instance, in Wisconsin the statute provides that compensation must be made for both the land actually taken and for damages sustained to other lands, not taken, caused by the taking. 1 Stat. (Wis.) 1898, p. 683, § 925. The same is true in Iowa. McClain's Anno. Code (Iowa), p. 158, § 635. In Louisiana the subject is covered by article 156 of the Constitution of 1879 of that state, which, in substance, is the same as ours. The same is true of California, as appears from § 14 of article 1 of the Constitution of that state. The same matter is covered by § 13 of article 2 of the Constitution of Illinois, which is the same as our own. Indeed, Illinois was one of the first, if not the first, states of the Union where the subject of making compensation for damaging private property for public use was provided for in the Constitution. While in Georgia there is no constitutional provision regulating the subject, yet in the Code of that state of 1910 (§ 3627) it is provided that private property cannot be taken for public use without making "just compensation to the owner for the interference with his exclusive rights." This certainly includes damages for any substantial interference with a property right, and is not limited to the actual taking of property. In Michigan the matter is controlled by statute, and in North Carolina we have been unable to find either a constitutional or a statutory provision concerning the subject. For obvious reasons, we have limited our research to those states which we have cited cases.

It is, however, also insisted by respondent that the question is not whether the abutting owner has any property in or may recover the value of the trees, as such, when necessarily and lawfully removed by the city. It is insisted that the question is, what, if anything, of value have the trees added to the abutting property? In other words, will the removal of the trees affect the salable or market value of the abutting property in case of their removal? If their removal does so affect the property, then counsel contend that it is an element which should be considered in determining the damages that should be allowed the abutting owner. Three cases are referred to,—namely, Seaman v. Washington, 172 Pa. 481, 33 Atl. 759; McEachin v. Tuscaloosa, 164 Ala. 263, 51 So. 153, and Cook v. Ansonia, 66 Conn. 429, 34 Atl. 187,—in which the damages have been allowed in accordance with counsel's contentions. We have carefully examined those cases and the special constitutional and statutory provisions on which they are based. Section 8 of article 16 of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, so far as material here, provides: "Municipal and other corporations, and individuals, vested with the privilege of taking private property for public use, shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways, or improvements." Section 235 of the Constitution of Alabama, as adopted in 1901, and on which the decision in McEachin v. Tuscaloosa, supra, is based, is practically a transcript of the provisions we have quoted from the Constitution of Pennsylvania. The McEachin Case was decided in December, 1909, and is concededly based upon the constitutional provision aforesaid. Notwithstanding said provision, however, two of the justices of the supreme court of Alabama filed a strong dissenting opinion, in which the law is stated as, in the absence of special statutory provisions, we contend it to be. This is recognized by the majority of the court, as appears from 164 Ala. 266, where it is said: "We would make no war upon the opinion of Justice Sayre, as concurred in by the chief justice, if § 235 of the Constitution did not exist." The constitutional provision of Alabama is also found in the Constitution of 1875 of that state, and was under consideration in Montgomery v. Maddox, 80 Ala. 181, 7 So. 433, where, at page 186, Mr. Justice Somerville, in referring to the particular language of the Alabama Constitution, says: "I do not discover precisely this same language in the Constitution of any other state, except those of Alabama and Pennsylvania." Neither have we been able to do so. While in the Pennsylvania case nothing is said with regard to the constitutional provision, yet it is clear that the decision is based upon that provision. This conclusion is almost unavoidable, for the reason that the whole matter is disposed of in one sentence, and not a single case is cited in support of the rule. This disposes of the Pennsylvania and Alabama cases.

In disposing of them, it is not necessary for us to determine whether the constitutional provisions referred to in those states were properly construed or not. It is sufficient for us to know that those courts have given them a broad and liberal construction. This is apparent from the language used in the Alabama case to which we have referred.

The case of Cook v. Ansonia, 66 Conn. 429, 34 Atl. 187, is also based upon a special statute in force in Connecticut. This statute is set forth in the case of Platt v. Milford, 66 Conn. 320, 34 Atl. 82. In the Cook Case, the statute is referred to as having been construed in the Platt Case, and for that reason the rule, as announced in the Cook Case, was applied. In view of the special constitutional and statutory provisions prevailing in the states of Alabama, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut, which, by those courts at least, are held to be broader than our own, we are of the opinion that those cases should not be permitted to control the question in this state. In our research we have found one other case which holds to the same rule that is adopted in the three states last referred to; namely, the case of Walker v. Sedalia, 74 Mo. App. 70. The rule in that state is, however, expressly based upon the fact that in Missouri the fee to the street is in the abutting owner. From this fact the court deduces a property right in the abutting owner in the trees growing in the street, for which he is entitled to recover when the removal thereof diminishes the market or salable value of his property. It is, however, frankly conceded by the court in that case that the rule is otherwise where the fee of the street is in the municipality. In announcing the rule, the Missouri court relies on no decisions, except those of that state. It will also be noted that both in Pennsylvania and in Alabama the fee to the street is in the abutting owner. It is also true that in no case cited from the four states referred to, where the rule contended for by respondent's counsel has been adopted, is the decision based upon the general law as the same is declared by the courts, but is based entirely upon local provisions, either constitutional or statutory. It may also be said that in a number of the cases which we have cited, in which a recovery for trees growing in the public streets is denied, the fee is in the abutting owner, but this fact, standing alone, was not considered controlling; nor do we think it should be. It is worthy of remark, however, that no case has been found, where the fee was in the city, that a recovery for the removal of shade trees was allowed when such removal was lawfully made.

So far as we know, we have referred to about all the cases in which the relative rights of the municipality and the abutting owner to shade or ornamental trees planted and growing in the public streets are directly considered. We confess our inability to understand how the abutting owner, who is a mere licensee of the municipality, in the absence of an express statute, can acquire a property right in trees which he may enforce, as against the municipality, in case it becomes necessary to remove them in making a public improvement in the street, when such improvement is made in a careful and lawful manner. In the case at bar, the soil had to be removed in front of respondent's premises to a depth of about 2½ feet at one side and to about 5½ at the other. This difference in depth resulted from the fact that the premises are situated on the slope of a hill, and for the further reason that, in order to pave the street properly, the natural grade had to be reduced. It is self-evident that in making the surface of a street hard and smooth by an artificial pavement the grade in many places must be reduced from the natural grade. This is necessary in order to make it possible for teams to haul loaded vehicles up the grade, where the surface has been made hard and smooth. In this case the soil had to be removed, and with it removed the trees could not remain where they grew.

It is contended by counsel, however, that, inasmuch as respondent could and did recover damages which were caused to her property by reason of removing the soil, for the same reason, and upon the same principle, she should be permitted to recover for the removal of the trees. The fallacy of this contention lies in the assumption that respondent recovered for the removal of the soil. The true ground upon which her recovery is based is that in removing the soil her retaining wall was destroyed, and the convenient ingress and egress to and from her property was prevented. In this way, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

there was a substantial interference with the use of her property which reduced the market or salable value thereof. If she is permitted to recover for the removal of the trees growing in the public street, however, then she could do so, although she had in no way been hindered in the use and occupation of her property. In removing the soil, so as to interfere with the use of her property, she suffered a direct and substantial injury. In removing the trees, however, the city only removed that in which respondent had no property right as against the city, and that which in no way interfered with the use of her property, or in having access thereto. No doubt, as against anyone who unlawfully interfered with the trees, respondent, as an abutting owner, could recover for any injury she might have sustained. This is so, however, because, as against a wrongdoer, her right as a mere licensee of the city would be quite sufficient to sustain her action. Not so as against the city, because, as against it, she has no rights, so long as the city, in interfering with the trees, acted pursuant to law and in a careful manner. While the precise question here presented was not involved in the case of Morris v. Salt Lake City, 35 Utah, 474, 101 Pac. 373, and while the decision in that case is not controlling here, yet all that we there said with regard to the rights of the abutting owner in shade trees growing in a public street is applicable here.

After a careful consideration of the decisions of the courts of last resort and of the constitutional and statutory provisions upon which the decisions rest, we are forced to the conclusion that the respondent is not entitled to recover any damages for the removal of the trees, for the reason that such damages, under the circumstances, are damnum absque injuria. The court therefore erred in admitting the evidence and considering the same, and in allowing the sum of $1,000 as damages for the removal of the trees in question. In view, however, that the specific amount allowed by the court for the trees is stated in the findings, and there being no cross appeal and no cross assignment of error by respondent, it is not necessary to remand this case for a new trial.

The judgment entered by the trial court for the sum of $2,006.25 is modified by deducting therefrom, as of the date the judgment was entered, the sum of $1,000 allowed for the trees, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed. Neither party to recover costs.

McCarty and Straup, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE H. PAUL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

T. W. SHAW.

(86 Kan. 136, 119 Pac. 546.)

Vendor and purchaser — execution of deed — contractor.

1. Where a contract has been made for the sale of real property and its conveyance by warranty deed, the purchaser ordinarily has a right to insist that such deed shall be executed by the person with whom he contracted.

Same — objection to warranty — correction.

2. Where a vendor, as a performance on his part of a contract for the conveyance of real property, tenders a warranty deed from another person, the vendee, in order to avoid the effect of the tender on the ground that the deed does not include the warranty of the person with whom he contracted, must make that specific objection, and allow a reasonable opportunity for it to be met.

Specific performance — absence of warranty — tender.

3. In an action by the vendor for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real property, an allegation in the answer that he plaintiff has never tendered a deed executed by himself is met by allegations in the reply that no previous objection had been made upon that ground to the deed which he had tendered, and that he had at all times been, and was still, able and willing to furnish such a deed.

Headnotes by MASON, J.

(December 9, 1911.)

Note. — May purchaser of property be required to accept deed of third person.

Whether or not a purchaser of lands may be required to accept the deed of a third party as a performance of the contract of sale depends upon its terms.

Thus, where the vendor has bound himself to convey, a third person cannot be substituted for the vendor against the wish of the vendee. See Hussey v. Roquemore, 27 Ala. 281 (where the agreement was to "make a valid deed"); Smith v. Addleman, 7 Blackf. 119 (where the agreement was "to sell and convey" a certain lot, upon payment for which there was to be made to the purchaser "a good and sufficient deed"); Blackman v. Park, 157 Cal. 607, 137 Am. St. Rep. 153, 108 Pac. 686; Taylor v. Porter, 1 Dana, 421, 25 Am. Dec. 155; George v. Conhaim, 38 Minn. 338, 37 N. W. 791; and other cases infra.

The acceptance of such deed may involve the trouble of an inquiry to ascertain whether the title conveyed by it is good, and this inquiry the purchaser is under no obligation to make. Hussey v. Roquemore, 27 Ala. 281.

One to whom another (himself having only a contract therefor) has agreed to convey land is not obliged to accept the deed of one to whom his vendor has in the meantime conveyed his interest therein and who has procured title thereto. Royal v. Denison, — Cal. —, 38 Pac. 39.

So, also in Reynolds v. Smith, 6 Blackf. 200, a contract to convey by good and sufficient deed in fee simple was held not to be performed by the tender of a full covenant deed from the vendor to the purchaser and a quitclaim of one who had bid in the lands on execution sale, and to whom the vendor had conveyed the lands by deed of general warranty, the court saying: "Whether the deed from Lockwood conveyed a good title to the land or not, the defendant was not bound to inquire. He had made no contract with Lockwood for 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the purchase of the land, nor with Patton for a conveyance from Lockwood. His agreement was to pay the money for which the suit was brought, in consideration of a deed, with full covenants, to be made by Patton. Such a title as he contracted for he had a right to demand, secured by the covenants of the vendor, and free from blemish. The terms of the contract would be essentially varied if a third person, without consent, were substituted to do that which one of the contracting parties had bound himself to perform."

And one who contracts to purchase land is not liable to a suit for specific performance in the name of one who did not make the contract, and who was not the owner of the property at the time the contract was made, but who subsequently acquired the title for the purpose of conveying it. McGovern v. Hern, 153 Mass. 308, 10 L.R.A. 815, 25 Am. St. Rep. 632, 16 N. E. 861.

So, where the agreement provides that the conveyance shall be made by the vendor himself, without mention of his heirs, and no conveyance is made or tendered by him in his lifetime, the vendee is not bound to accept a conveyance from his heirs. Spindle v. Miller, 6 Munf. 170.

One contracting to purchase land from the administrator of a decedent's estate is not bound to accept a deed from the decedent's heirs. Newman v. Bank of Watson, 70 Mo. App. 135.

One who has contracted to purchase property from a firm, both members of which died pending the full performance of the contract, is not bound to accept the deed of the devisee of one of them, to whom the heirs of the other have conveyed their interests, but is entitled to a deed from the heirs as well. Wollenberg v. Rose, 45 Or. 615, 78 Pac. 751.

And see also Re Bryant, L. R. 44 Ch. Div. 218, 59 L. J. Ch. N. S. 636, 63 L. T. N. S. 20, 38 Week. Rep. 469, where it was held that one entering into a contract with testamentary trustees who were found, upon

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Sedgwick County in defendant's favor in an action on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. L. Foulke and C. A. Matson for appellant.

Messrs. R. L. Holmes and Charles G. Yanky, for appellee:

In a contract for the sale of real estate, providing for the purchasers giving a warranty deed, the contract is not complied with by tendering a warranty deed executed by some stranger to the contract.

Steiner v. Zwickey, 41 Minn. 448, 43 N. W. 376; Bigler v. Morgan, 77 N. Y. 312; Hussey v. Roquemore, 27 Ala. 281; Crabtree

v. Levings, 53 Ill. 526; McVey v. Payne, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 168, 39 S. W. 419; Rudd v. Savelli, 44 Ark. 145; George v. Conhain, 38 Minn. 338, 37 N. W. 791; Weitzel v. Leyson, 23 S. D. 367, 121 N. W. 868; Royal v. Dennison, — Cal. —, 38 Pac. 39.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The George H. Paul Company, a corporation, sued T. W. Shaw upon a promissory note. Shaw answered, alleging in substance, among other things, that the note had been given as part payment for a tract of land in Texas, under a written contract by which the plaintiff had agreed to convey it to him, giving a warranty deed investigation of the title, to have no power of sale until the death of an existing tenant for life, was not bound to accept a conveyance from the tenant for life under the powers of the Settled Land Acts.

And in Re Head, L. R. 45 Ch. Div. 310, 59 L. J. Ch. N. S. 604, 63 L. T. N. S. 21, 38 Week. Rep. 657, it is doubted whether one entering into a contract with trustees who had no present power of sale could be required to take a title made with the concurrence of the beneficiaries. But the rule is otherwise where the beneficiaries are bound to concur at the date of the contract. Re Baker [1907] 1 Ch. 238, 76 L. J. Ch. N. S. 235, 96 L. T. N. S. 110.

"A purchaser is not bound to receive a deed executed by attorney, unless there is some very strong reason for it. That mode of execution multiplies his proofs if he has occasion to support his title, for he is obliged to prove the execution of the power as well as of the deed; and he may be embarrassed by the loss or destruction of the power, or it may be revoked by the death of the principal before its execution by the agent." Dawson v. Shirley, 6 Blachf. 531.

A provision in the contract that the vendor will "convey or cause to be conveyed" does not indicate a purpose to enable him to relieve himself by the substitution of such other persons as he may choose to take the relation of grantor and covenantor. Miner v. Hilton, 15 App. Div. 55, 44 N. Y. Supp. 155; Gottschalk v. Meisenheimer, 62 Wash. 299, 113 Pac. 765, 115 Pac. 79.

A contract to convey or cause it to be done is the same in legal effect as a contract to convey by the obligor, unless it is stipulated that the title is to be made by a third party; and therefore the purchaser of lands under such a contract is not bound to accept a conveyance from one to whom the property has been conveyed by his vendor. Gaar v. Lockridge, 9 Ind. 92.

But in Batemen v. Johnson, 10 Wis. 1, an agreement to make, execute, and deliver "a good and sufficient deed of conveyance" of the premises was held to be performed by the tender of a good and sufficient deed of the premises executed by the parties in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whom the legal title to the premises then was.

And where the contract provides that the vendor, "its successors or assigns," will convey, a deed from one to whom the vendor had conveyed the premises is sufficient. Herrick Improv. Co. v. Kelly, 65 Wash. 16, 117 Pac. 705.

Where the purchaser is entitled to a deed with covenants of general warranty, he cannot be compelled to accept the conveyance of a third person. See Rudd v. Savelli, 44 Ark. 145 (where the vendor gave a title bond to make "a deed of the conveyance in fee of the legal title"); Crabtree v. Levings, 53 Ill. 526 (where the agreement was to convey by deed of warranty certain lands described as then owned and occupied by a third person); Barnett v. Morrison, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 68 (where the vendor covenanted to convey with warranty); Steiner v. Zwickey, 41 Minn. 448, 43 N. W. 376 (where the vendor did not in terms expressly agree to convey, but did stipulate that the conveyance should be by warranty deed); Buswell v. O. W. Kerr Co. 112 Minn. 388, 128 N. W. 459, 21 Ann. Cas. 837 (where the vendor was required to furnish a warranty deed); Walter v. DeGraaf, 19 Abb. N. C. 406 (where the agreement was to convey by full warranty deed, free and clear of all encumbrances); Weitzel v. Leyson, 23 S. D. 367, 121 N. W. 868 (agreement to convey by warranty deed); Gottschalk v. Meisenheimer, 62 Wash. 299, 113 Pac. 765, 115 Pac. 79 (where the vendor agreed to "execute or cause to be executed . . . a good and sufficient warranty deed"); McVey v. Payne, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 168, 39 S. W. 419; and other cases more fully set out infra.

This is on the theory that the purchaser is entitled to the personal covenants of the vendor as the future security for his title. Crabtree v. Levings, 53 Ill. 526.

The value of the covenants of warranty depends upon the responsibility of the covenantor. Steiner v. Zwickey, 41 Minn. 448, 43 N. W. 376; Bigler v. Morgan, 77 N. Y. 312.

"It is reasonable to suppose that usually when a vendee takes a contract containing and furnishing an abstract of title, upon the execution of notes for the balance of the purchase money; that he had been induced to enter into the contract by false representations as to the character of the property; that the plaintiff had failed to comply with the terms of the contract in these respects, among others: That the title was defective, that the plaintiff did not own the property, and that the only deed tendered was executed by a stranger to the contract. A reply was filed, which included a general denial and allegations to the effect that the deed tendered would have conveyed a merchantable title; that the defendant made no objection to the deed or abstract until the filing of his answer, but refused to examine either; and that the plaintiff had at all times been, and was still, able and willing to cause a deed to be made to it by the owner of the land, and then to execute a warranty deed to the defendant, and would have done so if the defendant had so requested. Upon these pleadings the court rendered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff understands that the trial court held the contract to be void because the vendor had no title to the property, and a reversal is asked upon the strength of decisions that one who is not the owner of real estate may make a valid agreement for its sale and conveyance. Provident Loan Trust Co. v. McIntosh, 68 Kan. 452, 75 Pac.

a provision for conveyance with covenants of warranty, he has in view the responsibility of his vendor, unless something appears to the contrary in the contract." Miner v. Hilton, 15 App. Div. 35, 44 N. Y. Supp. 155.

While the deed of a third party conveying title would be substantial performance of the covenant to convey, yet where the contract is to convey "by warranty deed with the usual full covenants," the purchaser is clearly entitled to the vendor's personal covenants, and is not bound to accept in lieu thereof the covenants of another party. Bigler v. Morgan, 77 N. Y. 312.

Upon the same principle, one who contracts to purchase land and to assume an encumbrance thereon does not put himself in a position to bring an action for breach of contract by tendering for execution a deed running to a third party subject to the encumbrance, the vendor having a right to the benefit of his personal assumption of the encumbrance. Burns v. Freling, 98 Mo. App. 267, 71 S. W. 1128.

But the rule does not apply where the contract is for a special warranty deed. Herrick Improv. Co. v. Kelly, 65 Wash. 10, 117 Pac. 705.

The tender of a general warranty deed executed by one of three obligors on a title bond is not a sufficient performance of a covenant to make lawful title, although he has acquired by deed of warranty the title of his co-obligors, the purchaser having the right to be secured by the covenants of all three. Clark v. Redman, 1 Blackf. 379.

The rule that where a vendor agrees to convey with covenants of warranty or by warranty deed sufficient in form, he cannot satisfy his promise by passing the title through another, is not rendered inapplicable by the fact that at the time the contract was entered into the legal title did not rest in the name of the vendor, but in that of his co-owner, since it may well be presumed that the inducement of the contract was the promised covenants of warranty. Gottschalk v. Meisenheimer, 62 Wash. 299, 113 Pac. 765, 115 Pac. 79.

Reference may also be made in the preceding L.R.A. (N.S.) ent connection to Birmingham Matinee Club v. McCarty, 152 Ala. 571, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 156, 44 So. 642, 15 Ann. Cas. 237, in which it is held that an undisclosed principal cannot enforce against the purchaser a contract made with his duly authorized agent to purchase land, where it contains a personal covenant on the part of the agent to warrant the title.

But in De Chaumont v. Forsythe, 2 Penr. & W. 507, an agreement to sell and convey by good warranty deed was held to be sufficiently performed where the vendor, who had only a life estate in the property, conveyed it in fee simple with general warranty to a son who, with the other remaindermen, executed a deed of release to the purchaser, since the covenant ran with the land and so inured to the purchaser's benefit.

And though, under a vendor's contract to convey with warranty, the vendee ought not to be compelled to accept the conveyance of a third person, the circumstances of such third person's having conveyed is no objection where, in addition to that conveyance, the heirs of the vendor have been decreed to warrant the title. Barnett v. Morrison, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 68.

A contract to execute to the purchaser a good and sufficient deed with covenants against the vendor's own acts is performed by a tender by one who has purchased the property, subject to the contract of sale, of his own deed together with an assignment of the vendor's deed to him containing such a covenant. Gaven v. Hagen, 15 Cal. 208.

Where the agreement provides that the conveyance shall be by quitclaim deed, the purchaser may be required to accept a deed from a third party to whom his vendor has conveyed the land. Meyers v. Markham, 90 Minn. 230, 96 N. W. 335, 787.

Where the vendor contracts to give a quitclaim deed, the tender of a deed from his successor is not a substantial breach of his obligation where there is nothing to show that the object of the parties will not be as well subserved by such a deed as the medium of transmitting the title as it will by one from the vendor. O'Keefe v. Dyer, 20 Mont. 477, 52 Pac. 196.

E. S. O.

498, 1 Ann. Cas. 906; Krhut v. Phares, 80 Kan. 515, 103 Pac. 117; Robertson v. Talley, 84 Kan. 817, 115 Pac. 640; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 667.

The defendant, however, disclaims any reliance upon the proposition that the plaintiff committed a fraud in making the contract without at the time having the title. He defends the judgment by this reasoning: The contract called for a warranty deed from the plaintiff, and provided that, if it failed to furnish a deed and abstract as specified, the defendant should be relieved of liability; the plaintiff tendered no deed except one made by another person; therefore it failed to perform its part of the agreement, and thereby lost all claim against the defendant.

The contract did not say in so many words that the plaintiff was to execute a deed. It did, however, recite that the plaintiff had sold and agreed to convey the land to the defendant, and by its terms the plaintiff agreed to "give" the defendant a warranty deed. This fairly implied that the deed was to be signed by the plaintiff, and gave the defendant a right to insist that, however good the title might be upon the record or in fact, he should be protected against any subsequently developed defect, by the personal guaranty of the plaintiff. 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 701.

But the objection to a deed, that it is executed by one person rather than by another, is of such a special character, and so readily remedied, that before a vendee can upon that ground justify the refusal of a tender, he should in fairness to the vendor call attention to the matter, make a specific requirement, and allow a reasonable opportunity for it to be met. It is said of such a situation in a headnote to Bigler v. Morgan, 77 N. Y. 312: "An objection to the form of a deed, capable of being remedied if suggested, as that it does not contain covenants of warranty to which the grantee is entitled, is waived by failing to specify it when the deed is offered." And in Backman v. Park, 157 Cal. 607, 613, 137 Am. St. Rep. 153, 108 Pac. 686, 688: "The vendor entered into a contract to make a conveyance within a given time. She made tender of full and complete title, and the tender was refused. True, the title tendered was not her own, and it is recognized that the vendee might have insisted upon title designed through the vendor. But their failure to object upon this ground was a waiver of the irregularity."

Such an objection may not be absolutely waived by the failure to make it at the time a deed is tendered (Linscott v. Moseman, 84 Kan. 541, 114 Pac. 1088); but ordinarily it is.

can be made available as a ground of rejecting a tender, only when it has been seasonably suggested. This necessarily results from the principle underlying the familiar rule that he who assigns one reason for his conduct cannot afterward justify it for another (Redinger v. Jones, 68 Kan. 627, 75 Pac. 997), which is often applied where specific objections have not been made to a proffered title. Stevenson v. Polk, 71 Iowa, 278, 32 N. W. 340; Prichard v. Mulhall, 140 Iowa, 1, 118 N. W. 43; Papin v. Goodrich, 103 Ill. 86; Reynolds v. White, 134 App. Div. 248, 118 N. Y. Supp. 979; Logan v. Bull, 78 Ky. 607; Ballou v. Sherwood, 32 Neb. 666, 49 N. W. 790, 50 N. W. 1131.

In such a situation as that here presented, one who gives no reason at all for refusing a deed is in no better position than if he had given an untenable one. The plaintiff alleges that until the answer was filed it had received no notice of a requirement that the warranty deed it was to deliver should be one executed by itself. It at first demurred to the portion of the answer which alleged that the deed it had tendered was not of that character. The demurrer does not appear to have been acted upon, but in its reply, filed thirty-six days later than the answer, the plaintiff offered to procure title and execute a deed, and alleged that it had at all times been able and willing to do so. No definite time of performance had been fixed, and under the circumstances the offer to furnish the kind of deed suggested by the answer was made without unreasonable delay. The omission to produce and tender such a deed was not important, especially in view of the fact that the deed was to be delivered in exchange for the deferred-payment notes, and that the defendant was contesting the enforcement of the contract upon other grounds.

It results from these views that the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings must be overruled. It should perhaps be added that the plaintiff can only recover on the theory that, considering its petition and reply together, its action is substantially one for the specific performance of the contract. It cannot recover upon the note and retain full title to the land, whatever may be the attitude or conduct of the defendant. Linscott v. Moseman, 84 Kan. 541, 114 Pac. 1088; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 720.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance herewith.

All the Justices concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Resp.,
v.
UNITED STATES EXPRESS COMPANY,
Appt.

(114 Minn. 346, 131 N. W. 489.)

Tax — express earnings — interstate commerce — leaving state.

1. Carriage of shipments by an express company from a point in this state to another point in this state does not constitute interstate commerce, even where the shipments are forwarded over a line of railroad that for a part of its route lies outside of the state. A proportionate part of the earnings from such shipments, based on the number of miles of the route within the state, constitutes a part of the company's gross earnings, upon which the state is entitled to assess taxes, under Revised Laws 1905, § 1019.

Same — local property.

2. The state has a right to impose a tax upon property within its borders, regardless of the fact that such property may be employed by its owners in interstate commerce. Same — property or earnings tax.

3. The gross-earnings tax provided by Revised Laws, §§ 1013-1019, is not a tax upon the earnings of express companies, or upon the companies, or their right to engage in business, but is a tax upon their property within the state.

Same — interstate commerce — interference.

4. A tax upon the property, within the state, of an express company engaged in interstate commerce, based upon its gross earnings within the state on interstate shipments, is not a regulation or interference with interstate commerce.

Same — money orders — tax on issuance.

5. Receipts of an express company from the sale of money orders within this state are earnings of such company within the state, whether such money orders are redeemed within or without this state, and should be included in the gross earnings of Headnotes by BUNN, J.

Note. — The position taken by the Minnesota supreme court in the above case on the constitutionality of the tax as affected by the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution—except as to the tax upon money orders, the objection to that tax not having been pressed in argument—has been authoritatively ratified, and settled by the affirmation of its judgment by the United States Supreme Court, 223 U. S. 335, 56 L. ed. —, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211. The latter court accepted the decision of the state court as conclusive so far as the construction of the Minnesota statute was concerned.

The general subject of corporate taxation 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

such company in estimating the tax upon its property within the state.

Same — constitutionality.

6. Revised Laws, §§ 1013-1019, as thus construed, do not violate either the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of this state.

Limitation of actions — claim for taxes.

7. The right of the state to recover taxes on the property of defendant for the year 1899 did not accrue prior to May 1, 1900, and was not barred March 1, 1906, when the Revised Laws of 1905 went into effect.

Same — statutory abrogation.

8. Section 980, Revised Laws 1905, abrogated the statute of limitations as to the right of the state to enforce the assessment and collection of taxes upon all property within the state subject to taxation, including the property of express companies.

Action — for taxes — failure to list.

9. When earnings within the state for any year are omitted from the annual returns of the company, and not included in the amount of gross earnings upon which the taxes for such year were based, the state may recover taxes based on such omitted earnings in an action brought for that purpose.

(May 19, 1911.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County in favor of the state in an action brought to recover taxes alleged to be due on account of taxable gross earnings omitted by defendant from its report for taxation. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank B. Kellogg, C. A. Severance, and Robert E. Olds, for appellant:

The statute has no application to earnings derived from interstate business.

Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; State v. Evans, 99 Minn. 220, 108 N. W. 958, 9 Ann. Cas. 520; Carson v. Smith, 5 Minn. 78, Gil. 61, 77 Am. Dec. 539; State ex rel. Loring v. Benedict, 15 Minn. 202, Gil. 153; Farjault v. Misener, 20 Minn. 396, Gil. 347; Ames as affected by the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution is discussed at length in the note to Sandford v. Poe, 60 L.R.A. 641. The question whether transportation between points in the same state, over a route part of which is in another state, constitutes interstate commerce, is treated in the note to Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Leibengood, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 985. It is important in this connection to observe the distinction between that question and the ultimate question as to the power of the state to tax the earnings from such transportation.

v. Lake Superior & M. R. Co. 21 Minn. 241; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 34 Minn. 538, 27 N. W. 69; Green v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 35 Minn. 161, 27 N. W. 924; Willis v. Mabon (Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co.) 48 Minn. 140, 16 L.R.A. 281, 31 Am. St. Rep. 626, 50 N. W. 1110; State ex rel. Marr v. Luther, 56 Minn. 162, 57 N. W. 464; Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. 61 Minn. 439, 29 L.R.A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 63 N. W. 1099; Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 387, 31 L.R.A. 553, 65 N. W. 652; State v. Moffett, 64 Minn. 292, 67 N. W. 68; Traverse County v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 73 Minn. 417, 76 N. W. 217; State v. Northern P. R. Co. 95 Minn. 43, 103 N. W. 731.

If construed as applicable to earnings derived from interstate business, the statute would contravene the Constitution of the United States.

Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 127 U. S. 411, 32 L. ed. 229, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 59, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1127; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 128 U. S. 39, 32 L. ed. 345, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 211, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Alabama Bd. of Assessment (Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Seay) 132 U. S. 472, 33 L. ed. 409, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 726, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 163; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 52 L. ed. 1031, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 355, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Pullman Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 56, 54 L. ed. 378, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232.

Commerce between points in Minnesota, but passing through another state in transit, is interstate.

Hanley v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 187 U. S. 617, 47 L. ed. 333, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214; Lord v. Goodall, N. & P. S. S. Co. 102 U. S. 541, 26 L. ed. 224; Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. Railroad Comrs. 9 Sawy. 253, 18 Fed. 10.

The receipts from money-order business are not taxable.

American Bankers' Asso. v. American Exp. Co. 15 Inters. Com. Rep. 15; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287, 17 Ann. Cas. 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1247; Cooley, Taxn. 259; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429, 595, 598-600, 39 L. ed. 759, 824-826, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431.

Messrs. George T. Simpson, Attorney General, and George W. Peterson, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

The taxes for the year 1899 are not outlawed.

Pine County v. Lambert, 57 Minn. 203, 58 N. W. 990; State v. Sage, 75 Minn. 448, 78 N. W. 14; State ex rel. Slingerland v. Norton, 59 Minn. 424, 61 N. W. 458; State v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 111 Minn. 21, 124 N. W. 380, 126 N. W. 403; State v. Foster, 104 Minn. 410, 116 N. W. 826; League v. Texas, 184 U. S. 158, 46 L. ed. 478, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Megins v. Duluth, 97 Minn. 26, 106 N. W. 89; State v. Barnes, 108 Minn. 233, 122 N. W. 11.

The omitted earnings can be taxed and power exists to collect the same.

State v. Minnesota & I. R. Co. 106 Minn. 176, 118 N. W. 679, 1007, 16 Ann. Cas. 426; State v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 107 Minn. 390, 120 N. W. 534; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 145 U. S. 200, 36 L. ed. 674, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 87, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 806; Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 127 U. S. 411, 424, 32 L. ed. 229, 232, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 59, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1127; Com. v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 21 W. N. C. 406, affirmed in 22 W. N. C. 525; Com. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 21 W. N. C. 410; United States ex rel. Kellogg v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 115 Fed. 373; Campbell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 86 Iowa, 587, 17 L.R.A. 443, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 203, 53 N. W. 351; Seawell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 119 Mo. 222, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 262, 24 S. W. 1002; State ex rel. Railroad Comrs. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 113 N. C. 213, 22 L.R.A. 570, 18 S. E. 389.

Bunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant is an express company organized under the laws of New York, and doing business in this state and throughout the United States. This action was brought by the state to recover the sum of $9,719.66, being taxes alleged to be due on account of gross earnings never reported by defendant. Defendant admitted that it had failed to include in its returns to the proper state officials the items of gross earnings on which the complaint alleged taxes were payable, and claimed that such items were not taxable.

A constitutional amendment passed in 1896 (Const. art. 9, § 17) authorized a gross earnings tax upon express companies. The legislature in 1897 passed an act (Laws 1897, chap. 309, p. 575, § 6) providing for 3 per cent tax upon the gross earnings of such companies. The rate was increased to 5 per cent in 1899, and to 6 per cent in 1901. The statutes as they are now, and were at the time the action was commenced, provide in substance that every express company shall annually, between January 1st and February 1st, make and file with the state auditor a statement which shall contain, among other facts, "the entire receipts . . . for business done within this state, including its proportion of gross receipts for business done by such company within this state, in connection with other companies." The auditor, between March 1st and April 1st, determines the gross receipts of every such company, and on or before March 15th "shall assess upon each company a tax of 6 per cent upon its gross receipts for business done between points within this state for the preceding calendar year, as determined by the auditor, which shall be in lieu of all taxes upon its property." Revised Laws 1905, §§ 1013, 1015, and 1019.

The facts were stipulated. The items of gross earnings which the company failed to include in its returns to the state auditor, and which the state claims are taxable, are as follows:

First. Earnings on through shipments consigned from a point in Minnesota to another point in Minnesota, but forwarded over lines of railroad partly without the state of Minnesota. Ninety-one per cent of this mileage is in Minnesota. The amount of the back taxes claimed on these earnings is $2,991.29, based upon the total earnings of such shipments, without any deduction based upon the portion thereof earned without the state.

Second. "Interstate transfer business;" that is, earnings on interstate shipments received by defendant at a point in Minnesota, carried over its lines to a second point in Minnesota, the transportation by defendant being performed wholly within the state, but the transportation of such shipments while out of the state, and also within the state, but beyond defendant's lines, being performed by other connecting companies. The amount of back taxes claimed on such earnings is $504. 47.

Third. Earnings from the issuance of money orders sold and issued by defendant at points in Minnesota. These money orders designate no place of payment, but are payable at any office of the company. Eighty per cent of them are returned through banks and clearing houses to the main office of defendant in New York. No part of the revenue from this service is paid to railroad or other transportation companies. No shipments of money are connected with the issuance and redemption of money orders. The amount of back taxes on the earnings derived from this class of business is $5,788.15.

Fourth. Miscellaneous items, not reported for taxation, representing omitted earnings on intrastate express business handled between points in Minnesota by defendant during 1899. The amount of back taxes on these earnings is $434.75.

The trial court decided for the state, holding that the earnings embraced in each of the four classes were taxable, and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment for $9,719.66, the full amount claimed. Judgment was entered, and defendant appealed.

We will consider the different classes of earnings separately in the order above stated.

1. Defendant claims that a tax upon these earnings is a tax upon interstate commerce. We think that the case of Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 145 U. S. 192, 36 L. ed. 672, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 87, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 806, is decisive against defendant's contention, at least as to the proportion of the earnings derived from the carriage within this state. The facts in that case are substantially identical with the facts in this. As here, the point of shipment and the point of destination were both within the state; but the route passed through a portion of another state. It was held that this was not interstate commerce, and that the state of the points of shipment and destination could tax earnings on such shipments. It perhaps does not appear as clearly as it might whether the recovery in that case was allowed for the entire earnings, or for a proportion thereof based upon the mileage within the state; but we interpret the decision as allowing a recovery of taxes upon that proportion of the earnings derived from the carriage wholly within the state. This seems to us the safer rule, and avoids any question of taxing interstate commerce, and we adopt and apply it to this case. Nine per cent of the taxes recovered on this class of earnings should be deducted from the amount of the recovery.

Defendant also contends that the language of the statute shows it was not the intention of the legislature to tax such earnings. This contention is based upon the wording of the provisions that the gross receipts business done within this state shall be returned by the company, and that the tax shall be assessed upon its "gross receipts for business done between points within this state." The intent of the legislature was clearly to avoid taxing interstate business; but we are unable to see how confining the tax to receipts from business done "between points within this state" indicates an intention to exclude from taxation, or, more correctly speaking, to exclude from the measure of taxation, earnings "between points within this state" in cases where the shipments pass out of the state en route. To so construe the language would be to add a new term to the act.

2. So-called "interstate transfer" business. Carriage of shipments from points in this state to points without this state is undoubtedly interstate commerce, though the carriage without the state is wholly by connecting companies. There is no doubt that it was the intention of the legislature, as expressed in the act, to include this class of earnings within the state in the gross receipts upon which the tax is based. They are earnings from business done "between points in this state." The provision that there shall be included by the company in its return "its proportion of gross receipts for business done by such company within this state, in connection with other companies," is not, we think, entirely colorless, but bears out the conclusion that the act shows an intent that the state shall be entitled to include such earnings in figuring the taxes to be paid by the company.

The question is whether the legislature had power to include earnings from such shipments. If the gross earnings tax law is to be construed as a tax upon gross earnings, admittedly a tax upon the earnings from interstate shipments is an interference with interstate commerce; but if such law does not authorize a tax upon gross earnings, if it is a tax upon the property of the corporation within the state, its gross earnings within the state being merely a measure or method of arriving at the value of its property for taxation, it is equally clear that there is no interference with interstate commerce, and the legislature has not acted beyond its power.

There is nothing in the Constitution or laws of the United States which forbids the state to tax property which is within its borders, merely because it is employed in interstate or foreign commerce. State v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 107 Minn. 390, 120 N. W. 534; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876.

It has long been settled by the decisions of this court that the gross-earnings-tax laws were not intended to change the character of the tax, but, for the purpose of certainty, were intended to change the method of computation. The amount required to be paid remains a tax upon the property, and not against the corporation. The gross earnings tax is a system by which the amount of tax upon the property is determined. St. Paul v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 23 Minn. 469; Ramsey County v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 33 Minn. 537, 24 N. W. 313; Todd County v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 163, 36 N. W. 109; Traverse County v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 73 Minn. 417, 76 N. W. 217; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Koerner, 85 Minn. 149, 68 N. W. 430; State v. Canda Cattle Car Co. 85 Minn. 457, 89 N. W. 66; State v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 107 Minn. 390, 120 N. W. 534.

It is true that this court has never construed this particular law; but we are not able to see why the decisions on the railroad tax laws and on the telephone tax law should not rule this case. It is pointed out that the title to the act used the expression "Taxation of Express Companies," and that the Revised Laws uses the term "Tax upon Its Gross Receipts," though this latter language was not in the act itself. But what the tax is called is not material. The act for this tax was passed on the same day and pursuant to the same constitutional amendment as the law providing for a gross-earnings tax upon telephone companies, which was construed to be a property tax. It is quite clearly a part of the same general scheme of taxation,—the system of using gross earnings as a method of arriving at the amount of the tax upon the property. The gross-earnings system, as applied to railroads, had been in force many years at the time this constitutional amendment was adopted, and when the laws were passed applying the system to telephone and express companies. The railroad tax laws had received the construction of the courts that the tax was not upon gross earnings, but on property. It seems fair to assume that the legislature had this construction in view, and did not intend to tax the gross earnings of express companies, but did intend to extend a system of taxation that had proved satisfactory.

The decisions of this court, if followed, lead clearly to the conclusion that the law in question provides for a property tax, and is not, therefore, a tax upon interstate commerce when applied to the receipts for business within the state, though the shipments come from or go to a point outside the state. We do not feel justified in departing from the doctrine of these decisions, because of the recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court relied on by defendant. It is by no means clear that the court has rendered any decision on the subject that is contrary to those of this court. The earlier cases established the principle that a tax upon the earnings from interstate commerce is an interference with such commerce, but do not hold that a gross-earnings system of taxation cannot be construed as a tax upon property. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 127 U. S. 411, 32 L. ed. 220, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 59, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1127; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Alabama (Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Seay), 132 U. S. 472, 33 L. ed. 409, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 726, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161. In Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876, it was held that a tax upon the capital stock of the Pullman Company, on a basis of assessing such proportion of the capital stock of the company as the number of miles over which it ran cars within the state bore to the whole number of miles in that and other states over which its cars were run, was, in substance and effect, a tax upon property. In Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 163, the state statute required railroad companies to pay an annual tax for the privilege of exercising their franchise in the state, the amount to be determined by the amount of their gross receipts. It was provided that, where a railroad lay partly within and partly without the state, the tax should be equal to the proportion of its gross receipts within the state; its amount to be determined by dividing the gross receipts of the company by the total number of miles operated, thus ascertaining the average gross receipts per mile, and then multiplying the result by the number of miles operated within the state. It was held that this was not a tax upon gross receipts, but resort to the receipts was to obtain a guide to a reasonable conclusion as to the amount of the excise tax which should be levied. The law was held not to be a regulation of interstate commerce.

Statutes applying similar methods of taxation to telegraph companies and to express companies have been sustained, as essentially property taxes, and not an interference with interstate commerce. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 49, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1054; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305. In 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

McHenry v. Alford, 168 U. S. 651, 42 L. ed. 614, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242, where the court had under consideration a railroad gross-earnings-tax law of the territory of Dakota, though the question of interference with interstate commerce was not decided, Mr. Justice Peckham clearly intimates that the act was not a tax upon gross earnings, but provided a different method of taxation upon the property of the company. His language is in point: "When it is said, as it is in this act, that the tax collected by this method shall be in lieu of all other taxes whatever, it would seem that it might be claimed with great plausibility that a tax levied under such circumstances and by such methods was not in reality a tax upon the gross earnings, but was a tax upon the lands and other property of the company, and that the method adopted of arriving at the sum which the company should pay as taxes upon its property was by taking a percentage of its gross earnings."

In Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 52 L. ed. 1031, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638, a gross-earnings-tax law of Texas was held to violate the commerce clause of the Constitution. The majority of the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Holmes, while expressly stating that "by whatever name the exaction may be called, if it amounts to no more than the ordinary tax upon property or a just equivalent therefor, . . . it is not open to attack as inconsistent with the Constitution," holds that the act there in question was not a property tax, but a direct tax on gross receipts. Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, is followed, and Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. distinguished. The Galveston Case is really the only utterance of the United States Supreme Court that appears at all inconsistent with the cases in this court holding that the gross-earnings tax is a tax upon property, and even here the doctrine is fully recognized that some gross-earnings-tax laws should be so construed. The act under consideration in the case at bar is, we think, fairly distinguishable from the act considered in the Galveston Case. Our Constitution, under which the act was passed, authorizes the imposition of a tax "upon the property within the state" of express companies, by taxing the gross earnings. The act provides that the tax "shall be in lieu of all other taxes upon the property of any express company . . . paying the same."

Giving due weight to the cases of the Supreme Court referred to and others we have not referred to, taking into consideration the language of the constitutional amendment and of the act itself, viewed in the light of the construction that had been placed upon the railroad tax laws before this act was passed, we feel that no other course is open but to adhere to our former decisions.

3. Receipts from money orders sold by defendant at points in Minnesota. This item is divided into earnings on money orders redeemed without the state and those redeemed within the state. It cannot be seriously claimed, and we do not understand defendant to claim, that taxation of these earnings violates the commerce clause of the Constitution. Nathan v. Louisiana, 8 How. 73, 12 L. ed. 992. The fees for all money orders issued within the state are paid in this state. The orders are redeemable at any office of the company within or without the state. No transportation of money is involved. As far as the validity of the tax is concerned, there seems to be no material distinction between the orders that are redeemable within Minnesota and those redeemed elsewhere. The company is engaged in a banking business in the state, the earnings from which are not taxed at all unless under this act.

It is argued by defendant that, to the extent that defendant is engaged in business other than the express forwarding business, it cannot be regarded as an express company within the meaning of the statute. The statute defines an express company as a corporation that is engaged in the business of conveying articles by express; but it by no means follows that a corporation that is also engaged in other business is not still an express company, and liable to pay taxes on the property used in such other business. It was and is a well-known fact that express companies sell and redeem money orders. Defendant's charter authorized it to do a banking and exchange business. No reason is apparent why the legislature should exempt from taxation the property employed in such business. The statute does not confine the tax to earnings from transportation. It says that the company shall return a statement of its "entire receipts for business done within this state;" that the auditor shall determine the "gross receipts of such company," and shall assess a tax upon its gross receipts for business done between points within this state. We think that the selling of money orders within the state is business done within the state, within the fair meaning of the language of the act.

The point is made that taxing these receipts violates the provisions of the Federal Constitution and the state Constitution, requiring that taxes must be uniform and levied without discrimination and guaranteeing the equal protection of the laws and due process of law. The argument is 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that the classification is unreasonable and arbitrary, in that the receipts from similar business carried on by others than express companies are not taxed. We are not willing to grant the truth of the premise. It is true that receipts from the sale of exchange by banks are not taxed directly, but the system of taxation applied to banks is not the gross earnings system, and it is not right to say that a bank pays no tax on the receipts from its exchange business, or upon the property used in that business. Defendant points out the similarity in this respect between this case and the corporation tax case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, since its brief and argument in this case were made. As that decision upholds the validity of the corporation tax law, it is needless to discuss further the constitutional objections urged here by defendant. We hold that the state was entitled to assess a tax upon the receipts from defendant's sale of money orders within the state.

4. Miscellaneous items of earnings in 1899, not reported for taxation. The only point urged here is that the statute of limitations bars a recovery of these items. This point applies also to the taxes for 1899 included in the previously considered items. The act provided that the auditor shall make the assessment on or before March 15th of each year upon the gross receipts for the preceding year, and shall deliver to the state treasurer for collection a draft upon the company for the amount assessed. The company has sixty days after demand by the state treasurer in which to pay the tax, before any penalty accrues. It is clear in our opinion that no cause of action accrued to recover these taxes until sixty days after demand by the state treasurer, which would be May 1, 1900, at the earliest. State v. Sage, 75 Minn. 448, 78 N. W. 14; Rev. Laws 1905, § 4071. At this time the limitation was six years, but before this six years expired, on March 1, 1906, the Revised Laws of 1905 went into effect. Section 980 of the Revised Laws abrogated the statute of limitations as to the right of the state to enforce the assessment and collection of taxes upon all property subject to taxation.

Defendant argues that § 980 is merely a re-enactment of § 82, chap. 2, Special Laws of 1902, which, according to the title of the chapter, concerned only the taxation of real estate; but the title was omitted, and the body of § 82 incorporated in the revision as a general provision, under chapter 11, entitled "Taxes." Section 980 is not now subject to the limitations in the original title to chapter 2. State v. Barnes, 108 Minn. 230, 122 N. W. 11. Defendant's contention that § 980 relates only to the assessment of taxes upon property as such, and not to a tax based upon gross earnings, is not substantiated by the language of that section, which is clearly broad enough in its terms to include all taxes due the state. As we have held in this and in many other cases, a gross-earnings tax is a tax upon property. We hold that § 980 does apply to gross-earnings taxes, and that there is no limitation of time upon the right of the state to enforce collection of such taxes.

5. Defendant makes the further point that none of the omitted earnings can now be taxed, or the taxes now collected, for the reason that no provision is made in the laws for making a reassessment or a subsequent assessment on omitted earnings. It would be manifestly wrong if this power did not exist, and we are of the opinion that it does. Rev. Laws, 1905, § 1585. The cases of State v. Minnesota & I. R. Co. 100 Minn. 176, 118 N. W. 679, 1007, 16 Ann. Cas. 426, and State v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 107 Minn. 390, 120 N. W. 534, were brought to recover taxes on omitted gross earnings for prior years, and proceeded to final judgment on the theory that such taxes could be recovered, though it is true that the point made by defendant in this case was not raised in either of the cases cited. We hold that the state may recover taxes on earnings for prior years not reported by the company.

Our conclusion on the whole case is in accord with that reached by the trial court, except as to 9 per cent of the taxes under the first item. We hold that 9 per cent of the taxes assessed on earnings on this class of business should be deducted from the judgment.

Remanded, with directions to modify the judgment in accordance with this opinion.

Affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, February 19, 1912, 223 U. S. 335, 56 L. ed. —, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

HANS L. ERICKSON, Resp.,
v.

GEORGE ROBERTSON, Admr., etc., of BARBARA ERICKSON, Deceased, Appt.

(116 Minn. 90, 133 N. W. 164.)

Evidence — to vary date of instrument.

1. Parol evidence that a written instrument bearing date on one day was executed on a different day is competent.

Headnotes by SMITHSON, J.
57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Husband and wife — consent to devise — consideration.

2. A written consent by the husband to the devise by the wife of her real property does not require a consideration to support it.

Same — void agreement — effect.

3. Such consent by the husband is valid and effectual, though given in furtherance of a void written agreement between husband and wife, by which each, in terms, released all interest in the other's real property; the wife having performed her part of the agreement.

(November 17, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Mower County in plaintiff's favor and from an order denying a motion for new trial in a proceeding to have the homestead of plaintiff's deceased wife set apart to him. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Greenman & Greenman, for appellant:

The statute prohibits only contracts directly between husband and wife.

McMillan v. Cheney, 30 Minn. 519, 16 N. W. 404; Jorgenson v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. 64 Minn. 489, 67 N. W. 364; Sokolowski v. Ward, 98 Minn. 177, 107 N. W. 961.

Note. — Sufficiency of husband's consent to wife's will.

Generally, before the passage of modern statutes, a married woman could not devise realty even with the husband's consent, but she was competent to dispose of personalty by a will to which the husband consented. This note does not deal with the power of the wife to devise the several kinds of property, but is concerned only with the question what amounts to a sufficient consent by the husband to the wife's will, assuming that such consent is required.

It has been held that where the consent of the husband that the wife should make the will in question, and his assent to its probate, is shown, it is sufficient to pass her personal estate. George v. Bussing, 15 B. Mon. 558. The court said: "The doctrine is well settled that the wife may dispose of her separate estate by will, and may make a will in pursuance of a power given her for that purpose. It is also the settled doctrine that she may, with the consent of her husband, make a will to dispose of her personal estate. The principle upon which the power of the wife to make a will in such a case is founded, seems to be this,—that the husband may waive the interest in her property which the law confers upon him, and empower the wife to dispose of it by will. The grant of such a power is implied from his consent that the will should be made. A general assent that she may make a will is not sufficient. It must

The consent of the surviving spouse in writing, indorsed on the will, unrevoked prior to the death of testator, was as effective as if he had signed a deed to the premises on the day of and prior to her death.

Radt v. Radl, 72 Minn. 81, 75 N. W. 111. Messrs. French & Sasse for respondent.

Simpson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent, Hans L. Erickson, filed a petition in the probate court of Mower county, asking that the homestead of his deceased wife be set apart and descend to him during his lifetime. The appellant here, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Barbara Erickson, deceased, be proved that he has consented to the particular will which she has made, and his consent should be given when it is proved. The reason for this is that he may revoke his consent, at any time during his wife's life, or after her death, before probate. . . . The consent of the husband that the wife should make this will is fully established by the proof, as well as his assent to the probate. When the will is made, as it was in this case, in pursuance of the wishes and with the express consent of the husband, very little testimony will be required to make out the continuance of the consent after her death."

And the will of a married woman is entitled to probate where, immediately after its execution, the husband signed an instrument reciting: "I James Cooper . . . hereby acknowledge that the sums . . . are the separate estate of my wife, Sarah Ann Cooper, to will and dispose of as she may think proper," and after the wife's death, during his illness, he expressed his intention to prove the will, but died before doing so. Re Cooper, L. R. 6 Prob. Div. 34.

And in Cutter v. Butler, 25 N. H. 343, 57 Am. Dec. 330, where the chattels in question belonged to the wife before marriage, and the evidence tended to show the assent of the husband, before and during the marriage, that the wife should dispose of such property by will, and that the will in question was proved without objection, and the husband was present when the inventory was made, and pointed out the articles which belonged to the wife, and suffered the executor to take them away, it was held that the facts showed sufficient consent on his part.

And where the husband by marriage agreement relinquished all rights which he might possess in case he survived his wife, and covenanted that she should have full power to dispose of her property by will, it was held that a will executed by her entitled her representative to administer the personality, although the husband withheld his consent to such will. Newlin v. Freeman, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 514. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.), objected to such application, on the ground that Barbara Erickson, during her lifetime, had by will devised all her real property, including the homestead, to her children; that the respondent, in writing indorsed thereon, had consented to the execution of such will and the devising of the real property; and that the will had been duly admitted to probate.

Upon a hearing in probate court an order was made denying the petition. An appeal having been taken to the district court from that order, a trial was had upon the issues made by the petition and objections. The district court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law and direction for judgment, reversing the order of the probate court, and directing that the homestead be

So, in Osmond's Estate, 161 Pa. 543, 29 Atl. 266, where the wife's will, disposing of certain personality, was read to the husband, and he expressed himself satisfied with it, in her presence, before she executed it, and received a certain amount of money from her at the time, he was held estopped after the wife's death from claiming against the will.

And the fact that the wife's will was executed in the handwriting of the husband has been held sufficient in some cases to show his assent thereto.

Thus, in Grimke v. Grimke, 1 Desaus. Eq. 366, it was held that a husband's assent to his wife's making a will of personal estate, manifested by its being in his handwriting, was a sufficient authority to support the will, although it was not republished after his death.

And in Smelie v. Reynolds, 2 Desaus. Eq. 66, where the husband drew a will for his wife, disposing of the property he got with her in marriage, including slaves, nominated himself an executor, had it executed by his wife, kept it in his possession until the wife's death, and sometime thereafter had it proved, and paid some legacies, and received back part of the property bequeathed to him in the instrument, it was held valid.

In Reed v. Blaisdell, 16 N. H. 194, 41 Am. Dec. 722, it was held that the verbal consent of the husband that the wife might dispose of a note which was her separate property, by will, was sufficient.

But in McGowan v. Jones, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 185, it was held that a parol assent, unaffirmed by any act, analogous to an agreement before marriage, was insufficient to give validity to the wife's will, which apparently included property in the nature of realty.

And in Myers v. Eggner, 6 Houst. (Del.) 342, it was held that the fact that the husband signed a will of his wife's in the presence of two witnesses to it, before they had signed, was not sufficient to show that it was made with the consent of the husband, in writing, in the presence of two witnesses as required by statute.

set apart as asked in the petition of the respondent. The case is brought to this court by an appeal from an order denying a new trial.

As errors are assigned two findings of fact, as not being sustained by the evidence,—the rulings admitting oral evidence upon which the findings of fact complained of are in part based, and the refusal of the trial court to substitute for its conclusion of law as found the conclusion that the order of the probate court be affirmed. The findings of fact so questioned are to the effect: That on October 31, 1901, and at the time the will of Barbara Erickson was made, the respondent, Hans L. Erickson, and Barbara Erickson, being then husband and wife, entered into an agreement in writing purporting to convey and release, each to the other, the interest which each held in the other's real property; that to carry out the agreement so made, and as a part thereof, the will of Barbara Erickson, disposing of her real property, was drawn and executed, and the consent thereto of Hans L. Erickson was written thereon and signed by him, and at the same time the will of Hans L. Erickson was drawn and executed, and the consent thereto of Barbara Erickson indorsed thereon; and, further, that Hans L. Erickson never consented in writing to the testamentary disposition of the land owned by Barbara Erickson, unless such consent is embodied in these writings so made.

Upon these findings the court bases its conclusion that the consent of Hans L. Er-

Some cases hold that a general assent by the husband that the wife may make a will is insufficient.

Thus, it has been held that, although a husband assented to the wife's making a will and knew that she had made one, where it did not appear that he knew the contents of the will, such assent was insufficient, as without a knowledge of the contents it could not be said to have been made with his consent. Willock v. Noble, L. R. 7 H. L. 580, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 345, 32 L. T. N. S. 419, 23 Week. Rep. 809.

And in Rex v. Bettesworth, 2 Strange, 891, it was held that a general consent in articles before marriage that the wife should have the power to make a will and dispose of her leasehold estate was not sufficient, but that a consent to the particular will must be proved.

And where an act provides that a married woman may, with the assent of her husband, dispose of her personal estate by will, there must be a special authority to make the particular will in question, and a consent that the wife might do as she pleased with the rest of the property if he got a stated amount is insufficient. Kurtz v. Saylor, 20 Pa. 205.

And where a husband made a voluntary conveyance in remainder of personal property to his wife, and gave her power to dispose of such property by will, her will must operate as his will, and an instrument executed by her is not a good execution of the power, although the husband was in the adjoining room when she was executing it and expressed no dissent from the proceedings, it not appearing that he had any precise knowledge of its contents or that he assented to its probate, although his conversations showed a willingness that the property should go as designated by the will. Perry v. Gill, 2 Humph. 218.

It has been held that where there is an express agreement that a married woman may make a will, slight proof is sufficient to make out a continuance of that consent after the death of the wife. Brook v. Turner, 2 Mod. 170; George v. Bussing, supra.

And where the husband consented that the wife might make a will, and after her death expressed satisfaction that she had appointed a certain person as executor, and seemed to be satisfied in the main with the will, and recommended a coffin maker to the executor, and a goldsmith to make the rings, and a herald painter for making the escutcheons, it was held a good assent though he afterward opposed the probate of the will. Brook v. Turner, supra.

So, where a husband agrees in articles of separation that the wife shall be considered as a feme sole, free from his control or restraint, and agrees in writing that a will of personalty executed by the wife shall be proved, it is equivalent to a previous authority to her to make a will. Re Wagner, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 448.

And the assent of the husband after the wife's death has in some cases been held sufficient.

Thus in Elliott v. North [1901] 1 Ch. 424, 70 L. J. Ch. N. S. 217, 49 Week Rep. 247, it was said not to be necessary to the validity of a testamentary disposition of property of which the wife had no power to dispose without her husband's consent, that his assent should be given during her lifetime, but that his assent given thereafter would be sufficient. But in this case the husband's assent, after the wife's death, to the grant of letters of administration with the will annexed, was held not to amount to a consent to the wife's will as disposing of property of which she had no power of disposal without his consent, for the reason that as a matter of construction the will did not include that property.

Where a statute empowers a married woman to make a valid will if the husband "give his consent thereto, expressed in writing, and indorsed thereon," the requirements of the statute are not satisfied where the husband does not indorse his consent until after the death of the wife. Smith v. Sweet, 1 Cush. 470. The court said: "It follows, then, that at the death of Mrs. Sweet, the estate descended to her heirs, in the same manner that it would have done had no will ever been written. For we are of opinion ickson to the terms of Barbara Erickson's will is null and void, and that he might, after her death, elect to take his share in her property under the statute.

1. The evidence, while far from conclusive on the point that all the three writings referred to were executed at the same time, nevertheless sufficiently sustains the findings of fact of the trial court to that effect. It appears from the evidence that the lot here involved, constituting the homestead, was conveyed to Barbara Erickson by deed dated and acknowledged October 1, 1901. The written agreement between herself and her husband was dated October 1, 1901, and the two wills, with the consents indorsed thereon, were dated October 31, 1901. On the other hand, the agreement and the wills were witnessed by the same parties, and Hans L. Erickson testified that they were all drawn and executed on the same day, and the consent of Hans L. Erickson, indorsed on his wife's will, refers to a contract releasing his interest in the property of Barbara Erickson, entered into between himself and his wife, "dated on this date." There is an apparent inconsistency between the dates and the recitals of the instruments. A mistake might well have been made in dating the agreement. The trial court was clearly justified, under the evidence, in finding that such was the fact, and that the agreement was made at the same time the wills were drawn.

2. The testimony of Hans L. Erickson that the three instruments, the contract and the two wills, were signed on the same day, was properly received. This testimony is not open to the objection that it tended to vary the terms of a written instrument.

that the assent of the husband, after the death of the wife, cannot retroact upon the will in such manner as to render it valid. A will, under this statute, is the joint act of the husband and wife, and must be performed during their joint lives. Were it otherwise, these consequences would seem to follow, viz.: There is no will, in contemplation of law, until the assent of the husband is indorsed; of course, there are no means provided by law to compel the production of the writing, for probate. In the meantime, the estate descends to her heirs, at the death of the wife, and passes, perhaps, from them into the hands of strangers, without notice. The estate is, apparently, indefeasible at the time of the descent and conveyance, and yet it is tainted with a secret vice which may destroy it; for the husband, at any time within twenty years, may assent to the will, prove it, and defeat the estate. We cannot adopt a construction of the statute from which these consequences might follow, in the absence of any explicit declaration of such intention by the legislature."

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The effect of the oral evidence tending to show that the contract dated October 1st was in fact signed October 31st was to identify it as the contract referred to in the consent indorsed on the will. This did not vary the contents or modify the agreement of the written contract.

3. A more serious objection is the one assigned to the conclusion reached by the trial court, from the facts found, that the consent of Hans L. Erickson to his wife's will is void. The consideration of this question requires a more detailed statement of the contents of the three writings.

(a) The agreement between Hans L. Erickson and Barbara Erickson in terms provides that Hans L. Erickson agrees to cause to be conveyed to his wife a described half block of land, to complete the buildings thereon, and to pay the taxes thereon. It gives to the wife all the household furniture, and provides that, in case she survives him, she shall have a life annuity of $75. He further releases all of his right of dower, homestead, and other interest in the property and estate of the wife. In consideration of the agreements and stipulations entered into by Hans L. Erickson, Barbara Erickson agrees to release all of her right of dower, homestead, and other interests in and to the property and estate of Hans L. Erickson.

(b) On the same day, as found by the trial court, Hans L. Erickson made his will, devising all his real estate to his children, subject to provisions therein contained in favor of his wife, Barbara Erickson. These provisions carried out the terms of the written agreement between himself and his wife,—that is, a life annuity of $75 was be-

In Ex parte Fane, 16 Sim. 406, where the husband proved his wife's will generally, it was held valid as to funds disposed of therein, over which she had no power of disposal without his consent.

But since the amendment of the probate practice in England, to the effect that the probate of the will of a married woman shall take the form of ordinary grants of probate, without any exception or limitation, the fact that the husband proves his wife's will in general form is held not to constitute an assent to the will as a disposition of property requiring his consent for such disposal. Re Atkinson [1899] 2 Ch. 1, 68 L. J. Ch. N. S. 404, 47 Week. Rep. 469, 80 L. T. N. S. 505.

And in Tyler v. Wheeler, 160 Mass. 206, 33 N. E. 606, where the wife's will, under which the husband took no interest, was valid in part, the fact that the husband signed a petition for his appointment as executor, and also signed a bond, was held not to amount to "the husband's written consent" required by statute.

J. T. W.

queathed her, and money set apart to complete the buildings, if not completed before his death. The wife, Barbara Erickson, indorsed thereon her consent to and acceptance of the provisions of this will.

(c) At the same time Barbara Erickson made her will devising all her real property to her daughter. Attached to this will was this acceptance, duly executed by Hans L. Erickson: "I, Hans L. Erickson, husband of Barbara Erickson, of Mower county, Minnesota, the testatrix within named, thereby consent to and accept the provisions of the within and foregoing last will and testament of the said Barbara Erickson, and in consideration of a contract heretofore entered into between myself and the said Barbara Erickson dated on this date, release all of my right to dower, homestead, and other interests in and to the property and estate of the said Barbara Erickson. Given under my hand and seal this 31st day of October, A. D. 1901."

The general plan attempted to be carried out by these writings is apparent. Prior to the marriage of Hans L. Erickson and Barbara Erickson, each had been married, and each had children by such former marriage. In addition to the home acquired in the village of Austin, the property here involved, the husband owned a farm, and the wife had some property of small value. The parties evidently desired and agreed that the title to the home should be vested in the wife, and that the property of each should descend to his or her children. In such plan there was no fraud or illegality. The only question arises as to the validity of the means adopted to carry it out. The written agreement between the husband and wife, by which each released to the other interests in real property, was void, being contrary to the statutes of the state. Rev. Laws, 1905, § 3609; Re Rausch, 35 Minn. 291, 28 N. W. 920; Phillips v. Blaker, 68 Minn. 152, 70 N. W. 1082; Betcher v. Rinehart, 106 Minn. 380, 118 N. W. 1026.

It does not follow, however, that the consent of the husband to the will of the wife, disposing of her real estate, is void, even though such consent is given in performance of the void agreement. No consideration was required to support the consent of the husband to the testamentary disposition by the wife of her real property. Such disposition is permitted by the statutes, if consented to, in writing, by the husband. The only part of the written agreement between the husband and the wife which the wife was required to perform was that she should release all right of dower, homestead, and other interest in and to the property and estate of the husband. This she did. She assented to the will of the husband, devising to his children his real property. It does not appear that this consent was ever in any way revoked by her, or that she in any way asserted any interest in his estate. Therefore, if we treat the consent of the husband to the disposition of the wife's property as conditioned upon her performance of her part of the written agreement between them, such condition was fully satisfied. The written agreement having been fully performed by the wife, the consent of the husband to the terms of her will, though such consent was conditioned upon the agreement, is valid and effectual. Such consent was never revoked. The only attempt made to revoke the same, or to renounce the terms of the will, was after the death of the wife and the admission of her will to probate. If the consent of the husband to the wife's devise of her real property was an agreement requiring a consideration to support it, then a different case would be presented. A somewhat similar situation was presented in Jorgenson v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. 64 Minn. 489, 67 N. W. 364. There a question was raised as to the validity of a deed by a husband and wife to a third party, made in pursuance of a void plan and agreement to transfer real property from the husband to the wife. The court held that, even though this agreement between husband and wife for the transfer of the property to the wife was void, nevertheless the conveyance to a third party, made in performance of such agreement, not being prohibited by the statute, was valid.

The conclusion of law of the court below not being sustained by the findings of fact, the motion of the appellant for a new trial should have been granted.

Reversed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

MATTHEW WALSH, Resp.,
v.

NEW YORK CENTRAL & HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(204 N. Y. 58, 97 N. E. 408.)

Release — settlement of action against one joint tortfeasor — effect.

1. The settlement of an action against one of two joint tortfeasors does not bar an action against the other, unless it is shown to have been made under circumstances

Note.—As to the effect of a covenant not to sue one joint tortfeasor as a release of other, see Musolf v. Duluth Edison Electric Co. 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451, and note.

As to the effect, in release of one joint which operate to discharge the other wrongdoer.

Appeal — evidence — earning capacity — indefiniteness.

2. Permitting a person injured by another's negligence to state his earning capacity so indefinitely as to leave it uncertain whether it represents the value of his services or partly the profits of his business is not reversible error if there is independent evidence as to the value of his services and the jury are instructed to allow nothing for loss or profit.

(Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray and Haight, JJ., dissent.)

(January 9, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Niagara County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injury alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alfred L. Becker, with Messrs. Hoyt & Spratt, for appellant:

The damages allowed were based on incompetent evidence.

Gombert v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 195 N. Y. 273, 133 Am. St. Rep. 794, 88 N. E. 382.

The plaintiff by settling with the Erie Railroad Company, a joint tortfeasor, released this defendant.

Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 61 L.R.A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623, 66 N. E. 133; Dahlstrom v. Gemunder, 198 N. Y. 449, 92 N. E. 106, 19 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 771; Barrett v. Third Ave. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 628; Nassoiy v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695, 42 N. E. 715; Eames v. Vacuum Brake Co. v. Prosser, 157 N. Y. 289, 51 N. E. 986; Komp v. Raymond, 175 N. Y. 102, 67 N. E. 113; Coon v. Knap, 8 N. Y. 402, 59 Am. Dec. 502; Irvine v. Millbank, 56 N. Y. 635, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 378; Knickerbacker v. Colver, 8 Cow. 111; Livingston v. Bishop, 1 Johns. 200, 3 Am. Dec. 330; Ruble v. Turner, 2 Hen. & M. 38; Bronson v. Fitzhugh, 1 Hill, 185; Cushman v. De Mallie, 46 App. Div. 379, 61 N. Y. Supp. 878.

Messrs. Dudley, Gray, & Noonan, for respondent:

The evidence upon the question of damages was entirely competent.

tortfeasor, of reservation of right as against others, see Eden v. Fletcher, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 618, and note.

As to right to show by extraneous evidence that payment of judgment against, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kronold v. New York, 186 N. Y. 40, 78 N. E. 572.

The defendant was not freed from liability because the plaintiff "settled" his suit against the Erie Railroad Company.

1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 77; Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 61 L.R.A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623, 66 N. E. 133; Daniels v. Hallock, 19 Wend. 408; Ostrom v. Greene, 161 N. Y. 353, 55 N. E. 919; 2 Enc. Ev. 164; Snow v. Chandler, 10 N. H. 92, 34 Am. Dec. 140; Line v. Nelson, 38 N. J. L. 360; Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 36 Am. Rep. 830; N. W. 518; Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271; Mitterwallner v. Supreme Lodge, 109 App. Div. 70, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1090; Komp v. Raymond, 175 N. Y. 102, 67 N. E. 113.

Werner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries, and it presents two questions upon which there has thus far been some difference of judicial opinion. The first question is whether the plaintiff should be precluded from maintaining this action because he compromised or settled another suit which he brought against the Erie Railroad Company on account of the same accident. The second question is whether the trial court made erroneous rulings in admitting evidence designed to establish the plaintiff's earning capacity prior to the casualty in which he was injured. All the other questions which have arisen in the case are either conclusively disposed of by the unanimous affirmance at the appellate division, of the judgment entered upon the verdict, or by rulings which, although reviewable in this court, present no errors which in our opinion would justify the reversal of the judgment. A brief statement of the facts will disclose the pertinence of the two questions which survive for our consideration.

On the 30th day of May, 1907, the plaintiff was injured on the tracks of the defendant at Suspension Bridge by a car belonging to the Erie Railroad Company, which was part of an Erie train that was being moved on what was known as the "Erie transfer track." There were seven of these tracks, and all were the property of the defendant. By an arrangement between the two corporations, the Erie Railroad Company used the seventh or most southerly track for the transfer of cars. To the north of all these tracks was the station of the defendant, and several hundred feet south of the tracks and running parallel therewith there was a street known as North avenue. From this street, over a rough piece of land belonging to the defendant, there were two well-defined paths which led to and across the tracks of the defendant and to its station. The physical situation in that neighborhood was such that this path was much more convenient for the local patrons of the defendant's railroad than any of the adjacent streets which afforded passage to and from its station, and the evidence submitted to the jury warranted the finding that for more than twenty years these paths had been used daily by hundreds of persons, many of whom were patrons of the defendant, and that this use was acquiesced in if not expressly authorized by the defendant. On the day of the accident the plaintiff, who was then a resident of Niagara Falls, had been in Buffalo and returned to Niagara Falls on one of the defendant's trains which arrived at some time between 10 and 11 o'clock in the evening. He alighted at the Suspension Bridge station, not on the northerly side of the train looking toward the station, but on the southerly side, which led to the stretch of seven tracks. These he proceeded to cross toward the easterly one of the two paths above described. This was blocked by an Erie train, the rear car of which was about opposite the path. The plaintiff started to walk around this car, and it was while attempting to do this that the car was suddenly shunted against him and caused the injuries of which he complains.

or consideration for release of, alleged joint tortfeasor, was not a satisfaction of claim, see Ryan v. Becker, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 330, and note; Fitzgerald v. Union Stock Yards Co. 33 L.R.A. 983, and note.

After the accident the plaintiff brought an action against the Erie Railroad company, which was later settled by the payment to the plaintiff of the sum of $7,000. Then this action was brought upon a complaint in the usual form, and in the answer thereto the defendant alleged that "the plaintiff for a good and valuable consideration equaling or exceeding in value and amount all the damage and injury suffered or alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff as set forth in the complaint, to him in hand paid by the Erie Railroad Company, released and forever discharged both said Erie Railroad Company and this defendant of and from all claims," etc., arising out of the personal injuries which are the subject of the action. At the trial the plaintiff testified, on the direct examination, that he had settled the action against the Erie Railroad Company, and had received from it at the time of the settlement the sum of $7,000. He was shown a paper which he admitted having signed, and identified it as "the paper of settlement." On the cross-examination of the plaintiff he reiterated what he had testified to concerning the settlement with the Erie Railroad Company, and also admitted that in the action against that company he had sworn to a complaint in which he had alleged "that said occurrence and injury," referring to the same occurrence and injury involved in this action, "were due solely to the carelessness and negligence of the defendant," the Erie Railroad Company. At the close of the plaintiff's case, there was a motion for a nonsuit, and at the conclusion of all the evidence a motion for a direction of a verdict against the plaintiff on the ground, inter alia, that according to the plaintiff's own evidence he had settled his case against one of the two parties who were charged as joint wrongdoers, and that this settlement was conclusive upon him in the case at bar. These motions were denied, and the exception to these rulings present the question: Did the plaintiff's compromise of his cause of action against the Erie Railroad Company operate to discharge the defendant, its joint tortfeasor?

It is elementary law that one who has been injured by the joint wrong of several parties may recover his damages against either or all; but, although there may be several suits and recoveries, there can be but one satisfaction. Livingston v. Bishop, 1 Johns. 290, 3 Am. Dec. 330; Thomas v. Rumsey, 6 Johns. 26; Barrett v. Third Ave. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 628, 635. The reason of the rule is that while there may be many perpetrators of a wrongful act, each of whom is separately liable, yet the act and its consequences are indivisible, and the injured person is, therefore, limited to a single satisfaction. The early English cases and some of the later cases in our sister states literally follow the logic of this rule to the conclusion that any kind of a settlement, release, or satisfaction, even though expressly limited to certain parties and reserving all rights as against the others, operates to discharge all who participate in the wrong. The idea underlying this rule is that the primary intention to release is the thing to be carried out, and all inconsistent reservations must be ignored as repugnant to the purpose of the release, which was to destroy the debt or obligation. It is one of those harsh, although strictly logical common-law, rules which has had to make way for the modern tendency to substitute justice for technicality wherever that is possible; for now the English courts are holding that the general words of a release, which are limited by specific reservations, are to be construed as a covenant not to sue the party to whom the instrument is given, thus effectuating the intention of the parties without affecting the joint liability. The authorities bearing upon this modern relaxation of the ancient rule were very succinctly, yet comprehensively, reviewed by Judge Haight in the case of Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 466, 81 L.R.A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623, 66 N. E. 133, 136, and the conclusion of this court was thus stated in the paragraph of the opinion in that case: "It thus appears that the decisions of this court are in accord with the English rule and in harmony with our statute in reference to joint debtors. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1942, 1944. They give force and effect to the intention of the parties to the instrument, which, we think, is more just, and the wiser and safer rule. Where the release contains no reservation, it operates to discharge all the joint tortfeasors; but, where the instrument expressly reserves the right to pursue the others, it is not technically a release, but a covenant not to sue, and they are not discharged."

As we understand the position of the appellant and of our associates who are opposed to the affirmance of this judgment, it is that the rule announced in Gilbert v. Finch has no application, because the plaintiff proved that he had "settled the action against the Erie Railroad," but did not prove that the "paper of settlement" contained any provision preserving the plaintiff's right of action against the defendant in this action. It is urged that the word "settled," as used in this connection, imports a discharge or release, which is the equivalent of a release under seal, and that, in the absence of testimony tending to qualify or limit its extent and effect, it must be presumed to mean a settlement by which the defendant is discharged. We think that no such presumption should be based upon a word which has a variety of meanings, and which, as applied to legal proceedings or disputes between men, is defined as an adjustment of differences or accounts, or as coming to an agreement. Webster's Int. Dict. It is a term which is loosely and indiscriminately used to describe all sorts of compromises as well as technical discharges and releases. In most cases its accurate meaning and legal effect can only be determined in view of the particular transaction to which it is applied. In the case at bar the plaintiff evidently used it in a colloquial sense to indicate that he had adjusted his differences with the Erie Railroad Company. He was under no obligation to make any proof on the subject of payment by any settlement with the Erie Railroad Company. These were matters of defense which it was the duty of the defendant to plead and prove. The plaintiff's general reference to the subject left the defendant's duty just where the law had placed it. To 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) defeat the plaintiff's claim the defendant was bound to prove that the former had not merely settled with the Erie Railroad Company, but that it had been done under circumstances which operated to discharge the defendant. Under the rule adopted by this court in Gilbert v. Finch, supra, this was not a case for presumption based upon an unexplained and equivocal use of a word, but for proof of facts upon which the definite assertion of a release of the defendant could be predicated.

Thus far we have proceeded upon the printed record which indicates no effort on the part of the plaintiff to offer in evidence the document which he had identified as being "the paper of settlement." To this we are now permitted to make an addendum which, we think, conclusively disposes of this question. In the course of the oral argument, the plaintiff's counsel, who pressed with the suggestion from the bench that his client should be bound by the admission that he had settled with the Erie Railroad Company, replied that he had in court the original stenographer's minutes of the trial, which showed that the so-called "paper of settlement" had been offered in evidence by him, and that it was objected to by counsel for the defendant, whereupon it had been withdrawn. Counsel for the defendant who argued this appeal consented that these minutes might be taken by the court as part of the record. These minutes fully sustain the statement of plaintiff's counsel. Thus we have a case in which the plaintiff's offer to prove by documentary evidence the exact terms of the settlement with the Erie Railroad Company was met by the objection of the defendant, which is now in court contending that, because there was no definite proof of the terms of the arrangement with the Erie Railroad Company, the plaintiff's unexplained use of the word "settled" raises against him the legal presumption that he released and discharged the defendant. We have tried to make it clear that, even without this addition to the record, there would be no warrant for the presumption that the plaintiff's use of the word "settled" imported a strict release discharging both the Erie Railroad Company and the defendant. Much less should we indulge in such a presumption in the face of proof disclosing the plaintiff's effort to place before the court the documentary evidence which would have shown precisely what the transaction was. If in these circumstances there were any ground for presumption, we think it would naturally be that the defendant would not object to evidence which would operate to end the litigation and discharge it from liability. Be that as it may, the defendant should not be permitted to profit by its objection to the very proof which it now insists should have been made, and which it could have furnished if it had chosen to do so.

It is further urged that the plaintiff's admission as to the allegation of his complaint in the action against the Erie Railroad Company, to the effect that the accident which caused the plaintiff's injuries was due solely to the negligence of the Erie Railroad Company, should now preclude a recovery against the defendant. That evidence was, of course, competent as an admission, but it was nothing more, and was not conclusive. It was an admission, moreover, which was open to the explanation that it had no reference to this defendant's connection with the accident, for it was merely the usual allegation in a complaint charging a defendant with negligence and asserting the plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. The defendant asked for no instructions to the jury relative to this feature of the trial, and we do not find any exception which presents the question.

The other question which we are called upon to consider is whether the trial court erred in receiving, over defendant's objections, evidence tending to show the plaintiff's earning capacity prior to the accident. Upon this branch of the case the record is peculiar. On his direct examination the plaintiff testified that he was in the business of selling men's furnishings in a store conducted by himself without the aid of clerks. He was asked what his services were worth in that business, and he answered, "Between $150 and $200 a month." He stated in detail his duties as a salesman, and his counsel expressly disclaimed that he was asking for the profits or returns on invested capital, and insisted that he was asking only for the value of his services. Thus the record stood when the plaintiff was cross-examined. In answer to questions put to him by defendant's counsel, he reiterated that he had been earning $150, and then he added, "I took out $150 a month. That included the profit on my goods. That included what I was making on the business." Then he was asked, "And that is why you were worth $150?" and his answer was: "No, sir. I did the buying myself and stayed there myself all the time. And it was because I was making that, that I reckoned my services worth $150." At his point the defendant's counsel asked that the testimony on that branch of the case be stricken out, and that he be permitted to further examine the witness. Having been granted this privilege, the following question was then propounded to the plaintiff: "Mr. Walsh, you say you took out $150 a month, and that is why you say your services were worth that much. Now will you state fully what your capital was there, and what your earnings were?" This was objected to. The court stated that he might answer under objection. Before the witness could answer, he was asked the further question: "Was $150 a month the entire amount of the profit you made there, or not?" This was also objected to "as not the proper method of proving the value of the man's services." The objection was overruled, the defendant's counsel excepted, and the plaintiff answered, "No, sir." He was then asked the further question: "In figuring your services worth $150 per month, do you include in that your profits on the capital invested?" Defendant's counsel interposed the same objection, which was overruled and followed by an exception. Then the witness answered, "No, sir." The difficulty with this chapter of the trial is not that there is any uncertainty or ambiguity as to the legal rule under which evidence upon this subject is either admissible or inadmissible, but that neither of the respective counsel presented the matter so sharply as to render it clear which of these two alternatives should have been invoked by the trial court. The rule is that evidence of profits of business, which are uncertain and fluctuating in character and amount, is not admissible to prove loss sustained by reason of personal injuries, but that loss of services which have a certain and definite value may be proved. Therefore, the first inquiry in each case is whether the loss sought to be recovered consists of profits which may not be proved, or earnings which may be proved. That is a question which depends upon the evidence in each instance, as is illustrated in Kronold v. New York, 186 N. Y. 40, 78 N. E. 572, where we held that a man engaged in the business of selling Swiss embroideries, with a small amount of invested capital, which was merely an incident or vehicle to the performance of services which were practically personal in their nature, could recover for loss of earnings; and in the cases of Weir v. Union R. Co. 188 N. Y. 416, 81 N. E. 168, 11 Ann. Cas. 43, and Gombert v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 195 N. Y. 273, 133 Am. St. Rep. 794, 88 N. E. 382, where the converse of the rule was applied because it appeared that the losses sought to be recovered were the uncertain and fluctuating increment of capital invested, although in each of the two latter cases the business was comparatively small. A man is not precluded from recovering for loss of earnings, simply because he is in business, but he must not be permitted to prove profits under the guise of earnings. This point is clearly illustrated in Masterton v. Mt. Vernon, 58 N. Y. 391, 396, where the plaintiff, a dealer in teas, which was a business requiring expert knowledge and skill, was permitted to prove his profits from year to year. There the rule was thus stated: "The plaintiff had the right to prove the business in which he was engaged, its extent, and the particular part transacted by him, and, if he could, the compensation usually paid to persons doing such business for others. These are circumstances the jury have a right to consider in fixing the value of his time. But they ought not to be permitted to speculate as to the uncertain profits of commercial ventures, in which the plaintiff, if uninjured, would have been engaged."
7 L.R.A.(N.S.)

It is conceded that in the case at bar the plaintiff's own evidence is not so clear as it might have been had his counsel been more closely to the line which separates earnings from profits. His own testimony upon this subject is far from satisfactory. It is so equivocal that it is difficult, if not impossible, to decide whether the loss to which he testified falls under one head or the other. And it may be added that the cross-examination did not dissipate this uncertainty. There are two answers, however, to the criticism which may be made upon this part of the evidence: (1) It was supplemented by the testimony of a competent witness, who stated very clearly what the plaintiff's earnings as earnings were worth. (2) Among the last words in the judge's charge to the jury we find this instruction: "And, if you come to the question of damages, you are not to take into consideration the profits of his retail store business." Although this last question is not free from doubt, we are of the opinion that the defendant was not prejudiced by the rulings. The remarks of counsel during the taking of evidence on this subject, and the closing admonition of the trial judge, must have made it unmistakably clear to the jury that the value of plaintiff's earnings might be included in any verdict which they should find in his favor, but that profits of his business must be excluded.

The judgment should, therefore, be affirmed, with costs.

Cullen, Ch. J., dissenting:

I dissent from the decision about to be made. It was unnecessary in this case to show that a release or any written instrument had been delivered to the Erie Railroad Company. It was sufficient to show by parol a satisfaction by that company. This could be just as well effected by an oral agreement and receipt of consideration as by any written instrument. The plaintiff testified: "I brought an action against the Erie Railroad first. I settled the action against the Erie. I received at the time I made that settlement $7,000. . . . I brought a suit against the Erie for this accident, and I say I settled with the Erie; yes, sir. . . . When I settled with them at that time, I did not understand it just as I alleged in the complaint, yet I settled with them." There is not a word of further testimony to limit the effect of this bald statement, and the question is, What does it on its face and unqualified by other evidence import? I think it imports a satisfaction of the claim. It is true that the plaintiff might have received money from the Erie Company upon an agreement that would not operate to discharge the defendant in this action, but, if that was the case, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show that such was the agreement. If the testimony or admission of a party was that he had been paid the claim in suit, it would import that he had been paid the whole claim and in a manner that would operate to discharge it. If the claim had been paid only in part or by a note, the failure to pay which revived the original claim, the claimant would be bound to state the fact. The proposition, however, seems to be settled in this state by authority. In Barrett v. Third Ave. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 628, the question was similar to that which has arisen in this case. On the submission of the case to the jury the court was requested to charge that, "if they [the jury] believed there had been a settlement with the Harlem Railroad Company for the injury claimed in this action, no matter how slight the consideration, this action could not be maintained." This court said: "The request was proper in terms, and should have been complied with, if there was any evidence of such settlement." 45 N. Y. P. 636. In Dahlstrom v. Gemunder, 198 N. Y. 449, 455, 92 N. E. 106, 108, 19 Ann. Cas. 771, which was also the case of an alleged satisfaction by one of two joint tortfeasors, Judge Hiscock, writing for the court, said: "Plaintiff further admits that the action so brought against the said Hey was settled and compromised for the sum of $1,750. . . . If the claim has been settled—that is, satisfied—there is nothing to be reserved as a basis for prosecution of another liable for the same claim,"—citing cases. That "settlement" imports satisfaction is evidenced by the use of the word in judicial opinions rendered in scores of cases in this and other states. In Nassoiy v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 331, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695, 42 N. E. 715, 716, Judge Vann said: "We think that the undisputed evidence shows conclusively that the offer was made in settlement of the claim, and that the plaintiff so understood it, when, by using the check, he accepted the offer." In Gilbert v. Finch, 173 N. Y. 455, 61 L.R.A. 807, 93 Am. St. Rep. 623, 66 N. E. 133, upon which reliance is placed in the opinion of my brother Werner, the claim was for a certain sum and the instrument itself reserved the right. This fact is emphasized in the opinion there rendered by Judge Haight, and it also appeared in many of the cases cited by him in this and other states. Irvine v. Millbank, 56 N. Y. 635; McCrillis v. Hawes, 38 Me. 566; Ellis v. Esson, 50 Wis. 138, 36 Am. Rep. 830, 6 N. W. 518; Sloan v. Herrick, 49 Vt. 327. See also Ellis v. Bitzer, 2 Ohio, 89, 15 Am. Dec. 534. In the present case the damages were unliquidated, and $5 would have amounted to a satisfaction as well as $5,000.

The real ground on which the case is to be affirmed, however, seems to be because it appears in the stenographer's minutes, though not in the printed record, that the "paper" of settlement when offered in evidence by the plaintiff was objected to by counsel for the defendant and thereupon withdrawn. The instrument is not produced before us, and we are entirely ignorant of its contents, yet we are to speculate that the contents of the instrument would have been unfavorable to the defendant and have shown that the agreement was of a character that would not discharge the defendant. In my judgment such speculation is entirely unwarranted. It would never be tolerated in the action of a jury, and much less should it be indulged in by a court of law. What was the ground of the objection to the instrument we do not know. We do know, however, that, after the objection was made by the defendant, the plaintiff voluntarily withdrew it. What is the presumption from this conduct—that the instrument was competent evidence and the defendant wrongfully kept it out, or that the plaintiff in withdrawing the offer conceded that the objection was well founded? Plainly the latter. If so, on what theory can we indulge any presumptions against the defendant for its refusal to admit incompetent evidence?

I also think the evidence offered to prove the value of the plaintiff's services was incompetent and in violation of the rule we have laid down in the cases cited by my brother Werner. What the plaintiff should have been permitted to prove, and only what he should have been allowed to prove, was the fair and reasonable salary of a man employed to do his work. This was the rule declared in Masterton v. Mt. Vernon, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

58 N. Y. 391. It is reiterated in Weir v. Union R. Co. 188 N. Y. 416, 81 N. E. 168, 11 Ann. Cas. 43, and Gombert v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 195 N. Y. 273, 133 Am. St. Rep. 794, 88 N. E. 382; to wit, "the compensation usually paid to persons doing such business for others." Taking the view of the case most favorable to the respondent, what he was allowed to do was to fix most arbitrarily what part of his income he thought due to his services. Such a rule would open the door to evidence, which in the cases referred to has been condemned. A banker in the receipt of a very large income from his business might think, and not wholly without reason, that, after allowing interest on his capital at a very liberal rate, the remainder of his income was due to his exceptional ability. This is a very different thing from "the compensation usually paid to persons doing such business for others." True, the business before us is a comparatively small affair, but the principle involved is the same in the two cases

Vann, Willard Bartlett, and Chase, JJ., concur with Werner, J. Gray and Haight, JJ., concur with Cullen, Ch. J.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

LIZZIE LOWERY et al., Appts.,

v.

MARTHA HAWKER et al., Respts.

(— N. D. —, 133 N. W. 918.)

Will — omission of children — effect.

1. The unexplained omission of children in a will does not necessarily invalidate the instrument, even though such will may be ineffectual as to such persons. Their remedy is to appear in the proceedings and de-

Headnotes by BRUCE, J.

Note. — Remedy of pretermitted heirs.

Many of the states have statutes which provide in substance either that the birth of a child to a testator after the execution of a will shall revoke it if such child is not provided for or intentionally excluded, or that such a child—and in some states any child or the issue of a deceased child—not provided for or intentionally excluded, shall take the same share of the estate as if the testator had died intestate.

While the construction and effect of such statutes has been considered in a large number of cases, in only a few of them is the character of the remedies available to pretermitted children for the assertion of the rights thus conferred upon them exmand a distribution of the estate, which, as to them, shall be uninfluenced by the provisions of the will.

Same — probate — issues.

2. On the probate of a will, the due execution and publishing of the will, the sound and disposing mind of the testator, and his freedom from duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence, and the fact as to whether the instrument is in fact his last will and testament, are the only issues before the court.

Same — effect of probate.

3. The mere probating of a will is not final and conclusive as to the validity and construction of the instrument. Such matters may be discussed and adjudicated at any time before the final distribution of the estate.

(December 7, 1911.)

pressly discussed. This note includes only those which directly pass upon the question, and does not assume to catalogue the different actions and proceedings in which such a right has been sought to be enforced. A partial catalogue of this sort may be found in the opinion in Newman v. Waterman, 63 Wis. 612, 53 Am. Rep. 310, 23 N. W. 696.

Right or duty to contest probate.

A pretermitted child cannot contest the probate of the will upon that ground, his rights being independent of the will, and not affected by it. McIntire v. McIntire, 64 N. H. 609, 15 Atl. 218; Re Gall, 5 Dem. 374.

Although the effect of the birth of a child after the execution of a will may be to render its provisions inoperative, except those relating to the appointment of an executor, the probate of the will cannot be defeated thereby. Bunce v. Bunce, 27 Abb. N. C. 61, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 332, 14 N. Y. Supp. 659.

But see dictum in Re Gall, 5 Dem. 374, to the effect that where a will is revoked by a marriage and birth of issue, the probate may be contested on that ground.

A pretermitted child whose birth subsequent to the execution of the will operates as an implied revocation thereof is not bound to resist its probate, where the probate of the will has the effect to establish only its execution and render it admissible as an instrument of evidence, but does not give validity to a title based upon it. Fallon v. Chidester, 46 Iowa, 588, 26 Am. Rep. 164. But compare Newman v. Waterman, 63 Wis. 612, 53 Am. Rep. 310, 23 N. W. 696, under heading "By writ of entry, or ejectment," infra.

Setting aside probate.

His remedy is not by a proceeding to set aside the will (Branton v. Branton, 23 Ark. 569; Schneider v. Koester, 54 Mo. 500), as the only issue that can be tendered and tried in such a proceeding is whether the writing produced is the will of the testator or not. Cox v. Cox, 101 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the District Court for Bottineau County affirming an order of the County Court admitting to probate the will of Mark Hawker, deceased, and appointing the defendant widow executrix thereof. Affirmed.

Statement by Bruce, J.:

Mark Hawker, now deceased, devised and bequeathed his entire estate to his wife and minor son, but omitted to provide in his will for his children and for the children of a deceased child by his first wife. It did not appear upon the face of the will that such omission was intentional, neither did it so appear from any of the evidence which was introduced by the widow and petitioner. Martha Hawker, when she applied to the

Mo. 168, 13 S. W. 1055. In this case the court said: "The probate of the will does not render its provisions effective, or render one or any of its provisions valid. If any such provisions are in violation of law, the law will not carry them into effect; nevertheless, the testator made them; they are his will and on probate; whether they are or not is the only question to be decided. And, in this case, the establishment of the instrument as the will of the testator in no way impairs the rights of the plaintiff as heir at law; if he has been pretermitted therein, as he claims, he can enter, defend his possession, or bring his action of ejectment, as the case may be, whenever he chooses. The probate of the will does not stand in his way on that issue. But in the very nature of things that issue cannot be tried in a proceeding designed by the law to ascertain the single fact whether a certain paper is or is not the will of the deceased."

Where a will, though rendered by statute ineffectual as to a pretermitted child, is not void, a proceeding in which it is sought to have the will annulled and any proceeding had in the courts of the administration of the estate vacated and set aside is not a proper remedy. Re Barker, 5 Wash. 390, 31 Pac. 976.

But see Hughes v. Hughes, 37 Ind. 183; Morse v. Morse, 42 Ind. 365; and Myers v. Barrow, 3 Ohio C. C. 91, 2 Ohio C. D. 52, which hold that where the birth of a child after the execution of a will making no provision therefor has the effect to revoke it, the pretermitted child or those claiming through him may proceed to have the probate revoked and the will set aside.

The effect of the probate being only to establish the proper execution of the will and to make it available as evidence, but not to establish the title conveyed by it, it is not necessary for a posthumous child, or those claiming through him, to impeach the will before maintaining an action to recover possession of the real estate. Evans v. Anderson, 15 Ohio St. 324, reversing 2 Ohio Dec. 502. But compare Newman v. Waterman, 63 Wis. 612, 53 Am. Rep. 310, county court to have said will admitted to probate. The will, among other things, provided for the appointment of the said Martha Hawker as executrix without bond. On the hearing before the county court, the appellants herein (the children and the children of a deceased child by a former wife of the said deceased), appeared in person or by counsel, and, after hearing the proof, the county court admitted the will to probate, and appointed said Martha Hawker executrix thereunder. From this order an appeal "upon questions of law alone" was taken by appellants herein to the district court of Bottineau county, and on such appeal the latter court entered a judgment or order to the effect that "it is hereby ordered that the said order of the county court of Bottineau county admitting to probate the purported will of the said decedent, Mark Hawker, and appointing Martha Hawker as executrix thereof, be, and the same is hereby, affirmed in so far as it admits said will to probate; the said will to govern in the distribution of the property and estate of the said Mark Hawker, deceased, in so far as the respondents Martha Hawker and respondent Mark Languenett Hawker, the youngest son of said Mark Hawker, deceased, are concerned, but subject to the rights of each and all of the plaintiffs herein in and to said estate as may hereafter be established by the said county court." From the latter judgment or order this appeal is taken, and the following are the principal assignments of 23 N. W. 696, under heading "By writ of entry, or ejectment," infra.

It is not necessary that the probate be revoked to enable a pretermitted child to obtain full and appropriate relief, where the estate consists of personal property only and is in the possession of the executor. Bunce v. Bunce, 27 Abb. N. C. 61, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 332, 14 N. Y. Supp. 659.

Statutory remedy as exclusive.

The remedy provided by such statutes by application to the probate court is not exclusive.

Thus in Gage v. Gage, 29 N. H. 533, it is said: "Whatever, then, may be the powers of the judge of probate to settle the contributions of devisees and legatees, in order to equalize the burden of such unexpected claims against the estate, they in no way affect either the amount of the claim of the person omitted, or his remedy for it in the case of the real estate. As to the personal estate, if he claims a part of that, he must apply to the probate court; the account of administration must be there settled, and the person omitted can claim, as he would in the case of an intestate estate, only by virtue of a decree of that court. But the heirs of real estate are not confined to their remedies in the probate court. They may apply to that court, and have their shares assigned to them. But if that is not done, they may have their remedy, at common law, against anyone who interferes with their rights."

So, also, in Bunce v. Bunce, 27 Abb. N. C. 61, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 332, 14 N. Y. Supp. 659, it is held that a pretermitted child is not relegated to the surrogate court for relief, but may maintain an action against the parties in interest to have his share paid over by the executor.

The remedy afforded by the statute of a summary proceeding for contribution, upon petition and due notice given to legatees and devisees, heirs, executors, and administrators, while appropriate in all cases, does not preclude the maintenance, under proper circumstances, of ejectment, partition, or a 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bill in equity for contribution. McCracken v. McCracken, 67 Mo. 590. Breidenstein v. Bertram, 198 Mo. 328, 95 S. W. 828.

And see also in this connection Branton v. Branton, 23 Ark. 569, and George v. Robb, 4 Ind. Terr. 61, 64 S. W. 615, under heading "By proceedings in equity," infra; also Re Barker, 5 Wash. 390, 31 Pac. 976, under heading "By intervening in administration," infra.

—as confirming remedy to pursuit of proceeds of sale made by executor or devisee.

The remedy, given against devisees by a statute providing that whenever a testator shall leave a child born after the making of the will, unprovided for and unmentioned in such will, "every such child shall succeed to the same portion of such parent's real and personal estate as would have descended or been distributed to such child if such parent had died intestate, and shall be entitled to recover the same portion from the devisees and legatees in proportion to and out of the parts devised and bequeathed to them by such will," does not operate to subject the estate of such child to a power of sale contained in the will, or to confine his remedy to a pursuit of the proceeds of the sale. He is entitled by the plain terms of the statute to recover the same portion of the corpus of the estate to which he would have been entitled to had his father died intestate. Smith v. Robertson, 89 N. Y. 555, affirming 24 Hun, 210.

A statute making a will absolutely inoperative as to an omitted child, and providing that he shall be entitled to such share and portion of the estate as if the ancestor had died intestate, and shall be entitled to recover of the devisees and legatees in proportion to the amount of their respective shares, and which vests the probate court with power to decree such distribution, and provides further that a writ of scire facias shall issue against the devisees or legatees in case they refuse to pay, but which contains nothing to indicate that it was intended to remit the child solely to the action in the probate court error: "(4) That the said county court erred in appointing Martha Hawker executrix of the purported will of said decedent, Mark Hawker; (5) that the district court erred in entering the order appealed from herein on the grounds and for the reason, among other things, that, said appeal being upon questions of law alone, said district court could only rule upon the questions of law raised and presented for decision, and should have either affirmed the order of the county court in admitting the will to probate, or reversed the same without qualification; (6) that the district court erred in not entering an order reversing the order of the county court admitting said will to probate and directing the said county court to enter an order denying probate to said will."

Messrs. Noble, Blood, & Adamson, for appellants:

At the time the court heard the evidence upon the question of whether or not the paper offered for probate as the will of decedent should be admitted to probate as such, all matters affecting the validity of the will, and the persons entitled to participate in decedent's estate, should have been heard and passed upon by the court.

against the devisees or legatees, does not preclude an omitted child or grandchild from recovering land from a purchaser of the devisees or legatees, or from purchasers under a power of sale contained in the will. Rowe v. Allison, 87 Ark. 206, 112 S. W. 395.

So, also, in Robeno v. Marlatt, 136 Pa. 35, 20 Atl. 512, it is said that to require pretermitted children to look only to the proceeds of the sale made by the devisees would be denying them that interest in their parent's estate which the statute declares they are entitled to; namely, "such purparts, shares, and dividends of the estate, real and personal, of the deceased as if he had died without any will."

That the shares of children who are not mentioned in the will of their father, and who are therefore entitled by statute to the same shares in his estate "as if he had died intestate," are not affected by a power of sale contained in the will, see also Smith v. Olmstead, 88 Cal. 582, 12 L.R.A. 46, 22 Am. St. Rep. 330, 26 Pac. 521; Northrop v. Marquam, 16 Or. 173, 18 Pac. 449; Worley v. Taylor, 21 Or. 589, 28 Am. St. Rep. 771, 28 Pac. 903.

By proceedings in equity.

The fact that the statute authorizes the probate court to decree a distribution of testator's estate in such a case does not take away the jurisdiction of a court of chancery to entertain a bill to establish the right of a pretermitted heir, it being the peculiar province of the court of chancery to afford relief when it is to be raised by contribution from different persons, or to divers persons out of a common fund. Branton v. Branton, 23 Ark. 569; George v. Robb, 4 Ind. Terr. 61, 64 S. W. 615.

He may assert his rights in an action to quiet title (Rowe v. Allison, 87 Ark. 206, 112 S. W. 395), and without first proceeding to set aside the probate of the will (Fallon v. Chidester, 46 Iowa, 588, 26 Am. Rep. 164).

By writ of entry, or ejectment.

Or he may assert his right by a writ of entry. Gage v. Gage, 29 N. H. 533.

It has been held in some cases that a 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

pretermitted heir may maintain ejectment. McCracken v. McCracken, 67 Mo. 590; Smith v. Robertson, 89 N. Y. 555.

As the omitted child takes title by descent and becomes a tenant in common with the devisees, ejectment will lie to recover its share in the real estate, if there be no pending administration. Pearson v. Pearson, 46 Cal. 609.

But in Newman v. Waterman, 63 Wis. 612, 53 Am. Rep. 310, 23 N. W. 696, it was held that a pretermitted child who, being of full age, has appeared in proceedings resulting in the judgment establishing the will, cannot maintain ejectment to recover land thereby devised, the court saying: "To allow such omitted child to take under the statutes of descent, when the testator has, by will in form, disposed of all his estate, both real and personal, and such will has been admitted to probate, so that the devisees' right to the land has become as complete at law as a conveyance to him from the testator would have been, there must necessarily be a partial or absolute revocation of both the will and the probate. If this can be done at all in a case like this, where the will has been admitted to probate,—of which we express no opinion,—it would seem that it should be done in some direct proceeding, or proceeding calling into exercise the equitable powers of the court, and not by collateral attack in an action at law to try the naked legal title." This conclusion is based on the argument that as the probate of the will is made, by the Wisconsin statute, "conclusive as to its due execution," as well in respect to real estate as personal property, and the heir having appeared in the probate proceedings, thus giving to that court complete jurisdiction, he can no longer have any standing in an action of ejectment to try the naked legal title, unless his right to do so is in some way saved by the statute; that the Wisconsin statute does not save such right, but relegates a pretermitted child to the remedies provided therein in the nature of settlements and partitions between several claimants, and assignments and distributions of the estate, notwithstanding it also secures to the claimant "a remedy by any proper action." That ejectment is not a Newman v. Waterman, 63 Wis. 612, 53 Am. Rep. 310, 23 N. W. 696; Appleby v. Watkins, 95 Minn. 455, 104 N. W. 301, 5 Ann. Cas. 471; State ex rel. Martin v. Ueland, 30 Minn. 277, 15 N. W. 245; State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233, 81 Am. Dec. 118; Castro v. Richardson, 18 Cal. 478; Steele v. Renn, 50 Tex. 467, 32 Am. Rep. 605; Foulke v. Zimmerman, 14 Wall. 113, 20 L. ed. 785.

The decree admitting a will to probate confirms the title in the devisee, which title immediately assumes the dignity and validity of a conveyance from the testator, where proper action under any circumstances is denied by the court, which distinguishes cases in which a pretermitted child has been allowed to maintain an action of ejectment, upon the ground of differences in the statutes of the states in which such decisions were made.

As to when ejectment is not a proper remedy, see Hill v. Martin, 28 Mo. 78, under heading "By proceeding for partition," infra.

By proceeding for partition.

In some instances it has been held that a pretermitted heir may assert his right by instituting an action for partition (Breidenstein v. Bertram, 198 Mo. 328, 95 S. W. 828; Gage v. Gage, 29 N. H. 533); or he may come in as a defendant and claim his rights in a partition suit instituted by the devisees under the will (Thomas v. Black, 113 Mo. 66, 20 S. W. 657).

But where there are equities to be adjusted between the parties, as where some of the children are omitted and others are not, and the statutes provide that an omitted child shall be accountable for advancements made by the testator in his lifetime, partition or ejectment is not a proper remedy; but the child should resort to the proceeding provided by the statute to obtain contribution from the devisees. Hill v. Martin, 28 Mo. 78.

As to the right to this remedy in the state of Washington, see Re Barker, 5 Wash. 390, 31 Pac. 976, under heading "By intervening in administration," infra.

By intervening in administration.

In the state of Washington it is held that the remedy of the pretermitted child is simply to move the court to proceed with the administration of the parent's estate, and as a part of such administration to decree and set over to the child the portion to which the child would have been entitled if the parent had died intestate, the court saying: "Under the rules established in the courts of many of the states it would not be necessary for her to go into the probate court at all, as she could, by a direct proceeding for partition, assert her rights as tenant in common with others who 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the probate court has authority to construe the will.

Spofford v. Smith, 59 N. H. 366; State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233, 81 Am. Dec. 118; Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65; Redmond v. Collins, 15 N. C. (4 Dev. L.) 430, 27 Am. Dec. 208; Deslonde v. Darrington, 29 Ala. 92; Anderson v. Green, 46 Ga. 361; Steele v. Renn, 50 Tex. 467, 32 Am. Rep. 605; Hall v. Cogswell, 183 Mass. 521, 67 N. E. 644.

The fact of the omission by a testator to provide in his will for any of his children or for the issue of any deceased child raises were entitled to any interest in the estate of her said mother. But in this state it has been held that, as a general rule, an heir cannot assert her rights to the property of her ancestor, excepting in pursuance of a proper decree of distribution of the probate court in which such estate is entitled to be administered. Hence it follows that here the proper relief to be sought by the petitioner is to so move the proper probate jurisdiction that a speedy termination of the administration of her mother's estate may be had, and the proper decree of distribution rendered therein." Re Barker, 5 Wash. 390, 31 Pac. 976.

By action on executor's bond.

A posthumous child unprovided for by its parent's will is not remitted to an action against the legatee to whom the executor has delivered the bequeathed property before the birth of the child, but may maintain an action on the executor's bond for its share of the estate. Waterman v. Hawkins, 63 Me. 156.

Miscellaneous.

A pretermitted child may recover from each devisee, or from the purchasers under a devisee, the portion which such devisee is bound to contribute, without making other devisees parties. Haskins v. Spiller, 1 Dana, 170.

Where lands have been sold for the payment of debts, the personal estate being insufficient for the purpose, a pretermitted child cannot recover against a purchaser under the executors, without paying or tendering his proportional part of the deficiency of the personal estate. Kolb v. Komp, 3 Yeates, 164.

A statutory provision that a pretermitted child "may recover the proportion of the estate to which it would be entitled, from the devisees and legatees in proportion to and out of the part devised and bequeathed to them by such will," does not mean that a suit cannot be brought until after the estate is distributed, and that no right of action accrues until such distribution has been made. Bunce v. Bunce, 27 Abb. N. C. 61, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 332, 14 N. Y. Supp. 659.

E. S. O.

a prima facie presumption that such issue were not intentionally omitted.

Parsons v. Balson, 129 Wis. 311, 109 N. W. 136; Schultz v. Schultz, — N. D. —, 125 N. W. 555.

Messrs. Bowen & Adams, for respondents:

The probate of a will consists only in proving its due execution and attestation and the disposing mind of the testator. The proceedings for probate involve simply the making of a will.

Re Cobb, 49 Cal. 600; Re Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, 77 Pac. 825; Re Barker, 5 Wash. 390, 131 Pac. 976; Cox v. Cox, 101 Mo. 168, 13 S. W. 1055; Re Murray, 141 N. C. 588, 54 S. E. 435; Ainsworth v. Briggs, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 108 S. W. 753; Re Lamb, 122 Mich. 239, 80 N. W. 1081; Mears v. Mears, 15 Ohio St. 90; Woodruff v. Hundley, 127 Ala. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 145, 29 So. 98; Montrose v. Byrne, 24 Wash. 288, 64 Pac. 534; Bliss v. Macomb Probate Judge, 129 Mich. 127, 88 N. W. 390; Niemand v. Seemann, 136 Iowa, 713, 114 N. W. 48; Lindemann v. Dobossy, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 111; Clearspring Twp. v. Blough, 173 Ind. 15, 88 N. E. 511, 89 N. E. 369; Re Noyes, 40 Mont. 178, 105 Pac. 1013; Re Hobbins, 41 Mont. 39, 108 Pac. 7; Taylor v. Hilton, 23 Okla. 354, 100 Pac. 537, 18 Ann. Cas. 385; Brown v. Brown, 71 Neb. 200, 115 Am. St. Rep. 568, 98 N. W. 718, 8 Ann. Cas. 632.

A will is not invalid because of its omission to mention children of the testator, and such omission furnishes no ground for objecting to the probate of the will.

Brown v. Brown, 71 Neb. 200, 115 Am. St. Rep. 568, 98 N. W. 718, 8 Ann. Cas. 632; Doane v. Lake, 32 Me. 268, 52 Am. Dec. 654; Schneider v. Koester, 54 Mo. 500; Pearson v. Pearson, 46 Cal. 609; Appleby v. Watkins, 95 Minn. 455, 104 N. W. 301, 5 Ann. Cas. 471; Hedderich v. Hedderich, 18 N. D. 488, 123 N. W. 276; Schultz v. Schultz, — N. D. —, 125 N. W. 555.

Bruce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants maintain that on an appeal upon questions of law alone the district court is a court of appellate jurisdiction merely, and that, although the said court has the power to reverse or affirm the judgments of the county court, it has no power to change or to modify them. They also maintain that because the respondents at the time of the hearing of the petition to probate the will failed to offer proof to overcome the statutory presumption raised by § 5119, Rev. Code 1905, that the omitted children were unintentionally omitted, the county court should have refused the probate of the will. They also assume that the unexplained omission of children by the testator from his will renders such will utterly invalid, and that the appellants and all of the heirs of the said deceased were entitled to share in his estate in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had died intestate. The respondents, on the other hand, maintain that at the hearing of the petition to probate the will evidence to overcome the statutory presumption raised by § 5119, Rev. Code. 1905, would have been immaterial, and that the only questions at issue were the due execution of the will, the sanity of the testator, and his freedom from duress, menace, or fraud and undue influence. They further maintain that the testator's omission of the children from his will does not render the will invalid, but merely raises the question whether such omission was or was not intentional; the statutory presumption being that said omission was not intentional. They maintain that, since appellants were duly cited to appear and show cause why the petition for the probate of said will should not have been granted, the finding of the county court and the admitting of the will to probate was final upon this point, although it is admitted that the proponents of the will failed to introduce testimony tending to show that said omission was intentional, or that any share or shares of the appellants, or any of them, had been advanced to them. The questions, then, for determination by this court, appear to be: Was the order of the county court erroneous, which admitted the will to probate and appointed Martha Hawker executrix thereunder, for the reason that there was no evidence before the said county court to overcome the statutory presumption raised by § 5119, Rev. Code 1905? Was the hearing on the petition to probate the will the proper and only time and place for the proponents of the will to offer such testimony, or should they, or could they, have waited until the hearing of the petition for final distribution, or until the filing or hearing of a petition filed before that time by some or all of the appellants, asking that they be allowed to share in the testator's estate?

We are of the opinion that the probating of a will is not final as to the validity and construction of the instrument, and that such matters may be discussed and adjudicated within a year from the probating of the will (§8014, Rev. Code. 1905), or, in fact, at any time before the final distribution, as was done in the case of Schultz v. Schultz, — N. D. —, 125 N. W. 555. A will is a will, even though it merely provides for the appointment of an executor. Bunce v.

Bunce, 27 Abb. N. C. 61, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 332, 14 N. Y. Supp. 659; Schneider v. Koester, 54 Mo. 500; Doane v. Lake, 32 Me. 268, 52 Am. Dec. 654; Trotter v. Trotter, 31 Ark. 145; Branton v. Branton, 23 Ark. 569; Re Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, 77 Pac. 325; Cox v. Cox, 101 Mo. 168, 13 S. W. 1055; Re Murray, 141 N. C. 588, 54 S. E. 435; Ainsworth v. Briggs, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 108 S. W. 753; Re Lamb, 122 Mich. 239, 80 N. W. 1081; Mears v. Mears, 15 Ohio St. 90; Woodruff v. Hundley, 127 Ala. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 145, 29 So. 98; Montrose v. Byrne, 24 Wash. 288, 64 Pac. 534; Bliss v. Macomb Probate Judge, 129 Mich. 127, 88 N. W. 390; Lindemann v. Dobossy, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 111; Clearspring Twp. v. Blough, 173 Ind. 15, 88 N. E. 511, 89 N. E. 369; Re Hobbins, 41 Mont. 39, 108 Pac. 7. Section 5119, Rev. Code 1905, upon which appellants rely, merely provides that "children omitted succeed as in intestacy. When any testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children, or for the issue of any deceased child, unless it appears that such omission was intentional, such child or the issue of such child must have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate, and succeeds thereto as provided in the preceding section." In construing this statute, this court, in the case of Schultz v. Schultz, supra, held that "the fact that the lawful issue of a testator is omitted from his will merely raises a prima facie presumption that such issue was not intentionally omitted, and such presumption is rebuttable by extrinsic proof;" and, although in that case the court did not directly pass upon the question before us, it everywhere took the position that a will is a will whether children are omitted or not. The same is true of Hedderich v. Hedderich, 18 N. D. 488, 123 N. W. 276. See also Brown v. Brown, 71 Neb. 200, 115 Am. St. Rep. 568, 98 N. W. 718, 8 Ann. Cas. 632; Doane v. Lake, 32 Me. 268, 52 Am. Dec. 654; Schneider v. Koester, 54 Mo. 500; Pearson v. Pearson, 46 Cal. 609. In Brown v. Brown, 71 Neb. 200, 115 Am. St. Rep. 568, 98 N. W. 718, 8 Ann. Cas. 632, the only particular in which the Nebraska statute differed from our own was on the question of the burden of proof. It provided that "when any testator shall omit to provide in his will for any of his children or for the issue of any deceased child, and it shall appear that such omission was not intentional, but was made by mistake or accident, such child or the issue of such child shall have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate." In it, after the probating of the will, and after the final report of the administrator had been filed, the omitted children were allowed to file a petition in the county court, and to assert their rights. It has, in fact, been held in more than one case that this is practically the only mode of procedure, and that an omitted child cannot appear and contest the probating of a will on the ground of his omission, as his rights are independent of the will, and are not affected by it, and we so hold. See McIntire v. McIntire, 64 N. H. 609, 15 Atl. 218.

The question has been thoroughly discussed in Washington, where the county courts, like ours, have the power not merely to probate, but to construe and to pass upon the validity of, wills. "This question," the court said in Re Barker, 5 Wash. 390, 31 Pac. 976, "has received much discussion in the courts, and under the various statutes of the different states the courts have held differently as to what was such naming of or providing for children as would prevent their avoiding the will. This court has lately considered the question, and has come to the conclusion that under our statute (§ 1465, Gen. Stat.) there must be some substantial provision for the children of which they can legally avail themselves, or else there must be an actual naming of such children in the will, or the same will be ineffectual as against such children. See Bower v. Bower, 5 Wash. 225, 31 Pac. 508. We are satisfied with the conclusion to which we arrived in that case, and it is conclusive upon the question under consideration. It follows that the will was ineffectual as against the petitioner. Such being the fact, what was her remedy? In our opinion it was simply to move the court to proceed with the administration of the estate of her mother, and, as a part of such administration, to decree and set over to her the proportion to which she would have been entitled if her mother had died intestate. Under the rules established in the courts of many of the states, it would not be necessary for her to go into the probate court at all, as she could, by a direct proceeding for partition, assert her rights as tenant in common with others who were entitled to any interest in the estate of her said mother. But in this state it has been held that as a general rule an heir cannot assert her rights to the property of her ancestor excepting in pursuance of a proper decree of distribution of the probate court in which such estate is entitled to be administered. Hence it follows that here the proper relief to be sought by the petitioner is to so move the proper probate jurisdiction, that a speedy termination of the administration of her mother's estate may be had, and the proper decree of distribution rendered therein. . . . The will, though ineffectual as to her, was not void; hence the administration of the estate had been properly set on foot by the probating of said will, and should continue until the estate is finally closed. The only effect that the failure to name the children in said will could have upon the proceedings would be to compel a determination thereof without regard to any extension provided for by the terms of the will, and a distribution that, as to them, should be uninfluenced by any of the provisions thereof." The statute of Washington is even stronger than our own. It provides: "If any person make his last will and die, leaving a child or children or descendants of such child or children in case of their death, not named or provided for in such will, although born after the making of such will or the death of the testator, every such testator, so far as he shall regard such child or children or their descendants not provided for, shall be deemed to die intestate, and such child or children or their descendants shall be entitled to such proportion of the estate of the testator, real and personal, as if he had died intestate, and the same shall be assigned to them, and all the other heirs, devisees, and legatees shall refund their proportional part." See also Bunce v. Bunce, 27 Abb. N. C. 61, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 332, 14 N. Y. Supp. 659; Branton v. Branton, 23 Ark. 569; Trotter v. Trotter, 31 Ark. 145.

If there were, at any time, any doubt upon the subject, it would seem to have been absolutely removed by § 5120, Rev. Code 1905, which reads as follows: "When any share of the estate of a testator is assigned to a child born after the making of a will, or to a child or the issue of a child omitted in a will as hereinbefore mentioned, the same must first be taken from the estate not disposed of by the will, if any; if that is not sufficient, so much as may be necessary must be taken from all the devisees or legatees in proportion to the value they may respectively receive under the will, unless the obvious intention of the testator in relation to some specific devise or bequest or other provision in the will would thereby be defeated. In such case, such specific devise, legacy, or provision may be exempted from such apportionment, and a different apportionment consistent with the intention of the testator may be adopted." As is well said by counsel for respondent, this section assumes that there is a will, and that this will is valid. If there were no will, there would be no necessity for either §§ 5119 or 5120. All of the heirs of the deceased would inherit in accordance with the statutes of distribution set out in chapter 42 of the Civil Code. There being a will, and this will coming under the provisions of § 5119, the estate must be distributed in accordance with it, as construed according to §§ 5119 and 5120.

The appellants cite Newman v. Waterman, 63 Wis. 612, 53 Am. Rep. 310, 23 N. W. 696, as supporting their contention, but in that case the court expressly refused to consider the question now before us; and in the subsequent cases of Moon v. Evans, 69 Wis. 667, 35 N. W. 20, and Sandon v. Sandon, 123 Wis. 603, 101 N. W. 1089, it allowed pretermitted children to petition the probate court for their shares of the decedents' estate, after the respective wills had been admitted to probate. Even the dictum of the case of Newman v. Waterman does not go further than to hold that the attack upon the title of the devisees to the property should be made in the probate, and not in the circuit, court. See note to Brown v. Brown, 115 Am. St. Rep. 568, 580.

We are of the opinion that the order of the district court was substantially correct, and that it should be affirmed. It did not as a matter of fact modify or change in any manner the order of the county court from which the first appeal was taken. It merely construed that order and gave to it the meaning which, irrespective of such modification or construction, the law would have implied and would have given to it.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Goss, J., being disqualified, did not participate. Hon. Chas. A. Pollock, Judge of the Third Judicial District, sat in his place.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH GIACONI, Resp't.,

v.

CITY OF ASTORIA, Appt.

(— Or. —, 113 Pac. 855.)

Municipal corporation — liability for injury to highway improvement — defective plans.

1. Where, by statute, municipal corporations are liable for injury to private prop-

Note. — Municipal liability for defective plan of street construction as distinguished from other defects.

This note supplements the one on the same question in 67 L.R.A. 253.

It has been stated rather generally in some instances that, while the city may be held liable for injuries resulting from the erty through their acts or omissions as public corporations, a city if found negligent is liable for injury to private property by the sliding thereon of soft earth because of an attempt by it to bring a highway to grade, by dumping earth upon the unstable foundation at the sloping bottom of a gulch crossing it, although it committed the preparation of the plans which were adopted and followed to a competent engineer, if he made no inspection to ascertain the actual conditions before preparing his plans; and it is immaterial that the property injured is not adjacent to the street.

Trial — negligence of municipal corporation — question of fact.

2. The question of the negligence of a municipality which, in attempting to bring a street to grade, dumps earth upon the unstable sloping bottom of a gulch crossing it, so as to force the soft mud onto private land to its injury, is one of fact.

Municipal corporation — measure of care in street improvement.

3. A municipal corporation in executing plans for a street improvement must observe such care to avoid injury to private property as a reasonably careful and prudent man in like circumstances would use if the responsibility for damages rested upon him.

Master — independent contractor — injurious plan.

4. A municipality cannot, by letting the execution of the work to an independent contractor, escape liability for injury to private property by soft earth forced thereon, by attempting to bring a street to grade by dumping earth onto the unstable, sloping bottom of a gulch which crossed the street.

Adjoining landowners — lateral support — overloading parcel.

5. That different parcels of land owe to each other the duty of lateral support when in their natural condition does not require the owner of one to furnish such support for the other, when its owner attempts to construct upon it an embankment of earth for beyond its capacity to withstand.

(Moore, J., dissents.)

(October 10, 1911.)

negligent execution of a plan for street improvement, it cannot be held liable if the injury results from a danger inherent in the plan adopted. Hays v. Columbia, 159 Mo. App. 431, 141 S. W. 3, citing with approval a dictum in Gallagher v. Tipton, 133 Mo. App. 557, 113 S. W. 674.

In Kemp v. Des Moines, 125 Iowa, 640, 101 N. W. 474, involving a suit by an abutting owner to enjoin the city from lowering the grade of the street, the court declared that it could not consider whether the determination of the city to grade any particular street is reasonable or unreasonable, although it does have the power to say that the city must take reasonable care to do the work so ordered, in a manner to avoid unnecessary injuries to private property; but it was intimated that where the proposed change of grade is manifestly unreasonable or unnecessarily destructive of the abutter's property, the court should enjoin the execution of the plan.

Certainly, where there is no negligence and the plan adopted is merely an error of judgment, the city cannot be held responsible. Kelsey v. New York, 123 App. Div. 381, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1089.

The Illinois appellate court is inclined to the view that it is only where the improvement conforming to the plan is so manifestly dangerous and unsafe that the court can say as a matter of law that it is unsafe, that the city can be held responsible for injuries. Healy v. Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 183.

So, in Breckman v. Covington, 143 Ky. 444, 136 S. W. 865, essentially holding that the city can be held liable for personal injuries upon its sidewalks by reason of a defective plan, where and only where the plan was obviously dangerous, the court upheld the action of the trial court in directing a verdict for the defendant upon the ground that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the plan of the construction was dangerous and unsafe.

And in Morris v. Salt Lake City, 35 Utah, 474, 101 Pac. 373, involving an action for the destruction of shade trees by cutting the roots in laying a sidewalk, and quoting extensively from Kemp v. Des Moines, supra, the court subscribes to the doctrine that the law authorizes the city authorities to exercise their own judgment in establishing sidewalk grades and in formulating plans for such an improvement, and that although the city may be responsible for damages resulting from the negligent execution of the plans, irrespective of whether or not the plans are proper, it cannot be held responsible for the results of a defective plan, unless it appears that the plan was conceived in bad faith, or that it was oppressive or so clearly unreasonable as to inflict needless injury.

Generally as to the right of a municipality to cut or trim trees within limits of highway, see notes to Roenthal v. Goldsboro, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 809, and Lagrange v. Overstreet, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 951.

Where, in planning a viaduct over a railroad, the city enlists the services of experts in the work who have all the knowledge and skill that experience in such work naturally gives them, and the work has been carried on and completed as planned and specified, the city should not be held liable for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from a defect, unless the structure was so manifestly dangerous that all reasonable minds must agree that it was unsafe. Watters v. Omaha, 76 Neb. 855, 107 N. W. 1007, 110 N. W. 981, 14 Ann. Cas. 750.

The location of catch-basins in the street

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clatsop County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to his property alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence in the construction of a public work. Affirmed.

The former opinion in this case, which was decided March 7, 1911, is no longer of any importance by reason of the action of the court in setting it aside.

Statement by Burnett, J.:

This is an action at law brought to recover damages for the injury alleged to have been caused to the plaintiff's real property by the negligence of the defendant in grading a street within the municipal boundaries. The answer pleaded the general issue, and alleged affirmatively that the work was done by the city in a careful manner, through the agency of its contractor, and that what happened was the result of a pure accident, without fault or negligence on the part of the defendant. This new matter was in turn traversed by the reply. By consent of the parties, the cause was tried before the court without a jury. The substance of the findings of fact returned by the court is here given:

The defendant is a municipal corpora-and the materials with which they are covered are matters for the sound discretion of the city authorities, and when they adopt a plan for the construction of such basins which is not inherently dangerous, and maintain them in a reasonably safe condition for travel, they have discharged their duty to the traveling public. McCourt v. Covington, 143 Ky. 484, 136 S. W. 910.

It is held that a city cannot be held responsible for defects in a Building Code adopted by its board of aldermen. McGuinness v. Allison Realty Co. 46 Misc. 8, 93 N. Y. Supp. 267, affirmed without opinion in 111 App. Div. 926, 97 N. Y. Supp. 1141. This action was brought for personal injuries resulting from the collapse of a building in the course of construction, and the city was sought to be made a party defendant upon the ground that its Building Code was defective, and it was pointed out that the aldermen acted in their capacity as legislators, and that since the city had no direct supervisory or mandatory control over the conduct of the board of aldermen, the city could not, where the Code was inadequate, make it adequate through any of its administrative officers.

This note does not include the cases of injuries to abutting property, resulting from the mere fact of change of the street grade; and it should be noted that the cases of pollution of water and other damage resulting from defective or improper sewer system are also excluded.

Generally as to damage to abutting own-
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tion, having power to improve and repair streets within its boundaries. Irving avenue has been and at all the times mentioned was a duly dedicated street, accepted by the defendant as such, but has never been improved. It runs practically east and west through that portion of the city laid out by John M. Shively, and generally known as "Shively's Astoria." North of Irving avenue, parallel therewith and divided therefrom and from each other by tiers of city blocks, are Grand avenue and Franklin avenue, in the order named. Crossing Irving avenue, and running practically north and south, and parallel with each other and divided by tiers of blocks, are Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets, both of which lie on a steep and precipitous hillside, between which, and including a portion of each, was a gulch or canyon, from which water flowed in perennial springs, and in which the earth was soft, swampy, and unstable, of all which the defendant city had at all times notice and knowledge.

Plaintiff owned real property lying in the second tier of blocks northerly from that part of Irving avenue included between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets, and had and maintained thereon, prior to the occurrences described in the pleadings, three dwellings. All that part of Irving avenue er by first grading and improvement of street, see the note in 23 L.R.A. 658. And as to the liability of a municipality for injury to abutting property from changing the grade of a street, under a constitutional provision against "damaging" private property for public use without compensation, see the note in 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1194, and other notes there referred to.

As to liability of municipal corporation for nuisance caused by change of highway grade under legislative authority, see the note in 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 129.

As to liability of railroad companies to abutting owner for damages from change of grade of highway necessary to carry it across track, see the note in 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 226.

As to liability of municipal corporation for damming back surface water by grading of street, see the note in 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 126.

As to liability of municipal corporation for injury to lateral support in making street improvements, see the note in 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 696.

As to the duty of abutting owner to preserve lateral support to highway, see the note in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 287.

As to the liability of municipal corporations for injuries inflicted by the negligence of employees while engaged in the repair or construction of highways, see the notes in 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1090, and 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1161.

L. A. W.

included in and lying east of Eighteenth street was wholly unimproved, and was in a state of nature. Except that portion included in the gulch, already mentioned, the same lay on the steep, precipitous hillside, at an elevation of about 180 feet above plaintiff's real property. The part in the gulch was about 50 feet in depth below the ordinary elevation of ground surrounding it, and was fully 35 feet below the established grade of the avenue in question. The gulch was about 250 feet in width, its surface being comparatively level east and west, but sloped to Grand avenue, a distance of about 300 feet, where it met an abrupt descent of about 15 feet to the level of plaintiff's property. By reason of the fact that the soil in the gulch was of such unstable character, and by reason of the steep slope thereof, it was incapable of sustaining any weight, and was wholly insufficient as a foundation for the fill for Irving avenue, and it was wholly unsafe to attempt to fill in that avenue at that place. An examination of the same would have disclosed to any careful and prudent person that those grounds were thus insufficient, and that an attempt to make a fill in the gulch, to bring the same up to the established grade of the street, would cause it to sink and slide, and force and drive the soft soil down upon the blocks in which plaintiff's real property was situated. The defendant, however, did not make any examination of the land whatever, but adopted and passed a resolution declaring its intention to improve Irving avenue by grading the same, to full width of the avenue, to the established grade, and directed the city surveyor to prepare plans and specifications for the construction of the improvement in accordance therewith. Pursuant to said resolution, the city surveyor, without making any examination of the ground whatever, and without any request on the part of the defendant that he should make an examination, prepared and filed such plans and specifications for the proposed improvement, by which it was provided that the gulch between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets should be filled with earth to the established grade of Irving avenue at said point, and to the full width thereof, requiring a fill in said gulch of 35 feet in height by 50 feet in width and about 250 feet in length, which plans and specifications were adopted by the city. The defendant did not provide for taking care of or confining any of the waters in the soft and swampy ground in the gulch, and made no provision for draining the same, but simply required the fill to be placed on top of the unstable, soft soil already mentioned, without providing any foundation for the fill, or any means to prevent it from sliding down the hillside.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

On September 6, 1907, the city duly adopted and passed an ordinance to improve Irving avenue, but the ordinance did not provide any plan for the improvement, or any part thereof, other than it required that portion of the avenue to be improved by grading the same to its full width and to the established grade by filling in earth in the fill to the full width of the street, to bring the same to the established grade, and required the work to be done in accordance with the plans and specifications theretofore made by the city surveyor and mentioned above. The ordinance further provided that the improvement should be let to the lowest bidder, as by the law required, and that the work should be done under the supervision, direction, and control of said defendant, and in accordance with the plans and specifications made by the city surveyor. The city subsequently entered into a contract with one W. A. Goodin to make the improvements, and the terms of the contract required Goodin to make said fill between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets as aforesaid, but under the control and direction of the defendant. On October 10, 1907, the contractor entered upon and proceeded to make the improvement, and in accordance therewith, and under the direction of the defendant, placed on top of the soft soil in the gulch, for the purpose of permitting the water back and south of the fill to discharge itself through the fill and gulch, a small wooden box or flume, and a small, thin sheet-iron pipe, and then carelessly and negligently placed on top of the soil, without providing any foundation therefor or either thereof, a large amount of dirt and earth, all of which was done in accordance with the plans and specifications and under the direction of the defendant. Immediately upon this dirt and earth being placed on the soft soil and on top of the box flume and iron pipe, the same, together with the earth and clay, were forced down into the soft soil, and the box flume and iron pipe became wholly destroyed, of all of which the defendant had full notice and knowledge, but nevertheless continued, under the protest and objection of the plaintiff, to place thereon additional dirt, and thereupon the soft soil was forced from beneath the fill, and the ground, together with said fill, moved down upon the property of the plaintiff, doing great damage to him, of all of which the defendant had full knowledge and notice; but nevertheless the defendant thereafter, and after the dirt which had been placed in the fill had been forced down upon the property, still continued to place thereon additional dirt amounting to many thousands of yards, whereby the buildings of plaintiff were forced from their foundations and smashed and broken, and his real property was covered by dirt and other débris, to the great damage and injury of the plaintiff. In order to prevent the total destruction of his buildings, the plaintiff was required to and did remove from said premises a large quantity of earth and other débris, and was compelled to and did incur large expense for the repairs of his buildings. The court found that the conduct of the defendant was negligent, and assessed damages for the plaintiff in the sum of $975. Afterwards, at the request of the defendant, the court made additional findings to the effect that the city surveyor mentioned was at all times stated in the complaint, and long prior thereto had been, a competent and skilful engineer, with many years' experience in devising plans for improvements for municipal purposes, and that the plaintiff's property, described in his complaint herein, at no place or point abuts on Irving avenue, or is less than 350 feet distant from that avenue. On these findings the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

Messrs. A. W. Norblad and J. F. Hamilton, for appellant:

Municipal corporations exercising a power under a valid authority of the state to open, grade, and close streets are not liable at common law for the consequential damages which almost unavoidably ensue to the owners of the adjacent property from such undertakings. They are only responsible for a failure to exercise reasonable care and skill in the execution of the powers granted.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 283; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 987; Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. 418; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 544; Smith v. Washington, 20 How. 135, 15 L. ed. 858; Gross v. Lampasas, 74 Tex. 195, 11 S. W. 1086; 28 Cyc. 1078; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; Champion v. Crandon, 84 Wis. 405, 19 L.R.A. 856, 54 N. W. 777; Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 56 Am. Rep. 109, 6 Pac. 317.

The contractor is alone responsible to third persons for the negligence of himself and for that of his servant or subcontractor in the execution of a public work.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 298; Road Dist. No. 4 v. Pelton, 129 Mich. 31, 87 N. W. 1029; Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 570, 35 N. E. 101; Whitson v. Ames, 68 Minn. 23, 70 N. W. 793; Rait v. New England Furniture & Carpet Co. 66 Minn. 76, 68 N. W. 729; Dane v. Cochrane Chemical Co. 164 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mass. 453, 41 N. E. 678; Berg v. Parsons, 156 N. Y. 109, 41 L.R.A. 391, 66 Am. St. Rep. 542, 50 N. E. 957; Miller v. Merritt, 211 Pa. 127, 60 Atl. 508; Hackett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. 822; City & Suburban R. Co. v. Moores, 80 Md. 348, 45 Am. St. Rep. 345, 30 Atl. 643; Heidenwag v. Philadelphia, 168 Pa. 72, 31 Atl. 1063; Strauss v. Louisville, 108 Ky. 155, 55 S. W. 1075; Eby v. Lebanon County, 166 Pa. 632, 31 Atl. 332; Stephensville, N. & S. T. R. Co. v. Couch, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 336, 121 S. W. 189; Missouri Valley Bridge & I. Co. v. Ballard, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 110, 116 S. W. 93; Aldritt v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. 85 Minn. 206, 88 N. W. 741; Roemer v. Striker, 142 N. Y. 134, 36 N. E. 808; Bloomington v. Wilson, 14 Ind. App. 476, 43 N. E. 37.

Messrs. C. W. Fulton and G. C. Fulton, for respondent:

A municipality, in the construction of public works, is bound to exercise the same caution and prudence as a discreet and cautious individual would if the whole loss and risk were to be his own.

Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 554, 13 Pac. 729; Perry v. Worcester, 6 Gray, 544, 66 Am. Dec. 431; Leavenworth v. Casey, McCahon (Kan.) 124; New York v. Bailey, 2 Denio, 433; Rochester White Lead Co. v. Rochester, 3 N. Y. 463, 53 Am. Dec. 316; Kavanagh v. Brooklyn, 38 Barb. 232; Bunker v. Hudson, 122 Wis. 43, 99 N. W. 448; Elliott, Streets, § 483; Keating v. Cincinnati, 38 Ohio St. 141, 43 Am. Rep. 421; King v. Kansas City, 58 Kan. 334, 49 Pac. 88; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Tate v. St. Paul, 56 Minn. 527, 45 Am. St. Rep. 501, 58 N. W. 158; 5 Thomp. Neg. 1901, § 5912; Province v. Seattle, 59 Wash. 681, 110 Pac. 619; Davis v. Silverton, 47 Or. 177, 82 Pac. 16.

If it becomes apparent during the progress of the work that the plan adopted is defective, the city will be guilty of negligence if it pursues the same.

Elliott, Streets, 2d ed. §§ 473, 474; Keating v. Cincinnati, 38 Ohio St. 141, 43 Am. Rep. 421; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1149; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 143, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Tate v. St. Paul, 56 Minn. 527, 45 Am. St. Rep. 501, 58 N. W. 158.

A municipality is not liable for errors in judgment in devising a plan for a public work, but is liable where the lack of care and skill in devising the plan is so great as to constitute negligence.

Elliott, Streets, §§ 474, 495; North Vernon v. Voegler, 103 Ind. 314, 2 N. E. 821; Gould v. Topeka, 32 Kan. 485, 49 Am. Rep. 496, 4 Pac. 822; Powers v. Council Bluffs, 50 Iowa, 197; Blyhl v. Waterville, 57 Minn.

15, 47 Am. St. Rep. 596, 58 N. W. 817; Donlon v. St. Paul, 70 Minn. 216, 72 N. W. 1073; Seaman v. Marshall, 116 Mich. 327, 4 N. W. 484; Boston Belting Co. v. Boston, 49 Mass. 44, 20 N. E. 320; King v. Kansas City, 58 Kan. 334, 49 Pac. 88.

Appellant had the right at any time before the improvement was completed, in fact it was its duty, to change the plans at any time when it became apparent either that the improvement could not be made in accordance therewith, or that it was necessary and beneficial to the public or to prevent injury and destruction to private property.

State ex rel. Crowder v. Miles, 138 Ind. 392, 38 N. E. 400; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Walters, 13 Ind. App. 275, 41 N. E. 465; Erie use of Erie Paving Co. v. Erie, 171 Pa. 610, 33 Atl. 378.

The duty of the municipality cannot be avoided or the liability shifted by the employment of an independent contractor to perform the work.

Elliott, Streets, 633; Birmingham v. McDary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Logansport v. Wright, 25 Ind. 512; Pearson v. Zable, 8 Ky. 170; Cabot v. Kingman, 166 Mass. 103, 33 L.R.A. 45, 44 N. E. 344; Sewall v. St. Paul, 20 Minn. 511, Gil. 459; 1 Thomp. Neg. 647; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 677, 18 L. ed. 427, 432; Louisville v. Shanahan, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 163, 56 S. W. 808.

A municipal corporation is liable in damages where, in making a street, it so negligently and carelessly places earth on a steep hillside, on soft swampy ground, wholly insufficient to sustain such earth, thereby injuring and damaging lands below.

5 Thomp. Neg. § 5912; Keating v. Cincinnati, 38 Ohio St. 141, 43 Am. Rep. 421; Rochester White Lead Co. v. Rochester, 3 N. Y. 463, 53 Am. Dec. 316; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 1 N. E. 321; Hendershott v. Ottumwa, 46 Iowa, 658, 26 Am. Rep. 186; Broadwell v. Kansas, 75 Mo. 213, 42 Am. Rep. 406; Elliott, Streets, § 495; Provine v. Seattle, 19 Wash. 681, 110 Pac. 619.

Burnett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

"The finding of the court upon the facts shall be deemed a verdict, and may be set aside in the same manner and for the same reasons, as far as applicable, and a new trial granted." L. O. L. § 159. This being an action at law, the facts as disclosed by the court's findings are thus established beyond our power to gainsay. We cannot re-examine the cause upon the issues of fact, or give further attention to the testimony in any event, than to ascertain if there is any error of law. (N.S.)

evidence tending to support the findings of fact. Astoria R. Co. v. Kern, 44 Or. 538, 76 Pac. 14; Flegel v. Koss, 47 Or. 366, 83 Pac. 847; Seffert v. Northern P. R. Co. 49 Or. 95, 88 Pac. 962, 13 Ann. Cas. 883; Courtney v. Bridal Veil Box Factory, 55 Or. 210, 105 Pac. 896.

We have carefully examined the testimony, and, in our judgment, there is ample to justify the findings of fact. Indeed, there is little dispute as to what really occurred. The defendant contends on various grounds, in effect, that the judgment was not the proper legal conclusion to be drawn from the premises disclosed by the facts as determined by the court. In this state an action may be maintained against a corporate town in its corporate character, and within the scope of its authority, for an injury to the rights of the plaintiff arising from some act or omission of such public corporation. L. O. L. § 358. This statute clarifies the discussion, as affected by many of the precedents cited by the defendant, where, for want of such legislation, the courts were powerless to afford relief against injury inflicted under the ostensible exercise of governmental power. The principal contention for the defendant is that, within the meaning of Brand v. Multnomah County, 38 Or. 79, 50 L.R.A. 389, 84 Am. St. Rep. 772, 60 Pac. 390, 62 Pac. 209, and other like precedents, the grievances of which the plaintiff complains were consequential injuries resulting from the exercise of the city's governmental function of improving its streets. Herein is involved the distinction between the legislative and administrative powers of the city. The issue in this aspect of the case is whether the city acted wholly within its sphere as a governmental agent, wherein it is immune in respect to mere errors of judgment, or whether what it did was in its ministerial capacity, to which the consequences of negligence and maladministration will attach. In the leading case of Perry v. Worcester, 6 Gray, 544, 547, 66 Am. Dec. 431, the court, speaking by Chief Justice Shaw, lays down the rule that the exercise of the governmental function exonerates a municipality from liability for such damage as necessarily results from the act. "But," says the learned judge, "this presupposes that the public work thus authorized will be executed in a reasonably proper and skilful manner, with a just regard to the rights of private owners of estate. If done otherwise, the damage is not necessarily incident to the accomplishment of the public object, but to the improper and unskilful manner of doing it. Such damage to private property is not warranted by the authority under color of which it is done, and is not justifiable by it. It is unlawful, and a wrong, for the redress of which an action of tort will lie." In Rochester White Lead Co. v. Rochester, 3 N. Y. 463, 53 Am. Dec. 316, the court holds that the ordinance of the common council directing a public improvement is judicial in its nature, and extends immunity from private action for damages to those who perform the duty; but there this immunity ends. The further prosecution of the work is purely of a ministerial character, and the city is bound to see that it is done in a safe and skilful manner. Aschoff v. Evansville, 34 Ind. App. 25, 72 N. E. 279, teaches that a municipal corporation is liable for the negligent discharge of ministerial duties arising by necessary implication, even in connection with governmental functions. In Ely v. St. Louis, 181 Mo. 723, 81 S. W. 168, the rule is laid down that passing an ordinance declaring a street to be opened is legislative, but the process of opening and improving the street is ministerial, in respect to which actionable negligence may be predicated. McKenna v. St. Louis, 6 Mo. App. 320, classes making and improving of streets as a ministerial duty. It is said, in Sadler v. New York, 185 N. Y. 408, 419, 78 N. E. 272, 276, that "no liability is incurred" for a structure erected "in the exercise of governmental powers, . . . unless, by negligence and lack of care in the performance of the work, . . . a direct injury is thereby occasioned." The same conclusion is established in Gilman v. Laconia, 55 N. H. 130, 20 Am. Rep. 175. The supreme court of Minnesota, in Kobs v. Minneapolis, 22 Minn. 159, holds the municipality liable for turning an annual quantity of water from the street upon plaintiff's premises. Although the city had right under its governmental functions to abate the nuisance of standing water, yet, says the court, "the act of removal was a ministerial one, in the performance of which the defendant was legally bound to take all such reasonable care and precaution against possible and contingent injuries to others as a discreet and cautious individual would and ought to exercise under like circumstances, were the whole loss or risk to be his alone." In Augusta v. Little, 115 Ga. 124, 41 S. E. 238, the court says: "The adoption by a municipal corporation of a plan for grading the streets and sidewalks of a city is a quasi judicial act, and if the plan adopted be erroneous the city cannot be held liable to a private person, who is injured thereby. If the execution of this plan—the construction of the pavement—be unskilful or negligent, the city would be liable; for the construction would be a ministerial duty." The case of Miles v. Worcester, 154 Mass. 511, 13 L.R.A. 841, 26

Am. St. Rep. 264, 28 N. E. 676, states the rule thus: "If a city in adapting a lot of land to schoolhouse purposes builds and maintains a retaining wall between the lot and land of an adjoining owner, and by the action of the elements, or otherwise, without his fault, the wall comes upon his land and continues there, it becomes a nuisance, for which the city is responsible to such owner." In Burford v. Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98, 51 Am. Rep. 105, 18 N. W. 571, the rule is thus stated: "If the act which is done by a municipal corporation would be tortious, if done by a natural person, the corporation is held liable for it to the same extent and for the same reasons that the natural person would have been." The supreme court of Iowa, in Hendershot v. Ottumwa, 46 Iowa, 658, 26 Am. Rep. 182, says: "It is equally well settled that in making changes in the natural surface of streets, the city is negligent in construction, so that the adjacent lots are injured by reason of such negligence, the city is liable for such injury." The same court further says, in Hume v. Des Moines, 140 Iowa, 624, 645, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 126, 135 N. W. 846, 854, that "as the city had power to grade and gutter its streets, it is not liable for defective plans, for in adopting them it acts in a judicial capacity. But it is liable if it negligently carries out such plans, or if, without the adoption of any plans, it proceeds in a negligent manner to make embankments or fills, to the injury of an abutting or adjoining proprietor." Finally, on this point, the supreme court of Maryland, in Thillman v. Baltimore, 111 Md. 131, 73 Atl. 722, states the rule thus: "Although the powers granted a municipality by its charter to open, grade, and pave streets . . . are discretionary, any particular plan that may be adopted must be a reasonable one, and the manner of its execution thence becomes, with respect to the right of the citizen, a mere ministerial duty; and for any negligence or unskilfulness in the execution or construction of the work, whereby injury is inflicted upon private right, the municipality will be held responsible." The following authorities are helpful on this branch of the case: Donahoe v. Kansas City, 136 Mo. 657, 38 S. W. 571; Bullmaster v. St. Joseph, 70 Mo. App. 60; Valparaiso v. Adams, 123 Ind. 250, 24 N. E. 107; O'Donnell v. White, 23 R. I. 318, 50 Atl. 333; Jones v. Henderson, 147 N. C. 120, 60 S. E. 894; Davis v. Silverton, 47 Or. 171, 82 Pac. 16.

An examination of the cases discloses that the courts of some states, notably Indiana and Maryland, attribute negligence to a city in the adoption of defective plans.

Most of the courts, however, confine negligence to the execution of the plans. In sound reason, it can matter little in many cases whether negligence be predicated of careless execution of a practical plan for public improvements, or of a vicious and impractical plan itself. Governmental powers should be exercised in accordance with the principles of natural justice and common sense. A municipality ought not to be upheld by the courts in the heedless adoption, under the guise of legislation, of some crude scheme which cannot be accomplished without the infliction of direct, as distinguished from consequential, injuries upon some of its citizens. To hold otherwise would be a long step towards sanctioning the ruthless exercise of arbitrary power. Immunity for mere error of judgment in matters of governmental cognizance ought not to be overturned or impaired; but when public works are planned with such carelessness as to amount to absence of judgment the reason of the rule fails, and the application thereof fails with it.

It is contended, on the question of negligence, that, the city having employed a competent engineer, in the person of the city surveyor, to draw plans and specifications, it has gone as far as required in the matter of diligence, and cannot be held liable for the result. This presupposes that, however competent the engineer may have been, it was his duty, as the servant of the city, for whose conduct the city was responsible, to act in a careful and circumspect manner in drawing the plans. The rule is thus stated in the case of Lion v. Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. 90 Md. 286, 47 L.R.A. 127, 44 Atl. 1045: "The employment of a competent engineer to direct the work is not the fulfillment of a duty to avoid doing injury to another, when, notwithstanding the engineer's competency, the work as constructed does cause injury. The test of liability is not the fitness of the engineer, but the efficacy of the work."

In its brief, the appellant lays great stress on the case of Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 56 Am. Rep. 109, 6 Pac. 317, in which the facts were greatly like the ones in the case at bar; but that case is easily distinguished from the present one on two grounds. First, the court held that there was no sufficient pleading of negligence on the part of the municipality; and, second, in California, at that time, there was no statute like ours, quoted above, granting a cause of action to a person injured by the acts of a municipality in its corporate character. Miles v. Worcester, supra, is more applicable to the case at bar, and is founded on better logic. From the weight and reason of the precedents, 57 L.R.A. (N.S.) the rule may be thus stated: A municipal corporation is not liable for mere consequential injuries resulting from ordinarily careful administration of a reasonably prudent plan of street improvement devised by the municipality in its governmental capacity; but, in the execution itself of any public works, the city acts ministerially, or, in the words of the statute, "in its corporate character and within the scope of its authority," and for its negligence or maladministration in that relation, resulting in an injury to the rights of another, it is liable in the same way and for the same reason as a natural person or private corporation would be under the same circumstances of executive management.

We conclude that negligence may be imputed to a municipality in the execution of a plan of public improvement devised by it in its legislative capacity. Negligence is a question of fact. In the case of Palmer v. Portland R. Light & P. Co. 56 Or. 282, 108 Pac. 211, this court declared the rule that it is only where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusions from them that the question of negligence is ever considered as one of law for the court. The precedents are so thoroughly collated by the opinion of Justice King in that case that further citation on this point is unnecessary.

The standard of care to be observed by the city in such cases is such that a reasonably prudent and careful man in like circumstances would use, if the responsibility for damages rested upon him. All would most likely agree that a wide and level pedregal would be a safe foundation for a fill of the character and dimensions described in the city ordinance. None would probably contend that a steep declivity of shifting sand would be suitable for that purpose. But between these extremes the question is one of fact, which must be decided by the jury, or the court, acting in the capacity of a trier of the facts. The right of the city to decree by ordinance that Irving avenue should be improved by filling it to the established grade may be well admitted; and it may be further conceded that the terms of the ordinance itself would not constitute sufficient proof of negligence on the part of the city. But, when the ordinance, whatever its terms may be, is to be applied in practice, a ministerial duty on the part of the city arises, involving care and prudence of administration. It thus became a question of fact, in the case at bar, whether the city, in carrying out the project of improving Irving avenue, acted as a reasonably careful and prudent individual would act in that situation, under like responsibility, in piling many thousands of yards of earth upon a hillside where the ground was soft and swampy, without providing any other foundation or making any effort to retain it in place. This issue of fact was submitted to the court, instead of a jury, as a trier of the fact, and has been determined against the defendant. We cannot disturb this conclusion of fact, for which there is authority in the testimony.

The defendant further urges, however, that the work was let to an independent contractor, who alone is answerable for the injury resulting to the plaintiff, if he has any cause of action at all. The general rule is that an employer is not liable for the acts of an independent contractor, for the reason that the latter is not subject to the control of the employer. To this rule, however, there are certain well-recognized exceptions. Among these exceptions are cases in which the injuries are the necessary consequence of executing the work in the manner provided for in the contract, or subsequently prescribed by the employer, and those in which the injuries are caused by the violation of some absolute, nondelegable duty, which the employer is bound to discharge. In Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298, the rule is thus stated, in effect: If the injury occurs necessarily in ordinary methods of doing the work, the principal is liable, although he employed a contractor; but, if it happens solely by neglect of the contractor, he alone is responsible. Where the work is done according to agreement by a contractor, the city is liable for damages arising from the performance of the work in the manner required by the contract. Sewall v. St. Paul, 20 Minn. 511, 524, Gil. 459. A city is liable for the doing of that which it has directly authorized, or which necessarily results from the doing of that which it was contracted or directed to have done, although it is done by a contractor, unless what is done is that which the city not only had the right to do, but to do it in the manner it did it. Chicago v. Norton Mill Co. 97 Ill. App. 651. In the case of the City & Suburban R. Co. v. Moores, 80 Md. 348, 354, 45 Am. St. Rep. 345, 347, 30 Atl. 643, 644, the rule is thus stated: "The person for whom the work is done may still be liable, if the injury is such as might have been anticipated by him as a probable consequence of the work let out to the contractor, or if it be of such character as must result in creating a nuisance, or if he owes a duty to third persons or the public in the execution of the work." In Jacobs v. Fuller & H. Co. 67 Ohio St. 70, 65 L.R.A. 833, 65 N. E. 617, it is held that the employer is liable for injuries which might be reasonably apprehended from the nature of the undertaking, although it was let to a contractor. Again, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) in Thomas v. Harrington, 72 N. H. 45, 65 L.R.A. 742, 54 Atl. 285, it is stated that an employer is liable for injury which is the direct result of the work contracted for, although it is performed by a contractor. In the apt words of Lord Chief Justice Campbell, in Ellis v. Sheffield Gas Consumers Co. 2 EL. & BL. 767, "if the contractor does the thing which he is employed to do, the employer is responsible for that thing, as if he did it himself." See also Deford v. State. 30 Md. 179; Thillman v. Baltimore, 111 Md. 131, 73 Atl. 722; Hole v. Sittingbourne & S. R. Co. 6 Hurlst. & N. 488, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 3 L. T. N. S. 750, 9 Week. Rep. 274; McAllister v. Albany, 18 Or. 426, 23 Pac. 845. The work in question lies properly within both the exceptions noted, at least within the first. It is plain that for injuries resulting from work performed by the contractor in the manner directed by the city the latter cannot escape responsibility: neither can it be exonerated from liability for what might reasonably have been expected from the manner in which it contracted for the work to be done, although performed by an independent contractor.

The defendant also contended at the argument that the premises of the plaintiff were liable for lateral support, but that would not justify the negligent application of a load far beyond the capacity of the soil to withstand; neither does the evidence in the case nor the findings of fact justify the conclusions that this was an inevitable accident. The court has found the facts that the execution of the work was negligent, and was the superinducing cause of the damage.

The judgment of the court below was not erroneous as charged, and should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Moore, J., dissents.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

M. L. DANIELS et al.

v.

COUNTY COURT OF RANDOLPH COUNTY, Plff. in Err.

(69 W. Va. 676, 72 S. E. 782.)

Highway — abandonment — barriers.

1. Where an old road or way becomes dan-

Headnotes by MILLER, J.

Note. — Duty to provide barriers against abandoned highway.

For the general question of liability for defects in streets and highways, see notes to gerous to travel, is abandoned or a new location established, public authorities in charge of the work must put up barriers or warnings to protect persons traveling thereon, acting upon the belief, justified by appearances, that the old way is still open, and it is negligence not to do so.

Same — night travel — care.

2. While persons traveling on a public highway in the nighttime are required to exercise such ordinary care and caution as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under the circumstances, and in view of the darkness, they have the right, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, to act on the assumption that such highway is in a reasonable safe condition for travel by night as well as by day, and are not bound to anticipate dangerous defects therein without some notice or other precaution taken for their protection.

Same — erection of barrier.

3. Where a highway containing a plain well-beaten track is discontinued, it is the duty of the public authority responsible therefor, to give such notice or warning, or erect such barriers as will prevent its use by travelers by night as well as by day, Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513, as to municipal corporations, and James v. Wellston Twp. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1219, as to townships.

As to the duty of a town or municipality to provide barriers to protect travelers from obstructions outside the highway, see Shea v. Whitman, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980, and note.

The present note only includes cases where a road has been abandoned, not those where a road is temporarily closed during repairs or alterations.

In Schuenke v. Pine River, 84 Wis. 669, 54 N. W. 1007, a town was held liable where it changed a roadway across a river, building a new bridge, and did not maintain a sufficient barrier or notice to prevent travelers taking the old road, as a consequence of which plaintiff and his team broke through the old bridge, the old route being the most direct, and telephone poles running along it, instead of the new one. In answer to the contention that the town was not obliged to maintain such a barrier, the court said: "We think the only sensible and just answer to this question is that such duty continued as long as the old track was allowed to remain in such condition that, to a stranger thereto, it presented the appearance of a traveled highway." It was also held in answer to a contention to the contrary, that failure to maintain such a barrier constituted a defect in the highway though the accident occurred at a place remote therefrom.

In Barber v. Essex, 27 Vt. 62, where the town was held liable for injury to a traveler who drove onto the old road at night, it not being barred to prevent it, the court recognizes a difference between the duty to fence such an abandoned roadway and to fence other dangerous places contiguous to the highway, saying: "And it is obvious that towns may be required to fence travelers out of the old highway, when they have broken it up recently, and provided a new one, without involving the absurdity of requiring them to fence travelers into the road, in all cases."

In Munson v. Derby, 37 Conn. 298, 9 Am. Rep. 332, where a highway was abandoned and another constructed near and nearly parallel thereto, it was held that failure of the town to guard the point of divergence, by a railing or otherwise, so as to prevent travelers mistaking the old road for the new, constituted a defect in the existing highway, within the statute, for which the town would be liable to one injured by taking the old road.

In Fritz v. Watertown, 21 S. D. 280, 111 N. W. 630, it is held that the fact that a city had by ordinance abandoned a certain street would not relieve it from liability for injuries to a pedestrian because the sidewalk was out of repair, where the city did nothing toward abandoning it after passing the ordinance, and its use was permitted as before.

And in Bills v. Kaukauna, 94 Wis. 310, 68 N. W. 992, where a road was abandoned and a barbed-wire fence placed across it, which would not ordinarily be noticed at night, and the surface of the roadway was such that one not knowing that the old road had been abandoned would be likely to take it, instead of the new one, it was held that the town was liable for the loss of plaintiff's horse, which was killed by being driven against the fence at night.

Chapman v. Cook, 10 R. I. 304, 14 Am. Rep. 686, while not strictly in point, is closely analogous, plaintiff being injured in driving off on a private way which she mistook for a public way turning off farther on, and it being contended that the town was liable for not taking measures to prevent the private way being mistaken for the public road. The court, however, held that the town was not liable, saying: "That the private way which the plaintiff took left the street in the same direction and at the same angle with it as the public way which she designed to take would not, in our judgment, add to the liability of the town, nor would the fact that in other respects the private way where it departs from the street resembled the public way beyond. It is not the duty of the town to point out private ways. . . . Neither do we think that the knowledge that the private way is dangerous can add to the liabilities or the duty of the town. Its dangers are not the dangers of the public way. Its defects are not the defects of the street. It does not affect the safety of the person who is traveling in the public way, and while he is traveling upon it. The town cannot stop the private way or prevent any person who will from traveling there, however dangerous it may be. If he will go there voluntarily, he goes at his own risk."

R. L. S.

and in the absence of such notice travelers have the right to presume that such highway has not been discontinued or obstructed.

Evidence — sufficiency.

4. A case in which the evidence of prior knowledge of the discontinuance of or defects in an old road is not sufficient to show, as matter of law, contributory negligence of plaintiffs, injured while traveling thereon in the nighttime.

(November 7, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Randolph County to review a judgment in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. G. Kump, for plaintiff in error:

The court should have set aside the verdict of the jury, because the same was contrary to the law and the evidence, and was excessive.

Shriver v. County Ct. 66 W. Va. 685, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 377, 66 S. E. 1062; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 2d ed. § 637; Heaser v. Grafton, 33 W. Va. 548, 11 S. E. 211; Meeks v. Ohio River R. Co. 52 W. Va. 99, 43 S. E. 118.

Mr. Samuel T. Spears, for defendants in error:

Defendant was liable for the injury to plaintiffs.

Biggs v. Huntington, 32 W. Va. 55, 9 S. E. 51; Niblett v. Nashville, 12 Heisk. 684, 27 Am. Rep. 755; Franklin Turnp. Co. v. Crockett, 2 Sneed, 271; Memphis v. Lasser, 9 Humph. 757; Burnham v. Boston, 10 Allen, 290; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 349, 23 Am. Rep. 332.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs recovered against defendant, on the verdict of a jury, a judgment for $304.50, damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by Mrs. Daniels, while traveling with her husband over a public road. The correctness of that judgment is brought in question by the present writ of error.

The demurrer to the declaration, in two counts, we think was properly overruled. The action of the court thereon is assigned as error here, but does not seem to be seriously relied upon. The negligence of the defendant, alleged to have resulted in the injuries sustained by the wife, is that it permitted the public road, known as the Files creek road, at a place where it crosses Files creek in said county, to become and remain out of repair; that at a short time prior to the date of her injuries very high waters in said Files creek had washed, excavated, and dug away a large portion of said road, where the same crossed said creek, producing a steep and perpendicular descent into said creek, rendering the road impassable, and exceedingly dangerous to persons using the same, particularly in the nighttime; that some time thereafter, and before Mrs. Daniels sustained her alleged injuries, the surveyor of said road pretended to change the location thereof where it crossed said creek, and to abandon that portion of the old road where it crossed said creek, and where the washout occurred, but had left the old road washed, excavated, and dug out as aforesaid, open to the use of the public, and had neglected to erect any guard, fence, or barrier, so as to give warning and notice that such pretended change had been made, as it is alleged it was his duty to do, whereby and by reason whereof, it is alleged, said plaintiffs, together with their two children, then lawfully on said road and in the exercise of due care, in the nighttime, suddenly and without any warning or notice of any kind, that said public road was so out of repair, were precipitated over said descent and into said creek, whereby and by reason whereof the plaintiff Carrie Daniels sustained the injuries of which the plaintiffs complain.

The facts are few, and there is little, if any, material conflict in the evidence. The accident occurred on the night of August 31, 1907, about 9 o'clock. The evidence is that the night was very dark. The plaintiffs were on their way from Beverly to the home of the father of M. L. Daniels, who lived on Files creek, within some 300 yards of the place of the accident. Plaintiff lived at Elkins, and, so far as the record shows, they knew nothing of the condition of the road at this crossing. They had heard of high waters occurring about July 17th, and that the roads had been washed out in places, but did not know of the condition of this road, or that any portion of it had been abandoned and a new location made. The old road, the abandoned part ran south from Beverly, in the direction in which plaintiffs were traveling, around the foot of a hill to the point where it crossed the creek. This new road was made by simply laying down the fence inclosing an adjoining meadow, removing some rocks in the way, and by making fills in one or two places. After it was opened, the evidence shows the public generally used the new way, the old one being abandoned because impassable where it crossed the creek.

Defendant denies negligence, but the principal defense is contributory negligence on the part of plaintiffs.

The evidence of the road surveyor, and of one or two other witnesses, tends to show that some rubbish washed in the road by the flood, and some brush and a pole put up across the abandoned way served as a barrier to travel on the abandoned way; but other witnesses, including the road surveyor of an adjoining section, who did the work of opening the new way, say there was no barrier or pole erected across the old way. The evidence makes it quite certain that on the night of the accident there was no pole there and no barrier or warning sufficient to obstruct the passage of the plaintiffs over the abandoned road. The evidence is that it was old and worn, and easily seen, while the new way could not be seen in the darkness, by persons traveling in vehicles.

The authorities seem to be quite uniform in holding that where an old and dangerous road or way is abandoned for a new one established, public authorities in charge of the work must put up barriers or warnings to protect travelers, acting upon the belief, justified by appearances, that the old way is still open, and that it is negligence not to do so. 2 Elliott, Roads & Streets, 3d ed. § 801; Bills v. Kaukauna, 94 Wis. 310, 68 N. W. 992, and cases cited; 37 Cyc. 291, and notes; 28 Cyc. 1403-1405, and cases cited in notes.

But were plaintiffs guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery? Contributory negligence, when it depends on facts and testimony, is a question for the jury. Snoddy v. Huntington, 37 W. Va. 111, 16 S. E. 442. Our decisions say, however, that where the facts and evidence show as matter of law, that plaintiff was guilty of contributing to his injuries, the court should, on motion of defendant, exclude all the evidence from the jury. Slaughter v. Huntington, 64 W. Va. 240, 241, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 459, 61 S. E. 155, and cases cited. The rule is also well settled in this and other states that a traveler on a public highway cannot close his eyes to open and patent defects and dangers. If plaintiffs had been traveling in the daytime, with the new way and the dangers of the old plainly in sight, as the evidence shows they were, the authorities say they could not recover. Travelers on a highway must use their senses, and are not permitted to shut their eyes to open and obvious defects and dangers in the way. For injuries thus sustained, due to negligence on their part, damages for injuries sustained cannot be recovered. Hysell v. Central City, 68 W. Va. 769, 70 S. E. 767, and cases cited.

What is the rule, however, where persons are using a public road in the nighttime? It is well stated, with copious citations, in 57 L.R.A.(N.S.)

28 Cyc. 1431, as follows: "A person traveling on a street or public way in the nighttime is required to exercise such ordinary care and caution as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under the circumstances, and in view of the darkness; and ordinary care in the nighttime may call for greater caution than in the daytime. In exercising ordinary care a traveler at night, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, has the right to act on the assumption that the street or way is in a reasonably safe condition for travel by night as well as by day, and is not bound to anticipate that he will encounter excavations, without having some notice thereof by lights, or without other precautions taken for his protection. A failure to use prudence commensurate with obvious conditions constitutes negligence."

Tested by this rule can we say as matter of law that plaintiffs were guilty of negligence precluding recovery? Unless we can do so, the question then being one of mixed law and fact for jury determination, on proper instruction by the court, we should not disturb the verdict and judgment of the court below. As particularly pertinent to the case at bar, it was decided in Wisconsin, in Bills v. Kaukauna, supra, that "where a highway containing a plain and well-beaten track is discontinued, it is the duty of the town to give such notice or warning, or erect such barriers, as will prevent its use by travelers by night as well as by day; and in the absence of such notice travelers have a right to presume that such a highway has not been discontinued or obstructed."

To reverse the judgment below, defendant relies on the admissions of plaintiffs that on the night of the accident in question they knew that floods had prevailed in Files creek and in other creeks, some two weeks previous, and that the roads had been washed in some places; and that before reaching the place of the accident, Mrs. Daniels had suggested to her husband that he had better walk ahead and see if there were any washouts, and to which he replied, that the roads had been used, that wagons had gone over it, and that it was all right. He proved, however, that he had no reason to believe this road, if damaged by the floods, had not been repaired in the mean time, or that it was unsafe.

Mrs. Daniels' testimony is as follows:

Q. Now, Mrs. Daniels, it was dark when you left Beverly, or about so?

A. Yes; it was getting dark I remember.

Q. And you told your husband you thought it was dangerous to go, or he had better not go?

A. I don't remember about that.

Q. You said something before you got well started on the road?

A. While we were on the road I mentioned to him perhaps there was some danger. I don't remember whether it was after we were going up that road, or not.

Q. And he still thought it was merely a woman's weakness, and that you were afraid?

A. He didn't pay any attention to me I know.

Q. Now then you got up to the ford of Files creek there?

A. Yes.

Q. This left-hand prong that comes down by the Beverly road. Do you remember now whether you told him again that he had better get out and see if it was safe?

A. No, I didn't say anything to him. He made the remark to me that there was the fence. He says, "It is all right. Here is the fence that goes along the road."

Q. Then you were looking out for difficulties when you saw that?

A. When we saw that we just drove on.

Q. But you must have been looking for difficulties when he said, "All right, there is the fence."

A. That is what he said.

Q. But you were looking out for difficulties.

A. I was uneasy, I admit, but I don't think he was.

Q. He was very willing to take the risk. Now, Mrs. Daniels, how far was that below the ford that he remarked, "There is the fence?"

A. I don't remember. He says, "There is the fence that goes around, and it is all right." I don't know whether the fence is still there or not.

We do not think this evidence sufficient to show negligence on the part of the plaintiffs, or either of them. True they had heard of high waters in the creeks, and Mrs. Daniels appears to have had some apprehensions that the road might be dangerous; but her husband, familiar with the road, and knowing that some two weeks had elapsed, after the high waters had subsided, and who appears to have been driving cautiously, had the right to assume, as the authorities hold, that if the road had been damaged, it had, in the mean time, been made reasonably safe for travel by night as well as in the daytime; or if rendered dangerous, and any part of it had been abandoned for a new location, that some sign or warning would be given to protect travelers upon the road.

For the reasons given we are of opinion to affirm the judgment.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

HENRY WALDSTEIN, Appt.,

v.

R. L. WILLIAMS, Sheriff, et al.

(— Ark. —, 142 S. W. 834.)

Judgment — revival — notice — publication.

1. The legislature may provide for constructive service of notice of an application for a scire facias to revive the lien of a personal judgment, since the scire facias is merely a continuation of the original action.

Same — continuance of lien.

2. The entry of a judgment reviving a judgment lien, after the lien expires, upon a scire facias issued before such expiration, relates back to the date of the issuance of the scire facias, and continues the lien without lapse.

(January 1, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Garland Chancery Court dismissing the complaint in an action brought to enjoin the sale of a certain lot alleged by plaintiff to be his property. Affirmed.

Note. — Service of notice in proceedings to revive a judgment.

In general.

Service of the writ upon defendants is essential to the validity of a judgment upon scire facias to review a judgment though the service may be constructive in case of nonresidents. 23 Cyc. 1454.

Some cases recognize, in revivor proceedings, the old rule applied generally to writs of scire facias, that two returns of nil are equivalent to one of scire feci. Brown v. Wygant, 163 U. S. 618, 41 L. ed. 284, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1159; Dunlevy v. Ross, Wright (Ohio) 287.

Other cases point out a distinction, however, to the effect that in the case of revivor upon two returns of nil, the defendant may afterward present any defense he may have had to the judgment by audita querela or motion, while if the return is scire feci he will be concluded by the judgment of revivor. Barrow v. Bailey, 5 Fla. 9; Walker v. Hood, 5 Blackf. 266; Kratz v. Preston, 52 Mo. App. 251.

Mode and sufficiency of service, generally.

Where some mode of constructive service is provided and recognized as sufficient, it must be strictly followed.

Thus in The Treasurers v. Tarrant, 1 Hill, L. 7, under a statute requiring that, where rules or process to revive proceedings at law cannot be served because of absence of the parties from the state, it shall be sufficient to post such rules or process upon the courthouse door of the district of their last

Statement by Wood, J.:

This was a proceeding in the Garland chancery court to enjoin the sale of a certain lot in the city of Hot Springs, alleged to be the property of appellant. The facts are substantially as follows: The appellees, on the 30th day of June, 1904, recovered judgment against Nettie W. Brooks in the Garland circuit court. On the 1st day of June, 1907, they sued out a writ of scire facias to revive the lien of the judgment. This was done by constructive service pursuant to the statute (§§ 4445, 4446, Kirby's Digest); it appearing that the judgment debtor was a nonresident. On the 16th day of June, 1908, the court entered the following: "It being further considered, ordered, and adjudged that the lien of said judgment be and the same is hereby revived and continued for the space of three years next after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1907." On the 27th day of June, 1907, or three days before the lien of the judgment would have expired, the appellant claims that he purchased the land from the judgment debtor. The appellant contends that the lien of the judgment had expired, and that same had never been properly revived, and that appellees, the owners of the judgment, therefore, could not enforce the same against the land.

Mr. James E. Hogue, for appellant:

A personal judgment itself, or the lien residence, it was held that the posting of a mere notice that a scire facias has issued is insufficient.

And in Sibley v. Miller, 3 Ind. Terr. 688, 64 S. W. 577, it is held that where the statute provides for service in revivor proceedings, when defendant cannot be found, by posting notice thereof on the courthouse door for four weeks, service by publication in a newspaper instead is insufficient.

In Atwood v. Hirsch Bros. 123 Ga. 734, 51 S. E. 742, under a statute requiring that a scire facias "be served by the sheriff of the county in which the party to be notified may reside, twenty days before the sitting of the court," it is held that the service must be personal, and that leaving a copy at his most notorious place of abode is insufficient.

And in Jones v. George, 80 Md. 294, 30 Atl. 635, where defendants, who had removed from the county more than seventeen years before the scire facias was issued, had no actual notice of proceedings to revive a judgment, until after judgment of fiat rendered upon two returns of nilhil, the judgment was stricken out, and they were allowed to plead to the scire facias.

See also Bickerdike v. Allen, 157 Ill. 95, 29 L.R.A. 782, 41 N. E. 740, holding that a provision for constructive service to revive a judgment against a resident of the state is constitutional.

Where the statute required that a citation to revive a judgment be served on the defendant or his representative, a citation issued to his widow "personally and as tutrix," and served on her, was not sufficient. Hopgood v. Dawson, 23 La. Ann. 179.

And in Phillips v. Wait, 106 Ga. 589, 32 S. E. 842, it is held that service of a copy of a petition to revive a judgment, without service of a copy of the scire facias, is not sufficient.

In Andrews v. Buckbee, 77 Mo. 423, it is held that service of a scire facias to revive a judgment should be made in the manner provided for service by summons.

In Wilson v. McCormack, 10 Okla. 180, 61 Pac. 1068, under a Code provision that service of notice of an application to revive 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a judgment must be served in the same manner as a summons, service by an attorney of record was held to be insufficient, as it should be served by the sheriff or someone authorized by him to do so.

In Gruble v. Wood, 27 Kan. 535, it was held that, where the statute provided for service of notice of revivor proceedings in the same manner as a summons, the service of an ordinary summons on defendant was insufficient.

But in Schultz v. Hine, 39 Kan. 334, 18 Pac. 221, this case was distinguished and the service of a summons was held sufficient where it contained the nature and terms of the order or judgment applied for.

Directing process to other county.

In Dickinson v. Allison, 10 Ga. 557, it is held that while the common-law rule that two returns of nilhil is sufficient basis for the revival of a judgment is not applicable here, nevertheless the court rendering the judgment is the only one having jurisdiction to issue process to revive it, and may direct the scire facias to the sheriff of any county in the state, whose duty it is to serve and return it to the county from which it issued.

And in Misner v. Misner, 41 Ohio St. 678, it is held that revivor proceedings are merely additional to the original action, and therefore the court having jurisdiction of the original action may issue summons to any county in the state to effect a revivor.

But in Walker v. Hood, 5 Blackf. 266, it was held that, there being no statutory provision authorizing process to issue from one county to another, a scire facias to revive a judgment, issued by the court rendering the judgment and directed to the sheriff of another county by whom it was served, was invalid.

Service on nonresident of state.

The rule adopted in WALDSTEIN v. WILLIAMS, that personal service is not necessary to revive a judgment even against a nonresident, though supported by some of of a personal judgment, cannot be revived upon a constructive service.

19 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 275; Hubbard v. Bolls, 7 Ark. 442; Hanly v. Adams, 16 Ark. 232; Hicks v. State, 3 Ark. 313; McCourtie v. Davis, 7 Ill. 298; 35 Cyc. 1156.

Messrs. Greaves, Martin, & Wootton, for appellees:

The proceedings to revive the judgment are ancillary and subservient to the original action, and the notice and procedure required to revive are within the discretion of our legislature.

Brown v. Byrd, 10 Ark. 534; Rice v. Moore, 48 Kan. 590, 16 L.R.A. 198, 30 Am. St. Rep. 318, 30 Pac. 10; 2 Freeman. Judgm. §§ 444, 445.

The lien when once revived dates back to the day the scire facias was issued, and continues a lien against not only the judgment debtor, but against innocent third persons as well.

Watkins v. Wassell, 15 Ark. 74; Trapnall the cases, does not seem to be in accord with that adopted in most of the cases.

Thus it is held that the revivor of a judgment without personal service will not affect the running of the statute of limitations as to a nonresident of the state. Owens v. Henry (Owens v. McCloskey) 161 U. S. 642, 40 L. ed. 837, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693; Rice v. Moore, 48 Kan. 590, 16 L.R.A. 198, 30 Am. St. Rep. 318, 30 Pac. 10; Weaver v. Boggs, 38 Md. 255; Hepler v. Davis, 32 Neb. 556, 13 L.R.A. 505, 29 Am. St. Rep. 457, 49 N. W. 458. In Brown v. Wygant, 163 U. S. 618, 41 L. ed. 284, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1159, the court distinguished Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 40 L. ed. 837, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693, upon the ground that the defendant was a nonresident.

And this is true although the original judgment was upon a note containing a power to confess judgment, as that power was exhausted by entry of the original judgment. Betta v. Johnson, 68 Vt. 549, 35 Atl. 489.

In Robb v. Anderson, 43 Ill. App. 575, it was held that a judgment by default on two returns of nilhil, upon writs of scire facias to revive a judgment against one who had ceased to be a resident of the state where the judgment was rendered, would not support actions against the defendant in another state.

In Bickerdike v. Allen, 157 Ill. 95, 29 L.R.A. 782, 41 N. E. 740, it is held that a statutory provision for service of a scire facias to revive a judgment by mailing a copy to defendants' address, and publication, is constitutional as to defendants, who are residents of the state, though the proceeding is regarded as being one in personam when the original suit was in personam. The court says, however, that such service would not be valid as to a non-resident of the state.

In Mudge v. Livermore, 148 Iowa, 472, 123 N. W. 199, which was a proceeding against one who had become a nonresident, it is held that relief by way of revivor or an action on a judgment cannot be awarded save on personal service.

And in Mitchell & R. Furniture Co. v. Sampson, 45 Fed. 111, proceedings to revive a judgment rendered against a partnership and the individual members in solido, by appointment of a curator ad hoc for the partnership only, were held to have no binding force on former members of the firm who had removed from the state. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

However, in Crawford v. Foster, 28 C. C. A. 576, 56 U. S. App. 231, 84 Fed. 939, where a statute provided for service, in a proceeding to revive a judgment upon an absent or nonresident adverse party by publication, as in an original action, or in such manner as the court should direct, personal service in another state of a copy of an order, reciting that unless defendant appear and show cause within fifteen days from the service of the copy the judgment would be revived, was held sufficient.

And in Bertron v. Stuart, 43 La. Ann. 1171, 10 So. 295, it is held that a proceeding to revive a judgment is one quasi in rem, and therefore may be made binding on a nonresident by the appointment of a curator ad hoc upon whom service can be made.

And in Comstock v. Holbrook, 16 Gray. 111, personal service of a notice of a scire facias to revive a judgment, issued by a Federal circuit court, was held to be sufficient although made outside of the district.

In Davis v. Davis, 164 Fed. 281, the court recognized that where the statute of a state provides that two returns of nilhil shall be equivalent to personal service in writs of scire facias to revive a judgment entered on personal service, and, by the practice of that state scire facias is held to be a continuation of the original suit, a judgment on such writ would ordinarily be entitled to full faith and credit in another state. Such credit was denied in that case, however, on the ground that the statute of limitations had run against the judgment when the scire facias was issued. But on appeal. 98 C. C. A. 494, 174 Fed. 786, that judgment was reversed because it appeared that the judgment had only become dormant, because of the passing of the period when it would no longer be a lien on real estate without revival, and not dead by virtue of the statute of limitations. The court also apparently recognizes that if the judgment debtor were not a resident of the state when the judgment was revived, such fact would be a defense when properly pleaded, but that it was not available on demurrer, when it did not so appear in the record.

Generally, as to sufficiency of constructive service to sustain a judgment in personam against a nonresident, see note in 50 L.R.A. 577. And as to sufficiency of such service to support a judgment in personam against a resident, see note in 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 292.

R. L. S.

v. Richardson, 13 Ark. 543, 58 Am. Dec. 338; Hershy v. Rogers, 45 Ark. 307; Lawson v. Jordan, 19 Ark. 300, 70 Am. Dec. 596.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I. Counsel for appellant says, in his brief, that the pivotal point upon which this case turns is: "Can a personal judgment be revived upon a constructive service?" More accurately stated, the question is: Can the lien of a personal judgment be revived by constructive service? Appellant contends that it was necessary, before a revivor of the lien of the judgment could be had, that the judgment debtor be served with notice of the scire facias in person; that personal service, in other words, is as essential in the revival of the lien of the judgment as it was in the first place to obtain the original judgment. The original judgment was rendered after personal service upon the judgment debtor herein, and that judgment, under the statute, remained in full force for ten years (§ 4442, Kirby's Dig.), and was a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor in this state for three years from the date of the judgment (Kirby's Dig. §§ 4438, 4439).

It was entirely within the province of the legislature to enact as to how long the lien of a judgment should be continued, and as to the service necessary to be obtained upon the judgment debtor in order to revive such lien. It is not necessary under the statute that the same service should be had upon the judgment debtor in reviving the lien that was had upon him when the original judgment was obtained. The legislature has enacted that "if the defendant cannot be found the court shall make an order briefly setting forth the nature of the case and requiring all persons interested to appear and show cause why such judgment or decree should not be revived and the lien continued," and, further, that "a copy of such order shall be put up at the courthouse door of the county in which such judgment or decree may have been rendered, four weeks before the commencement of the term of the court at which the parties are required to appear," and, further, "if, upon service or publication of the scire facias as required in the preceding section, the defendant or any other person interested, do not appear and show cause why such judgment or decree shall not be revived, the same shall be revived, and the lien continued for another period of three years, and so on from time to time, as often as may be necessary." Sections 4445, 4446, and 4447, Kirby's Dig. These sections were duly complied with by the appellees in the proceedings to revive the judgment lien against their judgment debtor, Mrs. Brooks.

We are of the opinion that the service was sufficient, and that the court was not without jurisdiction to render the order and judgment reviving the lien. In Brown v. Byrd, 10 Ark. 533, this court said: "The courts, both of England and the United States, seem to have held with great uniformity that scire facias on a judgment to procure execution against a party thereto is not an original suit, but a continuation of the former action, and that the execution thereon is an execution on the former judgment." In other words, the proceedings under the statute to revive the lien of the judgment are only subsidiary to the original action. They do not constitute a new action, but only a continuation of the old one. Rice v. Morris, 48 Kan. 590, 16 L.R.A. 198, 30 Am. St. Rep. 318, 30 Pac. 10; Irwin v. Nixon, 11 Pa. 419, 51 Am. Dec. 559, and note. See 2 Freeman, Judgm. §§ 444, 445. Service in the manner prescribed by the statute is all that was necessary.

II. Where a scire facias to revive a judgment lien issues before the lien expires, and the judgment of revivor is not entered until after, the judgment reviving the lien, when entered, relates back to the date of the issuance of the scire facias, and continues the lien of the judgment without lapse. The judgment creditor, in such case, has his lien unbroken against the judgment debtor and all others who claim under him, for the scire facias operates against all such persons as a lis pendens. Trapnall v. Richardson, 13 Ark. 544, 58 Am. Dec. 338; Watkins v. Wassell, 15 Ark. 74. See also Lawson v. Jordan, 19 Ark. 300, 70 Am. Dec. 596, and Hershy v. Rogers, 45 Ark. 309. In the latter case Judge Cockrill, speaking for the court said: "The lien of a judgment upon real estate commences upon the day of the rendition of the judgment, and continues for three years, subject to be further continued or revived by suing out a scire facias and taking judgment for that purpose." Section 4448, Kirby's Dig. provides: "If a scire facias be sued out before the termination of the lien of any judgment or decree, the lien of the judgment revived shall have relation to the day on which the scire facias issued."

Under this statute and the authorities above cited, there can be no doubt that the appellees, at the time of the alleged conveyance of the lot from Mrs. Brooks to appellant, had a lien on the same under their judgment, which they can enforce, and the decree of the Chancery Court so holding, and dismissing the complaint of appellant for want of equity, is correct, and the same is affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

JAMES E. COMSTOCK

v.

TOWN OF WATERFORD, Appt.

(85 Conn. 6, 81 Atl. 1059.)

Tax — notice — want of — waiver.

1. Want of statutory notice of an addition to a tax list is waived by appealing to the assessors for relief on learning that the addition has been made.

Same — severable cottages — to whom taxable.

2. Cottages placed on real estate by lessees, supported by posts set in the

Note. — To whom are improvements removable by tenant at expiration of term taxable.

The question whether the burden of the tax must ultimately rest upon the lessor or upon the lessee, irrespective of the question to whom it should be assessed in the first instance, is not within the scope of the present note, but is covered in the note to La Paul v. Heywood, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 368.

In some instances improvements removable by the tenant at the end of the term have been held assessable to him as personalty.

Thus where the lessee of a mine agreed to construct the necessary buildings, and, upon complying with the conditions of the lease, should have the right to remove the same, they were held in Re Maplewood Coal Co. 213 Ill. 283, 72 N. E. 786, the personal property of the lessee and subject to assessment as his property, until, by a noncompliance with the terms of the lease, he should forfeit his rights, when by reason of the forfeiture the buildings would become a part of the realty.

It seems that the clause in the lease giving a lessee power to remove improvements erected by him makes such improvements personal property and as such taxable to him.

So, buildings erected by a lessee under lease of land silent as to taxes, giving him the right of removal, were held in East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Morristown, — Tenn. —, 35 S. W. 771, personal property taxable to the lessee, and not to the lessor. The court said: "But the right of removal as to buildings and structures that might be erected upon the leased property, secured to the lessee in the instrument of lease, prevented such buildings and structures from becoming technically improvements upon the real estate, and made these per- 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) ground, are assessable for taxation to the lessor, under a statute providing that any interest in real estate listed for taxation shall be set in the list of the person in whose name the title to such interest stands on the land records of the town, although the lessees have a contract right to remove them at the expiration of the term.

(December 19, 1911.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New London County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to set aside proceedings by the board of relief adding property to plaintiff's tax list. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles A. Gallup and C. L. Avery, for appellant:

The property assessed was, for the purpose of taxation, real estate.

Sanford's Appeal, 75 Conn. 592, 54 Atl. 739; Milligan v. Drury, 130 Mass. 430:

sonal property. . . . The personal character may be given to the building by contract, and it is held that when the erection is under a contract that the building may be removed by the builder, it will be regarded as personalty."

Under statutes to the effect that all lands within the state, owned by individuals or by corporations, shall be liable to taxation, and the term "land" shall include the land itself and all buildings and structures erected upon or affixed to the same, erections by the lessee must be deemed to partake of the nature of realty. Improvements removable by the tenant at the end of the term have been held assessable to him as realty.

Thus, under such a statute buildings resting upon sills laid upon the top of the ground, erected by the lessee and removable by him at the expiration of the term, upon condition that he pay the rents and taxes as stipulated by the lease, were held in Milligan v. Drury, 130 Mass. 428, taxable to him as realty in the state where the land was located, notwithstanding that he had paid taxes on them as personalty in another state, where he was domiciled.

So, where a building was erected by a bank upon land leased from a church, the lease giving the lessor an option at the end of the term to pay for the building so erected or to renew the lease for a further term: and giving the lessee the right if so renewed to remove the building at the expiration of the term, it was held in People ex rel. Van Nest v. Tax & A. Comrs. 80 N. Y. 573, by reason of such a statute as above indicated that the building was real estate of which the bank was the owner, and it was taxable to the lessee bank as real estate.

And so, where a benevolent society leased to parties lands for a specified term, with covenants of renewal from term to term, the lessor having the privilege at the expiration of any term to resume possession

People ex rel. New York Edison Co. v. Wells, 135 App. Div. 646, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1057, affirmed in 198 N. Y. 607, 92 N. E. 1097; Sprague v. Lisbon, 30 Conn. 20; Detroit United R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 136 Mich. 102, 98 N. W. 997; Patterson v. Delaware County, 70 Pa. 382; Ex parte Makepeace, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 91; Doe v. Tenino Coal & I. Co. 43 Wash. 526, 86 Pac. 938; Newport Illuminating Co. v. Tax Assessors, 19 R. I. 632, 36 L.R.A. 266, 36 Atl. 426; John P. Squire & Co. v. Portland, 106 Me. 238, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 576, 76 Atl. 679, 20 Ann. Cas. 603; Andrews v. The Auditor, 28 Gratt. 115.

Messrs. Abel P. Tanner and John J. Lawless, for appellee:

The cottages were personal property.

Parker v. Redfield, 10 Conn. 490; Curtiss v. Hoyt, 19 Conn. 165, 48 Am. Dec. 149; Landon v. Platt, 34 Conn. 523; Linahan v. Barr, 41 Conn. 473; Morey v. Hoyt, 62 Conn. 559, 19 L.R.A. 611, 26 Atl. 127; upon paying the lessees the appraised value of the buildings erected by them upon the premises, the lessees covenanting to pay as rent a certain percentage on the value of the land alone, and to erect thereon buildings as specified, it was held in People ex rel. Muller v. Board of Assessors, 93 N. Y. 308, that the buildings were properly assessed to the lessees as real estate, and did not come within the letter of a statute exempting all the real and personal property of the lessor.

So, where a certain church owning real estate exempt from taxation under statute, leased it for sixty years to a life insurance company, by the terms of the lease the lessee to erect a substantial building on the land according to plans approved by the lessor, and to pay all taxes and assessments on the property, the lessor at the end of the term to pay for the building a price to be fixed by appraisers, it was held in Russell v. New Haven, 51 Conn. 259, that the building was taxable to the lessee as real estate. "We think [says the court] this case is clearly within the distinction taken in Parker v. Redfield, 10 Conn. 490. In that case, which related to this same property, it was held that buildings erected on the land by the lessees under an agreement that they might be removed at the end of the term were the property of the lessees and were taxable. Had there been an agreement in this lease that the lessees might remove the building, that case might have been directly in point. But, instead of such an agreement, the agreement is that the lessor shall purchase the building. That circumstance, however, does not change the legal aspect of the case. The principle applicable to the two cases is precisely the same in reference to the mere question of taxation. An agreement to purchase recognizes the right of property in the lessee, as 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Field v. Guilford Water Co. 79 Conn. 72, 63 Atl. 723; Sanford's Appeal, 75 Conn. 592, 54 Atl. 739; Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. 381, 27 Am. Dec. 675; Russell v. Richards, 10 Me. 429, 25 Am. Dec. 254; Hilborne v. Brown, 12 Me. 162; Tapley v. Smith, 18 Me. 12.

The assessment was void for want of notice to the plaintiff.

Meyer v. Trubee, 59 Conn. 426, 22 Atl. 424.

Roraback, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appeal presents two questions: First, whether the assessment in question was void for want of notice to the taxpayer; second, whether the property assessed was, for the purpose of taxation, real estate.

It appears that the plaintiff, who was a resident of the town of Waterford, filed with the assessors of the town a tax list showing that he was the owner of the land upon completely and as clearly as does the agreement that he may remove the building."

In State ex rel. Ziegenhein v. Mission Free School, 162 Mo. 332, 62 S. W. 998, the lessee's interest in a building under a lease from a charitable organization exempt from taxation, which provided that the building should not become a part of the realty, but shall remain the personality of the lessee, was held taxable to him, whether as personality or realty it was not necessary to inquire. It was further held that such interest must be assessed to the lessee, and could not be reached under an assessment against the lessor. In this connection attention is called to the inadvertent omission of the word "not" from the statement of this case in the note in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 370.

In La Paul v. Heywood, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 368, it is declared in general terms that where a lease is silent as to the payment of taxes, improvements which are removable by the tenant at the end of the term are taxable to him, and not to the landlord. As stated in the note appended to that case, however, the question was not as to the party to whom the improvements should be taxed, but whether the burden of the tax must ultimately rest on the lessor or on the lessee.

The case of People ex rel. International Nav. Co. v. Barker, 153 N. Y. 98, 47 N. E. 46, affirming 15 App. Div. 628, though not strictly in point, is included for the purposes of comparison. In that case a shed erected by the lessee upon a pier, pursuant to a lease from the city requiring its erection, and providing that it was to become the property of the city on the expiration of the lease, was held to be the property of the city as soon as it was erected and affixed to the realty, and hence was not assessable for taxation as property of the which four cottages then stood, but did not include these cottages in the list. Subsequent to the filing of this list, the board of assessors of Waterford added these cottages to the plaintiff's tax list. The plaintiff was not notified of this addition, but learned of it, and appealed to the board of relief, before whom he was duly heard.

The plaintiff was entitled, under chap. 154 of the Public Act of 1905, p. 300, to written notice of the addition made to his list. This defect was waived by his appeal to the board of relief. Quinnebaugh Reservoir Co. v. Union, 73 Conn. 294, 299, 47 Atl. 328. On October 1, 1909, the plaintiff was the owner and had record title to a tract of land situated in the town of Waterford. On that day, and for several years prior thereto, there had been standing on this land four summer cottages, described as the "Arthur Gager cottage," the "Allen Richards cottage," the "Grace Bitgood cottage," and the "Club House." The land on which each cottage stood was leased by the plaintiff to the owner of the building by a written lease for a period of years. These leases all expressed that the land was to be used for summer cottages. The leases of the Arthur Gager cottage and the Allen Richards cottage were recorded in the land records of the town of Waterford. The other two leases were not recorded. The Gager cottage was built in the year 1903, at a cost of about $700. The Richards cottage was built in the winter of 1905 and 1906, at a cost of about $600. The Bitgood cottage was built in the year 1903, at a cost of about $125. The Club House was built in 1905, at a cost of about $700. Each of the houses was built where it now stands, of lumber and other materials brought to the place and there assembled and nailed together. They were supported upon chestnut posts set into the ground, the sills of the buildings being nailed to the tops of the posts. They were not built in sections, and were not of the description called "portable houses." No one of the described buildings has ever been moved from the place where it was built. Photographs of these houses exhibited in this court indicated that their outward appearance was that of permanent summer cottages.

Evidence was admitted and certain facts found by the trial court based on this evidence as to the mutual understanding and agreement of the parties as to these leases. The purpose of this evidence, and the finding of the court thereon, was to show that it was not the intention of the parties that these cottages should become a part of the plaintiff's real estate. For the purposes of this case, this evidence and these facts were immaterial. The private contracts and arrangements between the lessor and his lessees as to these buildings were not binding upon the town of Waterford or its assessors. Milligan v. Drury, 130 Mass. 428, 430. The question here presented is not whether under the strict rules of the common law these cottages should as between the parties be termed real estate or personal property.

Our present inquiry is whether these buildings, for the purposes of taxation, come within the provisions of § 2299 of the General Statutes of 1902, which provide that "any interest in real estate listed for taxation shall be set by the assessors in the list of the party in whose name the title to such interest stands on the land records of the town in which such real estate is situated." These cottages have been permanently located upon the plaintiff's land in the town of Waterford for several years. While it is true that the lessor's interest in this real estate may be terminated, yet there is nothing to indicate that any one of the parties to these arrangements contemplated such a termination. The buildings are attached to the land in the manner adopted for permanent structures, and as such they have been so treated and used. They are not a part of the freehold for all lessee. The court said: "The appellants rest their argument with respect to the question of ownership upon the provision of the lease above mentioned, that the shed shall become the property of the city after the expiration of the lease; which provision, as they maintain, shows that it was in contemplation of both parties that the erections should be the property of the steamship company [lessee] during the term of the lease. We think that this is an incorrect view of the situation. It is a familiar rule that when structures are erected by persons not owners of the land they become part of the realty, and as such, the property of the landowner. It requires an agreement to be expressed in order to prevent the operation of this rule. If the right of removal is reserved to the lessee in a lease, then, in such a case, he would be regarded as an owner of real estate for the purpose of taxation. People ex rel. Van Nest v. Tax & A. Comrs. 80 N. Y. 573. . . . The general rule, where the lease is silent upon the subject, imposes upon the lessor the obligation to pay the taxes upon the leased property, and in this case it would be a seeming incongruity if the city, which is the taxing power, could assess its tenant for taxation. The obligation to erect the structures, as one of the conditions of the letting, and the denial of the right of removal, are considerations which irresistibly militate against the assertion of a right to assess them as property of the relator [lessee] for taxation." J. D. C.

purposes only because of a right which may never be exercised to sever them. They possess all the physical attributes of real estate. These owners have the right to occupy and use this property the same as though it were real estate. Apparently § 2299 of the General Statutes was intended to apply to a case like the one now under consideration. All of the owners of these cottages are nonresidents of the town of Waterford.

The rule is universal that every municipal jurisdiction is entitled to the benefit of all the real estate lying within its borders, for the purposes of taxation. It is well known that in most instances persons owning this kind of property are nonresidents, many of them residing beyond the boundary lines of the state. It is a general rule that personal property liable to taxation follows the domicile of the owner. General Statutes, § 2323. If, as the plaintiff now contends, such buildings are to be treated as personal property, it would often happen that there would be no way in which their owners could be compelled to contribute to the municipality where the buildings are located, for the promotion of projects which have for their object the benefit of all. The language of the statute under consideration unmistakably indicates that it was intended to treat this kind of property as real estate for the purposes of taxation. It is concisely stated in the opening language of § 2299 as follows: "Any interest in real estate listed for taxation." This court in discussing this statute stated that "it is not a provision for the listing or taxation of personal property. It means that any . . . taxable interest in real estate shall be set in the list in the name of the owner of record of such interest. . . . Such an interest, unless otherwise provided by statute, is generally not taxable separately from the freehold, although there may be exceptional cases where an interest in real estate conveyed by an instrument in the form of a lease for a term of years may for certain purposes be regarded as a fee.

"The interest in real estate which § 2299 requires to be listed in the name of the record owner is not a mere chattel interest in land, but a freehold interest properly termed real estate." Sanford's Appeal, 75 Conn. 590, 592, 54 Atl. 739.

There is error, and the judgment is set aside and the cause remanded, with direction to enter a judgment affirming the action of the board of relief.

In this opinion the other Judges concur.
37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

EVA CUMMINGS

v.

PENNSYLVANIA FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 134 N. W. 79.)

Evidence — sufficiency — insurance — rider on policy.

1. Evidence that many years before a loss, insured applied to an insurer for a policy covering loss by fire and lightning, and received it, and that the insurance had been renewed from year to year since; and that the agent acknowledged, after the loss, that a lightning clause was attached to the policy,—is sufficient to carry the question whether or not it was upon the policy to the jury, although the policy is lost, and insured did not notice whether in fact it was on the policy last issued.

Same — entries on insurance register — admissibility.

2. Memoranda on the policy register of a deceased insurance agent are not admissible in evidence to prove the contents of a policy issued by him, subsequently lost, where they cannot be verified by anyone knowing the facts recited therein to be true.

Same — statute — professional expert.

3. Entries by an insurance agent in the policy register are not within the operation of a statute making admissible in evidence entries by a person since deceased when made in a professional capacity or in the ordinary course of professional conduct.

Insurance — fall of building — lightning.

4. Liability for injuries to insured goods by the throwing down of the building by lightning is not taken away by a provision of the policy insuring it against fire and lightning, that if the building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance shall cease.

Same — lightning — direct loss — falling of walls.

5. Insurance against direct loss or damage by lightning includes injuries to the property by being precipitated into water

Note. — Admissibility of insurance agent's memoranda or letters as to policies and risks.

It is said in 17 Cyc. 400, that a memorandum relating to the terms of a parol contract made at the time by a third person under circumstances showing an assent thereto by the parties, although not in itself a valid written contract, may be competent as substantive evidence tending to establish, in connection with other evidence, the terms of the contract; but if not made under the direction of both parties, or subsequently approved by them, the memorandum will be inadmissible.

A copy of an agent's daily report was held and debris by the throwing down of the walls of the building by a lightning stroke.

(January 11, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Allamakee County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for destruction of and injury to merchandise by lightning. Affirmed.

Statement by Ladd, J.:

Action on insurance policy resulted in judgment as prayed. The defendant appeals.

Messrs. Douglas Deremoro and Barger & Hicks, for appellant:

The insurance on the goods ceased and terminated when the building fell, even if the fall was the result of the building being struck by lightning.

Foster v. Home Ins. Co. 74 C. C. A. 445, 143 Fed. 307; Fred J. Kiesel & Co. v. Sun Ins. Office, 31 C. C. A. 515, 60 U. S. App. 10, 83 Fed. 243; Nelson v. Traders' Ins. Co. 181 N. Y. 472, 74 N. E. 421.

The goods were damaged by being precipitated and falling into the water by reason of the fall of the building containing them, and such damage was not direct damage by lightning.

Warmcastle v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 201 Pa. 302, 50 Atl. 941; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 64 Kan. 115, 67 Pac. 440; Vorse v. Jersey Plate Glass Ins. Co. 119 Iowa, 555, 60 L.R.A. 838, 97 Am. St. Rep. 330, 93 N. W. 569; Beakes v. Phenix Ins. Co. 143 N. Y. 402, 26 L.R.A. 267, 35 N. E. 453; German F. Ins. Co. v. Roost, 55 Ohio St. 581, 36 L.R.A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711, 45 N. E. 1097.

Evidence was not admissible tending to show that a lightning clause was attached to the policy sued on, because the testimony was secondary, and not the best evidence, and not the best kind of secondary evidence, and no foundation for the introduction of the same was shown, the company's policy register being the best evidence of the contents of the lost policy.

1 Greenl. Ev. Lewis's ed. § 84, note 3; 2 Shinn, Pl. & Pr. p. 1043; Wilson v. South Park, 70 Ill. 46; Illinois Land & Loan Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 315; Bryan v. Smith, 3 Ill. 47; Conger v. Converse, 9 Iowa, 557; Higgins v. Reed, 8 Iowa, 298, 74 Am. Dec. 305; Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 262, 65 Am. Dec. 344; Cornett v. Williams (Nash v. Williams) 20 Wall. 226, 246, 22 L. ed. 254, 257; Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 9 inadmissible in Strauss v. Phenix Ins. Co. 9 Colo. App. 386, 48 Pac. 822, for the purpose of supporting the agent's testimony that he was without knowledge of existence of other insurance at the time of the issuance of the policy; the court saying that the instrument was neither an original instrument, nor such a memorandum as could be offered in evidence to support the insurance company's case, and that if it was available at all it could only be used in order to refresh the recollection of the witness.

And an agent's report of the risk to the company was, in Phenix Ins. Co. v. La Pointe, 118 Ill. 384, 8 N. E. 353, held inadmissible on the question of notice to the company of an encumbrance upon the property, upon the ground that it constituted no part of the transaction and was therefore no part of the res gestæ, where it was made neither at the time of the agreement, nor in the assured's presence, but was made by an agent who had no conversation with the assured in reference to the insurance until the loss occurred.

The insurance company's book of entries of risks taken, in which an alleged oral contract for insurance is not entered, is inadmissible in an action upon the contract to prove its nonexistence. Sanborn v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 16 Gray, 448, 77 Am. Dec. 419.

It was stated in Glassner v. Johnston, 133 Wis. 485, 113 N. W. 977, that a letter written by the general agent of an insurance company declaring that the policy delivered complied with the application would be incompetent as evidence in favor of the insurance company, since it was a mere self-serving declaration made by the defendant out of court.

In Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schlink, 175 Ill. 284, 51 N. E. 795, a letter written from a state agent to a local agent was held inadmissible upon the ground that it was written after the insured died and the obligations of the parties under the policy had become fixed, so that anything the agent might have said in the letter could have had no bearing upon those rights.

It was held in Foreman v. German Alliance Ins. Asso. 104 Va. 694, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 444, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1071, 52 S. E. 337, that a receipt signed by an agent of an insurance company, not as such agent, but as agent for a loan association, for repayment to him of money advanced to pay premiums for insurance on property in which the association was interested, is not admissible, in an action upon an insurance policy, upon the question of waiver or forfeiture.

The cases as to the admissibility of memoranda or records in actions having no reference to the policy are excluded. This line of cases is illustrated by Williamson v. Cambridge R. Co. 144 Mass. 148, 10 N. E. 790, holding admissible in behalf of a railroad company sued for personal injuries, a copy of the application for insurance made and signed by the plaintiff subsequently to the injury; or Com. v. Smith, 151 Mass. 491, 23

Wheat, 597, 6 L. ed. 170; Mariner v. Saunders, 10 Ill. 113; Dunlap v. Berry, 5 Ill. 327, 39 Am. Dec. 413; Ellis v. Huff, 29 Ill. 451; Aspinwall v. Chisholm, 109 Ga. 437, 34 S. E. 563; Lewis v. Hudmon, 56 Ala. 186; Zalesky v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 512, 70 N. W. 187, 71 N. W. 433; Norris v. Billingsley, 48 Fla. 102, 37 So. 564; Matthews v. Union P. R. Co. 66 Mo. App. 663; Poignand v. Smith, 8 Pick. 272; Coman v. State, 4 Blackf. 241.

The evidence was not sufficient, even if competent, to show with sufficient certainty that there was any lightning clause in fact attached to the policy sued on.

White v. Herrman, 62 Ill. 73; Home Ins. Co. v. Adler, 71 Ala. 516.

Entries of the agent in the policy register were admissible as having been made in the usual course of professional conduct and in the professional capacity of agent.

Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 33 S. W. 710; Lebanon County v. Reynolds, 7 Watts & S. 330; State v. Hunt, 129 N. C. 686, 85 Am. St. Rep. 758, 40 S. E. 216; Ganahl v. Shore, 24 Ga. 17; Davenport v. Cummings, 15 Iowa, 219; Bean v. Lambert, 77 Fed. 862; Fogg v. Middlesex Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 349;

Com. v. Smith, 151 Mass. 491, 24 N. E. 677; Protection L. Ins. Co. v. Dill, 91 Ill. 176; Diehl v. Adams County Mut. Ins. Co. 58 Pa. 443, 98 Am. Dec. 302; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, 5 L. ed. 628; Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 Allen, 161; Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380; Beaver v. Taylor, 1 Wall. 637, 17 L. ed. 601; Roberts v. Rice, 69 N. H. 472, 45 Atl. 237; Dow v. Sawyer, 29 Me. 117; Lathrop v. Lawson, 5 La. Ann. 238, 52 Am. Dec. 585; Bank of Montgomery v. Plannett, 37 Ala. 222; Price v. Torrington, 1 Salk. 285; Doe ex dem. Pateshall v. Turford, 3 Barn. & Ad. 890, 1 L. J. K. B. N. S. 262; Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649, 1 Scott, 600, 1 Hodges, 162, 7 Car. & P. 79, 4 L. J. C. P. N. S. 196; Rawlins v. Rickards, 28 Beav. 370; Moshier v. Frost, 110 Ill. 206; Bentley v. Falker, 24 App. Div. 560, 49 N. Y. Supp. 691; 1 Greenl. Ev. 14th ed. §§ 82, 84, 114; 1 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 734 et seq. 1 Elliott, Ev. § 872; Abbott, Trial Ev. 2d ed. § 44; 2 Rice, Ev. pp. 748-751; State v. Brady, 100 Iowa, 191, 36 L.R.A. 693, 62 Am. St. Rep. 560, 69 N. W. 290; Owens v. State, 67 Md. 307, 10 Atl. 210, 302; Curtis v. Bradley, 65 Conn. 99, 28 L.R.A. 143, 48 Am. St. Rep. 177, 31 Atl. 594; Hesser v. Rowley, 139 Cal. 415, 73 Pac. 156; Haven v. Wendell, 11 N. H. 112;

N. E. 677, involving the admissibility of a book into which a written portion of a fire insurance policy had been copied, in a prosecution for arson; or Roberts v. Rice, 69 N. H. 472, 45 Atl. 237, holding entries in a policy register made in the usual course of business by an insurance agent since deceased, admissible to show the issuance of policies, in a suit between third parties.

Attention is also directed to Lynchburg Cotton Mill Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 654, 79 C. C. A. 464, 149 Fed. 954, holding that, although agents of an insurance company have no authority to waive provisions of the policy, letters written by them upon the question of the adjustment of a claim, after the company itself terminated the attempt at adjustment, are admissible in evidence in a suit upon the policy, upon the question whether a provision in the policy that suits must be brought within thirty days after the liability accrued was waived by efforts to compromise, prolonged beyond the expiration of such period.

For a similar case see Hill v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 14 Wash. 164, 44 Pac. 146, holding that letters from a local agent to a general agent tending to show that the company had not come to a final determination in regard to the payment of a claim are not admissible for the purpose of excusing the plaintiff from bringing his action within the time specified by the policy.

See also Corkery v. Security F. Ins. Co. 99 Iowa, 382, 68 N. W. 792, in which it appears that the applicant for the policy instructed the agent to inspect the records in the office of another insurance company holding insurance on the property, and to issue a policy like the existing one, and that such record contained the following recital: "Mortgage clause. Loss, if any, payable to" person other than applicant for policy,—and holding that since the agent read such entry in the record it was competent evidence because of what it contained, as tending to prove knowledge on his part of the existence of a mortgage in favor of the person named in the mortgage clause.

Generally as to the admissibility of reports by an agent or employee to employer to prove a fact in issue, see the notes in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 231, and 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 930.

As to train despatcher's record as evidence, see the note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190.

As to party's book of account as evidence in his own favor, see the note in 52 L.R.A. 546.

As to admissibility of partnership books of account, see the note in 52 L.R.A. 833.

As to what is provable by books of account, see the note in 52 L.R.A. 689.

As to the admissibility, upon testimony of a bookkeeper, of entries in a party's books of account, based upon oral or written statements by others, see the note in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899.

As to books of account as evidence between other parties, see the note in 53 L.R.A. 513.

L. A. W.

Borgess Invest. Co. v. Vette, 142 Mo. 560, 64 Am. St. Rep. 567, 44 S. W. 754; Garden City v. Heller, 61 Kan. 767, 60 Pac. 1061; New York v. Second Ave. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 572, 55 Am. Rep. 839, 7 N. E. 905; Moots v. State, 21 Ohio St. 653; Anchor Mill Co. v. Walsh, 108 Mo. 282, 32 Am. St. Rep. 600, 18 S. W. 904; Perry State Bank v. Elledge, 99 Ill. App. 307; Guy v. Mead, 22 N. Y. 462; Donovan v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 450, 33 N. E. 583; People v. Dow, 64 Mich. 717, 9 Am. St. Rep. 873, 31 N. W. 597; Kyburg v. Perkins, 6 Cal. 674; Home Ins. Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. 438, 20 L. ed. 197.

Mr. William S. Hart, for appellee:

Memoranda entries and reports by officers and employees of an insurance company, and between its agents and the home office, are admissible against a policy holder.

Straus v. Phenix Ins. Co. 9 Colo. App. 386, 48 Pac. 822; Glassner v. Johnston, 133 Wis. 485, 113 N. W. 977.

Self-serving, ex parte, private memoranda entries or reports are not admissible, be the declarant alive or dead.

Luke v. Koenen, 120 Iowa, 106, 94 N. W. 278; T. D. Kellogg Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Webster Mfg. Co. 140 Wis. 341, 122 N. W. 737; Avery v. Avery, 49 Ala. 195; Elsberg v. Sowards, 66 Hun, 30, 21 N. Y. Supp. 10; Costelo v. Crowell, 139 Mass. 588, 2 N. E. 698; Sherman v. Whiteside, 190 Ill. 576, 60 N. E. 838; Frank v. Pennie, 117 Cal. 254, 49 Pac. 208.

The inadmissibility of entries and memoranda of this nature is a general rule of universal application.

Heffner v. Brownell, 82 Iowa, 106, 47 N. W. 979; Lyman v. Bechtel, 55 Iowa, 437, 7 N. W. 673; Southern R. Co. v. Allison, 115 Ga. 635, 42 S. E. 15; Newhall v. Appleton, 102 N. Y. 133, 6 N. E. 120; Burns v. Stuart, 168 Mass. 19, 46 N. E. 399.

The nature of the entries and of the transaction does not bring it within the definition of an entry "made in a professional capacity, or in the ordinary course of professional conduct."

Com. ex rel. Hensel v. Fitler, 147 Pa. 288, 15 L.R.A. 205, 23 Atl. 568; Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich. 153, 32 Am. Rep. 148, 2 N. W. 176; Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 33 S. W. 710; Roth v. Boies, 139 Iowa, 287, 115 N. W. 930.

Appellee's proof that her original policy insured against fire and lightning is competent evidence that all subsequent renewals covered same hazard.

Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Yeagley, 34 Ind. App. 387, 72 N. E. 1035; Thomason v. Capital Ins. Co. 92 Iowa, 72, 61 N. W. 843; Taylor v. State Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 521, 60 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Am. St. Rep. 210, 67 N. W. 577; McLaughlin v. American F. Ins. Co. 126 Iowa, 149, 106 Am. St. Rep. 344, 101 N. W. 765.

A lightning clause insuring against direct loss from lightning covers all directly consequential results, excepting those especially excepted.

Russell v. German F. Ins. Co. 100 Minn. 538, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 326, 111 N. W. 400; Hapeman v. Citizens' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 126 Mich. 191, 86 Am. St. Rep. 535, 85 N. W. 454.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the afternoon of June 20, 1908, a storm of unusual violence raged at Waukon. Several inches of rain and hail fell within a half hour. The waters gathered in the depression along the course of a creek bed, through which a covered sewer had been constructed, several feet deep, and flowed rapidly past the southwest corner and west side of a brick building containing plaintiff's millinery stock and fixtures. As the hail ceased falling, the west wall of the building collapsed, and most of the property mentioned was precipitated into the water and débris. Whether this was caused by a stroke of lightning or water undermining the wall was an issue upon which the evidence was in conflict. The millinery stock and fixtures were covered by a policy issued by the defendant, and the issues were: (1) Whether a lightning clause insuring against damages caused by lightning was attached to the policy; (2) whether the wall was struck by lightning; (3) whether the injury to the insured property by débris and water was the direct consequence of the lightning; and (4) whether the policy subsequently was so canceled as to avoid liability. The evidence showed conclusively that neither the defendant's agent nor the insured had any intention of canceling the policy for the period of the term elapsed, and that the policy was merely terminated because the agent thought it advisable, as the goods were taken to another location where the premium was higher, that a new policy issued instead of transferring that then existing. The last defense mentioned, then, was without merit. As said, the evidence was in sharp conflict as to whether the building was strick by lightning, and we are not inclined to interfere with the verdict of the jury.

1. The loss of the policy was sufficiently explained, and there is no controversy concerning its contents, save that plaintiff claims that a lightning clause was attached thereto, while this is denied by defendant.

The latter insists that the evidence was insufficient to carry this issue to the jury, and complains of the refusal of the court to receive in evidence a purported copy of the written portion of the policy made by the recording agent, as tending to prove that the lightning clause was not attached. The policy was issued March 27, 1908, by being countersigned by the recording agent of defendant, F. H. Robbins. On Monday, the second day after the fire, plaintiff called on him for a copy of the policy lost, and asked that it be transferred to cover her goods in their new location. Instead, Robbins issued a new policy dated June 22, 1908, for the term of one year, at a higher rate, and delivered it to plaintiff without explanation. She handed this to her attorney, who, noticing the lightning clause attached, advised her that it was all right and made no further examination at that time. A few days later, upon noticing the difference in date, he interviewed Robbins about the matter, and the latter informed him that the policy was an exact copy of that lost, except the change in date, the rate of premium, and the location of the goods insured; that, as these had to be changed, he had thought it as well to issue a new policy, and had done so without intention of canceling that previously issued. Subsequently Robbins informed Murphy that the company had demanded that the lightning clause be detached, and was permitted to do so upon giving a receipt therefor. The plaintiff had not noticed whether the lightning clause was attached to the policy lost, but testified that some seventeen or eighteen years previous she had applied to Robbins for a policy insuring her goods against fire and lightning, and received such a policy, issued by defendant, and that each year upon the expiration of the existing policy in the defendant company the agent had handed her a policy as a renewal of that which had expired. Presumably each renewal was in terms and on conditions of the policy renewed. Thomason v. Capital Ins. Co. 92 Iowa, 72, 61 N. W. 843. See also Taylor v. State Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 521, 60 Am. St. Rep. 210, 67 N. W. 577; McLaughlin v. American F. Ins. Co. 126 Iowa, 149, 106 Am. St. Rep. 344, 101 N. W. 765. The evidence was sufficient to carry the issue to the jury.

2. The main contention of appellant is that the court erred: (1) In receiving the evidence of Murphy and plaintiff, for that it was not the best evidence available, it appearing that Robbins, as defendant's recording agent, kept a register containing a copy of all policies, including that lost, in his office; and (2) in refusing to receive such register so showing in evidence. Mrs. Eddy, who succeeded her father, F. H. Robbins, as defendant's agent at Waukon, testified that in issuing a policy a daily report is first made out to be sent to the company, and an exact copy thereof entered into the policy register, and then the policy prepared; that in the register and daily report a description of the property, the amount for which insured, the date, and the premium, and the rate are noted, and, if a lightning clause or gasoline clause is attached to the policy, this is indicated in the policy register, and, if any change is made subsequently, this is also noted in the register and the company notified. The daily report is mailed to the company and the register retained by the agent. She testified this was as her father had taught her, and that, so far as she knew, his policy register was kept in the same way, and the entries made at about the time of the transactions, and were in accordance with what he did with the different risks; and, upon being shown what purported to be the register entry concerning the lost policy, and of each preceding policy issued to plaintiff by defendant during the ten years previous, she said these were in the handwriting of her father. The several entries were then offered in evidence, including that of the lost policy, which as apparently made when the policy was issued may be set out: "Policy No. 384; name, Miss Eva Cummings; Commencement of risk, Mch. 27, 1908; expiration of risk, Mch. 27, 1909, amount insured, \$1,100; rate, 1.32; Prem. \$14.52. \$950 on her stock of millinery goods, ladies' furnishing goods, ribbons, trimmings, fancy goods and such other goods as are usually kept for sale by dealers in that branch of business, and \$150 on her show cases, mirrors, carpets, rugs, stands, tables, racks, desks, chairs, tools, millinery holders, millinery tools, and appliances, stoves, pipe, and fuel, all while contained in the first story and in cellar of the two-story brick composition roof building known on Sanborn map of Waukon, Iowa, as number 206, block 1, sheet 2. Other short-time insurance permitted on stock in spring and fall, but in no case to exceed three fourths ( $\frac{3}{4}$ ) of the value at time of writing. Co.'s gasoline stove permit attached to policy." On objection, the entries were excluded.

It may be conceded that, even though plaintiff can resort to secondary evidence to prove the lightning clause was attached to the policy, this must be the best attainable. Though the rule seems to be laid down broadly in England that there are no degrees in secondary evidence, the current of authority is otherwise in this country. Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250, 260, 65 Am. Dec. 344; Cornett v. Williams (Nash v. Williams) 20 Wall. 226, 246, 22 L. ed.

254, 257; Wilson v. South Park Comrs. 70 Ill. 46. And this court seems to be committed to the American doctrine. Conger v. Converse, 9 Iowa, 554; Higgins v. Reed, 8 Iowa, 298, 74 Am. Dec. 305; Zalesky v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 512, 70 N. W. 187, 71 N. W. 433. But the question does not arise in this case, for the reason that the entries offered were not admissible at all. They were mere memoranda made by the agent of the company, and not verified by anyone knowing the facts recited therein. Quite generally such private entries are excluded whether made by a party to the controversy, or his agent, as in the nature of self-serving declarations. Taylor v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 80 Iowa, 431, 46 N. W. 64; Lyman v. Bechtel, 55 Iowa, 437, 7 N. W. 673; Hoffman v. Milwaukee, M. & St. P. R. Co. 40 Minn. 60, 41 N. W. 301; T. D. Kellogg Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Webster Mfg. Co. 140 Wis. 341, 122 N. W. 737; Conner v. Seattle R. & S. R. Co. 56 Wash. 310, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 930, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1110, 105 Pac. 634; Strauss v. Phenix Ins. Co. 9 Colo. App. 386, 48 Pac. 822; Southern R. Co. v. Allison, 115 Ga. 635, 42 S. E. 15; Newhall v. Appleton, 102 N. Y. 133, 6 N. E. 120. And in the absence of statute the rule is not otherwise where the person making the memoranda has since died. Luke v. Koenen, 120 Iowa, 103, 94 N. W. 278; T. D. Kellogg Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Webster Mfg. Co. 140 Wis. 341, 122 N. W. 737; Avery v. Avery, 49 Ala. 193. Numerous decisions hold that memoranda or entries of many items which are verified by a witness having knowledge thereof may be received in evidence, not as evidence apart from the oral testimony, but in connection therewith as memoranda made at the time and verified as correct. State v. Brady, 100 Iowa, 195, 36 L.R.A. 693, 62 Am. St. Rep. 560, 69 N. W. 290; Curtis v. Bradley, 65 Conn. 99, 28 L.R.A. 143, 48 Am. St. Rep. 177, 31 Atl. 591. Of course there are exceptions, as the admissibility of entries of notaries and bank officials in matters of protest, presentation, and the like of negotiable instruments. Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, 5 L. ed. 628; Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380. And possibly of the record of the movement of trains made by a train despatcher. Donovan v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 450, 33 N. E. 583. But some courts hold that even train sheets, to be admissible, must be verified by witnesses having knowledge of the facts. Bronson v. Leach, 74 Mich. 713, 42 N. W. 174; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noel, 77 Ind. 110; Pittsburgh & I. E. R. Co. v. Cummington, 39 Ohio St. 327. And some cases are quoted and relied upon by appellant, where memoranda made by someone not connected with or interested in the controversy are held admissible.

It is enough to say that the memoranda in question are not within any of these classes, and, if admissible at all, this is by virtue of § 4622 of the Code, which provides that "the entries and other writings of a person deceased, who was in a position to know the facts therein stated, made at or near the time of the transaction, are presumptive evidence of such facts, when the entry was made against the interest of the person so making it, or when made in a professional capacity or in the ordinary course of professional conduct, or when made in the performance of a duty especially enjoined by law." The contention of appellant is that the entries were either made in a "professional capacity," or in the ordinary course of "professional conduct." If so, then a recording agent of a fire insurance company must be regarded as a professional man. He is an employee of the insurer, and not of the insured, and all exacted of him is that he act with fidelity in negotiating, as the representative of his principal, with those desiring to obtain insurance on their property. Undoubtedly such agency is an occupation or vocation, but we do not regard it professional in any sense. Indeed, insurance has been construed to be a commodity (Beechley v. Mulville, 102 Iowa, 602, 63 Am. St. Rep. 479, 70 N. W. 107, 71 N. W. 428), though issuing a policy is said not to be a transaction in interstate commerce (Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207). A policy of insurance is merely a contract to indemnify against loss by fire entered into between the insurer and the insured for a consideration; the policy coming to the recording agent in printed form. His duties are to fill out the blanks, countersign and report to the company what he has done, and make memoranda thereof in his register. Aside from this, he may solicit business and examine the property to be insured. But all this requires no special skill or learning, and is in no sense professional within the accepted meaning of that word. "Professional" is that which pertains to a profession, and Webster's New International Dictionary defines "profession" as "that of which one professes knowledge; the occupation if not purely commercial, mechanical, agricultural, or the like to which one devotes oneself; a calling in which one professes to have acquired some special knowledge used by way either of instructing, guiding, or advising others or of serving them in some art, calling, vocation, employment; as, the profession of arms, the profession of chemist." The Standard Dictionary: "An occupation that properly involves a liberal education or its equivalent, and mental rather than manual labor; especially one of the three learned professions. (2) Hence any calling or occupation involving special mental and other attainments or special discipline, as editing, acting, engineering, authorship." The Century Dictionary: "The calling or occupation which one professes to understand and to follow; vocation; specifically, a vocation in which a professed knowledge of some department of science or learning is used by its practical application to affairs of others, either in advising, guiding, or teaching them, or in serving their interests or welfare in the practice of an art founded on it. Formerly theology, law, medicine were specifically known as the professions; but, as the applications of science and learning are extended to other departments of affairs, other vocations also receive the name. The word implies professed attainments in special knowledge, as distinguished from mere skill; a practical dealing with affairs, as distinguished from mere study or investigation; and an application of such knowledge to uses for others as a vocation, as distinguished from its pursuit for one's own purposes."

It is apparent from these definitions that, to constitute a profession, something more than a mere employment or vocation is essential; the employment or vocation must be such as exacts the use or application of special learning or attainments of some kind, and this seems to be the conclusion of the court. Thus a chemist is a person belonging to a recognized profession. United States v. Laws, 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998. So is a consulting engineer. Ericsson v. Brown, 38 Barb. 390. See Lebanon County v. Reynolds, 7 Watts & S. 329. A building contractor is not. Re Whetmore, Deady, 585, Fed. Cas. No. 17,508. Nor is a milliner a "professional artist" within the act of Congress prohibiting the immigration of aliens under contract to perform labor. United States v. Thompson (C. C.) 41 Fed. 28. One who operates a real estate agency is not engaged in a professional employment. Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich. 153, 32 Am. Rep. 148, 2 N. W. 176, where the court said: "Professional employment can only relate to some of those occupations universally classed as professions, the general duties and character of which courts must be expected to understand judicially. Real estate agencies are no more professions than any other business agencies. A commission merchant, or any agent for the sale of any particular kind of personal property, acts in an analogous capacity. Anyone can assume and lay down such business at pleasure, and anyone can conduct it in his own way, on such terms and conditions as he sees fit to adopt. There is nothing in our laws which would enable any court to draw a line between such business agencies. They are not classed as professions by popular usage or by law." Nor is a sewing-machine agent so engaged. People ex rel. Singer Mfg. Co. v. McAllister, 19 Mich. 215. The renting of tolls is not a profession or trade. Bellamy v. Burch, 16 Mees. & W. 590. Debts due for board to a hotel keeper are not professional earnings. Youst v. Willis, 5 Okla. 170, 49 Pac. 56. See Roth v. Boies, 139 Iowa, 253, 115 N. W. 930; Com. ex rel. Hensel v. Fitler, 147 Pa. 288, 15 L.R.A. 205, 23 Atl. 568. In State v. Hunt, 129 N. C. 686, 85 Am. St. Rep. 758, 40 S. E. 216, Douglas, J., expressed the opinion that procuring laborers to accept employment in another state by an emigrant agent is a profession; but this does not seem to have been essential to the decision, and the other judges expressed no opinion on the point. In Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 33 S. W. 710, the Texas court of civil appeals held that, within the exemption laws, an insurance agent should be regarded as engaged in a trade, but expressed no opinion as to whether he should be regarded as engaged in a profession. Insurance agents are not spoken of, in common parlance, as professional men, nor is their work to be classed as professional. It follows that the memoranda in the policy register cannot be said to have been made in a professional capacity nor in the course of professional conduct.

In Com. v. Smith, 151 Mass. 491, 24 N. E. 677, the court merely held that the memoranda in the policy register, supplemented by oral testimony of the agent, was admissible notwithstanding the existence of other evidence alleged to be of better quality. The ruling in Roberts v. Rice, 69 N. H. 472, 45 Atl. 237, was on the theory that the entries in the policy register were made by a third person since deceased. An insurance company necessarily acts through agents, and here the action is between the original parties, one of whom is the plaintiff and the other the company for whom the agent acted in the very matters in controversy. Clearly enough, such entries were in the nature of self-serving declarations, and, when not verified by a witness knowing the facts, were not admissible in evidence.

3. The policy to which the lightning clause was attached stipulated that "if a building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately ceased." Counsel contend that, as the lightning clause is subject to the terms and conditions of the policy, defendant is not liable for that the injury occurred after the walls fell. The evident design of that clause was to obviate liability for loss by fire consequent upon or subsequent to the falling of the building insured, and we are referred to several cases deciding that in that event there is no liability under such a policy. Foster v. Home Ins. Co. 74 C. C. A. 445, 143 Fed. 307; Fred J. Kiesel & Co. v. Sun Ins. Office, 31 C. C. A. 515, 60 U. S. App. 10, 88 Fed. 243; Nelson v. Traders' Ins. Co. 181 N. Y. 472, 74 N. E. 421. Possibly all insurance under the lightning clause, except as a result of lightning, would have ceased upon the falling of the building, and this would seem a fair interpretation of the two clauses read together. Surely, it could not have been intended in stipulating indemnity for loss by lightning and at the same time to eliminate the natural consequences of a stroke of lightning. Manifestly, the clause quoted has reference to the falling of a building consequent of causes other than those insured against, and the lightning clause is subject to the condition as so construed. See Haws v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 114 Pa. 431, 7 Atl. 159. Moreover, the walls in falling precipitated the goods of insured in the water and debris, and no time appears to have elapsed between the falling of the wall and the injury upon which the claim of damages is predicated. In any event, then, the damages are within the terms of the contract.

4. If a lightning clause were attached to the policy covering plaintiff's goods, it is conceded to have been in words following: "This policy shall cover any direct loss or damage caused by the lightning (meaning thereby the commonly accepted use of the term 'lightning,' and in no case to include loss or damage by cyclone, tornado, or windstorm), not exceeding the sum insured, nor the interest of the insured in the property, and subject in all respects to the terms and conditions of this policy." Appellant contends that, even though the wall was struck by lightning, and by its fall the goods were precipitated into the debris and water, the damage from these was not the "direct loss or damage caused by lightning," relying upon several cases, none of which, as we think, support the contention. In Warmcastle v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 201 Pa. 302, 50 Atl. 941, the policy assumed liability for "direct loss from lightning in no case to include loss or damage by cyclone, tornado, or windstorm," and the court recognized that, "as a general principle, the insurer is liable for all loss which results from or can be fairly attributed to the peril insured against," but proceeded to say that liability might be limited, and in that case liability for damage caused by cyclone, tornado, and windstorm was expressly excluded, and, though it might be difficult to say the amount of damages occasioned by the wind, plaintiff could only recover for that occasioned by lightning. In Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 64 Kan. 115, 87 Pac. 440, the policy stipulated for indemnity against "all such immediate loss or damage sustained by the injured as may occur by tornadoes, cyclones, and windstorms," and provided that the insurer should not be liable for any loss or damage occasioned by hail and water. Windows were broken by hail, and damages were denied because of the exception noted. See also Beakes v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 143 N. Y. 402, 26 L.R.A. 267, 33 N. E. 453; German F. Ins. Co. v. Roost, 55 Ohio St. 581, 36 L.R.A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711, 45 N. E. 1097; Vorse v. Jersey Plate Glass Ins. Co. 119 Iowa, 555, 60 L.R.A. 838, 97 Am. St. Rep. 330, 93 N. W. 569. It will be observed that the decisions turn on an exception contained in the policies which may have found its way there because of the conclusion in Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 54 Wis. 433, 11 N. W. 894, holding that, in the absence of any exceptions, where injury is caused by windstorm or cyclone accompanied by lightning, the issue of whether the electric storm is the cause of the injury to property covered by a lightning clause attached to the insurance policy was for the jury. No argument would seem to be necessary in this case to demonstrate that no efficient cause intervened between the stroke of lightning and the damage to the goods from coming in contact with the debris and water of the flood. Certainly it might have been found that the fall of the building was caused by the stroke of lightning, and as a natural sequence that the goods were precipitated in the water and debris. Courts have held that the fall of a building directly resulting from an ordinary fire is within the terms of the policy against fire (Ermentrout v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. 63 Minn. 305, 30 L.R.A. 346, 56 Am. St. Rep. 481, 65 N. W. 635), and that injury to another building from the fall of one burned may be within the policy covering the former (Russell v. German Ins. Co. 100 Minn. 538, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 326, 111 N. W. 400), and that injury resulting from water or chemicals in extinguishing the fire is a direct result of the fire, and covered by the policy. (Geisek v. Crescent Mut. Ins. Co. 19 La. Ann. 297; Lewis v. Springfield F.

& M. Ins. Co. 10 Gray, 159; Whitehurst v. Fayetteville Mut. F. Ins. Co. 51 N. C. [6 Jones, L.] 352; Cohn v. National Ins. Co. 96 Mo. App. 315, 70 S. W. 259). Loss by theft consequent upon the confusion attending a fire, or injury to goods in their removal from the building, is regarded as a direct consequence of the fire. Newmark v. Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. 30 Mo. 160, 77 Am. Dec. 608; Mitchell v. Union L. Ins. Co. 45 Me. 104, 71 Am. Dec. 529. In Hapeman v. Citizens' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 126 Mich. 191, 86 Am. St. Rep. 535, 85 N. W. 454, horses insured against lightning were in a barn which was struck by lightning, and were burned by the fire which followed, and the insurer was held liable. In the light of these decisions, it seems unnecessary to add that the injury to the goods from water and débris into which they were precipitated by the falling of the wall was the direct and natural consequence of the stroke of lightning.

The judgment is affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 2.)

STATE OF MISSOURI, Resp't,

v.

PATRICK WHITE, Appt.

(237 Mo. 208, 140 S. W. 896.)

Voter — illegal registration — good faith — effect.

A discharged convict cannot be convicted of illegally registering as a voter if he act-

Note. — Good faith as affecting criminal responsibility for illegal registration or voting.

As a general rule no criminal responsibility attaches for illegal registration or voting, where the voter acted honestly and the mistake was one of fact as to his qualification. But the rule that every person is conclusively presumed to know the law, and that ignorance or mistake of law will not relieve from criminal responsibility, has generally been applied to illegal voting.

In several cases, however, this rule has not been applied where the statute made it a criminal offense to wilfully vote "knowing himself not to be a qualified voter;" holding evidence admissible upon the question of wilful voting, that the voter, being in doubt, relied upon the opinion of persons learned in the law. Com. v. Bradford, 9 Met. 268; State v. Savre, 129 Iowa, 122, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 455, 113 Am. St. Rep. 452, 105 N. W. 387. To the same effect are obiter statements in State v. Sheeley, 15 Iowa, 404; Hamilton v. People, 57 Barb. 625.

In a few other cases it has been held 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ed in good faith believing, upon advice of registration officers, that the papers given him upon his release from confinement restored his citizenship.

(November 14, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis convicting him of unlawfully registering as a voter. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Elliott W. Mayor, Attorney General, and John M. Dawson, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

The evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction.

State v. Exnicious, 223 Mo. 68, 122 S. W. 730; State v. Tiernan, 223 Mo. 147, 122 S. W. 728.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the December term, 1909, of the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, defendant was convicted of the crime of unlawfully registering as a voter in said city, as prohibited by § 4441, Rev. Stat. 1909, and appeals from a judgment fixing his punishment at two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

In the year 1901, defendant pleaded guilty in the circuit court of St. Louis city to the crime of grand larceny, and was sentenced to a term of two years in the penitentiary. Notwithstanding he was by that conviction rendered ineligible to vote, he applied to register, and did register, as a voter in said city on September 14, 1908.

There was evidence on the part of the

that it was necessary to show that accused actually knew that he was violating the law, to sustain a conviction for illegal voting, though he knew the existence of a state of facts which disqualified him in point of law and rendered his vote illegal.

In harmony with STATE v. WHITE it was held in State v. Pearson, 97 N. C. 434, 2 Am. St. Rep. 303, 1 S. E. 914, that the decision of the election officers (as to effect of pardon of one convicted of crime) in favor of the right of a party to vote, in the absence of fraud and collusion and when honestly acted upon, will secure the voter immunity from criminal liability, though it should afterwards appear that he did not have the right to vote. To the same effect are obiter statements in State v. Boyett, 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 336, and State v. Hart, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 389.

But in Morris v. State, 7 Blackf. 607, it was held that the determination of the judges of the election in favor of the defendant's right to vote cannot avail him as a defense to an indictment for fraudulent voting, since they may have been imposed upon by the statements of the defendant, state to the effect that when the defendant applied to register he was sworn to testify regarding his qualifications as a voter, and testified that he had never been convicted of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime. There was also some evidence indicating that some of the resigtration officers in the precinct where defendant registered had knowledge of the fact that he had been convicted of grand larceny, but failed to call his attention to that fact when he applied to register.

Defendant testified in his own behalf that at the time of his discharge from the penitentiary, in 1902, the warden said to him: "Here is your pardon papers. Now go home and be a good citizen." That, prior to the next election after his release, he exhibited papers received when he was discharged from the penitentiary, under the three-fourths rule, to the registration officers of his precinct, and was by said officers informed that such papers entitled him to vote. Whereupon he did register and vote at an election held in the year 1904. That in registering on September 14, 1908, he believed his citizenship had been restored, and that he was entitled to vote. There was evidence that an attorney applied to the governor to pardon defendant a short time before he registered in 1908, and that such pardon was not granted. Defendant's so-called pardon papers were not produced at the trial, and there was some evidence that they had been lost or mislaid.

Among the instructions given to the jury or they may have mistaken the law. (The facts relied upon to sustain the conviction for fraudulent voting do not appear.)

The belief by accused that the statute prohibiting persons, convicted of felony and not pardoned, from voting, had no application to him, because he was a minor but seventeen years of age when so convicted, is no defense. Hamilton v. People, 57 Barb. 625. In this case the defendant offered to show that, on application for a pardon, the governor advised him that it was not necessary, because of his minority, and that he would be entitled to all the rights of citizenship on reaching his majority, and that he had also been advised by legal counsel that, never having possessed the right of voting, it could not be taken away by his conviction during his minority; but the court sustained the conviction and the exclusion of this evidence, on the ground that the offer as made was to prove an ignorance of the law by the defendant, and not that he believed and acted upon the advice of counsel that he could legally vote. It is intimated, however, that if he had proposed to prove good faith and an honest purpose to ascertain the right, and that he had believed and acted upon the advice, so as to bring the case within the rule laid down in Com. v. Bradford, 9 Met. 268, the evidence would have been received.

So, knowledge by a voter of his prior conviction of crime, which by law disqualified him from voting, was equivalent to knowing that he was not a qualified voter upon the principle that one is conclusively presumed to know the law. Thompson v. State, 26 Tex. App. 94, 9 S. W. 486. The court said: "He cannot be heard to deny such knowledge, and it was not necessary that it should be proved that he had such knowledge, because the presumption of law supplied and dispensed with such proof."

And it is no defense to the charge of illegal voting, by one disqualified because of conviction of crime, that accused had forgotten the fact of his former conviction, or that he had been advised by friends or legal counsel that there was no record of the conviction upon the court dockets; and that he voted under that advice, honestly believing that he had a lawful right to vote, since he was conclusively bound to know and remember the fact of his former conviction, as fully as he was bound to know the legal effect of such conviction, which was to disqualify him to exercise the right of suffrage. Gandy v. State, 86 Ala. 20, 5 So. 420, s. c. on former appeal, 82 Ala. 61, 2 So. 465.

In People v. Harris, 29 Cal. 678, it was held that the act of voting more than once at the same election was not a crime unless done knowingly and with criminal intent.

So, it was held that one could not be convicted of illegal voting if, by reason of his intoxicated condition, he was not conscious at the time of having voted before at the same election. Ibid.

But in State v. Welch, 21 Minn. 22, the court declined to follow the Harris Case, and held that it was no defense to the charge of voting more than once at the same election that defendant was intoxicated to such an extent when he cast his second vote that he did not know what he was doing and did not remember that he voted before.

One may be convicted of voting in more than one election district for the same officer, though he acted honestly, believing himself entitled to vote in the first district, but, finding he was mistaken, voted a second time in the district where he really belonged. State v. Perkins, 42 Vt. 399. It was contended that defendant was not guilty because he did not wilfully cast an illegal vote. The court said: "This ground is not tenable, because the offense consists in voting in more than one town, and not in any corrupt design. After having voted in Plainfield, he was disrobed of all right to vote for the same officer elsewhere, even though his vote in Plainfield was illegal, and not entitled to be counted. His second vote was illegal whether the first was or not, and whether his action be attributable to corruption or only to ignorance. The policy of the statute is to guard against illegal voting, by throwing upon the voter the necessity of determining for himself, to was the following: "If you find the facts in this case to be as set out in instruction No. 1, then the fact, if you find it to be a fact, that the defendant believed that he had been restored to citizenship, and had a right to register by reason of having been released from the penitentiary at the expiration of three fourths of the term for which he was sentenced to the penitentiary (if you find from the evidence that he had been sentenced to the penitentiary, and had been so released), is not a defense in his behalf in this case. The law does not permit a defendant to excuse himself for the commission of a crime, on the ground that he is ignorant of the law. Such a release from the penitentiary is not a pardon by the governor, and does not restore one to citizenship and the right to register as a qualified voter." The giving of this instruction was assigned as error in defendant's motion for a new trial, though he has not favored us with any brief herein. We think the court erred in instructing the jury as above set out, because it entirely deprived defendant of his defense that he was acting in good faith, and believed he was entitled to vote.

While it is true that everybody is supposed to know the law, it is nevertheless a fact that the most trained judicial minds often have great difficulty in determining what the law is on a given subject. The judges and clerks of election were acting under instructions from the election commissioners, or other proper officers, concern-some extent, where he belongs, and, if in doubt, compelling him to confine his vote to one place. He, of his own free will, voted in more than one town for the same officer, and this is precisely the act against which the statute has pronounced a penalty."

The belief of a woman that she had a right to vote is no defense to an indictment for knowingly voting without having a lawful right to vote, since she knew that she was a woman, and was conclusively presumed to know that the law did not extend the privilege of suffrage to women. United States v. Anthony, 11 Blatchf. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459.

And in People v. Barber, 48 Hun, 198, it was held in a prosecution against a female for illegal voting, under a statute making it an offense for one not duly qualified to vote who shall knowingly vote at any election, that the only questions of fact for the jury were whether the defendant was a female and had voted at the general election.

Likewise, under the following circumstances it has been held that it is not necessary to prove a criminal intent to support a conviction:

—for registering in two election districts. State v. Caldwell, 1 Marv. (Del.) 555, 41 Atl. 198; State v. Lally, 2 Marv. (Del.) 424, 43 Atl. 258. Contra, State v. Walsh, 203 Mo. 605, 102 S. W. 513;

—for furnishing the necessary registration fee to one for him to register and qualify as an elector in the election district. State v. Collins, 1 Penn. (Del.) 420, 42 Atl. 619;

—for inducing a voter to go into an election precinct to vote at an election. State v. Reed, 52 Or. 377, 97 Pac. 627;

—for falsely making a nomination paper by signing the name of a voter not in his presence and at his request, where the statute provides that it is to be signed by the voters "in person." Com. v. Connelly, 163 Mass. 539, 40 N. E. 862:

—under a statute making it an offense for any person other than an inspector of elections knowingly and wilfully to put ballots into a ballot box at an election. Hogan v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. 535;

—for knowingly and fraudulently voting at an election when not qualified because of not having resided in the district the required time; since one is presumed to know the law, and evidence that he acted honestly on advice of others that he had a right to vote was incompetent. State v. Boyett, 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 336. To the same effect is State v. Hart, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 389;

—for voting when not legally qualified, knowing he was not twenty-one years of age; since the accused must be presumed to know the law prescribing the qualifications of voters, which requires that they must have attained the age of twenty-one years, and that an offer to vote knowing that he was not qualified was illegal and criminal, and he cannot set up his ignorance of the statute as an excuse for its violation.

But a minor having the other necessary qualifications cannot be convicted of illegal voting where he acted in good faith, under an honest belief that he had reached his majority on information fairly obtained from his parents, relatives, or acquaintances having knowledge of the time of his birth. Gordon v. State, 52 Ala. 308, 23 Am. Rep. 575. To the same effect is Carter v. State, 55 Ala. 181.

In Gordon v. State, supra, the court said: "The whole inquiry should be directed to the voter's knowledge of facts, and to his diligence in acquiring the requisite knowledge. If he votes recklessly or carelessly, when the facts are doubtful or uncertain, his ignorance should not excuse him, if the real facts show he was not qualified. If ignorant of the disqualifying fact, and without a want of diligence, under an honest belief of his right to vote, he should be excused, though he had not the right."

In State v. Haynorth, 3 Sneed, 64, it was held that, although as a matter of pleading it was not necessary to aver in the indictment, under a statute which declared that "persons illegally voting" shall be liable to ing the qualifications of voters; and if it be true that defendant did exhibit his discharge papers from the penitentiary to the registration officers of his voting precinct, and said officers informed him that said discharge entitled him to vote, it would be a harsh rule to say that he can be convicted of a felony, because these election officers were mistaken and gave him improper advice.

If it is a fact that defendant swore falsely in order to register on September 14, 1908, then it would raise a strong presumption that he was not acting in good faith; or, if his right to vote had been challenged before he registered, this might raise a presumption that his unlawful act in registering was intentional and deliberate; but, under the laws of our state, no one can be convicted of a felony, in the absence of proof of an intent to do a criminal act. State v. Schilb, 159 Mo. 140, 60 S. W. 82; State v. Rigale, 169 Mo. 663, 73 S. W. 150, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 339.

The trial court erred in instructing the jury that the intent with which defendant did the act was no defense; and for that error we reverse its judgment, and remand the cause for a new trial.

Kennish, P. J., and Ferriss, J., concur.

indictment, that accused "knowingly" voted, yet on the trial it must appear from the evidence that accused either had knowledge, or in law was chargeable with knowledge, of the facts which made the vote illegal.

One voting, knowing the existence of a state of facts which disqualify him in point of law is guilty of "knowingly voting" at an election, not being at the time a qualified voter; since ignorance of the law is no excuse. McGuire v. State, 7 Humph. 54.

Accordingly it was held in the above case that one knowing himself to be a foreigner, who believed his declaration of renunciation and purpose to become a citizen of the United States sufficient to entitle him to vote, when in law it was insufficient, was guilty of "knowingly voting" not being at the time qualified. Ibid. The court said: "If the voter believe himself to be twenty-one years of age, when he is not, and vote, he does not know the existence of the disqualifying fact, and may, on that ground, be excused. But if he know that he is only twenty years of age, yet believes he is old enough, in point of law, to vote, such ignorance of the law will not excuse him. If the voter honestly believe that he has resided six months in the county before the election and the fact turn out otherwise he may be excused. But if he know that he has been only four months in the county before the election, yet he believes that to reside four months is, in point of law, residence enough, he shall not be excused. If a voter believe that he was born in the United States, and it turns out that he was born in a foreign country, he may be excused. But if he knows he is a foreigner, and has not taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, but has only made his declaration of renunciation, etc., and thinks the latter, in point of law, sufficient to entitle him to vote, this ignorance of the law shall not excuse him; for he voted knowing a state of facts to exist which, in point of law, disqualified him."

And in State v. McGinly, 2 Ohio Dec. Report, 398, it was held in a prosecution for voting, not being a citizen of the United States, that a mistake as to the law cannot excuse, but a mistake as to the facts may; 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that if accused honestly believed he had taken all the steps which the law required to become naturalized, and that by reason thereof he became naturalized, then he is not guilty; that on the contrary, if he misunderstood the law, as for example, supposed he had a right to vote on obtaining the first papers, or the declaration of intention, it was no defense.

In Com. v. Aglar, Thacher, Crim. Cas. 412, Brightly, Elect. Cas. 695, it was held that the act of a foreigner in voting under an honest belief, at the time, that he had the right to vote, would not amount to a wilful voting, "knowing himself to be not legally qualified" within the meaning of the statute making such voting an indictable offense, especially where it appeared he had resided in the country for many years, and, finding his name on the list of voters, had used the privilege without question.

So, to constitute a wilful aider and abettor in such an act, he too must know at the time, that the person was an unqualified voter and had no right to vote; and with such full knowledge he must have done or said something which, in the opinion of the jury, was designed and calculated to encourage the party to vote. Ibid.

To the same effect is State v. Sheely, 15 Iowa, 404, holding evidence that accused acted in accordance with the advice of friends not shown to have been learned in the law properly excluded; however it was said that as it was possible that a doubtful question might arise in regard to the fact of citizenship, in such a case evidence that accused acted only on advice of legal counsel would be competent as tending to disprove unlawful or criminal intent, though such evidence should not be conclusive.

In United States v. Burley, 14 Blatt. 91, Fed. Cas. No. 14,686, it was held that mere knowledge by accused that his certificate of naturalization had been issued without his presence in court, and without his taking the oath of allegiance, is not sufficient to warrant a conviction for using for the purpose of registering as a voter, a naturalization certificate, knowing the same to have been unlawfully issued.

So, in State v. Macomber, 7 R. I. 349, it was held that an honest mistake by a voter as to his right to vote will not warrant a conviction under a statute prescribing a penalty for fraudulently voting at an election without being qualified to vote, even though he was cognizant of the facts which disqualified him to vote (defect in registration).

In Smith v. Carey, 5 Ont. L. Rep. 203, 2 Ont. Week. Rep. 13, it was held in an action brought to recover a statutory penalty for illegally voting, knowing that he had no right to vote on account of residence, that proof of actual knowledge by the voter that he was doing something that was forbidden was required, and not merely proof that the vote was bad and that the voter knew the facts which in law made it so, but that the voter knew he was casting it without having the right to do so. Following Malcolm v. McNeill, 2 Ont. Elect. Rep. 10.

To the same effect was the ruling on the claim for a penalty under a statute for wilfully voting without having the necessary qualification. Ibid.

So, it has been held that it is necessary to prove a criminal intent to sustain a conviction under the following circumstances:

—for wilfully voting, knowing himself not to be a qualified voter, where it was said that as the qualification in that case depended upon domicile, and that as that is often a complicated question of law and fact, that if a voter in good faith and with an honest purpose to ascertain the right should make a true statement of the facts of his case to legal counsel, the evidence of such advice and the facts upon which it was taken are competent as bearing upon the question whether he knew he had not a right to vote. Com. v. Bradford, 9 Met. 268;

—to the same effect is State v. Savre, 129 Iowa, 122, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 455, 113 Am. St. Rep. 452, 105 N. W. 387, holding that wilfully voting when disqualified involves either knowledge of disqualification, or a reckless disregard of whether one is qualified or not, and that upon the question of wilful voting when disqualified, evidence is admissible that the voter, being in doubt, fairly stated the facts to, and took the opinion of, persons learned in the law;

—for supporting the claim of one of his right to vote when it has been challenged, since it is the undoubted right and duty of a voter to aid those who have a right to vote, and the presumption is that, in the performance of that obligation, he had been actuated by a correct motive. Com. ex rel. Janszky v. Sheriff, 12 Phila. 594;

—for registering as a qualified voter in two election districts. State v. Walsh, 203 Mo. 605, 102 S. W. 513. Contra, State v. Caldwell, 1 Marv. (Del.) 555, 41 Atl. 198; State v. Lally, 2 Marv. (Del.) 424, 43 Atl. 258;

—for procuring the registration of one knowing that he is not entitled to vote in the election district at the next election; it being necessary to show that accused knew at the time of such registration that the person was not entitled to vote at the next election. State v. McBarron, 66 N. J. L. 680, 51 Atl. 146, s. c. on former appeal, 63 N. J. L. 43, 42 Atl. 777.
17 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in Com. v. Wallace, Thacher, Crim. Cas. 592, Brightly, Elect. Cas. 703, it was held to be a question for the jury whether accused committed the offense wilfully, where his name appeared upon the list of qualified voters when he was not legally qualified to vote, for not having paid taxes within two years. Various concrete aspects of the general subject of mistake as affecting criminal responsibility are treated in notes referred to in the Index to Notes under the title, "Criminal Law—effect of ignorance or mistake." A. L. R.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

GEORGE T. JIMERSON, Respt.,

v.

ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(203 N. Y. 518, 97 N. E. 48.)

Railroad — failure to fence track — stock falling through bridge.

A statute requiring railroad companies to maintain fences along their rights of way sufficient to turn stock, and making the company liable, in the absence of such fence, for all damages done by their agents or engines or cars to animals on the track, provides no compensation even to owners of adjoining property for stock injured by falling through bridges.

(December 19, 1911.)

Note. — Railroads: liability for injury to stock other than by trains, because of breach of statutory duty to fence.

The decisions upon the question under annotation in most instances turn upon the language of the particular statute involved, it being the general rule that where the statute merely makes the company liable for injuries caused by agents, engines, cars, carriages, trains, etc., the use of such terms imports that it was the intention of the legislature enacting the statute that the railroad company should be liable only when there was an actual collision between its rolling stock and the animals, and that the railroad company is not liable in the absence of a showing of direct contact; but that where the language of the enactment is so broad that it does not necessarily import that there must be an actual collision to give a right of recovery, actual contact is not essential in order to enable the owner to recover; it being sufficient that the track was unfenced, and that the operation of the rolling stock of the road was a contributing cause. There is some conflict among the authorities however, but in the main the cases in which opposite conclusions have

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Cattaraugus County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the killing of plaintiff's horse alleged to have been caused by defendant's failure to maintain fences along its right of way. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dowd & Quigley, for appellant:

The injuries received by plaintiff's horses do not come within the penalty prescribed by the statute.

Beck v. Carter, 68 N. Y. 289, 23 Am. Rep. 175; Stafford v. Ingersol, 3 Hill, 38; Knight v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 99 N. Y.

25, 1 N. E. 108; Lent v. New York & M. R. Co. 130 N. Y. 504, 29 N. E. 988; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 474, 7 L.R.A. 527, 23 N. E. 1051; Bateman v. Rutland R. Co. 138 App. Div. 511, 110 N. Y. Supp. 506.

Mr. M. B. Jewell, for respondent:

Negligence of the defendant to perform the duty of building and thereafter maintaining fences along the sides of its railroad renders it liable for all damages which are the direct result of the injury.

Corwin v. New York & E. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 42; Shepard v. Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. Co. 35 N. Y. 641; Purdy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 61 N. Y. 353; Tracy v. Troy & B. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 433, 98 Am. Dec. 54; Graham v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 46 Hun, 386; French v. Western New York been reached may be reconciled by a careful analysis of the various statutes upon which they are based.

The first part of the above-stated rule is illustrated by the following cases: Thus, under a statute making a railroad company liable for all injuries to animals done by its "agents, engine, or cars," where the railroad is not fenced, direct contact is necessary in order to render the company liable: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Taylor, 8 Ill. App. 108 (horse frightened by cars, and ran on bridge); Stump v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. 84 Ill. App. 28 (mule fell into trestle); Wabash R. Co. v. Gaull, 116 Ill. App. 443 (team on public road became frightened, ran on unfenced railroad right of way, and threw themselves or rolled down embankment, killing the driver); Schertz v. Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. 107 Ill. 577, affirming 12 Ill. App. 304 (horse frightened by train and injured either by jumping a cattle guard, or by coming in contact with a wire fence, or both); Lafferty v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 44 Mo. 291 (horse, frightened by train, ran and was injured in jumping off the track); Hughes v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 66 Mo. 325 (cattle drowned in uninclosed well on right of way); Seibert v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 72 Mo. 565 (horse negligently killed by servants of railroad company in removing it from a trestle into which it had jumped while running ahead of a train); Foster v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 90 Mo. 116, 2 S. W. 138 (mule, through fright, ran into trestle or bridge); Boggs v. Missouri P. R. Co. 18 Mo. App. 274 (mule frightened at train, jumped into barbed-wire fence); Hesse v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 36 Mo. App. 163 (no evidence of collision offered); Dooley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 36 Mo. App. 381 (cattle prevented from fattening on account of being frightened by passing locomotives); Geiser v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 61 Mo. App. 459 (cattle, frightened by locomotive, ran into trestle); Logan v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. 111 Mo. App. 674, 86 S. W. 565 (there must be evidence, either direct or circumstantial, sufficient to warrant finding of actual collision); JIMERSON v. ERIE 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

R. Co., which overrules Graham v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 46 Hun, 386, and French v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 72 Hun, 469, 25 N. Y. Supp. 229; Knight v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 99 N. Y. 25, 1 N. E. 108, reversing 30 Hun, 435 (sufficiently set out in JIMERSON v. ERIE R. Co.); Hyatt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 64 Hun, 542, 19 N. Y. Supp. 461 (cattle killed by jumping from track on approach of engine).

And the same has been held true under a statute relating to injuries to animals "by cars or locomotive or other carriages" of a railroad company whose right of way is not securely fenced and such fences properly maintained. Peru & I. R. Co. v. Hasket, 79 Ind. 409, 71 Am. Dec. 335 (horse frightened by train and jumped from culvert); Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Cole, 41 Ind. 331 (cattle frightened by train ran on track and broke its leg in a cow pit); Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. McBrown, 46 Ind. 229 (horse forced upon bridge); Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 58 Ind. 575, holding generally that it was necessary to prove that the animal was struck by the train; Baltimore, P. & C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 69 Ind. 107 (pony badly frightened, and horse frightened and ran into bridge); Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Downey, 61 Ind. 287 (train struck one of two mules which were tied together, and dragged both along track, killing both,—railroad company not liable for mule not actually struck by cars); Croy v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 77 Ind. 126, holding it necessary to prove that the injured animals were actually touched by the locomotives, cars, or other carriages; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Thomas, 106 Ind. 10, 5 N. E. 198 (horse driven on trestlework by a train).

And a similar conclusion was reached under a statute creating liability for damages "done by the agents, employees, engineers, or cars" of a company operating a railroad upon an unfenced right of way, to any cattle, etc., thereon. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 112 Ind. 93, 13 N. E. 403, holding that the injury must be by actual contact.

k P. R. Co. 72 Hun, 469, 25 N. Y. Supp. 229; Grannan v. Westchester Racing Asso. 16 App. Div. 8, 44 N. Y. Supp. 790; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 7 L.R.A. 527, 23 N. E. 1051; Mendizabel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 89 App. Div. 386, 85 N. Y. Supp. 896; Crandall v. Eldridge, 46 Hun, 411; Racine v. Morris, 201 N. Y. 240, 94 N. E. 864.

Cullen, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint, which the defendant contends states no cause of action, alleges that the defendant failed to erect and maintain fences on the line of its road where it passed through the reservation of the Seneca Indians, as a result of which two colts belonging to the plaintiff, which were rightfully pastured on said reservation (plaintiff himself being an Indian), escaped from the pasture to the defendant's road, and, following along it, fell through a railroad bridge, whereby one colt received injuries from which he died, and the other was seriously damaged and its value impaired. The point of the demurrer is that the liability of the defendant is solely the creation of the statute, and that the statute does not impose liability for injuries to stock received in the manner stated in the complaint. Section 52 of the present railroad law (Consol. Laws 1910, chap. 49 [481]) reads: "Every railroad corporation, and any lessee or other person in possession of its road, shall, before the lines or its road are opened for use, and as soon as it has acquired the right of way for

And the same has been held under an act making the owner of an unfenced or defectively fenced railroad liable for damages to animals "caused by" its "trains or engines." McKellar v. Canadian P. R. Co. 14 Manitoba L. Rep. 614, where a horse through fright ran into a barbed-wire fence.

And the same has been held true under a provision that the railroad company shall be liable when the stock is killed or injured by its locomotive or cars. Childers v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 12 Ind. App. 386, 41 N. E. 21 (stock frightened by rain and jumped into trestle); Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Harris, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 270 (frightened animal ran upon and fell off railroad bridge); Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ritter, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 212, 16 S. W. 909 (frightened animal ran upon and fell off railroad bridge); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 454, 17 S. W. 1078 (horse frightened at train ran into fence); St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Felton, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 50, 14 S. W. 1072 (horse fell into bridge while running from train); San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Tamborello, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 87 S. W. 926 (horse walked upon trestle); Texas & P. R. Co. v. King Bros. 45 Tex. Civ. App. 265, 99 S. W. 1030 (no evidence of actual collision between injured mule and locomotive or cars); Beaumont, S. L. & W. R. Co. v. Langford, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 104 S. W. 920 (mule's foot cut off out no sufficient evidence of actual collision); International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hughes, 68 Tex. 290, 4 S. W. 492 (animal, through fright, ran upon trestle).

So, a statute making an unfenced railroad liable for stock killed or injured on or near their tracks when "caused by any moving train or engine or cars" has been held to require, in order to warrant recovery, the injury to have been inflicted by actual contact of the stock with a moving train, engine, or car. Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sadler, 91 Tenn. 508, 30 Am. St. Rep. 896, 19 S. W. 618 (frightened animal ran ahead of moving train onto trestle); Sinard v. Southern R. Co. 101 Tenn. 473, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.)

S. W. 227 (blind horse killed by falling into unfenced railroad cut); Jones v. Nashville & K. R. Co. 104 Tenn. 119, 56 S. W. 852 (colt killed by falling over steep unfenced bank).

And in the following cases from the report of which it is impossible to determine the phraseology of the statute, it was held that the railroad company was not liable for injuries to stock resulting from something other than a collision: Illinois C. R. Co. v. Carraher, 47 Ill. 333 (mule fell into uncovered well on right of way); Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Threlkeld, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 787 (stock frightened by train ran upon bridge).

But, on the other hand, it has been held that even where the statute makes railroad companies liable for all injuries to animals done by their "agents, engineers, or trains" or by "locomotives, engines, or trains" of a railroad company running over another's tracks where the railroad is not fenced, it does not necessarily contemplate injury by actual or direct collision only, but extends to all injuries to live stock caused by a train upon unfenced tracks, whether such stock was touched by the train or not. This was the conclusion reached in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cox, 51 Neb. 479, 71 N. W. 37, where a horse was injured by falling into a bridge upon which it had run while frightened by an approaching train, the court saying that to hold otherwise would be to interpolate words into the statute which were not placed there by the lawmakers. In arriving at this conclusion the court expressly overruled Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Shoemaker, 18 Neb. 369, 25 N. W. 365, in which, upon similar facts, a contrary conclusion had been reached; approved Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Pounder, 36 Neb. 247, 54 N. W. 509, wherein it had been held, upon similar facts and without reference to the Shoemaker Case, that instructions to the effect that a railroad company was not liable for injury to stock where there was no actual or direct collision were properly refused by the trial court upon the ground that they did not conform to the law; and said that the reasons as-its roadway, erect and thereafter maintain fences on the sides of its road, of height and strength sufficient to prevent cattle, horses, sheep, and hogs from going upon its road from the adjacent lands. . . . So long as such fences are not made, or are not in good repair, the corporation, its lessee, or other person in possession of its road, shall be liable for all damages done by their agents or engines or cars to any domestic animals thereon."

We think the question not an open one in this court. In Knight v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 99 N. Y. 25, 28, 1 N. E. 108, 109, the action was brought for injury to a colt which escaped from a barnyard to the highway, and ran thence along the highway through a gap in the fence to defendant's signed by sister states under statutes not materially different, for holding that an actual collision was necessary in order to warrant a recovery, were insufficient to induce the court to hold likewise.

And under a statute making a railroad company liable for injuring or killing live stock "upon or near any unfenced track" when caused "by any moving train, engine, or cars" upon such track, it has been held that actual collision between the train and the live stock is not essential in order to warrant a recovery. Meeker v. Northern P. R. Co. 21 Or. 513, 14 L.R.A. 841, 28 Am. St. Rep. 758, 28 Pac. 639 (horse driven by moving train into an open trestle); Meier v. Northern P. R. Co. 51 Or. 69, 93 Pac. 691 (frightened horse jumped on fence in effort to escape from train).

As before stated, the broader statutes have generally been construed as not intended to make actual collision an essential element of the cause of action under the statute. Thus it has been held that under a statute making a railroad company liable for animals killed or wounded "by the engine or cars on such railroad, or in any manner whatever, in operating such railroad," except where lawfully fenced, actual collision is not necessary to create liability, and liability has been extended to an injury to a horse caused by falling into an open bridge while frightened by and running ahead of an approaching train (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jones, 20 Kan. 527); to injuries to horses received while railroad employees were removing them from a bridge into which they had fallen (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Edwards, 20 Kan. 531); and to injuries to a horse which, while grazing on an unfenced right of way, was frightened by the whistle of an engine and ran into a barbed-wire fence (Missouri P. R. Co. v. Gill, 49 Kan. 441, 30 Pac. 414; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Eckel, 49 Kan. 794, 31 Pac. 693); but not to horses wandering upon and falling into railroad bridge (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Edwards, supra); nor to injuries neither the proximate cause of the failure to fence nor the wrongful operation of the road, such as the straying away of a cow to an extraordinary distance, where she mired down in a creek (Chicago, K. & N. R. Co. v. Hotz, 47 Kan. 627, 28 Pac. 695).

And under a statute making a railway company liable in damages to the owner of any "stock injured or killed by reason of the want of" a railway fence, actual contact of the train with the animal is not necessary, where the injury is one which the railway company had reason to apprehend. Thus, in Young v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 44 Iowa, 172, in holding a railway company liable for injuries caused by a horse becoming frightened and running upon a bridge, where there was but a single narrow passage down the fill of the road by which the horse could have avoided the bridge, between the point where the horse went upon the track and the bridge, the court, in discussing the question as to when an animal is injured by reason of the want of a fence within the meaning of the statute, said: "It is when the want of a fence in connection with the acts of the defendant is the proximate cause of the injury. The defendant in this case would not have been liable if the horse had run into the bridge and been injured simply through a frolic or freak, because the defendant would have had no reason to apprehend the occurrence of an injury in that way. But when they left the track unfenced, they knew that horses would probably stray upon it from the highway, and if there was only one narrow passage for escape from the track when the train approached, they knew that horses on the track would naturally be driven upon the bridge, and if it could be crossed only upon cross-ties a foot or more apart, they would naturally fall into the bridge and be injured. All this, in the exercise of reasonable foresight, should have been foreseen. . . . If there had been ample opportunity for the horse to escape from the track, and yet it had run into the bridge, contrary to the ordinary conduct of horses, the case would have been different." And in Kraus v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 55 Iowa, 338, 7 N. W. 598, the court, after holding the question of the defendant's liability for injuries to a horse resulting from its falling into a bridge to be one for the jury, intimated that the railroad company could not escape liability by setting up want of intelligence or negligence of the animal injured. And in Liston v. Central Iowa R. Co. 70 Iowa, 714, 29 N. W. 445, it was expressly held that the railroad company was liable where a horse, on account of the lack of a fence, got upon a railroad track, and, through want of intelligence, ran ahead of a train when it might have escaped on the other side, and so ran into a bridge and was killed. And in Mikesell v. Wabash R. Co. 134 Iowa, 736, 112 N. W. 201, in holding a railway company liable for injuries to horses caused by running upon a railroad bridge while frightened at a hand car or its operators, it was said that the test was not whether railway, which it followed till it came to a bridge through which it fell. The plaintiff having recovered a verdict at circuit, the court set aside, which action was reversed by the general term, but reinstated by this court, which held the defendant not liable. It was there said by Judge Rapallo: "The statute referred to requires railroad companies to erect and maintain fences on the sides of their roads, but it does not impose upon them a general liability for any consequences which may result from an omission to do so, nor does it leave the question open what liability to third parties they shall be subjected to for such omission, for it defines in express terms the consequences for which they shall be liable to owners of cattle and horses getting on the track the result might have been foreseen, but whether the injury was the natural and proximate consequence of the failure to properly fence in connection with the operation of the road. And the doctrine that the absence of an actual collision would not relieve the railroad company from liability under such a statute was again approved in Van Slyke v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 80 Iowa, 620, 45 N. W. 396, wherein it appeared that the animal probably had fallen into the ditch.

And under a statute providing that all railroad companies shall be liable for domestic animals killed or injured by the cars of such companies, and that a failure to build and maintain fences shall be deemed an act of negligence, actual collision between a moving train and such an animal has been held not a condition precedent to recovery, but that, on the other hand, the railroad company's liability extends to any injury which is the natural and proximate consequence of a neglect to fence, that is, any injury to animals getting upon the railroad which might naturally and reasonably be expected to result from a failure to fence, in view of the character and condition of the railroad and the uses to which it is put. Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 Minn. 74, 14 N. W. 360; Maher v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 401, 18 N. W. 105. Applying this rule, it was held in Maher v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. supra, that injuries resulting from horses which were being driven along a public highway, becoming frightened at a train, getting beyond the driver's control, and running upon an unfenced railroad right of way and into a culvert, were such as ordinary experience and sagacity could have foreseen might probably ensue from failure to fence a railroad running along a public highway. But under this statute a railroad company is not liable for injuries to animals of which the neglect to fence is not the proximate cause, and which are not the natural and proximate consequence of such neglect; as for example, where a mule running along a railroad track sticks its foot into a small hole in the ground not ordinarily dangerous, and about the size of its foot, and in some unexplained way breaks its leg. Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. supra.

In Missouri, the general assembly, influenced by the decisions that under the early Missouri statutes there could be no recovery unless there was an actual collision of the cars with the stock, passed an act providing that whenever any live stock should go upon an uninclosed railroad right of way, and, by being frightened or run by any passing locomotive or train, shall be injured or killed by running into a fence, culvert, bridge, slough or mire, or any other object along the line, the railroad company shall be liable for the injuries sustained. Under this act it has been held that a liability is created where stock are frightened and run into a large open well on the railroad company's unfenced right of way (Kauffman v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 67 Mo. App. 156); that a liability arises where a horse is frightened by a train, and runs into a wire fence to its injury (Colbert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 78 Mo. App. 176; Brown v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 104 Mo. App. 691, 78 S. W. 273; Hobbs v. St. Louis, M. & S. R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 126, 87 S. W. 525), or into a trestle or bridge (Geiser v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 61 Mo. App. 459; Doughty v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 92 Mo. App. 494; Carlos v. Missouri P. R. Co. 106 Mo. App. 574, 80 S. W. 965); and that injuries sustained by a mule while running upon the ties and other component parts of the road in fleeing before an approaching train were within the statute (Oyler v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 375, 88 S. W. 162); but that a railroad company is not liable for injuries to a horse caused by falling into a bridge, where it is not shown that the horse was frightened or caused to run upon the bridge by a locomotive or train (Yeager v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 61 Mo. App. 594); nor by running into a fence where it is not shown that the animal was frightened by a locomotive or train, and that the injuries resulted from running against the fence in consequence of such fright (Hobbs v. St. Louis, M. & S. R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 126, 87 S. W. 525; Perkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 103 Mo. 52, 11 L.R.A. 426, 15 S. W. 320). So, it is held that a railroad company is not liable under the statute for loss occasioned by cattle failing to fatten because of being frightened by passing locomotives. Dooley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 36 Mo. App. 381. And a "speeder," a vehicle in form like a hand car but run by a gasoline engine, is not a train or locomotive within the meaning of such statute. Henson v. Williamsville, G. & St. L. R. Co. 110 Mo. App. 595, 85 S. W. 597.

As to liability of railroad whose failure to maintain fences permits escape of live stock, which is killed or injured outside its right of way, see note to Hocking Valley R. Co. v. Phillips, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 573.

G. J. C.

... for damages which shall be done by the engines or agents of any such corporation." It was held that the bridge was not an agent, and that the defendant was not liable. Since that decision two cases have been decided in the supreme court (Graham v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 46 Hun, 386; French v. Western New York & P. R. Co. 72 Hun, 469, 25 N. Y. Supp. 229), in which recoveries for injuries to animals escaping from fields adjacent to the track encountered in the same manner as that which occurred in the Knight Case have been upheld. In the opinion rendered in those cases the Knight decision is distinguished on the theory that it did not apply where the animals escaped from an adjacent field. In other words, that the liability for failure to maintain the fence was greater to adjacent owners than to other parties. If we assume that the Knight Case might have been decided on the theory that the plaintiff was not an adjacent landholder, it is sufficient to say that it was decided on no such ground, but solely on the ground that the liability of failing to comply with the mandates of the statute was expressly limited by it. It is also to be observed that in Corwin v. New York & E. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 42, this court had already held that the statute applied equally to the trespassing cattle of strangers and those of adjacent owners. But if it were an open question we think it would be difficult to avoid the conclusion reached by the court in the Knight Case. The correctness of that decision is emphasized by the subsequent act of the legislature. As the statute stood at the time of the Knight Case, the liability was for damage occasioned by their "engines or agents." In 1900, when the present railroad law (now Consol. Laws, chap. 49) was enacted, the old statute was amended by adding to "engines or agents" the word "cars." It may be, as argued by the learned judges of the supreme court, that there is little reason for making the railroad companies liable for damages to cattle run down by cars or engines, but not for injuries caused by falling through bridges, when the original source of the injury is the same in both cases,—the failure to comply with the statutory requirement. If this, however, had been the view of the legislature, it would have, in amending the statute, made the liability general, instead of which it simply added liability for injuries by cars.

The judgments of the Appellate Division and of the Special Term must be reversed, and judgment rendered for the defendant on demurrer, with costs in all courts, with leave to plaintiff to serve amended complaint within twenty days on payment of costs.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Gray, Vann, Werner, Willard Bartlett, and Chase, JJ., concur. Haight, J., not voting.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. M. ROBINSON et al., Appts,
v.

BANK OF PIKEVILLE et al.

(146 Ky. 538, 142 S. W. 1065.)

Principal — fraud of agent — ratification of satisfaction of judgment — responsibility of principal.

1. A judgment creditor is not bound by the act of his agent for the collection of the judgment in conniving at the forgery of an indorsement on a draft of a stranger and using it to secure a bank credit from which the judgment debtor can satisfy the judgment, so that the bank can refuse to cash a check growing out of such credit, on the ground of fraud, since such act is beyond the scope of the agent's authority.

Bank — transfer of fraudulent deposit account — right to dishonor check.

2. A bank which honors the check of a customer upon a deposit account based upon a draft upon which he had forged an indorsement, by placing the check to the credit of an innocent stranger, and authorizing him to check against such credit, cannot refuse, because of the original fraud, to honor his check to the injury of an innocent payee.

Same — estoppel — authority to issue checks.

3. When a bank by its course of dealing with a customer authorizes him to issue checks on it, it will be estopped to say, after such checks have come in good faith into the hands of innocent holders, that the customer did not in fact have any money to his credit, and for this reason decline to pay the check.

Same — laches — effect.

4. A bank cannot refuse to pay a check upon itself, because of delay in presenting it, if no prejudice to its rights has resulted therefrom.

(February 1, 1912.)

Note. — Right of bank to impeach sources of deposit as against holder of check drawn against the same.

While "in most jurisdictions the holder of an unaccepted check has no right of action against the bank for refusing to pay such check" (5 Cyc. 536), it would seem that, in jurisdictions where the holder is deemed to have such a right of action, on the ground that the check constitutes an assignment pro tanto of the deposit against

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County dismissing an action brought to enforce payment of a check given to plaintiffs' attorney in satisfaction of a debt due to plaintiffs. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John C. Strother and James Goble, for appellants:

If a bank deposits checks, drafts, or other instruments as so much cash to the credit of a customer, and authorizes him to draw on it, it is bound to honor his check against the deposit in the hands of innocent holders, even if it learns after the deposit was made and check given that the instruments were forgeries and could not be collected.

Deposit Bank v. Fayette Nat. Bank, 90 Ky. 10, 7 L.R.A. 849, 13 S. W. 339; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 449; Wasson v. Lamb, 120 Ind. 514, 6 L.R.A. 191, 16 Am. St. Rep. 342, 22 N. E. 729; Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 1655, 1656; Morse, Banks & Bkg. §§ 291, 596; Craigie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537; City Nat. Bank v. Burns, 68 Ala. 276, 44 Am. Rep. 138; First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 686, 25 L. ed. 766; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 23 Blatchf. 489, 27 Fed. 243; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Loyd, 90 N. Y. 530; Bolton v. Richard, 6 T. R. 139, 1 Esp. 106; Oddie

v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160.

A check is never overdue. The delay of one month and twenty-four days before presenting the check for payment is no defense to the bank.

Morse, Banks & Bkg. § 443; Smith v. Jones, 2 Bush, 105; Lester v. Given, 8 Bush, 360; Herndon v. Louisville Bkg. Co. 10 Ky. L. Rep. 584; Deatheridge v. Crumbaugh, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 592; National Bank v. Boles, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 422.

When a check is given a sheriff to satisfy an execution in his hands for collection, and the bank in which it is made payable accepts it and places the amount to the sheriff's credit, authorizing him in writing to check it out, and he accepts the deposit, gives his check to the execution plaintiff, and returns the execution satisfied, the bank is estopped to refuse to pay his check drawn on that deposit.

Bailey v. Robinson, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 670; Carter v. Richardson, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1204, 60 S. W. 397.

Mr. J. M. York for appellees.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 3d day of January, 1891, J. B. Jones presented to the appellee Bank of Pikeville a draft for $1,960, drawn by the Moline Bank of Illinois, to the order of the Deer Mansur Company, and indorsed which it was drawn (see 5 Cyc. 536-538), the bank should not be allowed, as against an innocent holder, to resist payment by impeaching the sources of the deposit, as the relationship of debtor and creditor between the bank and the depositor arose immediately upon the receipt and acceptance of the deposit by the bank, and cannot subsequently be avoided as to the part of the deposit assigned. As said in Wasson v. Lamb, 120 Ind. 514, 6 L.R.A. 191, 16 Am. St. Rep. 342, 22 N. E. 729, quoted in ROBINSON v. BANK OF PIKEVILLE: "The settled rule is, where checks, drafts, or other evidences of debt are received in good faith as deposits, if the bank credits them as so much money, the title to the checks or drafts is immediately transferred to the bank, and it becomes legally liable to the depositor as for so much money deposited."

Only one case, however, aside from ROBINSON v. BANK OF PIKEVILLE, has been found, involving this precise question. In the earlier Kentucky case of German Nat. Bank v. Grinstead, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 674, 52 S. W. 951, quite fully set out in the opinion in ROBINSON v. BANK OF PIKEVILLE, it was held that where a bank has accepted from a customer on deposit, as so much cash, and not merely for collection, a draft with an indorsed bill of lading attached, agreeing to honor checks given by the customer in payment for the goods covered by the bill of 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) lading, innocent holders of checks drawn against the deposit can recover the amount of their checks from the bank, although the draft is subsequently dishonored.

In ROBINSON v. BANK OF PIKEVILLE, it will be noted, the bank had in effect paid the check drawn against the deposit, the source of which it sought primarily to impeach on the ground of forgery,—the innocent payee of that check, however, instead of receiving cash thereon, having been credited by the bank with the amount thereof, as a deposit, and, at its special request, having accepted the credit in lieu of the cash, with express authority to draw checks against the deposit; and it was the indirect source of this resulting deposit that the bank sought to impeach, as against the holder of a check drawn, in accordance with its authorization, against the latter deposit. Under such circumstances it would seem clear that, as held in ROBINSON v. BANK OF PIKEVILLE, the bank had no right to dishonor the check drawn against the resulting deposit, as this deposit had no more legal connection with the one against which the check constituting it was drawn, than if the payee of that check and drawer of the dishonored check had created his deposit by a payment to the bank, on deposit, of cash received by him from some other source.

A. C. W.

to the Hickman Lumber Company. It bore the date of December 11, 1890. The bank discounted the draft, paid Jones $300 in cash, and placed the remainder of the draft to his credit on its books, giving him a pass book and check book. On the following day, Jones, with the $300 in money and pass book and check book, went to Hindman, in Knott county, Kentucky, and there met J. M. Bailey, who was indebted to appellants J. M. Robinson & Company in the sum of $827.50, for which amount an execution had been levied on Bailey's property. Jones gave Bailey a check for the amount of the execution, which Bailey indorsed to Kelly, the deputy sheriff who had levied the execution. At the same time, Bailey gave to Kelly Jones's check to satisfy other execution debts Kelly had against him; the total of the checks aggregating some $1,011. In the early part of January, Kelly, who refused to accept these checks until satisfied they were good, forwarded them to the Pikeville bank for payment, and on the 8th day of January, 1891, the Pikeville bank wrote Kelly the following letter:

"Pikeville, Ky., January 8, 1891.

L. D. Kelly, Esq.,

Dear Sir:—

Mr. Jones was here last Saturday. I paid off the teachers of this county, which amounted to over $5,000, and I told Mr. Jones at the time that I could not pay him the money on his check as I was close for cash. I have got plenty of money in my Cincinnati bank and other banks, but haven't any more than the regular reserve here. Therefore I write you and ask you if you cannot make it convenient to check this out at different times by giving to parties below and to merchants over there, so they can send them to their banks and their banks to me. In that way, I am out no currency. I send you a bank book and a check book, and if you can do this way conveniently, it will very greatly oblige.

Yours truly,

J. B. Hatton, Cashier.

After Kelly received the letter, with the check book and pass book showing that there had been placed to his credit in the bank the amount mentioned, and on January 16, 1891, he drew checks for the amount due the appellant and the other execution creditors on the bank in favor of S. J. Kilgore, attorney for appellant, and returned the executions against Bailey satisfied. On the 10th of March following, the check given by Kelly to Kilgore to satisfy the debt of appellant was presented to the bank and payment refused, for the reason that the bank had discovered that the draft presented to it by Jones on January 3, 1891, was a forgery. After the bank refused to pay the check, the appellant, conceiving that the executions against Bailey had been returned satisfied by fraud or mistake, on account of the facts before stated, brought an action against Bailey to have the return on the execution quashed and other executions issued against him. It succeeded in the circuit court in obtaining the relief sought, but Bailey appealed to the superior court of Kentucky, which reversed the judgment of the circuit court, holding that the acceptance by Kelly of the check given by Jones to Bailey was equivalent to the payment of the execution in cash, and authorized the sheriff to return it satisfied. Bailey v. Robinson, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 670. Thereafter the appellant brought this suit against the bank to recover the amount of the check which Kelly gave to Kilgore to satisfy its execution against Bailey. Upon hearing in the lower court, the petition was dismissed, and this appeal prosecuted.

In its answer to the suit brought against it, the bank averred, in substance, that the draft presented by Jones was a forgery, and that, at the time it placed to the credit of Jones the $1,660 and to the credit of Kelly the $1,011.30, it had not discovered that the draft was forged. It also set up lack of diligence in presenting to it for payment the Kelly check; and, further, that Kilgore, who was at the time the agent and attorney for appellant, was a party, together with Jones and Bailey, to the fraud and forgery perpetrated upon it in the presentation of the draft by Jones.

It is conclusively shown by the evidence that the draft presented to the bank by Jones was in fact made payable to the Hickman Lumber Company; but by some misadventure the letter inclosing the draft to the Hickman Lumber Company, which was addressed to Hickman, Kentucky, fell into the hands of Bailey, who was operating a lumber company at Hindman, in Knott county, Kentucky. When the draft in this manner came into the possession of Bailey, he and Jones conceived the idea of forging the name of the Hickman Lumber Company on the draft and obtaining the money it called for, and, in pursuance of this plan, the draft was presented, as before stated, to the Bank of Pikeville. Nor is there any issue made or dispute about the fact that the bank placed to the credit of Jones $1,660 and gave to him a pass book showing that there was to his credit this sum. Or that there was placed to the credit of Kelly on the books of the bank $1,011.30. and that he was given a pass book showing this fact, or that Kelly gave to Kilgore a check drawn on his account in the bank sufficient to satisfy appellant's execution debt, or that the payment of this check was refused. There is really only one issue of fact made in the case, and that is whether or not Kilgore was a party to the fraud practised by Jones and Bailey. Upon this issue, Jones testified that Kilgore knew all about the transaction, while Kilgore denies any knowledge of the fraud. Aside from this issue of fact, which will be further noticed, the question for our consideration may be thus stated: Will a bank that has opened an account with a bona fide customer be permitted to dishonor a check that he in good faith has issued on this account in satisfaction of a debt, upon the ground that it was induced to open the account and give the customer credit by means of a fraud and forgery that had been practised upon it by another customer out of whose account and connection with the bank the entire transaction grew, when to sanction the dishonor would cause the loss to fall upon an innocent party?

The chief argument of counsel for the bank is rested upon the ground that Kilgore, the agent and attorney of appellant, was a party to the fraud, and that it occupies no better position than its agent, Kilgore, would if he was seeking to collect the check for himself and on his own account. Of course, if this legal conclusion of counsel was sound, and the evidence supported the contention that Kilgore was a party to the fraud, it would be an end of the case. But we do not take the same view of this issue that counsel does. If Kilgore was a party to the fraud, his conduct would not prejudice the rights of appellant, who is admittedly the owner of the debt for which the check was given, and free from any blame in the transaction. In short, the attitude of appellant is precisely the same as if Kelly had made the check payable to it in place of payable to Kilgore, its attorney. We do not know of any principle of law that, upon a state of facts such as is here presented, would charge the principle with the fraud or delinquency of his agent. Certainly Kilgore had no authority, express or implied, to assist in practising a fraud upon the bank or anyone else. If he did so assist, he was acting entirely outside of the scope of his employment, and the appellant is not bound by what he did. Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325; Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731. As the agent or attorney of appellant in the collection of this debt against Bailey, the authority of Kilgore was limited to matters that related to the collection of the debt.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But, aside from this, the ground upon which the bank is liable does not rest on what Kilgore did or did not do. Its liability grows out of the fact that it opened an account with Kelly, who was entirely innocent of any wrongdoing, and placed to his credit a sum of money, and thereby authorized him to issue checks against his account for the amount placed to his credit. The initial fraud was practised by Jones; but Jones was only enabled to reap any benefit from this fraud, or to involve other people in trouble on account of it, by the conduct of the bank in receiving from him a forged draft and giving him credit he was not entitled to. By this course of dealing with Jones, it authorized him to issue checks on account it had put to his credit in the bank, and, on the faith of its assurance that the check he gave Kelly was all right, Kelly was induced to accept the check and release the execution levy. But the carelessness, or want of diligence, on the part of the bank, did not stop with this. Five days after it had placed to the credit of Jones the amount of the forged check, it accepted Jones's check to Kelly drawn on this account and placed it to the credit of Kelly, thereby authorizing Kelly to issue checks on the account, which he did, and as a consequence the only recourse the appellant has is against the bank. Between the date of the presentation of the draft by Jones, and the receipt of Kelly's check, the bank had ample time and opportunity to ascertain whether or not the Jones's check was genuine; but it did not, so far as the record shows, take any steps to inform itself concerning the validity of the draft. Both Jones and Kelly are to be treated as customers of the bank; and, when it comes to a question as to whether the bank should lose, or the appellant, that was misled by its course of dealing, we think it clear that the loss should fall on the bank. When the bank put to the credit of Kelly Jones's check, it was a settlement and satisfaction of the Bailey debt. Liability for the debt was then transferred to and assumed by Kelly, who in turn acquitted himself, as held in the case of Bailey v. Robinson, supra, by giving to appellant, a check that the bank said it would honor. The letter written by the bank to Kelly, and the deposit to his credit, had the further effect of creating the relation of creditor and debtor between Kelly and the bank. In short, so far as the rights of these parties are concerned, Kelly had to his credit in the bank the amount of the debt due appellant, and the bank is estopped from setting up the defense, against a bona fide holder of the check drawn in good faith by Kelly, the fact that it was induced to give credit to Kelly on its books by reason of a fraud practised upon it by Jones.

The commercial interests of the country demand that banks should be held to a high degree of care in the conduct of their business with customers to whom they give credit they would not otherwise be able to obtain. And when a bank receives not for collection, but as so much money, a check, and places the amount to the credit of a customer, it thereby assumes liability for this amount to all persons to whom the customer may give checks.

And we think the principle of law is or should be well settled that, when a bank by its course of dealing with a customer authorizes him to issue checks on it, it will be estopped to say, after such checks have come in good faith into the hands of innocent holders, that the customer did not in fact have any money to his credit, and for this reason decline to pay the checks. Especially should this principle obtain when to permit the bank to make this defense would cause a bona fide holder of the customer's check to lose the amount of it. Our attention has been called to a number of analogous cases treating on this subject, and from them we select the following as illustrating the doctrine that, under circumstances such as are disclosed by this record, a bank will not be allowed to escape liability, although it may suffer a loss in consequence of its course of dealing.

In Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160, the facts were that the bank received a genuine check drawn on itself in favor of Oddie by Davis and Aiken, regular depositors, and credited Oddie with the amount of it on his deposit book. Afterwards and on the same day, the bank discovered that the account of Davis and Aiken was overdrawn, when Oddie was given credit by their check, and refused to pay the check. Thereupon Oddie brought suit against the bank to recover the amount of the check. In the course of the opinion, the court said: "In determining the legal effect of such transactions, we must apply the same rules applicable to all contracts and business affairs, and effectuate and carry out the intention of the parties, to be gathered from their acts and declarations, and the accustomed and understood course of the particular business. Applying these rules, there can be no doubt but there was an express demand on one side, and consent on the other, that this check should be placed to the credit of the plaintiff as a deposit. The legal effect of the transaction was precisely the same as though the money had been first paid to the plaintiff and then deposited. When a check is presented to a bank for deposit, drawn directly upon itself, it is the same as though payment in any other form was demanded. It is the right of the bank to reject it, or to refuse to pay it, or to receive it conditionally; . . . but if it accepts such a check, and pays it, either by delivering the currency or giving the party credit for it, the transaction is closed between the bank and such party, provided the paper is genuine. In the case of a deposit, the bank becomes at once the debtor of the depositor, and the title of the deposit passes to the bank. . . . Under these circumstances it would be inequitable and unjust to permit the defendants to throw the responsibility of their own acts upon the plaintiff, and the law has established a rule which forbids it. Every element of an estoppel in pais exists in this case."

In Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325, it is said: "It is now perfectly well settled that the relation between banker and customer, who pays money into the bank, or to whose credit money is received there on deposit, is the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor: and that, when the bank receives the money as an ordinary deposit and gives credit to the depositor, the money becomes the funds of the bank, and may be used by it as any other funds to which it may be entitled. It is accountable for the deposits that it may receive as debtor, and in respect to ordinary deposits there is an implied agreement between the bank and the depositor that the checks of the latter will be honored to the extent of the funds standing to his credit. . . . There is no question of trust, therefore, between the parties, but their relation is purely a legal one; and if the bank pays money on a forged check, no matter under what circumstances of caution, or however honest the belief in its genuineness, if the depositor himself be free of blame, and has done nothing to mislead the bank, all the loss must be borne by the bank, for it acts at its peril, and pays out its own funds, and not those of the depositor. It is in view of this relation of the parties, and of their rights and obligations, that the principle is universally maintained that banks and bankers are bound to know the signature of their customers, and that they pay checks purporting to be drawn by them at their peril."

In Wasson v. Lamb, 120 Ind. 514, 6 L.R.A. 191, 16 Am. St. Rep. 342, 22 N. E. 729, it is said: "The settled rule is, where checks, drafts, or other evidences of debt are received in good faith as deposits, if the bank credits them as so much money, the title to the checks or drafts is immediately transferred to the bank, and it becomes legally liable to the depositor as for so much money deposited."

In First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 686, 25 L. ed. 766, it is said: "When a check on itself is offered to a bank as a deposit, the bank has the option to accept or reject it, or to receive it upon such conditions as may be agreed upon. If it be rejected, there is no room for any doubt or question between the parties. If, on the other hand, the check is offered as a deposit and received as a deposit, there being no fraud and the check genuine, the parties are no less bound and concluded than in the former case. Neither can disavow or repudiate what has been done. The case is simply one of an executed contract. There are the requisite parties, the requisite consideration, and the requisite concurrence and assent of the minds of those concerned."

In Morse on Banks & Banking, § 289, the author, after stating that the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the depositor and the bank, proceeds to say: "It follows that, the act of deposit having been once consummated, nothing short of payment on the part of the bank, or some act of the depositor himself, will suffice to exonerate it from the indebtedness it has assumed."

In German Nat. Bank v. Grinstead, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 674, 52 S. W. 951, the facts were that Taylor, a dealer in eggs, made an arrangement with the bank by which he was to draw drafts on his New York consignees, with a bill of lading covering the consignment of eggs attached thereto, and turn it over to the bank, and thereupon the bank would place the amount of the draft thus secured by the bill of lading, to the credit of Taylor on the books of the bank and on Taylor's pass book, as so much cash. Taylor would then draw checks on the bank against this cash credit, for the amount of the purchase price of the eggs, in favor of the persons from whom he had purchased them. One of the drafts drawn by Taylor on his New York customers was dishonored, and thereupon the bank refused to pay the checks drawn on it by Taylor and made payable to the persons from whom he purchased the eggs. In holding the bank liable for the payment of the checks Taylor had given, although the bank failed to collect the New York draft given to it by Taylor, and on the faith of which Taylor drew checks on it in favor of the purchasers, the court said: "The purpose of the arrangement was to secure Taylor as a customer and enable him to buy and ship the eggs. His account having been credited by the draft, the outstanding checks were an appropriation of this credit."

It is further insisted that the delay in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

presenting the check relieved the bank from the duty of paying it; but there is no merit in this contention. If the check given to appellant had been presented the same day that the credit was given to Kelly on the books of the bank, or the following day, and before the bank discovered the forgery, it would have been paid; and, of course, the bank would be no better off then it will be when it is now compelled to pay it, as there is no suggestion that the bank at any time could have recovered from Jones or Bailey the money. By the payment of the check at any time, the bank would be the loser. The delay in presenting it did not in any manner that we can conceive of prejudice its rights.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of appellant for the amount of the debt, with interest from March 10, 1891.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

MARY M. GOFF

v.

SUPREME LODGE ROYAL ACHATES, Appt.,
and

SARAH E. LIPPS, Intervener, Appt.

(90 Neb. 578, 134 N. W. 239.)

Insurance — warranty — construction.

1. In contruing a contract of insurance in a fraternal beneficiary association, for the purpose of determining whether the statements made in the written application therefor were intended to be representations or warranties, the court will take into consideration the situation of the parties, the subject-matter, and the language employed, and will construe a statement made therein to be a warranty only when it clearly appears that such was the intention of the contracting parties, and that the mind of each party consciously intended and consented that such should be the interpretation of his statements.

Same — defense — pleading.

2. And in order that the statements in

Headnotes by FAWCETT, J.

Note. — Who is a "dependent" within statute or rules defining beneficiaries of mutual benefit societies.

The question here considered is covered in the notes to Caldwell v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 653, and Royal League v. Shields, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 208, and the present note is merely supplementary to these.

Where an unmarried man who was sick and without a home entered into an agreement with a neighbor who kept a hotel, by which the latter undertook to support the

Kelly on its books by reason of a fraud practised upon it by Jones.

The commercial interests of the country demand that banks should be held to a high degree of care in the conduct of their business with customers to whom they give credit they would not otherwise be able to obtain. And when a bank receives not for collection, but as so much money, a check, and places the amount to the credit of a customer, it thereby assumes liability for this amount to all persons to whom the customer may give checks.

And we think the principle of law is or should be well settled that, when a bank by its course of dealing with a customer authorizes him to issue checks on it, it will be estopped to say, after such checks have come in good faith into the hands of innocent holders, that the customer did not in fact have any money to his credit, and for this reason decline to pay the checks. Especially should this principle obtain when to permit the bank to make this defense would cause a bona fide holder of the customer's check to lose the amount of it. Our attention has been called to a number of analogous cases treating on this subject, and from them we select the following as illustrating the doctrine that, under circumstances such as are disclosed by this record, a bank will not be allowed to escape liability, although it may suffer a loss in consequence of its course of dealing.

In Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160, the facts were that the bank received a genuine check drawn on itself in favor of Oddie by Davis and Aiken, regular depositors, and credited Oddie with the amount of it on his deposit book. Afterwards and on the same day, the bank discovered that the account of Davis and Aiken was overdrawn, when Oddie was given credit by their check, and refused to pay the check. Thereupon Oddie brought suit against the bank to recover the amount of the check. In the course of the opinion, the court said: "In determining the legal effect of such transactions, we must apply the same rules applicable to all contracts and business affairs, and effectuate and carry out the intention of the parties, to be gathered from their acts and declarations, and the accustomed and understood course of the particular business. Applying these rules, there can be no doubt but there was an express demand on one side, and consent on the other, that this check should be placed to the credit of the plaintiff as a deposit. The legal effect of the transaction was precisely the same as though the money had been first paid to the plaintiff and then deposited. When a check is presented to a bank for deposit, drawn directly upon itself, it is the same as though payment in any other form was demanded. It is the right of the bank to reject it, or to refuse to pay it, or to receive it conditionally; . . . but if it accepts such a check, and pays it, either by delivering the currency or giving the party credit for it, the transaction is closed between the bank and such party, provided the paper is genuine. In the case of a deposit, the bank becomes at once the debtor of the depositor, and the title of the deposit passes to the bank. . . . Under these circumstances it would be inequitable and unjust to permit the defendants to throw the responsibility of their own acts upon the plaintiff, and the law has established a rule which forbids it. Every element of an estoppel in pais exists in this case."

In Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325, it is said: "It is now perfectly well settled that the relation between banker and customer, who pays money into the bank, or to whose credit money is received there on deposit, is the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor; and that, when the bank receives the money as an ordinary deposit and gives credit to the depositor, the money becomes the funds of the bank, and may be used by it as any other funds to which it may be entitled. It is accountable for the deposits that it may receive as debtor, and in respect to ordinary deposits there is an implied agreement between the bank and the depositor that the checks of the latter will be honored to the extent of the funds standing to his credit. . . . There is no question of trust, therefore, between the parties, but their relation is purely a legal one; and if the bank pays money on a forged check, no matter under what circumstances of caution, or however honest the belief in its genuineness, if the depositor himself be free of blame, and has done nothing to mislead the bank, all the loss must be borne by the bank, for it acts at its peril, and pays out its own funds, and not those of the depositor. It is in view of this relation of the parties, and of their rights and obligations, that the principle is universally maintained that banks and bankers are bound to know the signature of their customers, and that they pay checks purporting to be drawn by them at their peril."

In Wasson v. Lamb, 120 Ind. 514, 6 L.R.A. 191, 16 Am. St. Rep. 342, 22 N. E. 729, it is said: "The settled rule is, where checks, drafts, or other evidences of debt are received in good faith as deposits, if the bank credits them as so much money, the title to the checks or drafts is immediately transferred to the bank, and it becomes legally liable to the depositor as for so much money deposited."

In First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 686, 25 L. ed. 766, it is said: "When a check on itself is offered to a bank as a deposit, the bank has the option to accept or reject it, or to receive it upon such conditions as may be agreed upon. If it be rejected, there is no room for any doubt or question between the parties. If, on the other hand, the check is offered as a deposit and received as a deposit, there being no fraud and the check genuine, the parties are no less bound and concluded than in the former case. Neither can disavow or repudiate what has been done. The case is simply one of an executed contract. There are the requisite parties, the requisite consideration, and the requisite concurrence and assent of the minds of those concerned."

In Morse on Banks & Banking, § 289, the author, after stating that the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the depositor and the bank, proceeds to say: "It follows that, the act of deposit having been once consummated, nothing short of payment on the part of the bank, or some act of the depositor himself, will suffice to exonerate it from the indebtedness it has assumed."

In German Nat. Bank v. Grinstead, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 674, 52 S. W. 951, the facts were that Taylor, a dealer in eggs, made an arrangement with the bank by which he was to draw drafts on his New York consignees, with a bill of lading covering the consignment of eggs attached thereto, and turn it over to the bank, and thereupon the bank would place the amount of the draft thus secured by the bill of lading, to the credit of Taylor on the books of the bank and on Taylor's pass book, as so much cash. Taylor would then draw checks on the bank against this cash credit, for the amount of the purchase price of the eggs, in favor of the persons from whom he had purchased them. One of the drafts drawn by Taylor on his New York customers was dishonored, and thereupon the bank refused to pay the checks drawn on it by Taylor and made payable to the persons from whom he purchased the eggs. In holding the bank liable for the payment of the checks Taylor had given, although the bank failed to collect the New York draft given to it by Taylor, and on the faith of which Taylor drew checks on it in favor of the purchasers, the court said: "The purpose of the arrangement was to secure Taylor as a customer and enable him to buy and ship the eggs. His account having been credited by the draft, the outstanding checks were an appropriation of this credit."

It is further insisted that the delay in 37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

presenting the check relieved the bank from the duty of paying it; but there is no merit in this contention. If the check given to appellant had been presented the same day that the credit was given to Kelly on the books of the bank, or the following day, and before the bank discovered the forgery, it would have been paid; and, of course, the bank would be no better off then it will be when it is now compelled to pay it, as there is no suggestion that the bank at any time could have recovered from Jones or Bailey the money. By the payment of the check at any time, the bank would be the loser. The delay in presenting it did not in any manner that we can conceive of prejudice its rights.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of appellant for the amount of the debt, with interest from March 10, 1891.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

MARY M. GOFF

v.

SUPREME LODGE ROYAL ACHATES, Appt.,
and

SARAH E. LIPPS, Intervener, Appt.

(90 Neb. 578, 134 N. W. 239.)

Insurance — warranty — construction.

1. In contruing a contract of insurance in a fraternal beneficiary association, for the purpose of determining whether the statements made in the written application therefor were intended to be representations or warranties, the court will take into consideration the situation of the parties, the subject-matter, and the language employed, and will construe a statement made therein to be a warranty only when it clearly appears that such was the intention of the contracting parties, and that the mind of each party consciously intended and consented that such should be the interpretation of his statements.

Same — defense — pleading.

2. And in order that the statements in

Headnotes by FAWCETT, J.

Note. — Who is a "dependent" within statute or rules defining beneficiaries of mutual benefit societies.

The question here considered is covered in the notes to Caldwell v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 653, and Royal League v. Shields, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 208, and the present note is merely supplementary to these.

Where an unmarried man who was sick and without a home entered into an agreement with a neighbor who kept a hotel, by which the latter undertook to support the

such application shall constitute a defense to an action upon the certificate of membership or policy of insurance, issued to such applicant, it is incumbent upon the association to plead and prove that the answers were made as written in the application, that they were false in some particular material to the insurance risk, and that the association relied and acted upon those answers.

Will — contract to make — validity.

3. A contract between an adult man and woman, not related to each other, that, if the latter will enter the home of the former and act as his housekeeper, he will support her, and at his death leave her his estate, is not, where the relations between them are at all times moral and proper, forbidden by law or obnoxious to public policy.

Insurance — beneficiary — dependent — housekeeper.

4. Where a woman who is without means, in good faith leaves her own home and work, and assumes and for years faithfully performs the duties of a housekeeper for a member of a fraternal beneficiary association, not related to her by consanguinity, under an agreement that in consideration for such services he will support her, and at his death leave her his estate, and no evidence is offered showing any improper relations between them, held, that she thereby becomes a dependent upon such member, and as such is eligible as a beneficiary in a certificate of membership issued to him by the association of which he is a member.

(January 3, 1912.)

SEPARATE appeals by defendant and intervener from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a benefit certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Arthur H. Burnett, for appellant Supreme Lodge:

The contract includes the certificate, application, and the by-laws of the society.

Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Kinney, 64 Neb. 808, 90 N. W. 926.

The law makes a distinction between bene-former during his lifetime, in consideration that he should be named the beneficiary in a benefit certificate, it was held that the hotel keeper was not a "dependent" within the meaning of the law relating to fraternal associations. Modern Woodmen v. Comeaux, 79 Kan. 493, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 814, 101 Pac. 1, 17 Ann. Cas. 865.

And the brothers and sisters, and nieces and nephews, of a member of a fraternal insurance order who died leaving no other relatives, are not "legal dependents," where they are not living with him, or shown to be dependent upon him, since the words "legal dependents" mean those relying upon social societies and ordinary insurance companies with respect to what constitutes warranties and what representations.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535; Home Friendly Soc. v. Berry, 94 Ga. 606, 21 S. E. 583; Supreme Council, C. B. L. v. McGinniss, 59 Ohio St. 531, 53 N. E. 54; Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Gandy, 63 N. J. Eq. 692, 53 Atl. 142; Vivar v. Supreme Lodge, K. P. 52 N. J. L. 455, 20 Atl. 36; Britton v. Supreme Council, R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102, 19 Am. St. Rep. 376, 18 Atl. 675; Keener v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 38 Mo. App. 543; Supreme Council, A. L. H. v. Perry, 140 Mass. 580, 5 N. E. 634; Daniels v. Pratt, 143 Mass. 216, 10 N. E. 166; Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. v. Hine, 82 Conn. 315, 73 Atl. 791; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 19 L.R.A. 187, 33 N. E. 183; Whitmore v. Supreme Lodge, K. & L. H. 100 Mo. 36, 13 S. W. 495; Hanford v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. 122 Mo. 50, 26 S. W. 680; Krause v. Modern Woodmen, 133 Iowa, 199, 110 N. W. 452; Hoover v. Royal Neighbors, 65 Kan. 616, 70 Pac. 595; Modern Woodmen v. Angle, 127 Mo. App. 94, 104 S. W. 297; Knights of Honor v. Dickson, 102 Tenn. 255, 52 S. W. 862; Finch v. Modern Woodmen, 113 Mich. 646, 71 N. W. 1104; Baumgart v. Modern Woodmen, 85 Wis. 546, 55 N. W. 713; Gray v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. 47 Tex. Civ. App. 609, 106 S. W. 176; Beard v. Loyal Neighbors, 53 Or. 102, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 99 Pac. 83, 17 Ann. Cas. 1190; Supreme Lodge, O. C. K. v. McLaughlin, 108 Ill. App. 85; United Brethren Mut. Aid Soc. v. White, 100 Pa. 12; Warner v. Modern Woodmen, 67 Neb. 233, 61 L.R.A. 603, 108 Am. St. Rep. 634, 93 N. W. 397, 2 Ann. Cas. 660.

The assured having made the statement that the plaintiff was his niece and warranted it to be true, the defendant had a right to rely wholly on such statement, and his beneficiaries have to take the consequence of forfeiture on account of falsehood.

Supreme Council, A. L. H. v. Green, 71 Md. 263, 17 Am. St. Rep. 527, 17 Atl. 1048; Koerts v. Grand Lodge, O. H. S. 119 Wis.

the insured for support. Little v. Colwell, — N. C. —, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 74 S. E. 10.

And it is also held that creditors of the insured are not "dependents" within the meaning of a statute regulating mutual benefit societies or of the by-laws of such societies. Sargent v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 158 Mass. 557, 33 N. E. 650; Clarke v. Schwarzenberg, 162 Mass. 98, 38 N. E. 17; Briggs v. Earl, 139 Mass. 473, 1 N. E. 847; Fisher v. Donovan, 57 Neb. 361, 44 L.R.A. 383, 77 N. W. 778. And see also cases cited in the earlier notes as to creditors.

J. T. W.

525, 97 N. W. 163; Gaines v. Fidelity & C. Co. 93 App. Div. 524, 87 N. Y. Supp. 821; Webb v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 19 Colo. App. 456, 76 Pac. 738; United Brethren Mut. Aid Soc. v. White, 100 Pa. 12; Beard v. Royal Neighbors, 53 Or. 102, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 99 Pac. 83, 17 Ann. Cas. 1199; Brock v. United Moderns, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 12, 81 S. W. 340; Gray v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. 47 Tex. Civ. App. 609, 106 S. W. 176.

The plaintiff cannot recover as a dependent, because she was wrongfully living with the assured.

Keener v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 38 Mo. App. 543; West v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 14 Tex. Civ. App. 479, 37 S. W. 966; Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Hanses, 81 Mo. App. 545; McCarthy v. Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. 153 Mass. 314, 11 L.R.A. 144, 25 Am. St. Rep. 637, 26 N. E. 866; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 19 L.R.A. 187, 33 N. E. 183.

Messrs. J. C. Kinsler and F. H. Woodland, for intervenor appellant:

Plaintiff was not a dependent, and cannot recover.

West v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 14 Tex. Civ. App. 479, 37 S. W. 966; Keener v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 38 Mo. App. 543; Miller v. Prella, 122 Ill. App. 380.

The void designation does not avoid the contract as the defendant lodge claims.

Shea v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. 160 Mass. 289, 39 Am. St. Rep. 475, 35 N. E. 855; Burns v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 153 Mass. 173, 26 N. E. 443; Rindge v. New England Mut. Aid Soc. 146 Mass. 286, 15 N. E. 628; Sargent v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 158 Mass. 557, 33 N. E. 650; Britton v. Supreme Council, R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102, 19 Am. St. Rep. 376, 18 Atl. 675.

If the contract is not void and the appellee cannot take, judgment should be rendered in favor of the intervenor.

Keener v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 38 Mo. App. 553; Ballou v. Gile, 50 Wis. 614, 7 N. W. 561; Britton v. Supreme Council, R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 109, 19 Am. St. Rep. 376, 18 Atl. 675; Rindge v. New England Mut. Aid Soc. 146 Mass. 286, 15 N. E. 628; Sargent v. Supreme Lodge, K. H. 158 Mass. 557, 33 N. E. 650.

Messrs. Smyth, Smith, & Schall, for appellee:

The statement that plaintiff was a niece is a representation, and not a warranty, and did not avoid the policy.

Etna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 49 Neb. 835, 69 N. W. 125; Kettenbach v. Omaha Life Asso. 49 Neb. 848, 69 N. W. 135; Royal Neighbors v. Wallace, 64 Neb. 331, 89 N. W. 758, 66 Neb. 546, 92 N. W. 897; Bank- ers' Union v. Mixon, 74 Neb. 38, 103 N. W. 1049.

Plaintiff was a dependent.

McCarthy v. Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. 153 Mass. 314, 11 L.R.A. 144, 25 Am. St. Rep. 637, 26 N. E. 866; Wilber v. Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. 192 Mass. 477, 78 N. E. 445; Murphy v. Nowak, 223 Ill. 301, 7 L. R.A. (N.S.) 393, 79 N. E. 112; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 19 L.R.A. 187, 33 N. E. 183; Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Hutchinson, 6 Ind. App. 399, 33 N. E. 816; Storey v. Williamsburgh Masonic Mut. Ben. Asso. 95 N. Y. 474; People v. Hayes, 70 Hun, 115, 24 N. Y. Supp. 194; Bivins v. Jarnigan, 3 Baxt. 282; Burgen v. Straughan, 7 J. J. Marsh. 583; Brown v. Kinsey, 81 N. C. 245; Massey v. Wallace, 32 S. C. 149, 10 S. E. 937; Potter v. Gracie, 58 Ala. 303, 29 Am. Rep. 748; Robbins v. Potter, 98 Mass. 532; Lytle v. Newell, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 188, 68 S. W. 118; James v. Supreme Council, R. A. 130 Fed. 1014.

Fawcett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff upon a certificate of membership issued by defendant to Joseph A. Lipps, and payable by its terms to plaintiff, defendant and intervenor separately appeal. The petition alleges that defendant is a corporation under the laws of Nebraska; that on December 11, 1901, it issued a certificate for $1,000 upon the life of Joseph A. Lipps, in which it agreed to pay to plaintiff, "a dependent and niece," at the death of said Lipps, $1,000; that all assessments were duly paid from time to time and that said Lipps died January 17, 1908; that shortly after the death of Lipps defendant refused to furnish plaintiff any blanks upon which to prepare proofs of death, denied all liability to plaintiff upon such certificate, and refused to pay the same. Prayer for judgment. Intervenor, Sarah E. Lipps, filed her petition, asking to be allowed to intervene, for the reason that she was the wife and widow of the deceased; that at the time of his death plaintiff did not and could not have an insurable interest in the life of said Lipps, and could not be a beneficiary in said contract, and that "under the law and the terms and provisions of the by-laws and articles of incorporation of the defendant she is entitled to the proceeds of said policy." Defendant filed its answer to the petition of plaintiff, in which it admits its incorporation; the issuance of the certificate to Lipps, in which "it agreed, among other things, to pay to Mary M. Goff a sum not exceeding one thousand ($1,000) dollars on the death of said Joseph A. Lipps;" the correctness of the copy of the certificate attached to plain-tiff's petition; the payment of all the assessments; the death of Lipps as alleged; the request of plaintiff for blanks on which to make proof of death; the refusal to furnish the same, and the refusal to pay the money or any part thereof to plaintiff.

The answer then alleges that the defendant is a fraternal beneficiary association, and that the certificate was issued upon a written application made by Lipps, and on the conditions named in his application, one of which was that plaintiff was his niece; that the statement made by Lipps as to the relationship of plaintiff was false; that they were not in any manner related by consanguinity, and that plaintiff was not in any manner dependent upon Lipps. It then sets out in extenso the statements made in the application, the conditions contained in and indorsed upon the certificate, and the agreement therein that all such statements and conditions should constitute the basis for and form a part of the certificate, and making the same warranties on the part of the applicant, and an agreement that any untrue statements or answers contained in the application or made to the examining physician, or any concealment of facts or failure to comply with the laws, rules, and usages of the order, should render the certificate void, and that all rights of any person thereunder should become forfeited. Plaintiff replied to the answers of both intervener and defendant, said replies being substantially general denials.

The trial proceeded to the court and a jury upon the issues thus framed. When all parties had rested, each moved the court for a peremptory instruction. The court thereupon made the following order: "I will excuse the jury and take the case from the jury, a question of law solely being in the case." To this order the intervener alone excepted. This action of the court having been invited by all of the parties, neither can now predicate error thereon.

As it appears to us, the case involves but two simple propositions: (1) Was the statement in the application that plaintiff bore the relation to the applicant of niece, a warranty the falsity of which would, regardless of its materiality to the risk, render the certificate void? (2) Was plaintiff a dependent within the meaning of the constitution and by-laws of defendant, and of the statute in relation to such societies? We will consider these two points in the order named.

The wording of the application is: "I hereby direct that the amount of the beneficiary fund, to which my beneficiaries may be entitled at my death, shall be paid to Mrs. Mary M. Goff, residing at 1110 South Eighth, related to me as niece." Authorized L.R.A. (N.S.)

ties are cited by defendant, from other jurisdictions, which sustain its contention that a false answer avoids the policy, where the application provides that all of the answers of the applicant contained therein are express warranties, and that, if any of them are shown to have been false, the policy is void. It would serve no good purpose to refer to those cases here, for the reason that this court is, by repeated decisions, committed to the rule that, "in construing a contract, for the purpose of determining whether the statements made therein were intended by the parties thereto to be warranties or representations, the court will take into consideration the situation of the parties, the subject-matter of the contract, the language employed, and will construe a statement made to be a warranty only when it clearly appears that such was the intention of the contracting parties; that the mind of each party consciously intended and consented that such should be the interpretation of his statements." Ætna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 49 Neb. 811, 842, 69 N. W. 125, 135. In the opinion in that case we said: "We reach the conclusion, therefore, that in order that the answers under consideration, made by the assured, constitute a defense to this action, it was incumbent upon the insurance company to plead and prove not only that the answers were made as written in the application, but that they were false; that they were false in some particular material to the insurance risk; and that the insurance company relied and acted upon these answers." The rule there announced has been followed in Kettenbach v. Omaha Life Assn. 49 Neb. 842, 69 N. W. 135; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Rehlaender, 68 Neb. 284, 94 N. W. 129, 4 Ann. Cas. 251; Bankers' Union v. Mixon, 74 Neb. 36, 103 N. W. 1049, and in a number of other cases, which we will not encumber this opinion by citing. While this rule, when originally announced in the Simmons Case, may have been a "blazed trail," it has now become a beaten path in which we are content to travel. That the statement in the application here, that plaintiff bore the relation to the deceased of niece, was not material to the insurance risk, seems clear. The falsity of that statement in no manner shortened the life of the deceased, and hence did not increase the hazard assumed by defendant. If plaintiff had been required to prove this relationship, in order to bring herself within the class which defendant was permitted to insure, then there could have been no recovery by her; not because of the falsity of the statement, but because of the fact that she was not one of a class, who, under the statute and the constitution and by-laws of the defendant, could lawfully become a beneficiary. This brings us to a consideration of the second point.

2. Section 94, chap. 43, Comp. Stat. 1909, provides: "No fraternal society created or organized under the provisions of this act shall issue beneficiary certificate of membership to any person under the age of eighteen years, nor over the age of fifty-five years. Payment of death benefits shall only be made to the families, heirs, blood relations, affianced husband or affianced wife of, or to persons dependent upon the member." The constitution and by-laws of defendant follow this statutory requirement. Was plaintiff "dependent upon the member" within the meaning of the statute and of the laws of the order?

The evidence shows that plaintiff is the widow of one James O. Goff, who died in Kansas, leaving plaintiff and three children surviving. Shortly thereafter one of the children died. After the death of this child plaintiff lived for two years with a sister-in-law in Missouri and for four years with a brother, the latter two of such years in "Dakota," during all of which time she kept her two children with her. The brother with whom she was living having removed from Dakota, she remained there, working at day's work to support herself and children. When the older of the two boys was able, he went to work in Dakota. From Dakota she came with her other child to Nebraska, and after stopping a while at Norfolk went to Columbus. While working there, supporting herself and son, she met the deceased. Her boy was then fifteen years of age. At the time she met deceased, he was selling sewing machines. In the preparation of a lease for a machine which she had purchased from him, he asked her her name and the name of her mother, and upon being informed told plaintiff that he had a niece who married a man by the name of Goff. She told him her mother's name was Nancy Lee, and he said he had a half sister by that name. He told her that she was raised by a family by the name of Lee and that he was her uncle. It appears that she knew little of her family record. About a month or so later plaintiff became seriously ill, which illness lasted about four months. Deceased went to her house, and, with the aid of her son, took care of her. She testified that after she had recovered deceased said to her, "If I would come and keep house for him we would work together and have a home together, he would have a home and I would have a home. He said, I was not able to work and support myself, but that I could keep house for him, and we would live together, and he would support me, and at his death I should have what he had;" that when deceased obtained the certificate of insurance in controversy, he gave it to her, and it remained in her possession until his death; that he also executed a will in her favor; that he did not stay at her house when he was in town before she went to keep house for him, but stayed at the hotel; that after she assumed the duties of housekeeper they, together with her boy, resided at different places named, when they settled in Omaha, where they lived for several years and until the death of Mr. Lipps. One year of the time, prior to settling in Omaha, was spent in Papillion. Her son always lived with her in the same house, and her other son sometimes visited them. Mr. Lipps had a wife and son residing in Omaha during at least the last three years of Mr. Lipps's life. The charge is made that Lipps had abandoned his wife and children, and that he and the plaintiff lived together illicitly for years and up to the date of his death. We have before us three abstracts, the main abstract prepared by defendant, a supplementary abstract by intervener, and one by plaintiff. These abstracts are barren of any proof to sustain either of these charges against plaintiff. It is claimed in the briefs that the trial court found that the relations between plaintiff and Lipps were illicit. We do not think the language used by the trial judge will bear any such construction. For him to have made such a finding he would have been compelled to go outside of the evidence, and indulge in conjecture not warranted thereby. This the learned trial judge did not do.

Cases are cited in which persons, situated somewhat similarly to plaintiff, have been held not to be dependents within the meaning of statutes not materially unlike our own; but in every such case the relations between the claimant and the deceased were shown to have been meretricious. No case has been cited, nor do we think one will ever be decided, holding that a woman who, without means, in good faith, leaves her own home and work, and assumes and for years faithfully performs the duties of housekeeper for a man who agrees in consideration therefor to support her and at his death leave her his estate, does not thereby become a dependent upon him; and especially so where there is an entire absence of evidence to show any improper relations between them.

The right of a plaintiff to recover in an action like this is fully sustained in James v. Supreme Council, R. A. (C. C.) 130 Fed. 1014; McCarthy v. Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. 153 Mass. 314, 11 L.R.A. 144, 25 Am. St. Rep. 637, 26 N. E. 866, which case is cited and followed fifteen years later in Wilber v. Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. 192 Mass. 477, 78 N. E. 445.

Our attention has been called to the recent case of Royal League v. Shields, 251 Ill. 250, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 208, 96 N. E. 45. That case was decided by a divided court. The majority opinion held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The dissenting opinion (by three of the justices) makes out a strong case in favor of a recovery, even under the facts disclosed in that case. A single quotation from the majority opinion will show that, had the facts been as they are here, plaintiff's action would have been sustained. The opinion states: "Frieda Wassmann was not related in any way to Michael Shields. She was not his daughter by nature or adoption. She had at no time been a member of his family or his household. He could not legally have been compelled to assist in her support, nor was he morally bound to furnish her support or leave her this money. Had she been at the time of his death a member of his household a different situation might have been presented, and the case of Wilber v. Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. P. supra, cited by appellant, might then have been in point." (The italics are ours.) In the dissenting opinion it is said: "He voluntarily assumed the burden of contributing to her support in a regular and substantial manner, and did so regularly for nine years before his death. In my opinion these facts bring appellant within the definition of a dependent, and as such made her eligible as a beneficiary under the statute and the by-laws of the Royal League, and entitled her to the money paid into court by the association." It thus appears that both the opinion and dissenting opinion sustain a recovery in this case.

We think the language in Keener v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 38 Mo. App. 543, is apt: "I would not restrict dependents to those whom one may be legally bound to support, nor, yet, to those to whom he may be morally bound, but the term should be restricted to those whom it is not unlawful for him to support."

That it was lawful for Lipps to bind himself to support plaintiff under the circumstances shown cannot be doubted. That he did so bind himself is equally clear. That such a contract is not obnoxious to public policy is beyond question.

The reasoning of the above cited cases appeals to us as eminently sound. Without pursuing the matter further we hold: (1) That the answer of the deceased in his application, that plaintiff bore to him the relation of niece, whether it be termed a representation merely or a warranty, was not material to the risk, and hence did not 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

avoid the policy. (2) That plaintiff was, at the time the application was signed and the certificate issued, and at the time of the death of Mr. Lipps, dependent upon him for her support, and that she is therefore competent to take as the beneficiary named in the certificate in suit.

The judgment of the District Court is therefore affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JENNIE E. BROWN, Appt.,

v.

ORLANDO W. WEBSTER, Admr., etc., of Erastus E. Brown, Deceased, et al.

(90 Neb. 591, 134 N. W. 185.)

Will — reciprocal — husband and wife — enforcement.

1. Where a husband and wife possessed of separate estates orally agree that upon the predecease of either the survivor shall thereupon become the owner of all of the estate, both real and personal, of such decedent, and at the same time, and in pursuance of and for the expressed purpose of providing a proper method of carrying such agreement into effect, simultaneously execute reciprocal wills, in each of which the other spouse is made sole devisee and legatee, held, that the oral agreement and the execution of the wills constitute a single transaction, that each is an integral part of one contract, and that such contract cannot be said to rest entirely in parol.

Same — consideration.

2. And in such a case the contract of each is a sufficient consideration for the contract of the other.

Same — performance.

3. And the continued reliance by plaintiff upon the contract, by permitting her will executed as a part thereof to remain in the family safe unchanged and unrevoked, during the entire lifetime of the deceased, constituted full performance by her of the terms of the contract.

Same — revocation.

4. And the wills executed as a part of such contract in equity are not ambulatory, and may not be revoked by either party to Headnotes by FAWCETT, J.

Note. — Revocability of mutual wills.

The earlier cases on this question are collected in a note to Frazier v. Patterson, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 508.

As shown in the earlier note, mutual wills executed in pursuance of a compact or agreement entered into by the testators to devise their property to certain designated beneficiaries, subject to a life estate or other such contract, so long as the other party continues to perform the contract on his or her part.

Same—specific performance.

5. And where either party to such a contract commits a breach of the same by subsequently executing another will, devising and bequeathing his estate contrary to the terms of such contract, and dies, the survivor, upon proof of a continued performance thereof, in good faith, on his or her part, is entitled to a specific performance of the contract, as against the heirs, devisees, legatees, and executors of the decedent.

Pleading—sufficiency of petition.

6. The petition set out in the opinion examined, and held sufficient.

(Root, J., dissents in part.)

(January 3, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Lancaster County in defendants' favor in an action brought to enforce specific performance of an alleged oral contract. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Field, Ricketts, & Ricketts for appellant.

Messrs. Charles O. Whedon, and Perry, Lambe, & Butler, for appellees:

There was no consideration for either the alleged agreement or the wills which was binding upon either party.

Kansas Mfg. Co. v. Gandy, 11 Neb. 448, 38 Am. Rep. 370, 9 N. W. 569; Wallace v. Rappleye, 103 Ill. 253; Semmes v. Worthington, 38 Md. 298; Cawley's Estate, 136 Pa. 628, 10 L.R.A. 93, 20 Atl. 567; Schumaker v. Smith, 44 Ala. 454, 4 Am. Rep. 135; Buchanan v. Anderson, 10 Prob. Rep. Anno. 175, 70 S. C. 454, 50 S. E. 12; DeMoss v. Robinson, 46 Mich. 62, 41 Am. Rep. 144, 8 N. W. 712; Raub v. Smith, 61 Mich. 543, 1 Am. St. Rep. 619, 28 N. W. 676; Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 91, 18 Am. Rep. 61; Hill v. Harding, 92 Ky. 76, 17 S. W. 199, 537; Edson v. Parsons, 85 Hun, 263, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1036; Hale v. Hale, 90 Va. 728, 19 S. E. 739; Rood, Wills, § 27.

interest in the survivor, are generally held to be irrevocable when, upon the death of the one, the survivor avails himself of the benefits of the devise in his favor, and he must in equity be treated as holding the title in trust for the purpose indicated in the compact. To the same effect are Baker v. Syfritt, 147 Iowa, 49, 125 N. W. 998; Prince v. Prince, 64 Wash. 552, 117 Pac. 255; Deseumeur v. Rondel, 76 N. J. Eq. 394, 74 Atl. 703.

In Baker v. Syfritt, supra, it was held that where a husband and wife executed a joint will in which they described their property as being held by them jointly, and devised the same to a third person subject to a life estate in the survivor, the husband, accepting the benefits upon the death of the wife, became bound by its provisions so as to preclude his surviving second wife from claiming dower in the land mentioned in the will, although the statute provided that the right of a widow to dower should not be affected by any will of the husband.

But the mere concurrent execution of mutual wills, with full knowledge of their contents by both testators, is not enough to prove a legal obligation to forbear revocation, in the absence of a valid contract.

(Note in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 511.)

37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The alleged contract is within the statute of frauds.

Gould v. Mansfield, 103 Mass. 408, 4 Am. Rep. 573; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 287, 19 Am. Rep. 459; Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 55 Am. Rep. 222, 5 N. E. 666; Shahan v. Swan, 48 Ohio St. 25, 29 Am. St. Rep. 517, 26 N. E. 222; Pond v. Sheehan, 132 Ill. 312, 8 L.R.A. 414, 23 N. E. 1018; Dicken v. McKinley, 163 Ill. 318, 54 Am. St. Rep. 471, 45 N. E. 134; Ellis v. Crary, 74 Wis. 176, 4 L.R.A. 55, 17 Am. St. Rep. 125, 42 N. W. 252; Martin v. Martin, 108 Wis. 284, 81 Am. St. Rep. 895, 84 N. W. 439; Loper v. Sheldon, 120 Wis. 26, 97 N. W. 524; Tilton v. Tilton, 9 N. H. 390; Malins v. Brown, 4 N. Y. 403.

Fawcett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition alleges, substantially, that Erastus E. Brown, late of Lancaster county, Accordingly it has been held that a verbal agreement between a husband and wife to make similar wills by which they should devise their property to certain designated charities, subject to a life estate in the survivor, is void under the statute of frauds invalidating parol contracts for the sale or disposition of land, and that therefore, after the death of one, the surviving testator had a right to revoke the former will and make another that could operate to dispose of the property. Allen v. Bromberg, 163 Ala. 620, 50 So. 884.

A mutual will executed in pursuance of an agreement entered into by the testators to dispose of their property in a particular way may be revoked before the death of either party, without notice to the other. Stone v. Hoskins, 93 L. T. N. S. 441, [1905] P. 194, 74 L. J. Prob. N. S. 110, 54 Week. Rep. 64, 21 Times L. R. 528.

In the above case it was held that, upon the death of the testator, who had revoked his will by the execution of another, the survivor was not entitled to have the later will set aside, nor entitled to any relief against the later will by way of declaration of trust, since he was not prejudiced, as he had notice of the revocation. Ibid.

A. L. R.

died August 15, 1908, possessed of a large amount of real and personal property, which is specifically set out; that he left no heirs of his body, and that plaintiff is his widow; that at the time of her marriage to the deceased in 1866 deceased did not own property exceeding in value the sum of $1,000; that at the time of her marriage, or shortly thereafter, plaintiff received from her mother's estate about $20,000, all of which she turned over to deceased, who managed, controlled, and invested the same in his own name as if it were his own money; that nearly all the property purchased with such funds was taken in the name of deceased, and was by him held and transferred as his own; that from time to time, as convenience suggested, an occasional piece of property was taken in the name of plaintiff, the description of which property is set out. As to one of the pieces described, it is alleged that it was sold in 1882 at a profit of $8,000, and the consideration paid to and used by the deceased; that another piece described was also sold and the proceeds paid to and used by deceased; that in January, 1896, plaintiff had standing in her name real property of the reasonable value of $40,000 or $50,000; that at the same time deceased owned property and securities of the value of $50,000 or $60,000; that no accounting was had at any time between plaintiff and deceased of the moneys turned over by her to deceased or of the profits and income arising from the investment thereof; that in January, 1896 (thirty years after their marriage), plaintiff and her husband had no children to whom to leave their property; that, at the suggestion of the deceased, at that time a parol contract was entered into by and between plaintiff and deceased, by the terms of which it was agreed that the survivor should, on the death of the other, become the exclusive owner of all the property, both real and personal, that should then be owned by the one who should first depart this life, "the agreement of one being the consideration for the agreement of the other;" that, at the time, the deceased suggested that "a proper method to carry said agreement into effect was for each to execute a will, making the other sole devisee and legatee of all of the property of which he or she should die seised;" that, in pursuance of said agreement, the deceased caused wills to be prepared, one for himself to execute and the other to be executed by plaintiff, which wills were accordingly executed by plaintiff and deceased respectively, "each being executed in consideration of the execution of the other." A photographic copy of each of said wills is attached to the petition as a part thereof, and shows that they were both written by the same person, and, as it appears by comparison with the signature of the deceased, by the deceased himself. The will executed by deceased made plaintiff sole devisee and legatee of all of the property of which he might die seised, and that executed by plaintiff made the deceased sole devisee and legatee of all of the property of which she might die seised. The wording of the two wills is identical, except as to the change of name and sex. Both wills are signed in the presence of the same attesting witnesses.

The petition further alleges: That, after the execution of the wills, deceased caused them to be placed in an envelope, and delivered them to plaintiff for safe-keeping. That they were placed by plaintiff in the family safe, where they remained until after the death of deceased. That in good faith and in full reliance on the agreement made and entered into by and between the parties, as above set out, "and the irrevocable character of said agreement, and of the wills executed by the respective parties in pursuance thereto, the plaintiff permitted the deceased to use and deal with the property of the plaintiff, held in her right, as hereinbefore alleged, as if it were his own property. He not only collected, invested, and used in his own name the income arising from plaintiff's property, but also money received as consideration for the sale of her property, as if the same were his own money." That in April, 1902, deceased sold the farm owned by plaintiff at the time of the agreement referred to, and received on the contract price between the date of sale and the time of his death the sum of $7,750, all of which he kept and used as his own, and had not accounted to plaintiff for any portion thereof. That he used plaintiff's residence, in which had been invested the sum of about $40,000, for many years as the family home without rent or compensation, while the income from his other property, as well as that from plaintiff's property, was invested in his own name, thereby increasing his holdings at the expense of plaintiff's estate. That deceased at no time intimated or notified plaintiff that he wished to modify or revoke the will which he had made in plaintiff's favor in execution of said agreement. That plaintiff in all things fully kept and performed the agreement, made between herself and deceased, as alleged, in consideration for which he agreed to make plaintiff sole devisee and legatee of all property, real and personal, of which he should die seised, if he should first decease. That the will which she executed in due form in January, 1896, making deceased her sole devisee and legatee, is still in full force and effect and unrevoked. That "as the conditions on which plaintiff was to have and receive all of the real and personal property of the said Erastus E. Brown, as her own property, have come to pass, and as the plaintiff has fully kept and performed the agreement on her part, she has become the equitable owner of all the real and personal property of which the deceased died seised. And, as the deceased before his death committed a breach of said contract, she is in equity entitled to have the same specifically performed by his estate, and those who claim under him." That in the latter part of July, 1908, it was arranged between plaintiff and deceased to visit friends in the state of New York. That deceased also desired to visit his three brothers in and near Angola, Indiana. That by reason of the illness of a servant in their household, which they felt rendered it unsafe to then leave her alone, it was arranged between them that deceased should proceed to Indiana and there visit his brothers, that plaintiff should remain at home until it was deemed safe to leave the servant, when she would proceed to northern Michigan and spend a few days with a friend, and then join the deceased at Angola, from whence they would proceed together to New York. That, in pursuance of said arrangement, deceased left home for Indiana on July 26, 1908. That plaintiff remained at home until August 2, 1908, when she proceeded to northern Michigan, where she remained until August 10th, when she proceeded to Angola, reaching there on the evening of August 11th. That, on her arrival, she found deceased dangerously ill from urinary trouble with which he had been suffering for three or four days, but of which she had no notice until her arrival. That he survived until August 15th, when he passed away. That on the afternoon of August 11, 1908, and before plaintiff reached the bedside of deceased, deceased executed another and different will from that made in pursuance of the agreement made with plaintiff, and by which latter will he gave plaintiff an interest for life in certain property, and gave all the rest and residue of his estate to the defendants Frank M. and Clinton M. Brown, sons of the deceased's brother, Ezekiel and Charles W. Brown, Homer H. Brown, and Laura E. Talmage, children of Warren Brown, another brother of deceased, except a small legacy of $1,500 to Augusta Kreitlow, a long-time servant in the house of plaintiff and deceased. That on January 26, 1911, the will of August 11, 1908, was approved and allowed in the county court of Lancaster county, Nebraska, as the last will and 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

testament of the deceased. That no appeal has been taken from the order probating said will. A true copy of the will is attached to the petition. That, by reason of the premises, the defendants Brown and defendant Talmage have become vested with a legal title to all the real estate belonging to the estate of the deceased and the right to receive on final distribution of said estate all of the personal property or its proceeds belonging to said estate, subject only to the rights of plaintiff as widow in the estate of the deceased. That from the time deceased arrived in Indiana the defendant Talmage became his daily companion, went with him from the residence of one brother to that of another, and continued to be his constant and daily companion from the time of his arrival until plaintiff reached his bedside on the evening of August 11th. That at some time prior to making his will deceased gave to defendant Talmage $3,000 in gas bonds which he had taken with him from Lincoln, and also gave to his brother, William M. Brown, a note and mortgage owned by deceased of $1,500, to be held by him for the use and benefit of the defendants Frank M., Charles W., and Homer H. Brown. That after plaintiff's arrival at the bedside of deceased he was more or less lucid mentally; yet neither he nor any other person notified or intimated to plaintiff that deceased had made and executed the will of August 11th, or that he had given to defendants the securities above referred to, until after the demise of the deceased. That plaintiff declined to act as executrix of the will of August 11th, and defendant Webster has been appointed as administrator with the will annexed. That as such administrator defendant Webster is now in possession of the real estate belonging to said estate, and is collecting the rents and income therefrom. That he is also in possession of all of the personal assets belonging to said estate. That all of the debts of said estate, except a small claim of $25, which still is pending, have been paid, and all claims against said estate have been barred by limitations by order of the county court. That the instrument approved and allowed as the last will and testament of the deceased operated as a breach of his agreement with plaintiff. That no consideration passed from either of the defendants to the deceased for the provisions made in their behalf in said last will and testament, and that no consideration passed from defendants Talmage, Frank M., Charles W., and Homer H. Brown for the securities given to them, nor was the deceased in any way legally or morally obligated to provide for any of said defendants by will or otherwise. That the provisions so made were entirely voluntary and without consideration. That plaintiff had duly renounced the provisions made for her in the instrument probated as the last will and testament of the deceased, and claimed such share in said estate as was given her by law. That the provision made for Augusta Kreitlow in the will of deceased met with the approval of plaintiff, and shortly after the death of deceased plaintiff paid to Augusta the sum of $1,500 the amount of the legacy in her behalf, and took from her an assignment thereof. Plaintiff prays that defendant Webster, as administrator, be restrained from parting with the possession of the whole or any portion of the real estate belonging to said estate, and from making any distribution of the personal assets thereof, and that defendants Brown and defendant Talmage may each be enjoined from taking or attempting to take possession of any part of the real estate of deceased and from taking any order for the distribution of the personal assets of said estate, pending the final determination of this suit. That plaintiff be decreed specific performance of the agreement entered into between herself and the deceased, whereby she was to become possessed of the legal title to all the real and personal property of which deceased should die seised. That her title to the several pieces of real estate described, and to all the personal assets of said estate, be quieted and settled in the plaintiff as against the several defendants and each of them. That defendants, and each of them, be foreclosed and barred from all right, title, interest, or demand in and to any part or portion of the real and personal property belonging to the estate of said deceased. That defendant Webster, as administrator with the will annexed, and his successors in office, may be ordered and adjudged to turn over and account to plaintiff on final settlement of said estate for all the personal property and personal assets belonging to said estate which have come into his hands as such administrator, and which have not been consumed in the settlement of said estate, and "for such other, further, and different relief as may be necessary to fully vest in the plaintiff full and complete title to all of the estate, both real and personal, of the late Erastus E. Brown, or that may be necessary to forever bar the several defendants of all right, title, interest, claim, or demand in and to any portion thereof."

To the above petition the defendants, other than defendant Webster, demurred upon two grounds: "First. That the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter in this action. Second. That the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff and 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

against these demurring defendants." The first ground of demurrer was overruled and the second sustained, and, plaintiff electing to stand upon her petition, the suit was dismissed at her cost. From the judgment so entered, plaintiff appeals.

The objections to the petition urged by demurrants are substantially: That the contract between plaintiff and deceased, that the survivor should become the owner of all of the estate, real and personal, of the deceased spouse, rests entirely in parol, and, as it affects the title to real estate, is void under the statute of frauds; that such contract was not aided by the execution of the reciprocal wills; that the oral contract and the wills are alike without consideration; that the will of the deceased was ambulatory in its character and revocable at his pleasure; and that the execution of the wills did not constitute part performance. These points are so interwoven that we will consider them together.

The fact that a contract of the nature of the oral agreement alleged would rest in parol would not necessarily render the same void. Section 3 of the statute of frauds (Comp. Stat. 1911, chap. 32), relied upon by defendants, is qualified by the exceptions noted in §§ 4 and 6 of the statute. Section 4 provides: "The preceding section shall not be construed to affect in any manner the power of a testator in the disposition of his real estate by a last will and testament, nor to prevent any trust from arising or being extinguished by implication or operation of law." Section 6 provides: "Nothing in this chapter contained shall be construed to abridge the powers of the court of chancery to compel the specific performance of agreement in cases of part performance."

It will be seen by these two sections:

First. That § 3 cannot be construed to affect in any manner the power of the deceased in the disposition of his real estate by a last will and testament, as was done by the will of January, 1896; and hence, even if it were to be conceded that the agreement by the deceased that, if he predeceased his wife, she should become the owner of all of his real estate, and the will executed by him to that effect, were separate agreements, the execution of the will, if executed "in pursuance to said agreement," as alleged, would bring the case within the scope of § 4.

Second. Under the provisions of § 6, if there was a part performance by plaintiff of the agreement on her part, then under the well-settled rule in this state § 3 of the statute of frauds would not apply. In this case we think there was not only part performance by the plaintiff, but that the performance by her of her part of the agreement was a complete performance. She at once executed the will provided for in her agreement with her husband, and never receded from it, but at all times during the period of more than twelve years which elapsed before the death of her husband acted upon it, and thereby continually affirmed it.

This constituted not only performance by her, but a good and sufficient consideration for the contract. The deceased himself acted upon the contract, completed by the execution of the wills, and continued performance thereof from the time of its execution in January, 1896, until the 11th day of August, 1908,—four days prior to his death. This action on his part shows that during every day of that period of more than twelve years he was in effect asserting and relying upon the contract which he had entered into with the plaintiff. This constituted a sufficient consideration, and performance during that period, of the contract on his part, and, had the condition of the parties been reversed, and plaintiff had died first, the deceased could and doubtless would have asserted his rights under the contract, as evidenced by plaintiff's will. It is unfortunate that he, in the absence of his wife, while in the hands of his collateral heirs, and in the face of a speedy demise, should have committed a breach of the contract which he himself had induced his wife to enter into with him.

We are unable to consent to the theory that the agreement between the plaintiff and deceased, as to what should become of the estate of the one who should die first, and the execution of the wills, were separate transactions. The so-called oral contract and the execution of the wills were made, entered into, and executed at the same time. The allegations of the petition are that in January, 1896, "at the suggestion of the deceased," a parol contract was entered into by and between the deceased and plaintiff in the manner above set out, and that "the deceased at the time suggested a proper method to carry said agreement into effect was for each to execute a will, making the other sole devisee and legatee of all the property of which he or she should die seised. He therefore, in pursuance to said agreement, caused wills to be prepared and drawn, one for himself to execute, and one for the plaintiff to execute, which wills were accordingly executed," etc. It is a fact well known to the members of this court, and admitted in the briefs of both sides, that the deceased was an able lawyer of many years experience. He desired that this contract be made. They had been married for thirty years, and had no children. They had no debts or anyone dependent upon their bounty. The years had been passing, and he, realizing that death might at any time remove one or the other, with the care and forethought characteristic of the man, desired to provide against such contingency. He therefore suggested this plan of disposing of their property. It was agreed to by his wife. His knowledge as a lawyer was such that he realized the importance of reducing the terms of this agreement to writing. He therefore suggested the making of reciprocal wills as the "proper method to carry said agreement into effect." This also was assented to by the plaintiff, and he, with his own hand, drew the wills, and had them simultaneously executed in full compliance with the laws of this state. It would be a travesty upon justice to say that everything that was said and done on that occasion did not constitute a single transaction. It is not a question, therefore, of whether or not the execution of the wills aided an oral contract. The question is, Were the wills an integral and important part of the contract? We hold that they were, and that from the moment the wills were executed the contract no longer rested entirely in parol. We also think it would be doing violence to every rule of equity to hold that the contract of each, of which the will was a part, was not a good consideration for the contract of the other. We think the consideration of each was both a good and a valuable consideration; but, even if it were to be held that it did not constitute a valuable consideration, in the sense that no money was paid, or property delivered, or personal services performed, by the one to or for the other, the contract would still be enforceable for the reason that it was supported by a good consideration. Conceding that a contract by A to make a will in favor of B, that upon A's death he would leave all of his property to B, could not be enforced by B, as against the creditors of A, or as against those having a superior equity to B, yet, if there are no creditors and no one possessing superior equities to B, then a good consideration would be sufficient to entitle B to enforce the contract after A's death. Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480, 485; Underhill, Wills, § 285. That a contract to devise real estate, where there has been performance by the promisee, is good in this state, is settled in this court by Kofka v. Rosicky, 41 Neb. 328, 25 L.R.A. 207, 43 Am. St. Rep. 685, 59 N. W. 788; Teske v. Dittberner, 65 Neb. 167, 101 Am. St. Rep. 614, 91 N. W. 181, Id., 70 Neb. 544, 113 Am. St. Rep. 802, 98 N. W. 57; Peterson v. Bauer, 76 Neb. 652, 107 N. W. 993, 111 N. W. 361; Peterson v. Bauer, 83 Neb. 405, 119 N. W. 764; Pemberton v.

Pemberton, 76 Neb. 669, 107 N. W. 996; Harrison v. Harrison, 80 Neb. 103, 113 N. W. 1042; Cobb v. Macfarland, 87 Neb. 408, 127 N. W. 377; and Johnson v. Riseberg, 90 Neb. 217, 133 N. W. 183. That the execution of the wills satisfied the statute of frauds, see Brinker v. Brinker, 7 Pa. 53; Shroyer v. Smith, 204 Pa. 310, 54 Atl. 24; Keith v. Miller, 174 Ill. 64, 51 N. E. 151; Bruce v. Moon, 57 S. C. 60, 35 S. E. 415.

That the will of deceased was not in equity ambulatory or revocable, see Teske v. Dittberner, 70 Neb. 544, 113 Am. St. Rep. 802, 98 N. W. 57, where, in the seventh paragraph of the syllabus, we held: "A contract to leave property by will is not ambulatory or revocable, as being testamentary in character, after the promisee has performed his part of the contract." See also Bolman v. Overall, 80 Ala. 451, 60 Am. Rep. 107, 2 So. 624; Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332, 66 Am. Dec. 773; Rivers v. Rivers, 3 Desauss. Eq. 190, 4 Am. Dec. 609, where it is said: "By this agreement [to make a will of a particular tenor] he has renounced that absolute power of disposing of his estate at his pleasure, or even at his caprice, with which the law had clothed him; and I cannot doubt that he could bind himself to do so. . . . A man may renounce every power, benefit, or right which the laws gave him, and he will be bound by his agreement to do so, provided the agreement be entered into fairly, without surprise, imposition, or fraud, and that it be reasonable and moral. . . . It appears to me that to make a will in a particular way, on proper considerations, is as much a subject of contract as any other; and he who makes a contract on this subject is as much bound thereby as he would be by any agreement on any other subject." See also Bruce v. Moon, 57 S. C. 60, 71, 35 S. E. 415; Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480, 486, 487. The contention that plaintiff parted with nothing, that the manner in which she permitted her husband to manage and control her estate and take title to property in his own name and hold the same, and the proceeds from sales thereof, after the execution of the contract, was not different from the manner in which she had permitted him to handle her property prior to its execution, does not impress us as being of any force. The fact is admitted that at all times after the execution of the contract she in good faith relied upon it by permitting her will to remain as originally executed, without any attempt at modification or revocation. If during the four days that intervened after the deceased had broken his contract, and, while plaintiff was watching by his bedside, she had been stricken with paralysis and suddenly died, the deceased would, by the terms of the contract, have immediately become vested with the ownership of all her estate, both real and personal, and that estate would have gone, under his will of August 11th, to those of his blood who appear as defendants in this case; and, if the heirs of the blood of plaintiff had attempted to assert any claim to her estate, these heirs of the blood and devisees and legatees of the deceased would be here in the role of plaintiffs, seeking a specific performance of her contract. The record before us shows that, when the plaintiff and deceased were married, he was worth not to exceed $1,000; that she then had, or very soon thereafter, inherited $20,000, which she turned over to her husband, and which he subsequently used as his own in the manner set out in the petition. This was the nucleus of his fortune. Without this start in life who can say that the deceased would not have suffered the fate of many a good lawyer, and have died without leaving sufficient estate to fight over. Plaintiff not only furnished this start, but she permitted him to use it and its accumulations and the income therefrom, as if it were his own. For the last twelve years or more of their lives she did it in reliance upon this contract. The deceased proved to be a successful business man. She trusted him in business, and trusted him in the arrangement of all of the details of their contract and in the preparation of the wills in consummation thereof. She trusted him until the moment of his death, and, if the allegations in the petition are established upon the trial, she should now receive the reward of that faith and trust which extended over a period of more than forty years. This is not an attempt on the part of the court or of the plaintiff to make a will for the deceased. It is simply a case of holding him to the terms of a will which he himself voluntarily and freely made as a part of a contract which he induced his wife to enter into with him, and which she honestly and in good faith fully performed on her part.

Several minor questions discussed in the briefs are not thought to be material at this time, and will not be considered.

The judgment of the District Court in sustaining the demurrer of defendants is clearly wrong, and it is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in harmony with this opinion.

Root, J.:

I concur in the majority opinion in so far as it reverses the judgment of the district court and remands the cause for further proceedings, but I do not concur in the further direction nor in all that is said in the opinion.

The opinion assumes that there is no defense to the petition, and the district court cannot upon a second hearing follow the opinion, and at the same time enter a decree for the defendants, notwithstanding a perfect defense may have been pleaded and proved.

I do not agree to the statement that mutual wills executed in conformity to a preceding oral contract constitute, with the contract, an integral part of one transaction, nor that the respective testators are powerless to revoke their wills. The wills may furnish written evidence to take the oral contract without the statute of frauds, and if either testator subsequently, in violation of his contract, revokes his will or devises to another the property described in the oral contract, the beneficiaries whose rights are last in point of time will hold the property as trustees for the benefit of the senior devisee.

Furthermore, a decree of specific performance within the limits of legal discretion may be granted or withheld according to the circumstances of the case. In the case at bar neither will refers to any contract, nor can it be ascertained from an inspection of them that they were executed in conformity to an antecedent agreement. If evidence competent to establish that essential link in the plaintiff's title be not produced upon a trial, she should not prevail. If that evidence be produced, still there may be proof of such fraud, mistake, unfairness, hardship, rescission, or of changed conditions as will justify a judgment for the defendants.

For these reasons, I go no further than to say that the petition states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in the plaintiff's favor, and the district court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

M. E. BELL et al., Appts.,

v.

N. J. BELL.

(— Ala. —, 56 So. 926.)

Subrogation — advance to pay purchase price — vendor's lien.

1. One who advances money to pay the purchase price of real estate, under an agreement that he shall be secured by mortgage, is entitled to subrogation to the vendor's lien as against the rights of the wife of the vendee, who did not comply with the statutory requirements in executing the mortgage so as to bind her interests therein, and to the extent of such lien the mortgage may be enforced.

Same — general accounts — tacking.

2. The inclusion in a mortgage given by a purchaser of land to one who advanced money to pay the purchase price, for which he is entitled on the principle of subrogation to enforce the vendor's lien against the rights of the purchaser's wife, who did not execute the mortgage, of indebtedness growing out of general accounts, will not enable him to have the amount of such debts included in his priority over the wife's interests.

Payment — application — least security.

3. If neither debtor nor creditor apply payments made by one owing more than one debt, the law makes the application upon the one least secured.

(December 19, 1911.)

Note. — Right of one advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien.

- I. General rule, 1203.
- II. Where payment is by volunteer, 1204.
- III. Payment by surety,
  - a. In general, 1204.
  - b. Parties against whom right exists, 1205.
- IV. Payment by subsequent purchaser, 1206.
- V. Lender of money which was applied on purchase price, 1206.
- VI. Payment of note given for purchase price, 1207.
- VII. Loan of money expressly to pay purchase price, 1207.
- VIII. Where trust funds are used to pay for land, 1208.
- IX. Payment under express or implied contract of substitution, 1208.
- X. Where the legal title or a mortgage is taken as security, 1209.
- XI. Where purchase money paid relying upon promise of security which is not given, 1209.
- XII. Where purchase price is paid in reliance on defective security, 1210.
- XIII. Where the vendor has waived his lien, 1212.

I. General rule.

Wherever a vendor's lien is treated as assignable, the doctrine prevails that in equity any person paying the purchase price for land in behalf of another with reference to which the vendor has a lien is entitled to be subrogated thereto, providing the payment is made in compliance with a contract with the vendee expressly to pay the purchase price, with an express or implied understanding that the lien shall be retained as security for the money advanced, or where the payment is necessary

APPPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Lowndes County in complainant's favor and dismissing defendant's cross bill in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Corrected and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. P. McGaugh, H. S. Houghton, and George E. Gordon, for appellants:

A payment should be applied by the court to the oldest debt, where there is more than one debt,—that is, the debt first becoming due.

30 Cyc. 1243; Harrison v. Johnston, 27 Ala. 447; Stickney v. Moore, 108 Ala. 597, 19 So. 76; Bobe v. Stickney, 36 Ala. 482; Moses Bros. v. Noble, 86 Ala. 412, 5 So.

to the protection of the person making same.

The doctrine of subrogation does not depend upon contractual relations between the parties to be affected by it, but it is broad enough to include every instance in which one person, not acting voluntarily, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable, and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter. Nalle v. Farish, 98 Va. 130, 34 S. E. 985.

But the rule of subrogation to the rights of the vendor, by advancing the purchase price of land or a portion of the purchase price, has no application where the result would be to defeat the lien of the vendor for a balance yet remaining due him on the purchase price. Brower v. Witmeyer, 121 Ind. 83, 22 N. E. 975.

And does not apply where the person in whom the title to the land is vested is in no way obligated to pay the purchase money, as where a husband purchases property having the title run to his wife, whether he pays the purchase price in cash or by notes which he thereafter pays, such payment vests in him no equitable right of subrogation to the vendor's lien. Clay v. Clay, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2016, 72 S. W. 810.

II. Where payment is by volunteer.

A mere voluntary payment of money due for the purchase price of land, where payment is unnecessary for the protection of the person making same, and not required by any contract with the vendor or vendee, does not raise any equitable right of subrogation to the lien of the vendor. Nichol v. Dunn, 25 Ark. 129; Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504; Martin v. Martin, 164 Ill. 640, 56 Am. St. Rep. 219, 45 N. E. 1007; Greishaber v. Farmer, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1028, 42 S. W. 742; Ratcliff v. Mason. — Ky. —, 14 S. W. 960; Winder v. Diffenderfer, 2 Blaud. Ch. 166.

A voluntary and unauthorized payment of money due from another for the purchase price of land does not give to the person making the payment a right of subrogation to the lien of the vendor. Trues-37; L.R.A.(N.S.)

181; Connor v. Armstrong, 91 Ala. 266, 9 So. 816.

The only title acquired by N. J. Bell was the two tracts, less the homestead and dower, and consequently he sold and conveyed to W. H. Bell nothing but what he had acquired.

McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 138, 2 So. 721; Norman v. Harrington, 62 Ala. 107; Jones v. Robinson, 77 Ala. 499.

Messrs. Ray Rushton and W. M. Williams, for appellee:

The right of homestead does not prevail over a vendor's lien or a purchase-money mortgage.

Newbold v. Smart, 67 Ala. 326; Tyler v. Jewett, 82 Ala. 93, 2 So. 905; Ross v. Perry, 105 Ala. 535, 16 So. 915; Moses Bros. v.

dell v. Callaway, 6 Mo. 605; Demeter v. Wilcox, 115 Mo. 634, 37 Am. St. Rep. 432, 22 S. W. 613.

One cannot by simply paying a debt due a vendor of land who has a lien thereon for the purchase-price money be subrogated to such lien. Nichol v. Dunn, 25 Ark. 129.

As applicable to the right of subrogation to a vendor's lien, the general doctrine has been asserted and applied that a person who may be compelled to pay a debt, or the protection of whose property or interest requires that he pay it, is not a mere volunteer; neither is one who pays a debt or advances money for the purpose, at the request of the debtor. Warford v. Hankins, 150 Ind. 489, 50 N. E. 468.

So, a third person paying a balance due on the purchase price of land at the instance and request of the vendee is not a mere volunteer, and if at the time of payment he manifests an intention to keep the prior lien alive for his protection in equity, he will be deemed the purchaser of the lien and entitled to be subrogated thereto. Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504.

III. Payment by surety.

a. In general.

Real estate is primarily liable for the indemnity and protection of sureties for the purchase price. Stenhouse v. Davis, 82 N. C. 432. Hence it is a general rule in nearly all jurisdictions recognizing any right of subrogation to a vendor's lien, that a surety for the payment by the vendee of the purchase price of land or a portion thereof, if compelled to pay the purchase price under his contract of suretyship, is to the amount so paid by him entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor, providing, of course, this right of subrogation does not prejudice the vendor or other sureties. Beattie v. Dickinson, 39 Ark. 205; Allen v. Bank of Kentucky, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 257; Riggs v. Chapman, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 473, 46 S. W. 692; Barnes v. Barnes, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1732, 72 S. W. 282; Kleiser v. Scott, 6 Dana, 137; Burk v. Chrisman, Home Bldg. & L. Asso. 100 Ala. 470, 14 So. 412.

A widow has no right of dower against a purchase-money mortgage.

Eslava v. Lepretre, 21 Ala. 528, 56 Am. Dec. 266; Boynton v. Sawyer, 35 Ala. 500.

Where a debtor owes two or more separate debts to one creditor, and makes a partial payment, he may direct to which debt it shall be applied; and this right must be asserted at the time the payment is made, and if not then asserted, the right of election devolves on the creditor, as between the debts past due, and if no application is made by either party at the time the payment is made, the law applies it to the one most beneficial to the creditor.

3 B. Mon. 50; Davidson v. Carroll, 20 La. Ann. 199; Ghiselin v. Fergusson, 4 Harr. & J. 522; Magruder v. Peter, 11 Gill & J. 217; Welch v. Parran, 2 Gill, 320; Ellis v. Roscoe, 4 Baxt. 418; Galliher v. Galliher, 10 Lea, 23; Faires v. Cockerell, 88 Tex. 428, 28 L.R.A. 528, 31 S. W. 190, 639.

Bank of Fayetteville v. Lorwein, 76 Ark. 245, 88 S. W. 919, 6 Ann. Cas. 202, recognizes the right of a surety on or indorser of notes given for the purchase price of land to be subrogated to a vendor's lien if required to pay the notes, providing all the notes given for the purchase price are paid.

A surety on a bond given to enjoin a judgment for enforcing a vendor's lien, if required to pay the bond, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor. Darrow v. Summerhill, 93 Tex. 92, 77 Am. St. Rep. 833, 53 S. W. 680.

The rule, however, has been asserted that payment of a note for a portion of the purchase price of real estate, by a surety of the vendee, does not confer upon the surety any right of subrogation to the lien of the vendor. McNeill v. McNeill, 36 Ala. 109, 76 Am. Dec. 320. The value of this decision is weakened by the fact that the opinion cites as authority, and apparently without discussion follows, Foster v. Athenæum, 3 Ala. 402, which, however, is only authority for the rule that a vendor, by taking a bill of exchange either in payment of or as security for the payment of land, thereby waives his implied lien, and hence an indorser of the bill of exchange, although compelled to pay it, creates thereby no right of substitution.

And it has been asserted that sureties on a purchase-price note executed for money used to pay for the land, if compelled to pay the note, do not thereby acquire a lien by substitution to the rights of the obligee, since he has none himself. Reid v. Jackson, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 743; Jones v. Talbott, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 303.

An indorser of a note given for the purchase price of land is not entitled to subrogation to the vendor's lien, where, by failure to make proper demand on the maker, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 131, 2 So. 721; Johnson v. Thomas, 77 Ala. 369.

Simpson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was filed by the appellee for the foreclosure of a mortgage for $5,000, purporting to be signed by W. H. Bell and his wife, M. E. Bell, upon which there appears a general acknowledgment, but no separate acknowledgment, by the wife. Said mortgage is dated October 1, 1894, and the complainant produces a deed by him to said W. H. Bell for the same amount, dated September 29, 1894, claiming that said mortgage was given for the purchase money of said land. The deed is a quitclaim.

he is exonerated from liability on the note and under no legal obligation to take care of it. Hutchinson v. Crutcher, 98 Tenn. 421, 37 L.R.A. 89, 39 S. W. 725.

So, an indorser of a bill of exchange given in part payment for the purchase price of real estate, who is compelled to pay same, is not, by reason of such payment, entitled to subrogation to the vendor's lien on the land, since the vendor by taking the bill of exchange in payment, or as security for the payment of the land, thereby waives his implied vendor's lien, and the lien therefore did not exist either in his favor, or in favor of the surety or indorser. Foster v. Athenæum, 3 Ala. 302.

It has been held that a surety's right of subrogation is extinguished where the vendor in foreclosure of his lien sells the land, and the surety becomes the purchaser of it and takes it subject to any other liens against it. Hall v. Jones, 21 Md. 439.

On the other hand, in a different jurisdiction the rule has been asserted that where a surety upon paying the purchase money takes a deed to the land in his own name, he has all the rights of the vendor, either as against the vendee or as a subsequent purchaser of the equity of the vendee. Fulkerson v. Brownlee, 69 Mo. 371.

b. Parties against whom right exists.

The equitable title to land vests in the sureties of the vendee who are compelled to pay the purchase money, and until such payment is refunded neither the vendee, nor anyone claiming through or under him, has a right to require a conveyance from the trustee holding the legal title. Deitzler v. Mishler, 37 Pa. 82.

Sureties for the original purchase money for a tract of land have the first equity to be indemnified from the proceeds of a sale of the land in judicial proceedings, as against a subsequent purchaser of the equity of the vendee. Schoffner v. Fogleman, 60 N. C. (Winst. Eq.) 12.

A surety for the purchase money of land to secure a payment for which a lien is expressly reserved if compelled to pay a

The defense set up by the answer and cross bill is that said M. E. Bell has never released or conveyed her dower interest in said land, nor so conveyed as to include her homestead rights in said land, a part of which, she shows, was occupied as a homestead by her husband, and by herself since his death. She also produces transcripts of the proceedings in the probate court, by which said lands were allotted to her as a homestead after the death of her husband. She also claims that the indebtedness of her deceased husband to N. J. Bell has been satisfied.

The answer to the cross bill sets up the facts that on May 10, 1886, said W. H. Bell purchased the land, described as the Reid place, from commissioners appointed by the probate court, and, "not having the money with which to comply with his said purchase, he borrowed the same from V. H. Bell, and executed to him a mortgage for the sum of $951.35; . . . that on the 8th day of March, 1887, the said V. H. Bell transferred said mortgage and notes secured by it to Marks & Gayle as collateral security, but afterwards redeemed the same, and on the 16th day of June, 1890, for value received, transferred said mortgage and notes secured by it to N. J. Bell as collateral security for a debt owing by said V. H. Bell to said N. J. Bell;" that said notes and mortgage have never been paid; that V. H. Bell foreclosed said mortgage October 29, 1888, John W. Harris being the purchaser for $1,045; that a deed was made by said portion of the purchase price to the extent of such payment is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor as against a subsequent purchaser from the vendee, although such purchaser has also paid a portion of the purchase money to the original vendor. Uzzell v. Mack, 4 Humph. 319, 40 Am. Dec. 648.

A surety for the purchase price of land who pays a portion thereof is entitled to the extent of such payment to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor as against the vendee who asserts the lien by virtue of a subsequent sale. Carter v. Sims, 2 Heisk. 166.

A surety on a note for a portion of the purchase price of land who has been compelled to pay the note, as against the widow of the vendee, is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor. Ballew v. Roler, 124 Ind. 557, 9 L.R.A. 481, 24 N. E. 976, so also, is a surety to whom a title bond is assigned as security. Keith v. Hudson, 74 Ind. 333.

IV. Payment by subsequent purchaser.

A purchaser of land against which there exists a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money, who pays same either in compliance with his contract of purchase or to protect his interest in the land, is to the extent of the payment entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor, although his title deed may be defective, or there may be intervening liens against the original vendee.

The rule applies where the purchaser of real estate is compelled for his own protection to pay vendor's lien notes given by his grantor (Fulkerson v. Taylor, 100 Va. 426, 41 S. E. 863); or where his title deed is invalid, and the purchaser has assumed and paid outstanding notes of his grantor for a portion of the purchase price of the land (Ruse v. Bromberg, 88 Ala. 619, 7 So. 384); or where he pays a vendor's lien bond, under a contract with the vendor that, in consideration thereof, certain real estate shall be conveyed to the payer, and the contract to convey proves to be unenforceable and is 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

not carried out (Nalle v. Farish, 98 Va. 130, 34 S. E. 985); or where he pays a portion of the purchase money for the land, taking a deed for it, which is thereafter held to be void (Bartley v. Knott, 140 Ky. 288, 130 S. W. 1096).

And one paying notes given for the purchase price of land, under an agreement with the purchaser to take the land, is not a mere volunteer, and is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor. Hart v. Davidson, 84 Tex. 112, 19 S. W. 454.

So, a purchaser of land who pays a portion of the purchase price to the original vendor under a contract of purchase with the vendee is to the extent of the payment entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor. Dillow v. Warfel, 71 Iowa, 106, 32 N. W. 194.

The doctrine also applies to a vendee who has paid a vendor's lien on land fraudulently conveyed to him; and such a vendee is entitled, upon the setting aside of his conveyance on the ground of fraud, to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor for the amount paid. Kimble v. Wotring, 48 Va. 412, 37 S. E. 606.

So, where the purchaser of land unpaid for releases his equity or rights therein to a third person, who pays the original vendor for the land, such third person becomes subrogated to the vendor's lien for the amount so paid, as against the right of dower of the wife of the original purchaser. Fisher v. Johnson, 5 Ind. 492.

V. Lender of money which was applied on purchase price.

A mere lender of money which the borrower applies to the payment of land does not thereby become entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor. Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504; Austin v. Underwood, 37 Ill. 439, 87 Am. Dec. 254; Griffin v. Proctor, 14 Bush, 571.

And one paying a pre-existing debt created for the purchase of real estate does not thereby acquire the vendor's lien upon the property. Martin v. Martin, 164 Ill. 640, 56 Am. St. Rep. 219, 45 N. E. 1007.

V. H. Bell to said Harris, and said Harris subsequently, on December 12, 1891, conveyed the lands to said N. J. Bell.

It is also alleged that on December 15, 1893, said W. H. Bell purchased the remaining lands, known as the Dunklin place, from E. C. Dunklin, receiving a deed thereto, and "contemporaneously with the execution of said deed borrowed the sum of $1,500 from Milthorn Woolsey," using the money to pay a part of the purchase money on said purchase, and executing a mortgage to secure the payment of the same on said land; that said Woolsey sold and transferred said notes and mortgage to said N. J. Bell; that thereafter said E. C. Dunklin filed a bill in the chancery court against W. H. and N. J. Bell for a balance of purchase money due, and said court, holding that Dunklin's claim was superior to the Woolsey mortgage, rendered a decree in his favor for $386, and said decree was paid by said N. J. Bell to protect his interest; that said W. H. Bell never paid said amounts, but became largely indebted to said N. J. Bell, from time to time, for goods, wares, and merchandise advanced to him; that, in order to give said W. H. Bell a chance to pay for said lands and "get the indebtedness between them in a more definite shape," etc., said W. H. Bell, by quitclaim deed, on September 27, 1894, conveyed said lands to said N. J. Bell for a recited consideration of $5; that the only effect of said deed was to convey his equity of redemption in the Dunklin place and any equity he might have in the Reid place; that

So the holder of a note given for money borrowed to pay off a vendor's lien on land is not entitled to be subrogated to such lien. Boughner v. Laughlin, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1166, 64 S. W. 856.

VI. Payment of note given for purchase price.

Although a mere lender of money to pay a note given for the purchase price of land has no right of subrogation (Woodbridge v. Scott, 69 Mo. 669), especially where the note is given for a much larger sum of money than that required to pay the purchase price, and independent security is given to secure same (Pridgen v. Warn, 79 Tex. 588, 15 S. W. 559), nevertheless the payment of vendor's lien notes at the request of the vendee is sufficient to give to the person making the payment the right of subrogation to the vendor's lien to the extent of the money paid (Pridgen v. Warn, 79 Tex. 588, 15 S. W. 559; Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Paschall, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 613, 34 S. W. 1001; Ford v. Ford, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 453, 54 S. W. 773; Mergele v. Felix, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 55, 99 S. W. 709; Price v. Davis, 88 Va. 939, 14 S. E. 704).

So a person paying vendor's lien notes at the request of the vendee, and with the understanding that he is to hold the notes as security, is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor. Hulings v. Hulings Lumber Co. 38 W. Va. 351, 18 S. E. 620.

One paying off for another, purchase-price notes for land, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor, and this right of subrogation is not lost by taking a mortgage on the land for the amount thus advanced, unless this was the intention of the parties. Harrod v. Johnson, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 247.

But where the object of an advance of money to pay a vendor's lien note is plainly to extinguish the lien, and other security is taken for the money so advanced, there exists no right of subrogation to the lien of the vendor. Norris v. Woods, 89 Va. 873, 17 S. E. 552.

One who at the instance and request of the vendee pays a vendor's lien note to the holder thereof, who took same from the payee, without notice of any homestead rights in the land of the vendee, is entitled to be subrogated to the vendor's lien, although he paid the money with notice of such homestead rights. Denecamp v. Townsend, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 33 S. W. 254.

VII. Loan of money expressly to pay purchase price.

The courts are not in harmony on the question whether a loan of money to pay off a vendor's lien on real estate creates, in favor of the lender, a right of substitution to the lien thus paid. It has been held that a stranger or a third person advancing or loaning money for the express purpose of paying the purchase price of land sold another is entitled to be subrogated to the right of the vendor to an equitable lien on the land for the purchase money. Carey v. Boyle, 53 Wis. 574, 11 N. W. 47.

However, a person loaning money to be used to pay a vendor's lien is not entitled to be subrogated to such lien as against the vendee's claim for a balance due him on a subsequent sale, where the loan was made at the instance and request of the purchaser from the vendee, under an agreement to pay and discharge the original vendor's lien. Austin v. Pulschen, — Cal. —, 42 Pac. 306.

But it has been held that the lender of money to enable another to complete the purchase of real estate has no right of subrogation to the lien of the vendor as against the widow of the vendee, although the vendor as security for the money thus loaned executes a judgment bond reciting that it was given for the balance of the purchase money due on the land in question. The theory is that the lender under such circumstances does not belong to the favored class of vendors, but to the unprotected class of general creditors. It is reasoned that others were the vendors of the land, therefore the lender cannot claim that character, and it is said that manifestly he is a loan creditor, and nothing more.

the deed of N. J. Bell to said W. H. Bell, of September 29, 1894, was contemporaneous with said last-named deed, and the $5,000 mentioned as the consideration in said deed of N. J. to W. H. Bell represented "part of the money owing by the said W. H. Bell to said N. J. Bell," and that "for the said $5,000 purchase money agreed upon the said W. H. Bell did, contemporaneously with the execution of said deed, execute and deliver" the mortgage in question for the consideration of $5,000, "which was the agreed purchase money of the lands owing by said W. H. Bell;" that at that time said W. H. Bell owed on account of the purchase money of the Reid place, with interest, $1,540.73, and on account of the purchase money of the Dunklin place, and interest, $2,813.49, and on account of advances, etc., $6,170.43. Said answer mentions the proceeds of an insurance policy and other items that have been credited on the general account of said W. H. Bell.

These same facts were set up in an amendment to the original bill, and the answer denies that the said M. E. Bell ever acknowledged the mortgage in question, and claims her dower and homestead in the lands. She testifies, also, that she never appeared before the justice of the peace who purports to have taken the acknowledgment.

From this summary of the facts, which

Said the court: "No lien was taken for purchase money, for the vendors were paid in full; paid, it is true, with . . . [the money borrowed], but they assigned and transferred nothing to . . . [the lender]. There was no privity between them and him, and if he could claim subrogation to their rights they had no rights to a lien for purchase money after receipt of it in full, and a conveyance of the legal title to . . . [the vendee]." Nottes's Appeal, 45 Pa. 362.

So it has been asserted that merely lending money to another to pay on the purchase price of land raises in behalf of the lender no right of subrogation to the lien of the vendor. Hitt v. Applewhite, — Miss. —, 20 So. 161. And that one loaning money to pay off a vendor's lien does not thereby acquire a right to the lien. Reid v. Jackson, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 743.

VIII. Where trust funds are used to pay for land.

Where a trust fund in the hands of a vendee of land is used to discharge the vendor's lien thereon, under such circumstances as to amount to a fraud on the beneficiaries unless the lien is retained for their benefit, they are entitled to be subrogated to such lien. Oury v. Saunders, 77 Tex. 278, 13 S. W. 1030.

So where trust funds in the hands of a vendee of real estate are used to pay notes given for the purchase price of land in which a lien on the land is reserved, the beneficiaries of the trust fund are entitled to be subrogated to such lien. Aiken v. Taylor, — Tenn. —, 62 S. W. 200.

As against a subsequent purchaser of the land, partners of a former purchaser have no right to be subrogated to the vendor's lien to the amount of money wrongfully taken by their copartner from the firm account and applied on the purchase price of the land. Grover v. Wilson, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 467, 37 S. W. 60.

IX. Payment under express or implied contract of substitution.

It is sufficient to entitle a third person to be subrogated to the vendor's lien on land, if he pays the purchase price or a portion thereof, at the instance and request of the vendee, and upon the express agreement with the vendee for the preservation of the vendor's lien as security, or if the circumstances are such as to raise an implied agreement to this effect. Brown v. Dennis, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 30 S. W. 272.

A third person paying a balance due on the purchase price of land at the instance and request of the vendee is not a mere volunteer, and if at the time of payment he manifests an intention to keep the prior lien alive for his protection in equity, he will be deemed the purchaser of the lien and entitled to be subrogated thereto. Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504.

Payment of a note for the purchase price of land at the instance and request of the vendee under an agreement, express or implied, that the lender shall be subrogated to the rights of the vendor, gives the right to such subrogation. Greishaber v. Farmer, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1028, 42 S. W. 742.

And where one advances money to pay for a discharge of the vendor's lien upon a homestead, and the money is so applied, the lender becomes subrogated to the vendor's lien as against any homestead rights of the vendee in privity with him. Hicks v. Morris, 57 Tex. 658; Pridgen v. Warn, 79 Tex. 588, 15 S. W. 559; Western Mortg. & Invest. Co. v. Ganzer, 11 C. C. A. 371, 23 U. S. App. 608, 63 Fed. 647.

A person paying a balance due on the purchase price of land, at the instance and request of the vendee, sufficiently evidences his intention to keep the vendor's lien alive as security, to be entitled to be subrogated thereto, where he takes up and keeps the purchase-price notes he pays, together with the deed of the property, and looks to the land for his reimbursement, under agreement with the purchaser to keep possession of these papers until his money is refunded. Rodman v. Sanders, supra.

One loaning money at the request of the widow of the vendee to pay the purchase notes given for land, and taking and keeping the conveyance thereof as additional security, is entitled as against creditors of the vendee to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor, although he also took a seem to be without conflict, if said W. H. Bell was paid for the lands in question, his said widow, not having released her dower and homestead rights according to law, her rights are superior to the mortgage, provided she sustains her claim that she did not acknowledge the mortgage in question. The purchase money was paid, so as to vest the legal title in the vendee, but subject to the equitable rights of the complainant. So the question of prime importance is: Did the transactions detailed constitute a payment of the purchase money by W. H. Bell, or were the several mortgages for money borrowed to pay purchase money such as to preserve the purchase-money lien in favor of the mortgagees?

This court has held that one who advances money to a vendee to pay the deferred payments on land, or pays the amount to the vendor, at the vendee's request has no vendor's lien or resulting trust. Chapman v. Abrahams, 61 Ala. 108.

In a subsequent case, in which it was alleged that Mrs. B., "while negotiating said loan, told complainant that she wanted the money to pay off a former mortgage on her house and lot, and when she got the money did use the same for that purpose, and thereby discharged said prior mortgage," this court, while recognizing the principle mortgage on the land. Ogden v. Totten, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1390, 34 S. W. 1081.

So a person has a vendor's lien as against execution creditors of the vendee, by paying the balance of the purchase price of land, under an agreement with the vendee that he should have a lien on the land for the amount so advanced, and should take a deed running to the vendee and hold it as security. Fuller v. Hollis, 57 Ala. 435.

One advancing money to pay for land held by a vendor until the purchase price is paid, is entitled to a vendor's lien where the advancement is made under an agreement with the vendee that the land shall be security for the money thus paid. Mitchell v. Butt, 45 Ga. 162.

A surety for the payment of the balance due on the purchase price of land, to whom a title bond is assigned as security, who thereafter pays the purchase price, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor as against the claims of the widow of the vendee. Keith v. Hudson, 74 Ind. 333.

One furnishing money to purchase real estate for another, under an agreement that he is to have the equitable title thereto, and is to have a special lien thereon as security for the money thus advanced, is entitled as against a subsequent purchaser with notice to an equitable vendor's lien for the amount advanced by him. Dwenger v. Branigan, 95 Ind. 221.

One paying notes given for the purchase price of land, under an agreement that he is to be secured by the lien on the land, is entitled to be subrogated to such lien. Gunn v. Orndorff, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2369, 67 S. W. 372, 68 S. W. 461.

Money of one person used to purchase land creates a resulting trust although title is taken in the name of another, or by express agreement of the parties they may create a vendor's lien in favor of the person advancing the money. Ford v. Ford, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 453, 54 S. W. 773.

X. Where the legal title or a mortgage is taken as security.

One loaning a vendee of land money to pay the purchase price, taking as security the title to the land, stands in the position of the vendor as against any rights, homestead or otherwise, of the vendee. Heyderstadt v. Whalen, 54 Minn. 199, 55 N. W. 958.

So, one advancing money upon the purchase price of real estate, and taking a deed of the premises from the vendor, is entitled to be subrogated to the vendor's lien for the money paid, as against judgment creditors of the vendee. Kline v. Triplett, 2 Va. Dec. 429, 25 S. E. 886.

One paying the purchase price of land, under an agreement with the vendee to execute to him a deed of the land, stands in the position of the vendor, and holds the land by virtue of the deed executed to him under this agreement, free from any homestead rights of the wife of the vendee. Roy v. Clarke, 75 Tex. 28, 12 S. W. 845.

The doctrine of conventional subrogation applies in favor of a stranger paying off the vendor's lien at the instance of the buyer of land, and upon his agreement that the lender should have a lien on the land for reimbursement, and in this respect the latter stands in the shoes of the vendor. Allen v. Caylor, 120 Ala. 251, 74 Am. St. Rep. 31, 24 So. 512.

So a lender of money to discharge a vendor's lien on land, who takes a mortgage thereon, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor, as against any homestead claims by the vendee. Texas Land & Loan Co. v. Blalock, 76 Tex. 85, 13 S. W. 12.

XI. Where purchase money paid relying upon promise of security which is not given.

Although the contrary is asserted in Warford v. Hankins, 150 Ind. 489, 50 N. E. 468, most of the cases considering the question hold that one paying off or loaning money to pay off a vendor's lien on land is not entitled to be subrogated thereto, where such payment was induced by the promise of the vendee to secure the repayment of the money thus advanced, and which promise the vendee refuses to fulfill.

Thus a lender of money to pay a debt due for the purchase of real estate, taking just stated, says: "But the rule is settled that, where the money is expressly advanced in order to extinguish a prior encumbrance, and is used for this purpose, with the just expectation on the part of the lender of obtaining a valid security, or where its payment is secured by a mortgage which, for any reason is adjudged to be defective, the lender or mortgagee may be subrogated to the rights of the prior encumbrancer, whose claim he has satisfied; there being no intervening equity to prevent." And it was held in that case that the money was obtained by false representations as to owning a fee-simple estate, and complainant was entitled to recover. Bolman v. Lohman, 74 Ala. 507, 508-511, 512. This case states the general principle, but decides the case on the fraudulent representation, which does not exist in the present case.

In the case of Tyler v. Jewett, 82 Ala. 93, 101, 2 So. 905, the bill was filed to cancel a mortgage on a homestead, to which there was no separate acknowledgment by the wife, said mortgage having been given for money advanced to enable the borrower to pay purchase money, and thereby convert his equitable title into a legal title; and this court, while recognizing the principle of the Chapman-Abrahams Case, supra, said: "It would be inequitable to deprive defendant of the advantage of the legal title, without requiring repayment of the purchase money paid by him, only by reason of which payment complainant would be entitled to demand it of his vendor."

a note of the buyer upon her promise to execute as security a deed of trust covering the land, is not by reason of these facts entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor, although the vendee is a married woman, and takes the title to the land in her own name, and refuses to execute the deed of trust as she agreed. Durant v. Davis, 10 Heisk. 527.

So, a loan of money to purchase land, on the promise of the purchaser to give the lender security on the land, does not entitle the latter to a vendor's lien for the money advanced, although the purchaser thereafter refuses to give the security. Campan v. Molle, 124 Cal. 415, 57 Pac. 208.

But a person holding title to land as security for the payment of money advanced on the purchase price, who is induced to deed the land to a subsequent purchaser on the joint promise of the original vendee and such subsequent purchaser to pay him out of the proceeds, is entitled to an equitable assignment of the vendor's lien for the amount due him, upon the violation of this promise by the parties. Armstrong v. Farr, 11 Ont. App. Rep. 186.

In view of the conflict on this question the cases in the next subdivision are of interest. As affecting the right of substitution, it would seem that the same principle would ordinarily be applicable whether based on a broken promise by the vendee, or a promise not fulfilled because the security proves unenforceable, although a bona fide attempt has been made to fulfil the promise.

XII. Where purchase price is paid in reliance on defective security.

Although the decisions are not in harmony on the question, the weight of authority supports the view that a person paying the purchase price of land or a portion thereof is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor, where the payment was induced by the promise of security on the land, which either is not carried out, or if carried out is not effective, because of some defect in the instrument.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Thus the rule has been asserted that "when a third party at the request of a debtor loans the money to him to pay a debt secured by mortgage or other lien, under an agreement that he shall have a mortgage on the same real estate to secure him in such loan, and after the same is paid the debtor refuses to give the mortgage, or, if given, it proves invalid or ineffectual for any reason, or if there are intervening liens of which the person making the loan or payment had no notice or knowledge, such person is entitled to be subrogated to the mortgage or other lien securing the debt paid." Warford v. Hankins, 150 Ind. 489, 50 N. E. 468.

And that a mortgagee of land who releases his mortgage on the land to enable the owner to sell it and invest the proceeds in other lands upon which it is agreed that the mortgagee shall have a like mortgage, in a proceeding in equity to cancel his mortgage as invalid, is entitled to subrogation to the vendor's lien upon the lands so purchased, for the amount of the mortgage released where the mortgage executed to him is invalid for failure of the husband of the mortgagor to join in its execution. Otis v. Gregory, 111 Ind. 504, 13 N. E. 39.

And it has been held that payment of the vendor's lien on land gives a right of subrogation to the lien, where induced by the execution of a trust deed or mortgage by the vendee to the lender which, however, is invalid or not enforceable. Flynt v. Taylor, 100 Tex. 60, 93 S. W. 423; Dixon v. National Loan Invest. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 541.

On the other hand, in another jurisdiction it has been held that the fact that a portion of the proceeds of an invalid mortgage was applied upon the purchase price of the land covered by the mortgage does not give to the mortgagee or lender any equitable right of subrogation to the vendor's lien as against the homestead right of the wife of the purchaser, there being no express agreement that the lender should be substituted to the rights of the vendor. Griffin v. Proctor, 14 Bush, 571.

In Illinois, a vendor's lien is a right per-

The case of Faulk v. Calloway, 123 Ala. 325, 26 So. 504, is not analogous to this case, as in that the purchaser assumed to pay off the mortgage, as a part of the purchase money, under a contract of sale which afterward failed.

The principle announced in Bolman v. Lohman, supra, was applied to a case where the party loaned money for the purpose of paying off a purchase-money encumbrance, and took a mortgage on the land to secure the same, which mortgage failed because of a defective acknowledgment. Scott v. Land, Mortg. Invest. & Agency Co. 127 Ala. 161, 28 So. 709. This principle was declared operative, also, in favor of one who paid off an existing mortgage, and took a mortgage on the land, which was inoperative by reason of lis pendens. Bigelow v. Scott, 135 Ala. 236-239, 33 So. 546.

Pomeroy says: "The doctrine is also justly extended, by analogy, to one who, having no previous interest, and being under no obligation, pays off the mortgage, or advances money for its payment, at the instance of a debtor party, and for his benefit; such a person is in no true sense a mere stranger and volunteer." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. §1212, pp. 2423, 2424. It is applied also to one who makes a loan to discharge a first mortgage, under an agreement that he shall have a first mortgage, as against a second mortgagee. Home Sav. Bank v. Bierstadt, 168 Ill. 618, 61 Am. St. Rep. 146, 48 N. E. 161; Amick v. Woodworth, 58 Ohio St. 86, 50 N. E. 437.

sonal to the vendor, and is not assignable; hence a third person loaning money to discharge same at the request of the purchaser has no right of subrogation to the lien, although relying upon the promise of the purchaser to secure the repayment of the money advanced by a trust deed, which, although executed, is not effective as to some of the land, as the purchaser had previously conveyed same away. Small v. Stagg, 95 Ill. 39; and see Martin v. Martin, 164 Ill. 640, 56 Am. St. Rep. 219, 45 N. E. 1007, for restatement of the doctrine that vendor's lien is personal to the vendor and hence is not assignable, and no right of subrogation exists with reference thereto.

The rule obtaining in Alabama on the right of subrogation to a vendor's lien is not at all clear. Thus in Chapman v. Abrahams, 61 Ala. 108, the general rule is asserted that a person paying a portion of the purchase price of land for and at the request of the vendee thereby extinguishes the debt of the vendee to the vendor, and creates a new debt or liability; it does not transfer the original debt or the vendor's lien; neither does it create a resulting trust in favor of the lender. And the doctrine is there applied to a payment of the purchase price of land under an agreement by the vendee, a married woman, to execute to the person making the payment a mortgage on the land. This mortgage was not at that time executed, and in the meantime the vendor conveyed the property to the vendee. Thereafter the mortgage was executed by the vendee and her husband, but was later held to be void because the land was the statutory separate estate of the vendee. This case is referred to and distinguished in Allen v. Caylor, 120 Ala. 251, 74 Am. St. Rep. 31, 24 So. 512, which case, however, applied the doctrine of conventional subrogation in favor of a stranger paying off a vendor's lien at the instance of the buyer of land, and upon his agreement that the lender should have a lien upon the land for reimbursement, and that in this respect he should stand in the shoes of the vendor. Referring to the Chapman Case, the court said that the agreement constituting that case being to execute a mortgage for the reimbursement of the lender, which was done, the invalidity of the mortgage by reason of the marital incapacity of the vendee to make it was no cause for broadening the agreement in support of the right of subrogation, even if an agreement by a married woman in respect of her separate estate was not itself likewise void by reason of marital incapacity.

In Scott v. Land, Mortg. Invest. & Agency Co. 127 Ala. 161, 28 So. 709, however, the right of subrogation was sustained in favor of a person advancing money expressly to pay the purchase price of land, under an agreement that the repayment of the money thus advanced should be secured by a mortgage on the land to be executed by the vendee, the mortgage actually executed being invalid because defectively acknowledged and because the land was a homestead. The Chapman Case is referred to and distinguished, the court saying that in that case "it was held that one who advances money to the vendee to pay the deferred payments on a purchase of lands, or pays the amount, at the vendee's request [to the vendor], who conveys to the purchaser, has no vendor's lien on the lands,—the principle on which the doctrine rests being that the payment of the purchase money by another at the request of the vendee of the land did not operate to transfer the original demand to him, but extinguished it, and created a new liability, the advancer of the money becoming a new and original creditor. . . . In such case, said the court, "the lender is treated as a mere volunteer in the transaction." Continuing the court quotes with approval from Bolman v. Lohman, 74 Ala. 507: "But the rule is settled that where money is expressly advanced in order to extinguish a prior encumbrance, and is used for this purpose, with the just expectation on the part of the lender, of obtaining a valid security, or where its payment is secured by a mortgage which for any reason is adjudged to be defective, the lender or mortgagee may be subrogated to the rights of the prior encumbrancer, whose claim he has satisfied, there being

It is said that "the better opinion now is that one who loans his money upon real-estate security, for the express purpose of taking up and discharging liens or encumbrances on the same property, has thus paid the debt at the instance, request, and solicitation of the debtor, expecting and believing, in good faith, that his security will, of record, be substituted in fact in place of that which he discharges, is neither a volunteer, stranger, nor intermeddler; nor is the debt, lien, or encumbrance regarded as extinguished, if justice requires that it should be kept alive for the benefit of the person advancing the money, who thereby becomes the creditor." Emmert v. Thompson, 49 Minn. 386, 392, 32 Am. St. Rep. 560, 52 N. W. 31, 32; Hughes v. Thomas, 131 Wis. 315, 111 N. W. 474, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 744, 11 Ann. Cas. 673 and note 677 et seq.

"Where defendant loaned money to plaintiff on an agreement that it was to be used to pay off existing valid mortgages on exempt personal property, and that a new mortgage should be executed to defendant therefor, and the mortgage subsequently executed was void, because the signature of the mortgagor's wife was not witnessed as required by Rev. Stat. 1898, § 2313, the lien of the mortgages paid by the funds advanced, was not destroyed, but would be enforced in equity for defendant's benefit, who would be subrogated to the rights of the holders, as against the mortgagor and his wife." Lashua v. Myhre, 117 Wis. 18, 93 N. W. 811.

We hold that in the present case, the money having in each instance been advanced for the express purpose of paying the purchase money, or a part of it, with an agreement for a mortgage on the premises, which was not so executed as to be effective, and it being shown that without said payment the legal title to the land could not have been secured by the vendee, under the equitable principles, above cited, the original lien for the purchase money is preserved for the benefit of the complainant. This right is by subrogation to the rights of the original vendor, and not a right to enforce the mortgage sought to be foreclosed, for the amounts therein named; for, while W. H. Bell could, in so far as he was concerned, agree that the $5,000 represented the purchase money still due on the land, yet that agreement could not affect the right or interest of his wife.

By subrogation, the complainant is entitled to subject the lands, as against the respondents, to the payment of whatever amount is found to be due of the original purchase money advanced, but not for the amounts due on other accounts by said W. H. Bell. While there is no special prayer for subrogation, yet probably it may be covered by the prayer for general relief.

In so far as there was a lien in favor of N. J. Bell against the lands, it was compeno intervening equity to prevent." It is obvious that, in asserting this doctrine, the court overlooked the fact that in the Chapman Case the purchase money was paid at the request of the vendee and upon her promise to execute a mortgage on the land as security therefor, which promise was carried out, but the mortgage was invalid because of the disability or incapacity of the vendee to execute same.

XIII. Where the vendor has waived his lien.

A vendor's lien is not necessarily first in point of preference as against other liens, where the right of subrogation thereto is claimed, since the parties may contract with reference thereto, and thereby utterly destroy the lien, or they may provide for the preference over it and may replace it in the scale of liens; and hence holding it by the equity of subrogation the lien is always subject to any paramount equity thus set above it. Blake v. Pine Mountain Iron & Coal Co. 22 C. C. A. 430, 43 U. S. App. 490, 76 Fed. 624.

Where by taking independent security the vendor's lien is waived by the vendor, sureties of the vendee who thereafter are required to pay the purchase price have no right of subrogation. Carrioco v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 33 Md. 235. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

If notes are given for the purchase price of land and no lien is reserved therein, a subsequent payment of the note by a third person gives to him no right of subrogation, since the vendor himself, under such circumstances, had no lien. Harris v. Elliott, 45 W. Va. 245, 32 S. E. 176.

Where a note is given for money paid for land, the purchase price of which is paid before delivery of the deed no vendor's lien is created, and hence a person advancing the money on the note has no right of subrogation. Walsh v. McBride, 72 Md. 45, 19 Atl. 4.

So, where the vendor retains title to the land until full payment is made, there is no vendor's lien to which a person furnishing the money for such payment may be entitled to be subrogated, although the money is furnished under an agreement with the vendee to secure the repayment of the sum by giving security on the land, and which he afterwards refuses to do. Campan v. Molle, 124 Cal. 415, 57 Pac. 208.

A vendor of land, by taking a bill of exchange in payment thereof or as security for the payment, thereby waives his vendor's implied lien, and hence an indorser of the bill of exchange, although compelled to pay it acquires thereby no right of substitution. Foster v. Athenaeum, 3 Ala. 302.

A. G. S.

tent for said N. J. and W. H. Bell to put the indebtedness in the shape of a mortgage, thereby expressing only what the law required; but, as against the rights of the respondents, they could not by said agreement fix a lien upon the lands for any other indebtedness, so that the amount for which said mortgage may be foreclosed is not necessarily the amount named therein, but the amount actually due for the money advanced to pay purchase money.

The decree will be corrected so as to provide that the register, in taking and stating the account, shall ascertain what amounts were advanced to pay the purchase money for the lands described, what payments have been made thereon, and what amount is now due, calculating at simple legal interest only. To this extent, the second prayer of the cross bill is granted, but the cross complainant is not entitled to have the mortgage declared null and void; nor is she entitled to dower and homestead, until the lien in favor of the complainant is satisfied.

As there seems to be some confusion in regard to the application of payments, it seems necessary to state that the rule applicable to this case is that "a debtor, owing to the same creditor more debts than one, and making partial payments, has the right to elect and dictate on which debt the payment shall be credited;" but if neither the debtor nor creditor expresses an election "the presumption of the law is that the credit is applied most beneficially to the creditor; that is, to the most precarious debt, or the one least secured." McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 131-137, 2 So. 721, 724.

As corrected, the decree of the court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur, save Dowdell, Ch. J., not sitting.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

RODGER O'HANLON, Appt.,

v.

HARRY J. GRUBB.

(38 App. D. C. 251.)

Evidence — lease — adding to written agreement.

1. Evidence is admissible in an action by a tenant of an apartment to hold the landlord liable for injury to his property by a defect in the heating apparatus, that at the time of the leasing, the landlord's agent told him that the apartment was heated by steam, where the lease is silent upon the subject and the heating apparatus attached to the central plant was in place when the conversation took place.

Landlord and tenant — apartment — heating apparatus — duty to repair.

2. The owner of an apartment building who heats the separate apartments with steam supplied from a central plant is bound to keep the heating apparatus in repair.

Same — contributory negligence — failure to make repairs.

3. A tenant of an apartment is not guilty of contributory negligence which will prevent his holding the owner of the building liable for injury to his furniture through a defect in the steam-heating apparatus, in failing to have a small leak repaired upon discovering it, or to turn off the steam when temporarily leaving the apartment, where it was the duty of the owner to have the repairs made, and there was nothing to charge him with notice that the defective place was likely to give way and flood the apartment with water and steam.

Damages — defective heating apparatus — injury to tenant's property.

4. The value of the property destroyed, and not the cost of making the repairs, or the difference in value of the premises with a perfect and defective radiator in, is the measure of damages for injury to property of a tenant of an apartment through the bursting of a defective steam radiator which the landlord was bound to keep in repair.

(February 5, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to property alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Daniel W. Baker, Joseph C. Sheehy, and Frank J. Hogan, for appellant:

There was no obligation or duty on defendant's part to provide for steam heating for said apartment.

Note. — Duty and liability of landlord of apartments as to heating.

It may safely be said that a landlord renting an apartment in a building heated by a central heating plant, control over which is retained by him, is bound to heat such apartment even when the lease is silent on the question of heat. This rule is supported by practically all the authorities.

Thus, in Berlinger v. Macdonald, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522, where there was no provision in the lease of an apartment with reference to heat, it was held that the lessor impliedly covenanted to keep the apartment sufficiently heated to make it habitable, where the entire heating plant remained exclusively under his control.

And in Ryan v. Jones, 2 Misc. 65, 20 N. Y. Supp. 842, it was held that an adequate McKeon v. Cutter, 156 Mass. 296, 31 N. E. 389; Whitehead v. Comstock, 25 R. I. 423, 56 Atl. 446; Haizlip v. Rosenberg, 63 Ark. 430, 39 S. W. 60; Cooper v. Lawson, 139 Mich. 628, 103 N. W. 168; Coats v. Meriwether, 144 Mo. App. 89, 129 S. W. 468; 1 Tiffany, Land. & T. § 92, p. 644.

Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, in not taking the proper precaution to prevent this radiator from leaking during his absence from his apartment.

Martin v. Surman, 116 Ill. App. 282; Margolius v. Muldberg, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1048; Tiffany, Land. & T. § 94, p. 648.

The measure of damages is not a consequential injury arising therefrom, but is either the cost of the repair where the cost would be slight, or the difference between the value of the premises leased properly repaired and their condition when the landlord fails to repair.

Thompson v. Clements, 96 Md. 196, 60 L.R.A. 580, 53 Atl. 919; 2 McAdam, Land. & T. § 386, p. 1247; Warren v. Stoddart, 105 U. S. 224, 229, 26 L. ed. 1117, 1120; Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. 67 C. C. A. 74, 134 Fed. 178; Graff v. Lemp Brewing Co. 130 Mo. App. 624; 109 S. W. 1044; Schick v. Fleischhauer, 26 App. Div. 210, 49 N. Y. Supp. 962; Nagle v. Davies, 60 Misc. 479, 113 N. Y. Supp. 834; Reams v. Taylor, 31 Utah, 288, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 436, 120 Am. St. Rep. 930, 87 Pac. 1089, 11 Ann. Cas. 51.

supply of heat by the landlord was an integral part of the covenant for quiet enjoyment of the use of an apartment, where the apparatus for heating was in the exclusive control of the landlord, although the lease did not in terms bind him to supply any heat whatever. And in Jackson v. Paterno, 58 Misc. 201, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, affirmed in 128 App. Div. 474, 112 N. Y. Supp. 924, it was held that, in the absence of an express agreement by the lessor to supply heat to an apartment, his duty to supply adequate heat may be implied from the covenant of quiet enjoyment, where the means of supplying heat are exclusively under his control.

In Siebold v. Heyman, 120 N. Y. Supp. 105, it was held that a covenant in a renewal lease of an apartment, that the radiators should be "increased and enlarged to give sufficient heat,—i. e., a temperature of at least 65 degrees in cold weather,"—will be construed, where the landlord has retained complete control over the heating plant, as binding him to supply the radiators as increased and enlarged, with steam of a sufficient quantity and quality to effect that result. And in Iowa Apartment House Co. v. Herschel, 36 App. D. C. 457, cited in O'HANLON v. GRUBB, it was held that under a lease of an apartment "including steam heat," and giving the lessor the right to enter and make necessary repairs, the obligation to furnish heat carries with it the duty of keeping in repair heating apparatus, and the obligation to make repairs carries with it an obligation of inspection and examination in order to ascertain whether any repairs have to be made, so as to render the lessor liable as for negligence, for damages resulting from steam escaping from the radiators which had been adjusted according to the instructions of the landlord's agent, while the tenant was, to the knowledge of the landlord, away from the apartment for a considerable length of time.

But in Slaughter v. Johnson, 28 Ill. App. 417, it was held that where no inference could be drawn from the lease or from any other evidence in the case, that the landlord was obligated to furnish heat to the tenant of a flat, no such obligation arose. In arriving at this conclusion the court said that if counsel had wished to raise the question of whether there was an implied covenant to furnish heat with the premises, he should have proved that the only heating apparatus available remained under the control of the landlord.

In Howe v. Frith, 43 Colo. 75, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 672, 127 Am. St. Rep. 79, 95 Pac. 603, 15 Ann. Cas. 1069, it was held that a landlord is not liable for injuries to his tenant by shutting off the heat from the tenement after the tenant is in arrears for rent, where the lease provides for forfeiture in case of nonpayment of rent, and for re-entry by the use of such force as is necessary, in which event no action shall be brought by the tenant.

And a landlord is not prevented from shutting off the heat of a leased apartment because of breach of covenant to pay rent, by an injunction against the prosecution of proceedings in forcible entry and detainer, nor is the tenant released from his covenant not to sue for injuries caused by re-entry in case of such a breach. Idem.

Aside from O'HANLON v. GRUBB, but one case seems to have treated the question of damages recoverable in the class of cases under discussion, and in that case (Ireland v. Gauley, 95 N. Y. Supp. 521) it was held that a loss to a tenant from idleness because he could not or would not work in a leased apartment, because the proper temperature was not maintained by the landlord, who had covenanted to furnish heat, was not the natural or probable result of the breach of the covenant, especially where the difficulty could have been avoided at an inconsiderable outlay by the tenant himself, and therefore a claim for such damages could not be set up in a summary proceeding to dispossess the tenant.

As to liability of landlord for injuries to tenants from defects in premises, see note to Walsh v. Schmidt, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798.

As to eviction of tenant by failure to furnish heat, see note to Russell v. Olson, post, —.

G. J. C.

Mr. E. Beverly Slater, for appellee:

The court properly allowed the appellee to show by parol testimony that the terms upon which he leased his apartment included the heating thereof by the appellant with steam heat.

Donaldson v. Uhlfelder, 21 App. D. C. 489; Raub v. Barbour, 6 Mackey, 245; Tuley v. Barton, 79 Va. 387.

The duty of the appellant to furnish the appellee's apartment with steam heat carried with it the necessity on the part of the appellant of keeping the heating plant in proper repair.

Iowa Apartment House Co. v. Herschel, 36 App. D. C. 457; George, Apartments, § 169; Sciolaro v. Asch, 198 N. Y. 77, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 945, 91 N. E. 263; Priest v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 407; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 220; Railton v. Taylor, 20 R. I. 283, 39 L.R.A. 246, 38 Atl. 980.

The measure of damages is the value of the property destroyed.

15 Cyc. 254, notes, 21, 22; Iowa Apartment House Co. v. Herschel, 36 App. D. C. 457; Railton v. Taylor, 20 R. I. 283, 39 L.R.A. 246, 38 Atl. 980; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 687.

Robb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, appellee, here, in the supreme court of the District in an action for the recovery of damages to furniture and household articles alleged to have been occasioned by defendant's negligence in failing to repair a steam radiator in one of the several apartments in the defendant's apartment house. "The Newry," which apartment plaintiff was occupying under a written lease.

On November 29, 1909, plaintiff, accompanied by defendant's agent, Mr. Walshe, examined apartment No. 43 in question with the object of renting it. Seeing radiators in the apartment, he inquired of Mr. Walshe if "it would be steam heat or hot water." Mr. Walshe said "steam heat," whereupon plaintiff signed the lease. An exception was noted by the defendant to the admission of this conversation, on the ground that it tended to contradict, alter, or change the terms of the lease.

The lease by its terms covered "Apartment No. 43, The Newry," without further description. Under one of the covenants plaintiff agreed to pay the water rent and gas bills. The instrument was entirely silent on the subject of heating.

It further appeared that the apartment had been heated by the defendant's agent in pursuance of said understanding, and that no other way was provided by which it could have been heated. The plaintiff testified that on the day he moved into the apartment "he noticed a little leakage in the radiator; that the leakage was just a little dripping which would amount to about a gill in twenty-four hours; that he put a saucepan under it to catch it, and that as soon as he noticed the leak he asked the janitor to come up and look at it; stating to him that possibly the joints needed tightening;" that the janitor looked at the radiator and promised to notify Mr. Walshe; that the defect continued, a little more water leaking out every day; that the janitor was repeatedly notified, and the agent Mr. Walshe, was also notified; that on Friday night of the last of the year plaintiff and his wife closed the apartment for the purpose of spending New Year's Day with relatives in Virginia; that, before leaving, plaintiff "went around and turned off every radiator, but not entirely off, because he did not wish the apartment to get chilled before they returned; that he left the saucepan under the leak; that when they returned to their apartment New Year's (Sunday) night, about 8 o'clock, it was much dilapidated" by reason of the bursting or cracking of one of the cast-iron sections of the radiator and the consequent escape of steam into the apartment; in other words, the leak which had theretofore existed had suddenly developed into a crack about 4 inches long. The plaintiff did not know the nature of the trouble until it was pointed out to him by the steamfitter when the radiator was repaired. Plaintiff, under cross-examination, stated that he did not try to get anyone else to repair the defect in the radiator, because he had been instructed by the defendant's agents to notify them of such defects.

The janitor of the building, testifying for the plaintiff, stated "that the apartment house was heated by a steam-heating plant constructed in the building; that he was employed by Mr. Walshe, and had full charge and management of the heating plant; that it was his duty to look after the whole building and to report any complaints to Mr. Walshe; that he went around to all the apartments every day and gave the tenants instructions about working the radiators; that Mr. Grubb notified him of the trouble with the radiator in his apartment several times, and that he always notified Mr. Walshe, and that Walshe said he would have it fixed." The witness said he had no key to plaintiff's apartment.

The steamfitter who examined the radiator after it was removed, testifying for the defendant, said that the crack in the radiator, while about 4 inches long, was scarcely wide enough to admit the entry of a razor blade. Mr. Walshe, in his testimony in behalf of the defendant, said nothing about not having a pass-key to the various apartments of the house.

The defendant, at the close of all the evidence, moved for a directed verdict, on the ground: First, that there was no express or implied agreement as to repairs to the radiator; second, that no negligence had been shown on the part of the defendant; and, third, that contributory negligence, as matter of law, had been shown on the part of the plaintiff. The motion was overruled and exception noted.

The defendant further excepted to the granting of one of plaintiff's prayers on the question of damages, through which the jury was permitted to consider the amount shown by the evidence to have been expended by the plaintiff in repairing the household articles injured by the bursting of the radiator, the defendant contending that the measure of damages was either the cost of repair of the radiator, or the value of the premises with the defective radiator therein.

The pivotal question in this case is whether there existed any liability on the part of the landlord to repair the defective radiator. As was said in Iowa Apartment House Co. v. Herschel, 36 App. D. C. 457, we "are not dealing with an ordinary tenancy. The tenancy here relates to an apartment house,—a class of tenancy of comparatively recent origin, and one which, in some respects at least, is to be distinguished from other classes."

It is a matter of common knowledge and observation that to quite an extent this class of tenancy in the larger cities has displaced the old. Instead of a tenement complete in itself and having its own heating facilities, the modern apartment house may contain anywhere from a dozen to a hundred or more so-called apartments, all heated from a main plant operated and exclusively controlled by the landlord. In all the larger houses the landlord also operates and maintains an elevator system for the general accommodation of the occupants of the house. He controls and keeps in repair common hallways and entrances. In short, the tenant has possession of nothing more than the rooms of his apartment, the landlord controlling everything else. Leases are of course entered into in the light of this common practice and understanding, and while their positive stipulations are absolutely controlling, parol testimony may be introduced when it is apparent that the written instrument does not express the whole agreement of the parties. Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 331, 43 Am. Rep. 380; Potter v. Easton, 82 Minn. 247, 84 N. W. 1011; Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. 67 C. C. A. 74, 134 Fed. 168.

In the light of the foregoing observations, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was to error to admit the testimony as to the conversation preceding the signing of the lease? The lease, as we have seen, is entirely silent on the subject of heating. It is equally silent as to what constituted "Apartment No. 43." The evidence showed that this apartment was provided with steam radiators and with no other heating means; that these radiators were part of the steam-heating plant constructed in the building, and over which the defendant retained exclusive control. That the radiators were in the apartment for practical, and not ornamental, purposes is apparent, for the evidence shows that heat was supplied through that means. Supposing nothing whatever had been said concerning heat, could it have been successfully contended, in view of the circumstances just detailed, that the plaintiff would have been without redress had the defendant neglected or refused, after the commencement of the tenancy, to heat the apartment? We think not. There is nothing in the lease concerning elevator service, nor is there anything therein concerning the duty of the defendant in respect to the halls and entrances to the building, and yet, under the decisions, all these things were implied incidents of the tenancy. Thus in Sawyer v. McGillicuddy, 81 Me. 318, 3 L.R.A. 458, 10 Am. St. Rep. 260, 17 Atl. 124, the defendant was the owner of a building on the second floor of which were several tenements occupied by different tenants and having a common stairway. It was held that the defendant, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, was charged with the duty of caring for and maintaining this stairway. In Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 101 Mass. 251, 3 Am. Rep. 346, a tenement building was leased to different tenants under leases requiring them to make repairs. It was held that inasmuch as the possession of the roof was in the owners, they were under obligation to repair it. So, in Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 33, 37 Am. Rep. 295, it was held that a landlord who lets rooms in a building to different tenants, with a right of way in common over a staircase, is bound to use unreasonable care in keeping such staircase in repair. The court, after stating the general rule that a tenant takes the premises as they are, said: "But this rule applies only to premises which, by the terms of the lease, have passed out of the control of the landlord into the exclusive possession of the tenant."

Had this suit grown out of a failure on the part of the defendant in respect to an implied covenant regarding hallways or elevators, parol evidence would have been admissible not to vary the terms of the lease, but to annex an incident. We think such evidence clearly admissible for the purpose of proving what was really covered by the terms of the lease.

Under the authority of the Iowa Apartment House case, supra, the obligation to furnish steam heat carried with it the duty of providing and maintaining means for the proper fulfillment of that obligation. The implied covenant to keep this heating system in repair carries with it the right on the part of the landlord to enter the premises at reasonable times for the purpose of fulfilling that obligation. Such a control of the premises on the part of the landlord is not inconsistent with the possession of the tenant as the owner of the particular estate during the tenancy. Miles v. Janvrin, 200 Mass. 514, 86 N. E. 928.

It is next contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law. In the first place, the plaintiff was not a steamfitter, and, in the second place, there is no evidence in the record that anyone not possessing some knowledge of such matters would have had reason to anticipate the sudden enlargement of the defect in the radiator. The plaintiff himself testified that he saw no crack until after the radiator was taken out, and did not, until that time, know the nature of the defect. He repeatedly directed the attention of the defendant's agent to the leaky condition of the radiator, and they promised to have it repaired. Defendant's janitor, who was in charge of the entire heating system, and presumably much more familiar with radiators and their defects than the plaintiff, did not even suggest the imminence of a greater break, or the necessity completely to turn off the steam. For a whole month the precautionary measures taken by the plaintiff had been sufficient. He was to be away for two days only. While the evidence shows the janitor had no key to the apartment, it does not show that the agent did not have one. It does not even appear that the plaintiff knew that the janitor was without a pass-key, but, aside from that, we do not think the conduct of the plaintiff, in the circumstances, was such that reasonable men would be bound to say he was negligent. The question was carefully submitted to the jury under a prayer prepared by the defendant. This was all the defendant could ask.

The next and last question relates to the measure of damages. There was ample evidence before the jury from which it might have found that the defendant, through his agents, had reason to believe that the defect in the radiator, if not repaired, would be likely to produce the results of which the plaintiff complains. Having exclusive control of the heating system, it was incumbent upon the defendant to exercise due care in maintaining that system and keeping it in repair. What would constitute negligence on the part of the agent charged with the immediate control and supervision of this system might not, for the reasons previously suggested, constitute contributory negligence on the part of a tenant. The failure of the defendant, after knowledge of the defect, to repair it, coupled with knowledge of the consequences reasonably likely to ensue, constituted negligence, and rendered the defendant liable for the damages immediately resulting from such negligence.

37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The case relied upon by the defendant, Thompson v. Clemens, 96 Md. 196, 60 L.R.A. 580, 53 Atl. 919, is not in point. That was an action for personal injuries growing out of an alleged failure on the part of a landlord to make certain general repairs of premises under the exclusive control of the tenant. The damages in such a case are much more remote and consequential. The court, however, ruled that a landlord "may, under some circumstances, be liable for damages for personal injuries by reason of a negligent failure to make repairs." In Massachusetts it has been held that there can be no recovery for personal injuries against a landlord, even for negligent failure to make repairs, unless the landlord has assumed the duty of looking after the condition of the premises and providing for their safety for the protection of the tenant. Miles v. Janvrin, 196 Mass. 431, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 378, 124 Am. St. Rep. 575, 82 N. E. 708.

The plaintiff in the case under consideration is not seeking damages for personal injuries growing out of the failure of the landlord to make general repairs, but is asking to be reimbursed for the actual damages suffered as the immediate consequence of defendant's negligence in failing to repair an instrumentality under the exclusive control of the landlord.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

T. F. RUSSELL, Respt.,

v.

OLAF A. OLSON, Appt.

(— N. D. —, 133 N. W. 1030.)

Appeal — review of facts — motion for new trial.

1. Questions of fact cannot be reviewed on appeal from a judgment in any action

Headnotes by POLLOCK, Sp. J.

Note. — Eviction of tenant by failure to furnish heat.

It may be stated as the broad general rule that the failure of a landlord to furnish tried by a jury, unless a motion for a new trial was made before the trial court.

Same — exception to instruction.

2. Exceptions to a charge of the court must point out some definite or specific defect. Counsel should, by his objection, lay his finger on the precise point, or alleged error of the court.

Same — conclusiveness of findings.

3. In the absence of a motion for a new trial, the finding of the jury upon a controverted question of fact, where competent evidence was given pro and con, must be taken as final.

Same — errors of law.

4. Errors of law occurring at the trial, by way of admitting testimony, properly objected to or otherwise, with exception saved, and which are brought on to the record through a statement of the case, will be considered by the court without a motion for a new trial.

Landlord and tenant — failure to furnish heat — eviction.

5. A landlord who agrees in his contract with his tenant during the continuance of the lease to furnish heat for the proper heating of the building leased, and fails to keep his contract, after having been given notice of the defect and allowed a reasonable time in which to remedy the same, commits acts which in law will be regarded as a constructive eviction of the tenant from the premises.

Damages — eviction of tenant — loss of profits.

6. The contract being silent upon the measure of damages, the statutory rule prevails. The damages, therefore, in this case, should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally, or as according to the usual course of things from the breach of contract itself, or such as will reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the heat when he has expressly or impliedly assumed that obligation constitutes eviction of the tenant where the tenant elects to consider it such and surrenders the premises because thereof, but there are so many elements entering into the decisions that the actual law on the question may be best outlined by a reference to the cases.

Thus, in Minneapolis Co-op. Co. v. Williamson, 51 Minn. 53, 38 Am. St. Rep. 473, 52 N. W. 986, it was held that a continued neglect of duty to furnish heat constituted a constructive eviction, provided the tenant elected to surrender possession of the premises because thereof, within a reasonable time after the first neglect of the landlord to furnish adequate heat.

And in Bass v. Rollins, 63 Minn. 226, 65 N. W. 348, it was held that a mere neglect of duty from time to time for a period of two months to furnish sufficient heat was sufficient to render the premises unfit for occupancy, and that such failure, together with the surrender, amounted to an eviction.

So, continued or persistent failure of a landlord for an unreasonable time to furnish heat under an implied covenant to do so was held in Berlinger v. Macdonald, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522, to constitute constructive eviction, where the tenant had vacated the premises because of such condition while they were uninhabitable.

And in Koehler v. Scheider, 15 Daly, 198, 4 N. Y. Supp. 611, it was held that such a habitual and continued neglect to furnish heat as evinces a wilful disregard of an obligation to furnish it, which deprives the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, accompanied by a surrender, amounts to an eviction.

And in Lawrence v. Burrell, 17 Abb. N. C. 312, it was held that the failure of a landlord to furnish sufficient heat as agreed, to the extent of seriously affecting the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, constituted a constructive eviction justifying abandonment.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in McSorley v. Allen, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 271, it was held that the neglect and refusal of a landlord to furnish heat which his covenants required him to furnish, whereby the apartments were rendered unfit for occupancy, was a substantial eviction.

And in Jackson v. Paterno, 58 Misc. 201, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, affirmed in 128 App. Div. 474, 112 N. Y. Supp. 924, it was said that proof that several rooms in an apartment were uncomfortable for a considerable length of time by reason of being inadequately heated, and that repeated demands failed to produce any improvement, if accompanied by abandonment while continuing, would constitute constructive eviction. And in Graham v. Grape Capsule Co. 61 Misc. 87, 113 N. Y. Supp. 103, the court relying on Jackson v. Paterno, supra, held that there was undisputed evidence of inadequacy of heat sufficient to go to the jury upon the question of constructive eviction.

And that where the lease provides that the landlord who has complete control of the heating plant will supply heat sufficient to maintain a certain temperature, failure to so heat will constitute a constructive eviction provided the tenant so elects and surrenders the premises, see Siebold v. Heyman, 120 N. Y. Supp. 105, which is quoted in RUSSELL v. OLSON.

And in Feist v. Peters, 120 N. Y. Supp. 805, where the landlord had expressly covenanted to supply sufficient heat, it was held that the failure to do so justified vacation of the premises, and that such failure, together with vacation, constituted an eviction.

But the failure of a landlord to furnish heat need not be with an intent to compel the tenant to leave the property or to deprive him of its beneficial enjoyment, it being said in Berlinger v. Macdonald, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522, that all that is necessary is that his acts tend to compel the vacation.

And a constructive eviction cannot be claimed where the tenant remains in possession and enjoys the supply of heat fur-time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. While profits may be considered in proper cases in estimating damages, proof of them must be of a high character, and not such that the jury are left to speculate or guess what, in fact, they are or would be.

Same — special — right to consider.

7. The jury awarded $593.75 special damages. Special damages must be alleged and proven. No testimony in this action appeared warranting such a finding; hence it was error for the court to submit that question to the jury.

(June 22, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Ward County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused nished, although so inadequate as to have warranted abandonment, as abandonment or surrender of possession in an essential element of constructive eviction. Jackson v. Paterno, 58 Misc. 201, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, affirmed in 128 App. Div. 474, 112 N. Y. Supp. 924; Siebold v. Heyman, 120 N. Y. Supp. 105. And to constitute constructive eviction the abandonment must be complete. Merida Realty Co. v. Coffin, 123 N. Y. Supp. 120.

And the deprivation of heat must be continued at the time of the abandonment in order to work a constructive eviction. Thus, in Ryan v. Jones, 2 Misc. 65, 20 N. Y. Supp. 842, the court accepted the rule that a failure of the landlord to furnish an adequate supply of heat, as he had impliedly covenanted to do, substantially deprived the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, sufficient to warrant abandonment and interposition of a defense of constructive eviction in an action to recover rent, but held that the defense was not established, as the wrongful deprivation of heat had ceased at the time of the actual abandonment. And in Siebold v. Heyman, 120 N. Y. Supp. 105, it was held that the surrender must be made within a reasonable time after the accrual of the right to surrender the premises for failure to supply heat, unless there has been a waiver by the landlord of his right to take advantage of the tenant's failure to surrender the premises within a reasonable time. See also Jackson v. Paterno, as set out supra.

In case of a prompt compliance with the notification of inadequacy of heat, temporary inconvenience must be borne by the tenant, but he is not bound to attempt to keep the apartment warm by the use of lamps and gas stoves during a protracted discontinuance of steam heat called for by his lease. See O'Gorman v. Harby, 18 Misc. 228, 41 N. Y. Supp. 522, as quoted in RUSSELL v. OLSON. And in Merida Realty Co. v. Coffin, 123 N. Y. Supp. 120, it was held that the landlord has a right to a reasonable opportunity to rectify a defect in heating apparatus when notified of a deficiency in the heat, and that in case of a prompt compliance no eviction can be predicated by the temporary inconvenience of the tenant. And that the tenant would not be justified in vacating premises because upon some particular occasion he was deprived of their beneficial enjoyment by reason of a failure of heat resulting from an act of omission or commission on the part of the landlord, see Berlinger v. Macdonald, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522. And when the landlord, after notice of inadequacy of heat, promptly offers to take steps to obviate the difficulty, as by putting in larger radiators, and the tenant prevents, in the absence of evidence that the larger radiators would be inadequate, the tenant is not relieved from the obligation of his contract. Merida Realty Co. v. Coffin, 123 N. Y. Supp. 120. So, it is held that tender by payment of rent during the discontinuance of inadequacy of heat waives his right to abandonment. Ibid.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Palda, Aaker, Greene, & Kelso, for appellant:

Loss of profits is not a proper element of damage in this case.

3 Sutherland, Damages, 2d ed. §§ 867-870.

Loss on furniture is not recoverable by plaintiff, because not a loss that could reasonably be expected to follow a breach of defendant's contract.

13 Cyc. 3, ¶ 3.

The fact that plaintiff may not be able to recover damages does not prevent the defendant from recovering in that suit, by way of counterclaim, any damage that he may have sustained through the plaintiff's able opportunity to rectify a defect in heating apparatus when notified of a deficiency in the heat, and that in case of a prompt compliance no eviction can be predicated by the temporary inconvenience of the tenant. And that the tenant would not be justified in vacating premises because upon some particular occasion he was deprived of their beneficial enjoyment by reason of a failure of heat resulting from an act of omission or commission on the part of the landlord, see Berlinger v. Macdonald, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522. And when the landlord, after notice of inadequacy of heat, promptly offers to take steps to obviate the difficulty, as by putting in larger radiators, and the tenant prevents, in the absence of evidence that the larger radiators would be inadequate, the tenant is not relieved from the obligation of his contract. Merida Realty Co. v. Coffin, 123 N. Y. Supp. 120. So, it is held that tender by payment of rent during the discontinuance of inadequacy of heat waives his right to abandonment. Ibid.

In a few instances the evidence has been held insufficient to show an eviction. Thus, in Martens v. Sloane, 132 App. Div. 114, 116 N. Y. Supp. 512, where the landlord did not covenant to furnish heat, and there was no proof that the rooms occupied by the tenant were arranged so that they could be heated by the landlord, proof that there were radiators of imperfect design and construction in the apartments, that the rooms were cold in winter and that the tenant complained thereof, was held to have the effect only of showing that for some unexplained reason the temperature of the premises was not maintained so as to make them comfortable, and not to establish a constructive eviction. And in Parke v. Proby, 130 Ill. App. 571, it was held that the sickness of two of tenant's children with colds, the cause of which was not shown although it was assumed to have been lack of heat during the winter months, is insufficient to constitute an eviction under a lease wherein the lessor has cove-wrong, provided it grows out of the same contract or transaction.

Braithwaite v. Akin, 3 N. D. 365, 56 N. W. 133.

Mr. F. B. Lambert, for respondent:

Loss of profits may be recovered.

3 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. § 868, p. 2595; Poposkey v. Munkwitz, 68 Wis. 322, 60 Am. Rep. 858, 32 N. W. 38; 3 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. pp. 2597, 2612; Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 64.

The loss on the furniture was a direct and natural consequence of defendant's breach of contract, which was recoverable by plaintiff.

3 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. § 865; Pratt v. Paine, 119 Mass. 439; Hall v. Horton, 79 Iowa, 352, 44 N. W. 569.

Plaintiff having been wrongfully evicted, this of itself terminated the lease and gave him the right of action alleged in the complaint.

Filkins v. Steele, 124 Iowa, 742, 100 N. W. 851; Piper v. Fletcher, 115 Iowa, 263, 88 N. W. 380; 24 Cyc. 1153; Rea v. Algren, 104 Minn. 316, 124 Am. St. Rep. 627, 116 N. W. 580; Viehman v. Boelter, 105 Minn. 60, 116 N. W. 1023.

The cause of action must exist and be one upon which a right of action had accrued at the commencement of the action.

nanted to furnish heat, which will justify a removal several months later, under the rule that "actions of the landlord which will sustain a constructive eviction must be of a grave and permanent character, and done with the intention of depriving the tenant of the full enjoyment of the premises in an important, and not a trivial, matter. It must consist of an invasion of a material character, tending to make further occupation attendant with serious consequences or continuing discomfort."

And the question has been held to be one for the jury. Thus, in Butler v. Newhouse, 85 N. Y. Supp. 373, in holding that constructive eviction from an apartment, caused by an insufficient supply of heat which rendered the premises uninhabitable, is a good defense to an action for rent, the court said that the issue of constructive eviction, which was supported by evidence that during the month of October the apartment was insufficiently heated, or not heated at all, that defendant had repeatedly complained but without effect, and that as a result he was obliged to remove from the premises on October 29th, should have been left to the jury, and the court could not say as matter of law that constructive eviction had not been established, although there was evidence which in a measure injured the tenant's case, which was said "not to have been particularly strong." In connection with this case, see also Graham v. Grape Capule Co. 61 Misc. 87; 113 N. Y. Supp. 103. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Orton v. Noonan, 29 Wis. 541; Oswald v. Moran, 8 N. D. 113, 77 N. W. 281; McGuire v. Edsall, 14 Mont. 359, 36 Pac. 453; Taylor, Land & T. 8th ed. § 677; Walker v. McKay, 2 Met. (Ky.) 294; Scott v. Jones, 1 Brock, 244, Fed. Cas. No. 12,536; Howze v. Davis, 76 Ala. 381; Meyer v. Temme, 72 Ill. 574; Martin v. Kunzmuller, 37 N. Y. 396; Gannon v. Dougherty, 41 Cal. 661; Paige v. Carter, 64 Cal. 489, 2 Pac. 260; Fergus Printing & Pub. Co. v. Otter Tail County, 60 Minn. 212, 62 N. W. 272; Pate v. Gray, Hempst. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 10,794a; Trafford v. Hall, 7 R. I. 104, 82 Am. Dec. 589; Proctor v. Cole, 104 Ind. 373, 3 N. E. 106; Stadler v. First Nat. Bank, 22 Mont. 190, 74 Am. St. Rep. 582, 56 Pac. 117; Barnstable Sav. Bank v. Snow, 128 Mass. 513; Cragin v. Lovell, 88 N. Y. 258; Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 108, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599.

Pollock, Special Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant rented to plaintiff a certain hotel in the city of Minot. One of the clauses in the contract reads as follows: "The party of the first part (Olson) agrees, during the continuance of this lease, to furnish the heat for the proper heating of the same, from the 1st day of October to the succeeding 1st day of May during each year,

In the following cases the question of heating was involved but in connection with other elements which were treated jointly with it: Thus, in Trenkmann v. Schneider, 26 Misc. 695, 56 N. Y. Supp. 770, it was held that proof of a failure to furnish "so much heat as shall at all times be required" in a certain business, together with a failure to supply a uniform power, although sometimes more than the full amount of power called for by the lease was furnished, the business requiring a uniform power, established eviction upon surrender of the premises. And in November v. Wilson, 49 Misc. 533, 97 N. Y. Supp. 989, allegations that an apartment was rendered untenable, unsafe, and unfit for occupation by reason of dampness, leakage of water, cold, lack of protection, and negligence and insufficient management of the boilers, were held to set up the defense of constructive eviction; and it was said that if any of the acts charged which were within the control of the landlord were proven to have been done or permitted by him with the result alleged, it would show constructive eviction, the tenant having vacated the premises because thereof.

A number of cases have passed upon the right of a tenant to vacate or abandon the leased premises, and where the tenant has been held justified, the decisions amount to a holding that the tenant was constructively evicted, since constructive eviction, according to the general rule, is a deprivation by from the date hereof." The action is for damages for violation of this condition of the lease. Plaintiff alleges that under the lease he entered upon said premises October 1, 1905, and remained there until October 30, 1906, when he was evicted by reason of the failure of the defendant to furnish heat for said premises. The written lease made by the parties was for and during the term of five years from October 1, 1905. The damages claimed were: First, for $100 per month from October 1, 1905, to May 1, 1906, $700 in all; second, $1,000 per year from October 30, 1906, for the remaining four years' term of the lease, total $4,000; third, because he had bought certain furniture especially fitted for the building, and paid therefor $2,000, and which, when moved from the said building, had no value in excess of $500, and on that cause of action claims $1,000 damages. Defendant entered a general denial, except that he admitted making the lease as alleged by plaintiff, and then set forth a counterclaim for damages: First, for putting in partitions and injuring the floors, $100; second, abandoning the place without cause, damage $4,800, being the rental of said premises for the unexpired term; third, taking away the keys of the building, $50; fourth, leaving the premises in a dirty and filthy condition, $75,—making a total of $5,025. A general denial to the counterclaim was set forth in the reply. The cause was tried before the court and a jury, and during the time of the trial plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint by adding thereto the following: "That said furniture and fixtures were especially adapted to said building and rooms, and especially useful therein; that upon plaintiff's eviction from said building as above alleged there was no other building or rooms in which to place said furniture, and the same were of no value in excess of the sum of $500, and the said plaintiff has sustained loss on said furniture and fixtures by reason of the foregoing in the sum of $1,000." At the close of the case, defendant moved for a directed verdict, which not only leveled at plaintiff's right to a verdict, but also asked for a verdict in favor of the defendant for $135. This motion was overruled, and the ruling properly excepted to. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $865.75, and the verdict shows that the same was arrived at as follows: Damages to plaintiff on hotel claim, $350; damages to plaintiff on furniture claim, $593.75. As against which the defendant was allowed: For loss of keys, $10, and for dirty condition of the premises when left, $68. Thereafter, certain exceptions were filed the acts of the landlord, either in whole or in part, of the beneficial use and enjoyment of the demised premises, accompanied by removal of the tenant because of such deprivation. For this reason the following cases, which do not treat the question expressly as one of eviction, have been included: Thus, in O'Gorman v. Harby, 18 Misc. 228, 41 N. Y. Supp. 522 (quoted in RUSSELL v. OLSON), it was held that where, owing either to faulty construction, accident, or mismanagement, an apartment was so cold during the month of December and in January until after the tenant moved out, as to interrupt the beneficial use and render the apartment untenable, such removal was justified. And in Filkins v. Steele, 124 Iowa, 742, 100 N. W. 851, failure to furnish heat in breach of a covenant to do so, after demand for compliance, was held to warrant vacation of the premises by the tenant without formal notice to the landlord. And in Harmony Co. v. Rauch, 64 Ill. App. 386, where the lessor had expressly covenanted to furnish heat, it was held that failure to do so, even if because of accident or inability, justified abandonment.

But, although failure to furnish heat may, under certain circumstances, constitute constructive eviction, it has been held that the failure of a landlord to fulfil his duty implied from a covenant of quiet enjoyment to supply heat to an apartment, the means of supplying which are exclusively under his control, does not constitute an actual eviction, as it cannot be held that because a tenant was not furnished with as much heat as his landlord was under a duty to supply, the tenant has been physically expelled from the premises which he has not abandoned. Jackson v. Paterno, 58 Misc. 201, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, affirmed in 128 App. Div. 474, 21 N. Y. Supp. 924.

Aside from RUSSELL v. OLSON, but one case seems to have passed upon the question of the amount or kind of damages in case of eviction resulting from failure to furnish heat, and that is O'Gorman v. Harby, 18 Misc. 228, 41 N. Y. Supp. 522, wherein it was held that a tenant forced to abandon an apartment because inadequately heated could counterclaim against the rent for the month in which he vacated, to the extent of the value of the premises after his removal, which he lost through the landlord's default.

As to eviction of tenant by discontinuance of or interference with elevator service, see note to McCall v. New York L. Ins. Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 38.

For a discussion of the general question of the duty and liability of a landlord of apartments as to heating, see note to O'Hanlon v. Grubb, ante, 1213.

As to the landlord's breach of a covenant to repair or make improvements as justification for abandonment of the premises, see note to Partridge v. Dykins, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 984. G. J. C.

to the charge, in the following language only: "Comes now the defendant in the above-entitled action and excepts to the following provisions of the charge of the court, given to the jury in the above-entitled action, covering pages 7 to 16, inclusive, and reading as follows, to wit: . . ." Then follows the paragraphs of the charge excepted to. No grounds for the exception were mentioned. Judgment was thereafter entered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $865.75. From the judgment defendant appeals. In the statement of the case are found sixty-seven specifications of error, mostly with reference to the admission of testimony, and directly attacking its character as a proper mode of proving the damages claimed. No motion for a new trial was made, so that the matter comes before this court only to review the errors of law occurring at the trial.

1. Questions of fact cannot be reviewed by this court on appeal from a judgment in any action tried by a jury, unless a motion for a new trial was made in the court below. Rev. Codes, 1905, § 7226; McNab v. Northern P. R. Co. 12 N. D. 568, 98 N. W. 353.

In justice to the learned judge who tried this case, it is only fair to suggest that if counsel had made a motion for a new trial, and thus given the court below a chance to review the entire record, it is safe to say that the expense of an appeal would have been saved. The writer hereof, through long experience as a trial court, well knows the difficulties attendant upon a trial where, as shown by the record herein, more care should have been given to the preparation of the pleadings, and the elimination of all those items, on both sides, which serious reflection would have shown could not have been allowed. While constant demand upon a busy practitioner's time will often excuse lack of the most careful preparation for the actual trial of a case, it will not justify the trouble and expense incident to an appeal, without first calling upon the court below to correct any errors which occurred at the trial.

2. The exceptions taken to the charge in this case cannot be considered. They should have pointed out some definite or specific defect in the character of the instructions given. Counsel should, by his objection, lay his finger on the precise point, or upon the precise request refused, or alleged error of the court. St. Croix Lumber Co. v. Pennington (1882) 2 Dak. 467, 11 N. W. 497.

3. There was competent evidence given both pro and con upon the question of whether the defendant had violated his contract with reference to the heat, and we cannot, in the absence of a motion for a new trial, pass upon the sufficiency of this evidence to warrant the finding that the defendant had failed to comply with the full terms of the contract in relation thereto, and must proceed, therefore, in the further examination of the case, assuming that the defendant had violated his contract.

4. Certain questions were asked, during the time of the trial, by counsel for the plaintiff, by which he sought to establish the amount of damages alleged to have been sustained during the time that he remained in the hotel; likewise questions attempting to prove the damages to the furniture as alleged in the amended paragraph of the complaint. To most all of these questions the defendant interposed the objection that the same were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, not constituting a proper measure of damages, and, in many cases, that the plaintiff was not competent to answer the question asked. Defendant further claims that an error was committed in refusing to grant the motion of defendant for a verdict. These alleged errors of law occurring at the trial are properly before us in the statement of the case, and must receive consideration at our hands.

5. Did the failure of defendant to furnish the heat according to his contract constitute in law a constructive eviction of plaintiff from the premises? Assuming, as we must in this case, that defendant was at fault in failing to furnish the heat contemplated in the contract, plaintiff was clearly within his rights, under subparagraph 1. § 5523, Rev. Codes, 1905, in terminating the same. "The hirer of a thing may terminate the hiring before the end of the term agreed upon: 1. When the latter does not, within a reasonable time after request, fulfil his obligations, if any, as to placing and securing the hirer in the quiet possession of the thing hired, or putting it in a good condition, or repairing." There was competent evidence that the plaintiff requested the defendant to furnish a proper amount of heat; that the same was not so furnished within a reasonable time. The jury having passed upon the sufficiency of such evidence, that question is settled against the defendant.

In view of the fact that the selling of heat has become an important industry under modern methods, the rights of parties growing out of contracts to furnish heat take an unusual importance. The plaintiff in this instance had no more control over the source of supply than as though the heat was to come from a central plant, blocks away, and not, as it did, from the cellar beneath the rented building. We are not dealing with a question of repairs.

There is no intimation that there were neither proper pipes nor a lack of radiation. It was simply a failure on the part of defendant, who was in sole control of the heating plant, to use fuel and keep present a sufficient amount of steam to warm the rooms.

An apartment-house contract was under discussion in the case of O'Gorman v. Harby, 18 Misc. 228, 41 N. Y. Supp. 521, where the landlord failed to supply a sufficient amount of heat. The court says: "The facts of the case do warrant us, however, in saying that in matters of repairing and remedying defects, as between the landlord and the lessee of rooms in an apartment house, a reasonable rule prevails. If, after notice, the landlord proceeds with proper diligence to do what is necessary, he is allowed a reasonable time to remedy the defect. If the tenant waits a reasonable time for him to do the work, and it is not done, he may remove from the premises if he has been and is deprived of the beneficial use and enjoyment of them. . . . The tenant attempted to keep warm by the use of lamps and gas logs in his apartment; but it cannot be held that he was bound to do this during a protracted discontinuance of the steam heat which his lease calls for. In the case of a prompt compliance with notification of defect in the heating apparatus, temporary inconvenience must be suffered by the tenant, under a reasonable construction of the relations between the parties. But in this case the facts established that an unreasonable infliction was imposed upon him, and his abandonment of the premises was justified."

Again, the supreme court of New York, in Siebold v. Heyman, 120 N. Y. Supp. 105, says: "There can be no doubt that the failure of a landlord to supply sufficient heat to an apartment used as a dwelling and fitted with apparatus for that purpose, over which the landlord has control, constitutes a constructive eviction if the tenant so elects and moves out. Butler v. Newhouse, 85 N. Y. Supp. 373. It is only by removal that the tenant can make his election."

Our sister state, South Dakota, in Edmison v. Lowry, 3 S. D. at page 85, 17 L.R.A. 275, 44 Am. St. Rep. 774, 52 N. W. 585, uses the following language: "In a case like the present, the technical rule which requires the element either of absolute expulsion from the property by the landlord, or abandonment by the tenant, to be included in the act of eviction, does not and ought not to be applied. A party should be held evicted when the act of the landlord is of such a character as to deprive the tenant, or has the effect of depriving him, of the beneficial use and enjoyment of the whole or any part of the demised property to the extent he is thus deprived."

In Hoeveler v. Fleming, 91 Pa. 322, the supreme court of Pennsylvania says: "The modern doctrine as to what constitutes an eviction is that actual physical expulsion is not necessary, but any interference with the tenants beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises will amount to an eviction in law."

An exhaustive note collating the authorities from different states may be found in the case of Wade v. Herndl, as printed in volume 7, Ann. Cas. 594. See 2 Underhill, Land. & T. 1909 ed. 1143, and cases cited.

Based upon our statute and these authorities, which might be multiplied, it clearly appears that the acts of defendant worked a constructive eviction of plaintiff. It would follow, therefore, that defendant broke his contract, and would not be entitled to any damages for the abandonment of the premises. The amount of damages as asked by defendant in his motion would appear to indicate that he had withdrawn his claim for $4,800 damages by reason of plaintiff having abandoned the premises; but, because the record does not show this point clearly, we deem it important to express our views upon the rule which must obtain in a situation of this kind. Nor was there evidence sufficient upon which the court could have properly granted a motion in favor of the defendant for the $135 claimed, and our further inquiry, therefore, must be based upon that part of the motion which asks for a directed verdict because the plaintiff had wholly failed to establish any cause of action himself.

6. To determine this question, we are led to inquire: What is the measure of plaintiff's damages, and was there any sufficient evidence offered upon which a verdict for the plaintiff could be predicated? An examination of the contract between the parties shows it to be silent upon the question of the measure of damages. The parties to this action might have fixed in their contract a rule, if they had desired so to do, provided it was lawful; but they did not. They are therefore relegated to the measure of damages prescribed by statute. The leading case upon this subject in our state is Hayes v. Cooley, 13 N. D. 204, 100 N. W. 250. This was an action growing out of a claim that the court below had adopted the wrong rule for the measurement of damages. At page 207 of 13 N. D., Judge Young, speaking for the court, discusses the entire subject of damages for the violation or breach of contract. The statutory rule (§ 6563, Rev. Codes, 1905) neither restricts nor enlarges the actual rule which has been recognized and applied both in England and this country, and in substance quoting from the opinion: "Where two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally, i. e., according to the usual course of things from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it."

Adair v. Bogle, 20 Iowa, 238, is a leading case upon the subject. Judge Dillon, at page 243, discussing the subject, says: "It is also settled that, in such an action against the landlord for damages, the general rule for the measure thereof is the difference between the rent reserved and the value of the premises for the term. If the value of the premises for the term is no greater than the rent which the tenant has agreed to pay, then the latter is not substantially injured, and can, in general, recover only nominal damages, though the landlord, without just cause, refuses to give possession. But if the value of the premises is greater than the rent to be paid, the lessee is entitled to the benefit of his contract, and this will ordinarily consist of the difference between the two amounts."

... It often happens that courts and juries are often perplexed in determining questions relating to the measure of damages, and, notwithstanding general rules may and should be laid down to the jury, must still be left to their sound judgment and sense of justice and right. Two principles should, in cases like the present, be impressed upon juries: First, the plaintiff should recover only such damages as have directly and necessarily been occasioned by the defendant's wrongful act or default; and, second, that if the plaintiff, by reasonable exertions or care on his part, could have prevented such damages, he is bound to do so, and, so far as he could have thus prevented them, he cannot recover therefor.

... The injured party is entitled to recover only such sum as will make him whole. This he is entitled to recover, so far as his injury has been the direct or natural result of the wrongful act of the other party. ... We have said above that in general, or ordinarily, the plaintiff, in such an action as the present, recovers the difference between the value of the use of the premises and the rent reserved. But he is not in all cases confined to this, as where, in addition, he has sustained a particular loss. If other damages have resulted as the direct and necessary or natural consequence of the defendant's breach of the contract, these are recoverable, certainly where, as in this case, they are specially set forth."

We find the general rule stated in 3 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. p. 2578, as follows: "On this general proposition the authorities agree. In such cases the difference between the rent to be paid and the actual value of the premises at the time of the breach for the unexpired term is considered the natural and proximate damages."

Upon the first cause of action the jury awarded to the plaintiff the sum of $350. The defendant says, by virtue of his motion, as a matter of law, there was no competent proof in the record which would sustain any such findings. The following, taken from the record, is believed to contain all the testimony in the case upon that question: "I have been in the hotel business in different towns for about twelve years, and know what the profits are in the hotel business. Minot is a good hotel town. I have been in the hotel business in Minot since I left this building. Took possession of Morril's Hotel May 1, 1907. I was able to keep filled, from October 1, 1905, to May 1, 1906, under the conditions expressed as to heat, on the average, twenty-five rooms, which would leave seven empty during the winter. Have been a hotel man both before and after the making of this lease, since I have left the place. I know something about the hotel business so far as seasons are concerned, and know Minot particularly. I think a rooming proposition, when a building is heated by steam, is better in winter than in summer, if it is properly heated. When not properly heated during the winter season, the effect is that it naturally makes it harder to get people back once they leave a house, and will interfere to quite an extent with summer business. I used the building in the summer of 1906, kept the rooms full in the summer time, and I might add a little to that: perhaps would not be the condition of affairs later on, because when you drive people away you can't get them back, and the consequences are, if I stay there long enough, I wouldn't have any roomers. I rented these rooms at $3.50 to $5 a week. I took possession of the building October 1, 1905, and remained there one year and one month, leaving the building on the 31st day of October, 1906. I left it because it was too cold. In the month of October, 1906, a number of roomers moved out on account of its being too cold. When I left I had about half the rooms in the house occupied. I tried in good faith to keep it occupied and keep people there. During the summer time the profits per month in my business, over and above my expenses, were $150. In the winter time I lost some money in the winter business, a small amount,—$50 a month. In leasing this building I was to pay $200 a month, to run a year; consider this a fair rental value. I do not consider the rental value between the 1st of October to the 1st of May, with the amount of heat Mr. Olson furnished, as worth anything. I made no profits operating these rooms from the 1st of October, 1905, to the 1st of May, 1906. I lost money, $50 a month. I operated the same in the summer time at a profit of about $150 a month. The rooms were managed and kept clean, beds changed, and everything like that the same in the winter as in the summer."

Assuming the foregoing to be all competent, it clearly appears from an analysis thereof that there is no sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding the verdict which they did. It must be remembered that the plaintiff had been in the hotel but a short time. The most definite statement, and that was a conclusion of fact, was that in the summer his net profit was $150, and in the winter he lost $50 a month. There is no evidence in any way showing the basis upon which this finding was made. The jury was not given any information upon which they could draw such a conclusion, and they were left simply to speculate and guess at a possible loss. As was stated by the court in St. John v. New York, 13 How. Pr. at page 532: "It is not denied that loss of custom is the proper ground of recovery. To prove this was the object and direct tendency of the evidence. The plaintiff showed the actual receipts of his hotel for a year or more previous to the obstruction complained of, the actual daily receipts during the continuance of the obstruction and again the actual daily receipts for some months after the obstruction was removed. This furnished the means of computation, and of satisfactorily ascertaining the diminution of receipts. He also showed that the expenses were in the same, or about the same, ratio to the receipts during the whole period." No such proofs were offered in this case.

As counsel for the appellant properly suggests in his brief: "The most natural way to make such proofs would be by comparing the profits for corresponding periods of time through any prior or succeeding years, and under the condition of proper heating of the building. This could readily be done by showing gross earnings, actual expenses of the business during such period, if the circumstances of the case made such proof possible. There were no expenses of prior or succeeding years in this case, and therefore such proof was impossible; but that does not compel the court to accept improper evidence. Plaintiff's damages must be such as are susceptible of legal proof; otherwise he is without remedy."

It is clear from the pleadings, if not from the verdict, that plaintiff desires damages for the remainder of the term. Assume that the plaintiff ought to be awarded such damages, how shall that be measured. Clearly, he ought to receive the full benefit of his bargain, if that benefit can be ascertained. If the bargain would have produced more than the rental value, such excess would represent the loss sustained and consequent damage. To ascertain the extent of such damages, without entering the field of speculation, is in all cases difficult, and in some entirely impossible. The innocent person must suffer in all cases where, from any cause, he is unable to furnish adequate proof of his damage. In the case at bar, plaintiff had been in occupation only a short time. No previous years of occupancy existed by which comparisons could be instituted; nor were the premises thereafter used under like conditions, which can throw light upon the situation. To raise the question of probable profits in this case would require the jury to enter a labyrinth of speculation, from which they would not hope to be extricated. It is evident, therefore, that upon the record before the court there is no evidence that for the remainder of the term the bargain would have exceeded in value the amount of rent to be paid for the term. Consequently no error was committed in failing to find damages upon that account, and we hold as was held by the trial court, that there was not sufficient evidence, even considering it all to be competent, upon which the jury could have found a verdict for the amount claimed, or for any amount.

7. Can the special damages of $593.75, allowed by the jury on account of the second cause of action, be sustained? The plaintiff claims that he is entitled to this damage, resulting from the purchase of the furniture.

The court erred in submitting that question to the jury. Again referring to the rule laid down by the court in Hayes v. Cooley, 13 N. D. 210, 100 N. W. 250, we do not believe that the testimony in support of this cause of action shows that the damages claimed may be reasonably supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time when they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. In so far as the failure to furnish the heat was a cause contributing to the loss on the furniture, it was a remote, and not a proximate, consequence thereof. It was held in the case just cited that "if the contract in question . . . was in fact made under such special and exceptional circumstances that it could reasonably be concluded that the parties in making it contemplated that a loss by storm would follow its breach, it was necessary both to allege and prove the facts in order to thus characterize the contract and establish the plaintiff's liability for such loss. This was not done."

As was stated by the court in Serfling v. Andrews, 106 Wis. 80, 81 N. W. 991: "Damages for the breach of a contract are limited to such as may be reasonably considered to have been in contemplation by the parties at the time of the making of such contract as the probable result of a breach of it. . . . Upon the facts stated in the complaint, the true rule of damages would have been the difference between the actual rental value of the premises for the term and the rent reserved in the lease. . . . If plaintiff desired to recover special damages, such as loss of prospective profits, it was his duty to allege the facts and circumstances and knowledge of the situation brought home to the defendant at the time the lease was made."

Judge Dillon, as quoted above, in Adair v. Bogle, affirms this same rule.

Under the rule, therefore, as laid down by our own, as well as other, courts, in order to have maintained any recovery of damages whatsoever growing out of the second cause of action, it would have been necessary for the plaintiff to have alleged and proved that the question of the furniture and its possible depreciation in value in case of a breaking of the lease was considered by both parties, and contemplated as a factor in helping to make up the amount of damages should any in their view occur. There is danger likewise of entering into the realm of speculation at this point; something not permitted by the statute. If it may be claimed that the statute is sufficiently broad to cover cases of this kind, what would be the result had the plaintiff put into these rooms mahogany furniture, marble-topped tables, the finest and most expensive kind of rugs, and then, being compelled to leave the premises, could find no sale for such property? Could it be urged that he could have the difference between the cost of the furniture, less the value of the reasonable wear and tear, and less the amount for which he could find sale for it? The necessities of the rule as laid down by the authorities grew out of the very nature of the case. If the parties had desired such a rule of damages to be applied, they should have so indicated in their written contract. Failure to do this leaves them to the rule laid down in the statute. That rule has been fully adjudicated by the courts.

We find, therefore, that there are neither sufficient allegations nor proofs upon which any finding could be based growing out of the second cause of action. It will be unnecessary to discuss any further alleged errors.

The decision of the lower court is reversed, the judgment vacated and set aside, and a new trial is ordered.

Morgan, Ch. J., not participating, and Goss, J., disqualified, took no part in the decision; Hon Chas. A. Pollock, Judge of Third Judicial District, sitting in his stead by request.

Petition for rehearing denied December 21, 1911.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The Index to Cases follows this.)

Abandonment. Of highway, see HIGHWAYS. Of homestead, see HOMESTEAD.	Animals. Liability of railroad for injury to, see RAILROADS. Measure of damages for personal injury by dog 865
Abutting owner. Rights in highway, see HIGHWAYS.	Apartments. Duty and liability of landlord of apartments as to heating 1213
Acceptance. Right of accommodation acceptor who has been obliged to pay bill or note to recover from accommodated party 785	Appeal. Effect of counterclaim in amount in excess of jurisdiction in appellate court 616 Right to release on bail pending appeal under general statute 693. Effect of repeal of civil statute pending appeal from judgment based on statute 934
Accession. Replevin for undivided interest in commingled goods 270	Apprehension. As element of damages for injury by dog 866
Accommodation paper. Right of accommodation party who is obliged to pay bill or note to recover from accommodated party 783	Art. Validity of bequest for education in 1007
Accused. Admissibility in behalf of accused of extrajudicial confession of stranger 845 Right of jurors to act on their own knowledge as to character or previous conduct of 797	Assault. Assault with intent to murder or kill by unlawful act aimed at another than the one injured 172
Acquiescence. Effect of attorney's acquiescence in assignment of judgment on his right to lien thereon 228	Assignment. Of judgment, see JUDGMENT. Rights of laborers or materialmen in fund for public work to insure payment of their claims as against assignee of fund 578
Action. Parties to, see PARTIES. Removal of, see REMOVAL OF CAUSES.	Assignment for creditors. Assignment of judgment for benefit of creditors as affecting attorney's lien thereon 228
Actors. Applicability of master and servant doctrine to case of actor 514	Associations. As beneficiaries in charitable bequest 1019
Advances. Right of one advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien 1203	Attorneys. Creation of precatory trust by recommending employment of attorney 685 Right of client to recover property placed in the name of his attorney in order to defraud creditors 161 Conclusiveness of judgment as between plaintiff and attorney who has charge of the defense 964 1227
Aggravation. Of damages, see DAMAGES.
Aliens. Tracing descent through alien 108 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Assignment of judgment as affecting attorneys' lien thereon	226	Refunding bonds as indebtedness within meaning of debt limit provisions	1099
Automobiles.		Bonus.
Validity of excise or license tax on	440	Trustee's right to retain bonus received from third person	923
Power to prescribe qualifications of chauffeurs	303	Buildings.
Liability of manufacturer or dealer for personal injuries caused by defects in automobile	560	Who may enforce restrictive covenant or agreement as to	12
Liability of owner for injuries caused by automobile while being used by a servant or a third person for his own business or pleasure	834	Right of life tenant to timber for	765
Bail.		Candidates.
Right to release on bail pending appeal under a general statute	693	Validity of agreement made in consideration of withdrawal of candidacy for office	289
Ballots.		Carriers.
See ELECTIONS.		Duty of carrier as to route	222
Banks.		Liability of carrier for injury resulting from negligent or meddlesome act of fellow passenger	724
Right of bank to impeach sources of deposit as against holder of check drawn against the same	1186	Duty upon running train past station to notify passengers of intention to return	264
Applicability of deposits to individual indebtedness of depositor where word suggestive of fiduciary character is appended to his name	409	Liability of railroad company for injury to person wrongfully on train by collusion with a train employee	419
Barriers.		Validity of stipulation in pass limiting carrier's liability	235
In highway, see HIGHWAYS.		Right of owner of baggage to testify as to its value in action for its loss	583
Beneficiaries.		Contributory negligence of passenger where train is run past station	266
Of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.		Passing from one car to another of a moving train as contributory negligence	515
Benefit societies.		Cemeteries.
Matters as to insurance, see INSURANCE.		Public character of charitable bequest for	997
Bequests.		Certainty.
See WILLS.		Of purpose of general bequest for charity or religion	1001
Bills and notes.		Character.
Right of one advancing money to pay purchase money note to be subrogated to vendor's lien	1207	Right of jurors to act on their own knowledge as to character of accused	797
Right of accommodation party who is obliged to pay bill or note, to recover from the accommodated party	783	Charities.
Conclusiveness of judgment as between plaintiff and one not a party nor privy who voluntarily conducted defense in action upon note	965	Creation of charitable trusts by precatory words in will	646
Necessity of demand and protest to enable accommodation indorser who has been obliged to pay bill or note to recover from accommodated maker	785	Enforcement of general bequest for charity or religion	993
Blank.		Chattel mortgage.
Effect of deed executed with name of grantee blank where grantee's name is filled in and deed delivered contrary to grantor's authorization	326	Mortgage of receipts or property as indebtedness within meaning of debt limit provision	1085
Bond.		Right of seller of chattel retaining title thereto or a lien thereon as against existing mortgages of the realty to which it is affixed by the owner	119
Of executor, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.		Right of seller of chattel who takes a chattel mortgage as against existing mortgages of the realty to which it is affixed by the owner	122
Liability of bondsmen of peace officer for acts of latter in respect of property taken from prisoner	873	Chauffeur.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)		Power to prescribe qualifications of	363

Check.

- Check as payment of debt where drawee pays to unauthorized person 201
- Right of bank to impeach source of deposit as against holder of check drawn against same 1186

City.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Clearing.

- Life tenant's rights as to clearing land 770

Collateral security.

See PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Collusion.

- Liability of railroad company for injury to person wrongfully on train by collusion with a train employee 419

Color of title.

- Right to allowance for improvements made before color of title 918

Common knowledge.

- Right of jurors to act on 798

Community property.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Compensation.

- For property taken under power of eminent domain, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Compounding felony.

- Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of relative 539

Compromise.

- Unaccepted offer of, as tolling statute of limitations 885

Compulsory industrial insurance.

- Constitutionality of 466

Conditional sale.

See SALE.

Confession.

See EVIDENCE.

Consent.

- Sufficiency of husband's consent to wife's will 1183
- Husband's power without wife's consent to abandon homestead or convey premises by his sole deed after abandonment 807
- Effect of consent by mortgagee of realty to affixing thereon of a chattel, the seller of which retained title thereto or a lien thereon 127

Consideration.

For contracts, see CONTRACTS.

Conspiracy.

As to strikes, see LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Constitutional law.

- Ex post facto* law; statute reducing number of presiding judges at criminal trial 567
- Ex post facto* law: repeal of statute excluding evidence discovered or obtained by judicial proceedings against accused 96
- Power of legislature to regulate life insurance rates 778
- Constitutionality of compulsory industrial insurance 466
- Constitutionality of legislation restricting candidate to one place on ballot 825

Constructive service.

Of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Consuls.

- Jurisdiction and power of consuls to administer on estates 549

Contingency.

- Does contingency of death without issue, children, etc., import their survival of the first taker 164

Contracts.

- Election to sue on implied contract, see ELECTION OF REMEDIES.
- Validity of carrier's limitation of liability, see CARRIERS.
- Opinion evidence by nonexpert as to capacity of another to make contract 592
- Changing terms of offer of prize after efforts to secure it have begun 183
- Applicability of statute of frauds to partnership real estate 902
- Statute of frauds: printed or stamped signature 852
- Right to recover value of services rendered in consideration of contract to convey or devise property, which is void by the statute of frauds 639
- Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of relative 539
- Validity of agreement made in consideration of withdrawal of candidacy for office 289
- Proceeding with work as waiver by contractor of stipulations by other party to furnish appliances or facilities for the work 969
- Implied power of agent to assent to rescission of contract 91
- Right of laborers or materialmen in fund retained pursuant to contract for public work, to insure payment of their claims 575

Copyright.

- Punitive damages for infringement of, where amount of actual damages is not established 533

Corporations.

- As trustee for charitable trust 1011
- As beneficiaries of charitable bequest 1019

Costs.
Right of accommodation party who is obliged to pay bill or note to recover costs from accommodated party	788
Cotenancy.
Right of former cotenant to acquire title in his own right through or under a purchaser at a sale under a title or interest paramount to the common title	831
Counterclaim.
See SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.
Counties.
Creation of indebtedness within meaning of debt limit provision	1058
Courts.
Removal of cause from state to Federal court	302
Notice of distribution in probate proceedings as jurisdictional	368
Right of representative of decedent's estate to interplead claimants as affected by exclusiveness of surrogate's jurisdiction	986
The effect of a counterclaim in an amount in excess of jurisdiction	606
Covenants and conditions.
Who may enforce restrictive covenant or agreement as to use of property	12
Right of grantee to enforce restrictive covenants in prior conveyances by his grantor of other parcels	623
Criminal law.
Good faith as affecting criminal responsibility for illegal registration or voting	1177
Liability of bondsman of peace officer for acts of latter as to property taken from prisoner	873
Prohibitions to prevent numerous unfounded prosecutions for alleged violation of statute or ordinance	448
Right of jurors to act on their own knowledge as to matters not in evidence	796
Statute reducing number of presiding judges at criminal trial as ex post facto law	567
Repeal of statute excluding evidence discovered or obtained by judicial proceedings	96
Crops.
Measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of growing crops	976
Crowd.
Assault with intent to murder or kill by shooting into crowd	173
Current receipts.
When obligations payable out, as indebtedness within debt limit provision	1070
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)
Custody.
Of holographic will	842
Custom.
Custom of estate as to life tenant's cutting timber for sale	763
Cy pres.
Application of cy pres doctrine to charitable gift	1005, 1007
Damages.
Punitive damages for infringing trademark, tradename, or copyright, where amount of actual damages not established	533
Measure of damages for breach of warranty on sale of seeds	85
May purchaser recover damages for breach of warranty or fraud as to both articles, where one article is substituted for another at his request and both are defective	298
Amount of recovery by accommodation party who has been obliged to pay bill on note against accommodated party	788
Measure of damages for personal injury by dog	865
Measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of, growing crops	976
Measure of damages for injury to or destruction of trees or shrubbery not valuable for timber or firewood	1115
Damages on condemnation of the fee of land over which there is an existing highway	281
Liability for apprehension, fright, etc., through personal injury by dog	866
Personal wrong as aggravation of damages for trespass on realty	912
Dealer.
Liability for personal injuries caused by defects in automobile	560
Death.
Effect of death of accommodation party on right to recover from accommodated party	786
Effect of declarant's death on admissibility in behalf of accused of extrajudicial confessions by stranger	349
Debts.
Debt limit of municipality, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
Right of insurer to deduct indebtedness of insured extrinsic to insurance contract	556
Applicability of deposits to individual indebtedness of depositor where word suggestive of fiduciary character is appended to his name	409
Real estate acquired in payment of debts as partnership property	903
Decaying timber.
Life tenant's rights as to	767

Deceased persons.

Administration of estates of, see EX-ECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Dedication.

Effect of conveyance of lands laid down on plats to prevent a change in the use or form of the property 953

Deduction.

Right of insurer to deduct indebtedness of insured extrinsic to insurance contract 556

Deeds.

Covenants in, see COVENANTS AND CON-DITIONS.
Opinion evidence by nonexpert as to capacity of another to make 592
May purchaser of property be required to accept deed of third person 1123 Does contingency of death without issue, children, etc., import their survival of the first taker 164
Effect of conveyance of lands laid down on plats to prevent a change in the use or form of the property 953 Effect of deed executed with name of grantee blank, where name of grantee is filled in and deed delivered contrary to grantor's authorization 326

Definition.

Dependent 1191
In 620
On 620
Public Conveyance 619
Traveling 619

Dependent.

Who is a "dependent" within statute or rules defining beneficiaries of mutual benefit societies 1191

Deposits.

See BANKS.

Deputy.

Change of salary of deputy as violation of constitutional provision against change of salary of public officer during term of office 388

Descent and distribution.

Tracing descent through alien 108

Design.

Right to protection against use of rival design, shell or pattern not protected by patent 259

Destruction.

Right to waive tort and sue on implied contract where property is negligently destroyed 230

Devises.

See WILLS.

Diplomatic and consular officers.

Jurisdiction and power of consuls to administer on estates 549

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Discharge.

Of employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Disobedience.

Discharge of employee for disobedience of regulations 950

Distribution.

See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; EX-ECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Diversion.

Of water, see WATERS.

Dogs.

See ANIMALS.

Drains and sewers.

Right to divert water from nontidal stream for drainage purposes without compensation to riparian owner 311

Duress.

Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of relative 539

Dying declarations.

See EVIDENCE.

Easement.

In Waters, see WATERS.
Restrictive covenants as to use of property as easements 36

Education.

Validity of bequest for 1006, 1013
Validity of bequest for education of ministry 1004

Ejectment.

Remedy of pretermitted heirs by 1146

Elections.

Constitutionality of legislation restricting candidate to one place on ballot 825
Good faith as affecting criminal responsibility for illegal registration or voting 1177

Election of remedies.

Remedy of pretermitted heirs 1143
Right to waive tort and sue upon implied contract, where property is negligently destroyed 230

Emergency.

Care required of one in sudden emergency 43

Eminent domain.

Measure of damages in, see DAMAGES.
Power to take property already devoted to a public use by a political or governmental agency 101
Government's right to divert water from nontidal stream without compensation to riparian owner 307

Employees.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Entry.		Exemplary damages.
Writ of, see WRIT OF ENTRY.		See DAMAGES.
Equitable conversion.		Exemption.
Of partnership realty	900	Judgment on antecedent debt as lien on property to which exemption law has attached in meantime	158
Equitable mortgage.		Experience.
Necessity and character of one's previous interest in land essential to his claim as an equitable mortgagor	321	Right of jurors to waive evidence by application of general experience	803
Equity.		Ex post facto law.
Nature of chancery jurisdiction over charities	984	See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.
Remedy of pretermitted heirs by proceedings in equity	1146	Fallen timber.
Estoppel.		Life tenant's rights as to	761
Of surety to complain of creditor's management and collection of collateral	715	Fences.
Estovers.		Right of life tenant to timber for	765
Customary estovers of life tenant	764	Fiduciary relations.
Evection.		Applicability of deposits to individual indebtedness of depositor where word suggestive of fiduciary character is appended to his name	409
Of tenant, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.		Fire arms.
Evidence.		Carrier's liability for injury resulting from accidental discharge of fire arms by fellow passenger	724
Right of jurors to act on their own knowledge	790	Fires.
Admissibility of insurance agent's memoranda or letters as to policies and risks	1169	Carrier's liability for injury by fire resulting from negligent or meddlesome act of fellow passenger	725
Repeal of statute excluding evidence discovered or obtained by judicial proceedings	96	Fixtures.
Parol evidence as to whether real estate is partnership property	898	Right of seller of chattel retaining title thereto or a lien thereon as against existing mortgages of the realty to which it is affixed by the owner	119
Right of owner of baggage to testify as to its value in action for its loss	588	Forcible entry and detainer.
Opinion evidence by nonexpert as to the contractual or testamentary capacity of another	591	Mere display of invalid process without actual force or threats as ground of action of forcible entry and detainer	600
Admissibility in behalf of accused of extra-judicial confession of stranger	345	Foreign charities.
Admissibility in behalf of accused of dying declarations of stranger	350	Validity of bequest for	969
Admissibility of contradictory statements by declarant to impeach dying declarations	252	Forfeiture.
Effect of party's changing testimony on second trial, to supply defects in the case made on the first trial	429	Of license by aiding infringement of, or attempt to defeat patent	821
Excise.		Fraud.
Validity of excise tax on automobiles	440	Of creditor towards surety in management and collection of collateral	716
Executors and administrators.		May purchaser recover damages for fraud as to both articles where one article is substituted for another at his request and both are defective	298
Jurisdiction and power of consuls, to administer on estates	549	Effect of fraud on right of accommodation party who has been obliged to pay bill or note to recover from accommodated party	784
Bequest to executor to divide as he thinks best	403	Frauds, statute of.
Remedy of pretermitted heirs by intervening in administration	1147	See CONTRACTS.
Remedy of pretermitted heirs by action on executor's bond	1147
Right of representative of decedent's estate to interplead claimants	986
Notice of distribution in probate proceedings as jurisdictional	368
Liability of wife's separate estate for her funeral expenses	754

Fraudulent conveyances.

- Right of client to recover property placed in name of his attorney in order to defraud creditors 161

Free pass.

See CARRIERS.

Free transportation.

- Duty of public to furnish free transportation to pupils 1110

Freight trains.

- Liability of railroad company for injury to person wrongfully on freight train by collusion with train employee 420

Freight.

- As element of damages for injury by dog 866

Fuel.

- Right of life tenant to timber for 764

Funeral expenses.

- Liability of wife's separate estate for her funeral expenses 754

Germinating power.

- Warranty of germinating power on sale of seeds 81

- Measure of damages where seed sold does not contain germinating power 87

Good faith.

- Of creditor with respect to management and collection of collateral 716

- As affecting criminal responsibility for illegal registration or voting 1177

Gratuity.

Riding on free pass, see CARRIERS.

- Trustee's right to retain gratuity received from third person 923

Growing crops.

See CROPS.

Guaranty.

- Right of accommodation guarantor who has been obliged to pay bill or note to recover from accommodated party 786

Hand car.

- Liability of railroad company for injury to person wrongfully riding on hand car by collusion with train employee 427

Heating.

- Eviction of tenant by failure to furnish heat 1217

- Duty and liability of landlord of apartment as to heating 1213

Heating service.

- As public utility 510

Heirs.

- Remedy of pretermitted heirs 1143

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Highways.

- Right of government to divert water from nontidal stream for highway purposes without compensation to riparian owner 311

- Damages on condemnation of fee of land over which there is an existing highway 281

- Duty to provide barriers against abandoned highway 1158

- Duty as to condition of highway to persons entering or leaving private property 357

- Municipal liability for defective plan of street construction as distinguished from other defects 1150

- Joinder of municipality and person responsible for dangerous condition, in action for injuries on street or highway 569

Homestead.

- Husband's power without wife's consent to abandon homestead or convey premises by his sole deed after abandonment 807

Homicide.

- Assault with intent to murder or kill by unlawful act aimed at another than the one injured 172

Horses.

- Liability, in absence of negligence, for damage by runaway horse 718

Husband and wife.

- Sufficiency of husband's consent to wife's will 1133

- Power of husband without wife's consent to abandon homestead, or to convey premises by his sole deed after abandonment 807

- Life insurance policy in favor of married woman or its proceeds as her separate estate 582

- Power of legislature to change increment or income of separate property from community property to separate property, or vice versa 186

- Liability of separate estate of wife for her funeral expenses 754

Identity.

- Assault with intent to murder or kill by unlawful act under mistaken identity of person assaulted 172

Illness.

- Validity of bequest for relief of 1008, 1018

Impeachment.

- Of dying declarations, see EVIDENCE.

Improvements.

- Effect of, on question whether real estate is partnership property 904

- To whom improvements removable by tenant at expiration of term are taxable 1166

Occupying claimants acts; right to allowance for improvements made before acquiring color of title	918	Grantee's right to enforce restrictive covenants prior conveyance by his grantor of other parcels as affected by grantor's intent	624
Income.		Assault with intent to murder or kill by unlawful act aimed at another than the one injured	172
Of separate property, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Incompetent person.		Interest.
Opinion evidence by nonexpert as to tractual or testamentary capacity of another	591	Purchaser's right to interest on breach of warranty on sale of seeds	88
Indebtedness.		Right of accommodation party who is obliged to pay bill or note to recover interest from accommodated party	788
See DEBTS.		Municipal liability for interest as creating indebtedness within meaning of debt limit provisions	1106
Indemnity.		Interpleader.
Indemnity insurance, see INSURANCE.		Right of representative of decedent's estate to interplead claimants	966
Industrial insurance.		Intervention.
Constitutionality of compulsory industrial insurance	466	Remedy of prepermitted heirs by intervening in administration	1147
Infringement.		Intoxicating liquor.
Of copyright, see COPYRIGHT.		Privilege or license to sell as subject of taxation	455
Of patent, see PATENTS.		Irrigation.
Of trademark, see TRADEMARK.		See WATERS.
Of tradename, see TRADENAME.		Joinder.
Injunction.		Of parties, see PARTIES.
Against publication or sale of letters	944	Joy ride.
Right to protection against use by rival of similar design, shell or pattern not protected by patent	259	Liability of owner for injuries caused by automobile while being used by servant or third person for his own business or pleasure	834
Decree in taxpayer's suit restraining district from performing contract as binding on contractor.	383	Judges.
Insolvency.		Statute reducing number of presiding judges at criminal trial as ex post facto law	567
Effect of insolvency of accommodated party on right of accommodation party who has been obliged to pay bill or note to recover the amount thereof	786	Judgment.
Installments.		Municipal liability on judgment as creating indebtedness within meaning of debt limit provisions	1107
When municipal indebtedness payable in installments arises	1063	Conclusiveness of as between the plaintiff and one not a party nor privy, who voluntarily conducted the defense	957
Insurance.		Judgment between principal and a third person as res judicata in an action between the latter and an agent	37
Admissibility of insurance agent's memoranda or letters as to policies and risks	1169	Decree in taxpayers' suit restraining district from performing contract, as binding upon contractor	583
Constitutionality of compulsory industrial insurance	466	Conclusiveness of surrogate's decree on right of personal representative to interplead claimants.	968
Power of legislature to regulate life insurance rates	778	Judgment on antecedent debt as lien on property to which exemption law has attached in the meantime	138
Who is a "dependent" within statute or rules defining beneficiaries of mutual benefit societies	1191	Assignment of judgment as affecting attorneys' lien thereon	226
Scope and construction of provision for indemnity in case of injury while riding in or on a public conveyance	618	Service of notice in proceedings to revive a judgment	1168
Life insurance policy in favor of married woman or its proceeds as her separate estate	582
Right to deduct indebtedness of insured extrinsic to insurance contract	556
Intent.
Effect of, on question whether real estate is partnership property	891

Judicial notice.
See EVIDENCE.
Jurisdiction.
Of courts, see COURTS.
Jury.
Right of jurors to act on their own knowledge	790
Justification.
System of work as justification for strike	179
Laborers.
Rights in fund retained pursuant to contract for public work to insure payment of their claims	575
Labor organization.
System of work as justification for strike	179
Landlord and tenant.
Prohibitions in grant of public lands as including lease	686
Failure of landlord to take possession of collateral covered by lien as release of surety	709
To whom improvements removable by tenant at expiration of term are taxable	1166
Duty and liability of landlord of apartments as to heating	1213
Eviction of tenant by failure to furnish heat	1217
Power of agent for renting or collecting rent to accept surrender of lease	93
Legacy.
See WILLS.
Legislature.
Power of, under constitution, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.
Letters.
Admissibility of, in evidence, see EVIDENCE.
Injunction against publication of	944
Libel.
Liability of telegraph company for handling libelous message	861
License.
To sell intoxicating liquor, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.
Forfeiture of license by aiding infringement of, or attempt to defeat patent	821
Validity of excise or license tax upon automobiles	440
Lien.
Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.
Of judgment, see JUDGMENT.
Of seller of personalty, see SALE.
Vendor's lien, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.
Necessity of giving lienor notice of public improvement	558

Life tenants.
Timber rights of life tenant	763
Limitation of actions.
When right of accommodation party who has been obliged to pay bill or note accrues to recover amount so paid from accommodated party	787
Payment or promise by principal as extending limitation period as to surety	272
Unaccepted offer of compromise as tolling statute	885
Limitation of indebtedness.
Of municipality, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
Limitation of liability.
By carrier, see CARRIERS.
Liquors.
See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.
Listening.
At railroad crossing, see RAILROADS.
Literature.
Validity of bequest for literary purposes	1006
Loans.
Right of one loaning money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien	1203
Local improvements.
See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Locomotive.
Liability of railroad company for injury to person wrongfully riding on locomotive by collusion with train employee	426
Looking.
At railroad crossing, see RAILROADS.
Lunacy proceedings.
Opinion evidence by nonexpert as to contractual or testamentary capacity in	596
Mandamus.
To compel removal of case to Federal court or remanding of case to state court	392
Manufacturer.
Liability of manufacturer for personal injuries caused by defects in automobile	560
Masses.
Validity of bequest for	1005
Master and servant.
As to strike, see LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.
Discharge of employee for disobedience of regulations	950
Applicability of master and servant doctrines to case of injured actor	514

Liability of master for medical attendance engaged by employee who, by the contract of employment, was entitled to such attendance	757	Municipal corporations.
Validity of stipulation in employee's pass limiting carrier's liability	250	License by, see LICENSE.
Liability of railroad company for injury to person wrongfully on train by collusion with a train employee	419	Validity of bequest to	1009
Liability of owner for injuries caused by automobile while being used by servant or third person for his own business or pleasure	834	Power to take property already devoted to public by municipality	101
		Prohibitions to prevent unfounded prosecutions for alleged violation of ordinance	449
		Creation of indebtedness within the meaning of debt limit provisions	1058
		Municipal liability for defective plan of street construction as distinguished from other defects	1150
Materialmen.		Mutual benefit society.
Rights in fund retained pursuant to contract for public work to insure payment of their claims	575	See BENEFIT SOCIETIES.
Medical attendance.		Mutual covenants.
See PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.		Who may enforce mutual covenants containing restrictions as to use of property	25
Medical treatment.		Mutual wills.
As element of damages for injury by dog	866	Revocability of	1196
Memoranda.		Name.
Admissibility of, in evidence, see EVIDENCE.		Warranty that seed sold is true to name	80
Merger.		Measure of damages where seed sold is not true to name	86
Sale of collateral merging security in debt	714	Nationality.
Ministers.		Competency to testify as to one's nationality	760
Validity of general bequest for education and support of ministry	1004	Navigation.
Misnomer.		Right of government to divert water from nontidal stream for navigation purposes without compensation to riparian owner	308
Of trustee or beneficiary in bequest for charity or religion	1010	Negligence.
Missions.		Of carrier or passenger, see CARRIERS.
Validity of bequest for	1005	As to highways, see HIGHWAYS.
Mistake.		At railroad crossing, see RAILROADS.
Assault with intent to murder or kill by unlawful act under mistake as to identity of person assaulted	172	Creditor's duty to surety with respect to management and collection of collateral	699
Mortgage.		Of manufacturer or dealer for personal injuries caused by defects in automobile	560
Purchase of equity of redemption by municipality as creating indebtedness within debt limit provisions	1105	Care required of one in sudden emergency	43
Right of one advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien where mortgage is taken as security	1209	Liability of vendor of seeds	79
Necessity of giving mortgagee notice of public improvement	558	New trial.
Necessity and character of one's previous interest in land essential to his claim as an equitable mortgagor	521	Effect of repeal of civil statute on pending motion for .	934
Rights of seller of chattel retaining title thereto or a lien thereon as against purchaser on foreclosure of an existing mortgage on the realty to which the chattel was affixed by the owner	123	Nonresident.
		Service of notice in proceedings to revive judgment on nonresident of state	1163
		Notes.
		See BILLS AND NOTES.
		Notice.
		Of attorney's lien	226
		Of distribution in probate proceedings as jurisdictional	369

Necessity of giving mortgagee or other lienor notice of public improvement	558	Conclusiveness of judgment as between plaintiff and one not a party nor privy who voluntarily conducted defense in patent case	960
Service of notice in proceedings to reverse judgment	1162
Occupying claimants.		Pattern.
See IMPROVEMENTS.		Right to protection against use of rival design, shell, or pattern not protected by patent	239
Offer.		Payment.
Unaccepted offer of compromise as tolling statute of limitations	885	Check as payment of debt where drawee pays it to unauthorized person	201
Changing terms of offer of prize after efforts to secure it have begun	183	Peace officer.
Officers.		Liability of bondsmen of, for his acts in respect to property taken from prisoner	873
Bonds of, see BONDS.		Percolating waters.
Conclusiveness of judgment as between plaintiff and one not a party nor privy who voluntarily conducted the defense in an action against officers	965	See WATERS.
Validity of agreement made in consideration of withdrawal of candidacy for office	280	Perennial crops.
Change of salary of deputy or other subordinate, as violation of constitutional provision against change of salary of public officer during term of office	388	Measure of damages for injury to or destruction of	977
Opinion evidence.		Physicians.
See EVIDENCE.		Master's liability for medical attendance engaged by employee who by contract of employment was entitled to such attendance	757
Ornamental trees.		Plats.
Rights of life tenant as to	772	Dedication by, see DEDICATION.
Parol evidence.		Pledge.
See EVIDENCE.		Duty of creditor to surety with respect to management and collection of collateral	699
Parties.		Pledge of receipts or property as creation of indebtedness within debt limit provision	1085
Concluded by judgment, see JUDGMENT.		Poison.
Interpleader of, see INTERPLEADER.		Administering poison with intent to murder or kill person other than the one taking it	174
Who may enforce restrictive covenant or agreement as to use of property	12	Poor.
Joinder of municipality and person responsible for dangerous condition in action for injuries on street or highway	569	Validity of bequest for relief of	1008, 1013
Partition.		Precatory trusts.
Remedy of pretermitted heirs by proceeding for	1147	Creation of trust by precatory words in will	646
Partnership.		For charity or religion	909
Right of one indorsing note for accommodation of firm to recover from firm after payment of note	784	Presiding judges.
Right of one accepting negotiable paper for accommodation of firm to recover from firm after payment of paper	785	Statute reducing number of presiding judges at Criminal trial as ex post facto law	567
When real estate will be considered partnership property	889	Pretermitted heirs.
Pass.		Remedy of	1143
Validity of stipulation in pass limiting carrier's liability	235	Principal and agent.
Patent.		Insurance agents, see INSURANCE.
Right to protection against use of rival design, shell or pattern not protected by patent	250	Creation of trust by recommending employment of agent	685
Forfeiture of license by aiding infringement or attempt to defeat patent	821	Agent's implied power to assent to rescission of contract	91

- Judgment between principal and third person as res judicata in action between latter and agent 37
- Conclusiveness of judgment as between plaintiff and agent of defendants who voluntarily conducted defense 963
- Principal and surety.
- Payment or promise by principal as extending limitation period as to surety 272
- Duty of creditor to surety with respect to management and collection of collateral 699
- Right of surety advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien 1204
- Printed signature.
- Sufficiency of, within statute of frauds 352
- Priority.
- Effect of priority of purchase on right to enforce restrictive covenant or agreement as to use of property 84
- Prisoner.
- Liability of bondsmen of peace officer for acts of latter as to property taken from prisoner 873
- Private cemeteries.
- Public character of charitable bequest for 997
- Prize contest.
- Changing terms of offer of prize after efforts to secure it have begun 183
- Probate.
- See WILLS.
- Process.
- See WRIT AND PROCESS.
- Prohibition.
- Prohibition to prevent numerous unfounded prosecutions for alleged violation of statute or ordinance 448
- Promissory notes.
- See BILLS AND NOTES.
- Proximate cause.
- Of injury to passenger whose train has run past station 266
- Publication.
- Of letters, injunction against 944
- Public contracts.
- See CONTRACTS.
- Public conveyance.
- Scope and construction of provisions for indemnity in case of injury while riding in or on a public conveyance 618
- Public improvements.
- Cost of, as indebtedness within debt limit provision 1072
- Rights of laborers or materialmen in fund retained pursuant to contract for public work to insure payment of their claims 575
- Necessity of giving mortgagee or other lienor notice 558
- Public lands.
- Prohibition of grant as including lease 686
- Public policy.
- Necessity of accordance with, in enforcement of general bequest for charity or religion 998
- Public utilities.
- Heating service as 810
- Punitive damages.
- See DAMAGES.
- Pupils.
- See SCHOOLS.
- Purchase money.
- Lien for, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.
- Transfer of purchase money obligation as affecting reservation of title on conditional sale 71
- Railroads.
- As carriers, see CARRIERS.
- Right of railroad to divert water from nontidal stream without compensation to riparian owner 311
- Liability for injury to stock other than by trains, because of breach of statutory duty to fence 1181
- Duty of traveler approaching railway crossing as to place and direction of observation 135
- Rates.
- Power of legislature to regulate insurance rates 778
- Real property.
- Measure of damages for trespass on, see DAMAGES.
- Of partnership, see PARTNERSHIP.
- Records and recording laws.
- Release of surety upon creditor's failure to record papers 710
- Registration.
- See ELECTIONS.
- Relative.
- Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of relative 539
- Religion.
- Bequest for, see CHARITIES.
- Remainder.
- See WILLS.
- Removal of causes.
- Mandamus to compel removal of case to Federal court or remanding of case to state court 392
- 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Repairs.			Seeds.
Right of life tenant to timber for	765		Liability of vendor of seeds	79
Repeal.			Selection.
Of statutes, see STATUTES.			Of beneficiaries of charity by trustees	1017
Replevin.			Separate property.
Replevin for undivided interest in personal property	267		See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Rescue.			Service.
Care required of one attempting to rescue another in sudden emergency	46		Of process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.
Reservation.			Of notice in proceedings to revive judgment	1162
Transfer of purchase money obligation as affecting reservation of title on conditional sale	71		Set-off.
Restrictions.			Effect of counterclaim in amount in excess of jurisdiction	606
Who may enforce restrictive covenant or agreement as to use of property	12		Shooting.
Right of grantee to enforce restrictive covenants in prior conveyance by his grantor of other parcels	623		Assault with intent to murder or kill by shooting into crowd	173
Revival.			Shrubbbery.
of judgment, see Judgment.			Measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of shrubbbery not valuable for timber or firewood	1115
Revocation.			Sickness.
Of wills, see WILLS.			See ILLNESS.
Riparian owners.			Signals.
See WATERS.			Carrier's liability for injury resulting from negligent or meddlesome act of fellow passenger in giving signals	726
Route.			Signature.
Duty of carrier as to	222		Sufficiency of printed or stamped signature within statute of frauds	352
Runaway.			Smoke.
See HORSES.			Duty of traveler approaching railroad crossing where view near track is obstructed by smoke from another train	144
Salary.			Socialism.
Of officer, see OFFICERS.			Validity of bequest for education in	1007
Sale.			Stamped signature.
Of letters, injunction against	944		Sufficiency of, within statute of frauds	352
Transfer of purchase-money obligation as affecting reservation of title	71		Statute of frauds.
Rights of seller of chattel, retaining title thereto or a lien thereon, as against existing mortgages of the realty to which it is affixed by the owner	119		See CONTRACTS.
Liability of manufacturer or dealer for personal injuries caused by defects in automobile	560		Statutes.
May purchaser recover damages for breach of warranty or fraud as to both articles where one article is substituted for another at his request and both are defective	298		Effect of repeal of civil statute pending motion for new trial or appeal from judgment based thereon	934
Liability of vendor of seeds	79		Repeal of statute excluding evidence discovered or obtained by judicial proceedings against accused	96
Right of rescission on breach of warranty by vendor of seeds	85		Statutory remedy.
Schools.			Exclusiveness of statutory remedy for pretermitted heirs	1145
Schools: duty of public to furnish free transportation to pupils	1110		Street railways.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)			As carriers, see CARRIERS.
			Strike.
			See LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Subordinate.

Change of salary of subordinate as violation of constitutional provision against change of salary of public officer during term of office 388

Subrogation.

Right of one advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien 1203

Sudden emergency.

See EMERGENCY.

Sunday schools.

Validity of bequest for 1004

Surrogate.

Conclusiveness of surrogate's decree on right of personal representative to interplead claimants 986

Right of representative of decedent's estate to interplead claimants as affected by exclusiveness of surrogate's jurisdiction 986

Taxes.

License tax, see LICENSE.

Life tenant's right to timber for payment of 767

Privilege or license to sell intoxicating liquors as subject of taxation 455

To whom are improvements removable by tenant at expiration of term taxable 1166

Taxpayers.

Decree in taxpayer's suits restraining district from performing contract as binding on contractor 388

Telegraphs.

Liability of telegraph company for handling libelous message 861

Threats.

Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of relative 539

Timber.

Timber rights of life tenant 763

Tort.

Waiver of, see ELECTION OF REMEDIES.
Municipal liability for tort as indebtedness within debt limit provisions 1097

Trademark.

Punitive damages for infringement of, where amount of actual damages is not established 533

Conclusiveness of judgment as between plaintiff and one not a party nor privy who voluntarily conducted the defense in trademark case 986

Tradename.

Punitive damages for infringement of, where amount of actual damages is not established 533

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Treasury.

Effect of money in, on creation of indebtedness in excess of debt limit 1065

Trees.

See also TIMBER.

Measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of trees not valuable for timber or firewood 1115

Trespass.

Measure of damages for, see DAMAGES.

Trial.

Right of jurors to act on their own knowledge 790

Effect of verdict of jurors acting on their own knowledge 794

Trustees.

See also TRUSTS.

Certainty as to trustees in general bequest for religion or charity 1010

Trusts.

Charitable trusts, see CHARITIES.

In partnership real estate 899

Right to subrogation to vendor's lien where trust funds are used to pay for land 1206

Creation of trust by precatory words in a will 646

Right of trustee to retain bonus or gratuity received from third person 923

Unaccepted offer.

Of compromise as tolling statute of limitations 885

Unfair competition.

Right to protection against use of rival design, shell or pattern not protected by patent 259

Usury.

Effect of usury on right of accommodation party who has been obliged to pay bill or note to recover from accommodated party 784

Value.

Right of owner of baggage to testify as to its value in action for its loss 588

Vendor and purchaser.

Covenants by vendor, see COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Right of one advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien 1203

May purchaser of property be required to accept deed of third person 1123

Implied power of agent to assent to rescission of land contract 92

Vendor's lien.

See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Village.

Creation of indebtedness within meaning of debt limit provision 1065

Volunteer.

Right of volunteer advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien 1204

Voters.

See ELECTIONS.

Waiver.

By surety of right to complain with respect to creditor's management and collection of collateral 715

Right of city to waive provisions in contract for public work for retention of fund to insure payment of claims of laborers and materialmen 576

Right of one advancing money for purchase price of property to be subrogated to vendor's lien where vendor has waived same 1212

Warning.

Duty to warn those coming from private property of dangerous condition of street 360

Waste.

Impeachment of life tenant for waste in cutting timber 772

Water power.

Right of government to divert water from nontidal stream for power purposes without compensation to riparian owner 308

Waters.

Right of government to divert water from nontidal stream without compensation to riparian owner 307

Right to divert water from nontidal stream for irrigation purposes without compensation to owner 311

Correlative rights in percolating waters 193

Weapons.

See FIREARMS.

Weeds.

Warranty of freedom from noxious weed seeds on sale of seeds 82

Measure of damages where seed sold contains noxious seed 88

Wills.

Charitable bequests, see CHARITIES.

Creation of trusts by, see TRUSTS.

Sufficiency of husband's consent to wife's will 1183

Right to recover value of services rendered in consideration of contract to convey or devise property which is void by the statute of frauds 639

Opinion evidence by nonexpert as to testamentary capacity of another 591

Revocability of mutual wills 1196

Effect of revocation of later will to revive an earlier one 291

Notice of distribution in probate proceedings as jurisdictional 368

Custody of holographic will 842

Bequest to one to divide as he thinks best 400

Remedy of pretermitted heirs 1143

Does contingency of death without issue, children, etc., import their survival of first taker 164

Character of remainder given by will as affected by a direction that children, etc., of a deceased remainderman, shall take their parent's share 728

Withdrawal.

Validity of agreement made in consideration of withdrawal of candidacy for office 289

Witnesses.

Competency to testify as to one's nationality 760

Right of owner of baggage to testify as to its value in an action for its loss 538

Admissibility of contradictory statements by declarant to impeach dying declarations 252

Right of jurors to test credibility of particular witness by their own knowledge 805

Work train.

Liability of railroad company for injury to person wrongfully riding on work train by collusion with train employee 427

Writ and process.

Character of inquiry as to whereabouts of party necessary to sustain constructive service of process 206

Mere display of invalid process without actual force or threats as ground of action for forceable entry and detainer 600

Writ of entry.

Remedy of pretermitted heirs by 1146

GENERAL INDEX

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

- Of highway, see Highways, 4, 6.
- Of homestead, see Homestead.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

- Nominal damage to, for taking fee of street which had been platted by owner, see Damages, 2.
- Rights in Highways, see Highways.
- Limitation of action for injuries to, by change in street grade, see Limitation of Actions, 4.
- Municipal liability for injury to private property by sliding of soft earth thereon in bringing highway to grade, see Master and Servant, 15, 16.

ACCEPTANCE.

- Of offer, see Contracts, 5-7.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

- See Insurance, 11.

ACCOMMODATION PAPER.

- Implied contract by maker to reimburse accommodation indorser, see Contracts, 1.

ACCOUNTING.

- Estoppel to use other remedy by bringing action for, see Election of Remedies, 2.

ACTION OR SUIT.

- Costs in, see Costs and Fees.
- Threat to bring as duress, see Duress, 1.
- As to election of remedies, see Election of Remedies.
- Burden of proving waiver of agreement with parent by employee of minor child relied on as a defense, see Evidence, 8.
- Limitation of, see Limitation of Actions.
- Jurisdiction of, see Courts; Injunction; Mandamus; Specific Performance.
- Parties to, see Parties.
- Action for penalty as a civil one, see Trial, 8.
- Trial of, see Trial.

In an action at law, the right to judgment depends upon the facts as they existed at the time of the commencement of the action, and not at the time of the trial. Fults v. Munro, 37: 600, 95 N. E. 23, 202 N. Y. 34.

ACTORS AND ACTRESSES.

- Assumption of risk by, see Master and Servant, 9.
- Contributory negligence of, see Master and Servant, 10.
- Liability for injury by fellow actor during frolic, see Master and Servant, 12.

ADJOINING OWNERS.

- Duty of lateral support, see Lateral Support.

ADMINISTRATIONS.

- Of decedent's estate, see Executors and Administrators.

ADOPTION.

- Inheritance by adopted children, see Descent and Distribution, 1-3.

AD VALOREM TAX.

- Taxability of privilege of selling intoxicating liquors, see Taxes, 4.

ADVANCES.

- Subrogation of right of one advancing money to pay purchase price of land, see Subrogation, 2, 3.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

- Right to compensation for improvements on land held adversely, see Improvements.

ADVERTISEMENT.

- Presumption of knowledge from advertisement in newspaper, see Evidence, 7.

AFFIDAVITS.

- Before publication of summons, see Judgment, 18.
- For publication of process, see Writ and Process.

AGREEMENTS.

Contracts generally, see Contracts.

ALIENS.

Inheritance from alien cousin, see Descent and Distribution, 5.

Foreign consul's right to administer estate of, see Executors and Administrators, 3.

AMENDMENT.

Of record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1, 2.

Amendment of pleading as affecting limitation of action, see Limitation of Actions, 6.

Amendment of city Charter, see Elections, 1, 2; Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.

Of statute, see Statutes, 4.

AMUSEMENTS.

Negligence in maintaining step at exit of darkened room where moving pictures are shown, see Negligence, 5, 6.

ANIMALS.

Transportation of, see Carriers, 13-15.

Measure of damages for injuries by bite of dog, see Damages, 11.

Sufficiency of evidence of notice of vicious character of dog, see Evidence, 33.

Injury to, on railroad track, see Railroads, 1.

ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

See Husband and Wife, 10.

APARTMENTS.

Landlord's duty to keep heating apparatus in repair, see Landlord and Tenant, 3, 4.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Who may appeal in administration proceedings, see Judgment, 11.

Right of insolvent bank to appeal from order appointing receiver after repeal of statute authorizing, see Statutes, 5.

Record on appeal.

1. A respondent in the appellate court who serves an additional abstract for the purpose of bringing matters to the attention of the court, from which he intentionally omits certain matters which might have been included, will not, after argument, be permitted to file an amendment to such additional abstract, for the purpose of raising new questions which he then thinks necessary to his success. Grigsby v. Wopschall, 37: 206, 127 N. W. 605, 25 S. D. 564.

2. The appellate court will not permit a party to alter the record which he made in the lower court, for the purpose of making contentions before it which are opposed to the record as made. Grigsby v. Wopschall, 37: 206, 127 N. W. 605, 25 S. D. 564. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sufficiency of exceptions.

3. Exceptions to a charge of the court must point out some definite or specific defect. Russell v. Olson, 37: 1217, 133 N. W. 1030, — N. D. —.

Dismissal.

4. Parties to an appeal may stipulate for its dismissal without the aid or intervention of their counsel. Humtuliups Driving Co. v. Burrows, 37: 226, 118 Pac. 827. 65 Wash. 636.

Who may complain.

5. One of several property owners in whose name property is placed by his co-owners for sale, who is sought to be held liable to his co-owners for the broker's commission, because the contract between the parties was illegal, has a right to be heard on appeal from a decree in his favor, although a trustee in bankruptcy was appointed for him before the decree was entered, where he is made a party to the appeal, and his trustee did not become a party to the proceedings or seek a hearing. Heckscher v. Blanton, 37: 923, 69 S. E. 1045, 111 Va. 648.

What reviewable generally.

6. In an appeal from a judgment quieting title to lands, where there was sufficient evidence to sustain a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, finding that when the action was brought he was in the peaceable, quiet possession of the real estate, claiming title, the first inquiry must necessarily be as to what title the defendant has; for, if he have no title, he cannot question that of the plaintiff. Cramer v. McCann, 37: 108, 112 Pac. 832, 83 Kan. 719.

Necessity for motion for new trial below.

7. Although by statute a new trial is necessary to preserve matters of fact for consideration of the appellate court, errors of law occurring at the trial by way of admitting testimony properly objected to, or otherwise with exceptions saved, and which are brought up to the record through a statement of the case, will be considered by the court without a motion for a new trial. Russell v. Olson, 37: 1217, 133 N. W. 1030, — N. D. —.

Grounds for reversal.

8. The erroneous admission of evidence is not reversible error if it is withdrawn by the court from the consideration of the jury. American Sales Book Co. v. Whitaker, 37: 91, 140 S. W. 132, — Ark. —.

9. It is not error to refuse to permit a witness who has identified accused as one who committed a homicide to be asked on cross-examination if he was not present at the inquest, and if it was not true that no testimony about who did the shooting could be secured there, where it does not appear that the question called for more than cumulative evidence that he had made no disclosure at the inquest as to who did the deed. Brown v. State, 37: 345, 55 So. 961. — Miss. —.

10. Permitting a person injured by another's negligence to state his earning capacity so indefinitely as to leave it uncertain whether it represents the value of his services or partly the profits of his business is not reversible error if there is independent evidence as to the value of his services and the jury are instructed to allow nothing for loss or profit. Walsh v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 37: 1137, 97 N. E. 408, 204 N. Y. 58.

11. It is not prejudicial error to refuse to strike out unresponsive evidence, if it subsequently comes in, in due course, from other witnesses. Atwood v. Atwood, 37: 591, 79 Atl. 59, 84 Conn. 169.

12. Where a statute provides that no judgment shall be reversed unless it shall appear that the error complained of affected the substantial rights of the complaining party, the mere possibility that the court made a wrong statement of facts in instructing the jury does not require a reversal. Solberg v. Robbins Lumber Co. 37: 790, 133 N. W. 28, 147 Wis. 259.

13. A judgment for damages should not be reversed for error in an instruction as to the measure of damages, if the amount which the verdict was increased by the error is easily ascertained, and a remittitur is filed for that amount. Fuhrman v. Interior Warehouse Co. 37: 89, 116 Pac. 66, 64 Wash. 159.

14. A judgment which is right on the law and facts will not be reversed for intervening errors of procedure. Logansport v. Jordan, 37: 1036, 85 N. E. 959, 171 Ind. 121.

Judgment.

15. Judgment should not be rendered for appellant upon reversal of a decision in defendant's favor in an action to recover the premiums alleged to be due on an insurance policy, if the findings as made would not support it. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fresno Flume & Irrig. Co. 37: 322, 119 Pac. 646, — Cal. —.

16. If issues not presented by the pleadings were fully tried, the appellate court may remand the cause with permission to amend the pleadings to meet the issues without awarding a new trial. Lemay v. Springfield Street R. Co. 37: 43, 96 N. E. 79, 210 Mass. 63.

17. The court of appeals will not participate in the division of a fund which had been awarded for opening a street, where none of the claimants are shown to be entitled to more than nominal damages. Re New York, 27: 281, 89 N. E. 829, 196 N. Y. 286.

APPLIANCES.

Master's duty as to, see Master and Servant, 8.

APPLICATION.

Of payments, see Payment, 3.

APPOINTMENT.

Of personal representative, see Executors and Administrators.
37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ARBITRATION.

Validity of agreement for, see Contracts, 17.

Court's power to set aside award, see Courts, 1.

ARCHITECTS.

Materiality of architect's good or bad faith in failing to pass on plans and drawings for changes in work, see Contracts, 21.

ARREST.

Release from an appeal, see Bail and Recognizance.

Sheriff's liability for injury by deputy in making arrest, see Bonds.

ARTIFICIAL CHANNEL.

Diverting water from river to, for improvement of navigation, see Waters, 4.

ASSIGNMENT.

Of judgment as freeing it from attorney's lien, see Attorneys, 3.

Assignee's rights under covenant in deed, see Covenants and Conditions, 5.

A provision in a contract for public work entitling the municipality to retain a certain percentage of the contract price until claims of laborers and materialmen, of which it is given notice, have been paid, does not prevent assignment by the contractor after completion of the work, of the right to such balance prior to the filing of notice of laborers' and materialmen's claims, which shall take precedence of the latter in the distribution of the fund. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Newark (N. J. Err. & App.) 37: 575, 81 Atl. 756, — N. J. —.

ASSUMPSIT.

One who voluntarily and with full knowledge of absence of indebtedness gives another his note cannot compel him to refund what the maker is compelled to pay thereon to a bona fide holder for value, without notice. Dickinson v. Carroll, 37: 286, 130 N. W. 829, 21 N. D. 271.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

By volunteer taking passage on freight train, see Carriers, 4.

By employee, see Master and Servant, 9.

ATTACHMENT.

Of exempt property subject to payment of particular debt, see Election of Remedies, 1.

Exemption of homestead from, see Homestead.

No contract to pay for animals negligently driven in the way of a railroad train and killed can be implied so as to bring a demand for compensation within a statute allowing attachments in case of breach of contract, express or implied.

Kyle v. Chester, 37: 230, 113 Pac. 749, 42 Mont. 522.

ATTORNEYS.

Stipulation for dismissing appeal without aid of counsel, see Appeal and Error, 4.

1. An attorney in whose name his client has placed property for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the client cannot refuse to comply with his agreement to return it, on the theory that the parties being in pari delicto, equity will leave them where it finds them. Lindsley v. Caldwell, 37: 161, 137 S. W. 983, 234 Mo. 498. Compensation; lien.

As to attorneys' fees generally, see Attorneys' Fees.

Injunction against enforcement of lien against judgment, see Injunction, 3.

Interpleader to determine respective rights of judgment creditor and attorney claiming lien on judgment, see Interpleader.

2. An attorney in whose name stock is placed under the express agreement that he would indorse and turn it over to his client cannot hold it to compel a settlement of his claim against the client; at least when, to his knowledge, the stock belongs to a stranger. Lindsley v. Caldwell, 37: 161, 137 S. W. 983, 234 Mo. 498.

3. Under a statute giving an attorney a lien on the judgment from the time of filing notice thereof, an assignment of the judgment in good faith and without collusion, before the lien is filed, frees the judgment from liability to the lien. Humpulips Driving Co. v. Burrows, 37: 226, 118 Pac. 827, 65 Wash. 636.

ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Rights to solicitor's fees as costs in partition suit, see Costs and Fees, 1.

AUTHORITY.

Of agent, see Principal and Agent.

AUTOMOBILES.

Admissibility of chauffeur's statements at time of accident, see Evidence, 23.

Double indemnity under policy to person injured in taxicab, see Insurance 11.

Validity of excise tax on, see License, 1, 3.

Owner's liability for injury to third person by chauffeur, see Master and Servant, 14.

Power of Municipality to forbid children to operate, see Municipal Corporations, 5.

Liability of manufacturer of, for injury due to defects in, see Negligence, 1-4.

Contributory negligence of driver of, at railroad crossing, see Railroads, 3. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

AWARD.

Court's power to set aside award of board, see Courts, 1.

BAD FAITH.

Presumption and burden of proof as to bad faith of purchaser of note, see Evidence, 4, 5.

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

1. A convict is not within the operation of a constitutional provision that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses, where the proof is evident or the presumption great. Re Schriber, 37: 693, 114 Pac. 29, 19 Idaho, 531.

2. Where a defendant who has been convicted and sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment appeals from such judgment, and applies to the trial judge for admission to bail, such application is addressed to the sound legal discretion of such judge or court, and, unless it clearly appears that such discretion has been abused, the action of the trial judge or court will not be disturbed or interfered with by the supreme court on application for a writ of habeas corpus. Re Schriber, 37: 693, 114 Pac. 29, 19 Idaho, 531.

BALLOTS.

See Elections, 1-3.

BANKRUPTCY.

Who may appeal in bankruptcy proceeding, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Lien of judgment against bankrupt, see Judgment, 14, 15.

A discharge of a bankrupt after the entry and docketing of a judgment which is valid, against exempt property, does not annul or extinguish it, except so far as it imposes a personal liability on the bankrupt. Gregory Co. v. Cale, 37: 156, 133 N. W. 75, 115 Minn. 508.

BANKS.

Bank's liability to payee for amount of check charged to drawer's account, see Checks.

Police power to regulate business of, see Constitutional Law, 17.

Right of bank undertaking to deliver money to carrier to benefit of judgment in favor of principal against carrier, see Judgment, 2.

Agent's authority to connive at forging of indorsement on draft to be used for satisfying judgment, see Principal and Agent, 3.

Effect of repealing statute authorizing liquidation of insolvent bank, see Statutes, 5, 6.

CHARTERS.

1. The state may refuse a bank charter if, upon examination, no public necessity is found for its existence in the community in which it is sought to be established. Schaake v. Dolley, 37: 877, 118 Pac. 80, 85 Kan. 598.

2. In a state where bank charters are to be granted only when necessary, if equally meritorious applications for charters for several banks in the same community are pending before the charter board at the same time, and the charter board determines against the necessity for more than one bank, the application first presented should be granted. Schaake v. Dolley, 37: 877, 118 Pac. 80, 85 Kan. 598. Trusts in deposit.

3. A bank which issues to its customer a certificate of deposit in his favor as guardian, the funds for which he secures from individual sources and from a loan by it on collateral furnished by him individually which certificate he needs to make good a defalcation in his guardian's account, in order to secure a surety on his guardian's bond, is charged with notice that he thereby devotes the funds to the use of his ward, and will be liable to the estate in case it accepts a surrender of the certificate, returns the funds represented by it to their original sources, and surrenders the collateral, although it had no notice of the defalcation and acted in good faith in the transaction. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Adoue, 37: 409, 137 S. W. 648, — Tex. —. Duty to pay checks.

Estoppel to decline to honor check, see Estoppel, 3.

4. A bank cannot refuse to pay a check upon itself, because of delay in presenting it, if no prejudice to its rights has resulted therefrom. Robinson v. Pikeville, 37: 1186, 142 S. W. 1065, 146 Ky. 538.

5. A bank which honors the check of a customer upon a deposit account based upon a draft upon which he had forged an indorsement, by placing the check to the credit of an innocent stranger, and authorizing him to check against such credit, cannot refuse, because of the original fraud, to honor his check to the injury of an innocent payee. Robinson v. Pikeville, 37: 1186, 142 S. W. 1065, 146 Ky. 538.

BAR.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 1-13.
Of limitations, see Limitation of Actions.

BARRIERS.

Necessity for putting up, on discontinuing highway, see Highways, 4, 6.

BENEFICIARIES.

Of policy, see Insurance.
In trust, see Trusts.
In will, see Wills.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Insurance by, see Insurance.

BEQUESTS.

See Wills.

BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 9, 10.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

BETTERMENTS.

See Improvements.

BILLBOARDS.

Municipal regulation of, see Municipal Corporations, 6.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Implied contract by maker to reimburse accommodation indorser, see Contracts, 1.

Presumption and burden of proof as to good faith of purchaser, see Evidence, 4, 5.

Right of maker to recover from payee amount paid bona fide purchaser, see Assumpsit.

Effect of indorsing purchase money note as collateral on conditional sale contract, see Sale, 3.

Instructing jury as to right to find against bona fides of purchaser of note, see Trial, 14.

Agent's authority to indorse, see Principal and Agent, 1.

1. Those who execute negotiable paper and set it afloat are chargeable with a much higher degree of diligence and caution than is chargeable to those who purchase such paper in due and regular course of business. Vaughn v. Johnson, 37: 816, 119 Pac. 879, 20 Idaho, 669.

Consideration.

2. A promissory note given by a son to his widowed mother for money paid by her for his board while at college and his college education, after such expenditure, without promise or expectation of repayment on the part of either at the time of such expenditure, wants legal consideration, and is not enforceable. Gooch v. Allen, 37: 930, 73 S. E. 56, — W. Va.—.

Payment.

3. The payment by the drawee of a draft with bill of lading attached, drawn payable to the order of a bank, upon a forged indorsement, does not satisfy the account. O. J. Lewis Mercantile Co. v. Harris, 37: 544, 140 S. W. 981, — Ark. —. Duty as to inquiry.

4. The purchaser of negotiable paper in due course, and before maturity, is under no duty to make inquiry as to the title to such paper, fair and regular on its face, nor is he under any duty to inquire into the consideration given for the note or of the transaction out of which it arose. He is only chargeable with facts which actually come to his knowledge; that is, actual knowledge of a defect in the title, want of consideration, or such facts as would constitute a defense to the note as between the maker and original payee, or actual knowledge of such facts and circumstances as would lead an honest and fair business man to make further inquiry, and which inquiry, if made, would lead to the discovery of the fraud, defect, and defenses. Vaughn v. Johnson, 37: 816, 119 Pac. 879, 20 Idaho, 669.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

See Bills and Notes.

BILLS OF LADING.

Effect of paying draft with bill of lading attached on forged indorsement, see Bills and Notes, 3.

BLANK.

Right of innocent purchaser as against one executing deed in blank, see Records and Recording Laws.

BLANKET BALLOT.

Discrimination in, see Elections, 3.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Right of maker to recover from payee amount paid bona fide purchaser, see Assumpsit.

Bank's right to dishonor check in hands of, see Banks, 5.

Of negotiable paper, see Bills and Notes, 4.

Bank's estoppel to claim right to refuse to pay check, see Estoppel, 3.

Rights of innocent purchaser of land on faith of record as against one intrusting to third person deed executed with blank for grantee's name, see Records and Recording Laws.

Instructing jury as to right to find against bona fides of purchaser of note, see Trial, 14.

BONDHOLDERS.

Right to bid at foreclosure sale, see Mortgage, 1.

BONDS.

Interruption of limitation of action on, see Limitation of Actions, 7, 8.

What must be pleaded in action on official bond of sheriff, see Pleading, 3.

Release of surety on, see Principal and Surety.

The bond of a sheriff conditioned that he shall faithfully perform and execute the duties of his office is not liable for an injury inflicted upon a bystander by the discharge of a revolver negligently dropped by his deputy after it had been taken from a prisoner, if the prisoner was not lawfully arrested or it was not necessary to relieve him of the revolver, so as to make it part of the official duty of the deputy to have possession of the weapon. People use of Tamplin v. Beach, 37: 873, 113 Pac. 513, 49 Colo. 516.

BONUS.

Compelling one joint owner to account to co-owners for bonus paid him, see Trusts, 5.

BOUNDARIES.

A boundary in a state patent of land said to lie on the bank of a river, beginning 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) at a tree on the east shore of the river, thence around the land to the river, and then "up and along the same" to the place of beginning, does not prevent the title from extending to the thread of the stream. Fulton Light, Heat, & Power Co. v. State, 37: 307, 94 N. E. 199, 200 N. Y. 400.

BRAKE.

Carrier's liability for injury due to fellow passenger releasing set brake, see Carriers, 5.

BRIDGES.

Time when county becomes indebted for, see Counties, 3.

Validity of adoption of charter amendment authorizing building of, see Municipal Corporations, 1.

Injury to animal by falling through railroad bridge, see Railroads, 1.

As obstruction of navigation, see Waters, 5, 6.

BROKERS.

Estoppel to sue brokers for commission retained, see Election of Remedies, 2.

Compelling one joint owner to account to co-owners for bonus paid him by brokers effecting sale, see Trusts, 5.

BUILDING CONTRACTORS.

Assignability of balance due under contract for public work, see Assignment.

Materiality of architect's good or bad faith in failing to pass on plans and drawings for changes in work, see Contracts, 21.

Liquidated damages for delay in completing, see Damages, 7-9.

BUILDINGS.

Restrictive covenants as to, see Covenants and Conditions.

To whom listed for taxation, see Taxes, 7.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See Evidence, 1-8.

BURIAL LOT.

Effect of including cost of maintaining in gift for establishing hospital, see Charities, 3.

BYSTANDER.

Sheriff's liability for injury to bystander by discharge of revolver dropped by deputy, see Bonds.

Homicide in killing, while shooting at another, see Homicide.

CANCELATION.

Of order for goods, see Contracts, 7.

Of license to patent, see Patents.

CARRIERS.

- I. Carriers of passengers.
- II. Carriers of freight.

I. Carriers of passengers.

Nominal damages for carrying passenger beyond station, see Damages, 1.
 Carrying passenger beyond station as proximate cause of illness, see Proximate Cause, 1.
 Testimony by passenger as to value of baggage lost, see Evidence, 20.
 Duty towards employee of mine riding on train to and from work, see Master and Servant, 13.
 Relief allowable under pleading, see Pleading, 1.
 Question for juror as to negligence of carrier, see Trial, 11.

1. To bind a railroad company by a custom of conductors to carry persons on their trains in consideration of the rendition of services, it must be shown to have been known by the officers who conduct the affairs of the company, or to have been so general and long continued that they must be presumed to have had notice of it. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jones, 37: 418, 132 S. W. 630, 96 Ark. 558.

Power of agents.

See also infra, 9.

2. The agent who sells a ticket which, by its terms, must be used on the day of sale or be void, has no implied authority to bind the carrier by agreeing, after it has expired, that it may be used on a subsequent day. Pennington v. Illinois C. R. Co. 37: 983, 97 N. E. 289, 252 Ill. 584.

Who are passengers.

3. Employees in a mine who are gratuitously carried by the mine owner between their homes and place of work on a railroad which he operates as a private road to transport coal and supplies between the mine, his manufacturing establishment, and shipping terminals, are, while so in process of transportation, employees, and not passengers; and the employer is therefore not liable for their injury through the negligence of other employees in failing to set derailing devices, and in putting standing cars in motion so that they run down an incline and collide with the miners' train. Dayton Coal & Iron Co. v. Dodd, 37: 456, 188 Fed. 507, 110 C. C. A. 395.

4. One taking passage upon a freight train under an agreement with the conductor to render services for his transportation is a mere volunteer, and assumes the risk of injury incident to the undertaking. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jones, 37: 418, 132 S. W. 630, 96 Ark. 558.

Injury by other passenger.

5. A street car company is not liable for injury to a passenger standing in the vestibule, by the act of a fellow passenger in releasing, without request from or notice to the company, a set brake, and letting the handle whirl around, where there is nothing to show that it ought to have anticipated that passengers would meddle with its machinery. Sure v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 37: 724, 133 N. W. 1098, 148 Wis. 1.

Measure of care required; negligence generally.

6. A railroad company which, for purposes of its own, runs a passenger train beyond a station where passengers are to alight, into its yards, is bound to inform them of its intention to return and give them an opportunity to alight at the station, and is liable for all damages proximately caused to them by its failure so to do. Natchez, C. & M. R. Co. v. Lambert, 37: 264, 54 So. 836, — Miss. —.

7. The leaving open of a switch leading to a side track at a time when a passenger train may be expected momentarily, without ascertaining the location of the train, is gross negligence, where the statute defines such negligence to be the want of slight care and diligence. Walther v. Southern Pacific Co. 37: 235, 116 Pac. 51, 159 Cal. 769.

Ejection of passenger.

8. A carrier is not liable in tort for expelling from its train a passenger who presents for passage, after the day of its issuance, a ticket limited because of reduced fare, to such date, although the agent who sells it assures him that it is good, when he is about to board the train. Pennington v. Illinois C. R. Co. 37: 983, 97 N. E. 289, 252 Ill. 584.

Contributory negligence of passenger.

Admissibility of evidence as to custom of passengers to change cars while train is moving, see Evidence, 28.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 11.

9. The act of crossing from one car platform to another on a moving train is not per se negligence, in the absence of a rule or notice warning the passengers from such act. Auld v. Southern R. Co. 37: 518, 71 S. E. 426, 136 Ga. 266.

Tickets; conditions; fares.

Authority of ticket agent as to, see supra, 2.

Ejection of passenger presenting expired ticket, see supra, 9.

Limitation of liability as to passenger riding free, see infra, 11.

10. That the date of purchase of a ticket is not plainly stamped upon it does not affect a provision that it is good only on date of sale, and the conductor may refuse to honor it on a future day if it carries intelligence to him that it has expired. Pennington v. Illinois C. R. Co. 37: 983, 97 N. E. 289, 252 Ill. 584.

Limitation of liability.

11. A statute providing that a common carrier cannot be exonerated by an agreement made in anticipation thereof, from liability for gross negligence, applies in favor of passengers who are carried without consideration. Walther v. Southern Pacific Co. 37: 235, 116 Pac. 51, 159 Cal. 769.

II. Carriers of freight.

Conductor's implied authority to carry person in consideration of service in handling freight, see Master and Servant, 2.

12. An ocean carrier is not liable for injury to freight due to the steamer to which the property is delivered for transportation following its usual route to the port of destination, although there is a short route, by following which the injury might have been prevented. H. S. Emerson Co. v. Reunis, 37: 222, 118 Pac. 631, 65 Wash. 513.

Carriers of live stock.

13. A carrier which accepts stock for transportation, knowing that its facilities are so overloaded that loss will result to the shipper, is liable for the loss. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 37: 546, 142 S. W. 168, — Ark. —.

14. A carrier of live stock is not absolved from liability for loss due to its refusal to unload when necessary, by the fact that the owner, when informed of that fact, consented that the stock might be immediately forwarded from the point where unloading became necessary. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 37: 546, 142 S. W. 168, — Ark. —.

15. Where a carrier has established the custom to unload stock at a particular place for their proper care and necessary preservation, a shipper, in delivering stock to the carrier without notice of change of custom, may rely on its being observed, and the carrier will be liable for loss resulting from its breach. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 37: 546, 142 S. W. 168, — Ark. —.

CERTAINTY.

Of charitable bequest, see Charities, 5, 6.

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT.

Bank's notice of ward's rights in, see Banks, 3.

CHANNEL

Diverting water from river to artificial channel for improvement of navigation, see Waters, 4.

CHARITIES.

1. A court will not refuse to sustain a charitable trust because the beneficiaries are not confined to residents of the state. Re Robinson, 37: 1023, 96 N. E. 925, 203 N. Y. 380.

What are charities.

Construction of will attempting to create charity, see Wills, 6.

2. Providing a fund for the specific education of the poor does not destroy the charitable nature of the gift. Re Robinson, 37: 1023, 96 N. E. 925, 203 N. Y. 380.

3. The validity of a bequest for the establishment and maintenance of a hospital is not affected by the fact that the fund is charged with the cost of maintaining the burial lot of the donor, and with a small monthly payment to his relatives for life. Buchanan v. Kennard, 37: 993, 136 S. W. 415, 234 Mo. 117.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

4. A devise to trustees and their successors forever of property to establish and maintain a hospital for sick and injured persons without distinction of creed, under the auspices of a particular religious denomination or its successors, creates a valid public charity under the statute of Elizabeth, although the benefit is not limited to poor persons. Buchanan v. Kennard, 37: 993, 136 S. W. 415, 234 Mo. 117.

Definiteness; certainty.

5. The words, "and such other financial aid" to persons in need as may seem fitting and proper, in a will establishing a trust to provide shelter, necessities of life, education, and such other financial aid, etc., with preference for elderly and disabled Christian persons of good moral character, members of Evangelical churches, will be construed as requiring aid of the same general character as the purposes specified, so as to come within the statute providing that no gift for religious, educational, charitable, or beneficent purposes shall be invalid by reason of the indefiniteness and uncertainty of the beneficiaries. Re Robinson, 37: 1023, 96 N. E. 925, 203 N. Y. 380.

6. Provision for the selection of the objects of a public charity is sufficiently definite where the charity is the construction and maintenance of a hospital for sick and injured persons, without distinction of creed, under the auspices of a particular religious denomination, and "under such rules and regulations as the trustees and their successors" shall, from time to time, establish and maintain. Buchanan v. Kennard, 37: 993, 136 S. W. 415, 234 Mo. 117.

Cy près doctrine.

7. In case, after a devise of a fund to an academy in trust to pay the tuition of worthy poor boys of a certain town, the academy is by law made a free high school for such town, the fund may be applied in establishing scholarships for such boys, rather than in relieving the tax payers of the town of the burden of maintaining such school, or in aiding the academy in paying its general expenses. Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist. 37: 646, 75 Atl. 100, 75 N. H. 408.

CHARTER.

Of bank, see Banks, 1, 2.

Of municipality, see Elections, 1, 2; Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.

CHATTELS.

Sale of, see Sale.

CHAUFFEUR.

Admissibility of statements by, at time of accident, see Evidence, 23.

Liability of owner of automobile for injury to third person by chauffeur, see Master and Servant, 14.

CHECKS.

Bank's duty to pay, see Banks, 4, 5.
 Estoppel of bank to deny right to pay check to bona fide purchaser, see Estoppel, 3.

Payment by, see Payment, 1, 2.

Bank's authority to refuse to cash check where bank credit was obtained by forged indorsement through connivance of agent, see Principal and Agent, 3.

A bank paying a check upon the unauthorized indorsement of the payee, and charging the amount thereof to the drawer's account, becomes liable to the payee for the amount of such check, unless the conduct of the payee excuses such payment, or prevents him from asserting such liability. McFadden v. Follrath, 37: 201, 130 N. W. 542, 114 Minn. 85.

CHILDREN.

See also Infants.

Effect of unexplained omission of children from will, see Wills, 7.

CHOICE.

Of remedies, see Election of Remedies.

CIGARS.

Placing inferior cigars in trade mark boxes as legal malice, see Damages, 4.

CITIZENS.

Abridging privileges and immunities of, see Constitutional Law, 7-11.

CITY AUDITOR.

Capacity in which proposal for charter amendment is filed with, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

CLAIMS.

Effect of allowing claim for services of detective, see Counties, 1.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

See Constitutional Law, 7-11.

CLEARING LAND.

By life tenant as waste, see Life Tenants, 2.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

Questions reviewable on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Ground for nonsuit in action to remove, see Trial, 13.

COAL LANDS.

As separate or community property, see Husband and Wife, 8.

CODEBTORS.

Codebtor's right to enforce contribution for debt paid by him though deed of trust securing same is barred by laches, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

Subrogation of, on payment of debt, see Subrogation, 1.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CODICIL.

See Wills, 4.

COERCION.

Coerciveness of workmen's compensation act, see Constitutional Law, 16.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On appointment of administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 11-13.

COLLATERAL SECURITY.

See Pledge.

COLOR OF TITLE.

Right to claim compensation for improvements on land held under, see Improvements.

COMMERCE.

1. Paying the express charges and signing the receipt book for intoxicating liquors imported from another state do not constitute a constructive delivery, so as to subject them to seizure under the state law, in view of the Wilson act, where the consignee stated that he was uncertain whether or not the liquors were his, and requested the carrier, which had not tendered them to him, to hold them until he ascertained if they were, and only seven hours elapsed between that time and the attempted seizure. State v. Parshley, 37: 444, 81 Atl. 484, — Me. —.

Taxation of subjects of commerce.

Determination on habeas corpus as to whether license tax on peddlers is interference with interstate commerce, see Habeas Corpus.

2. The state has a right to impose a tax upon property within its borders, regardless of the fact that such property may be employed by its owners in interstate commerce. State v. United States Exp. Co. 37: 1127, 131 N. W. 489, 114 Minn. 346.

3. The proportion of gross earnings of an express company for shipments from one point to another within the state, which represents the mileage in the state, is subject to state taxation, although for a portion of the route, the carrying road runs through another state. State v. United States Exp. Co. 37: 1127, 131 N. W. 489, 114 Minn. 346.

COMMISSION.

Review by court of award by commission under workmen's compensation act, see Constitutional Law, 4.

Court's power to test jurisdiction of, see Courts, 1.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

See Husband and Wife, 3-8.

COMPETENCY.

- As juror of officer in charge of other jury, see Jury, 2.
- Of witness, see Witnesses.

COMPOUNDING CRIME.

- Validity of deed by parents to avoid prosecution of child, see Contracts, 20.

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

- Attorney's power to hold stock to compel settlement of claim against client, see Attorneys, 2.
- Settlement of action against one tort joint feisor as bar to action against other, see Joint Creditors and Debtors.
- As affecting limitation of actions, see Limitation of Actions, 9.

CONCEALMENT.

- By manufacturer of defects in automobile, see Negligence, 3.

CONCLUSIONS.

- Opinion evidence as to, see Evidence, 17-20.
- Sufficiency of allegation of, see Pleading, 3.

CONCURRENT REMEDIES.

- See Election of Remedies.

CONDEMNATION.

- Of property, see Eminent Domain.

CONDITIONAL PAYMENT.

- By giving check, see Payment, 1.

CONDITIONAL SALES.

- See Sale, 3.

CONDUCTORS.

- Custom of, see Carriers, 1.

CONFESSION.

- Admissibility of, in evidence, see Evidence, 21.
- Admissibility of extra judicial confession by stranger, see Evidence, 25.

CONSENT.

- By shipper to forwarding of livestock without unloading, see Carriers, 14.
- Constitutionality of statute authorizing action without notice by administrative board acting by consent, see Constitutional Law, 13.
- Husband's consent to wife's execution of will, see Contracts, 2, 19.

CONSIDERATION.

- For note, see Bills and Notes, 2.
- Of contract, see Contracts, 2-4.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

- Punishment of insurance agent giving special rates, see Criminal Law.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

- As to voters and elections generally, see Elections.

- Taking of property for public use, see Eminent Domain.

- Construction of constitutional provision against private ownership of tide lands, see Waters, 2, 3.

- Presumption as to construction of constitutional provision adopted from other state, see Evidence, 1.

- Interference with constitutional right to jury trial, see Jury, 1.

- Who may question validity of statute, see Statutes, 1.

- Title of statutes, see Statutes, 2.

- Matters as to amending or repealing statute, see Statutes, 4-6.

- Matters as to taxes generally, see Taxes.

Ex post facto laws.

1. A statute passed after the commission of a crime, reducing the number of judges who shall preside at the trial, is not invalid as an ex post facto law. Com. v. Phelps, 37: 567, 96 N. E. 349, 210 Mass. 78.

2. The repeal, after the commission of an alleged forgery, of a statute which prevents the use against accused of any discovery or evidence obtained from him by means of any judicial proceeding, so as to permit the use against him of the paper alleged to have been forged, which was originally exhibited by him in an equity suit, and of his testimony in that suit, is ex post facto and invalid, where the crime could not have been established without the aid of the record in the other suit. Frisby v. United States, 37: 96, — App. D. C. —.
- Delegation of power.

- Power of courts to pass on validity of statutes, see Courts, 2-4.

- See also infra, 6, 21.

3. An employees' compensation act is not invalid because it gives the employers the right to determine whether or not minors rightfully employed by them shall have the benefit of the act, in the same way that they determine the matter for adult employees. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

Separation of powers.

- Judicial power to decide as to legislative acts, see Courts, 2-4.

4. Providing for the submission to an administrative board of the questions of fact in case of a dispute as to the amount to be awarded an injured employee under a workmen's compensation act, which has power to award the amount due as provided by the statute which award, under certain circumstances, may be reviewed by the courts, does not, where the jurisdiction of the commission depends on the consent of parties, and the question of consent is subject to review by the courts, render the commission a court, and the statute void on the theory that the legislature has no constitutional power to create courts. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

Local self-government; initiative and referendum.

5. The legislature may enact general laws governing municipal corporations under constitutional provisions that corporations may be formed under general laws, and that the legislative assembly shall not enact, amend, or repeal any charter or act of incorporation for any municipality, city, or town. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 112 Pac. 402, 57 Or. 454.

6. The people may confer upon the voters of a municipal corporation the right to enact local laws which cannot be affected by special acts of the legislature, so long as the legislature is not prevented from controlling them by general enactments. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 112 Pac. 402, 57 Or. 454.

Equal protection and privileges.

Discrimination in ballot, see Elections, 3.

Uniformity and equality as to license, see License, 1, 2.

Special legislation, see Statutes, 3.

Equality and uniformity of taxation, see Taxes, 1, 2.

7. A statute is not invalid for unconstitutional discrimination, which abolishes the doctrines of fellow service and assumption of risk in actions to hold employers liable for negligent injuries to their employees, except in cases of persons employing less than four servants. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

8. A statute is not invalid as conferring unequal privileges and immunities, which abolishes the doctrines of assumption of risk and fellow service in actions to hold employers liable for personal injuries to their servants, in cases where employers refuse to take advantage of the act, but preserves them intact to those who come under the law. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

9. An employees' indemnity act is not invalid as class legislation because the fund collected by assessments upon certain hazardous business is to be expended in the relief of employees of such business, instead of being applied to the relief of workmen generally, or to the use of the state at large. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37: 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 65 Wash. 156.

10. That an employees' indemnity act made applicable only to hazardous occupations entitled to its benefit workmen injured when outside the line of their duties, or in a branch of the business not peculiarly hazardous, does not render the entire act invalid as class legislation, if provision is made for an elimination from the act of parts which may be found to be invalid, without affecting the remainder. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37: 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 65 Wash. 156.

11. A statute making it unlawful to keep open, or run or permit to be run, any theaters, show, moving picture show, or theatrical performance upon Sunday, is not invalid as special legislation. State ex rel. Temple v. Barnes, 37: 114, 132 N. W. 215, — N. D. —.

Due process of law.

Power of legislature to provide constructive service of notice to revive lien of judgment, see Judgment, 16.

See also Taxes, 1, 5.

12. A statute creating an employees' indemnity fund by assessments upon employers in hazardous callings, being within the police power, is not invalid under the due process of law clauses of the Constitutions, as interfering with freedom of contract, creating liability without fault, or taking the property of one employer to pay the obligations of another. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37: 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 65 Wash. 156.

13. Permitting an administrative board which acts only by consent of the parties interested, to take testimony without notice to either party, and to give notices by mail, does not deprive the parties of due process of law. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

14. Failure to provide for notice to the mortgagee of the amount of a special assessment on the mortgaged property, and the time for hearing objections thereto, does not render the statute invalid as to him, as depriving him of property without due process of law, although enforcement of the assessment may impair his lien. Fitchpatrick v. Botheras, 37: 558, 130 N. W. 163, 150 Iowa, 376.

15. The legislature may within reasonable bounds, where probate proceedings are in rem determine what shall constitute sufficient notice of the commencement of proceedings for the settlement of an estate, to give the court jurisdiction and to apprise those interested in the estate that the court will administer and ultimately distribute the property among the persons interested, without infringing the constitutional requirements of due process of law. Barrette v. Whitney, 37: 368, 106 Pac. 522, 36 Utah, 574.

16. A section of the workmen's compensation act, abolishing the defenses of assumption of risk and fellow service in actions to hold employers liable for personal injuries to servants, in cases where the provisions of the act are not accepted, cannot be said to make the act coercive upon every employer or employee, so as to raise the question of the constitutionality of such abolition, on the theory that the employer will be compelled to accept the statute to escape such defenses, and the employee will be compelled to do so to avoid dismissal from service. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

Police power.

See also supra, 12.

17. The business of banking is so intimately related to the public welfare that it properly falls within the scope of the police power of the state, exercisable by the legislature. Schaake v. Dolley, 37: 877, 118 Pac. 80, 85 Kan. 598.

18. The police power extends to compelling life insurance companies to maintain uniform rates among the same classes of applicants, although the effect is to stifle competition between different companies for business. People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37: 778, 96 N. E. 1049, 252 Ill. 398.
Freedom of worship.

19. Prohibition of labor on Sunday does not violate the constitutional right to religious freedom, where the Constitution provides that liberty of conscience shall not be construed to justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state. State ex rel. Temple v. Barnes, 37: 114, 132 N. W. 215, — N. D. —.

Impairing obligation of contracts.

Effect of repeal of statute that rents, profits and proceeds of separate property during marriage shall be common property, see Husband and Wife, 4.

20. No contract right is impaired by making applicable to existing contracts which are to terminate in the future, an employees' indemnity act which gives the employees an option to take advantage of it, or to stand on their common-law right, under the contract, to maintain an action to redress an injury received in the employment. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

Guaranty of republican form of government.

21. A republican form of government is not destroyed by taking from the legislature and committing directly to the people the power over the enactment of certain kinds of legislation. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 112 Pac. 402, 57 Or. 454.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of contract, see Contracts, 15.
Of will, see Wills.

CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

On application to revive lien of judgment, see Judgment, 16.

CONSUL.

Right to administer estate, see Evidence, 3.

CONTINGENCY.

Power to dispose of, by will, see Wills, 8.

CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

A continuance to secure the presence of witnesses to testify to their nationality should not be granted because their child is offered as a witness to prove that fact, where there is nothing to show that their testimony would differ from that of the child, or that diligence has been used in attempting to secure their testimony sooner. State v. Rackich, 37: 760, 119 Pac. 843, 66 Wash. 390.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CONTRACTS.

Assignability of right to balance due under contract for public work, see Assignment.

Impairing obligation of, see Constitutional Law, 20.

Time when county becomes indebted under, see Counties, 3.

As to covenants, see Covenants and Conditions.

Measure of damages for breach of, see Damages, 6.

Injunction to protect rights in, see Injunction, 5-7.

As to mortgages, see Mortgages.

Of sale of chattels, see Sale.

Specific performance of, see Specific Performance.

Implied agreements.

Implied contract to pay for animals negligently driven in front of railroad train, see Attachment.

Implied contract that land in name of one partner shall be partnership property, see Partnership, 1.

1. The law implies a contract by the maker of a note to reimburse the accommodation indorser the amount which he is compelled to pay thereon, and therefore, if the note is barred in favor of the maker when its amount is collected from the indorser's estate, the time having been extended as to it by the administration proceedings, the estate has a right of action against the maker upon the implied contract for reimbursement. Blanchard v. Blanchard, 37: 783, 94 N. E. 630, 201 N. Y. 134.

Consideration.

For promissory note, see Bills and Notes, 2.

2. A written consent by the husband, to the devise by the wife of her real property, does not require a consideration to support it. Erickson v. Robertson, 37: 1133, 133 N. W. 164, 116 Minn. 90.

3. A merely moral obligation, though not illegal, is not a consideration for a promise to make that promise enforceable. Gooch v. Allen, 37: 930, 73 S. E. 56, — W. Va. —.

4. When there is by law no enforceable obligation to pay, a promise made afterwards to pay wants legal consideration, and is not enforceable. Gooch v. Allen, 37: 930, 73 S. E. 56, — W. Va. —.

Offers and their acceptance or withdrawal.

Right to change terms of accepted offer of specified compensation based on paid subscriptions to newspaper, see Prize Contest.

5. An offer of specified compensation to the person obtaining the highest vote based on paid subscriptions to a newspaper, after acceptance and part performance of the terms of the offer, becomes an executory contract between the person making and the person so accepting the terms of the offer. Mooney v. Daily News Co. 37: 183, 133 N. W. 573, 116 Minn. 212.

6. Until there has been an acceptance of a written order for machinery to be shipped to the purchaser at a future date, the latter is at liberty to countermand such order, as the same, until acceptance, does not constitute a contract, but merely an offer or proposal to purchase. J. L. Owens Co. v. Bemis, 37: 232, 133 N. W. 59, — N. D. —.

7. A letter to one to whom an order had been sent, requesting cancellation of the order, giving its date, which is received before the order is accepted, is a sufficient cancellation. J. L. Owens Co. v. Bemis, 37: 232, 133 N. W. 59, — N. D. —.

Statute of frauds.

Right to recover value of services under parol agreement to convey land in action for damages for breach of contract, see Election of Remedies, 3.

Oral agreement as to insurance rates of premiums, see Insurance, 6-8.

8. The party to be charged, who must sign a contract to make it binding under the statute of frauds, is the one against whom it is sought to be enforced. Lee v. Vaughan Seed Store, 37: 352, 141 S. W. 496, — Ark. —.

9. Letters passing between an alleged vendor and vendee cannot be read together to constitute a contract for the sale of real estate, if they do not identify the land which is intended to be the subject-matter of the contract, as to which there is a dispute, so that parol evidence would be required to substantiate the truth of the matter. Jackson v. Stearns, 37: 639, 113 Pac. 30, 58 Or. 57.

10. The printing of the name of the vendor at the beginning, in the body, and on the back of the merchant's order blanks, to be filled up by a soliciting agent, is not a sufficient signature to satisfy the statute of frauds. Lee v. Vaughan Seed Store, 37: 352, 141 S. W. 496, — Ark. —.

11. A contract between husband and wife that the survivor shall take the property of the other is taken out of the statute of frauds by the execution of reciprocal wills. Brown v. Webster, 37: 1196, 134 N. W. 185, 90 Neb. 591.

12. That one to whom another promises orally, upon receiving title to real estate, to convey it upon payment of a specified sum of money, acted for the promisor in negotiating the purchase, and had a possible broker's opportunity to find another purchaser for the land, does not show such a change in situation as to constitute part performance sufficient to take the promise out of the statute of frauds. Re Bennett, 37: 521, 132 N. W. 309, 115 Minn. 342.

13. A "part performance," to take an oral agreement to convey real estate out of the statute of frauds, must be substantial, and of such a nature that the refusal to enforce the agreement would result not merely in the denial of the right which the agreement was intended to confer, but in an "unjust and unconscionable injury." 57 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Re Bennett, 37: 521, 132 N. W. 309, 115 Minn. 342.

14. A written notification by a merchant that he has received a "contract order" of a customer, but cannot fill it, is not such a recognition of the contract as to take it out of the statute of frauds. Lee v. Vaughan Seed Store, 37: 352, 141 S. W. 496, — Ark. —.

Construction.

Widow's right to year's support under antenuptial agreement, see Husband and Wife, 10.

Insufficiency of warranty deed of third person tendered by grantor, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

Construction of will, see Wills.

15. Where a contract has been made for the sale of real property and its conveyance by warranty deed, the purchaser ordinarily has a right to insist that such deed shall be executed by the person with whom he contracted. George H. Paul Co. v. Shaw, 37: 1123, 119 Pac. 546, 86 Kan. 136.

Validity; public policy.

Attorney's duty to comply with contract to reconvey to client property transferred in fraud of creditors, see Attorneys, 1.

Validity of agreement limiting carrier's liability, see Carriers, 11.

What constitutes duress invalidating contract, see Duress.

16. The appointment by a sheriff as his deputy of one who withdrew from candidacy for the nomination in consideration of the promise of a deputyship is not obnoxious to a statute forbidding the sale or letting to farm or deputation of any office. Com. ex rel. Lyman v. Sheeran, 37: 289, 140 S. W. 568, 145 Ky. 361.

17. An employer and employee may stipulate to arbitrate the extent of injury or disability caused by a personal injury to the employee in the performance of his duties, if the question as to the fundamental rights of the parties as to recovery is left open to the courts. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 439, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

18. A contract between an adult man and woman, not related to each other, that, if the latter will enter the home of the former and act as his housekeeper, he will support her, and at his death leave her his estate, is not, where the relations between them are at all times moral and proper, forbidden by law or obnoxious to public policy. Goff v. Supreme Lodge Royal Achates, 37: 1191, 134 N. W. 239, 90 Neb. 578.

19. A written consent by a man to the devise by his wife of her real property is valid and effectual, though given in furtherance of a void written agreement between husband and wife, by which each, in terms, released all interest in the other's real property; the wife having performed her part of the agreement. Erickson v. Robertson, 37: 1133, 133 N. W. 164, 116 Minn. 90.

20. A deed by parents to avoid prosecution of their child upon a charge which is in fact unfounded, but which the accuser honestly believes that the child has subjected itself to, will be set aside. Ball v. Ball (N. J. Err. & App.) 37: 539, 81 Atl. 724, — N. J. —.

Performance; breach.

Part performance of oral contract, see supra, 11-14.

Liquidated damages for delay in completing contract, see Damages, 7-9.

Right to recover value of services under parol agreement to convey land in action for damages for breach of contract, see Election of Remedies, 3.

Bar to action to recover on quantum meruit, see Judgment, 4.

Judgment as bar against carrying out of contract with school district, see Judgment, 6, 7.

See also supra, 19.

21. The question of the good or bad faith of the architect to whose satisfaction and under whose direction work upon a building is to be done, in failing to pass upon plans and drawing for changes in the work so that its completion is delayed, is immaterial in determining the responsibility of the owner for such delays, so as to prevent his taking advantage of provisions in the contract for stipulated damages for failure to complete the work within a specified time. Mosler Safe Co. v. Maiden Lane Safe Deposit Co. 37: 363, 93 N. E. 81, 199 N. Y. 479.

22. One contracting to drive entries in a mine waives his contract right to have the other contracting party furnish pumps, piping, and tools to keep water out of the mine, which might be secured at small cost, by working for several months without procuring them or insisting that they be furnished, but informing the other party that he will bail the water out. Stonega Coke & Coal Co. v. Addington, 37: 969, 73 S. E. 257, 112 Va. 807.

CONTRIBUTION.

Creditor's right to enforce for debt paid by him though deed of trust securing same is barred by laches, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

Creditor's right to contribution on payment of entire debt, see Subrogation, 1.

A deed of trust binding land of several debtors for a debt paid by one not principal debtor, and released by the creditor, is kept alive in equity to give contribution to the debtor paying against a co-debtor, notwithstanding such release, and though action at law for contribution is barred by the statute of limitations. Gooch v. Allen, 37: 930, 73 S. E. 56, — W. Va. —.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See Negligence, 8, 9.

CONVICTS.

Right to bail, see Bail and Recognition, 1.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Criminal liability of discharged convict for registering as voter, see Elections, 4.

COPY.

Selling stove copied from design of another as unfair competition, see Unfair Competition.

CORPORATIONS.

Attorney's power to hold stock to compel settlement of claim against client, see Attorneys, 2.

As to banks, see Banks.

Insurance companies, see Insurance.

Municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations.

Railroad corporations, see Railroads.

COSTS AND FEES.

1. The mere fact that the construction of a will is necessary to determine whether or not the relief sought shall be granted in a proceeding to partition real estate is not sufficient to entitle defendant to an allowance of a solicitor's fee as costs, although the relief is denied. Kendall v. Taylor. 37: 164, 92 N. E. 562, 245 Ill. 617.

2. Where a party failed to appear at the time and place designated in a notice for taking deposition and cross-examine the witness, and thereafter duly and regularly served notice of the taking of the deposition of the same witness, and in pursuance thereof took the deposition of such witness which consisted of a cross-examination of the witness on the deposition previously given, the costs and expense of taking such subsequent deposition should not be allowed as a part of the costs of the case. Vaughn v. Johnson, 37: 816, 119 Pac. 879, 20 Idaho. 660.

COTENANCY.

One of the tenants in common of mortgaged property may secure a title adverse to his cotenant by purchasing the property from one who bids it in at a foreclosure sale. McLawhorn v. Harris, 37: 831, 72 S. E. 211, 156 N. C. 107.

COTTAGE.

To whom listed for taxation, see Taxes 7.

COUNCIL.

Legislative functions of, see Municipal Corporations, 3-6.

COUNTIES.

Municipal authority to condemn land of county used for poor farm, see Eminent Domain, 3.

1. The allowance by the county court of a claim for services rendered to the county by a detective ratifies an irregular employment of him by the county attorney. Cunningham v. Saling, 37: 1051, 112 Pac. 437. 57 Or. 517.

Limit of indebtedness.

Of municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 7-11.

Limitation of indebtedness of school district, see Schools, 2.

See also Taxes, 6.

2. That a county has reached its constitutional debt limit does not prevent it from incurring liabilities for services necessary to the preservation of the peace and good order of the community. Cunningham v. Saling, 37: 1051, 112 Pac. 437, 57 Or. 517.

3. The time of letting the contract for a bridge, and not that of its acceptance and the issuance of warrants therefor, is that when the county becomes indebted, within the meaning of a constitutional provision forbidding it to become indebted to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, where the statute requires an appropriation to be made for the bridge before the contract is let; at least where the contract requires the bridge to be completed within the year in which the contract is let. Trask v. Livingston County, 37: 1045, 109 S. W. 656, 210 Mo. 582.

4. In determining whether or not a debt incurred for a public building will exceed the constitutional limitation upon the indebtedness which the county may incur, the aggregate amount of the contract price must be considered, although it is to be paid in instalments out of the tax levies for a series of years. Hagan v. Commissioners Court, 37: 1027, 49 So. 417, 160 Ala. 544.

5. A county cannot avoid the constitutional limitation upon its indebtedness by agreeing to pay the contract price of a public building, with interest, out of the proceeds of a special tax levy laid for a series of years for that purpose, although the contract expressly provides that no debt is created or incurred by the county. Hagan v. Commissioners Court, 37: 1027, 49 So. 417, 160 Ala. 544.

COURTS.

Jurisdictional amount in justice's court, see Justice of the Peace.

Discretion of, as to granting bail, see Bail and Recognizance, 2.

Review by court of award by commission under workmen's compensation act, see Constitutional Law, 4.

Jurisdiction to appoint administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 1, 2.

Jurisdiction in injunction proceedings, see Injunction.

Justice-of the peace, see Justice of the Peace.

Jurisdiction in mandamus proceedings, see Mandamus.

Jurisdiction of action of specific performance, see Specific Performance.
Process of, see Writ and Process.

1. Authority to test the jurisdiction of a commission, which depends upon consent 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of the parties to be affected by its action, is conferred by a statute empowering the court to set aside the award in case the board acted without or in excess of its powers. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

Relation to other departments of government.

2. The court may determine the question of the constitutionality of a statute, although it is not absolutely necessary to the disposition of the cause, if it is involved in the suit, and the settlement of the question is one of public importance. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

3. A constitutional statute cannot be declared inoperative because opposed to public policy. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

4. The court will not set aside an employees' indemnity act on the ground that it will prove unnecessarily costly and burdensome to those whose interests will be affected by it, and will lead to public and private abuses, where it was adopted by the legislature after expert advice and careful consideration of the objections urged against it. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37: 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 65 Wash. 156.

Rules of decision.

5. General expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 37: 934, 112 Pac. 866, 159 Cal. 65.

COUSINS.

Inheritance by, see Descent and Distribution, 4, 5.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Injunctions to protect rights under restrictive covenants, see Injunction, 5-7.

Right to dispose by will of contingent right to re-enter for condition broken, see Wills, 8.

Right to demand reconveyance for breach of condition as passing by will, see Wills, 9.

Who may enforce.

Specific performance of contract for reconveyance where restrictive conditions broken, see Specific Performance, 1.

1. The absence from the deed of language showing that a covenant restricting the uses to which the land can be put is for the benefit of the remaining tract of the grantor will not prevent the enforcement of the condition in favor of subsequent owner of such remainder, if, from the surrounding circumstances, it appears that the intention was to benefit such tract. Ball v. Milliken, 37: 623, 76 Atl. 789, 31 R. I. 36.

2. A remote grantee of a portion of a tract of land cannot enforce against a remote grantee of another portion a restrictive covenant in a grant of the entire tract before its subdivision, as to the character of buildings to be placed on the property, although the original grantor parted with his entire interest in all property in the neighborhood, where deeds and mortgages were given by a subsequent grantee in subdividing the tract, and foreclosure sales made on the various subdivisions, without any reference to such covenant. Korn v. Campbell, 37: 1, 85 N. E. 687, 192 N. Y. 490.

3. A finding that covenants in a deed of a parcel of a tract of city property, requiring the erection of a building of a certain character placed in a certain way upon the property, were for the benefit of the entire tract, does not require its enforcement at the suit of an adjoining owner, where it is also found that there was no intention to create an easement in favor of any land whatever. Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co. 37: 5, 117 Pac. 677, 160 Cal. 559.

4. A covenant in a deed of a parcel of a tract being divided into city lots, which is stated to run with the land, and requires the covenantor to construct a specified building on the property which shall be a certain distance from street and side lines, cannot be enforced by a purchaser of an adjoining lot, whose deed forbids the placing of a building on the lot within the same distance from the street specified in the former deed, on the theory that the obligations are reciprocal. Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co. 37: 5, 117 Pac. 677, 160 Cal. 559.

Covenants running with land.

See also supra, 4.

5. A covenant imposing a burden on real estate for the benefit of the grantor personally does not follow the land into the possession of an assignee. Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co. 37: 5, 117 Pac. 677, 160 Cal. 559.

6. A covenant in a deed of a parcel of a tract of city property, that the grantee shall place a certain described building on the property, having certain relations to the side lines of the lot is personal to the grantor, and does not run with the remainder of the tract, although the deed states that the covenant runs with the land "herein conveyed." Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co. 37: 5, 117 Pac. 677, 160 Cal. 559.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Bail and recognizance, see Bail and Recognizance.

Ex post facto laws, see Constitutional Law, 1, 2.

Criminal liability of discharged convict for registering as voter, see Elections, 4.

Evidence in criminal cases generally, see Evidence.

Habeas Corpus, see Habeas Corpus.

Enforcing excise tax by criminal prosecution, see License, 4.

Prohibition against criminal prosecution, see Prohibition.

Failure of petitioner for release of convicts for refusal to accept tender of find, see Tender.

Competency of witnesses, see Witnesses.

Extent of punishment.

A statute depriving a life insurance agent of the right to prosecute that business if he gives special rates to applicants is not invalid as imposing too severe a penalty. People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37: 778, 96 N. E. 1049, 252 Ill. 398.

CROPS.

Measure of damages for injury to, see Damages, 15-19.

Admissibility of evidence as to kind of crop land will yield, see Evidence, 27.

Replevin for, see Replevin.

Liability for loss of, due to selling unfit seed, see Sale, 1.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Reversible error in, see Appeal and Error, 9.

CURTESY.

A man who joins in a mortgage of his wife's property is entitled to compute his curtesy interest only on the surplus after satisfying the mortgage and tax liens, not on the entire value of the property, under a statute giving him one third of all the real estate of which she was seized in fee simple during coverture, unless the right shall have been barred or relinquished. Ketterer v. Nelson, 37: 754, 141 S. W. 409, 146 Ky. 7.

CUSTOM.

Of carrier, see Carriers, 1, 15.

Estoppel of bank to deny right to refuse to pay check to bona fide purchaser, see Estoppel, 3.

Evidence as to custom of passengers, see Evidence, 28.

CY PRES.

Doctrine of, see Charities, 7.

DAMAGES.

Remittitur curing error in instructions as to measure of damages, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Sufficiency of evidence of loss of profits from breach of contract, see Evidence, 36.

Extent of recovery on insurance policy, see Insurance, 11, 12.

Sufficiency of evidence of special damages to go to jury, see Trial, 4.

Nominal.

Judgment on appeal where damages are nominal only, see Appeal and Error, 17.

See also infra, 3.

1. A railroad company is liable in nominal damages for carrying a passenger beyond his station, into its yards, without giving him an opportunity to alight at the station. Natchez, C. & M. R. Co. v. Lambert, 37: 264, 54 So. 836, — Miss.—

2. Nominal damages only should be awarded the owner of the fee and the abutting owners, in case of the taking by the city of the fee of a street which had been platted by the owner, who had sold all the lots upon the street, so that a perpetual easement in it had been dedicated to the lot owners. Re New York, 37: 281, 89 N. E. 829, 96 N. Y. 286.

Exemplary or punitive.

3. Punitive damages may be allowed for the infringement of a trademark, although the actual damages are only nominal. Lampert v. Judge & Dolph Drug Co. 37: 533, 141 S. W. 1095, — Mo. —

4. The placing by a retailer of inferior cigars in trademarked boxes, and making sales therefrom, is legal malice, which will justify punitive damages in favor of the owner of the trademark. Lampert v. Judge & Dolph Drug Co. 37: 533, 141 S. W. 1095, — Mo. —

5. Punitive damages may be allowed against persons who, after rightfully entering upon property to remove poles therefrom, use loud, profane, and lewd language in the presence of the wife of the occupant, and enter his dwelling without authority, frightening her to her injury. May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 37: 912, 72 S. E. 1059, 157 N. C. 416.

Sales of personality.

Fraud in making sale, see infra, 10.

6. The damages to be awarded to one who has contracted to drive entries in a mine, because of the failure of the other contracting party to perform his agreement to furnish the pumps, piping, and tools necessary to keep the mine free from water, which might be procured at small cost, is the cost of such appliances, and not the cost of the labor of bailing entailed by failure to provide them. Stonega Coke & Coal Co. v. Addington, 37: 969, 73 S. E. 257, 112 Va. 807.

Liquidated damages.

Determination of owner's responsibility for delays in building contract containing stipulation for, see Contracts, 21.

7. Liquidated damages, and not a penalty, are provided for by a contract for placing a safe and vault in a building within a specified time, and declaring that, whereas failure to complete the work within the time limited will cause serious loss, the per se extent of which might be difficult of estimation, therefore the contractor agrees to pay a specified amount for each day's delay; and the amount specified is not plainly disproportionate to the injury. Mosler Safe Co. v. Maiden Lane Safe Deposit Co. 37: 363, 93 N. E. 81, 199 N. Y. 479.

8. The right of the owner of a building to liquidated damages for failure to complete a vault within a specified time is abrogated if he is responsible for a substantial part of the delay, and he cannot therefore recover such damages for delay beyond the time for which he is responsible. Mosler Safe Co. v. Maiden Lane Safe Deposit Co. 37: 363, 93 N. E. 81, 199 N. Y. 479.

sible. Mosler Safe Co. v. Maiden Lane Safe Deposit Co. 37: 363, 93 N. E. 81, 199 N. Y. 479.

9. A provision in a contract for placing an improvement in a building, that if the owner shall require any deviation, the same may be made without annulling or invalidating the contract, will not operate to renew a right to liquidated damages for delay in completion of the work after the provision therefor has been abrogated by delays to which the owner materially contributed. Mosler Safe Co. v. Maiden Lane Safe Deposit Co. 37: 363, 93 N. E. 81, 199 N. Y. 479.

Fraud on sale of goods.

10. If one who, in trading horses, defrauded the other party, substitutes another animal for the one originally transferred, upon complaint of the party defrauded, the measure of damages in case the latter animal is not as represented is merely the difference between the value which the substituted animal would have had had it been as represented and what it in fact was, and damages cannot be awarded upon both transactions. Robertson v. Halton, 37: 298, 72 S. E. 316, 156 N. C. 215.

Personal injuries.

Reversible error in admission of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Liability for injuries to married woman through fright, see Fright.

See also Carriers, 6.

11. The damages to be allowed for injuries caused by the bite of a vicious dog may include the expense of securing Pasteur treatment. Ayers v. Macoughtry, 37: 865, 117 Pac. 1088, 29 Okla. 399.

12. A man may recover damages from one who trespasses upon his property and frightens his wife to her injury, for the expenses imposed upon him and the deprivation of society and services of the wife because of the trespass. May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 37: 912, 72 S. E. 1059, 157 N. C. 416.

Injury to personal property.

13. The value of the property destroyed, and not the cost of making the repairs, or the difference in value of the premises with a perfect and defective radiator in, is the measure of damages for injury to property of a tenant of an apartment through the bursting of a defective steam radiator which the landlord was bound to keep in repair. O'Hanlon v. Grubb, 37: 1213, 38 App. D. C. 251.

Injury to real property.

14. The owner of a residence which is rendered inconvenient, uncomfortable, and unhealthy as a home by the nuisance of sulphurous fumes and their products thrown upon and into it by another, may prove and recover in an action therefor the damages he himself suffers from the discomfort and sickness thereby inflicted upon his wife and the other members of his family who live with him therein, although he may not, and his wife alone may, maintain the cause for the direct personal injury to her. Unit- ed States Smelting Co. v. Sisam, 37: 976, 191 Fed. 293, — C. C. A. —.

Injuries to Crop.

Admissibility of evidence as to, see Evidence, 27.

15. The measure of damages to a growing crop by a wrongful act which destroys it is its value at the time and place of its destruction. United States Smelting Co. v. Sisam, 37: 976, 191 Fed. 293, — C. C. A. —.

16. The measure of the damage to a growing crop injured, but not rendered worthless, is the difference between the value of that crop before and after the injury, at the time and place thereof. United States Smelting Co. v. Sisam, 37: 976, 191 Fed. 293, — C. C. A. —.

17. Where a crop is injured from time to time throughout its growing season until its maturity, by sulphurous fumes and their products, but is not destroyed, so that it is cultivated throughout the season, harvested and marketed, the damage to it is the difference between the value at maturity of the probable crop, if there had been no injury, and the value of the actual crop at that time, less the expense of fitting for market that portion of the probable crop which was prevented from maturing by the injury. United States Smelting Co. v. Sisam, 37: 976, 191 Fed. 293, — C. C. A. —.

18. To ascertain the damages for loss of a crop because of defective seed, the cost of production which has actually been incurred should not be deducted from the market value of the crop which should have been produced. Fuhrman v. Interior Warehouse Co. 37: 89, 116 Pac. 666, 64 Wash. 159.

19. The contract price of seed purchased for use on land, if not paid, should be deducted from the market value of the crop, in awarding damages for loss of the crop because of defective character of the seed. Fuhrman v. Interior Warehouse Co. 37: 89, 116 Pac. 666, 64 Wash. 159.

DANGEROUS PREMISES.

Liability for injury on, see Negligence, 5, 6.

DEADLY WEAPON.

Commission of homicide while using, see Homicide.

DEATH.

Burden of proof in action by parent for death of minor employee, see Evidence, 8.

Interruption of statute of limitations of action for, see Limitation of Actions, 6.

Employer's liability for death of minor servant, see Master and Servant, 6.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Joint creditors and debtors, see Joint Creditors and Debtors.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Right of judgment creditor of life tenant to income from life estate, see Life Tenants, 1.

DEBTS.

Parol evidence as to, see Evidence, 13.

Deduction of debts due insurer in paying insurance, see Insurance, 12.

Debt limit of county, see Taxes, 6.

Debt limit of municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 7-11.

Debt limit of school district, see Schools, 2.

Injunction against levying tax to pay for improvement whose cost exceeds debt limit, see Injunction, 8.

DECEDENTS.

Administration of estates of, see Executors and Administrators.

Rights of heirs and distributees generally, see Descent and Distribution.

DECLARATIONS.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 22-25.

DEDICATION.

By map or plat.

1. The sale of lots with reference to a plat does not dedicate to public use lands shown on the plat as a park, if the lots sold are not contiguous or adjacent to the park. Stover v. Steffey, 37: 856, 81 Atl. 33, 115 Md. 524.

2. A dedication to the public of a piece of land marked on a plat as a park is not shown by the mere planting of a few trees upon it, where it is never used as a park, and nothing is ever done to fit it for that purpose. Stover v. Steffey, 37: 856, 81 Atl. 33, 115 Md. 524.

3. The purchaser of lots according to a plat is entitled to have the streets shown on the plat maintained only so far as their existence is material to the enjoyment of the lots purchased. Douglass v. Belknap Springs Land Co. 37: 953, 81 Atl. 1086, 76 N. H. 254.

4. One who upon purchasing lots with reference to a plat is informed that a portion of the platted tract belongs to a stranger, and that he will do what he wishes with respect to the streets on that portion, cannot prevent the closing of such streets. Douglass v. Belknap Springs Land Co. 37: 953, 81 Atl. 1086, 76 N. H. 254.

5. One selling lots with reference to a plat made and recorded by another is bound to maintain the streets shown on the plat, so far as his grantee is interested in them. Douglass v. Belknap Springs Land Co. 37: 953, 81 Atl. 1086, 76 N. H. 254.

6. The existence of a street shown on a plat upon the shore of a lake cannot be defeated as against claims of persons who buy lots with reference to the plat, by the fact that when the requisite number of lots is laid out according to course and distance no space will be left for the street. Douglass v. Belknap Springs Land Co. 37: 953, 81 Atl. 1086, 76 N. H. 254.

7. A purchaser of a lot in a platted tract on the shore of a lake is entitled to have a street shown on the plat to exist along the lake shore kept open, and it is immaterial that by reason of the configuration of the ground for a portion or the distance it can be used only as a foot path. Douglass v. Belknap Springs Land Co. 37: 953, 81 Atl. 1086, 76 N. H. 254.

DEDUCTION.

Of debt due insurance company from amount paid on policy, see Insurance, 12.

DEEDS.

Purchaser's duty to accept deed from third person, see Contracts, 15.

Validity of deed by parents to avoid prosecution of child, see Contracts, 20.

Covenants in, see Covenants and Conditions.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 1.

Nonexpert opinion as to mental incompetency of person signing, see Evidence, 18, 19.

Evidence as to mental incompetency of person executing deed while ill, see Evidence, 29.

Injunction to protect restrictive covenants in, see Injunction, 5-7.

Recording of, see Records and Recording Laws.

What passes by will, see Wills, 8, 9.

Estate or interest created by will, see Wills, 10-12.

DEFALCATION.

Subrogation of surety on guardian's bond making good a defalcation of guardian, see Subrogation, 4.

DEFINITENESS.

Of charitable bequest, see Charities, 5, 6.

DEFINITIONS.

Dependent, see Insurance, 3.

Holographic will, see Wills, 5.

Part performance, see Contracts, 13.

Public utility, see Public Utility.

Tide lands, see Waters, 2.

DELEGATION OF POWER.

Constitutionality of, see Constitutional Law, 3, 6, 21.

DEPENDENT.

Who is, see Insurance, 3.

DEPOSITIONS.

Constitutionality of statute authorizing taking of without notice, see Constitutional Law, 13.

Cost of taking as part of costs of case, see Costs and Fees, 2.

Where the evidence of a witness is taken by a deposition after notice given as provided by statute, and the adverse party neglects to appear and cross-examine the 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

witness, and thereafter gives notice in conformity with law of the taking of the deposition of the same witness, and in pursuance of such notice takes the deposition of such witness, and in so doing cross-examines the witness on the deposition previously given by him, it is erroneous procedure to admit the later deposition as a part of plaintiff's case and before defendant has opened his side of the case. Vaughn v. Johnson, 37: 816, 119 Pac. 879, 20 Idaho, 669.

DEPOSITS.

In bank, see Banks.

DEPUTY.

Sheriff's liability for act of, see Bonds.

Appointment as deputy of one withdrawing from candidacy for nomination, see Contracts, 16.

Right to change salary of, see Officers.

Sufficiency of pleading in action to hold sheriff liable for injury by deputy, see Pleading, 3.

DERAILING SWITCH.

On private railroad, employer's duty and liability as to, see Master and Servant, 8, 13.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Conclusiveness of judgment as to inheritance from child, see judgment, 1.

Adopted children.

1. Under a statute providing that the same right of inheritance shall exist between the parties to an adoption as though the party adopted had been the legitimate child of the person making the adoption, a child of the person adopted will, in case of the latter's death before that of the person making the adoption, inherit from the adopting parent by right of representation. Batchelder v. Walworth, 37: 849, 82 Atl. 7, — Vt. —.

2. The use of the words "child" and "issue" in the statute governing the descent of property does not prevent the application of the rules of descent to adopted children so as to permit the issue of deceased ones to represent them, where the statute of adoption creates the same rights of inheritance between the parties as though the person adopted had been the legitimate child of the person making the adoption. Batchelder v. Walworth, 37: 849, 82 Atl. 7, — Vt. —.

3. The rights of a woman who marries a man with an adopted child, in his estate, are, although she does not consent to the adoption, the same as though the child was the fruit of the marriage. Batchelder v. Walworth, 37: 849, 82 Atl. 7, — Vt. —.

Cousins.
4. Cousins do not inherit immediately from each other, but only mediately through the parents of each, and children cannot inherit immediately from a cousin of their parent. Cramer v. McCann, 37: 108, 112 Pac. 832, 83 Kan. 719.

5. Under a statute providing that a nonresident alien shall not be capable of acquiring title to land by descent, resident citizens cannot inherit lands through the operation of the statute of descent and distribution when they must trace their descent to a cousin of their parents who is an alien at the time of his death. Cramer v. McCann, 37: 108, 112 Pac. 832, 83 Kan. 719.

DESIGN.

Selling stove copied from design of another as unfair competition, see Unfair Competition.

DETAINER.

Forcible detainer, see Forcible Entry and Detainer.

DETECTIVES.

Ratification of irregular employment of, see Counties, 1.

DEVISE.

See Wills.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

Foreign consul's right to administer estate of citizen of his country, see Evidence, 3.

DISCHARGE.

Of bankrupt, effect, see Bankruptcy.
Of employee, see Master and Servant, 5.

DISCONTINUANCE.

Of highway, see Highways, 4, 6.

DISCRETION.

As to allowing bail, see Bail and Recognizance, 2.

DISCRIMINATION.

Unconstitutionality of, see Constitutional Law, 7-11.
In ballot, see Elections, 3.
In rates by insurance company, see Insurance, 1, 2.
In license tax, see License, 1, 2.
In taxes generally, see Taxes, 1, 2.

DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 4.
Of petition to widen street, see Highways, 1.

DISOBEDIENCE.

Discharge of servant for disobedience of rules, see Master and Servant, 5.

DISPOSSESSION.

Of assignee of lease, see Landlord and Tenant, 5.

DISSATISFACTION.

Agent's authority to take back goods because of customer's dissatisfaction, see Principal and Agent, 2.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

DISTRIBUTION.

See Descent and Distribution.

DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Ratification of irregular employment of detective by county attorney, see Counties, 1.

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Presumption of father's unfitness for custody of child, see Evidence, 6.
Right of mother's parents to custody of child after divorce and mother's insanity, see Infants.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 10-12.

DOGS.

Measure of damages for injury by bite of, see Damages, 11.
Sufficiency of evidence of notice of vicious character of dog, see Evidence, 33.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

See Husband and Wife; Infants; Master and Servant.

DOUBLE INDEMNITY.

On accident policy, see Insurance, 11.

DOUBLE TAXATION.

Imposing exercise tax on motor vehicles which have paid property tax, see License, 3.

DRAFTS.

See Bills and Notes.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Exceeding debt limit for sewer, see Municipal Corporations, 10.

DRUMMERS.

Burden of proving authority of, see Evidence, 2.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 12-16.

DURESS.

1. Ordinarily it is not duress to bring or threaten to bring an action to enforce a valid obligation, nor to do that which a party has a legal right to do. United States Banking Co. v. Veale, 37: 540, 114 Pac. 229, 84 Kan. 385.

2. The act of a friend to whom the absent maker of a note has telegraphed to get an extension from the bank upon its maturity, in representing to the maker's wife in order to induce her to become surety on the note, which is necessary to secure the extension, that unless she so did it would result in injury and loss to the husband, is not such duress as will avoid her contract in case she becomes a surety. United States Banking Co. v. Veale, 37: 540, 114 Pac. 229, 84 Kan. 385.

DYING DECLARATIONS.

Admissibility of, see Evidence, 26.

EARNINGS.

Tax on, see Taxes, 3, 8, 10.

EASEMENTS.

Licensee's right of action against township for nuisance in maintaining open ditch rendering private way unsafe, see Nuisances, 2.

In waters generally, see Waters.

EDUCATION.

Charitable gift for, see Charities, 2, 5, 7.

EJECTION.

Of passengers, see Carriers, 9.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Constitutionality of statute giving employees option between statutory and common-law rights, see Constitutional Law, 20.

Bar of former judgment, see Judgment, 1-13.

1. Where property, though exempt from the general debts and obligations of the owner, is subject to the payment of a particular debt, the creditor has the election of remedies to subject the same to the payment of his claim: (1) He may proceed in equity, setting up all the facts, and have the amount of the debt decreed a specific lien upon the property; (2) he may proceed by attachment; or (3) by the execution issued upon a judgment in an ordinary action for the recovery of the debt. Gregory Co. v. Cale, 37: 156, 133 N. W. 75, 115 Minn. 508.

2. Owners of real estate, who have put the title in one of them for sale are estopped from suing the brokers for the commission retained by him for effecting the sale, on the theory that the contract with them was illegal because they agreed to divide their commission with the trustee, by instituting an action against the latter to compel an accounting of the share of commission received by him, since they thereby confirmed the contract. Heckscher v. Blanton, 37: 923, 69 S. E. 1045, 111 Va. 648.

3. The value of services performed in consideration of a parol agreement to convey real estate cannot be recovered in an action for damages for breach of the contract. Jackson v. Stearns, 37: 639, 113 Pac. 30, 58 Or. 57.

ELECTIONS.

Validity of submission to voters of proposed charter amendment, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

Ballots.

1. A vote of the electors amending the city charter will not be void because of a clerical failure to print on the ballot the fact that the amendment was submitted by the council, although the ordinance under 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which the submission was made required it to be done. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

2. A vote upon the question of the adoption by the electors of a charter amendment will not be void because the squares to be crossed in the ballot were not numbered in the same order as in the voters' pamphlet of instructions, where the words "yes" and "no" were plainly printed opposite the squares on the ballots, so that no one could have been misled. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

3. Under constitutional provisions that officers shall be chosen by the electors, and that no one shall be disfranchised except by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers, a statute is void which establishes a blanket ballot with a separate column for the nominees of the several parties and independent nominees, but provides that in case a candidate is nominated by more than one party, his name shall appear only once on the ticket, since it discriminates against certain of the electors who may wish to vote for him in the casting of their ballots. Hopper v. Britt, 37: 825, 96 N. E. 371, 203 N. Y. 144.

Violation of election laws.

4. A discharged convict cannot be convicted of illegally registering as a voter if he acted in good faith believing, upon advice of registration officers, that the papers given him upon his release from confinement restored his citizenship. State v. White, 37: 1177, 140 S. W. 896, 237 Mo. 208.

ELECTRICITY.

Contributory negligence of parents of child injured by electric wire, see Negligence, 9.

1. A corporation which permits a guy wire to get loose and hang against wires carrying a deadly current of electricity to its factory, at a place used, to its knowledge, actual or imputed, by children of the neighborhood as a playground, will be liable for the death of a child who comes in contact with the wire, although he is in fact a trespasser. Ferrell v. Dixie Cotton Mills, 37: 64, 73 S. E. 142, 157 N. C. 528.

2. That small children had been driven away from a pole from which a guy wire hung in contact with wires carrying a deadly electrical current, about which they were trespassers, but were in the habit of playing, does not absolve the owner of the pole from liability in case one is injured by coming in contact with the wire. Ferrell v. Dixie Cotton Mills, 37: 64, 73 S. E. 142, 157 N. C. 528.

3. Whether a pole carrying a deadly current of electricity from which a wire is allowed to hang in a dangerous condition is on or off from property rented by its owner to the parent of a child injured by coming in contact with the wire is immaterial on the question of liability for the injury, if the owner had sole control of it. Ferrell v. Dixie Cotton Mills, 37: 64, 73 S. E. 142, 157 N. C. 528.

ELEEMOSYNARY INSTITUTIONS.

See Charities.

EMBANKMENT.

Duty to furnish lateral support for, see Lateral Support.

EMBLEMENTS.

See Crops.

EMERGENCY.

Contributory negligence while acting on, see Negligence, 8; Railroads, 2.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Participation by appellate court in division of fund where damages are nominal only, see Appeal and Error, 17.

Nominal damages for taking fee of street which had been platted by owner, see Damages, 2.

What may be taken.

1. Charter authority to widen streets does not empower a municipal corporation to condemn for such purpose property already devoted to public use, such as a public library. Moline v. Greene, 37: 104, 96 N. E. 911, 252 Ill. 475.

2. A citizen and taxpayer of a city for the benefit of the citizens of which property is held in trust for library purposes may file objections against the taking of a portion of the library property for the purpose of widening a street. Moline v. Greene, 37: 104, 96 N. E. 911, 252 Ill. 475.

3. Authority conferred upon a municipality to exercise the power of eminent domain to take private property for the purpose of laying out streets does not by implication include authority to condemn land owned by the county and used for a poor farm. Edwardsville v. Madison, 37: 101, 96 N. E. 238, 251 Ill. 265.

EMPLOYEES.

Rights, duties, and liabilities of generally, see Master and Servant.

EMPLOYEES' INDEMNITY ACT.

Constitutionality of, see Constitutional Law, 3, 4, 7-10, 12, 16, 20; Jury, 1; Taxes, 2, 5.

When court will set aside as invalid, see Courts, 4.

Injunction against employer's accepting benefits of, see Injunction, 1.

ENTITLING.

Of statute, see Statutes, 2.

ENTRY.

Admissibility of entries by insurance agent in policy register, see Evidence, 12.

Forceful entry, see Forceful Entry and Detainer.

Right to re-enter for condition broken as passing by will, see Wills, 8.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

EQUALITY.

Of protection and privileges, see Constitutional Law, 7-11.

Of license tax, see License, 1, 2.

In taxation generally, see Taxes, 1, 2.

EQUAL PROTECTION AND PRIVILEGES.

See Constitutional Law, 7-11.

EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

See Estoppel, 2, 3.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

See Mortgage, 2, 3.

EQUITY.

Jurisdiction and practice in particular cases, see Injunction; Specific Performance.

ERROR.

As to appellate review generally, see Appeal and Error.

ESTATES.

Estates in common, see Cotenancy.

Life estates, see Life Tenants.

Nature of estate created by will, see Wills, 8-12.

ESTOPPEL.

Conclusiveness of judgment, see Judgment, 1-13.

By deed.

1. One alleged to have conveyed real estate while ill is not estopped by the deed to testify that he gave no paper or any kind of deed, as bearing on the question of his mental capacity at the time; nor is the evidence immaterial upon that issue. Atwood v. Atwood, 37: 591, 79 Atl. 59, 84 Conn. 169.

Equitable estoppel.

By electing remedy, see Election of Remedies, 2.

Laches barring right to enjoin material departure from restrictive covenants, see Injunction, 6.

Laches as bar to action, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

2. Estoppel may, in equity, be relied on to work a transfer of title to real estate from a member of a partnership in whose name it stands, to grantees of the firm. Johnson v. Hogan, 37: 889, 123 N. W. 891, 158 Mich. 635.

3. When a bank by its course of dealing with a customer authorizes him to issue checks on it, it will be estopped to say, after such checks have come in good faith into the hands of innocent holders, that the customer did not in fact have any money to his credit, and for this reason decline to pay the check. Robinson v. Pikeville, 37: 1186, 142 S. W. 1065, 146 Ky. 538.

EVICTION.

Of tenant, see Evidence, 36; Landlord and Tenant, 1, 2.

EVIDENCE.

Statute changing rules of, as ex post facto law, see Constitutional Law, 2.

New trial for newly discovered evidence, see New Trial.

Judicial notice.

Right of jurors to utilize their own knowledge, see Trial, 1, 2.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

As to regular convening of court on day administrator was appointed, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

That funds for paying taxes on separate property belonged to community, see Husband and Wife, 7.

Necessity for pleading and proving foreign laws, see Pleading, 2.

1. Where a constitutional provision has been adopted from another state, and the court of last resort of such state had construed the provision in that state prior to its adoption, the presumption arises that the framers of the Constitution, in adopting such provision, meant and intended to also adopt the construction that had been placed upon it by the highest court of the state from which it was taken. Re Schreiber, 37: 693, 114 Pac. 29, 19 Idaho, 531.

2. One seeking to hold a merchant upon a contract made by a traveling salesman has the burden of showing authority on his part to bind his employer. Lee v. Vaughan Seed Store, 37: 352, 141 S. W. 496, — Ark.

3. In order that statements of an applicant for a fraternal benefit certificate shall constitute a defense to an action upon the certificate of membership or policy of insurance issued to the applicant, it is incumbent upon the association to plead and prove that the answers were made as written in the application, that they were false in some particular material to the insurance risk, and that the association relied and acted upon those answers. Goff v. Supreme Lodge Royal Achates, 37: 1191, 134 N. W. 239, 90 Neb. 578.

4. Evidence of fraud in procuring the execution of a negotiable instrument shifts the burden of proof as to the good faith of a purchaser thereof before maturity, and is admissible for that purpose, but of itself in no way tends to establish bad faith on the part of such purchaser. Vaughn v. Johnson, 37: 816, 119 Pac. 879, 20 Idaho, 669.

5. Mere evidence of fraud or deception in procuring a negotiable promissory note which is fair and regular on its face is not sufficient to raise a presumption of bad faith against the purchaser of such paper in due course, nor should such fact be given any consideration by a jury in determining whether or not the holder of the instrument had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith. Vaughn v. Johnson, 37: 816, 119 Pac. 879, 20 Idaho, 669.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

6. The presumption of unfitness on the part of a father for custody of his child, raised by refusal of the court to award it to him upon granting a decree of divorce against him, is overcome by evidence of exemplary life for nine months after the passing of the decree, where there is nothing to show the nature of the unfitness upon which the court acted. Morin v. Morin, 37: 585, 119 Pac. 745, — Wash. —.

7. For the purpose of charging a telegraph operator with libel for transmitting a message stating that a text-book committee had sold out, it cannot be presumed that he knew they were in session from the fact that they had inserted in a newspaper which came into his possession a notice advertising for bids for books. Grisham v. Western U. Tele. Co. 37: 861, 142 S. W. 271, 238 Mo. 480.

8. The burden is on a master who is sought to be held liable for the death of a minor employee, because of his violation of an agreement with the parent not to permit the child to go about machinery, to show a waiver by the parent of such agreement, if he relies upon it as a defense. Haynie v. North Carolina Electric Power Co. 37: 580, 73 S. E. 198, 167 N. C. 503.

Best and secondary.

9. Evidence of one whose parents are accessible, as to their nationality, is not inadmissible on the theory that it is not the best evidence of the fact. State v. Rackich, 37: 760, 119 Pac. 843, 66 Wash. 390.

10. If the pleadings clearly disclose that proof of a document in possession of the adversary will be necessary at the trial, notice to produce it is not necessary to allow secondary evidence of its contents. J. L. Owens Co. v. Bemis, 37: 232, 133 N. W. 59, — N. D. —.

Documentary evidence.

Use of deposition on trial, see Deposition.

See also supra, 10.

11. Memoranda on the policy register of a deceased insurance agent are not admissible in evidence to prove the contents of a policy issued by him, subsequently lost, where they cannot be verified by anyone knowing the facts recited therein to be true. Cummings v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 37: 1169, 134 N. W. 79, — Iowa, —.

12. Entries by an insurance agent in the policy register are not within the operation of a statute making admissible in evidence entries by a person since deceased when made in a professional capacity or in the ordinary course of professional conduct. Cummings v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 37: 1169, 134 N. W. 79, — Iowa, —.

Parol.

13. Parol evidence that a written instrument bearing date on one day was executed on a different day is competent. Erickson v. Robertson, 37: 1133, 133 N. W. 164, 116 Minn. 90.

14. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a written contract of sale was not to take effect until the purchaser had an opportunity to inspect the goods and find them satisfactory. American Sales Book Co. v. Whitaker, 37: 91, 140 S. W. 132, — Ark. —

15. Though the record of a judgment does not disclose that particular property is liable for its payment, that fact may be established by extrinsic evidence on application for a special writ of execution or other proceeding, when the right to resort to the land is called in question. Gregory Co. v. Cale, 37: 156, 133 N. W. 75, 115 Minn. 508.

16. Evidence is admissible in an action by a tenant of an apartment to hold the landlord liable for injury to his property by a defect in the heating apparatus, that at the time of the leasing, the landlord's agent told him that the apartment was heated by steam, where the lease is silent upon the subject and the heating apparatus attached to the central plant was in place when the conversation took place. O'Hanlon v. Grubb, 37: 1213, 38 App. D. C. 251.

Opinions and conclusions.

17. If data supplied by a witness can be placed before the jury in such a way that they may draw the inference, as well as the witness, it is superfluous to add by way of testimony the inference which the jury may well draw for themselves. Auld v. Southern R. Co. 37: 518, 71 S. E. 426, 136 Ga. 266.

18. A nonexpert familiar with the facts may express the opinion that, on the day when a deed was signed by a sick person, he was so ill as to be "beyond asking him anything, and in a condition to know nothing really." Atwood v. Atwood, 37: 591, 79 Atl. 59, 84 Conn. 169.

19. A witness may state that a person who signed a deed while ill was not capable of doing business or making any contract or agreement, as an opinion as to general mental condition and the degree of mental incapacity. Atwood v. Atwood, 37: 591, 79 Atl. 59, 84 Conn. 169.

20. A passenger deprived of the use of his baggage by the carrier's negligence may, in an action to hold the carrier liable for the damages thereby caused him, state to the jury what the possession of the baggage would have been worth to him during the time of delay. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Jones, 37: 588, 54 So. 509, 170 Ala. 611.

Confessions.

Confession by stranger, see infra, 25.

21. An alleged confession secured from one suspected of crime, by a protracted searching examination of public officials, who assumed a menacing and browbeating attitude, accompanied by threats, invective and false statements, and profanity, is not admissible in evidence against him. People v. Borello, 37: 434, 119 Pac. 500, — Cal. —

Hearsay: declarations; res gestæ.

22. Statements by one injured in a quarrel, made some hours after the injuries were received and purporting to detail what occurred, are not admissible as res gestæ. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

in a prosecution of the one who inflicted the injuries. Salas v. People, 37: 352, 118 Pac. 992, — Colo. —

23. Statements made by a chauffeur at the time of an accident which occurred while he was using the machine in violation of his express orders are not binding upon the owner. Riley v. Roach, 37: 834, 134 N. W. 14, — Mich. —

24. Upon the question of the revival of a will by destruction of an instrument purporting to revoke it, declarations of testator at the time of destroying the latter instrument are admissible in evidence. Blackett v. Ziegler, 37: 291, 133 N. W. 901, — Iowa, —

25. An extra-judicial confession not under oath, by a stranger who cannot be produced as a witness, is not admissible at the trial of an indictment for murder. Brown v. State, 37: 345, 55 So. 961, — Miss. —

Dying declarations.

26. Evidence of inconsistent statements made by one after receiving a mortal wound is admissible to impeach his dying declaration in a prosecution of one who is alleged to have inflicted the wound, although no foundation has been laid for it. Salas v. People, 37: 352, 118 Pac. 992, — Colo. —

Relevancy and materiality.

Prejudicial error in admission of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Striking out unresponsive answer to question, see Trial, 3.

Harmless error in refusing to strike out unresponsive evidence, see Appeal and Error, 11.

Admissibility of evidence as to grantor's mental capacity, see Estoppel, 1.

27. Evidence of the kind of crop the land will ordinarily yield, of the stage of the crop's growth when injured or destroyed, of the average yield per acre of similar land in the neighborhood, the crop of which was cultivated in the same way and was not injured, of the market value of the crop injured, and of the market value of the probable crop without the injury at the time of maturity, of the expense that would have been incurred after the injury in fitting for market the portion of the probable crop the wrongful act prevented from maturing, of the time of the injury, and of the circumstances which conditioned the probability of the maturing of the crop at that time in the absence of the injury, is competent, and may be weighed by the jury to find the damage to a growing crop at the time of its injury. United States Smelting Co. v. Sisam, 37: 976, 191 Fed. 293, — C. C. A. —

28. Evidence of a known usage or custom of passengers to pass from one car to another of a moving train is admissible in an action to recover for injury to one thrown from a platform while attempting to do so, as bearing upon the question of his negligence. Auld v. Southern R. Co. 37: 518, 71 S. E. 426, 136 Ga. 266.

29. Testimony of one alleged to have conveyed real estate while ill, that he did not learn of the conveyance until a short time before beginning action to set aside the deed, is material on the question of his mental incapacity to execute the deed. Atwood v. Atwood, 37: 591, 79 Atl. 59, 84 Conn. 169.

30. Evidence as to the commission for securing a life insurance policy is immaterial in an action to recover a statutory penalty for rebating, where the rebate was given not to an agent, but to an applicant. People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37: 778, 96 N. E. 1049, 252 Ill. 398.

31. In an action to recover damages for false representations in regard to an animal which one who had defrauded another in a trade substituted for the one which he first transferred, evidence of the deceit in the first transaction is admissible to prove intent in the last. Robertson v. Halton, 37: 298, 72 S. E. 316, 156 N. C. 215.

Weight, effect, and sufficiency.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to the jury, see Trial, 4-6.

Duty to instruct as to weight of positive and negative testimony, see Trial, 16.

See also supra, 4-6.

32. A judgment in favor of plaintiff cannot, in the absence of any explanation of the inconsistency, be based on evidence given by him which is materially inconsistent with his testimony on a former trial, upon a matter within his personal knowledge, and which supplies a weakness in the case as first made. Smith v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 37: 429, 184 Fed. 387, 106 C. C. A. 497.

33. The keeping of a dog, with knowledge on the part of the owner or his wife that the same had bitten or attempted to bite one or several persons prior to the time of the attack upon the plaintiff, is evidence sufficient to support a verdict rendered on an instruction declaring a defendant liable if he had notice, either actual or constructive, of the vicious and dangerous character of the dog. Ayers v. Macoughtry, 37: 865, 117 Pac. 1088, 29 Okla. 399.

34. That lands standing in the name of a member of a partnership were partnership property may be shown by the fact that he permitted them to be dealt with as partnership property, and failed to list them as belonging to him in his will. Johnson v. Hogan, 37: 889, 123 N. W. 891, 158 Mich. 635.

35. That husband and wife have joined in mortgaging property is not of itself sufficient to show that it belonged to the community. Guye v. Guye, 37: 186, 115 Pac. 731, 63 Wash. 340.

36. Where, in an action by a tenant for eviction, the measure of damages must be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered, either arising naturally or as according to the usual course of things from the breach of contract itself, or such as will reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it, lost profits cannot be considered unless the proof of them 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

is of a high character so that the jury is not left to speculate or guess what they would have been. Russell v. Olson, 37: 1217, 133 N. W. 1030, — N. D. —.

Variance.

37. There is no fatal variance in a prosecution for selling liquor to Indians in the fact that the information charges sale of a quart, while the evidence shows sale of a pint. State v. Rackich, 37: 760, 119 Pac. 843, 66 Wash. 390.

EXCAVATIONS.

Injuring support to land by, see Lateral Support.

EXCEPTIONS.

Sufficiency of, see Appeal and Error, 3.

EXCISE TAX.

On motor vehicles, see License, 1, 3, 4.

EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGE.

Constitutionality of, see Constitutional Law, 7-11.

EXECUTION.

Issuance of on exempt property subject to payment of particular debt, see Election of Remedies, 1.

Exemption of homestead from, see Homestead.

Enforcement of judgment against bankrupt by special execution, see Judgment, 15.

Extension of lien of execution by grant of injunction restraining sale, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Legislative determination of sufficiency of notice of commencement of proceedings to settle estate, see Constitutional Law, 15.

Husband's right to reimbursement from wife's estate, see Husband and Wife, 1, 2.

Widow's right to year's support under antenuptial agreement, see Husband and Wife, 10.

Injunction against publication or multiplication of testator's private letters, see Injunction, 2.

Interpleader to determine respective rights of judgment creditor and attorney claiming lien on judgment for claim against decedent's estate, see Interpleader.

Sufficiency of title depending on probate decree distributing decedent's estate, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

As to legacies generally, see Wills.

Jurisdiction to appoint.

1. The giving of proper notice for the appointment of an administrator brings into court all persons having an interest in the estate, for all purposes necessary for the settlement of the estate, including its distribution among the heirs of decedent. Bar- rette v. Whitney, 37: 368, 106 Pac. 522, 36 Utah, 574.

Collateral attack on appointment.

Collateral attack on judgment in administration proceedings, see Judgment, 11-13.

2. Lack of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of an order appointing an administrator, by a court of general jurisdiction over the appointment, so as to render it subject to collateral attack, by a recital that the court "was opened and held" on a certain day, whereas the statute required the regular term to begin on the preceding day, the court to sit from day to day so long as business should require, since it will be assumed that the court regularly convened on the day required by statute, and that the recital in the order referred merely to the opening of the court for the transaction of business on the day when it was entered. Dayton Coal & Iron Co. v. Dodd, 37: 456, 188 Fed. 597, 110 C. C. A. 395.

Who may be appointed.

3. The foreign consul is not entitled to administer upon the estate of a citizen of his country dying within one of the United States, in preference to the public administrator of such state, under a treaty provision that if any citizen of either country shall die in the territory of the other, the consul of the nation to which he belonged shall have the right to intervene in the possession, administration, and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs. Re Ghio, 37: 549, 108 Pac. 516, 157 Cal. 552.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

See Damages, 3-5.

EXEMPTIONS.

Effect of discharge of bankrupt on judgment against exempt property, see Bankruptcy.

Creditor's election of remedies where exempt property is subject to payment of particular debt, see Election of Remedies, 1.

Homestead exemptions, see Homestead.

Lien of judgment against bankrupt on exempt property, see Judgment, 14, 15.

EXPECTANCIES.

Rights of heirs and distributees in decedent's estate generally, see Decedent and Distribution.

EX POST FACTO LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 1, 2.

EXPRESS COMPANIES.

State taxation of gross earnings of interstate express company, see Commerce, 3.

Taxation of generally, see Taxes, 1, 3, 8, 10.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

EXPULSION.

Of passenger, see Carriers, 9.

EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 13-16.

FARMING.

Of office, see Contracts, 16.

FEEES.

In general, see Costs and Fees.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

Master's liability for acts of, see Master and Servant, 12, 13.

FINES.

Failure of petition for release of convicts for refusal to accept tender of fine, see tender.

FIRE ARMS.

Sheriff's liability for injury to bystander by discharge of revolver dropped by deputy, see Bonds.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

FIRES.

Insurance against loss by, see Insurance.

FIXTURES.

To whom cottages placed on posts should be listed for taxation, see Taxation, 7.

1. The agreement between a seller and purchaser of machinery to be affixed to the realty, that the title shall remain in the seller until the price is paid, is binding on the existing mortgagee of the realty, although the contract is not recorded so as to be effective against subsequent purchasers without notice. Blanchard v. Eureka Planning Mill Co. 37: 133, 113 Pac. 55, 58 Or. 37.

2. Persons undertaking to erect a standpipe as part of a waterworks system, which is to be attached to the foundation by bolts embedded in it, cannot, by contract to which the mortgagee is not a party, reserve a right to remove it in case of failure to pay the purchase price, as against rights under a mortgage covering after-acquired property of the water company, and which embraces its entire working plant, including franchises. Tippett & Wood v. Barham, 37: 119, 180 Fed. 76, 103 C. C. A. 430.

FORCE.

What constitutes force in detaining property, see Forcible Entry and Detainer.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

1. One is not guilty of forcible entry upon real property, who, under color of a warrant which is not valid against the one in possession, enters the premises without force, or the display or threat of force, of any kind, and is left in possession by the occupant departing to secure legal advice, although the one in possession of the warrant states that he has come to put the occupant out and is going to do so. Fults v. Munro, 37:600, 95 N. E. 23, 202 N. Y. 34.

2. The one responsible for the conduct of an officer is guilty of forcible detainer, where he, after securing possession of the property peaceably, but wrongfully, paces back and forth before it, carrying a gun, which he occasionally discharges, and orders the person dispossessed, who has remained in the vicinity, to keep off the property. Fults v. Munro, 37:600, 95 N. E. 23, 202 N. Y. 34.

FOREIGN LAW.

Necessity for pleading and proving, see Pleading, 2.

FORFEITURE.

Of license to patent, see Patents.

FORGERY.

Of indorsement, see Banks, 5; Bills and Notes, 3; Principal and Agent, 3.

FRATERNAL SOCIETIES.

See Insurance.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Effect of original fraud on bank's right to dishonor check, see Banks, 5.

Statute of frauds, see Contracts, 8-14.

Measure of damages for, see Damages, 10.

Presumption of fraud in procuring execution of negotiable note, see Evidence, 4, 5.

Evidence as to damages from fraud in horse trade, see Evidence, 31.

Misrepresentations by applicant for insurance, see Insurance, 4.

In concealing defect in automobile from purchaser, see Negligence, 3.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

See Contracts, 8-14.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Attorney's duty to comply with contract to reconvey to client property transferred in fraud of creditors, see Attorneys, 1.

FREEDOM.

Prohibiting labor on Sunday as violation of religious freedom, see Constitutional Law, 19.

FREE PASSENGER.

Limitation of liability as to, see Carriers, 11.

FREE SCHOLARSHIPS.

Applying charitable devise to establishing, see Charities, 7.

FREE TRANSPORTATION.

Of pupils, see Schools, 1.

37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

FREIGHT.

Carriage of, see Carriers, 12-15.

FRIGHT.

Measure of damages for causing, see Damages, 5, 12.

Owner's liability for breaking of window by runaway team, see Negligence, 7.

One having a right to enter upon another's property to remove telegraph poles is liable for injury to the wife of the one in possession thereof, frightened because of the loud, profane, boisterous, and lewd language employed by his servants upon the premises and towards her while in the execution of the work, and their entry of the dwelling without right. May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 37:912, 72 S. E. 1059, 157 N. C. 416.

FROLIC.

Injury to actress during, see Master and Servant, 9, 10, 13.

FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Husband's right to reimbursement from wife's estate, see Husband and Wife, 1.

GIFT.

Right of one executing note as a gift to recover from payee amount paid by former to bona fide purchaser, see Assumpsit.

To charity, see Charities.

As to trusts generally, see Trusts.

By will, see Wills.

GOOD FAITH.

Presumption and burden of proof as to good faith of purchaser, see Evidence, 4, 5.

GOVERNMENT.

Guaranty of republican form of, see Constitutional Law, 21.

GRANDPARENTS.

Right to custody of infant after divorce of parents, see Infants.

GRATUITY.

See Gift.

GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

Leaving switch open when passenger train expected as, see Carriers, 7.

GROUND FOR REVERSAL.

See Appeal and Error, 8-14.

GROWING CROPS.

See Crops.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

Bank's notice of ward's rights in certificate of deposit, see Banks, 3.

Subrogation of surety on guardian's bond, see Subrogation, 4.

GUN.

Carrying gun as element of forcible detainer of property, see Forcible Entry and Detainer, 2.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Interference with, on court's discretion as to granting bail, see Bail and Recognizance, 2.

Failure of petition for release of convicts for refusal to accept tender of find, see Tender.

1. Irregularities occurring at the trial, and errors of the trial court in its procedure in a criminal action, are not reviewable on habeas corpus. State ex rel. Temple v. Barnes, 37: 114, 132 N. W. 215, — N. D.

2. Whether or not a statute imposing a license tax on peddlers of certain articles interferes with interstate commerce cannot be determined in a habeas corpus proceeding to secure release from custody to which one is committed from violation of the statute. State ex rel. Norwood v. Byles, 37: 774, 126 S. W. 94, 93 Ark. 612.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 8-14.

HEARSAY.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 22-25.

HEAT.

Building owner furnishing to others than tenant as owner of public utility, see Public Utility.

Parol evidence as to mode of heating, see Evidence, 16.

Eviction of tenant by landlord's failure to properly heat building, see Landlord and Tenant, 2.

HEATING APPARATUS.

Measure of damages for injury to tenant's property through bursting of defective steam radiator, see Damages, 13.

Landlord's duty to keep heating apparatus in repair, see Landlord and Tenant, 3, 4.

HEIRS.

Descent and distribution to, see Descent and Distribution.

Effect of unexplained omission of children from will, see Wills, 7.

HELPERS.

Right of labor union to strike against recognition of system allowing workers to employ helpers, see Labor Organizations.

HIGHWAYS.

Liability for withdrawing percolating water in construction of tunnel of railroad under adjoining street, see Waters, 8.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Establishment.

Nominal damages for taking fee of street which had been platted by owner, see Damages, 2.

By dedication, see Dedication, 3-7.

Condemnation of property to lay out or widen street, see Eminent Domain.

1. A petition to take land to widen a street for a distance of three blocks will be dismissed in toto if the ordinance under which the proceedings are instituted is invalid as to certain public property, the taking of a portion of which is an essential part of the improvement. Moline v. Greene, 37: 104, 96 N. E. 911, 252 Ill. 475.

Rights as to trees in street.

2. A city is not, under a Constitution making it liable for property damaged for public use, liable for the diminution in value of abutting property by the removal of useful and ornamental trees from the street the fee of which is in itself, which becomes necessary in making a lawful and careful change in the grade of the street. Webber v. Salt Lake City, 37: 1115, 120 Pac. 503, — Utah, —.

Improvements; repairs.

Limitation of action for injuries to abutting owner by change in street grade, see Limitation of Actions.

Question for jury as to negligence of municipality in bringing street to grade, see Trial, 12.

3. A municipal corporation in executing plans for a street improvement must observe such care to avoid injury to private property as a reasonably careful and prudent man in like circumstances would use if the responsibility for damages rested upon him. Giaconi v. Astoria, 37: 1150, 113 Pac. 855, — Or. —.

Liability for injuries on.

Licenses' right of action against township for maintaining open ditch along, rendering private way unsafe, see Nuisances, 2.

Joining municipality and lessor of building in action for injury to person on sidewalk, see Parties, 3.

Municipal liability for injury to private property by sliding of soft earth thereon in bringing highway to grade, see Master and Servant, 15, 16.

Owner's liability for breaking of window by runaway team, see Negligence, 7.

4. Where a road or way becomes dangerous to travel, is abandoned or a new location established, public authorities in charge of the work must put up barriers or warnings to protect persons traveling thereon, acting upon the belief, justified by appearances, that the old way is still open, and it is negligence not to do so. Daniels v. County Court, 37: 1158, 72 S. E. 782, 69 W. Va. 676.

Contributory negligence.

5. While persons traveling on a public highway in the nighttime are required to exercise such ordinary care and caution as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under the circumstances, and in view of the darkness, they have the right, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, to act on the assumption that such highway is in a reasonably safe condition for travel by night as well as by day, and are not bound to anticipate dangerous defects therein without some notice or other precaution taken for their protection. Daniels v. County Court, 37: 1158, 72 S. E. 782, 69 W. Va. 676.

Vacation.

See also supra, 4.

6. Where a highway containing a plain, well-beaten track is discontinued, it is the duty of the public authority responsible therefor, to give such notice or warning, or erect such barrier, as will prevent its use by travelers by night as well as by day; and in the absence of such notice travelers have the right to presume that such highway has not been discontinued or obstructed. Daniels v. County Court, 37: 1158, 72 S. E. 782, 69 W. Va. 676.

HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

See Wills, 5.

HOME RULE.

As to local self-government, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

HOMESTEAD.

Lien of judgment against bankrupt on, see Judgment, 14.

Abandonment.

1. Removal from a homestead, with no present or constant and abiding intention of returning, constitutes an abandonment of the right. Stewart v. Pritchard, 37: 807, 141 S. W. 505, — Ark. —.

2. The intent with which one removes from his homestead will, for the purpose of determining whether or not he has preserved his right, be determined from all the facts and circumstances accompanying the removal,—his express declarations relative thereto, its adaptability as a homestead according to his views and desires, his acts thereafter, and the prolongation of his absence therefrom. Stewart v. Pritchard, 37: 807, 141 S. W. 505, — Ark. —.

3. A statute making a conveyance of a homestead of no validity unless executed by the wife does not prevent abandonment of the homestead, or apply to a conveyance made thereafter. Stewart v. Pritchard, 37: 807, 141 S. W. 505, — Ark. —.

HOMICIDE.

One hitting a bystander when shooting at another with intent to kill the latter may be convicted therefor, under a statute providing for the punishment of whoever shall shoot any person with a dangerous weapon with intent to commit murder. State v. Thomas, 37: 172, 53 So. 868, 127 La. 576.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

HORSES.

Owner's liability for breaking of window by runaway team, see Negligence, 7.

HORSE TRADE.

Measure of damages for fraud in, see Damages, 10.

Evidence as to damages for fraud in, see Evidence, 31.

HOSPITAL.

Charitable gift for, see Charities, 3, 4, 6.

Servant's right to medical attention at, see Master and Servant, 3, 4.

HOUSEKEEPER.

Validity of agreement to will property to, see Contracts, 18.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Husband's consent to wife's execution of will, see Contracts, 2, 19.

Extent of recovery for injury to wife, see Damages, 14.

Duress in inducing wife to become surety on husband's note, see Duress, 2.

Rights in homestead, see Homestead.

Specific performance of agreement to execute reciprocal wills, see Specific Performance, 2.

Subrogation of one advancing purchase money to vendor's lien as against purchaser's wife, see Subrogation, 3.

Husband's right to reimbursement.

1. A man is not entitled to be reimbursed out of his wife's estate the amount which he paid for her physician's and nurse's bills and funeral expenses. Ketterer v. Nelson, 37: 754, 141 S. W. 409, 146 Ky. 7.

2. A man is not entitled to reimbursement from his wife's estate of money expended by him in the improvement of her real estate. Ketterer v. Nelson, 37: 754, 141 S. W. 409, 146 Ky. 7.

Community property.

Sufficiency of evidence of community nature to property, see Evidence, 35.

See also supra, 3-8.

3. Separate property is not impressed with a trust in favor of the community by a statutory provision that all the rents, profits, interest, or proceeds of separate property, accruing during marriage, shall be common property, where the statute also provides that the spouse having separate property, shall have sole control of it, and shall be liable for his or her debts, whether contracted before or after marriage. Guye v. Guye, 37: 186, 115 Pac. 731, 63 Wash. 340.

4. The existence at the time of marriage of a statute providing that the rents, profits, interest, or proceeds of separate property, accruing during marriage, shall be common property, does not prevent the legislature from restoring all increments of separate property accruing after the passage of the repealing statute, to separate use. Guye v. Guye, 37: 186, 115 Pac. 731, 63 Wash. 340.

5. A statutory declaration that property acquired during marriage shall be community does not make the natural increase in the value of separate real estate community, where the statute also declares that the owner of separate property shall be entitled to the rents, issues, and profits thereof. Guye v. Guye, 37: 186, 115 Pac. 731, 63 Wash. 340.

6. That a deed for real estate is not executed to a man until after his marriage does not make the land community property if he had contracted for, taken possession of, improved, and paid a portion of the purchase money for it prior to the marriage. Guye v. Guye, 37: 186, 115 Pac. 731, 63 Wash. 340.

7. The funds for paying taxes on separate property cannot be presumed to have belonged to the community, for the purpose of impressing the property with a community interest, where the owner of the property had a separate source of income. Guye v. Guye, 37: 186, 115 Pac. 731, 63 Wash. 340.

8. Coal and mining claims acquired from the government during marriage are separate, and not community property. Guye v. Guye, 37: 186, 115 Pac. 731, 63 Wash. 340.

Separate property.

9. Insurance money collected by a widow upon the life of her deceased husband becomes her separate estate upon her remarriage, and she may will it free from the claims of her husband. Hughey v. Worner, 37: 582, 140 S. W. 1058, 124 Tenn. 725.

Antenuptial agreements.
10. An antenuptial agreement by which a wife relinquishes all claims and demands of whatever manner, sort, or description which she may at any future time have against her husband's estate, including claims for dower, support, or maintenance, does not include the year's support which is allowed her by law out of his estate after his death. Re Johnson, 37: 875, 134 N. W. 553, — Iowa, —.

IDENTITY.

Affixing title to initiative measure for identifying purposes, see Statutes, 2.

ILLEGAL CONTRACTS.

See Contracts, 16-20.

ILLEGALITY.

Of contract, see Contracts, 16-20.

ILLNESS.

Estoppel by deed given during, see Estoppel, 1.

Nonexpert opinion as to, see Evidence, 18, 19.

Evidence as to mental incapacity of person executing deed during illness, see Evidence, 29.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Carrying passenger beyond station as proximate cause of, see Proximate Cause, 1.

IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATIONS.

See Constitutional Law, 20.

IMPLIED AGREEMENTS.

To pay for animals negligently driven in front of railroad train, see Attachment.

See also Contracts, 1.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Husband's right to reimbursement from wife's estate of money used for, see Husband and Wife, 2.

Of navigation, see Waters, 4.

No claim under the betterment act allowing compensation to one making improvement to real estate held adversely under color of title can arise by acquiring a color of title to land upon which permanent improvements have already been placed without claim, right, or title thereto. McKenzie v. Gussner, 37: 918, 134 N. W. 33, — N. D. —.

INCOME.

Right of judgment creditor of life tenant to income from life estate, see Life Tenants, 1.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Admissibility of evidence as to grantor's mental capacity, see Estoppel, 1.

Evidence as to incompetency of one executing deed while ill, see Evidence, 29.

Nonexpert evidence as to mental incompetency of person signing deed while ill, see Evidence, 18, 19.

As to married women, see Husband and Wife.

As to infants, see Infants.

INDEBTEDNESS.

Debt limit of county, see Counties, 2-5.

Debt limit of city, see Municipal Corporations, 7-11.

Debt limit of school district, see Schools.

INDEFINITENESS.

Of charitable bequest, see Charities, 5, 6.

INDEMNITY FUND.

Constitutionality of statute creating employees' indemnity fund, see Constitutional Law, 12.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Liability for acts of, see Master and Servant, 15, 16.

INDIANS.

Variance in prosecution for selling liquor to, see Evidence, 37.

Competency of, to testify as to parents' nationality, see Witnesses.

INFANTS.

Employer's liability to parent for death of minor servant, see Master and Servant, 6.

Effect of empowering employer to determine infant's right to benefit of employees' compensation act, see Constitutional Law, 3.

Power of municipality to forbid children to operate automobiles, see Municipal Corporations, 5.

Contributory negligence of parents of young child, see Negligence, 9.

Parent's right of action against master for injury to infant servant, see Parent and Child.

Presumption of father's unfitness for custody of child, see Evidence, 6.

Parents of the mother of a child, who are given temporary custody of it as agents of the court upon its granting her a divorce against its father, have no right to its continued custody as against the claims of the father, after the mother becomes insane. Morin v. Morin, 37: 585, 119 Pac. 745, — Wash. —.

INHERITANCE.

See Descent and Distribution.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

Constitutionality of provisions as to, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6, 21.

Affixing title to initiative measure for identifying purposes, see Statutes, 2.

INJUNCTION.

Conclusiveness of judgment in injunction suit, see Judgment, 4-7.

Interruption of statute of limitations by grant of, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

Against unfair competition, see Unfair Competition.

Against obstruction of navigable waters by bridge, see Waters, 5.

1. Injunction will not lie to prevent an employer from accepting the benefits of an employees' indemnity act, where there is an adequate remedy at law for any injury which may come to the employees thereby. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

2. An executor may enjoin the publication or multiplication of private letters of his testator, although they are upon commonplace subjects and have no literary merit, but he cannot enjoin the mere sale or transfer of such letters, in the absence of some special limitation imposed either by the subject-matter of the letter, or the circumstances under which it was sent. Baker v. Libbie, 37: 944, 97 N. E. 109, 210 Mass. 599.

3. Injunction will lie in favor of one who took an assignment of a judgment free from any attorneys' lien thereon, to prevent the attempted enforcement of such lien against the judgment. Humptulips Driving Co. v. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Burrows, 37: 226, 118 Pac. 827, 65 Wash. 636.

4. Injunction will not lie to restrain the casting of mine water into a stream to the injury of lower riparian land, where the land is not injured except when the water is turned out of its course by the complainant, or the channel is permitted by him to fill up so as to cause the water to spread over the adjoining land. Glenn v. Crescent Coal Co. 37: 197, 140 S. W. 43, 145 Ky. 137. Contract rights.

5. Absence of a general scheme for the development of the remainder of a tract of land, a portion of which is granted with restrictions on its use, is not fatal to the right of injunctive relief against breach of the condition. Ball v. Milliken, 37: 623, 76 Atl. 789, 31 R. I. 36.

6. Failure to seek relief in cases of slight departures from the spirit of a restriction imposed by deed on the use of land will not bar a right to enjoin material departure from the letter of the restriction on the ground of laches or under the statute of limitations. Ball v. Milliken, 37: 623, 76 Atl. 789, 31 R. I. 36.

7. The devisee of a right to a reconveyance of land for breach of condition as to the uses to which it may be put may be granted injunctive relief against breach of the condition, although he has lost a right to specific performance of the condition by permitting breaches by intermediate grantees of the property. Ball v. Milliken, 37: 623, 76 Atl. 789, 31 R. I. 36.

Against taxes and assessments.

8. If, at the time a public improvement is completed and accepted by a municipal corporation, its constitutional debt limit has been exceeded, the city may, at the suit of taxpayers, be enjoined from taking any steps to raise money by levying a tax against the taxpayers of the city to pay for the improvement. Logansport v. Jordan, 37: 1036, 85 N. E. 959, 171 Ind. 121.

INQUIRY.

Duty of purchaser of negotiable paper to make, see Bills and Notes, 4.

INSANITY.

See Incompetent Persons.

INSOLVENCY.

Effect of repeal of statute authorizing liquidation of insolvent bank, see Statutes, 5, 6.

INSPECTION.

Parol evidence as to purchaser's right to inspect before passing title, see Evidence, 14.

INSTALMENTS.

Debt payable in, as exceeding debt limit, see Counties, 4, 5; Municipal Corporations, 8.

INSTRUCTIONS.

Prejudicial error in giving, see Appeal and Error, 12, 13.

In general, see Trial, 14-16.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

In life, see Insurance, 3.

INSURANCE.

Admissibility of memorandum on policy register of deceased agent, see Evidence, 11, 12.

Admissibility of evidence in action for penalty for rebating, see Evidence, 30.

Insurance money collected by widow as her separate estate on remarriage, see Husband and Wife, 9.

Regulation of companies.

Constitutionality of statute requiring companies to maintain uniform rates, see Constitutional Law, 18.

Punishment of agent giving special rates, see Criminal Law.

Admissibility of evidence in action for penalty for rebating, see Evidence, 30.

Right to share in penalty for rebating, see Penalties.

1. A claim against an insurance company for penalty for making a discrimination between applicants in rates need not allege that it was unjust, if all the facts are stated, and the statute fixes the character of discrimination prohibited and characterizes such discrimination as unjust. People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37: 778, 96 N. E. 1049, 252 Ill. 398.

2. A rule of an insurance company forbidding rebating of premiums cannot effect a reduction of statutory penalty for granting rebates, if the rule was violated by a manager having charge of an agency. People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37: 778, 96 N. E. 1049, 252 Ill. 398.

Insurable interest.

3. Where a woman, who is without means, in good faith leaves her own home and work, and assumes and for years faithfully performs the duties of a housekeeper for a member of a fraternal beneficiary association, not related to her by consanguinity, under an agreement that in consideration for such services he will support her, and at his death leave her his estate, and no evidence is offered showing any improper relations between them, she thereby becomes a dependent upon such member, and as such is eligible as a beneficiary in a certificate of membership issued to him by the association of which he is a member. Goff v. Supreme Lodge Royal Achates, 37: 1191, 134 N. W. 239, 90 Neb. 578.

Warranties and representations in life policies.

Burden of pleading and proving falsity of answers in application, see Evidence, 3.

4. A misrepresentation as to relationship of the beneficiary in an application for a mutual benefit certificate will not avoid the contract if the beneficiary was eligible in his true relationship. Goff v. Supreme Lodge Royal Achates, 37: 1191, 134 N. W. 239, 90 Neb. 578.

5. In construing a contract of insurance in a fraternal beneficiary association for the purpose of determining whether the statements made in the written application therefor were intended to be representations or warranties, the court will take into consideration the situation of the parties, the subject-matter, and the language employed, and will construe a statement made therein to be a warranty only when it clearly appears that such was the intention of the contracting parties, and that the mind of each party consciously intended and consented that such should be the interpretation of his statements. Goff v. Supreme Lodge Royal Achates, 37: 1191, 134 N. W. 239, 90 Neb. 578.

Premiums and assessments; rates.

Rendition of judgment on appeal in action to recover premium, see Appeal and Error, 15.

Constitutionality of statute requiring companies to maintain uniform rates, see Constitutional Law, 18.

Punishment of agent giving special rates, see Criminal Law.

Admissibility of evidence in action for penalty for rebating, see Evidence, 30.

Right to share in penalty for rebating, see Penalties.

See also supra, 1, 2.

6. A parol agreement as to rates different from those named in the policy, made by an insurance agent to secure business which had been carried by a rival company, is not binding on the insurer, where the policy provides that no provision or condition of the policy shall be varied or altered by anyone unless by written consent of the president or secretary of the company. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fresno Flume & Irrig. Co. 37: 322, 119 Pac. 646. — Cal. —

7. That an applicant for insurance does not sign the policy does not absolve him from its provisions as to rates of premium and limitation of agent's authority, so as to enable him to enforce an oral agreement that the rates shall be different from those named in the policy. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fresno Flume & Irrig. Co. 37: 322, 119 Pac. 646. — Cal. —

8. An insurance company does not, by attempting to enforce by action the payment of premiums on a policy of insurance written by an agent, ratify his unauthorized oral agreement as to rates, made to secure the business. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fresno Flume & Irrig. Co. 37: 322, 119 Pac. 646. — Cal. —

Risks and causes of loss.

Sufficiency of evidence as to attachment of lightning clause to policy, see Trial, 6.

9. Insurance against direct loss or damage by lightning includes injuries to the property by being precipitated into water and debris by the throwing down of the walls of the building by a lightning stroke. Cummings v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 37: 1169, 134 N. W. 79. — Iowa. —

10. Liability for injuries to insured goods by the throwing down of the building by lightning is not taken away by a provision of the policy insuring it against fire and lightning, that if the building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance shall cease. Cummings v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 37: 1169, 134 N. W. 79, — Iowa, —.

Extent of recovery.

11. A provision in an accident insurance policy, for double indemnity in case of injuries received while riding as a passenger in a public conveyance provided for passenger service and propelled by gasoline, applies to injuries received while a passenger in a taxicab hired from one engaged in the business of letting automobiles to the public generally for hire, whose chauffeur drove and controlled the vehicle. Primrose v. Casualty Co. 37: 618, 81 Atl. 212, 232 Pa. 210.

12. A provision in a life insurance policy which provides for cash loans on it, authorizing the insurer to deduct indebtedness from the face of the policy in making settlement of the amount due thereunder, does not cover debts growing out of transactions extraneous to the contract, such as indebtedness incurred by the insured while acting as agent for the insurer. Anson v. New York L. Ins. Co. 37: 555, 96 N. E. 846, 252 Ill. 369.

INTENT.

Carrier's duty to notify passengers of intention to return to station, see Carriers, 6.

Evidence as to intent in making fraudulent horse trade, see Evidence, 31.

To abandon homestead, see Homestead.

INTEREST.

A judgment for a debt cannot allow interest on interest prior to the date of the decree, although the aggregate of principal and interest due at the date of the decree forms the basis for computing the interest from that time. Gooch v. Allen, 37: 930, 73 S. E. 56, — W. Va. —.

INTERPLEADER.

A judgment debtor may maintain a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader in a court of equity to determine the respective rights of the judgment creditor and attorneys claiming a lien on the judgment for services, to the fund representing the amount of the judgment, although the judgment is for a claim against a decedent's estate, the funds of which are under the jurisdiction of the probate court. Michigan Trust Co. v. McNamara, 37: 986, 130 N. W. 653, 165 Mich. 200.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Commerce.

INTERVENTION.

Conclusiveness against one having right to intervene, see Judgment, 5.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Constructive delivery of, by carrier, see Commerce, 1.

Variance in prosecution for selling to Indians, see Evidence, 37.

Effect of state's adopting prohibition on lease for saloon business, see Landlord and Tenant, 1.

Taxability of privilege to sell liquor, see Taxes, 4.

Lending whisky with the understanding that it is to be returned in kind is within a statute making it unlawful in any manner to sell or otherwise dispose of intoxicating liquor for gain. State v. Mitchell, 37: 302, 72 S. E. 632, 156 N. C. 659.

JOINDER.

Of parties, see Parties, 2, 3.

JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS.

Keeping alive deed of trust released by creditor to give contributions to debtor paying against codebtor, see Contributions.

Codebtor's right to enforce contribution for debt paid by him though deed of trust securing same is barred by laches, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

Codebtor's right to subrogation on payment of entire debt, see Subrogation, 1.

The settlement of an action against one of two joint tortfeasors does not bar an action against the other, unless it is shown to have been made under circumstances which operate to discharge the other wrongdoer. Walsh v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 37: 1137, 97 N. E. 408, 204 N. Y. 58.

JOINT TORT FEASORS.

See Joint Creditors and Debtors.

JUDGES.

Statute reducing number of as ex post facto law, see Constitutional Law, 1.

As to justices of the peace, see Justice of the Peace.

JUDGMENT.

On what judgment depends in action at law, see Action or Suit.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 15-17.

Relief under pleadings, see Pleading, 1.

Allowing interest on interest prior to date of decree, see Interest.

Sufficiency of title depending on probate decree distributing decedent's estate, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

Effect and conclusiveness.

1. A judgment in an action to enjoin the sale of real estate as the property of a judgment debtor, to the effect that he did not inherit any part of it from his child, is without effect, where a prior unmodified judgment in a suit to settle the accounts of the trustee, to which the interested persons were parties, determined that he did so inherit. Redman v. Hubbard, 37: 723, 130 S. W. 955, 140 Ky. 71.

2. That a bank which undertook to deliver to a carrier a package of money to be carried and delivered to another bank was the agent of the latter for that purpose does not entitle it to the benefit of a judgment in favor of the principal against the carrier for failure to perform the service, which includes a finding that the carrier received the money, in an action by the carrier to hold the agent liable for fraud in placing waste paper instead of money in the package, and obtaining a receipt from the carrier for money: American Express Co. v. Des Moines Nat. Bank, 37: 37, 123 N. W. 342, 146 Iowa, 448.

3. The mere probating of a will is not final and conclusive as to the validity and construction of the instrument, but questions regarding such matters may be raised at any time before final distribution. Lowery v. Hawker, 37: 1143, 133 N. W. 918, — N. D. —.

4. A judgment in favor of a taxpayer, enjoining a school district from paying out money under certain contracts alleged to be invalid, is not a bar to an action by the contractor to recover against the district on quantum meruit for money expended and services rendered in reliance on the contract, unless the contractor was a party to the former proceeding, or so connected therewith as to have had an opportunity to present therein an issue as to his right to recover on quantum meruit. Lee v. Independent School Dist. 37: 383, 128 N. W. 533, 149 Iowa, 345.

5. The right to intervene in an action does not, in the absence of its exercise, subject one possessing it to the risk of being bound by the result of the litigation. Lee v. Independent School Dist. 37: 383, 128 N. W. 533, 149 Iowa, 345.

6. Persons who have contracted with a school district are not so far in privacy with the district as to be bound by a judgment enjoining it from carrying out the contract on the ground of its invalidity, in a proceeding to which they are not formally made parties. Lee v. Independent School Dist. 37: 383, 128 N. W. 533, 149 Iowa, 345.

7. A taxpayer of a school district who has entered into a contract with it is not, unless expressly made so, a party to a suit by another taxpayer on behalf of himself and all other taxpayers, to enjoin the officers of the district from performing the contract on the ground of its invalidity, so as to be bound by a judgment entered in such proceeding, when he brings an action individually to enforce his claim under the contract. Lee v. Independent School Dist. 37: 383, 128 N. W. 533, 149 Iowa, 345.

8. One is not necessarily bound by a judgment in an action the result of which may affect his interests, by the fact that he is cognizant of the litigation and is present at the trial. Lee v. Independent 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

School Dist. 37: 383, 128 N. W. 533, 149 Iowa, 345.

9. A mechanics' lien claimant who undertakes on behalf of the contractor, but for his own benefit, the defense of a suit by another claimant, is bound by the judgments so far as establishes the validity of the other claim against the contractor. Ludy v. Larsen (N. J. Err. & App.) 37: 957, 79 Atl. 687, 78 N. J. Eq. 237.

10. One does not become a party to a suit so as to be bound by the judgment, even though he has an interest in the result, by appearing therein to testify as a witness at the call of one of the parties carrying on the litigation. Lee v. Independent School Dist. 37: 383, 128 N. W. 533, 149 Iowa, 345. Collateral attack.

On appointment of administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

11. Anyone having an interest in an estate, although not named in the administration proceedings, may, by application to the probate court, make his interest appear, even after judgment, so as to qualify himself to appeal, and therefore there is no necessity for a collateral attack upon the judgment. Barrette v. Whitney, 37: 368, 106 Pac. 522, 36 Utah, 574.

12. The mere fact that notices of the various steps in an administration proceeding are provided for by statute does not make them jurisdictional, so as to render the judgment subject to collateral attack in case they are not given. Barrette v. Whitney, 37: 368, 106 Pac. 522, 36 Utah, 574.

13. Where by statute probate proceedings are deemed to be proceedings in rem, and the court acquires jurisdiction of the res and all persons interested in the property by the notice given for the appointment of an executor or administrator, the giving of a notice of distribution is not jurisdictional, and therefore its omission will not subject the decree to collateral attack. Barrette v. Whitney, 37: 368, 106 Pac. 522, 36 Utah, 574.

The Lien.

Interpleader to determine respective rights of judgment creditor and attorney claiming lien on judgment, see Interpleader.

See also infra, 15-17.

14. A judgment entered and docketed against a bankrupt, pending the bankruptcy proceedings and before the discharge of the bankrupt, becomes a valid lien upon real property of the bankrupt, which by reason of the homestead exemption at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy did not pass to the bankrupt estate, but which was liable to the payment of the debt represented by the judgment, because not a part of the homestead when the debt was created; the homestead exemption having been enlarged by statute subsequent to the creation of the debt. Gregory Co. v. Cale, 37: 156, 133 N. W. 75, 115 Minn. 508.

Assignment.

Effect of assignment of judgment to free it from lien of attorney, see Attorneys, 3.

Injunction in favor of assignee against enforcing attorney's lien against judgment, see Injunction, 3.

Satisfaction.

Effect of discharge of bankrupt to extinguish judgment, see Bankruptcy.

Agent's authority to connive at forging of indorsement on draft to be used for satisfying judgment, see Principal and Agent, 3.

Enforcement.

Right of judgment creditor of life tenant to income from life estate, see Life Tenants, 1.

Extrinsic evidence as to liability of particular property for payment of, see Evidence, 15.

15. A judgment entered and docketed against a bankrupt pending bankruptcy proceedings, which is a lien on his exemptions, may be enforced by special execution after the bankrupt is discharged. Gregory Co. v. Cale, 37: 156, 133 N. W. 75, 115 Minn. 508.

Revival.

16. The legislature may provide for constructive service of notice of an application for a scire facias to revive the lien of a personal judgment, since the scire facias is merely a continuation of the original action. Waldstein v. Williams, 37: 1162, 142 S. W. 834, — Ark. —.

17. The entry of a judgment reviving a judgment lien, after the lien expires, upon a scire facias issued before such expiration, relates back to the date of the issuance of the scire facias, and continues the lien without lapse. Waldstein v. Williams, 37: 1162, 142 S. W. 834, — Ark. —.

Relief against.

18. The court should on motion vacate a judgment founded on publication of summons, which is not supported by a sufficient affidavit showing diligence to ascertain the location of defendant and make personal service upon him. Grigsby v. Woppschall, 37: 206, 127 N. W. 605, 25 S. D. 564.

JURISDICTION.

In various kinds of actions or proceedings, see Injunction; Mandamus; Specific Performance.

JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT.

In justice's court, see Justice of the Peace.

JURY.

Jurors' right to utilize their own knowledge, see Trial, 1, 2.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to, see Trial, 4-6.

Questions for, see Trial, 7-12.

Instructions to, see Trial, 14-16.

1. A statute fixing an indemnity to be awarded employees injured in hazardous occupations, to be administered by a commission, is not invalid, as interfering with the constitutional right of trial by jury. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37: 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 65 Wash. 156.

Qualifications; competency.

2. One is not incompetent to serve as a juror by reason of the fact that, as an officer, he has been in charge of another jury at the same term of court. McLawhorn v. Harris, 37: 831, 72 S. E. 211, 156 N. C. 107.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

That a counterclaim pleaded in a justice's court involves an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of the justice does not prevent him from entertaining and applying it to reduce or defeat the principal demand although he may not be able to enter an affirmative judgment for the excess. Stacey Cheese Co. v. Pipkin, 37: 606, 71 S. E. 442, 155 N. C. 394.

LABOR.

Prohibiting labor on Sunday as violation of religious freedom, see Constitutional Law, 19.

LABORERS.

In general, see Master and Servant.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Why may maintain action to test validity of strike, see Parties, 1.

A labor union has a right to strike against the recognition in a shop of a system of piecework which allows workers to employ helpers, the effect of which is, in times of slack work, to deprive those not employing helpers of continuous work, although success may result in throwing out of employment those who have been employed merely at will as helpers, and injure the employer. Minasian v. Osborne, 37: 179, 96 N. E. 1030, 210 Mass. 250.

LACHES.

Effect of delay in presenting check to bank, see Banks, 4.

As bar to action, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

LAKE.

Dedication of street on shore of, see Dedication, 7.

LAND CONTRACT.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Parol evidence as to agreed mode of heating premises, see Evidence, 18.

Building owner furnishing heat, light, and power to others than tenant as owner of public utility, see Public Utility.

Confirming lease of tide land by municipality as special legislation, see Statutes, 3.

Joinder of landlord in action by tenant for injury from purchasing worthless seed, see Parties, 2.

Eviction.

Sufficiency of evidence of lost profits from eviction of tenant, see Evidence, 36.

1. A lease of property permitting its use for saloon business in accordance with law is not nullified by the adoption of a statute forbidding further sales of liquor in the locality. Hayton v. Seattle Brewing & M. Co. 37: 432, 119 Pac. 739, — Wash. —.

2. A landlord who agrees in his contract with his tenant, during the continuance of the lease, to furnish heat for the proper heating of the building leased, and fails to keep his contract, after having been given notice of the defect and allowed a reasonable time in which to remedy the same, commits acts which in law will be regarded a constructive eviction of the tenant from the premises. Russell v. Olson, 37: 1217, 133 N. W. 1030, — N. D. —.

Liability of landlord.

Measure of damages for injury to tenant's property through bursting of defective steam radiator, see Damages, 13.

Joining landlord with municipality in action for injury to person on sidewalk, see Parties, 3.

3. The owner of an apartment building who heats the separate apartments with steam supplied from a central plant is bound to keep the heating apparatus in repair. O'Hanlon v. Grubb, 37: 1213, 38 App. D. C. 251.

4. A tenant in an apartment is not guilty of contributory negligence which will prevent his holding the owner of the building liable for injuries to his furniture through a defect in the steam heating apparatus, in failing to have a small leak repaired upon discovering it, or to turn off the steam when temporarily leaving the apartment, where it was the duty of the owner to have the repairs made, and there was nothing to charge him with notice that the defective place was likely to give way and flood the apartment with water and steam. O'Hanlon v. Grubb, 37: 1213, 38 App. D. C. 251.

Recovery of possession.

6. The assignee of a lease who has been recognized by the landlord as rightfully in possession cannot be dispossessed under a warranty in an action for recovery of possession to which he is not made a party. Fulst v. Monro, 37: 600, 95 N. E. 23, 202 N. Y. 34.

LARCENY.

A statute rendering it larceny for one having property in his control, as a public officer, to appropriate it to his own use, applies to an officer having public money in his possession, although no law authorized him to receive it. State v. Snow, 37: 395, 118 Pac. 209, 65 Wash. 353.

LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

Instruction as to, see Trial, 15.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

LATERAL SUPPORT.

That different parcels of land owe to each other the duty of lateral support when in their natural condition does not require the owner of one to furnish such support for the other, when its owner attempts to construct upon it an embankment of earth far beyond its capacity to withstand. Giacconi v. Astoria, 37: 1159, 113 Pac. 855, — Or. —.

LAWS.

Necessity for pleading and proving foreign laws, see Pleading, 2.

LEGACY.

See Willa.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES.

See Executors and Administrators.

LEGISLATURE.

Validity of legislation by, generally, see Constitutional Law.

Legislative functions of city, see Municipal Corporations, 3-6.

LESSEE.

See Landlord and Tenant.

LESSOR.

See Landlord and Tenant.

LETTERS.

Sufficiency of, to constitute contract for sale of land, see Contracts, 9.

Injunction against publication or multiplication of, see Injunction, 2.

Property right in, see Literary Property.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

On exempt property subject to payment of particular debt, see Election of Remedies, 2.

Exemption of homestead, see Homestead.

Extending lien secured by levy by injunction restraining sale, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Presumption of knowledge rendering transmission of telegram libelous, see Evidence, 7.

Under a statute imposing a penalty for refusal to transmit a telegram, neither a telegraph company nor its operator is guilty of libel in transmitting a message stating that "board here sold out," without anything to charge the operator with notice of the meaning intended to be conveyed, although it in fact purports to state that a committee to select text-books for the schools had been bribed. Grisham v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 37: 861, 142 S. W. 271, 236 Mo. 480.

LIBRARY.

Condemnation of property used for, see Eminent Domain, 1, 2.

LICENSE.

Determination on habeas corpus as to whether license tax on peddlers is interference with interstate commerce, see Habeas Corpus.

For patent, see Patents.

Assessment on employers to provide indemnity fund for employees as a license tax, see Taxes, 2.

Uniformity and equality.

Uniformity of taxation generally, see Taxes, 1, 2.

1. An excise tax upon motor vehicles is not invalid because graduated according to seating capacity. Mark v. District of Columbia, 37: 440, 37 App. D. C. 563.

2. A statute imposing a license tax of $200 per year upon peddlers of lightning rods, steel stove ranges, clocks, pumps, and vehicles, is not void for making an arbitrary and unjust classification, although other articles may be peddled without license. State ex rel. Norwood v. Byles, 37: 774, 128 S. W. 94, 93 Ark. 612.

Double taxation.

3. That a property tax has been paid upon motor vehicles does not prevent the imposition upon them of an excise tax. Mark v. District of Columbia, 37: 440, 37 App. D. C. 563.

Enforcement.

4. An excise tax on vehicles may be enforced by criminal prosecution. Mark v. District of Columbia, 37: 440, 37 App. D. C. 563.

LICENSEES.

Right to maintain action for nuisance, see Nuisances, 2.

LIENS.

Of attorney, see Attorneys, 2, 3.

On exempt property which is subject to payment of particular debt, see Election of Remedies, 1.

Of judgment, see Judgment, 14-17.

Extension of lien secured by levy by injunction restraining sale thereunder, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

Subrogation to, see Subrogation.

LIFE ESTATE.

In general, see Life Tenants.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

LIFE TENANTS.

1. A judgment creditor of a life tenant may have the estate rented out, and the income applied in satisfaction of his claim, until the debt is paid or the estate terminates. Redman v. Hubbard, 37: 728, 130 S. W. 955, 140 Ky. 71.

2. A jury may find absence of waste on the part of a life tenant in cutting and selling one hundred dollars worth of timber from 20 or 25 acres of a 230-acre tract, 150 acres of which are already in cultivation, where it is done not to secure the profits from the timber, but to put the land into cultivation, the effect of which will be a benefit to the freehold. Rutherford v. Wilson, 37: 763, 129 S. W. 534, 95 Ark. 246.

LIGHT.

Building owner furnishing to others than tenant as owner of public utility, see Public Utility.

LIGHTNING.

Insurance against, see Insurance, 9, 10; Trial, 6.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Keeping released mortgage alive to give contribution to debtor paying against codebtor though contribution barred by limitation, see Contribution.

Limitations as bar to action to enjoin material departure from restrictive covenants, see Injunction, 6.

Laches.

Effect of delay in presenting check to bank, see Banks, 4.

1. The right of a codebtor to enforce contribution for a debt paid by him, though a deed of trust, upon property of the obligor released by the creditor, may be barred by laches. Gooch v. Allen, 37: 930, 73 S. E. 56, — W. Va. —.

When statute runs.

2. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against the enforcement of a tax, so long as it is payable without a penalty. State v. United States Exp. Co. 37: 1127, 131 N. W. 489, 114 Minn. 346.

When action is barred.

3. The right to recover money loaned at interest without any agreement as to the time of its return, or written evidence of the transaction, is barred if demand is not made within the statutory period for simple contract debts. Volli v. Wirth, 37: 297, 129 N. W. 9, 164 Mich. 21.

4. A right to damages for injuries to abutting property by the change in the grade of a street, which is given by a Constitution, does not depend upon a statute passed to harmonize the statutory law with the Constitution, and is not given by the statute, within the meaning of a statutory provision that actions for liability created by statute must be brought within a specified time after the cause of action accrues. Webber v. Salt Lake City, 37: 1115, 120 Pac. 503, — Utah, —.

Interruption of statute; removal of bar.

5. The running of a statute making void a lien secured by levying an execution on real estate, if the property is not sold within a specified time, is tolled by the granting of an injunction restraining the sale of the property. Steele v. Bliss, 37: 859, 132 N. W. 345, 166 Mich. 593.

6. Inserting a designation of the beneficiary in a complaint filed to recover money for wrongful death, which, under the statute, can be recovered only for the benefit of widow and next of kin, does not, although the complaint is insufficient without it, state a new cause of action so as to be ineffectual if the limitation period had elapsed before the amendment. Neubeck v. Lynch, 37: 813, 37 App. D. C. 576.

7. Payments on account by one who has given bond with sureties to secure money lent him by a school district, before the limitation period has expired, will toll the statute as against the sureties. Clinton County v. Smith, 37: 272, 141 S. W. 1091, — Mo. —.

8. That payments by one who has borrowed money belonging to a school district, giving as security a bond secured by mortgage, were credited to him individually on the books of the district, and not indorsed on the bond, does not render the indebtedness one merely on open account against him, with the bond as collateral, so that the payments will not affect the running of the statute of limitations against the sureties on the bond. Clinton County v. Smith, 37: 272, 141 S. W. 1091, — Mo. —.

9. An unaccepted offer to turn over a tax receipt against the property of claimant in full satisfaction of a debt is not a sufficient promise to toll the running of the statute of limitations. Marcum v. Terry, 37: 885, 142 S. W. 209, 146 Ky. 145.

LIMITATION OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Of county, see Counties, 2-5; Taxes, 6.

Of municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 7-11.

Of school district, see Schools, 2.

Injunction against levying tax to pay for improvement whose cost exceeds debt limit, see Injunction, 8.

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

Of carrier's liability, see Carriers, 11.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

See Damages, 7-9.

LIQUIDATION.

Effect of repeal of statute authorizing liquidation of insolvent bank, see Statutes, 5, 6.

LIQUOR.

See Intoxicating Liquors.

LIVE STOCK.

See Animals.

LITERARY PROPERTY.

The property right in the words of private letters is in the writer, and not in the receiver, except letters written by agents, and those where the conditions indicate that the property in the form or expression is in another than the writer; but the property right in the material on which the letter is written, with the right to transfer it, is in the receiver, in the absence of some special limitations imposed either by the subject-matter, or the circumstances under which it is sent. Baker v. Libbie, 37: 944, 97 N. E. 109, 210 Mass. 699. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

LOAN.

When right to recover money loaned is barred, see Limitation of Actions, 3.

LOCAL LAWS.

See Statutes, 3.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Constitutional right of, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

LOSS.

Of insured property, cause of, see Insurance, 9, 10.

MAGISTRATE.

See Justice of the Peace.

MALICE.

What constitutes legal malice justifying punitive damages, see Damages, 4.

MANDAMUS.

Officers' right to question constitutionality of statute in mandamus proceeding, see Statutes, 1.

The refusal of a Federal circuit court to remand a civil cause to the state court whence it had been removed as presenting a separable controversy between citizens of different states cannot be reviewed by mandamus, which may not be used to perform the office of an appeal or writ of error. Re Harding, 37: 392, 55 L. ed. 252, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324, 219 U. S. 363.

MANUFACTURERS.

Liability for injury due to defects in articles manufactured, see Negligence, 1-4.

Notice to purchaser of defect in automobile sold, see Notice.

MARKETABLE TITLE.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

MARRIED WOMEN.

In general, see Husband and Wife.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Constitutionality of workmen's compensation act, see Constitutional Law, 3, 4, 7-10, 12, 16, 20; Jury, 1; Taxes, 2, 5.

When court will set aside employees' indemnity act as invalid, see Courts, 4.

Injunction against employer's accepting benefits of employees' indemnity act, see Injunction, 1.

Combination of employees, see Labor Organizations.

Question for jury as to reasonableness of rule for guidance of servant, see Trial, 9.

Rights and relation generally.

Mine employee riding on train as a passenger, see Carriers, 3.

1. A rule that employees in a factory must keep their street clothing in the dressing room and away from machinery is reasonable. Thomas v. Houston, Stanwood, & Gamble Co. 37: 950, 142 S. W. 214, 146 Ky. 156.

2. In the absence of a sudden or unexpected emergency, the conductor of a freight train has no implied authority to enter into a contract to carry a person to a certain place in consideration of the rendition of service in handling freight. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jones, 37: 418, 132 S. W. 636, 96 Ark. 558.

Servant's right to medical attention.

3. An employee who, under his contract with an employer, retains a portion of his wages for a hospital fund, the contract making him a member of the hospital association, membership in which entitles him to medical attention when injured, is liable for the expense of such attention when the employee is injured in his service. Jackson v. Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co. 37: 757, 120 Pac. 1, — Or. —.

4. An employee who, under his contract of employment, is entitled to medical attention from his employer in case of injury, may employ a physician at his employer's expense if the employer has no hospital service, and does nothing towards furnishing needed attention after receiving notice that the employee has been injured and needs treatment. Jackson v. Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co. 37: 757, 120 Pac. 1, — Or. —.

Termination of relation; discharge.

5. Contract authority to discharge an employee for bad conduct includes the right to discharge him for refusal to obey a rule requiring street clothes to be kept in the dressing rooms. Thomas v. Houston, Stanwood, & Gamble Co. 37: 950, 142 S. W. 214, 146 Ky. 156.

Master's duty and liability generally.

Validity of agreement for arbitrating extent of injury, see Contracts, 17.

Burden of proving parent's waiver of employer's agreement that infant employee should not go about machinery, see Evidence, 8.

Parent's right of action against master for injury to infant servant, see Parent and Child.

6. That a boy was negligent and disobeyed orders in going about his master's machinery will not absolve the master from liability to the parent for the boy's death caused by the machinery, if the master failed to use due care and diligence to keep his agreement with the father when the boy was hired out to him, not to let him go about the machinery. Haynie v. North Carolina Electric Power Co. 37: 580, 73 S. E. 198, 157 N. C. 503.

7. One operating a private railroad on which his employees are permitted to ride gratuitously between their homes and work must exercise for their safety the measure of care which a prudent, cautious man experienced in the business of managing and running railroads, and accustomed to the use of trains under similar circumstances, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the exercise of care and skill, would use. Dayton Coal & Iron Co. v. Dodd, 37: 456, 188 Fed. 597, 110 C. C. A. 395.

Duty as to place and appliances.

Duty as to place and appliances, see also infra, 13.

8. That a derailling switch installed on a private railroad to a mine is in advance of operations as usually conducted in such plants does not, as matter of law, relieve the owner from liability for failure to keep it in use, if experience has shown him the necessity for it. Dayton Coal & Iron Co. v. Dodd, 37: 456, 188 Fed. 597, 110 C. C. A. 395.

Assumption of risk.

By volunteer taking passage on freight train, see Carriers, 4.

Constitutionality of statutory provisions as to, see Constitutional Law, 7, 8, 16.

9. An actress who continues her performance after the other actors have begun a frolic in which they throw missiles about assumes the risk of being hit and injured by one of them. Novelty Theater Co. v. Whitcomb, 37: 514, 106 Pac. 1012, 47 Colo. 110.

Contributory negligence.

See also supra, 6.

10. An actress who, during the presentation of her part upon the stage, unnecessarily mounts a chair, which is not required by her engagement, at a time when the actors are engaged in a frolic, throwing shoes, cans, and other missiles about, and thereby becomes particularly conspicuous, is guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, which will prevent her holding her employer liable for an injury due to being hit by a missile. Novelty Theater Co. v. Whitcomb, 37: 514, 106 Pac. 1012, 47 Colo. 110.

11. An employee cannot, by habitually disregarding a rule, establish the right to treat it as waived, where he is reprimanded whenever his breach of the rule comes to the notice of the master. Thomas v. Houston, Stanwood, & Gamble Co. 37: 950, 142 S. W. 214, 146 Ky. 156.

For what acts of fellow servant master is liable.

Constitutionality of statutory abolishment of fellow servant doctrine, see Constitutional Law, 7, 8, 16.

12. The owner of a theater is not liable for injury to an actor employed by him, which is caused by a missile thrown by another actor at a time when all the employees, including the stage manager, are engaged in a frolic, since such acts are entirely outside the scope of the employment, and the employer is not answerable for them. Novelty Theater Co. v. Whitcomb, 37: 514, 106 Pac. 1012, 47 Colo. 110.

13. A mine owner who gratuitously transports by train employees between their homes and place of work may be liable for injury to them through collision of the train with runaway cars, where a derailling device is necessary, and has been provided to prevent such accidents, but superior officers of the plant have failed to instruct employees as to the use of the device, and to exercise proper supervision over them with respect to such use. Dayton Coal & Iron Co. v. Dodd, 37: 456, 188 Fed. 597, 110 C. C. A. 395.

Master's liability for acts of servant or independent contractor.

Admissibility of chauffeur's statements at time of accident, see Evidence, 23.

14. The owner of an automobile who, upon leaving home, instructs his chauffeur not to take the machine out without orders from himself or wife, is not liable for injury done by the machine while it is being used by the chauffeur contrary to the express orders so given him. Riley v. Roach, 37: 834, 134 N. W. 14, — Mich. —.

15. A municipality cannot, by letting the execution of the work to an independent contractor, escape liability for injury to private property by soft earth forced thereon, by attempting to bring a street to grade by dumping earth onto the unstable, sloping bottom of a gulch which crossed the street. Giaconi v. Astoria, 37: 1130, 113 Pac. 855, — Or. —.

16. Where, by statute, municipal corporations are liable for injury to private property through their acts or omissions as public corporations, a city if found negligent is liable for injury to private property by the sliding thereon of soft earth because of an attempt by it to bring a highway to grade, by dumping earth upon the unstable foundation at the sloping bottom of a gulch crossing it, although it committed the preparation of the plans which were adopted and followed to a competent engineer, if he made no inspection to ascertain the actual conditions before preparing his plans; and it is immaterial that the property injured is not adjacent to the street. Giaconi v. Astoria, 37: 1130, 113 Pac. 855, — Or. —.

MATERIALITY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 27-31.

MAXIMS.

1. Allegans contraria non est audiendus. Smith v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 37: 429, 184 Fed. 387, 108 C. C. A. 497.

2. A man cannot derogate from his own grant. New York Continental Jewell Filtration Co. v. Jones, 37: 193, 37 App. D. C. 511.

3. A man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts. May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 37: 912, 72 S. E. 1059, 157 N. C. 416.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

Assignability of balance due under contract for public work prior to filing of notice of liens, see Assignment.

Conclusiveness of judgment against mechanic's lien claimant, see Judgment, 9.

MEDICAL ATTENTION.

Servant's right to, see Master and Servant, 3, 4.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MEMORANDUM.

On policy register of deceased insurance agent, admissibility, see Evidence, 11, 12.

MINES.

Mine employee riding on private railroad as a passenger, see Carriers, 3.

Employer's duty and liability as to derailing switch on private railroad to mine, see Master and Servant, 8, 13.

Waiver of rights by one contracting to drive entries in mine, see Contracts, 22.

Extent of damages recoverable for breach of agreement to furnish appliances to one contracting to drive entries in mine, see Damages, 6.

Mining claims as separate or community property, see Husband and Wife, 8.

Injunction against casting mine water into stream to injury of lower riparian land, see Injunction, 4.

Owner's liability for injury by mineral matter in water from, see Waters, 7.

Necessity of notice to purchaser of mine to render him liable for nuisance. see Nuisances, 1.

MINORS.

See Infants.

MISREPRESENTATIONS.

By insured, see Insurance, 4, 5.

MORAL OBLIGATION.

As consideration for promise, see Contracts, 3.

MORTGAGE.

Necessity for notice to mortgagee of special assessment on mortgaged property, see Constitutional Law, 14.

Keeping released mortgage alive to give contribution to debtor paying against codebtor, see Contributions.

Right of one cotenant to purchase property from one bidding in at foreclosure sale, see Cotenancy.

Curtsey rights of man joining in mortgage of wife's property, see Curtsey.

Joinder of husband and wife in as evidence of community character of land, see Evidence, 35.

Mortgagee's right to machinery subsequently purchased as against seller, see Fixtures.

Codebtor's right to enforce for debt paid by him through deed of trust securing same is barred by laches, see Limitation of Actions, 11.

Subrogation to rights of mortgagee, see Subrogation, 1-3.

1. The holder of a bond secured by mortgage of real estate has a right to bid at a sale of the property made by the trustees named in the mortgage. McLawnhorn v. Harris, 37: 831, 72 S. E. 211, 156 N. C. 107.

What constitutes an equitable mortgage.

2. One having no interest in land, legal or equitable, at the time a deed was executed by the owner to a third party, cannot assert the rights of a mortgagee therein against the grantee, solely by virtue of an oral agreement made by the grantee to convey the land to him upon payment of a certain sum. Re Bennett, 37: 521, 132 N. W. 309, 115 Minn. 342.

3. One who, upon negotiating a transfer of real estate to another, receives from him an oral promise that the title will be transferred to himself upon payment of a certain amount of money, does not, because of his services in the matter or because of the fact that he had a possible broker's opportunity to find another purchaser for the property, acquire the equitable rights of a mortgagor. Re Bennett, 37: 521, 132 N. W. 309, 115 Minn. 342.

MOTOR VEHICLES.

Validity of license tax on, see License, 1, 3.

MOVING PICTURE SHOW.

Constitutionality of statute prohibiting keeping moving picture show open on Sunday, see Constitutional Law, 11.

Negligence in maintaining step at exit of darkened room, see Negligence, 5, 6.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Assignability of balance due under contract for public work, see Assignment.

Power to condemn property for street, see Eminent Domain.

Municipal liability for removing trees from street, see Highways, 2.

Duty to avoid injury to private property in improving street, see Highways, 3.

Confirming lease of tide land by municipality as special legislation, see Statutes, 3.

Validity of requirement that municipalities compensate injured workman in their employ, see Taxes, 5.

Obstruction of navigable waters by construction of bridge by, see Waters, 5, 6.

Amendment of charter.

Constitutionality of legislation giving municipality initiative, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

Validity of vote for amendment, see Elections, 1, 2.

1. The adoption by the voters of a city of a charter amendment authorizing the building of a bridge is not rendered void by the insertion of an invalid provision that it be turned over to the county when completed. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

pleted. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

2. The validity of the submission to the voters of a proposed charter amendment cannot be destroyed because the proposal for it was filed with the city auditor in his capacity as clerk of the common council rather than as clerk of the city, where the ordinance authorizing the proceeding required the proposal to be filed merely with the auditor. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

Ordinances.

Prohibition against criminal prosecution of railroad company for violating ordinance, see Prohibition.

3. The repeal of an ordinance as amended, which provides for the submission of a question to the voters on a certain date, carries with it an amendment requiring its submission on another date. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

4. A resolution fixing the date when a proposition shall be submitted to the voters of the city may be passed before the expiration of the period which must elapse before a prior ordinance repealing a proposition to submit at another date can take effect. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

Regulation of business; billboards.

5. Charter authority to license and regulate hackmen, draymen, drivers, and all others pursuing like occupations, does not empower a municipality to forbid children under a specified age to operate automobiles on its streets. Ex parte Epperson, 37: 303, 134 S. W. 685, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —.

6. A municipal corporation may forbid the construction of billboards nearer than 24 inches to the ground, when not placed against solid walls. State v. Staples, 37: 696, 73 S. E. 112, 157 N. C. 637.

Limitation of indebtedness.

Limitation of indebtedness of county, see Counties, 2-5.

Limitation of indebtedness of school district, see Schools, 2.

Injunction against levying tax to pay for improvement whose cost exceeds debt limit, see Injunction, 8.

7. An indebtedness of a municipality for public improvements arises, for the purpose of determining whether or not it is exceeding its constitutional debt limit, when the work is completed and accepted, and it is not necessary first to assess the special benefits and ascertain the amount of the cost which the municipality is required to pay. Logansport v. Jordan, 37: 1036, 85 N. E. 959, 171 Ind. 121.

8. A municipal corporation cannot avoid a constitutional limitation upon the amount of its indebtedness, by attempting to pay for a public improvement completed and accepted at a time when such limit has been exceeded, by dividing the cost into instalments and levying one each year until the entire amount is paid. Logansport v. Jordan, 37: 1036, 85 N. E. 959, 171 Ind. 121.

9. Whether or not a municipal contract for water supply for a number of years at a stipulated price per year, payable quarterly, violates a constitutional limit of indebtedness, depends upon whether or not the required payments for one year exceed the permitted indebtedness, and not the aggregate amount for the full term of the contract. Allison v. Chester, 37: 1042, 72 S. E. 472, 60 W. Va. 533.

10. That a sewer is necessary to receive and dispose of the storm water in a municipality, and thereby prevent actions against it for damages, does not justify its incurring indebtedness for the sewer in violation of the constitutional limitation of its indebtedness. Logansport v. Jordan, 37: 1036, 85 N. E. 959, 171 Ind. 121.

11. In determining whether or not a municipal corporation has reached its constitutional debt limit, the indebtedness of an independent school district which is coincident with its territorial limits, and which has been created by the legislature a distinct municipality, with power to create indebtedness to a certain amount, is not to be considered. Ex parte Newport, 37: 1034, 132 S. W. 580, 141 Ky. 329.

MURDER.

See Homicide.

MUTUAL WILLS.

Oral agreement for execution of, see Contracts, 11.

Specific performance of agreement to execute, see Specific Performance, 2.

NATIONALITY.

Continuance to secure witness to testify as to, see Continuance and Adjournment.

Best evidence as to, see Evidence, 9.

Competency of Indian to testify to parents' nationality, see Witnesses.

NAVIGABLE WATERS.

See Waters.

NAVIGATION.

Improvement of, see Waters, 4.

Obstruction of, see Waters, 5, 6.

NEGATIVE TESTIMONY.

Duty to instruct as to weight of, see Trial, 16.

NEGLIGENCE.

In execution of negotiable paper, see Bills and Notes, 1.

Measure of damages for negligence causing personal injury, see Damages, 11, 12.

Removal of lateral support, see Lateral Support.

Release of surety through creditor's negligence in collecting collateral, see Principal and Surety, 2.

Of carriers, see Carriers.

Of master, see Master and Servant.

Of railroads, see Railroads.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 11, 12.

Instruction as to last clear chance, see Trial, 15.

Liability of manufacturer.

Notice to purchaser of defect, see Notice.

Liability of seller of unfit seed, see Sale, 1, 2.

1. A manufacturer of an automobile will be charged with notice of the unsafe condition of a rumble seat attached to the car, if the faulty construction was so patent that no person engaged in its construction could have failed to observe it. Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37: 560, 140 S. W. 1047, 145 Ky. 616.

2. The manufacturer of an automobile who attaches to it a rumble seat so insecurely that it is likely to break off when occupied by a passenger is liable to a stranger for injuries caused by its so doing, if he knew or was charged with notice that the seat was imminently dangerous, and concealed that fact from the purchaser. Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37: 560, 140 S. W. 1047, 145 Ky. 616.

3. Representing a machine to be well built is a sufficient concealment from the purchaser of a defect in it, with notice of which the maker is charged, to bring him within the rule that a manufacturer who sells an article for general use knowing it to be imminently dangerous and unsafe, and conceals that fact from the purchaser, may be liable for injury caused by use of the machine. Old Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37: 560, 140 S. W. 1047, 145 Ky. 616.

4. A rumble seat placed upon an automobile, so insecurely as to be liable to break off if a passenger attempts to ride in it is imminently dangerous, within the rule that a manufacturer who sells an imminently dangerous article, concealing the defect from the purchaser, may be liable to strangers attempting to use it, for injuries caused by its defective condition. Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37: 560, 140 S. W. 1047, 145 Ky. 616.

Dangerous premises.

5. The proprietor of a moving-picture show is not negligent in maintaining a step at the exit of the darkened room where the pictures are shown, into the corridor, so as to render him liable to a patron who, in attempting to use the exit, falls down the step, to his injury, although a light is maintained over it which tends to dazzle the eyes of persons who emerge from the darkness. Hollenbaek v. Clemmer, 37: 698, 119 Pac. 1114, — Wash. —.

6. The proprietor of a moving-picture show is not negligent in directing patrons to use exits with which they are not familiar, if they are reasonably safe, so as to render him liable to a patron who falls down a step, to his injury, in attempting to use the exit to which he was directed. Hollenbaek v. Clemmer, 37: 698, 119 Pac. 1114. — Wash. —.

On highway.

7. The owner of a team is not, in the absence of negligence on the part of himself or his driver, liable for their breaking a window in a building abutting on a highway, while running away because of fright, where, at the time of their fright, they were being driven along the highway by an experienced driver. Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Clark, 37: 717, 129 N. W. 1065, 145 Wis. 181.

Contributory.

Of passenger, see Carriers, 8.
Of person traveling on highway, see Highways, 5.

Of servant, see Master and Servant, 10, 11.

On railroad track or right of way, see Railroads, 2-4.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see Trial, 5.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 10, 11.

8. One is not excused from all error of judgment by the fact that he is compelled to act immediately upon a sudden emergency, but he is required to use due care in view of all the circumstances. Lemay v. Springfield Street R. Co. 37: 43, 96 N. E. 79, 210 Mass. 63.

Negligence of parents.

9. Parents, one of whom is away from home all day and the other is engaged in household duties, are not negligent as matter of law in permitting their six-year-old child to go out of doors to play without someone to watch him, although near the house is a pole from which hangs a dangerous guy wire. Ferrell v. Dixie Cotton Mills, 37: 64, 73 S. E. 142, 157 N. C. 528.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes; Checks.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

As ground for new trial, see New Trial.

NEWSPAPER.

Acceptance of offer based on paid subscriptions to, see Contracts, 5.

Right to change terms of accepted offer of compensation based on subscriptions to newspapers, see Prize Contest.

Presumption of knowledge from notice inserted in, see Evidence, 7.

NEW TRIAL.

Necessity for motion for new trial to save question on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 7.

A new trial will not be granted in an action to hold an automobile manufacturer liable for injuries caused to a passenger by the breaking off of the rumble seat, because of newly discovered evidence consisting of the box on which the seat was fastened, if the court is convinced that by the exercise of diligence the box could have been secured before the trial. Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37: 560, 140 S. W. 1047, 145 Ky. 616.

NOMINAL DAMAGES.

See Damages, 1-3.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

NONEXPERTS.

Admissibility of opinion by, see Evidence, 18-20.

NONRESIDENTS.

As beneficiary in charitable trust, see Charities, 1.

NONSUIT.

Grounds for, see Trial, 13.

NOTES.

See Bills and Notes.

NOTICE.

Bank's notice of ward's rights in certificate of deposit, see Banks, 3.

Necessity of, to constitute due process, see Constitutional Law, 13-15.

Presumption of knowledge from notice inserted in newspaper, see Evidence, 7.

Notice to produce document in adversary's possession, see Evidence, 10.

Sufficiency of evidence of notice of vicious character of dog, see Evidence, 33.

Of appointment of administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 1.

Necessity of giving on discontinuing highway, see Highways, 4, 6.

Of various steps in administration proceeding, see Judgment, 12, 13.

Of application to revive lien of judgment, see Judgment, 16.

To manufacturer of automobile of defect therein, see Negligence, 1.

To purchaser of defect in automobile, see Notice.

Necessity of notice of nuisance to render purchaser liable, see Nuisances, 1.

Waiver of lack of notice of addition to tax list, see Taxes, 9.

Although a rumble seat is so insecurely fastened to an automobile that slight examination would disclose its danger, the purchaser will not be charged with notice of it, so as to relieve the manufacturer from liability for injury to a third person through its attempted use, if the purchaser was assured by the manufacturer that it was safe, and thereby induced not to make an examination. Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37: 560, 140 S. W. 1047, 145 Ky. 616.

NUISANCES.

Measure of damages for injury from, see Damages, 14, 17.

1. No action will lie against a purchaser of an abandoned mine who merely maintains it in the condition in which it came into his possession, for injuries caused to the property of others by mineral water coming from the mine, until notice has been given him of the nuisance and an opportunity afforded him to correct it. Glenn v. Crescent Coal Co. 37: 197, 140 S. W. 43, 145 Ky. 137.

2. A mere licensee using a right of way from abutting property to a highway cannot maintain an action against the township for nuisance in maintaining an open ditch along the side of the highway, which renders the private way unsafe, in attempting to cross which he is injured. Elliot v. Mason, 37: 357, 81 Atl. 701, 76 N. H. 229.

NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.

See Wills, 5.

NURSE.

Husband's right to reimbursement from wife's estate for amount paid to, see Husband and Wife, 1.

OBSTRUCTION.

Of navigation, see Waters, 5, 6.

OCCUPYING CLAIMANTS.

Right to compensation for improvements on land held under color of title, see Improvements.

OFFERS.

In general, see Contracts, 5-7.

Unaccepted offer to turn over tax receipt as promise interrupting running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 9.

OFFICERS.

Bond of, see Bonds.

Farming of office, see Contracts, 16.

Competency as juror of officer in charge of other jury, see Jury, 2.

Justice of the peace, see Justice of the Peace.

Larceny by appropriating public moneys in his possession, see Larceny.

Right to question constitutionality of statute, see Statutes, 1.

A deputy appointed by an officer to hold during the pleasure of his principal does not hold for a term, within the meaning of a constitutional provision prohibiting the change of the salary of emoluments of any public officer after his election or appointment, or during his term of office, except by operation of law enacted prior to such election or appointment. Board of Comrs. v. Hart, 37: 383, 119 Pac. 132, 29 Okla. 693.

OFFICIAL BALLOTS.

See Elections, 1-3.

OFFSETS.

See Setoff and Counterclaim.

OMITTED PROPERTY.

Right to reassess for taxation, see Taxes, 8.

OPEN ACCOUNT.

When indebtedness is one on open account, see Limitation of Actions, 8.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

OPEN SWITCH.

Leaving switch open when passenger train is expected as gross negligence, see Carriers, 7.

OPINIONS.

As evidence, see Evidence, 17-20.

OPTION.

Constitutionality of employees' indemnity act giving employees option to take advantage of it or not, see Constitutional Law, 20.

ORAL CONTRACTS.

See Contracts, 8-14; Insurance, 6-8.

ORAL EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 13-16.

ORAL LOAN.

When right to recover money loaned without written evidence is barred, see Limitation of Actions, 3.

ORDINANCES.

In general, see Municipal Corporations, 3-6.

ORNAMENTAL TREES.

Duty of municipality to avoid injury to, in improving street, see Highways, 3.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Inheritance by adopted children, see Descent and Distribution, 1-3.

Burden of proving parent's waiver of employer's agreement that infant employee should not go about machinery, see Evidence, 8.

Matters as to infants generally, see Infants.

Liability to parent for death of minor servant, see Master and Servant, 6.

Contributory negligence of parents, see Negligence, 9.

A master who violates his agreement with the parent of a child entering his employ, not to let him leave his working place and go about machinery situated in another part of the plant, is liable to the parent for injury caused to the child by such machinery. Haynie v. North Carolina Electric Power Co. 37: 580, 73 S. E. 198, 157 N. C. 503.

PARKS AND SQUARES.

Dedication for, see Dedication, 1, 2.

PAROL CONTRACTS.

As to insurance rates, see Insurance, 6-8.

See also Contracts, 8-14.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

As to writing, see Evidence, 13-16.

PARTIES.

Who may enforce covenants in deed, see Covenants and Conditions, 2-4.

Who are affected by judgment, see Judgment, 4-10.

Who may have remedy against nuisance, see Nuisances, 2.

Right to dispossess assignee of lease under warranty in action to which assignee was not made a party, see Landlord and Tenant, 5.

Failure to make interested persons parties in action to remove cloud as ground for nonsuit, see Trial, 13.

1. One who will lose his employment by success of a strike may maintain an action to test its validity. Minasian v. Osborne, 37: 179, 96 N. E. 1036, 210 Mass. 250. Joiner.

2. One who, in renting land, reserves a share of the crop as rent, may join with the tenant in an action for damages against one from whom the tenant purchased seed which proves to be worthless, by reason of which the crop was lost. Fuhrman v. Interior Warehouse Co. 37: 89, 116 Pac. 666, 64 Wash. 159.

3. The owner of a building who constructed a covering over an opening in the sidewalk, in such a manner as to be dangerous to pedestrians, his lessee, who maintained it in such condition, and the municipality, who permitted it to remain so, may be joined in an action by a pedestrian to recover damages for injuries caused by it. Fortmeyer v. National Biscuit Co. 37: 569, 133 N. W. 461, 116 Minn. 158.

PARTITION.

Right to solicitor's fees in action for, see Costs and Fees, 1.

PARTNERSHIP.

Partnership real estate.

Transfer of title by estoppel to grantees of firm, see Estoppel, 2.

Sufficiency of evidence that lands in one partner's name were partnership lands, see Evidence, 34.

1. It is not necessary that the circumstances and dealings of partners, relied on to show that real estate standing in the name of one of them was partnership property, should be the equivalent of an express agreement, it being sufficient if an agreement to that effect be implied from them. Johnson v. Hogan, 37: 889, 123 N. W. 891, 158 Mich. 635.

2. To establish partnership title to real estate standing in the name of one of the partners it is not necessary to show that it was purchased with partnership funds, since it may have been intended as a contribution by him to the firm assets. Johnson v. Hogan, 37: 889, 123 N. W. 891, 158 Mich. 635.

3. Whether or not real estate standing in the name of a member of a partnership is, as between the partners, to be treated as partnership property, must be determined by ascertaining from their conduct the course of dealings their understanding and intention. Johnson v. Hogan, 37: 889, 123 N. W. 891, 158 Mich. 635.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

PART PAYMENTS.

As affecting limitation of action, see Limitation of Actions, 7, 8.

PART PERFORMANCE.

Of oral contract, see Contracts, 11-14.

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

PASTEUR TREATMENT.

As element of damages for injury by bite of dog, see Damages, 11.

PATENTS.

The mere filing by a licensee under a patent who is not in default under his contract, of a brief interpreting adversely to the patent the record in a suit which the patentee had instituted against an alleged infringer, is not such a repudiation, renunciation, or forfeiture of the license that the licensee can no longer enforce rights under it, or as to justify a court of equity in decreeing its cancellation. Comptograph Co. v. Burroughs Adding Mach. Co. 37: 821, 183 Fed. 321, 105 C. C. A. 533.

PATRONS.

Negligence toward patrons of moving picture show, see Negligence, 5, 6.

PAYMENT.

Of draft on forged indorsement, effect, see Bills and Notes, 3.

As affecting limitation of action, see Limitation of Actions, 7, 8.

Subrogation on, see Subrogation.

By check.

1. When a debtor has given his check for the amount of his indebtedness, in the absence of a contrary agreement, such check is given and received as a conditional, not an absolute, payment of the debt. McFadden v. Follrath, 37: 201, 130 N. W. 542, 114 Minn. 85.

2. A check given by a debtor to pay his account, paid by the bank and charged to his account therein, discharges his liability of the original account, although it was wrongfully indorsed by the agent authorized to receive it. McFadden v. Follrath, 37: 201, 130 N. W. 542, 114 Minn. 85.

Application of.

3. If neither debtor nor creditor apply payments made by one owing more than one debt, the law makes the application upon the one lease secured. Bell v. Bell, 37: 1203, 56 So. 926, — Ala. —.

PEDDLERS.

Determination on habeas corpus as to whether license tax on peddlers is interference with interstate commerce, see Habeas Corpus.

Equality of license tax on, see License, 2.

PENALTIES.

Infliction of, on insurance agent giving special rates, see Criminal Law.

Distinguished from liquidated damages, see Damages, 7-9.

Admissibility of evidence in action for penalty for rebating, see Evidence, 30.

Against insurance company for discrimination in rates, see Insurance, 1, 2.

Right of jury to fix amount of, see Trial, 8.

One does not lose the right to share in a penalty imposed for the rebating of life insurance premiums, by the fact that he furnished the money to pay the premium and directed an applicant to secure a rebate if possible. People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37: 778, 96 N. E. 1049, 252 Ill. 398.

PEOPLE.

Constitutionality of statute empowering people to make laws, see Constitutional Law, 21.

PERFORMANCE.

Of Contract, see Contracts, 11-14, 19, 21, 22.

Specific performance, see Specific Performance.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

To passenger, see Carriers.

Measure of damages for, see Damages, 11, 12.

To employees generally, see Master and Servant.

On railroad track, see Railroads.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Measure of damages for injury to tenant's property through bursting of defective steam radiator, see Damages, 13.

Sale of, see Sale.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

See Executors and Administrators.

PETITION.

To take land to widen street, see Highways, 1.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Husband's right to reimbursement from wife's estate for amount paid to, see Husband and Wife, 1.

Servant's right to medical attention, see Master and Servant, 3, 4.

PLAINTIFFS.

Parties plaintiff, see Parties, 1, 2.

PLAT.

Dedication by, see Dedication.

PLEADING.

Variance between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 37.

Amendment of pleading as affecting limitation of action, see Limitation of Actions, 6.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Relief under pleadings.

1. Under a declaration seeking to hold a carrier liable for injuries because of careless, negligent, and reckless operation of its car in approaching and rounding a curve, a recovery cannot be allowed for defect in the car, or failure to inspect. Le-may v. Springfield Street R. Co. 37: 43, 96 N. E. 79, 210 Mass. 63.

What must be pleaded.

As to answers in application of insurance, see Evidence, 3.

2. Foreign laws differing from those of the state in which an action is pending, and which are relied on to support the cause of action or defense, must be pleaded and proved. United States Banking Co. v. Veale, 37: 540, 114 Pac. 229, 84 Kan. 385.

3. One attempting to hold the official bond of a sheriff liable for an injury caused by his deputy must allege facts showing that the act was within the scope of his official duty, and it is not sufficient merely to allege that conclusion. People use of Tamplin v. Beach, 37: 873, 113 Pac. 513, 49 Colo. 516.

Reply.

4. In an action by the vendor for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real property, an allegation in an answer that the plaintiff has never tendered a deed executed by himself is met by allegations in the reply that no previous objection had been made upon that ground to the deed which he had tendered, and that he had at all times been, and was still, able and willing to furnish such a deed. George H. Paul Co. v. Shaw, 37: 1123, 119 Pac. 546, 86 Kan. 136.

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Liability of bank for surrendering collateral security given by guardian to make up defalcation, see Banks, 3.

Release of surety through creditor's negligence in collecting collateral, see Principal and Surety, 2.

Effect of indorsing purchase money note as collateral on conditional sale contract, see Sale, 3.

POLICE POWER.

In general, see Constitutional Law, 12, 17, 18.

POOR AND POOR LAWS.

Charitable gift for poor, see Charities, 2, 5, 7.

Authority to condemn land used for poor farm, see Eminent Domain, 3.

POOR FARM.

Municipal authority to condemn for purpose of laying out street, see Eminent Domain, 3.

PORTS.

Obstruction of navigable water by construction of bridge, see waters, 5, 6.

POSITIVE TESTIMONY.

Duty to instruct as to weight of, see Trial, 16.

POSSESSION.

Recovery of possession from assignee of lease, see Landlord and Tenant, 5.

POWER.

Building owner furnishing to others than tenant as owner of public utility, see Public Utility.

PRECATORY TRUSTS.

See Trusts, 1-3.

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 8-14.

PRESUMPTIONS.

See Evidence, 1-8.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Agent's right to benefit of judgment in favor of principal, see Judgment, 2.

Wrongful indorsement of check by agent, see Payment, 2.

Agents' authority.

Authority of ticket agent, see Carriers, 2, 9.

Burden of proving authority of traveling salesmen, see Evidence, 2.

1. Authority of an agent to collect bills and receipt therefor carries no implication of authority to indorse negotiable paper. McFadden v. Follrath, 37: 201, 130 N. W. 542, 114 Minn. 85.

2. One employed to solicit orders for, or make sales of, goods, has no implied authority to take back goods sold and delivered, because of dissatisfaction on the part of the customer. American Sales Book Co. v. Whitaker, 37: 91, 140 S. W. 132, — Ark. —.

3. A judgment creditor is not bound by the act of his agent for the collection of the judgment in conniving at the forgery of an indorsement on a draft of a stranger, and using it to secure a bank credit from which the judgment debtor can satisfy the judgment, so that the bank can refuse to cash a check growing out of such credit, on the ground of fraud, since such act is beyond the scope of the agent's authority. Robinson v. Pikeville, 37: 1186, 142 S. W. 1065, 146 Ky. 538.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Subrogation of surety, see Subrogation, 4.

Release of surety.

1. Delay short of the limitation period in enforcing payment of a bond from the principal will not release the sureties from liability thereon. Clinton County v. Smith, 37: 272, 141 S. W. 1091, — Mo. —.

2. A creditor is bound to use proper care and diligence in the management and collection of collateral securities; and a surety will be released, to the extent of the 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

loss actually sustained by the negligence of the creditor, to the same extent, as if such loss was due to some positive act of the creditor. First Nat. Bank v. Kittle, 37: 699, 71 S. E. 109, 69 W. Va. 171.

PRINTED SIGNATURE.

Sufficiency of to satisfy statute of frauds, see Contracts, 10.

PRIORITY.

Of assignment of balance due under contract for public work over mechanics' liens subsequently filed, see Assignment.

In right to bank charter, see Banks, 2.

PRIVATE RAILROAD.

Employee riding on as a passenger, see Carriers, 3.

Duty of owner of, towards employees riding gratuitously to and from work, see Master and Servant, 7.

PRIVITY.

Between contractor and school district, see Judgment, 6.

PRIZE CONTEST.

Acceptance of offer to person obtaining highest vote based on newspaper subscriptions, see Contracts, 5.

One making an offer of specified compensation to whoever obtains the highest vote based on paid subscriptions to a newspaper cannot, after acceptance and part performance of its terms, either change the terms of the offer or give to them an interpretation contrary to their true meaning, without the consent of the other party. Mooney v. Daily News Co. 37: 183, 133 N. W. 573, 116 Minn. 212.

PROBATE.

Of wills, see Wills, 3.

PROCEEDING IN REM.

Administration proceeding as, see Judgment, 13.

PROCESS.

See Writ and Process.

PROHIBITION.

That informations against a railroad company for alleged violation of a municipal ordinance in running its cars across streets, filed in a court which has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, fail to state a cause of action, will not justify the issuance of a writ of prohibition against the prosecutions, although the number is so great as to be oppressive. State ex rel. Terminal R. Asso. v. Tracy, 37: 448, 140 S. W. 888, 237 Mo. 109.

PROMISE.

Contracts generally, see Contracts

PROMISSORY NOTES.

See Bills and Notes.

PROPERTY.

Condemnation of, see Eminent Domain.

PROPERTY RIGHTS.

In private letters, see Literary Property.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

See District and Prosecuting Attorney.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Of injury by carrier or railroad company.

1. The carrying of a passenger beyond his station, into the railroad yards, without giving him an opportunity to alight at the station, and failure to inform him of an intention to return to the station, is not the proximate cause of illness due to his attempt to walk back in a storm, where he was not pressed for time, and by remaining in the train a short time, would have been deposited at the station platform. Natchez, C. & M. R. Co. v. Lambert, 37: 264, 54 So. 836, — Miss. —.

2. Failure of a railway company to give warning of the approach of a train at a public crossing, as required by statute, is the proximate cause of an injury caused by the striking by such train of a pedestrian who, when approaching the crossing, had looked and listened at a point 35 feet therefrom, from which point a train 400 feet distant would have been visible, and saw or heard no train, although the pedestrian attempted to proceed across the track without again looking, notwithstanding the fact that the nearer the approach to the crossing the greater the distance which the railroad track in the direction from which the train approached was visible until when 7 feet therefrom a train 575 feet distant could have been seen. Wallenburg v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37: 135, 126 N. W. 289, 86 Neb. 642.

PUBLICATION.

Of summons, see Writ and Process.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Debt for, as exceeding debt limit, see Counties, 4, 5.

Right to levy tax to pay for by county whose indebtedness exceeds prescribed limitation, see Taxes, 6.

PUBLIC CHARITIES.

See Charities.

PUBLIC CORPORATIONS.

See Municipal Corporations.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Necessity for notice to mortgagee of special assessment on mortgaged property, see Constitutional Law, 14.

Dismissal of petition to widen street, see Highways, 1.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Injunction against levy of assessment, see Injunction, 8.

Exceeding debt limit for, see Municipal Corporations, 7-10.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Whole lands acquired from government as separate or community property, see Husband and Wife, 8.

Ownership of tide lands, see Waters, 2, 3.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Condemnation of property used for, see Eminent Domain, 1, 2.

PUBLIC MONEY.

Larceny by appropriation of, by officer, see Larceny.

Right to question constitutionality of statute in mandamus to compel expenditure of, see Statutes, 1.

PUBLIC POLICY.

As affecting contracts, see Contracts, 16-20.

Holding statute inoperative because opposed to, see Courts, 3.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

See Schools.

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

A building owner does not come within the meaning of a statute constituting a public utility everyone who shall furnish heat, light, or power, either directly or indirectly, to or for the public, by furnishing heat, light, and power to his own tenant and selling surplus to three neighbors. Cawker v. Meyer, 37: 510, 133 N. W. 157, 147 Wis. 320.

PUBLIC WATERS.

See Waters.

PUBLIC WORK.

Assignability of balance due under contract for, see Assignment.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

See Damages, 3-5.

PUPILS.

Free transportation of, see Schools, 1.

PURCHASE MONEY.

Effect of indorsing purchase money note as collateral on conditional sale contract, see Sale, 3.

Subrogation of right of one advancing money to pay purchase price of land, see Subrogation, 2, 3.

QUALITY.

Liability of seller of unfit seed, see Sale, 1, 2.

QUANTUM MERUIT.

Bar to action to recover on, see Judgment, 4.

QUESTION FOR JURY.

See Trial, 7-12.

RADIATORS.

Measure of damages for injury to tenant's property through bursting of defective steam radiator, see Damages, 13.

Landlord's duty to keep in repair, see Landlord and Tenant, 4.

Landlord's duty to keep in repair, see Landlord and Tenant, 4.

RAILROADS.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Injury to employees, see Master and Servant.

Private railroads, see Private Railroads.

Prohibition against criminal prosecution of, see Prohibition.

Proximate cause of injury at crossing, see Proximate Cause, 2.

Liability for withdrawing percolating water in construction of tunnel for railroad, see Waters, 8.

Injuries to animals.

Implied contract to pay for animals negligently driven in front of railroad train, see Attachment.

1. A statute requiring railroad companies to maintain fences along their rights of way sufficient to turn stock, and making the company liable, in the absence of such fence, for all damages done by their agents or engines or cars to animals on the track, provides no compensation even to owners of adjoining property for stock injured by falling through bridges. Jimerson v. Erie R. Co. 37: 1181, 97 N. E. 48, 203 N. Y. 518.
Contributory negligence.

Looking while at distance from track as proximate cause of injury at crossing, see Proximate Cause, 2.

2. Where a traveler upon a highway, without any fault on his part, is placed in a position of imminent peril at a railroad crossing, the law will not hold him guilty of such negligence as to defeat his recovery, if he does not select the very wisest course, and an honest mistake of judgment in such a sudden emergency will not of itself constitute contributory negligence, although another course might have been better and safer; and this rule is especially applicable where the person is placed in such perilous position by reason of the railroad company's negligence in failing to give proper signals. Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 37: 150, 81 Atl. 104, — N. J. —.

3. Where the view of a driver of an automobile approaching a railroad grade crossing was obstructed by permanent obstructions, so that he could not see the train approaching on the west-bound track until the front wheels of his automobile were on the east-bound track, and it appeared that, upon reaching the top of a hill 200 feet distant from the crossing, he turned off power and proceeded by force of gravity, noiselessly, at a speed of 4 miles an hour, constantly looking and listening, but hearing no signals, and it further appeared that there were no transient noises nor temporary obstructions to the view, he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in not stopping before his view became effective. Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 37: 150, 81 Atl. 104, — N. J. —.

4. A female pedestrian who, when approaching a railroad crossing, looked and listened at a point 35 feet distant therefrom, from which point 400 feet of the track was visible, and then continued toward the crossing without again looking, although the nearer the approach the greater the distance the track was visible, was not, because she did not look at the most advantageous point from which an incoming train could have been seen and a collision avoided, guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law which will preclude her holding the railroad company responsible for being struck by a train which was running at an unusual rate of speed and did not give any warning of its approach as required by statute, where plaintiff testified that in her judgment an observation made at the point from which she had looked would advise her of an approaching train and enable her to protect herself, that she continued when approaching the crossing to listen, but heard no sound to indicate an oncoming train, until struck, and that there was nothing to distract her attention. Wallenburg v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37: 135, 126 N. W. 289, 86 Neb. 642.

RATES.

Regulation of insurance rates, see Constitutional Law, 18.

Punishment of insurance agent giving special rates, see Criminal Law.

Of insurance premiums generally, see Insurance, 1, 2, 6-8.

RATIFICATION.

Of irregular employment of detective, see Counties, 1.

Of unauthorized oral agreement as to insurance rates, see Insurance, 8.

REAL PROPERTY.

Oral contract as to, see Contracts, 9, 12, 13.

Interests of cotenants, see Cotenancy.

Covenants as to, see Covenants and Conditions.

Measure of damages for injury to, see Damages, 14-19.

Dedication of, see Dedication.

Condemnation of, see Eminent Domain.

Forcible entry on and detainer of, see Forcible Entry and Detainer.

Improvement on, see Improvements.

Lien of judgment on, see Judgment, 14.

Matters as to landlord and tenant, see Landlord and Tenant.

Lateral support for, see Lateral Support.

Of partnership, see Partnership.

Records of title to, see Records and Recording Laws.

Specific performance of contract as to, see Specific Performance.

Trust in, see Trusts.

Rights, duties, and liabilities on transfer of, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Defects in title to, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

Devise of, see Wills.

Particular kinds of estate in, see Cotenancy; Curtesy; Husband and Wife; Life Tenants; Wills.

REASONABLENESS.

Of rules as to conduct of employees, see Master and Servant, 1.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 9.

REBATES.

Admissibility of evidence in action for penalty for rebating, see Evidence, 30.

By insurance company generally, see Insurance, 2.

Right to share in penalty for rebating life insurance premiums, see Penalties.

RECEIPT.

Unaccepted offer to turn over tax receipt as promise interrupting running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 9.

RECEIVERS.

Repeal of statute authorizing receiver for insolvent bank, see Statutes, 6, 6.

RECIPROCAL WILLS.

Oral agreement for execution of, see Contracts, 11.

Specific performance of agreement to execute, see Specific Performance, 2.

RECOGNITION.

Of contract taking it out of statute of frauds, see Contracts, 14.

RECONVEYANCE.

Specific performance of contract of, see Specific Performance, 1.

Right to demand reconveyance for breach of condition as passing by will, see Wills, 9.

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.

Record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1, 2.

Records of title.

Effect of failure to record agreement that title to machinery sold shall remain in seller, see Fixtures, 1.

Where the owner of real estate executes and acknowledges a deed thereto, leaving the name of the grantee blank, and intrusts it to another, with authority to negotiate a sale of the land, fill in the name of the buyer, and deliver the deed upon certain conditions, and the holder of the deed, in violation of his instructions, delivers it to a third person, who fills in his own name and records the deed, an innocent purchaser of the property upon the faith of the record acquires such a right that his claim of title cannot be adjudged void at the suit of the original owner, without compensation being made for what he has lost by the transaction. Guthrie v. Field, 37: 326, 116 Pac. 217, 85 Kan. 58.

RE-ENTRY.

Right of re-entry for condition broken as passing by will, see Wills, 8.

REFERENDUM.

Constitutionality of provisions as to, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6, 21.

REGISTRATION.

Criminal liability of discharged convict for registering as voter, see Elections, 4.

Of deed, see Records and Recording Laws.

REIMBURSEMENT.

Implied contract by maker to reimburse accommodation indorser, see Contracts, 1.

Husband's right to reimbursement from deceased wife's estate, see Husband and Wife, 1, 2.

RELATION.

Relation back of entry of judgment reviving judgment lien, see Judgment, 17.

RELEASE.

Keeping released mortgage alive to give contribution to debtor paying against codebtor, see Contributions.

Effect of settlement of action against one joint tortfeasor, see Joint Creditor and Debtors.

Of surety, see Principal and Surety.

RELEVANCY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 27-31.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

Prohibiting labor on Sunday as violation of, see Constitutional Law, 19.

REMAINDERMEN.

See Life Tenants.

REMAINDERS.

In general, see Life Tenants.

Under will, see Wills, 12.

REMANDING.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 16.

REMEDIES.

Election of, see Election of Remedies.

REMEDY AT LAW.

Right to injunction in case of, see Injunction, 1.

REMITTITUR.

Curing prejudicial error in instructions by, see Appeal and Error, 13.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Review by mandamus of Federal refusal to remand cause to state court, see Mandamus.

RENEWAL.

Of right to liquidated damages, see Damages, 9.

RENUNCIATION.

Of rights under license to patent, see Patents.

REPEAL.

Of city ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

Of statute, see Statutes, 5, 6.

REPLEVIN.

Replevin will not lie to recover an undivided interest in a crop of corn which is on the stalk in a large field of unequal yield in spots, and which is being devoured by cattle. McDonald v. Bailey, 37: 267, 107 Pac. 523, 25 Okla. 849.

REPLY.

Sufficiency of, see Pleading, 4.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT.

Guaranty of, see Constitutional Law, 21.

REPUDIATION.

Of rights under license to patent, see Patents.

RES GESTÆ.

See Evidence, 22-25.

RES JUDICATA.

See Judgment, 1-13.

RESOLUTION.

Passage of, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

See Master and Servant, 14-16.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

Injunction to protect, see Injunction, 5-7.

See also Covenants and Conditions.

RESULTING TRUSTS.

See Trusts, 4.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 8-14.

REVIEW.

Of order or judgment, see Appeal and Error.

On habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

REVIVAL.

Of judgment lien, see Judgment, 16, 17.

Of wills, see Wills, 2, 4.

REVOCATION.

Of wills, see Wills, 1.

REVOLVER.

Sheriff's liability for injury to bystander by discharge of revolver dropped by deputy, see Bonds.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

Riparian rights, see Waters.

RISK.

Insurance against, see Insurance, 9, 10.

RIVER.

As boundary, see Boundaries.

Improving navigation of, see Waters, 4.

ROADS.

See Highways.

RULES.

Reasonableness of rule as to conduct of employees, see Master and Servant, 1.

Discharge of servant for disobedience of, see Master and Servant, 5.

Waiver of by habitually disregarding, see Master and Servant, 11.

Question for jury as to reasonableness of, see Trial, 9.

RULES OF EVIDENCE.

Statute changing as ex post facto law, see Constitutional Law, 2.

RUNAWAY.

Owner's liability for breaking of window by runaway team, see Negligence, 7.

RUNNING WITH THE LAND.

Covenants running with the land, see Covenants and Conditions, 4-6.

SALARY.

Right to change salary of deputy, see Officers.

SALE.

Acceptance of order for goods, see Contracts, 6, 7.

Measure of damages for breach of contract of, see Damages, 6, 10.

Parol evidence as to time of taking effect of, see Evidence, 14.

Effect of provisions in to prevent article sold becoming fixture, see Fixtures.

Seller's liability for injury by defects in things sold, see Negligence, 1-4.

Notice to purchaser of defect in automobile sold, see Notice.

Of land generally, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Liability in case of unfitness.

1. One who sells unfit seed, knowing the purpose for which it is to be used, is liable for damages in case the crop is lost because of such unfitness. Fuhrman v. Interior Warehouse Co. 37: 89, 116 Pac. 666, 64 Wash. 159.

2. No liability in damages exists because seed does not prove to be of the variety specified in the sale, where the contract provides that neither the seller nor his employees shall give any warranty, express or implied, as to description, utility, productiveness, or any other matter, of any seeds. Leonard Seed Co. v. Crary Canning Co. 37: 79, 132 N. W. 902, 147 Wis. 166.

Conditional sale.

3. Under a conditional-sale contract by which the title remains in the seller until performance of the conditions, the indorsement of the purchase-money note to a bank as collateral for a loan to the seller is an election to treat the note as an absolute debt, which vests title to the property in the purchaser. Winton Motor Carriage Co. v. Broadway Automobile Co. 37: 71, 118 Pac. 817, 65 Wash. 650.

SALOONS.

Effect of state's adopting prohibition on lease for saloon business, see Landlord and Tenant, 1.

SATISFACTION.

Agent's authority to take back goods because of customer's dissatisfaction, see Principal and Agent, 2.

SCHOLARSHIP.

Applying charitable devise to establishing, see Charities, 7.

SCHOOLS.

Bar to action against school district, see Judgment, 4-7.

Interruption of limitation of action on bond to school district, see Limitation of Actions, 7, 8.

Creation of trust for, see Trusts, 1.

Free transportation of pupils.

1. Although under a statute requiring school districts to provide such schools as will give all the scholars of the district as nearly equal advantages as may be practicable, and authorizing expenditures of a portion of the school money for transporting pupils to and from school, a pupil living too far from a school to walk has no absolute right to transportation, yet the district must furnish him such transportation as it can without substantially decreasing the school advantages of the other scholars in the district. Fogg v. Board of Education, 37: 1110, 82 Atl. 173, — N. H. —

Limitation of indebtedness.

Including indebtedness of independent school district in determining whether municipal debt limit is reached, see Municipal Corporations, 11.

2. The acceptance and retention of furniture and supplies by the officers of a school district creates no liability against 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) it for their value where its indebtedness is in excess of the amount named by the statute which provides that the district cannot become indebted in any manner for any purpose in excess of that amount. Superior Mfg. Co. v. School Dist. No. 63, 37: 1054, 114 Pac. 328, 28 Okla. 293.

SCIRE FACIAS.

To revive lien of judgment, see Judgment, 16, 17.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 9, 10.

SEED.

Measure of damages for loss of crop caused by defective seed, see Damages, 18, 19.

Joinder of lessor and lessee in action against one selling worthless seed to tenant, see Parties, 2.

Liability of seller of unfit seed, see Sale, 1, 2.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Local self-government, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

SEPARATE PROPERTY.

See Husband and Wife, 3-9.

SEPARATION.

Of powers of government, see Constitutional Law, 4.

SERVANTS.

See Master and Servant.

SERVICE.

Of process, see Writ and Process.

SERVICES.

Custom of conductors to carry persons in consideration of services, see Carriers, 1.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Jurisdiction of justice of the peace where counterclaim exceeds jurisdictional amount, see Justice of the Peace.

SEWERS.

Exceeding debt limit for, see Municipal Corporations, 10.

SHERIFF.

Liability on bond of, see Bonds.

What must be pleaded in action on official bond of sheriff, see Pleading, 3.

SHIPPING.

Liability for injury to freight, see Carriers, 12.

SHOOTING.

As element in forcible detainer of property, see Forcible Entry and Detainer.

Homicide by shooting bystander, see Homicide.

SHORE.

Dedication of street on, see Dedication, 7.

SICKNESS.

See Illness.

SIGNATURE.

Sufficiency of printed signature to satisfy statute of frauds, see Contracts, 10.

SOLICITORS.

See Attorneys.

SPECIAL DAMAGES.

Sufficiency of evidence of to go to jury, see Trial, 4.

SPECIAL EXECUTION.

Enforcement by, of judgment against bankrupt, see Judgment, 15.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

See Statutes, 3.

SPECIAL PRIVILEGE.

See Constitutional Law.

SPECIAL RATES.

Punishment of insurance agent giving special rates, see Criminal Law.

SPECIAL VERDICT.

See Trial, 17.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Injunctive relief against breach in condition for loss of right to specific performance, see Injunction, 7.

Sufficiency of reply in action for, see Pleading, 4.

1. Equity will not compel specific performance of a contract to reconvey land on breach of a condition in the deed as to the uses to which it may be put, where violations had occurred by prior owners of the property, so that their grantee, the present owner, might reasonably have believed that the condition had been waived. Ball v. Milliken, 37: 623, 76 Atl. 789, 31 R. I. 36.

2. Where husband and wife, pursuant to an agreement that the survivor shall take the other's property, execute reciprocal wills in each other's favor, the wife, who abides by her agreement until the husband's death, may enforce specific performance against his heirs and devisees in case he leaves a will in violation of his agreement, devising the property to others. Brown v. Webster, 37: 1196, 134 N. W. 185, 90 Neb. 591.

STAND PIPE.

As fixture, see Fixtures, 2.

STATE.

Right of, in waters, see Waters.

See also Municipal Corporations.
37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

In general, see Contracts, 8-14.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

See Limitation of actions.

STATUTES.

Constitutionality of statutes generally, see Constitutional Law.

Power of courts to pass on validity of statutes, see Courts, 2-4.

Meaning of words "child" and "issue" in statute governing descent of property, see Descent and Distribution, 2.

Who may question validity.

1. A public officer may raise the question of the constitutionality of a statute in defense of a mandamus proceeding to compel him to make expenditures of public money in accordance with its terms. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37: 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 65 Wash. 156.

Entitling.

2. A title may be affixed to an initiative measure for purposes of identification, although the law does not in terms require it. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

Local or special legislation.

3. Confirming leases made by municipalities of tide lands lying within their bays or harbors is not within the constitutional inhibition of special legislation. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 37: 686, 119 Pac. 1073. — Cal. —

Repeal; amendment.

Amendment of municipal charter, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.

Effect of repeal, on wife's separate property, see Husband and Wife, 4.

4. No change is effected in a statute providing that to be sustained a holographic will must be found among the valuable papers or effects of deceased, by changing the word "or" to "and." Re Jenkins, 37: 842, 72 S. E. 1072, 157 N. C. 429.

5. The repeal of a statute authorizing the liquidation of an insolvent bank and placing its affairs in the hands of a receiver, after a judgment against the bank in proceedings taken in accordance with its terms had been affirmed on appeal, and a subsequent motion for a new trial had been denied, does not affect the right of the bank to prosecute an appeal from the order, where the procedure governing such actions is that which applies to civil actions generally. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 37: 934, 112 Pac. 806, 159 Cal. 65.

6. The repeal of a statute authorizing the liquidation of an insolvent bank and the placing of its affairs in possession of a receiver, pending appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial after judgment against the bank in such proceeding had been affirmed on direct appeal, which motion did not operate to stay execution of the judgment, does not, in case the order is affirmed, affect any proceeding which had been taken under the statute, or judgment entered. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo 37: 934, 112 Pac. 886, 159 Cal. 65.

STEAM RADIATOR.

Measure of damages for injury to tenant's property through bursting of, see Damages, 13.

Landlord's duty to keep in repair, see Landlord and Tenant, 4.

STIPULATED DAMAGES.

See Damages, 7-9.

STREAMS.

Boundary on, see Boundaries.

Title to bed of, see Waters, 1.

STREET RAILWAYS.

As carriers, see Carriers.

STREETS.

See Highways.

STRIKES.

Right of labor union to strike, see Labor Organizations.

Who may maintain action to test validity of, see Parties, 1.

SUBROGATION.

As to mortgages.

1. A codebtor, not principal debtor, paying a debt secured by a deed of trust executed by both on their land, may have subrogation to the right of the creditor for contribution against his codebtor. Gooch v. Allen, 37: 930, 73 S. E. 56, — W. Va. —.

2. One who advances money to pay the purchase price of real estate, under an agreement that he shall be secured by mortgage, is entitled to subrogation to the vendor's lien as against the rights of the wife of the vendee, who did not comply with the statutory requirements in executing the mortgage so as to bind her interests therein, and to the extent of such lien the mortgage may be enforced. Bell v. Bell, 37: 1203, 56 So. 926, — Ala. —.

3. The inclusion in a mortgage given by a purchaser of land to one who advanced money to pay the purchase price, for which he is entitled on the principle of subrogation to enforce the vendor's lien against the rights of the purchaser's wife, who did not execute the mortgage, of indebtedness growing out of general accounts, will not enable him to have the amount of such debts included in his priority over the wife's interests. Bell v. Bell, 37: 1203, 56 So. 926, — Ala. —.

Of surety.

4. The surety on a guardian's bond, who is compelled to make good a defalcation of the guardian, is subrogated to any right which the estate has against one who aided in the defalcation. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Adoue, 37: 409, 137 S. W. 648, — Tex. —.

SUBSCRIPTION.

Acceptance of offer based on paid subscriptions to newspaper, see Contracts, 5.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

SUFFRAGE.

Right of, see Elections.

SUMMONS.

See Writ and Process.

SUNDAY.

Constitutionality of statute prohibiting keeping moving picture show open on, see Constitutional Law, 11.

Constitutionality of prohibition of labor on, see Constitutional Law, 19.

SURETIES.

See Principal and Surety.

SWITCH.

Leaving switch open when passenger train is expected as gross negligence, see Carriers, 7.

Employer's duty and liability as to derailling switch on private railroad to mine, see Master and Servant, 8, 13.

TAXES.

Payment for public building out of tax levy for series of years, effect on debt limit, see Counties, 4, 5.

Curtsey interest subject to tax liens, see Curtsey.

Presumption that funds for paying taxes on separate property belonged to community, see Husband and Wife, 7.

Injunction against levy of tax, see Injunction, 8.

When limitations begin to run against enforcement of tax, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

Unaccepted offer to turn over tax receipt as promise interrupting running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 9.

Equality; uniformity.

Uniformity and equality as to license, see License, 1, 2.

Imposing excise tax on motor vehicles which have paid property tax as double taxation, see License, 3.

1. Measuring the tax on express companies by their receipts does not violate the constitutional provisions requiring uniformity of taxation or the equal protection and due process of law. State v. United States Exp. Co. 37: 1127, 131 N. W. 489, 114 Minn 346.

2. An assessment levied on those conducting hazardous occupations, to provide an indemnity fund for their employees, is not within a constitutional provision requiring taxes to be equal and uniform, since it is in the nature of a license tax. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 37: 424, 117 Pac. 1101, 65 Wash. 156.

What taxable.

Taxation of subjects of commerce, see Commerce, 2, 3.

3. A tax on the earnings of an express company may be regarded as one on its property, although measured by earnings. State v. United States Exp. Co. 37: 1127, 131 N. W. 489, 114 Minn. 346.

4. The privilege granted a licensee to sell intoxicating liquors is not subject to assessment for taxation, under a statute providing for an ad valorem tax. Harding v. Board of Equalization, 37: 455, 133 N. W. 191, 90 Neb. 232.

For what purpose.

5. Requiring municipal corporations to compensate all workmen injured in their employ does not require taxes to be levied for other than public purposes, or deprive taxpayers of their property without due process of law. Borgnis v. Falk Co. 37: 489, 133 N. W. 209, 147 Wis. 327.

6. A constitutional provision allowing counties to levy a special tax in addition to the amount they may have regularly collected, to pay for public buildings, has no operation in counties where the indebtedness exceeds the limitation imposed upon them by another section. Hagan v. Commissioners Court, 37: 1027, 49 So. 417, 100 Ala. 544.

To whom taxable.

7. Cottages placed on real estate by lessees, supported by posts set in the ground, are assessable for taxation to the lessor, under a statute providing that any interest in real estate listed for taxation shall be set in the list of the person in whose name the title to such interest stands on the land records of the town, although the lessees have a contract right to remove them at the expiration of the term. Comstock v. Waterford, 37: 1166, 81 Atl. 1059, 85 Conn. 6.

Omitted property.

8. When earnings within the state, of an express company, for any year are omitted from the annual returns of the company for taxation, and not included in the amount of gross earnings upon which the taxes for such year were based, the state may recover taxes based on such omitted earnings in an action brought for that purpose, although no provision is made for a reassessment or subsequent assessment of omitted earnings. State v. United States Exp. Co. 37: 1127, 131 N. W. 489, 114 Minn. 346.

Waiver of objections.

9. Want of statutory notice of an addition to a tax list is waived by appealing to the assessors for relief on learning that the addition has been made. Comstock v. Waterford, 37: 1166, 81 Atl. 1059, 85 Conn. 6.

Valuation.

10. Receipts of an express company from the sale of money orders within a state are earnings of such company within the state, whether such money orders are redeemed within or without this state, and should be included in the gross earnings of such company in estimating the tax upon its property within the state. State v. United States Exp. Co. 37: 1127, 131 N. W. 489, 114 Minn. 346.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TAXICAB.

Double indemnity under policy to person injured in, see Insurance, 11.

TAX LIST.

Waiver of notice of addition to, see Taxes, 9.

TAXPAYERS.

Right to file objections against taking library property to widen street, see Eminent Domain, 2.

Conclusiveness of judgment in favor of, see Judgment, 4, 7.

Right to enjoin obstruction of navigation by construction of bridge by city, see Waters, 5.

TELEGRAPHS.

Presumption of knowledge rendering transmission of telegram libelous, see Evidence, 7.

Liability for sending libelous telegram, see Libel and Slander.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

See Cotenancy.

TENANTS.

In general, see Landlord and Tenant.

TENDER.

By grantor of warranty deed executed by third person, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

A petition to release two convicts from custody because of refusal to accept a tender of the fine fails if the amount tendered only equaled the fine imposed upon each of them. State ex rel. Temple v. Barnes, 37: 114, 132 N. W. 215, — N. D. —.

THEATERS.

Negligence in maintaining step at exit of darkened room, see Negligence, 5, 6.

THREAD.

Title to thread of stream, see Boundaries.

THREATS.

Admissibility of confession procured by, see Evidence, 21.

TICKET AGENT.

Authority of, see Carriers, 2.

TICKETS.

Railway tickets, see Carriers, 2, 9, 10.

TIDE LANDS.

Confirming lease of tide land by municipality as special legislation, see Statutes, 3.

Ownership of, see Waters, 2, 3.

TIMBER.

Cutting and selling of timber by life tenant as waste, see Life Tenants, 2.

TIME.

Of county's becoming indebted for bridge, see Counties, 3.

TITLE.

Record of, see Records and Recording Laws.

Of statute, see Statutes, 2.

Defects in, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

TORTS.

Carrier's liability in, for expelling passenger, see Carriers, 9.

Master's liability for, see Master and Servant, 14-16.

Matters as to negligence generally, see Negligence.

TOWNS.

Municipal corporations generally, see Municipal Corporations.

Licensee's right of action against township for nuisance in maintaining open ditch rendering private way unsafe, see Nuisances, 2.

TRADE.

Unfair competition in, see Unfair Competition.

TRADEMARK.

Punitive damages for infringement of, see Damages, 3, 4.

Matters as to unfair competition generally, see Unfair Competition.

TRADE NAMES.

Matters as to unfair competition generally, see Unfair Competition.

TRADE UNIONS.

See Labor Organizations.

TRANSPORTATION.

Free transportation of pupils, see Schools, 1.

TRAVELING SALESMEN.

Burden of proving authority of, see Evidence, 2.

TREES.

Municipal liability for removing trees from street, see Highways, 2.

TRESPASS.

Measure of damages for trespass causing fright to one's wife, see Damages, 12.

TRIAL.

Evidence on, see Evidence.

Right to jury trial, see Jury, 1.

Witnesses on, see Witnesses.

Jurors' use of their own knowledge.

1. Jurors may, in determining the credibility of evidence, utilize the knowledge which they acquired in viewing the premises where the transaction out of which the action arose occurred. Solberg v. Robbins Lumber Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bins Lumber Co. 37: 790, 133 N. W. 28, 147 Wis. 259.

2. Jurors may, in weighing the evidence, utilize whatever personal expert knowledge they may have of the subject under consideration, and give the benefit of their knowledge to other jurors who may lack it. Solberg v. Robbins Lumber Co. 37: 790, 133 N. W. 28, 147 Wis. 259. Striking out evidence.

Harmless error in refusing to strike out, see Appeal and Error, 11.

3. An answer which is relevant and material to the issue, although unresponsive, should not be stricken out when the witness is competent. Atwood v. Atwood, 37: 591, 79 Atl. 59, 84 Conn. 169.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury.

4. The jury should not be allowed to consider the question of special damages in an action by a tenant for eviction if there is no evidence in the case to support them. Russell v. Olson, 27: 1217, 133 N. W. 1030. — N. D. —.

5. Where the evidence, when plaintiff rests, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, leaves the contributory negligence of the plaintiff in doubt, the determination of the question must be submitted to the jury. Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 37: 150, 81 Atl. 104, — N. J. —.

6. Evidence that many years before a loss, insured applied to an insurer for a policy covering loss by fire and lightning, and received it, and that the insurance had been renewed from year to year since; and that the agent acknowledged, after the loss, that a lightning clause was attached to the policy,—is sufficient to carry the question whether or not it was upon the policy to the jury, although the policy is lost, and insured did not notice whether in fact it was on the policy last issued. Cummings v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 37: 1169, 134 N. W. 79, — Iowa, —.

Questions of law and fact.

Contributory negligence of driver of automobile at railroad crossing, see Railroads, 3.

7. The credibility of a witness employed by the government to secure evidence against persons selling liquor to Indians is for the jury. State v. Rackich, 37: 760, 119 Pac. 843, 66 Wash. 390.

8. Where an action for penalty for breach of a statute is a civil one in debt, the jury should fix the amount of the recovery. People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37: 778, 96 N. E. 1049, 252 Ill. 398.

9. The question of the reasonableness of a rule promulgated by a master for the guidance of his servant is for the court. Thomas v. Houston, Stanwood & Gamble Co. 37: 950, 142 S. W. 214, 146 Ky. 156.

10. Whether or not a person placed in peril by another's negligence acted with ordinary care under the circumstances in attempting to extricate himself is a question for the jury. Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 37: 150, 81 Atl. 104. — N. J. —.

11. The jury must determine the questions of negligence and contributory negligence if a passenger attempting to pass from one car to another of a moving train is thrown from the platform by a sudden jerk of the train and injured, for which he is attempting to hold the railroad company liable. Auld v. Southern R. Co. 37: 518, 71 S. E. 426, 136 Ga. 266.

12. The question of the negligence of a municipality which, in attempting to bring a street to grade, dumps earth upon the unstable sloping bottom of a gulch crossing it, so as to force the soft mud onto private land to its injury, is one of fact. Giacconi v. Astoria, 37: 1150, 113 Pac. 855, — Or. — Grounds of nonsuit.

13. It is not ground for nonsuit that persons having equitable interests, other than ownership, in real property, title to which is sought to be quieted, are not made parties plaintiff, when such persons participate in the action, through the plaintiff, to an extent that the decree will bind them equally with the parties to the action, when the action is maintained by the record owner as the real party in interest. McKenzie v. Gussner, 37: 918, 134 N. W. 33, — N. D. — Instructions.

Prejudicial error in giving instructions, see Appeal and Error, 12, 13.

14. The court cannot instruct the jury that they may find against the bona fides of a purchaser of a negotiable note alleged to have been secured by fraud, because the purchaser had knowledge of other transactions of the payee which were not honest, Vaughn v. Johnson, 37: 816, 119 Pac. 879, 20 Idaho. 669.

15. Where the evidence in a negligence action does not tend to support the last clear chance doctrine, a requested instruction in regard thereto should not be given, although it may state a correct abstract principle at law. Wallenburg v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37: 135, 126 N. W. 289, 86 Neb. 642.

16. Upon the question whether or not a particular statement was made, the court is not bound to instruct as to the weight to be given to positive and negative testimony respectively. Ayers v. Macoughtry, 37: 865, 117 Pac. 1088, 29 Okla. 399.

Verdict.

17. Where special findings of a jury can be reconciled with a general verdict and the relevant evidence in the record, the verdict will control. Wallenburg v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37: 135, 126 N. W. 289, 86 Neb. 642.

TRUSTS.

In bank deposit, see Banks, 3.

Charitable trust, see Charities.

In separate property in favor of community, see Husband and Wife, 3-7.

Conclusiveness of judgment in suit to settle accounts of trustee, see Judgment, 1.

As to life estates, see Life Tenants.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Precatory trusts.

1. A trust is created by a bequest of money to trustees of a school, the income of which testator states "I wish" to be expended in a certain manner. Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist. 37: 646, 75 Atl. 100, 75 N. H. 408.

2. No personal interest is conferred on the legatee by a will giving property to one to divide as seems to her best, "as I have told her my wishes." Fitzsimmons v. Harmon, 37: 400, 81 Atl. 667, — Me. —

3. No trust in favor of the testatrix daughter is created by a will wherein the testatrix, after bequeathing all her estate of every kind to a named grandson to have and to hold to him, his heirs, and assigns, to his and to their own proper use, benefit, and behoof forever, stated that "it is my intention to make no provision . . . for my daughter," as "in my judgment" she "will be more amply provided for" by the devisee than she "could be by me." Floyd v. Smith, 37: 651, 51 So. 537, 59 Fla. 485.

Resulting trusts.

4. Where, by statute, a will must be in writing, a devise to one "to divide as seems to her best, as I have told her my wishes," is incapable of enforcement, and establishes merely a resulting trust for the benefit of the heirs at law. Fitzsimmons v. Harmon, 37: 400, 81 Atl. 667, — Me. — Individual interest of trustee.

5. One of several joint owners of real estate, in whose name the title is placed for sale, cannot be compelled to account to his co-owners for a bonus paid him by the brokers who effected the sale, for assistance rendered them, for he was guilty of no fraud or concealment, and no agreement for the bonus was made until after the sale was effected, since, by receiving the bonus, he diverts from his associates no fund to which they would otherwise be entitled. Heckscher v. Blanton, 37: 923, 69 S. E. 1045, 111 Va. 648.

TUNNEL.

Liability for withdrawing percolating water in construction of, see Waters, 8.

UNCERTAINTY.

Of charitable bequest, see Charities, 5, 6.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

1. The placing upon the market of a stove the design of which is copied from that of a rival manufacturer cannot be restrained as unfair competition, if the earlier design had been so recently produced that the public had not become familiar with it as designating the product of the designer, so as to be deceived into buying the copy as his, where the copyist uses his own name and trademark on his product, so that there is no attempt to palm it off as that of his rival. Rathbone Sard & Co. v. Champion Steel Range Co. 37: 258, 189 Fed. 26, 110 C. C. A. 596.

2. That private marks to designate "parts" of a stove are copied, together with the general design, when one manufacturer appropriates a rival's design for a product of his own, so as to give retailers an opportunity, which is embraced by some, to palm off the goods of the copyist as those of the designer, does not render the copyist liable to restraint as unfairly competing in trade, where the stove is put out under his own name and trademarks, so that no attempt is made by him to palm his product off as that of his rival. Rathbone Sard & Co. v. Champion Steel Range Co. 37: 258, 189 Fed. 26, 110 C. C. A. 598.

UNFITNESS.

Liability of seller of unfit seed, see Sale, 1, 2.

UNIFORMITY.

Of license tax, see License, 1, 2.
In taxation, see Taxes, 1, 2.

UNIONS.

See Labor Organizations.

UNITED STATES.

Obstruction of navigable waters of, see Waters, 5, 6.

UNMARKETABLE TITLE.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

USURPATION.

Of powers of government, see Constitutional Law, 4.

VACATION.

Of highway, see Highways.

VALIDITY.

Of contract, see Contracts, 16-20.

VALUATION.

For tax purposes, see Taxes, 10.

VALUE.

Testimony by passenger as to value of baggage lost, see Evidence, 20.

VARIANCE.

Between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 37.

VARIETY.

Liability of one selling different variety of seed than that specified in sale, see Sale, 2.

VEHICLES.

Excise tax on, see License.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Purchaser's duty to accept deed from third person, see Contracts, 15.

Covenants between, see Covenants and Conditions.

Dedication of street by selling lots with reference to plat, see Dedication.

Right of innocent purchaser as against one executing deed in blank, see Records and Recording Laws.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Subrogation to, of one paying purchase money of land, see Subrogation, 2, 3.

Contract to convey land.

Oral contract for sale of land, see Contracts, 9, 12, 13.

Sufficiency of reply in action for specific performance of contract for sale of land, see Pleading, 4.

Specific performance of contract to convey land, see Specific Performance.

1. Where a vendor, as a performance on his part of a contract for the conveyance of real property, tenders a warranty deed from another person, the vendee, in order to avoid the effect of the tender on the ground that the deed does not include the warranty of the person with whom he contracted, must make that specific objection, and allow a reasonable opportunity for it to be met. George H. Paul Co. v. Shaw. 37: 1123, 119 Pac. 546, 86 Kan. 136.

Defective or unmarketable title.

2. Title to real estate which depends upon a probate decree distributing a decedent's estate cannot be held to be unmarketable merely upon the assumption that some unknown claimant exists who will assert his claim, in the absence of any allegation that such claimant does exist, where all known interested parties were before the court when the distribution was made. Barrette v. Whitney. 37: 368, 106 Pac. 522, 36 Utah, 574.

VENDOR'S LIEN.

Subrogation to, of one paying purchase money for land, see Subrogation, 2, 3.

VERDICT.

See Trial, 17.

VESTED INTEREST.

Under will, see Wills, 10-12.

VICIOUSNESS.

Sufficiency of evidence of notice of vicious character of dog, see Evidence, 33.

VIEW.

Jurors' right to utilize knowledge acquired in viewing premises, see Trial, 1.

VILLAGE.

Municipal corporations generally, see Municipal Corporations.

VOLUNTEERS.

Assumption of risk by, see Carriers, 4.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See Elections.

WAIVER.

Of rights under contract, see Contracts, 22.

Burden of proving, see Evidence, 8.

Of rules by habitually disregarding, see Master and Servant, 11.
Of notice of addition to tax list, see Taxes, 9.

WARNING.

Duty to put up, on discontinuing highway, see Highways, 4, 6.

WARRANTIES.

In insurance contract, see Insurance, 4, 5.

WASTE.

By life tenant, see Life Tenants, 2.

WATERS.

Rights as between public and individuals.

Confirming lease of tide land by municipality as special legislation, see Statutes, 3.

Dedication of street on shore of lake, see Dedication, 7.

1. The title to the bed of a nontidal navigable stream the first settlers upon which acquired their title under the principles of the common law is in the riparian owners, except where it constitutes a territorial boundary. Fulton Light, Heat, & Power Co. v. State, 37: 307, 94 N. E. 199, 200 N. Y. 400.

2. A constitutional provision forbidding the grant into private ownership of tide lands fronting on bays or harbors will be construed to embrace all lands submerged by tidal water, and not limited merely to that which is covered and uncovered by the daily influx and reflux of the tide. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 37: 686, 119 Pac. 1073, — Cal. —.

3. A constitutional prohibition of the grant or sale of tide lands fronting on any harbor or bay within 2 miles of any municipality does not forbid leases of such lands. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 37: 686, 119 Pac. 1073, — Cal. —.

4. The right of a state to use the bed and waters of a river for the improvement of navigation does not extend to the diverting of the waters from the river to an artificial channel along the bank, constructed not for the improvement of the navigation of the river, but as a separate navigable water way, and if it attempts to do so, it must make compensation to the riparian owner for the injury thereby caused him. Fulton Light, Heat, & Power Co. v. State, 37: 307, 94 N. E. 199, 200 N. Y. 400.

5. A taxpayer cannot enjoin the construction of a bridge by the city on the ground that it will cross navigable waters of the United States, and that no permission from it or from the state corporation having control of the port has been secured. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

6. The creation of a corporation to control a river for the purpose of facilitating and protecting commerce does not give it power to interfere with the construction by a municipal corporation of a bridge across the river, where its charter empowers it to construct bridges, and it has constitutional power to amend its charter in local matters by adopting any provision asserting a right which the legislature might have conferred upon it. Kiernan v. Portland, 37: 332, 111 Pac. 379, 57 Or. 454.

Rights as between individuals.

Boundary by, see Boundaries.

Injunction against casting mine water into stream to injury of lower riparian land, see Injunction, 4.

Necessity of notice to purchaser of mine to render him liable for injury by mineral water coming from mine, see Nuisances, 1.

7. A riparian owner who, in order to gain the benefit of water from a stream, turns it out of its course over his land, knowing that it is impregnated with mineral matter from a mine, cannot hold the mine owner liable for the injury caused to his land and vegetation by such mineral matter. Glenn v. Crescent Coal Co. 37: 197, 140 S. W. 43, 145 Ky. 137.

8. No action lies for withdrawing percolating water from under the surface of a parcel of real estate in the construction of a tunnel of a railroad under an adjoining street, the fee of which is in the public, although the result is a consolidation of the earth which causes a settlement and cracking of the walls of buildings thereon. New York Continental Jewell Filtration Co. v. Jones, 37: 193, 37 App. D. C. 511.

Public water supply.

Stand pipe as fixture, see Fixtures, 2.
Exceeding debt limit in contract for, see Municipal Corporations, 9.

WATER TOWER.

As fixture, see Fixtures,

WAYS.

Public ways, see Highways.

WHISKY.

Loan of, as unlawful disposition of intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors.

WIDOW.

Insurance money collected by widow on deceased husband's life as her separate estate on remarriage, see Husband and Wife, 9.

WILLS.

Charitable bequests, see Charities.

Husband's consent to wife's execution of, see Contracts, 2, 19.

Oral agreement for execution of reciprocal wills, see Contracts, 11.

Specific performance of agreement to execute reciprocal wills, see Specific Performance, 2.

Validity of agreement to will property to housekeeper, see Contracts, 18.

Creation of trust by, see Trusts.

Revocation.

1. The mere execution of a revocatory will effects a cancelation of a prior one, although it is never probated, under a statute providing that wills may be revoked by the execution of subsequent wills. Blackett v. Ziegler, 37: 291, 133 N. W. 901, — Iowa, —

Revival.

Admissibility of testator's declarations on question of, see Evidence, 24.

See also infra, 4.

2. The destruction of a will which expressly revoked a prior one, which had been retained in existence, will revive the prior one, if such was the intent of the testator found by the jury from all the circumstances of the case. Blackett v. Ziegler, 37: 291, 133 N. W. 901, — Iowa, —

Probate.

Conclusiveness of probate of will, see Judgment, 3.

3. On the probate of a will, the due execution and publishing of the will, the sound and disposing mind of the testator, and his freedom from duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence, and the fact as to whether the instrument is in fact his last will and testament, are the only issues before the court. Lowery v. Hawker, 37: 1143, 133 N. W. 918, — N. D. —

Codicil.

4. A paper signed and executed as a will, requesting the appointment of a certain person administrator, which is attached to a will, and does not refer to or identify it in any manner, cannot be regarded as a codicil which will revive a canceled will, under a statute providing that if a codicil is duly executed to a will defectively executed and clearly identified in such codicil, the will and codicil shall be considered as one instrument, and the execution of both sufficient. Blackett v. Ziegler, 37: 291, 133 N. W. 901, — Iowa, —

Holographic will.

Amendment of statute relating to holographic wills, see Statutes, 4.

5. A holographic will found in an envelop containing insurance papers, some of which had expired, in a little-used table drawer in testator's dwelling, valid under a statute requiring it to be found among his valuable papers and effects, although his securities are kept at his place of business. Re Jenkins, 37: 842, 72 S. E. 1072, 157 N. C. 429.

Construction generally.

Effect of necessity for construction of will in partition proceeding on right to solicitor's fees as costs, see Costs and Fees, 1.

6. In case a will attempting to create a charity is susceptible of more than one construction, that one should be preferred which, if fully within the rules of the law, sustains the trust and devotes the fund to purposes permitted by law and to the good of the community. Re Robinson, 37: 1023, 96 N. E. 925, 203 N. Y. 380.
37 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Omission of children.

7. The unexplained omission of children in a will does not necessarily invalidate the instrument, even though such will may be ineffectual as against their interests which they may secure regardless of the provisions of the will. Lowery v. Hawker, 37: 1143, 133 N. W. 918, — N. D. —
What property passes or may be disposed of by will.

8. A future contingent right to re-enter for condition broken by converting granted property to a use not permitted by the deed passes by will, under a statute providing that a contingent, an executory, and a future interest, also a right of entry, whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent, may be disposed of by will. Bell v. Milliken, 37: 623, 76 Atl. 789, 31 R. I. 36.

9. The contract right of the grantor to demand a reconveyance of land for breach of condition as to the uses to which it may be put will pass by his will. Ball v. Milliken, 37: 623, 76 Atl. 789, 31 R. I. 36.

Nature of estate or interest created.

10. A devise to testator's daughter "for herself and her children forever" vests the fee in the daughter. Naville v. American Mach. Co. 37: 153, 140 S. W. 559, 145 Ky. 344.

11. Under a devise to testator's two sons, and, in case of the death of either without issue, his share to go to the survivor, and in case of the death of both without issue, or in the lifetime of testator, then the estate to go to another, the words "without issue" mean death without ever having had issue, and not death without issue living at the time thereof, so that the birth of issue and death of testator vests the fee in the sons. Kendall v. Taylor, 37: 164, 92 N. E. 562, 245 Ill. 617.

12. Under a will directing that an estate be held for the use of testator's son and his family for life, and that after his death the property so set apart shall pass and go to his children, the descendants of any child to take the share which its parent would have taken if alive at the time, the interest of the children is vested, and the father will inherit from any child who dies in his lifetime without issue. Redman v. Hubbard, 37: 728, 130 S. W. 955, 140 Ky. 71.

WILSON ACT.

See Commerce, 1.

WITHDRAWAL.

Of improper evidence, effect, see Appeal and Error, 8.

WITNESSES.

Continuance for absence of, see Continuance and Adjournment.

Cost of taking deposition of, see Costs and Fees, 2.

Effect of cross-examining witness on taking deposition, see Deposition.

Reversible error in cross-examination, see Appeal and Error, 9.

Opinions and conclusions of, see Evidence, 17-20.

Impeachment of dying declarations by evidence of inconsistent statements, see Evidence, 28.

As party to suit so as to be bound by judgment, see Judgment, 10.

Credibility of, as question for jury, see Trial, 7.

Competency.

Upon a prosecution for selling liquor to a person of Indian blood, the latter is competent to testify as to the nationality of his parents. State v. Rackich, 37: 760, 119 Pac. 843, 68 Wash. 390.

WORK AND LABOR.

Custom of conductors to carry persons in consideration of services, see Carriers, 1.

Prohibiting labor on Sunday as violation of religious freedom, see Constitutional Law, 19.

Right to recover value of services under parole agreement to convey land in action for damages for breach of contract, see Election of Remedies, 3.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Constitutionality of, see Constitutional Law, 3, 4, 7-10, 12, 16, 20; Jury, 1; Taxes, 2, 5.

37 L.R.A. (N.S.).

When court will set aside as invalid, see Courts, 4.

Injunction against employer's accepting benefits of, see Injunction, 1.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Writ of error, see Appeal and Error.

Various particular writs, see Injunction; Mandamus.

Relief against judgment on publication not supported by sufficient affidavit, see Judgment, 18.

An affidavit is insufficient to support a service of process by publication, which merely shows inquiry of a few persons as to the whereabouts of defendant, without getting information concerning him, and placing the summons for service in the hands of two sheriffs whose returns show inability to find him after inquiry of certain public officials, without showing any attempt to find relatives or neighbors of defendant from whom information might be obtained. Grigsby v. Wopschall, 37: 206, 127 N. W. 605, 25 S. D. 564.

WRIT OF ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

YEAR'S SUPPORT.

Widow's right to, under antenuptial agreement, see Husband and Wife, 10.

